"I remember the occasion of his (defendant's) accepting employment from the Wheatland Elevator Company; before he accepted that employment there had been talk about handling flour by the directors of the Ogallah Elevator Company at a meeting that they held; it had been discussed at different times while I was on the board, and the company was financially embarrassed, and wasn't able to build a building, so that they could handle this stuff, and they didn't feel as though they would like to go in debt in order to handle it; we supposed naturally that the sale of flour would draw trade for our other business. We were buying wheat, some corn, and handling coal. . . . I can recollect it, it had been talked through the board, and we all understood it, and the stockholders all knew it, and I said, as far as I am personally concerned, that you can handle that flour, providing that it don't interfere with our other business; I don't know how soon he commenced handling the flour after that; I did learn of it after he commenced; I understood all the time he was handling it that he was getting pay from the Wheatland Elevator Company and I understood that he was keeping that pay for himself; I never made any objections to this because it was talked among the board, and a number of the board, and while they didn't all of them, didn't sanction it, they didn't say for him not to handle it. They all knew it and they L.R.A.1916D.

never objected; that is, to the board. It wasn't brought up before the board as I remember; the reason for this was talked over among themselves that he wasn't getting hardly enough wages to justify him in staying there, and he had a position offered him for more wages, and we, I think part of the board, perhaps all of it, I couldn't say, agreed to let him—agreed that if he handled that, he could use—collect the money for his own affairs. I got that started wrong. The intention was to help out his salary, and he was talking of leaving, and I says: 'We can't afford to let Fred go; we have had him here ever since the elevator started, and he knows more about the business, and he came here green and inexperienced, and he didn't know anything about bookkeeping, and had to learn everything, and after we had learned him, or he had learned himself rather, that I thought best that we keep him right on the job, and by helping his salary out on the side by handling this flour, why, he was willing to stay with us a little while longer. This was talked over in a general way. I don't say it was talked over at the board, but in a general way, and the outsiders and the stockholders all knew of this thing, because I talked with different ones, both stockholders and directors.'"

Whether this situation of affairs is viewed as an acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff is found by the jury (10 Cyc. 1065; 16 Cyc. 714), or as showing the nature of plaintiff's claim to defendant's earnings in the sale of the flour, the result was correct. Wheeler & T. Co. v. Dahms, 50 Ill. App. 531; Hillsboro Nat. Bank v. Hyde, 7 N. D. 400, 75 N. W. 781; Clarke v. Kelsey, 41 Neb. 766, 60 N. W. 138; 26 Cyc. 1020; 5 Labatt's Mast. & S. § 2037.

The gist of the cases just cited is to the effect that the employer cannot claim as his own the earnings of his servant from an independent employment on an unrelated business. The appellant recognizes this rule, but has been led astray in its application. Its idea appears to have been that since the dealing in flour could have been associated conveniently with the plaintiff's grain and coal business, it was entitled to the earnings on the flour business. Moreover, plaintiff's long acquiescence in defendant's outside employment estops it to claim his outside earnings.

2. Turning next to the item of $40.90 which was alleged to have been paid to Belveal without authority. While not directly pleaded by defendant that it was paid out by mistake, the plaintiff was apprised of that fact. Plaintiff's counsel said as much in his opening statement to the jury. The evidence showed that the plaintiff owed Belveal for wheat, and Belveal owed the plaintiff for coal, and in settling accounts the defendant as agent for the plaintiff paid Belveal $40.90 too much. It was clearly shown to have been an innocent mistake, and when discovered it was charged against Belveal's account. No fair interpretation of defendant's contract of employment bound him as a guarantor of the credits extended by the plaintiff. Technically, counsel for appellant is right in his contention that defendant should have pleaded that he paid out his money by mistake. But when plaintiff knew this fact, as shown by the opening statement of its counsel, and it was clearly established and uncontroverted by the evidence, shall we now, on account of defendant's failure to plead the mistake, reverse this case and send it back to the trial court, which would, in furtherance of justice, permit him to amend his answer in that particular? Since there is no dispute as to the fact, and plaintiff does not even suggest that it was misled, and does affirmatively show that it was fully apprised of the facts, the revised Code (Civ. Code, §§ 141, 581 [Gen. Stat. 1909, §§ 5734, 6176]) forbids a reversal on such a ground. Root v. Cudahy Packing Co. 94 Kan. 339, 345, 147 Pac. 69; Hamilton v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 95 Kan. 353, 359, 360, 148 Pac. 648.

3. Appellant has some slight ground for his complaint touching the rulings of the court on the admission of evidence relating to the moneys collected by defendant for the use of the scale. The authorities cited, which show that the plaintiff was not entitled to defendant's earnings in the sale of flour, an independent business from that in which the plaintiff was engaged, are just as precise and definite to the effect that defendant's earnings within the scope of the employer's business belong to his employer. Moreover, the keeping of an accurate account of the moneys which in any way pertained to plaintiff's business was one of the matters clearly covered by defendant's employment, and this duty and obligation ought not to be lightly excused by informal assent on the part of individual officers or directors. But the facts based upon competent testimony are shown by the findings of the jury.

"(7) Did the defendant during his employment by the plaintiff do certain weighing for compensation on plaintiff's scales without accounting to said association for such compensation? Answer: Yes.
L.R.A.1916D.

"(8) If you answer No. 7 'Yes,' how much money did he receive for such weighing? Answer: Amount not shown to be less than twelve or more than thirty dollars.

"(9) How much money did Fred Harrison pay out on account of help in the matter of weighing hay? Answer: Amount not shown to be less than ten or more than twenty-five dollars.

"(10) Did Fred Harrison retain for his own use any of the money taken by him on account of weighing hay? If so, how much? Answer: No."

These findings fail to show that the defendant owed the plaintiff anything on this item. He did fail to keep an account. He did not appropriate the scale earnings to his own use. So said the jury. How, then, can it be material whether the evidence which was introduced was competent or incompetent to show whether the plaintiff had authorized by positive sanction or by acquiescence the appropriation of the scales' earnings to defendant's personal use?

We have carefully considered the other questions presented, but do not deem it necessary to comment on them. We note the appellant's criticisms of the trial court's many adverse rulings to its objections to the evidence. Most of the evidence objected to covered the action of the board of directors ordering a dismissal of this suit, and the attitude of individual officers and directors towards the appropriation of the scales' moneys by the defendant. As we view the case, the evidence was probably incompetent, but we fail to trace prejudicial error to its admission.

In the voluminous abstracts and copious briefs which show clearly the diligence and zeal with which counsel for both litigants have presented this cause, these controlling facts appear: (a) The plaintiff has no legal claim on defendant's earnings on the sale of the Wheatland Company's flour; (b) the defendant was not personally liable for the money paid to Belveal by mistake; and (c) while defendant was bound by his contract of employment to keep an accurate account of the scales' earnings, and failed to do so, he did have authority to pay out these moneys, and did pay them out for services in plaintiff's behalf, and the jury found that none of the scales' moneys were appropriated to the defendant's private use.

Thus the issuable and controlling facts have all been settled by the jury adversely to plaintiff's contention; and since no prejudicial error can be detected, the judgment must be affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Right of principal or employer to earnings by agent or servant who undertakes extraneous work.

The earlier cases on the question under annotation will be found in the note to Barber v. National Carbon Co. 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1154, which covers the general question as to the rights of employer and employee with respect to things produced by the labor of the employee.

As to right of master to inventions of servant, see also note to Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Hansen, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1172.

As to right of principal to recover from broker or other agent commissions which he received from other party to the contract, see note to Easterly v. Mills, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 952.

As to servant's right to tips received by him, see note to Polites v. Barlin, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1217.

As to duty of partner to account for part profits realized from transactions independently of firm, see note to Shrader v. Downing, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 389.

Since the cases reported in the note in 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1154, it was held in Shepard Pub. Co. v. Harkins (1905) 9 Ont. L. Rep. 504, that a servant under contract to devote all his time and attention to his employer's business, and to engage in no other business, was not liable to account to his employers for his earnings by doing work in a different capacity, especially where he did not use time which should be devoted to his employer's business. In the course of its opinion the court said that "the covenant of an employee to devote his entire time to the undertaking of his employer must, moreover, receive a reasonable construction. It cannot, for instance, be deemed to require that the employee should give to the service hours of the day or night usually devoted to rest and recreation. It does impose upon him an obligation to employ diligently in advancing that undertaking or business of his principal to which he has agreed to devote himself during such hours as it is customary for men in positions such as his to work, all the time and ability he can bestow advantageously to his principal. Even during those hours of the day usually devoted to work of the kind for which he is engaged the servant is not obliged by such a covenant to sit in idleness. Nemo tenetur ad inutilia. If he is unable to utilize his time for the benefit and advantage of his employer at that for which he is employed, he may, without becoming liable to account for benefits so acquired, make other use of it not inconsistent with the discharge of the duties to his employer which he has undertaken. To hold otherwise would be in effect to place the employee of the present day in a position little, if at all, better than that of the villein of former times. . . . If the agent or servant undertakes in that capacity work outside the scope of his employment, his principal or master is, if he wishes to take them, entitled to earnings or profits so made. The only right which the servant or agent can have against his master is a possible claim for extra remuneration. But if he neither uses time which belongs to his employer or engages in competitive undertakings, an agent or servant doing work in some other capacity is not accountable to his employer for his earnings from such work."

So, also, an employee of a corporation which conducts a general store, who is appointed postmaster, is entitled to the commissions which the government pays on the amount of business done by the postoffice, although an officer of the corporation may have been influential in securing the appointment and the corporation may have furnished a place in which to keep the postoffice. Bailey v. Sibley Quarry Co. (1910) 166 Mich. 321, 129 N. W. 17.

And in Williams v. Crane (1908) 153 Mich. 89, 116 N. W. 554, as no loss occurred to the employer by reason of his absence, one who worked the farm of another under an agreement that the relation should be that of an employee and employer was held not to be obliged to deduct from moneys due him, an amount he earned by doing work for third persons.

In Genco v. Remington (1905) 100 App. Div. 223, 91 N. Y. Supp. 898, the plaintiff was employed by the defendants, the operators of a canning factory, to secure sufficient help to take care of such crops as they might have for canning purposes, and he was to receive a stipulated sum per week for looking after the help. A nonsuit was granted by the trial court in an action to recover the compensation, it appearing that the plaintiff had received an amount in excess of his claim from farmers, for whom, with the knowledge and acquiescence of defendants, he superintended the picking of peas at such time as there were no peas to be picked for defendants.

The decision was reversed upon the ground that the evidence at least presented a question for the jury whether the money so received belonged to defendants.

It will be noted that in the above cases the extraneous work was not such as conflicted with the interests of the employer. Where, however, the earnings are from any business which gave the employee an interest conflicting with his duty to his employer, the employer is entitled to claim the earnings.

Thus an employee of a real estate broker under contract to devote his entire time to his employer's business, which contract was terminable on fifteen days' notice, who, upon the termination of a contract for the management of an estate which his employer had with the owner of the estate, takes a renewal of such contract for himself instead of for his employer, and then notifies his employer of his intention to terminate his employment, must account to his employer for any commissions received in the management of such estate from the time he undertook the management until the expiration of the fifteen-day notice given by him to his employer to terminate the employment. Sumner v. Nevin (1906) 4 Cal. App. 347, 87 Pac. 1105.

And see also Sheppard Pub. Co. v. Harkins (Ont.) supra, which held such earnings as came to the employee in any business engaged in without his employer's consent, which conflicted with his duty to his employer, belonged to the employer. J. H. B.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

MARY J. JACOBS

v.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE
RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(97 Kan. 247, 154 Pac. 1023.)

Railroad — crossing accident — silence of warning bell.

1. It is such negligence as will prevent a recovery for injuries sustained, for a driver of an automobile to attempt to cross a railroad track at a grade crossing without looking or listening for the approach of a train, although an electric warning bell is maintained at the crossing and the bell is not ringing.

For other cases, see Railroads, II. e, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — absence of signal — wantonness.

2. Enginemen in charge of a locomotive attached to a passenger train, who cut off the steam and apply the air one quarter of a mile before reaching a street crossing in a small city, and who suppose that an electric warning bell stationed at the crossing is ringing, are not guilty of wantonness, although they fail to ring the engine bell or sound the whistle for the crossing, and although they go through the city at the rate of 45 miles per hour.

For other cases, see Railroads, II. d, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 12, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Sedgwick County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of her husband, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William R. Smith, Owen J. Wood, Alfred A. Scott, and Harlow Hurley, for appellant:

Deceased was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, and plaintiff cannot recover.

Butts v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 94 Kan. 328, 146 Pac. 1142; Adams v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 93 Kan. 475, 144 Pac. 999; Gage v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 91 Kan. 253, 137 Pac. 938, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 410; Gilbert v. Missouri P. R. Co. 91 Kan. 711, 139 Pac. 380; Corley v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 90 Kan. 70, 133 Pac. 555, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 764; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Willey, 60 Kan. 819, 158 Pac. 472, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 515; Northern P. R. Co. v. Tripp, 136 C. C. A. 302, 220 Fed. 286.

Headnotes by MARSHALL, J.

Note.—As to right of traveler to rely on automatic signals at crossing, see annotation following this case, post, 788.

The question whether wantonness or willfulness, precluding defense of contributory negligence, may be predicated of the omission of a duty before the discovery of a person in a position of peril on a railroad or street railway track, is discussed in a note L.R.A.1916D.

to Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 427.

Generally, as to the care required of the driver of an automobile at railroad crossings, see notes to New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Maidment, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 794; Brommer v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 924, and Walters v. Chicago, M. & P. S. R. Co. 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 702.

It has been held error to permit proof of the rules of an employer intended only for the guidance of employees, upon the theory that they tend to show what duty the defendant owed to the public in the operation of its trains, and hence a violation of any of them, being a breach of such duty, is evidence of negligence.

Fonda v. St. Paul City R. Co. 71 Minn. 438, 70 Am. St. Rep. 341, 74 N. W. 167; Louisville R. Co. v. Gaugh, 133 Ky. 467, 118 S. W. 276; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Clark, 136 Ala. 450, 34 So. 917; Isackson v. Duluth Street R. Co. 75 Minn. 27, 77 N. W. 433, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 178.

The giving of instructions as to what would constitute wilful and wanton negligence on the part of the train operatives was error.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker, 79 Kan. 183, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 427, 98 Pac. 804; Gilbert v. Missouri P. R. Co. 91 Kan. 711, 139 Pac. 380, 92 Kan. 697, 142 Pac. 270.

Messrs. John W. Adams and George W. Adams, for appellee:

There is no testimony showing or tending to show that the deceased did not look and listen before going upon the railroad track. Hence the presumption would be that he both looked and listened when approaching the crossing.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baumgartner, 74 Kan. 148, 85 Pac. 822, 10 Ann. Cas. 1094.

One placed in a position of danger by the negligent act of another, requiring immediate and rapid action, without time to deliberate as to the better course to pursue, is not held to the strict accountability as one in more favorable circumstances, as contributory negligence is not attributable to one for failure to exercise his best judgment in such a case.

Kansas City-Leavenworth R. Co. v. Langley, 70 Kan. 453, 78 Pac. 858; Tousley v. Pacific Electric R. Co. 166 Cal. 457, 137 Pac. 31; Senft v. Western Maryland R. Co. 246 Pa. 446, 92 Atl. 553; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Isaacs, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 168 S. W. 872; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Linney, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 163 S. W. 1035; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Neff, 87 Tex. 303, 28 S. W. 283; Mark v. St. Paul M. & M. R. Co. 30 Minn. 493, 16 N. W. 367; Lundien v. Ft. Dodge, D. M. & S. R. Co. 166 Iowa, 85, 147 N. W. 308.

At the time of the accident, the jury found that the electric bell was not ringing when the train approached the crossing, and no other signals given, so that deceased had a right to assume that no train was approaching the crossing, and that he could pass in safety.
L.R.A.1916D.

Dusold v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 162 Iowa, 441, 142 N. W. 213; Davitt v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 164 Iowa, 216, 145 N. W. 483, 6 N. C. C. A. 420; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cox, 8 Ind. App. 29, 35 N. E. 183; Tobias v. Michigan C. R. Co. 103 Mich. 330, 61 N. W. 514; Cleveland C. O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Carey, 33 Ind. App. 275, 71 N. E. 244; Richmond v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 87 Mich. 374, 49 N. W. 623; Hughes v. Kelly, 2 Va. Dec. 588, 30 S. E. 387; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Matthews, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 302, 79 S. W. 71; Farrell v. Erie R. Co. 70 C. C. A. 396, 138 Fed. 29; Barrett v. Delano, 187 Mo. App. 501, 174 S. W. 181; Dolph v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 74 Conn. 538, 51 Atl. 525.

Defendant was guilty of reckless, wanton negligence which was sufficient to sustain the verdict.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker, 79 Kan. 183, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 427, 98 Pac. 804; McClain v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 89 Kan. 24, 130 Pac. 646, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 699; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Martin, 117 Ala. 367, 23 So. 231; Sanders v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. 93 S. C. 543, 77 S. E. 289; Easterling v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 91 S. C. 546, 75 S. E. 133; Batson v. Greenville & K. R. Co. 95 S. C. 206, 78 S. E. 885; Cleveland C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Starks, — Ind. App. —, 91 N. E. 565; Heidenreich v. Bremmer, 260 Ill. 439, 103 N. E. 276; Elgia, J. & E. R. Co. v. Duffy, 191 Ill. 489, 61 N. E. 432; Rowe v. Southern R. Co. 85 S. C. 23, 66 S. E. 1056; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Partridge, 136 Ala. 587, 34 So. 927; Esbridge v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 89 Ky. 367, 12 S. W. 580; Lacey v. Louisville N. R. Co. 81 C. C. A. 352, 152 Fed. 134; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Orr, 121 Ala. 489, 26 So. 35; Birmingham Southern R. Co. v. Powell, 136 Ala. 232, 33 So. 875; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Loyd, 186 Ala. 119, 65 So. 153; Weatherly v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 166 Ala. 575, 51 So. 959; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Russey, 190 Ala. 239, 67 So. 445; Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. Pinckard, 124 Ala. 372, 26 So. 880.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this action the plaintiff seeks to recover for the death of her husband, caused by the negligence of the defendant. The defense was contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. The plaintiff recovered judgment. The defendant appeals.

John H. Jacobs, the husband of the plaintiff, met his death by driving his automobile on the defendant's tracks in front of a swiftly moving passenger train. This occurred on Saturday afternoon at the crossing of the principal street in Valley Center. The defendant maintained an electric bell at this crossing. The jury made special findings of facts as follow:

"(2) For how long a distance east of the railroad track at the crossing in question could one traveling on the highway continuously have in sight a train stationed a quarter of a mile northward of the crossing? Ans. Twenty-eight feet."

"(6) Was the electric bell at the crossing in question ringing when the said train approached said crossing? Ans. No.

"(7) Were the engineer and firemen each at his post of duty and in his particular place on the engine as the train in question approached and passed over the crossing in question? Ans. Yes.

"(8) How far was the engine from the crossing in question when the fireman first discovered that the automobile would probably not be stopped in time to avoid a collision with the engine? Ans. One hundred fifty feet.

"(9) How far was the automobile from the crossing when the fireman first discovered that said automobile would probably not be stopped before it got on the crossing in the way of the engine? Ans. Fifteen feet.

"(10) After the fireman on the engine discovered, if he did discover, that the automobile would probably go upon the crossing in the way of the engine, what could have been done by him or the engineer that was not done to prevent the collision in question? Ans. Nothing.

"(11) How far was the automobile in question from the crossing when the fireman first saw it approaching the crossing? Ans. Fifty feet.

"(12) What particular place on the pilot or engine first came in contact with the automobile? Ans. Side of pilot back 3 feet from the point.

"(13) How far from the crossing did the engineer make his service application of air as the train approached Valley Center, if same was made at all? Ans. One-quarter mile.

"(14) What, if anything, would have prevented said Jacobs from seeing or hearing the approaching train in time to have avoided the collision if he had taken the pains to look and listen for same when he was about 25 feet from the crossing? Ans. Nothing.

"(15) If you find that the engineer cut off steam before he came to the crossing, state how far from said crossing he made such cut-off? Ans. One-quarter mile.

"(16) If you find that the negligence of those in charge of the engine caused the injury and death in question, state in what L.R.A.1916D.

such negligence consisted? Ans. Excessive speed.

"(17) What was the usual rate of speed at which this mail train in question usually passed over the crossing in question at Valley Center prior to the date of the collision in question? Ans. Thirty-five miles.

"(18) Was the said Jacobs guilty of negligence on his own part which contributed to his injury and death at the time and place in question? Ans. No.

"(19) Did the engineer and firemen as they approached the crossing in question, suppose that the electric bell at the crossing would ring automatically as the engine approached the said crossing? Ans. Yes."

"(21) Give speed of train at time of collision in question. Ans. Forty-five miles."

"(24) At what rate of speed was the automobile running when 20 feet from the crossing? Ans. Ten miles.

"(25) Name the different signals given of the approach to the crossing in question by the train in question. Ans. None."

1. The fourteenth finding establishes that the deceased did not look nor listen for the approach of a train before driving on the track. Beech v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 85 Kan. 90, 116 Pac. 213; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Coffman, 30 Ind. App. 462, 64 N. E. 235, 66 N. E. 179; Tobias v. Michigan C. R. Co. 103 Mich. 330, 61 N. W. 518.

The vital question in this case is: Did the failure of the electric bell to ring relieve the deceased of the obligation to look and listen before attempting to cross the track? The plaintiff seeks to have the rule in McClain v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 89 Kan. 24, 130 Pac. 646, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 699, applied in this case. There this court said: "Ordinarily, if a traveler proceeds across a railroad track without taking the precaution to ascertain if there is a train in dangerous proximity he does so at his peril. The application of this rule is modified to some extent by the circumstance that gates have been erected and watchmen employed at crossings. In such case a traveler is not required to exercise the same vigilance when he approaches a track as he would at crossings not so guarded." 89 Kan. 30.

Human intelligence guarded the crossing and operated the gate in that case. In the present case an electrical, mechanical device was intended to give warning of approaching trains. Sometimes this bell would not ring when trains were passing, and at other times it rang when no train was in sight. An electric bell, which at most can be nothing but a warning of an approaching train to those who listen, cannot be classed with a gate thrown across a street to prevent passing over railroad tracks; neither can it be classed with a flagman who stands in the street and stops those who desire to cross when there is danger. It is more nearly analogous to the locomotive bell and whistle. Failure to ring the engine bell or sound the whistle does not relieve a traveler from the duty to look and listen before attempting to cross a railroad track. If the plaintiff's contention in this respect is correct, a railroad increases its responsibility and liability by putting in electric bells at highway and street crossings. The object in putting in electric bells is to promote public safety, not to increase railroad liability. Silence of such a bell is not an invitation to cross railroad tracks without taking the ordinary precautions.

In McSweeney v. Erie R. Co. 93 App. Div. 496, 499, 87 N. Y. Supp. 836, 838, an action for damages for injuries sustained at a crossing where there was an electric bell, the court said: "The exercise of due care required the deceased, under the circumstances, to look and listen for an approaching train, and the mere fact that the stationary signal bell was not ringing did not relieve him of the importation of negligence if he failed to exercise this degree of care."

In that case judgment for the railroad was rendered at the close of the plaintiff's evidence. To the same effect is Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Heine, 28 Ind. App. 163, 62 N. E. 455; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Coffman, 30 Ind. App. 462, 64 N. E. 235, 66 N. E. 179, supports this position, although a new trial was ordered. But a new trial was requested by the defendant, not judgment on the findings. The plaintiff cites Tobias v. Michigan C. R. Co. 103 Mich. 330, 61 N. W. 518, to support his contention that it was the province of the jury to determine whether or not the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to cross the railroad track without looking or listening when the electric bell was not ringing. The supreme court of Michigan there said that the question of contributory negligence should have been given to the jury, and reversed a judgment for the defendant because it was not given. A dissenting opinion in that case argues that the court should have directed a verdict for the defendant. Wabash R. Co. v. McNow, 53 Ind. App. 116, 99 N. E. 129, 100 N. E. 383, supports the majority opinion in the Tobias Case, supra. We think the better rule is that the failure of an electric bell to ring does not relieve one about to cross a railroad track of the imperative duty to look and listen before crossing; if he fails to do so, he is guilty of such contributory negligence as will L.R.A.1916D.

prevent his recovery for any injuries sustained, and there is nothing to submit to the jury.

It has been held that it is the positive duty of the driver of an automobile to stop, look and listen before crossing railroad tracks. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Weir, 63 Fla. 69, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 307, 58 So. 641, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 126; Earle v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 248 Pa. 193, 93 Atl. 1001; Craig v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 243 Pa. 455, 90 Atl. 135; Brommer v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 924, 103 C. C. A. 135, 179 Fed. 577; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Maidment, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 794, 93 C. C. A. 413, 168 Fed. 21; Bason v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. 179 Ala. 299, 60 So. 922; 2 R. C. L. 1206.

On the other hand, it has been held that the driver of an automobile is not under all circumstances, as a matter of law, required to stop before crossing a railroad track. Dickinson v. Erie R. Co. 81 N. J. L. 464, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 150, 81 Atl. 104; Pendroy v. Great Northern R. Co. 17 N. D. 433, 117 N. W. 531; Hull v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. 60 Wash. 162, 110 Pac. 804; 2 R. C. L. 1206.

This state follows the rule last stated. Denton v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 90 Kan. 51, 56, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 820, 133 Pac. 558, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 639. See also Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hague, 54 Kan. 284, 45 Am. St. Rep. 278, 38 Pac. 257; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Williams, 56 Kan. 333, 43 Pac. 246, 11 Am. Neg. Cas. 545; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hinds, 56 Kan. 758, 762, 44 Pac. 993; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Powers, 58 Kan. 544, 550, 50 Pac. 452; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Holland, 60 Kan. 209, 216, 56 Pac. 6; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Willey, 60 Kan. 819, 822, 58 Pac. 472, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 515; Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 80 Kan. 456, 461, 103 Pac. 90. More than a dozen times this court has said that a traveler must look and listen for approaching trains before attempting to cross railroad tracks, and that if he fails to do so, and is injured in consequence thereof, damages cannot be recovered for such injury. Leavenworth L. & G. R. Co. v. Rice, 10 Kan. 426; Union P. R. Co. v. Adams, 33 Kan. 427, 6 Pac. 529; Clark v. Missouri P. R. Co. 35 Kan. 350, 355, 11 Pac. 134; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Townsend, 39 Kan. 115, 119, 17 Pac. 804; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Priest, 50 Kan. 18, 22, 31 Pac. 674; Roach v. St. Joseph & I. R. Co. 55 Kan. 654, 658, 41 Pac. 964; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Willey, 60 Kan. 819, 58 Pac. 472, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 515; Burns v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 66 Kan. 188, 191, 71 Pac. 244; Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. Ryan, 69

Kan. 538, 540, 77 Pac. 267; Hoopes v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 72 Kan. 422, 83 Pac. 987; Union P. R. Co. v. Entaminger, 76 Kan. 746, 749, 92 Pac. 1095; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 80 Kan. 187, 191, 101 Pac. 1001; Beech v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 85 Kan. 90, 116 Pac. 213; Adams v. Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. 93 Kan. 475, 144 Pac. 999; Butts v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 94 Kan. 328, 146 Pac. 1142.

The driver of an automobile is under the same or a more imperative duty to look and listen before crossing railroad tracks. Gage v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 91 Kan. 253, 137 Pac. 938, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 410; Northern P. R. Co. v. Tripp, 136 C. C. A. 302, 220 Fed. 286; Horandt v. Central R. Co. 78 N. J. L. 190, 73 Atl. 93; Elder v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 186 Ill. App. 199; Glick v. Cumberland & W. Electric R. Co. 124 Md. 308, 92 Atl. 778; Ft. Wayne & N. I. Traction Co. v. Schoeff, 56 Ind. App. 540, 105 N. E. 924; Allison v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 83 Wash. 591, 145 Pac. 608. The rule requiring one about to cross a railroad track to look and listen applies in a city as well as in the country. Burns v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 66 Kan. 191, 71 Pac. 244; Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. Ryan, 69 Kan. 538, 540, 77 Pac. 267; Northern P. R. Co. v. Tripp, 220 Fed. 286, 136 C. C. A. 302; Horandt v. Central R. Co. 78 N. J. L. 190, 73 Atl. 93; Elder v. Pittsburgh C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 186 Ill. App. 199; Allison v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 83 Wash. 591, 145 Pac. 608. The deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, such as will prevent the plaintiff's recovery in this action, unless those in charge of the engine were guilty of wantonness.

2. The plaintiff contends that the deceased lost his life through the wanton conduct of those in charge of the engine. This contention is based on the failure of the enginemen to ring the bell and sound the whistle, and on the high rate of speed at which the train was run through Valley Center. Against this the jury found that the service application of air was applied and the steam cut off one-quarter of a mile before reaching the crossing, and that the enginemen supposed the electric bell at the crossing was ringing. Although contributory negligence on the part of the deceased will excuse the defendant for its negligence, yet wantonness on the part of the defendant will avoid the deceased's contributory negligence and render the defendant liable. Kansas C. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 22 Kan. 686, 31 Am. Rep. 203; Union P. R. Co. v. Adams, 33 Kan. 427, 429, 6 Pac. 529; Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly, 36 Kan. 655, 59 Am. Rep. 596, 14 Pac. 172, 3 Am. Neg. Cas. 437; Union P. R. Co. v. L.R.A.1916D.

Dunden, 37 Kan. 1, 14 Pac. 501; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Whipple, 39 Kan. 531, 540, 18 Pac. 730; Tennis v. Interstate Consol. Rapid Transit R. Co. 45 Kan. 503, 25 Pac. 876; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Todd, 54 Kan. 551, 559, 38 Pac. 804; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Cooper, 57 Kan. 185, 190, 45 Pac. 587; Cummings v. Wichita R. & Light Co. 68 Kan. 218, 220, 74 Pac. 1104, 1 Ann. Cas. 708, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 548; Tempfer v. Joplin & P. R. Co. 89 Kan. 374, 379, 131 Pac. 592.

Negligence is not presumed. It must be proved. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Haley, 25 Kan. 35; Jackson v. Kansas City, L. & S. K. R. Co. 31 Kan. 761, 3 Pac. 501; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Tindall, 57 Kan. 719, 48 Pac. 12, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 141; Byland v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Co. 93 Kan. 288, 294, L.R.A.1915F, 1000, 144 Pac. 251; Willis v. Skinner, 94 Kan. 621, 624, 147 Pac. 60; Union P. R. Co. v. Mahaffy, 4 Kan. App. 88, 46 Pac. 187. Wantonness, like negligence, is not presumed, but must be proved. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lacy, 78 Kan. 622, 626, 97 Pac. 1025. This court has often said that whether negligence in a particular case is shown is ordinarily a question for the jury, but when the facts are undisputed or are definitely found by the jury, and only one conclusion can be drawn therefrom, it becomes a question of law for the court. Kansas P. R. Co. v. Butts, 7 Kan. 308; Wade v. Electric Co. 94 Kan. 462, 469, 147 Pac. 63, and numerous cases intervening. The same rule applies when wantonness is the issue. Campbell v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 55 Kan. 536, 543, 40 Pac. 997; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Cooper, 57 Kan. 185, 191, 45 Pac. 587; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lacy, supra; Gilbert v. Missouri P. R. Co. 91 Kan. 711, 139 Pac. 380.

This court has reversed judgment in several cases because there was not sufficient evidence to justify the finding of the jury that the injury was caused by wantonness. Central Branch Union P. R. Co. v. Henigh, 23 Kan. 347, 359, 33 Am. Rep. 167; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Whipple, 39 Kan. 531, 18 Pac. 730; Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Kier, 41 Kan. 671, 21 Pac. 774; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Cooper, 57 Kan. 185, 191, 45 Pac. 587; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lacy, 78 Kan. 622, 626, 97 Pac. 1025; Gilbert v. Missouri P. R. Co. 91 Kan. 711, 139 Pac. 380; McCullough v. Missouri P. R. Co. 94 Kan. 349, 146 Pac. 1005. This court has sustained a judgment where the trial court denied relief to the plaintiff for the reason that the evidence was not sufficient to establish wantonness. Campbell v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 55 Kan. 536, 543, 40 Pac. 997. In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lacy, 78 Kan. 622, 97 Pac. 1025, this court said:

"To constitute wilful negligence there must be a design, purpose, or intent to do wrong or to cause the injury." 78 Kan. 629.

"Reckless disregard of security, wantonness or other equivalent of bad faith, and the wilful or malicious disposition to injure all involved something else than negligence." Missouri P. Co. v. Walters, 78 Kan. 39, 41, 96 Pac. 347.

"The conduct of the employees in charge of an engine in failing to take measures for the protection of a person upon the track can be characterized as wanton, 'in the sense in which that word is used in this connection, only when they actually know of his presence, or when the situation is substantially the same as though they had such knowledge,—when such knowledge may fairly be imputed to them. It is not enough for that purpose that the exercise of ordinary diligence would have advised them of the fact, for their omission of duty in that regard amounts only to negligence. Nor is it enough that they know someone might be in the place of danger; the probability must be so great—its obviousness to the employees so insistent—that they must be deemed to realize the likelihood that a catastrophe is imminent and yet to omit reasonable effort to prevent it because indifferent to the consequences." Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker, 79 Kan. 183, 187, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 427, 98 Pac. 804, 806.

In Union P. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 56 Kan. 324, 43 Pac. 244, this court approved an instruction which defined reckless conduct as an indifference to the rights of others, an indifference whether wrong is done or not, and which told the jury that the defendant could be held liable only for injuries inflicted which were wilful, wanton, or malicious, or which were so grossly negligent as to amount to wantonness. Many of our courts hold that wantonness precluding a defense of contributory negligence cannot be predicated on the omission of a duty before the discovery of a person in a position of peril on a railroad track. Note, in 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 427-442.

Why did the enginemen make the service application of air? Why did they cut off the steam when a quarter of a mile away from the crossing? What effect shall be given to their supposition that the electric bell was ringing? The only answer to these questions is that they did consider the possibility of persons attempting to cross the railroad track, and had regard for their safety.

Taking into consideration the facts found by the jury in this case—the failure of the enginemen to ring the bell and sound the whistle, the rate of speed at which they were accustomed to go through Valley Center, the rate at which they went through on the day of the accident, the application of the air, the cutting off of steam, the supposition that the electric bell was ringing, and the conditions existing at the crossing,—we are compelled to say as a matter of law that the enginemen were not guilty of wantonness. Gilbert v. Missouri P. R. Co. 91 Kan. 711, 139 Pac. 380, supports this conclusion.

The judgment is reversed, with direction to the trial court to enter judgment for the defendant.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Right of traveler to rely on automatic signals at crossing.

For a discussion of the general question of the duty of a traveler approaching railway crossings as to the place and direction of observation, see note to Wallenburg v. Missouri P. R. Co. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 135.

As to the conduct of a flagman, or absence from his post, as affecting liability for injury at a crossing, see note to Roby v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 355.

For the duty of one crossing a railroad track as affected by the flagman's signal to proceed, see Union P. R. Co. v. Rosewater, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 803.

For the effect of the failure of a railroad company to give the customary signals at a highway crossing, upon the duty of a traveler to look and listen, see L.R.A.1916D.

Cooper v. North Carolina R. Co. 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 391, and note.

As to the duty of a traveler going upon a railroad crossing when the gates are open, see Koch v. Southern California R. Co. 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 521, and note.

It is difficult to deduce from the cases any definite rule as to the extent to which a traveler on a highway may rely upon automatic safety devices placed at railroad crossings for his protection. The cases seem to agree that the presence of such devices at a crossing may properly be regarded as having some effect upon the care required of a highway traveler, but some of the cases, while apparently recognizing this principle, require such additional precautions upon the part of the traveler, when considering a concrete example, that there seems to be no practical difference between the care required when an automatic device is present and that required when no such device is maintained.

About all that may be said is that a traveler approaching a crossing at which he knows an automatic signal is maintained, while entitled to place some reliance upon the indication of safety which silence of the signal implies, is nevertheless bound to use such care in addition as an ordinarily prudent man would use under such circumstances.

Although a railroad company is under no original obligation to place a signal bell or gong at a particular crossing, yet, if it has done so and has maintained the same for a long time, travelers approaching the crossing have a right to presume, if the bell or gong is not ringing, that they may pass over the crossing safely if, in the exercise of due care and caution, nothing appears to the contrary, but the failure of the company to ring the signal bell at the crossing, or to give other due and proper warning of the approach of a train, would not excuse a traveler approaching the crossing from the exercise of reasonable care and caution, such as an ordinarily prudent and careful man would exercise under similar circumstances, the presumption being in the case of a deceased traveler that he was in the exercise of reasonable care and caution unless the evidence rebuts that presumption. Welch v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1908) 7 Penn. (Del.) 140, 76 Atl. 50.

Although there was no legal obligation requiring a railroad to maintain an automatic electric bell at a crossing, where it did in fact maintain such a bell it was proper to show that it did not work, on both the question of defendant's negligence and of plaintiff's freedom from blame. Henn v. Long Island R. Co. (1900) 51 App. Div. 292, 65 N. Y. Supp. 21; motion for leave to appeal denied (1900) 52 App. Div. 625, 65 N. Y. Supp. 1135.

Though a railroad company is not required to keep or maintain an electric bell at a crossing, yet when it voluntarily keeps and maintains such a bell the traveling public have a right to rely upon it to the extent of presuming that it will correctly indicate the danger, or serve the warning which it was intended that it should give. Wabash R. Co. v. L.R.A. 1916D.

McNown (1912) 53 Ind. App. 116, 99 N. E. 126, 100 N. E. 383.

In Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Heine (1902) 28 Ind. App. 163, 62 N. E. 455, the court reversed a general verdict in favor of decedent's administrator with instructions to sustain the railroad company's motion for judgment on answers to interrogatories which were to the effect that deceased, after crossing the most southerly track, looked and listened for an approaching locomotive, but did not again look before going upon the track upon which he was struck, because of his reliance upon the failure of the signal bells to ring, the court saying: "Although the signal bells were maintained for the purpose of warning travelers, which fact decedent knew, and although decedent had the right to presume that no train or locomotive was approaching, because the signal bells were not ringing, yet this did not excuse him from the use of his senses of sight and hearing to ascertain for himself whether a train or locomotive was, in fact, approaching. The failure to give the signals raised the presumption of safety, but such failure was no more than a circumstance which could properly be taken into consideration in determining the ultimate question of whether he did exercise the degree of care required or not. And, in determining whether he did exercise such care, his conduct at the time is to be judged in the light of such presumption. . . . So that, although there was a failure to give the signals, he was still required to look for an approaching locomotive if by looking he could have seen it, and he was required to listen for an approaching locomotive if by listening he could have heard it, and his failure to do so was negligence. And when the jury say that after he had passed the obstruction upon the most southerly track, and before he went upon the track upon which he was struck, he could have looked to the westward and have seen the locomotive approaching in time to have avoided the collision, had he not depended on the warning bells, they are not excusing the omission of the duty resting upon decedent to look for a train or locomotive before going upon the track. The duty to look still rested upon him, notwithstanding the signals were not given, and if he had looked he could have seen the locomotive in time to have avoided the collision."

In Headley v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. (1915) — Colo. —, 154 Pac. 731, it is held that the fact that an automatic bell was out of order and failed to ring in no wise relieved a person about to cross the track from taking ordinary precaution for his own safety, the court saying: "While there are cases which hold that a silent signal bell or an open gate may operate to excuse a traveler from looking and listening for an approaching train, and the question should be submitted to a jury under proper instructions, the weight of authority and best reasoned cases are to the contrary. It is a matter of common knowledge that electric bells or even gates are liable to be out of order, and common prudence would not permit one to rely solely thereon."

Where the evidence indicates that the occupants of a buggy drove on a crossing confident of their safety because of the silence of a stationary signal bell, when a momentary halt within 23 feet of the track, or a glance when the buggy reached that spot in the direction from which the train was approaching, would have avoided the accident, they were without the observance of that care which the law imposed upon them notwithstanding the omission of the signal. McSweeney v. Erie R. Co. (1904) 93 App. Div. 496, 87 N. Y. Supp. 836.

In Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sivey (1905) 27 Ohio, C. C. 248, where there was some evidence that the automatic bell at the crossing was not ringing, the court said: "Even upon the theory of plaintiff below that it is the duty of the railway company to keep the gong in order, nevertheless the traveler may, in view of other noises, be bound in the exercise of ordinary care, to stop and listen for the ringing of the gong."

In Conkling v. Erie R. Co. (1899) 63 N. J. L. 338, 43 Atl. 666, it is held that the fact that an electric gong at a crossing was out of order and did not ring as usual did not justify in any degree the neglect of the plaintiff to exercise caution in approaching the crossing.

But in New Jersey, a statute passed subsequently to the above case, P. L. 1909, p. 137, provides that where a device has been provided at a crossing for the safety of travelers, and such a device is out of order or is not operating, the company shall post a notice to that effect, and that when no notice is posted, "no plaintiff shall be barred of the action because of the failure of the person injured or killed to stop, look, and listen before passing over said crossing," and under this statute where an automatic electric bell was not ringing when the L.R.A.1916D.

locomotive that killed deceased was approaching, and there was no notice posted at the crossing that the bell was out of order, such a condition absolved the intestate from stopping, looking, and listening. Ferneti v. West Jersey & S. R. Co. (1915) 87 N. J. L. 268, 93 Atl. 576.

Evidence that the railroad company maintained an automatic bell at a railroad crossing, and that it was not ringing at the time of the accident, is admissible to throw some light on the plaintiff's contributory negligence as well as upon the defendant's negligence. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Coffman (1902) 30 Ind. App. 462, 64 N. E. 233, 66 N. E. 179.

In Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Pearson (1897) 71 Ill. App. 622, where evidence was admitted to show that an electric alarm bell which had been maintained at the crossing at which deceased was killed had, on the day of the accident, been cut out so that at the time of the injury it was not in operation, without any count in the declaration in any way referring to such bell having been removed, the court held that the admission of such evidence was error, saying that the jury could only have inferred from such evidence that it was negligence to have taken the alarm bell out under the circumstances, and that the deceased, not observing its alarm, as they doubtless believed he was accustomed to do, was thereby led to his death; but that, had any count of the declaration been predicated upon such theory, the point might properly have been submitted to the jury.

Where an electric bell had not been operated for more than a year, and the duties of deceased had taken him near the crossing nearly every day, the jury was not at liberty to conjecture or guess that he could have been ignorant of the condition of the bell. Wellenhoffer v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1893) 66 Hun, 634, 50 N. Y. S. R. 111, 21 N. Y. Supp. 866.

And one who was about to cross a railroad track at a crossing at which an electric signal bell was maintained must have known that the bell was not in order from the fact that it was not ringing while a train bound in the opposite direction from the one by which he was injured was passing, he being within less than 45 feet of the crossing when such train came upon and passed over it. Headley v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. (1915) — Colo. —, 154 Pac. 731.

The negligence of a railway company consisting in the silence of the electric gong at the crossing was among the facts from which due care or negligence on the part of the deceased was to be found, and while the erection of gongs or other devices at a highway or street crossing to warn travelers of approaching trains does not excuse a traveler from exercising ordinary care or caution, the same degree of care and caution is not required of him as if there were no such device, and the jury has a right to infer that the deceased had placed some reliance upon the fact that the electric gong failed to sound as the engine approached the crossing, and was thereby misled. Kimball v. Friend (1897) 95 Va. 125, 27 S. E. 901.

In Tobias v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1894) 103 Mich. 330, 61 N. W. 514, it was held that where the evidence that deceased failed to look for trains at the crossing was such that the court should have directed a verdict in favor of defendant but for the question of the maintenance of an electric bell at the crossing, the court reversed a decision in favor of the defendant because of failure to charge, as requested by plaintiff, that if deceased did not know of any fault in the condition of the bell, the fact that it was not ringing might be taken into consideration with other facts in the case as bearing upon the question of deceased's contributory negligence, the court saying: "It cannot be said that the deceased would have no right to rely upon the ringing of this electric bell to warn him of the approach of the train. If the electric bell had rung, it would have given him warning. That he expected it to ring might make him less cautious in looking for the coming of a train."

Upon an appeal from a second trial of the above case in (1896) 110 Mich. 440, 68 N. W. 234, a judgment for defendant was sustained. An instruction to the jury which in substance left it to the jury, if it found that the bell failed to give a warning, and that plaintiff was ignorant of the fact that the bell was liable to fail, and that he did in fact rely upon it, to say whether a reasonably prudent man would have relied upon the bell at all, and if he would, how far, as a reasonably prudent man, he should have relied upon it, was not open to the objection that it eliminated any right of the deceased to in any degree rely upon the ringing of the bell to warn him of the approach of the train because it contained a statement that "I do not want you to understand that the L.R.A.1916D.

presence of that electric bell diminished the caution or care required of an approaching traveler, for it did not."

In Hicks v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1895) 164 Mass. 424, 49 Am. St. Rep. 471, 41 N. E. 721, where plaintiff, after stopping to look and listen at some distance from the track, knowing that an electric gong was maintained at the crossing and noticing that it was not ringing, drove on without again stopping to look and listen, it was held that his conduct after he started forward might properly be affected to some degree by the fact that the electric bells were not ringing.

That an automatic bell had been provided at a crossing, and that decedent knew of it and relied thereon, were relevant facts, the weight of which was for the jury in connection with other circumstances; but an instruction to the jury that, if the automatic bell did not sound, deceased had a right to presume that the way was clear, was error, as such failure is not in itself sufficient to justify an indifference to other means of warning, but it is only a circumstance to be taken into consideration in determining whether due and proper care was exercised. Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Corps (1906) 37 Ind. App. 586, 76 N. E. 902.

When an automatic signal is out of order, so that it rings when no train is approaching, a traveler familiar with such fact may ignore its meaning and rely upon other precautions for his own safety the same as if the automatic signal were not present.

Where a driver knew that an electric bell was out of order so that its being silent gave no assurance of safety, and its ringing was no certain indication of danger, the situation as to him was the same as if a bell had never been placed at the crossing. Maryland Electric R. Co. v. Beasley (1912) 117 Md. 270, 83 Atl. 157.

Where evidence was admitted that the signal bell maintained at a crossing was ringing at the time of the accident, it was proper to admit in rebuttal evidence tending to show that the bell was out of order at times and that it would ring continuously when there was no train at or near the crossing, in connection with evidence that deceased frequently used the crossing, which tended to show knowledge on his part of the bell's unreliability. Wells v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. (1910) 153 Ill. App. 23.

So, where an electric signal bell was so arranged that it would ring when cars were standing on the track as well as when a train was approaching, and, because of the number of trains and cars usually standing, it was ringing almost continuously, so that persons who traveled on the road knew of that fact and gave little heed to the ringing of the bell, while the ringing of the bell at the time of an accident was a circumstance to be considered by the jury in connection with other evidence tending to show that the company had provided a sufficient warning of the approaching train, and that the plaintiff was not exercising ordinary care for her own safety, her attempt to cross the tracks after looking for trains when near to it, although the bell was ringing, was not such contributory negligence as would authorize either the jury or the court to disregard her claim for damages, the ringing of the bell being no notice that a moving train was near the crossing under such circumstances. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. E. Co. v. Champ (1907) 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1054, 104 S. W. 988. R. L. S.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

SCHOOL SISTERS OF NOTRE DAME, Appt.,
v.

REUBEN R. KUSNITT, Trading as Good-year Hospital Rubber Company.

(125 Md. 323, 93 Atl. 928.)

Sale — mistake as to identity of seller — effect.

1. One who, in buying goods from an agent, is misled into the belief that the seller is a large corporate manufacturer, with whom he intends to deal, when in fact it is an individual who buys his stock from manufacturers, is not bound on the contract because of absence of consent to deal with the other party; and it is immaterial that knowledge as to the identity of such other party is of no importance in the formation of the contract.

For other cases, see Sale, III. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Pleading — admission of amount due — estoppel to deny contract.

2. One who, in the affidavit to his plea in an action on contract, admits a portion of the claim as required by statute, is not estopped from denying the contract if plaintiff failed to take judgment for the amount so admitted.

For other cases, see Pleading, I. m, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Sale — neglect to return unopened package — effect.

3. Mere failure to return an unopened package of goods delivered by one with whom there was no contract to purchase them does not raise an obligation to pay for them if there was no demand for their surrender.

For other cases, see Contracts, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 10, 1915.)

Note.—For right to avoid contract because of mistake as to identity of other party thereto, see annotation following this case, post, 801.
L.R.A.1916D.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court of Baltimore City in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover an amount alleged to be due for rubber goods sold by plaintiff's agent to defendant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Harry M. Bensinger and Henry H. Dinneen, for appellant:

It was incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove the execution of the contract by someone acting on behalf of the defendant.

Horner v. Plumley, 97 Md. 282, 54 Atl. 971.

Even though the execution of the agreement had been conceded, such concession would not have relieved the plaintiff of the necessity of proving the authority of the agent to bind the corporation.

Fifer v. Clearfield & C. Coal & Coke Co. 103 Md. 1, 62 Atl. 1122; Schutz v. Jordan, 141 U. S. 213, 35 L. ed. 705, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906; Moore v. Patterson, 28 Pa. 505.

The intention of the parties governs in the making and construction of all contracts.

Pollock, Contr. 3d ed. p. 609; Bannerman v. White, 31 L. J. C. P. N. S. 28, 10 C. B. N. S. 844, 8 Jur. N. S. 282, 4 L. T. N. S. 740, 9 Week. Rep. 784.

Since mutual consent is essential to every agreement, and agreement is generally essential to contract, there can as a rule be no binding contract where there is no real consent.

Humble v. Hunter, 12 Q. B. 309, 17 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 350; Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9; Winchester v. Howard, 97 Mass. 303, 93 Am. Dec. 93; Lucas v. DeLa Cour, 1 Maule & S. 249, 14 Revised Rep. 426; Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Belden Min. Co. 127 U. S. 382, 32 L. ed. 246, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1308; 9 Cyc. 757, ¶ 2; Anson, Contr. 8th ed. p. 163; Roof v. Morrisson, 37 Ill. App. 41; Cundy v. Lindsay, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 459, 47 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 481, 38 L. T. N. S. 573, 26 Week. Rep. 406, 14 Cox, C. C. 93, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas.

211; Fifer v. Clearfield & C. Coal & Coke Co. supra.

The declarations of an agent are not admissible to bind the principal under any circumstances until the agency is first clearly established.

Wilson v. Kelso, 116 Md. 162, 80 Atl. 895; Marshall v. Haney, 4 Md. 511, 59 Am. Dec. 92; Atwell v. Miller, 11 Md. 359, 69 Am. Dec. 206.

There being no express contract declared on, the burden was upon the plaintiff to show that the goods had been tendered or delivered in accordance with the provisions of the order.

Brager v. Levy, 122 Md. 554, 90 Atl. 102; Young v. Mertens, 27 Md. 114; Glenn v. Rogers, 3 Md. 312.

Plaintiff assumed the burden of proving that the sisters intended dealing with him, and having failed, he cannot rely on a promise not made to him.

Consumers' Ice Co. v. E. Webster, Son & Co. 32 App. Div. 592, 53 N. Y. Supp. 56; Paine v. Loeb, 37 C. C. A. 434, 96 Fed. 164; Winchester v. Howard, 97 Mass. 303, 93 Am. Dec. 93; Gordon v. Street [1899] 2 Q. B. 641, 69 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 45, 48 Week. Rep. 158, 81 L. T. N. S. 237, 15 Times, L. R. 445; Barcus v. Dorries, 64 App. Div. 109, 71 N. Y. Supp. 695; Fox v. Tabel, 66 Conn. 397, 34 Atl. 101; Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9; Boulton v. Jones, 2 Hurlst. & N. 564, 27 L. J. Exch. N. S. 117, 3 Jur. N. S. 1156, 6 Week. Rep. 107; Holtz v. Schmidt, 59 N. Y. 253; Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Belden Min. Co. 127 U. S. 387, 32 L. ed. 248, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1308; Humble v. Hunter, 12 Q. B. 310, 17 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 350; Randolph Iron Co. v. Elliott, 34 N. J. L. 184, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 63; Concord Coal Co. v. Ferrin, 71 N. H. 33, 93 Am. St. Rep. 496, 51 Atl. 283; Gregory v. Wendell, 40 Mich. 432; Fifer v. Clearfield & C. Coal & Coke Co. 103 Md. 1, 62 Atl. 1122.

Messrs. Frank, Emory, & Beeuwkes and C. Howard Millikin, for appellee:

Defendant is estopped by its pleadings and admissions to claim that it believed plaintiff to be a corporation.

Mobberly v. Mobberly, 60 Md. 376; Scanlon v. Walshe, 81 Md. 118, 48 Am. St. Rep. 498, 31 Atl. 498.

A mistake as to the person with whom the contract is made avoids the contract only when it is material for one party to know with whom he is contracting and when he has a definite person in view.

Brantly, Contr. 2d ed. § 68, p. 157; Kerr, Fr. & Mistake, 4th ed. p. 484; Smith v. Wheatcroft, L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 223, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 745, 39 L. T. N. S. 103, 27 Week. Rep. 42; Clement v. British American L.R.A.1916D.

Assur. Co. 141 Mass. 298, 5 N. E. 847; Stoddard v. Ham, 129 Mass. 383, 37 Am. Rep. 369; Consumers' Ice Co. v. E. Webster, Son & Co. 32 App. Div. 592, 53 N. Y. Supp. 56; Benjamin, Sales, 1906, 5th ed. p. 91; John Weber & Co. v. Hearn, 49 App. Div. 213, 63 N. Y. Supp. 41.

When a mistake as to the person contracted with results from a fraudulent misrepresentation, a contract arises voidable at the option of the defrauded party.

1 Mechem, Sales, § 267, p. 252; Brantly, Contr. 2d ed. p. 158; John Weber & Co. v. Hearn, 49 App. Div. 213, 63 N. Y. Supp. 41; Benjamin, Sales, 1906, 5th ed. p. 91; Edmunds v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. 135 Mass. 283.

Under these circumstances the contract may be avoided for fraud, and is not void on account of mistake.

Brantly, Contr. 2d ed. p. 161; Gordon v. Street [1899] 2 Q. B. 641, 69 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 45, 48 Week. Rep. 158, 81 L. T. N. S. 237, 15 Times, L. R. 445; King's Norton Metal Co. v. Edridge, L. & Co. 14 Times L. R. 98; Standard Horsehoe Co. v. O'Brien, 91 Md. 751, 46 Atl. 346.

The act of the defendant in accepting a part of the goods sold thereunder, and especially in reaffirming that act, after full knowledge of the alleged representation, amounts to a full and complete ratification of the contract.

Brantly, Contr. 2d ed. pp. 190, 200; Mechem, Sales, § 1806; Benjamin, Sales, 7th ed. 958, 959; 9 Cyc. 438; White v. Miller, 132 Iowa, 144, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 727, 109 N. W. 465; Estes v. Reynolds, 75 Mo. 563; Lyon v. Bertram, 20 How. 149, 154, 155, 15 L. ed. 847, 849, 850; Eclipse Bicycle Co. v. Farrow, 199 U. S. 581, 587, 50 L. ed. 317, 320, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 150.

A purchaser who, upon tender, refuses on a particular ground to accept goods, cannot thereafter justify such refusal upon another ground.

Littlejohn v. Shaw, 159 N. Y. 188, 53 N. E. 810; Meincke v. Falk, 61 Wis. 623, 50 Am. Rep. 157, 21 N. W. 785; Corcoran v. Henshaw, 8 Gray, 267; Peterson Bros. v. Mineral King Fruit Co. 140 Cal. 624, 74 Pac. 162; Olcese v. Mobile Fruit & Trading Co. 112 Ill. App. 281, affirmed in 211 Ill. 539, 71 N. E. 1084; Baird Bros. v. Pratt, 6 Ind. Terr. 38, 89 S. W. 648; Sutton v. Risser, 104 Iowa, 631, 74 N. W. 23; Naas v. Welter, 92 Minn. 404, 100 N. W. 211; Bonney v. Blaisdell, 105 Me. 121, 73 Atl. 811; Ginn v. W. C. Clark Coal Co. 143 Mich. 84, 106 N. W. 867, 107 N. W. 904; Parkins v. Missouri P. R. Co. 72 Neb. 831, 101 N. W. 1013; Gould v. Banks, 8 Wend. 563, 24 Am. Dec. 90; Keswick v. Rafter, 35 App. Div. 508, 54 N. Y. Supp. 850, affirmed in 165 N.

Y. 653, 59 N. E. 1124; O'Donohue v. Leggett, 134 N. Y. 40, 31 N. E. 269, affirming 29 N. Y. S. R. 983, 8 N. Y. Supp. 426; Knox v. Schoenthal, 36 N. Y. S. R. 595, 13 N. Y. Supp. 7; Hayden v. Demets, 53 N. Y. 426; Newbery v. Furnival, 56 N. Y. 638; Smith v. Pettie, 70 N. Y. 13; Manda v. Etienne, 93 App. Div. 609, 87 N. Y. Supp. 588; Drucklieb v. Universal Tobacco Co. 106 App. Div. 470, 94 N. Y. Supp. 777; Hanley v. Combs, 48 Or. 409, 87 Pac. 143; United Fruit Co. v. Bisese, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 170; Kelly v. Berry, 39 Wis. 669; Hess v. Kaufherr, 128 App. Div. 526; Hill v. Fruita Mercantile Co. 42 Colo. 491, 126 Am. St. Rep. 172, 94 Pac. 354.

Thomas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal is from a judgment recovered in the superior court of Baltimore city by Reuben R. Kusnitt, trading as the Good-year Hospital Rubber Company, against the School Sisters of Notre Dame, a corporation for $900. The suit was on the common counts, to which the defendant pleaded that "it was never indebted" and "did not promise as alleged."

Joseph S. Holstein, the only witness for the plaintiff, testified that he was the agent of the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company and traveled "for them," and that on the 28th of October, 1913, he called at Notre Dame College, on Charles Street avenue, Baltimore, and asked for the Sister Superior. When Sister M. Florentine, the Sister Superior, appeared, he exhibited to her samples of rubber goods, and, after receiving from her an order for ice bags and water bags, he talked with her and another sister about matting for the back stairs of the building. Sister M. Florentine sent for another sister to show him the stairs in order that he might measure them. After he measured the back stairs, he asked the Sister Superior "why they did not have the other stairs in front done at the same time," and she said, "No; she could not afford that at the time." He told her the result of his measurement of the back stairs and the prices of the matting, and she asked him what it would cost, and he replied that he could not tell her; that no rubber man could tell her that in advance; but that it would cost 30 cents a pound. He then wrote the following order or contract, which he and the Sister Superior signed:

Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company,
Hartford, Conn.
Goodyear's Famous Rubber Goods of Every Description.

Shipped via Penn. R. R. as soon as possible. When ship: Date, Oct. 28, 1913.
I. R. A. 1918D

1%, 10 days; net, 30 days. Terms: Subject to sight draft without notice.

Sold to Notre Dame College, City, Charles St. Ave., State, Baltimore, Md.

All claims must be made within one day after receipt of goods or no allowance will be made.

We, the above-named institution and purchaser, agree to take the following goods as specified below:

½ doz. M. W. B. .... $25 per dozen
½ doz. Z. E. P. Ice Bags .... 15 per dozen
260 pieces 5/16 (½) Plain Black Matting
11" x 36", at 30¢ per pound.

Special price:

14 pieces 5/16 (½) Plain Black Matting
8" x 30", at 30¢ per pound.

12 pieces 5/16 (½) Plain Black Matting
24" x 36", at 30¢ per pound.

2 pieces 5/16 (½) Plain Black Matting
2" x 36", at 30¢ per pound.

1 #7 In. Ring, $1.50 ea.

Bevel all edges. Send nails.

Frt. to be deducted Off of Bill.

1 Perf. mat. ½" Thick 3'x3', name in white N. D. M., as donation.

No chg. 1 Perf. 5'x3' Notre Dame College, white, no Chg., as donation.

Customers should read contract over carefully before signing and should obtain a duplicate from agent. All goods are made special to order and cannot be canceled under any condition.

N. B.—This contract is binding when signed by the customer, and the agent accepting same, by signing it, binds the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Co.

Name of Institution: Notre Dame College.

Signature of Purchaser: Sr. M. Florentine.

J. S. Holstein, Agent.

He further testified that he was at Notre Dame College about an hour and a half; that he did not know the name of the Sister Superior until she signed the contract; that the water bottles, ice bags, and invalid ring were shipped to Notre Dame College by express and received by the defendant, and that the other goods mentioned in the order or contract were shipped by freight and tendered to the college; that it took 2,980 pounds of matting to fill the order, which, at 30 cents a pound, amounted to $894, and that the amount due plaintiff for the goods ordered was $900.15.

On cross-examination he testified as follows:

Q. Who is the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company?

A. The Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company is a concern in Hartford, Connecticut, owned by R. R. Kusnitt.

Q. Who did you tell the sisters of Notre Dame the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company was?

A. I did not make any assertion who it was.

Q. Did you tell the sisters of Notre Dame who you represented?

A. Yes, the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company, of Hartford, Connecticut.

Q. Did you tell them what it was?

A. A rubber concern.

Q. Did you tell the sisters of Notre Dame, at the time plaintiff's exhibit No. 1 (the contract or the order for the goods) was signed, that the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company was a large firm or corporation in which you were interested as an officer?

A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Didn't you tell them that the reason for your making these remarkably low prices for the goods offered to be sold was because the winter season was approaching and you had a large factory, and in order to keep the men employed during the winter you offered these prices, which were virtually cost prices?

A. I made the assertion that to keep our factory busy during the winter season, that was the reason I gave for these low prices, and it was true; but any factory we buy goods of is our factory.

Q. Then, as a matter of fact, at the time you made that statement to the sisters, you did not have a factory, did you?

A. We call it our factory when we are under contract to buy certain output.

Q. Did Reuben R. Kusnitt, on the 28th of October, 1913, own any factory?

A. He did not own a factory.

Q. There was no such corporation as the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company?

A. Well, we did not claim that it was a corporation.

Q. Did you tell the school sisters of Notre Dame, at the time this contract was entered into, that R. R. Kusnitt was the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company?

A. I did not, because I did not deem it was necessary.

Q. Did you tell them at that time that you were selling these goods below their real value?

A. I did, and so they were.

Q. And didn't you tell them that the members of the corporation that you represented would raise a racket with you, but that you would stand for it, or words to that effect?

A. I do not recall any such statement.

Q. Didn't you tell them that you were selling these goods at that price so as to L.R.A.1916D.

keep your men employed during the winter season?

A. I did.

After stating that the three sisters he mentioned were not together when the contract was signed; that it was signed "in triplicate;" that Sister Florentine left the room while he was packing his goods, and that he left a signed copy of the contract in the room for her, he was shown the following letter, which he said was a letter from the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company:

Goodyear Hospital Rubber Co., Hartford, Conn.

Goodyear's Famous Rubber Goods of Every Description.

November 17th, 1913.

Notre Dame College, Charles Street Ave., Baltimore, Md.

Rev. Sister M. Florentine, Supr.—

Dear Madam:

Please find enclosed copy of your contract, which is exactly as the original. This matting is for your stairs in back of building. You will also find enclosed bill of lading for matting shipped to-day.

Respectfully yours,

Goodyear Hospital Rubber Co.,

By R. R. Kusnitt, Manager.

RRK/H.

Enclosures.

The witness stated that that was the way the plaintiff usually signed; that the goods referred to were shipped from the warehouse of the plaintiff at 46 Village street, Hartford, Connecticut; and further testified as follows:

Q. That is not your warehouse now?

A. No, sir.

Q. Who, as a matter of fact, manufactured these goods?

A. The Goodyear India Rubber Glove Company, of Maggatuck, Connecticut, manufactured part.

Q. What part did the Goodyear India Rubber Glove Company manufacture?

A. The sundry parts,—the ice and water bags and the invalid ring.

Q. And who manufactured the other part?

A. The people who make the same stuff, the Goodyear,—the genuine Goodyears.

Q. What is the name of that concern?

A. The Jersey Car Spring & Rubber Company of Jersey City, New Jersey.

Q. They manufactured all the matting?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who are the "genuine" Goodyear Rubber people?

A. Well, there are 150 Goodyears in the United States; that is an uncopyrighted name.

Q. One hundred and fifty of them in the United States?

A. Yes. I guess you could count a thousand.

Q. Well, why do you call them genuine if there are 150 of them?

A. That is too much for me to answer; they are all genuine.

Sister Mary Florentine, when asked to state the circumstances under which she signed the contract, said: "On the 28th of October, 1913, the portress telephoned to my office telling me that there was an agent in the parlor exhibiting rubber goods, or wanted to sell rubber goods. I came over and found Mr. Holstein there, and he showed me some ice bags and water bottles. I thought they would be of use in the infirmary. I sent for the infirmarian, Sister Mortana, and asked her if she would like to have some of them, and she stated that she would like to have one-half dozen of each. He spoke of the matting, and told us what it cost. Then he said, 'In the meantime, you are going to take these anyhow, so sign for these.' I signed for the ice bags and water bottles, and so did he. Then Sister Mortana took him to the back stairs, and he came back again, and I don't know whether he told me how many steps there were, but I think there were about 130 to a stair. He said it would be $1.25 a step. I said: 'Oh, no; we could not spend that much money. It would be about $300.' And he said: 'Oh, no; it will not be more than $150 or $200.' Then I sent for Sister Meletia and spoke to her about it, and she advised not to do it, but he insisted it would not be over $200, so I sent him out with another sister to measure the stairs, and I thought he was about to fill out another paper when I was called out. I returned later, and I found him on the way to the door. I went to the portress and asked her whether the man had left a paper for me, and she said no."

- When asked if she got a copy of the order, she said: "No, I got no copy. There was no copy left. I looked in the parlor where he was, and there was no copy. Then it struck me that perhaps he had written the order on the same paper which I had signed for the water bottles and ice bags, and I was very much troubled about it, and I wrote a registered letter, to be sure that he would get it, countermanding the whole order."

Plaintiff's counsel was then asked to produce the letter, and he said he had no letter dated October 28th, but produced one dated L.R.A.1916D.

October 29th, which the witness said was the letter she referred to, and which is as follows:

College of Notre Dame of Maryland
Charles Street Ave., Baltimore.

Goodyear Hospital Rubber Co., Hartford, Conn.

Gentlemen:—

This morning a representative of your company called regarding rubber goods. We gave him an order for  $\frac{1}{2}$  dozen ice bags and  $\frac{1}{2}$  dozen water bottles. We also gave him an order for rubber for our back stairs. We had no idea that it would cost so much, but since he left we calculated and find it would be more than we could afford to spend for the next two years. We now recall the order for the rubbers for stairs. You may send us the water bags and the hot water bottles, but consider the order for the rubber for stairs canceled for the present. We may get it later, but not now.

Very truly,

Oct. 29, '13. Sister Mary Florentine.

Sister Florentine stated that the letter was written on the same day that the contract was signed, and that she received a reply to it from the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company, but had mislaid it and could not find it. Counsel for the plaintiff produced the following copy of it, which the defendant offered in evidence:

Hartford, Conn., October 30, 1913.

College of Notre Dame of Maryland, Rev. Sister Mary Florentine, Superior, Charles Street Ave., Baltimore, Md.

Dear Madam:

We have just received your registered letter at 4:15 this afternoon, in which you state that you wish ~~to~~ cancel your order for rubber matting to some date in the near future. We are very sorry we cannot comply with your wishes, as your order has gone into the works last night and stock is being made up for your contract and will be ready for shipment within a few days, as our factory is working day and night. You have bought these goods at a very low figure and there ought to be no reason why they should not last as long as the institution does. The matting is guaranteed for twenty-five years. Thanking you for your kind order and hoping that our business relations will be the same in the future as they have been in the past, we beg to remain,

Respectfully yours,

Goodyear Hospital Rubber Co.,
....., Manager.

The defendant then offered in evidence further correspondence with the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company, in which she asked for a copy of the contract, and then Sister Florentine further testified that, after she received the telegram, she sent two of the sisters up to Hartford, Connecticut, to make inquiry concerning the company, as she was "very doubtful about it;" that at the time she signed the contract the only items it contained were the one-half dozen hot water bags at $25 per dozen and one-half dozen ice bags at $15 per dozen; that she did not know that the other items were put on that paper, but thought he was putting them on another to be signed; that Mr. Holstein told her that the matting for the back stairs would not cost $300, and perhaps not $200; that there were about 130 steps in each flight of stairs, or about 260 steps in the two flights, and that at first he spoke of the matting costing about $1.25 a step; that she calculated and saw that it would be about $300, and he said, "Oh, no; possibly 50 or 75 cents each, and they will not be more than $200, and possibly only $150;" that she did not receive a copy of the contract from the defendant until she received the bill for the goods and the bill of lading in the letter of November 17, 1913; that, when the goods arrived by freight, she consulted an attorney, who advised her not to receive them, and that she then telephoned to the station and advised the railroad company to return them, and that she thought the railroad company had done so until a few days later, when she received a postal from the terminal warehouse saying that the goods were there and would be sold at auction in a few days; that she then called up Camden station and asked them why they did not return the goods, and they said that they had written to Hartford, but had gotten no answer; that, at the time she ordered the goods, Mr. Holstein told her that he was a member of the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company; that he was the only one who could give them the rubber at such reduced rates, and that, when he went back to Hartford, they would call him down for it; that the reason he did it was because the factory had a great many men, and they did not have much to do at that time of the year; that she asked him if the factory was in Hartford, and he said, "No," it was right outside of Hartford; that she never heard of Mr. Kusnitt, and never heard his name; that Mr. Holstein told her that the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company was a company—a corporation—of which he was a member, and that she therefore ordered the goods from him. On cross-examination she stated that the School Sisters of Notre Dame is a corporation and controls and operates the Notre Dame College; that she is the president and treasurer of the college, and is called the "Superior;" that the only items in the contract when she signed it were the water bags and ice bags, and, when asked if she had received them, she said a box came to the college during her absence by express and was received by one of the sisters, probably the portress; that it had never been opened and it was still at the college, and that she had never offered to return it to the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company; that Mr. Holstein told her that the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company was a company, or a firm, and that he was one of the members, and that it had a factory outside of Hartford; that he said he had a number of men engaged in the factory, and that they did not have much work to do at that season, and that that was the reason he could give her the rubber cheaper; that he said the company had the factory, and that it was run by their men, and that they paid them; that she could not say positively that he used the word "corporation," but that he did use the word "firm or company." The testimony of Sister Florentine in regard to the circumstances under which the contract was signed by her, and the items it contained when she signed it, etc., was corroborated by the testimony of the other two sisters who were present; and Sister Meletia, who was the dean and secretary of the college, further testified that she recollected very positively that Mr. Holstein said that the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company "was a corporation;" that she inquired about the "peculiarity of the name," and that he said "a corporation had the right to any name that they liked;" that she asked how he could give rates that seemed to her "preposterous," and that he said he was allowed to do that because they "had a big concourse of men, and they were dull at that season, and it was better to get a little something than nothing;" that on November 13th, she went to Hartford, Connecticut, taking Sister Mortana with her, to find out about the Goodyear Hospital Rubber Company, "because she felt convinced that there was some chicanery about the transaction, and she thought that, if she could meet the president of the corporation, she could have an understanding with him;" that she found no institution at all of that name, although she made careful inquiry, looked at the city directory and the telephone directory, went to every shop that had the word "Goodyear" attached to it, or where rubber goods were sold, inquired at the city hall and at police headquarters, and asked "the head man at the postoffice;" that while she was in Hartford she telephoned to Mr. Holstein's house, and spoke to a woman who said she was Mrs. Holstein, and that she told her that Mr. Holstein was in California or Wyoming and would not return for several months; that she asked her if there was not someone to represent him, and that she replied that unfortunately there was nobody in town; that she then asked her if there was not an office or warehouse or some place where she could meet the officials of the corporation, and that Mrs. Holstein replied there was a warehouse, but that it was very dilapidated and in a miserable part of the town.

During the trial the defendant reserved twenty-seven exceptions, the last being to the ruling of the court below on the prayers and special exceptions to plaintiff's prayers; but, in the view we take of the case, it will only be necessary to consider one of them.

The evidence to which we have referred at some length shows conclusively that the sisters who made the contract in this case on behalf of the defendant thought they were contracting with, and intended to contract with, a company or corporation which owned a large factory in or just outside of Hartford, Connecticut, and employed a great number of men engaged in the manufacture of goods of the character mentioned in the contract; and it also shows that they were led to so believe by the statements and representations of the witness Holstein. It is true he denies that he said that the Good-year Hospital Rubber Company was a corporation, but he admits he told them that he represented a company of that name, and does not deny that he told them that the company had a factory just outside of Hartford where it employed a number of men in manufacturing goods of the kind he offered to sell, and that he was willing to give them the goods mentioned at a reduced rate in order to keep his men employed during the winter season; that there was in fact no such corporation, company, or factory, and that the sisters who represented the defendant in the negotiations never knew or heard of the plaintiff in this case until the suit was brought, and never intended to contract with him, must be conceded.

In Anson on Contracts, 11th ed. § 183, the learned author, in speaking of "mistake as to the identity of the person with whom the contract is made," refers to the cases of Boulton v. Jones, 2 Hurlst. & N. 564, 27 L. J. Exch. N. S. 117, 3 Jur. N. S. 1156, 6 Week. Rep. 107, and Cundy v. Lindsay, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 459, 47 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 481, 38 L. T. N. S. 573, 26 Week. Rep. 406, 14 Cox, C. C. 93, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 211, as follows: "In Boulton v. Jones, Boulton had taken over the business of one Brocklehurst, with whom Jones had been used to deal, and against whom he had a set-off. Jones sent an order for goods to Brocklehurst. Boulton supplied them without any notice that the business had changed hands. When Jones learned that the goods had not come from Brocklehurst, he refused to pay for them, and it was held that he need not pay. 'In order to entitle the plaintiff to recover, he must show that there was a contract with himself.' In Cundy v. Lindsay, a person named Blenkarn, by imitating the signature of a respectable firm named Blenkiron, induced AB to supply him with goods which he afterwards sold to X. It was held that an innocent purchaser could acquire no right to the goods, because as between AB and Blenkarn there was no contract. 'Of him,' says Lord Cairns, 'they knew nothing, and on him they never thought. With him they never intended to deal. Their minds never even for an instant of time rested upon him, and as between him and them there was no consensus of mind which could lead to any agreement or contract whatever. As between him and them there was merely the one side to a contract, where, in order to produce a contract, two sides should be required.' The result of the two cases is no more than this: That if a man accepts an offer which is plainly meant for another, or if he becomes party to a contract, by falsely representing himself to be another, the contract in either case is void. In the first case, one party takes advantage of the mistake, in the other he creates it."

In note 2 to page 169 it is said: "The same result follows if the seller is induced to contract with B on his representation that he is acting as agent for the named person."

Mr. Benjamin, in his work on Sales of Personal Property, 4th ed. § 60, after reviewing the English and American cases, says: "Where a person passes himself off for another, or falsely represents himself as agent for another, for whom he professes to buy, and thus obtains the vendor's assent to a sale, and even a delivery of goods, the whole contract is void; it has never come into existence, for the vendor never assented to sell to the person thus deceiving him." He then refers to certain cases where the contracts were held void on the ground of fraud, and says, "But they were equally void for mistake." Mr. Brantly, in the 2d edition of his work on Contracts, says (p. 160.): "It is well settled that if a man falsely represents that he is the agent of another and thus obtains possession of property, there is no sale, and the transaction is void. In this instance the seller intends to contract, not with the person before him, but with a principal, who is either nonexistent or has not authorized the contract. There is consequently no meeting of minds between the seller and buyer. The offer or declaration of will by the seller is not met by a corresponding will on the part of any buyer, and the offer to sell, not being made to the party present, cannot be accepted by him."

He says also: "That, where goods are ordered of one person and supplied by another, the latter has no claim against the purchaser ex contractu, unless he appropriates them after notice of the substitution, in which case he assents to the change." p. 158.

The same rule is expressed in 9 Cyc. 401, 402, as follows: "Mistake as to the identity of the other party arises where a person contracts with another believing him to be the one with whom he intends to contract, while, as a matter of fact, it is another person. Here, whether the mistake arises through the other's fraud, as when he falsely represents himself to be another, or accepts an offer which is meant for another, there is no agreement. One who enters into an agreement has a right to know with whom he is agreeing; and when a person intends to contract with another, he cannot be compelled to accept a third person as the other party to the contract."

In Humble v. Hunter, 12 Q. B. 310, Lord Denman announces the rule in the statement: "You have a right to the benefit you contemplate from the character, credit, and substance of the party with whom you contract."

And in Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Belden Min. Co. 127 U. S. 379, on page 387, 32 L. ed. 246, 248, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1308, the Supreme Court says: "But everyone has a right to select and determine with whom he will contract, and cannot have another person thrust upon him without his consent. In the familiar phrase of Lord Denman, 'You have the right to the benefit you anticipate from the character, credit, and substance of the party with whom you contract.'"

In the case of Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9, the court said: "To entitle the plaintiff to recover, it must show some contract with the defendant. There was no express contract, and, upon the facts stated, no contract is to be implied. The defendant had taken ice from the plaintiff in 1873, but, on account of some dissatisfaction with the manner of supply, he terminated his contract and made a contract for his supply with the Citizens' Ice Company. The plaintiff afterward delivered ice to the defendant for one year without notifying the defendant, as the presiding judge has found that it had bought out the business of the Citizens' Ice Company, until after the delivery and consumption of the ice. . . . There was no privity of contract established between the plaintiff and defendant, and, without such privity, the possession and use of the property will not support an implied assumption. Hills v. Snell, 104 Mass. 173, 177, 6 Am. Rep. 216. And no presumption of assent can be implied from the reception and use of the ice, because the defendant had no knowledge that it was furnished by the plaintiff. . . . A party has a right to select and determine with whom he will contract, and cannot have another person thrust upon him without his consent. It may be of importance to him who performs the contract. . . . In all these cases, as he may contract with whom he pleases, the sufficiency of his reasons for so doing cannot be inquired into. . . . If he had received notice and continued to take the ice as delivered, a contract would be implied."

In the case of Edmunds v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. 135 Mass. 283, "the swindler introduced himself as a brother of Edward Pape, of Dayton, Ohio; . . . the plaintiffs understood that they were selling, and intended to sell, to the real Edward Pape," and the court held that there was no contract with him, because the swindler who acted as his agent had no authority, and that there was no contract of sale made with anyone, and that the relation of vendor and vendee never existed between the plaintiffs and the swindler.

In the case of Rodliff v. Dallinger, 141 Mass. 1, 55 Am. Rep. 439, 4 N. E. 805, wool was delivered to a broker with the understanding that it was sold to an undisclosed manufacturer. It turned out that the broker in fact was not acting for the undisclosed principal, and the court held that there was no contract of sale.

In the case of Barnes v. Shoemaker, 112 Ind. 512, 14 N. E. 367, where the goods ordered by one person were supplied by another, the supreme court of Indiana held that the acceptance and use of the goods, without notice that they were so supplied, would not warrant a recovery because "one of the indispensable elements of a contract—the mutual consent of the contracting parties"—was absent, and that, to support a recovery for goods sold and delivered, there must be a contract, either express or implied, between the person who ordered and the one who supplied the goods.

The cases of Roof v. Morrisson, 37 Ill. App. 37, Consumers' Ice Co. v. E. Webster, Son & Co. 32 App. Div. 592, 53 N. Y. Supp. 56, and Randolph Iron Co. v. Elliott, 34 N. J. L. 184, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 63, are to the same effect.

In this state the case of Fifer v. Clear- field & C. Coal & Coke Co. 103 Md. 1, 62 Atl. 1122, is directly in point. There the contract was made in the name of the Cambria Coal Company by one who represented that he was the agent of the company. The defendant was led to believe and thought that the Cambria Coal Company was a corporation. The evidence disclosed that there was no such corporation, and that the agent in fact represented the plaintiff, Clarence A. Fifer, who was trading as the Cambria Coal Company. In disposing of the case, Judge Page, speaking for this court, said: "The testimony shows that the contract entered into by the appellee was with the Cambria Coal Company, which, so far as the record discloses, was a fiction, not representing any corporation or association. It is clear, from all the evidence, that the appellee and its agents, during the whole time the negotiation for the sale of the coal were going on, thought they were dealing with a corporation."

After referring to some of the evidence in the case, he said further: "It is therefore clear that the appellee supposed it was dealing with a corporation, and not with an individual; and, furthermore, the evidence will show that this belief on its part was induced by the conduct of Deitrich, the agent of the appellant. The law applicable to such a state of facts is thus stated in Anson on Contracts, 8th ed., p. 163. Mistakes as to the identity of the person with whom the contract is made 'arise where A contracts with X, believing him to be M; that is, where the offerer has in contemplation a definite person with whom he intends to contract.' The author cites in support of this position the cases of Boulton v. Jones, 2 Hurlst. & N. 564, 27 L. J. Exch. N. S. 117, 3 Jur. N. S. 1156, 6 Week. Rep. 107; Cundy v. Lindsay, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 459, 47 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 481, 38 L. T. N. S. 573, 26 Week. Rep. 406, 14 Cox, C. C. 93, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 211. In the latter case, where 'a person named Blenkarn imitating the signature of a respectable firm named Blenkiron, induced AB to supply him with goods which he afterwards sold to X, it was held an innocent purchaser could acquire no right to the goods, because as between AB and Blenkarn there was no contract.'"

After quoting the statement of Lord Cairns in that case, and citing the case of Roof v. Morrisson, supra, this court further said: "The author in a note adds: These cases must be distinguished from those where B deals with A, supposing A to be acting for himself, when in fact A is acting for an undisclosed principal, X. Applying these principles to the undisputed evidence in the case, it seems that the appellee was led to suppose that it was dealing with a corporation. . . . It did not intend to contract with an individual, and was misled by Deitrich in so doing. There was therefore no valid contract between the appellee and the appellant, and the latter cannot maintain this suit."

It is urged on behalf of the appellee that a mistake as to the identity of the party with whom the contract was made only avoids the contract when it is material for one party to know with whom he is contracting and when he has a definite person in view. Of course, the mistake does not arise where one of the parties has no definite person in view with whom he intends to contract. As said in Anson on Contracts, § 184: "It cannot arise in the case of general offers which anyone may accept, such as offers by advertisement or sales for ready money."

But to hold that the rule only applies where the defendant can show that it was important for him to know with whom he was contracting, or that he had a reason for not wanting to contract with the plaintiff, would be to lose sight of the principle upon which the rule rests. If a person has a right to contract with whom he pleases, and another cannot be thrust upon him without his consent, he cannot be held to have contracted with a person other than the one he contemplated.

In the case of Boulton v. Jones, supra, the defendant had a set-off against the party with whom he thought he was dealing; and in the case of Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, supra, it was urged that the rule should not apply unless there was a similar reason why the contract should not be enforced. In answer to this contention the court in the latter case said: "The fact that a defendant in a particular case has a claim in set-off against the original contracting party shows clearly the injustice of forcing another person upon him to execute the contract without his consent, against whom his set-off would not be available. But the actual existence of the claim in set-off cannot be a test to determine that there is no implied assumpsit or privity between the parties. Nor can the nonexistence of a set-off raise an implied assumpsit. . . . The implied assumpsit arises upon the dealings between the parties to the action, and cannot arise upon the dealings between the defendant and the original contractor, to which the plaintiff was not a party."

In the case at bar the sisters who represented the defendant never knew or heard of Reuben R. Kusnitt, but thought they were contracting with, and intended to contract with, a company or corporation engaged in manufacturing goods of the kind they ordered. They had in view a definite person with whom they intended to contract; and, as there was no such person or company, there was no contract. This is not the case of dealing with an agent, supposing him to be acting for himself. Holstein represented that he was acting for a company or corporation which in fact did not exist.

The cases of Stoddard v. Ham, 129 Mass. 383, 37 Am. Rep. 369, and Clement v. British American Assur. Co. 141 Mass. 298, 5 N. E. 847, cited and relied upon by the appellee, are not in conflict with the Massachusetts cases to which we have already referred. In Stoddard v. Ham, the court said: "It was not a case of mistaken identity. The plaintiffs knew that they were dealing with Leonard. They did not mistake him for the defendant. Nothing was said as to any other party to the sale. The conclusion is unavoidable that the contract was with him."

And in Clement v. British American Assur. Co., the court said: "If A deals with B without any inquiry as to his identity, and, in consequence of the dealing, B's position is changed, as a general rule A would be estopped from setting up that he supposed he was dealing with another person, and thus defeating the contract."

It is quite apparent that these cases do not depart from the rule adhered to in the other Massachusetts cases referred to, and which applies to a case where the agent leads one to believe that he is contracting with a company or corporation that does not in fact exist.

The suit was brought under the practice act in force in Baltimore city, and, as the defendant in the affidavit to its pleas admitted the plaintiff's claim to the extent of $21.50, the appellee contends that it is estopped from denying that it contracted with him. This contention, however, is fully disposed of in the case of Laubheimer v. Naill, 88 Md. 174, 40 Atl. 888, where this court held that, if the plaintiff fails to take a judgment for the amount admitted to be due, the defendant is not bound by his admission in the affidavit to his plea.

It is conceded that the express package containing the water bottles, ice bags, and invalid ring, amounting to $21.50, was received by the defendant. But at the time the defendant received the package it did not know that it had been shipped by the plaintiff, and the evidence shows that it has never been opened and is still at the college. So far as the record shows, there has been no demand by the plaintiff for these goods, and no conversion of or refusal to return them. As the defendant did not order or contract to purchase them from the plaintiff, and did not know, when they were received, that they had been furnished by him, there was no express or implied contract to pay for them, unless we are to hold that one person can make another his debtor without the latter's consent. In Randolph Iron Co. v. Elliott, 34 N. J. L. 184, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 63, supra, the court held that, where goods come into the possession of the defendant under such circumstances, assumpsit cannot be maintained unless the plaintiff shows that there has been a subsequent demand and a refusal or conversion of the goods. If the defendant had received the goods with the knowledge that they had been shipped by the plaintiff, or had appropriated them to its use after notice that they were furnished by him, or upon demand by the plaintiff had refused to surrender them, a very different principle would apply. But the mere fact that they are in the possession of the defendant under the circumstances disclosed by the record does not impose upon it the burden of returning them, or establish an implied contract to pay for them.

It follows from what we have said that there was no evidence in the case legally sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover, and that the defendant's third prayer should therefore have been granted.

Judgment reversed without a new trial, with costs to the appellant.

Annotation—Right to avoid contract because of mistake as to identity of other party thereto.

The right to avoid a contract because of mistake as to the identity of the other party thereto is based upon the right of a party to choose with whom he will enter into contractual relations. No reason need be given for the manner of exercising this right of choice. For some reason satisfactory to himself a man may be willing to deal with a certain person but not with another on precisely the same terms. Everyone has this right, that is, to select and determine with whom he will contract; he may not have another person thrust upon him without his consent. The reputation of a certain person or firm may be such that the party desires to contract with him and him only. If a mistake arises and such a party contracts with another in the belief that he is contracting with the desired person, the contract may be avoided. It is more accurate to say that no contract exists.<sup>1</sup> This rule applies where the mistake arises without any fraudulent conduct, at least no more fraudulent conduct than nondisclosure of facts.<sup>2</sup>

In some cases stopping short of express representations, deceptive appearances are created which amount to

<sup>1</sup> In denying to a purchaser of ore upon credit the right to assign the contract so as to vest in his assignee his rights under the contract, the court in Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Belden Min. Co. (1887) 127 U. S. 379, 32 L. ed. 246, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1308, states that everyone has a right to select and determine with whom he will contract, and one cannot have another person thrust upon him without his consent.

No mistake as to identity authorizing a rescission of the contract arises from the fact that goods ordered of a firm whose business office was in one state were shipped from the firm's factory in another state. Baird Bros. v. Pratt (1905) 6 Ind. Terr. 38, 89 S. W. 648, judgment reversed on other grounds in (1906) 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1116, 78 C. C. A. 615, 148 Fed. 825.

<sup>2</sup> In Roof v. Morrisson (1890) 37 Ill. App. 37, a wholesale merchant accustomed to sell goods to a partnership, who took a credit order from the firm after it had been changed into a corporation without any notice of the change, was held to have the right to avoid the contract and recover the goods, after an assignment by the corporation. No notice of the dissolution of the partnership was published in the newspapers of the city in which the business was located, nor was any notice sent to the wholesale dealer. The only change that was made in the name of the firm was the dropping of the symbol "&" from the old partnership name.

A consumer who contracted with an ice company to furnish him ice is not liable upon a contract implied from the delivery and acceptance of the ice, to another company which purchased the business of the first company and supplied him with ice without notifying him of the change. Boston Ice Co. v. Potter (1877) 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9.

A dealer who received an order for goods from what he supposed to be an established firm may recover the goods where, as a matter of fact, they were ordered by another doing business under a similar name, while he was an undischarged liquidating debtor. Re Reed (1876) L. R. 3 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 123, 45 L. J. Bankr. N. S. 120, 34 L. T. N. S. 664, 24 Week. Rep. 904.

A lessor who entered into an agreement modifying the lease, with a corporation of the same name as the original lessee, organized under the laws of a different state and constituting a different corporation, though with the same officers and members, may avoid the contract, since there was no intention to contract with the second corporation. Brighton Packing Co. v. Butchers' Slaughtering & Melting Assn. (1912) 211 Mass. 398, 97 N. E. 780. The lessor had no knowledge of the change in the corporation. L.R.A.1916D.

porate organization, and this was kept hidden from him; the lease, as modified, was sought to be enforced by an assignee thereof, and it was claimed that the lessor had estopped himself from making a claim that the modified agreement was invalid by recognizing the assignee and permitting him to incur great expense on the strength of the agreement and in reliance upon its validity and expectation of its fulfillment. This position was held not maintainable, as all the conduct of the lessor grew out of and was based upon his belief that he had made a valid agreement with the original corporation, a belief which was wholly erroneous and was caused by the second corporation's fraudulent concealment of the truth.

One who borrowed money believing it to be the money of a certain person, to whom she executed a note for the money so borrowed, cannot be held liable in a suit in assumpsit to third person, although the money was in fact his money as he claimed. Langdon v. Hughes (1904) 113 Ill. App. 203.

An owner of goods who delivers them on credit on a supposed contract of sale, to one professing to act for a well-known firm, but fraudulently intending to appropriate the goods to himself and another, partners in a business of a different kind, may maintain trover against an auctioneer who makes advances upon the goods in good faith and sells them to repay himself before notice. Hardman v. Booth (1863) 1 Hurlst. & C. (Eng.) 803, 9 Jur. N. S. 81, 32 L. J. Exch. N. S. 105, 7 L. T. N. S. 638, 11 Week. Rep. 239. It is stated by Pollock in rendering the opinion that there never was any contracting mind; that the owners of the goods thought they were dealing with the well-known firm to whom they sent the goods; that this was the form of the contract, but it had no substance.

Cundy v. Lindsay (1878) L. R. 3 App. Cas. (Eng.) 459, 47 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 481, 38 L. T. N. S. 573, 26 Week. Rep. 400, 14 Qx, C. C. 93, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 211, is sufficiently set out in the opinion in SCHOOL SISTERS v. KUSNITT, ante, 792.

See Boulton v. Jones, sufficiently set out in the opinion in SCHOOL SISTERS v. KUSNITT.

It is stated in Randolph Iron Co. v. Elliott (1870) 34 N. J. L. 184, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 63, that the relation of vendor and purchaser does not exist between a company that has filled an order for iron given to another, and the person who ordered the iron; but that after demand of the iron and refusal to return it, or after actual conversion, trover would lie; or after sale of the ore by the purchaser the tort might be waived and assumpsit maintained.

One who purchased for use in a building stone which he thought or supposed was fraud.<sup>5</sup> In such a case the reason for avoiding the contract is much stronger than in the absence of fraud. For here, as in the case of express fraudulent representations as to the identity of the party with whom the negotiations are being conducted, an element additional to mistake is introduced, viz., that of fraud.<sup>6</sup> The party thus mistaken as to the identity of the other party to the contract has the right to avoid the contract.<sup>6</sup>

In some cases the contract is treated as voidable merely.<sup>6</sup> This, however, is inaccurate. As stated in the introduction, it is more accurate to say that no contract exists in such a case. To use a convenient expression, the contract is wholly void.<sup>7</sup>

It is not necessary for any damage to the property of a corporation, but which was in fact the property of an official of the corporation, cannot defeat an action to recover for goods sold and delivered on the theory that he did not contract with the owner. Pizzutielle v. Graham (1907) 58 Misc. 584, 106 N. Y. Supp. 1099. The theory of the court is not clear. Apparently the action was brought on the contract of sale, although in the opinion there is at least some language indicating a recovery upon an implied contract arising from the use of the goods purchased, the court stating that the purchaser cannot, after obtaining the property, hold it and yet refuse to pay for it.

<sup>5</sup> Where, at a public sale by an administrator of the goods of his decedent's estate, another put up a horse at the sale as the property of the estate, the purchaser of the horse, thinking it to be the property of the estate, is not, upon discovery of the fact as to the ownership, bound to take it. Barker v. Keown (1896) 67 Ill. App. 433. The fraud practised upon the purchaser is stated to furnish sufficient reason for rescinding the purchase.

One who bids upon chattels at a public auction of the effects of a decedent, the stock bid upon being the property of another person, may avoid the contract upon discovery of the real ownership of the property. The auctioneer who was conducting the sale in this case was ignorant of the ownership of the stock sold. Thomas v. Kerr (1868) 3 Bush. (Ky.) 619, 96 Am. Dec. 262. This amounts to a fraud which entitles the purchaser to repudiate the sale upon discovery thereof.

One who was induced to borrow money and give a note to a money lender who had attained an evil reputation so that the borrower was not willing to contract with him, by means of the fraudulent concealment of his identity by such lender, may revoke the contract upon discovery of the fraud. Gordon v. Street [1899] 2 Q. B. (Eng.) 641, 69 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 45, 81 L. T. N. S. 237, 48 Week. Rep. 158, 15 Times L. R. 445.

See Hardman v. Booth (Eng.) supra.

<sup>6</sup> It has been stated that whether the contract is created by fraud or innocent mistake, the legal effect is the same. Roof v. Morrisson (1890) 37 Ill. App. 37. Apparently what is meant here by "legal effect" is that in either case the right to rescind exists.

<sup>5</sup> A party intending to purchase a monument of a certain person, who is induced to enter into a contract with another upon L.R.A.1916D.

the false and fraudulent representations of the other that he is the agent of the party with whom the first party intended to contract, may avoid such contract. Fox v. Tabel (1895) 66 Conn. 397, 34 Atl. 101.

One who purchased a pair of oxen of one who had them in his possession may revoke the contract upon discovering that the oxen in fact belonged to another with whom he did not choose to deal, if the person with whom the purchaser dealt made representations which might properly be found to be representations that the title to the oxen was exclusively in him. Winchester v. Howard (1867) 97 Mass. 303, 93 Am. Dec. 93.

A seller may avoid a contract, or rather no contract exists, in case one who has stolen a certificate of deposit represents himself to be the one whose name appears in the certificate, and obtains goods giving the certificate as security. Loeffel v. Pohlman (1892) 47 Mo. App. 574. It was held in this case that the owner could maintain an action for conversion against an officer who had secured the goods upon the arrest of the purchaser, and had delivered them to the jailer for the prisoner, who was sentenced to the penitentiary.

A vendor who negotiated with what he supposed to be a firm that had been doing business in his city for a considerable time, and that was represented by the persons doing business with him to be the old firm, is not bound by the contract where, as a matter of fact, the members of the old firm, together with another, had formed a corporation by the same name with a small capital stock, only a small part of which was paid in, since he had the right to rely upon the financial ability of the firm with which it was understood the contract was made. Consumers' Ice Co. v. E. Webster, Son & Co. (1898) 32 App. Div. 592, 53 N. Y. Supp. 56, followed (1903) 79 App. Div. 350, 79 N. Y. Supp. 385.

One who is led by the misrepresentations of an agent to believe that he is dealing with a committee of Congress in the purchase of certain books may avoid the contract where it appears that Congress has nothing to do with the distribution of the books in question; and it is immaterial that the precise books for which the party bargains are tendered to him. Barcus v. Dorries (1901) 64 App. Div. 109, 71 N. Y. Supp. 695.

<sup>6</sup> Fox v. Tabel (Conn.) supra (there is no decision in this case to this effect, however).

<sup>7</sup> Loeffel v. Pohlman (Mo.) and Con-

have been sustained by the fraud. It is enough that it induced the execution of a contract with one with whom the defrauded party did not intend to contract.<sup>8</sup>

In other cases of mistake as to the party with whom a contract is made, induced by the fraud of another, relief has been based on the ground of fraud rather than on the ground of mistake.<sup>9</sup>

In case of sales, the doctrine has sometimes been limited to sales on credit.<sup>10</sup>

The cases heretofore discussed in which a party has been allowed to avoid a contract for mistake as to the identity of the party with whom the contract is made have been cases in which the party intended to contract with some definite person or firm which he had in mind, or intended not to contract with the person or firm with which the so-called contract was actually made. The doctrine of these cases has been extended to a mistake as to the character of the other party, e. g., as to whether it is a corporation or an individual. Accordingly, a coal company which entered into an agreement to furnish coal on credit, with what it supposed was a corporation with paid-up capital and a legal status, was held entitled to avoid the contract upon discovery that there was no corporation, but an individual doing business in an assumed name, where the belief that the coal company was dealing with a corporation was induced by the conduct of an agent of the individual thus transacting business.<sup>11</sup>

It is a matter of considerable doubt whether the mistake in SCHOOL SISTERS v. KUSNITT, and that in Fifer v. Clearfield Coal & Coke Co. are such mistakes as authorize the avoidance of the contract under the principles applicable to mistake as to identity. As stated above, a mistake as to the identity of a party prevents the formation of any contract. Consequently, no rights are acquired under it. In case of a sale by a mistaken party, the right of the vendor to recover the goods after delivery, or their value, is not cut off by the intervention of a bona fide purchaser. In such a case recovery may be had of the bona fide purchaser in the absence of estoppel. But recovery of a bona fide purchaser has been denied<sup>12</sup> in case of a mistake induced by fraud such as was involved in the sale of coal above mentioned and in the purchase in the KUSNITT CASE. In the case in which recovery was thus denied, an individual named Wallis adopted the name of "Hallam & Company," had letter heads printed indicating "Hallam & Company" as a large firm, and ordered goods of a manufacturer; it was held that until the contract of sale was disaffirmed the person could give a good title to the goods to a bona fide purchaser for value. In discussing the person with whom the contract was made, it is stated that it was clearly made with the writer of the letters, that if it could have been shown that there was a separate entity called Hallam & Company, and another entity called Wallis, then the case might have come within the doctrine of Cundy v. Lindsay (set out in SCHOOL SISTERS v. KUSNITT), but there was only one entity, although trading it might be under an alias. Consequently, there was held to be a contract by which the property passed to the impostor so as to enable him to pass title to a bona fide purchaser. It is clear that in the sale by the coal company and in the purchase involved in the KUSNITT CASE the intention was to contract with the principals of the respective agents through whom the contracts were made.

It seems reasonably clear that the true basis of relief in such cases is fraud.

sumers' Ice Co. v. Webster, Son & Co. (N. Y.) supra; Re Reed (1876) L. R. 3 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 123, 45 L. J. Bankr. N. S. 120, 34 L. T. N. S. 664, 24 Week. Rep. 904; Cundy v. Lindsay (1878) L. R. 3 App. Cas. (Eng.) 459, 47 L. J. Q. N. S. 481, 38 L. T. N. S. 573, 26 Week. Rep. 400, 14 Cox, C. C. 936, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 211; Hardman v. Booth (1863) 1 Hurlat. & C. (Eng.) 803, 9 Jur. N. S. 81, 32 L. J. Exch. N. S. 105, 7 L. T. N. S. 638, 11 Week. Rep. 239.

<sup>8</sup>Fox v. Tabel (Conn.) and Barcus v. Dorries (N. Y.) supra.

<sup>9</sup>A vendor who is induced by the fraudulent representations of one with whom he is dealing, to believe he is selling to the state, may reclaim the goods from such person upon discovering the fraud. *La Salle L.R.A.*1916D.

Pressed Brick Co. v. Coe (1896) 65 Ill. App. 619.

It is not incumbent upon the vendor in such case to prove that the person making the misrepresentation obtained the goods with intent not to pay for them. (Ill.) Ibid.

<sup>10</sup>Roof v. Morrisson (1890) 37 Ill. App. 37; and see Clement v. British American Assur. Co. (1886) 141 Mass. 298, 5 N. E. 847, supra.

See infra for discussion of materiality of the mistake.

<sup>11</sup>Fifer v. Clearfield Coal & Coke Co. (1906) 103 Md. 1, 62 Atl. 1122. And see SCHOOL SISTERS v. KUSNITT, ante, 792.

<sup>12</sup>King's Norton Metal Co. v. Edridge, M. & Co. (1897) 14 Times L. R. (Eng.) 98.

That a party contracting with the "A Company," for example, does not have the right to avoid the contract upon discovery that the "A Company" is a partnership instead of a corporation, as he supposed, or that it is an individual doing business under that name, seems reasonably clear in the absence of fraud.<sup>13</sup>

If the real basis for relief in such cases is fraud, in order that relief be granted on this ground the case must be brought within the rules applicable to fraud. It is not within the scope of the present note to discuss these rules, nor their application to specific facts.<sup>14</sup> It may be stated, however, in passing, that one of them is that, in order that fraud may be the basis for rescission, it must have resulted in injury.<sup>15</sup>

On the theory that the mistake as to the identity of the other contracting party is immaterial,<sup>16</sup> relief has been denied in certain cases. In an action for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land in which the defense was error as to the person with whom the contract was made,<sup>17</sup> the court, in denying this defense, approves the statement in Pothier, Traite des Obligations, § 14, to the effect that whether error in regard to the person with whom a contract is made destroys the consent and annuls the agreement depends upon circumstances; that whenever the consideration of the person with whom one is willing to contract enters as an element into the contract which one is willing to make, error with regard to the person destroys that one's consent and consequently annuls the contract. On the contrary, when the consideration of the person with whom one thinks he is contracting does not enter at all into the contract, and he would have been equally willing to make the contract with any person whatever as with the one with whom he thought he was contracting, the contract ought to stand. The court states that the defendant has not shown that he would have been unwilling to enter into a contract on the same terms with anybody else, and that being so this defense must fail. In this case the purchaser purchased for the benefit of other parties to whom the vendor claimed he was unwilling to sell.

So, in an action to recover damages for breach of a charter party, the libellant was held entitled to recover notwithstanding a defense that the defendant was induced to enter into the agreement by reason of false and fraudulent representations as to the ownership of the boat. It was held that the proof failed to establish this defense; but on the question of identity of parties the court states regarding the defendant's contention that he did not know the person with whom he contended the agreement was made, but did know the libellant unfavorably, that by his own showing the defendant was entirely willing to enter into an agreement with a total stranger, which is hardly compatible with the theory that the owner's character was such an important factor in making the contract. It is further stated that it is entirely clear from the testimony that charters are made by canal men with very little reference as to the character of the owner of the boat. The defendant was not called upon to pay

<sup>13</sup> It is stated obiter in John Weber & Co. v. Hearn (1900) 49 App. Div. 213, 63 N. Y. Supp. 41, where one entering into a contract believed he was doing business with a partnership when in fact there was a corporation, that "it is not claimed that any representations were made during the negotiations leading up to the contract that there was a partnership, and, the work having been actually performed by the corporation, we do not think, in the absence of anything to show that the defendant was misled or injured by the fact that it was a corporation, and not a partnership that did the work, that he has any legal grievance in the absence of any actual misrepresentation that the Weber Company was a partnership, the work having been fully executed and performed. The fact that the defendant thought he was dealing with a partnership would not be a bar to the plaintiff's right to recover for the value of the work done by it as a corporation."

See Mitchell v. Lapage (Eng.) infra.

<sup>14</sup> In Mitchell v. Lapage (1816) Holt, N. L.R.A.1916D.

P. (Eng.) 253, 17 Revised Rep. 633, one who had purchased hemp through a broker, of a firm which had changed its members, and who, upon the arrival of the hemp, had notice from the new firm of the arrival thereof, and who, after that notice, conferred with his broker, treating the contract as subsisting, was held not entitled to rescind his contract, unless he could show that he had been prejudiced. The only indication that the purchaser intended purchasing of the old firm was that the name of the old firm appeared in the bought note given by the broker.

<sup>15</sup> 1 Elliott, Contr. § 91, p. 163; 1 Page, Contr. § 126, p. 206; 9 Cyc. 431. See Mitchell v. Lapage (Eng.) supra.

Where there is a mistake as to identity, no damage need be shown. See supra, note 8.

<sup>16</sup> See discussion in SCHOOL SISTERS v. KUSNITT upon materiality.

<sup>17</sup> Smith v. Wheatcroft (1876) L. R. 9 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 223, 39 L. T. N. S. 103, 27 Week. Rep. 42, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 745.

the freight until the lumber was delivered to his consignee at the end of the journey.<sup>18</sup>

In the case of a purchase of goods, if the purchaser receives the goods and, after notice that they are furnished by another, appropriates them, he ratifies the filling of the order by the other person and there may be a recovery. Accordingly, a dealer who sends an order for books to one with whom he has been dealing, which order is turned over by the person to whom it is given to another by whom it is filled, ratifies the filling of the order by the other where he appropriates or converts the books after notice that the order is so filled by the other.<sup>19</sup>

One who purchased lumber of a lumber dealer who in turn purchased the lumber of a milling company and directed the milling company to bill the lumber directly to the first purchaser is liable to the milling company for lumber sent under the order, where bills were forwarded with each carload lot to the purchaser, made out to the milling company, since by remaining silent till the whole quantity of lumber had come to his hands, the purchaser impliedly ratified the purchase which the lumber merchant had made on his behalf.<sup>20</sup>

One who purchased goods at a shop which he believed to be owned by a debtor cannot, when sued for the purchase price by one who had purchased the goods from the debtor, and was in possession of the shop at the time of the purchase, avoid defense on the ground that at the time of making the purchase he was ignorant of the transfer from the debtor to the then owner, where after delivery of the goods, but before he left the shop on the occasion of making the purchase, he was fully informed as to the transfer and retained the goods thereafter, since this amounts to a recognition of the real vendor.<sup>21</sup>

It cannot be said as a matter of law that the avoidance of the contract sixteen days after discovery of the fraud is delaying the avoidance unreasonably, especially if it is not found to be an unreasonable delay as a matter of fact.<sup>22</sup>

<sup>18</sup> Dunbar v. Weston (1899) 93 Fed. 472.

The case of Clement v. British American Assur. Co. (1886) 141 Mass. 298, 5 N. E. 847, is not exactly in point. This was an action upon an insurance policy taken out by a firm in the name of one of the members, such name being used as a firm name. In the course of the opinion, however, the court, in discussing mistakes as to the identity of the person with whom the contract is made, states: "A mistake as to the identity of the person with whom a contract is made may or may not prevent the formation of the contract, according to circumstances. In the ordinary case of buying or selling for cash, the identity of the parties is entirely immaterial, and one party could not defeat the contract of sale by showing that he was mistaken as to the identity of the other; and in many cases where the question of identity is material, a party is estopped by his dealing with the other from setting up his mistake as to the identity of the other." Then follows the language quoted in the opinion in SCHOOL SISTERS v. KUSNITT, ante, 792, on estoppel.

<sup>19</sup> Barnes v. Shoemaker (1887) 112 Ind. 512, 14 N. E. 367. At the time of filling the order the person who filled it sent a letter explaining why the order was filled by him. The purchaser admitted receiving the invoice, and did not deny that he received the letter which was sent with the invoice, but claimed that he did not pay any attention to it.

But see SCHOOL SISTERS v. KUSNITT as to receipt of goods.

<sup>20</sup> Bearce v. Bowker (1874) 115 Mass. 129. At the time of the receipt of the first bill by the purchaser, he called on the lumber merchant and asked for an explanation, stating that he did not know the milling company and never bought any lumber of them. The lumber merchant replied that it was all right and he would fix it all right. No further attention was paid to it by the purchaser until he received a letter from the milling company stating that they were about to draw upon him for the amount of the lumber, when he again called on the lumber merchant and told him he had received a draft, but should give no attention to it, to which the lumber merchant made the same reply as before.

<sup>21</sup> Mudge v. Oliver (1861) 1 Allen (Mass.) 74. See Randolph Iron Co. v. Elliott (1870) 34 N. J. L. 184, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 63, supra, note 2.

One who orders goods from another as the principal in the transaction is, in the absence of notice, entitled to treat the goods received on the order as the property of such principal. Belfield v. National Supply Co. (1899) 189 Pa. 189, 69 Am. St. Rep. 799, 42 Atl. 131. The fact that the person of whom the goods are ordered does business as a broker is immaterial, unless the orders are given to him as a broker; but if before the goods are received the person ordering them has notice of their ownership by another, then he is bound to elect either to refuse the goods or to take them as the property of the real owner, and keeping them is an assumption of his liability to pay the real owner for them.

A similar holding appears in Frame v. William Penn Coal Co. (1881) 97 Pa. 309, a case of a purchase from an agent as the principal party.

<sup>22</sup> Fox v. Tabel (1895) 66 Conn. 397, 34 Atl. 101.

Evidence that one who had been mistaken as to the identity of another of whom he had borrowed money rescinded the contract within nine days from the discovery of his mistake, or at the most within seventeen days from such discovery, warrants the jury in finding that he repudiated the contract as soon as, or within a reasonable time after, he discovered his mistake.<sup>23</sup>

A number of cases of sales<sup>24</sup> of personal property have arisen in which the owner of the property made a sale thereof through an impostor, to a responsible party whom the impostor claimed to represent, possession of the property being thus obtained by the impostor. Such transactions have uniformly been held to convey no title to the property. Consequently, the owner may recover the property,<sup>25</sup> or damages for its conversion, even from a purchaser in good faith,<sup>26</sup> or from the person with whom he thought he was dealing, to

<sup>23</sup> Gordon v. Street [1899] 2 Q. B. (Eng.) 641, 69 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 45, 81 L. T. N. S. 237, 48 Week. Rep. 158, 15 Times L. R. 445.

<sup>24</sup> See Fifer v. Clearfield Coal & Coke Co. (1906) 103 Md. 1, 62 Atl. 1122.

<sup>25</sup> A dealer in wool who refuses to sell to a broker, but, upon the broker's representation that he represents an undisclosed manufacturer in good credit with the dealer, sells to such manufacturer through the broker, may recover the wool as against one who has a bona fide claim for money loaned thereon to the broker, since the sale is void, or in other words the transaction does not amount to a sale because one of the supposed parties is wanting. Rodliff v. Dallinger (1886) 141 Mass. 1, 55 Am. Rep. 439, 4 N. E. 805.

A manufacturer of cheese who sells some of his product to a purchaser whom he believes to be a firm, through a commission merchant, and the commission merchant, knowing that the manufacturer believes the sale to be to the firm, does not correct his error, may recover the cheese of one to whom the commission merchant sells it, since no title passes because of the fraud. Mayhew v. Mather (1892) 82 Wis. 355, 62 N. W. 436. It is held immaterial in this case whether purchaser was bona fide or not, as the commission merchant had no title to transfer.

An owner of poultry who is induced to part with it upon the fraudulent representation of another that he is buying for a firm of which he is a member may recover of such other as for conversion. McCrillis v. Allen (1885) 57 Vt. 506.

See Hentz v. Miller (N. Y.) infra.

<sup>26</sup> In Alexander v. Swackhamer (1886) 105 Ind. 81, 55 Am. Rep. 180, 4 N. E. 433, 5 N. E. 908, a farmer delivered cattle into the possession of one who represented himself to be an agent of a well-known commission house. The cattle were driven to a shipping station and in the presence of the owner a bill of lading was delivered to the impostor, billing the cattle to the commission house in care of the impostor. The cattle were subsequently sold by the commission house to cattle dealers who in turn resold them. The delivery into the possession of the person who falsely impersonated a member of the firm did not pass title. It is stated that the owner contracted upon the supposition that he was selling to the commission house through the agency of a L.R.A.1916D.

member of that firm; that he did not agree to sell, or contemplate a sale, to any other person, nor did the person with whom he negotiated propose to purchase for himself or for any other than the commission house. Upon a petition for a rehearing it was contended that, by delivering the property to the impostor under the circumstances disclosed, the owner was estopped to assert as against the good faith purchaser that he had not by such delivery invested the impostor with apparent authority to sell the property. That he was so estopped was denied by the court, it stating that to constitute an estoppel the party sought to be estopped must have designedly done some act or made some admission inconsistent with the claim or defense which he proposed to set up, and another must have acted on such admission with his knowledge and consent.

A dealer who forwards bedsteads to a firm upon a fraudulent order of one not connected with the firm, but falsely representing himself to belong thereto, may recover of one who purchases the bedsteads of the impostor, who obtains them from the carrier by fraudulent representations. Moody v. Blake (1875) 117 Mass. 23, 119 Am. Rep. 394.

A dealer in cotton who, induced by the false and fraudulent representations of brokers that they represented and were authorized to purchase cotton for certain manufacturing companies, sold the same to the manufacturing companies, as he supposed, through the brokers, and allowed the brokers to cart the cotton away from the warehouse where it was stored, may recover of those to whom the cotton was fraudulently sold by the brokers. Collins v. Ralli (1880) 20 Hun (N. Y.) 246, affirmed in (1881) 85 N. Y. 637. This case was approved in Hentz v. Miller (1883) 94 N. Y. 64, an action in replevin to recover cotton of one to whom it had been sold. The fact that payment was guaranteed by the brokers was held to make no difference. The case was followed also in Soltau v. Gerdau (1890) 119 N. Y. 380, 16 Am. St. Rep. 843, 23 N. E. 864, a case involving a sale of rubber through a broker under facts similar to those existing in the Collins Case.

A vendor who sold goods to one upon his representation that he was a member of a firm in good credit, and shipped the goods to the firm, the impostor obtaining possession from the express company upon other whom the impostor has sold,<sup>27</sup> in the absence of some element of estoppel.

false and fraudulent representations, may recover against a bona fide purchaser of the goods, since the title to the goods never passed out of the vendor. Dean v. Yates (1872) 22 Ohio St. 388.

An owner of cotton who sells the same through a broker, believing that he is selling to a well-known firm, when in fact the broker is purchasing for himself, and afterwards disposes of the cotton, may recover of one who purchases the cotton from the broker. Hollins v. Fowler (1875) L. R. 7 H. L. (Eng.) 757, 44 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 168, 33 L. T. N. S. 73, 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 410.

A manufacturing chemist who delivered some chemicals to one who presented an order therefor from one to whom they had been sold was held entitled to recover from one who in good faith advanced money thereon and subsequently sold the same to repay the loan, where the sale was made by the purchaser from the chemist, not to the person to whom delivery was made, but to another whom he claimed to represent. Kingsford v. Merry (1856) 1 Hurlst. & N. (Eng.) 503, 3 Jur. N. S. 68, 26 L. J. Exch. N. S. 68, 5 Week. Rep. 151.

A dealer who delivered a typewriter and cabinet to one who represented himself to be the agent of a third person, to whom the dealer thought he was selling the goods, and to whom they were charged, may recover the goods of one to whom the impostor sold. Smith Premier Typewriter Co. v. Stidger (1903) 18 Colo. App. 261, 71 Pac. 400. Likewise, a dealer who delivered a typewriter and desk to one who represented himself to be the manager of a corporation which was merely proposed, and which was in fact never organized, the dealer believing that he was dealing with the corporation, and charging the corporation with the goods sold, was held entitled to recover the property of one to whom it was sold by the supposed manager. Wyckoff v. Vicary (1894) 75 Hun, 409, 27 N. Y. Supp. 103. This decision, however, does not appear to be based on mistake as to identity.

A warehouseman who delivered goods to an impostor upon his representation that he was the agent of another and authorized to purchase on his behalf may recover in trover for the value of the goods from an auctioneer who sold the goods for the impostor. Higsons v. Burton (1857) 26 L. J. Exch. N. S. (Eng.) 342, 5 Week. Rep. 683.

See Cundy v. Lindsay (1878) L. R. 3 App. Cas. (Eng.) 459, 47 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 481, 38 L. T. N. S. 573, 26 Week. Rep. 400, 14 Cox, C. C. 936, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 211; Hardman v. Booth (1863) 1 Hurlst & C. (Eng.) 803, 9 Jur. N. S. 81, 32 L. J. Exch. N. S. 105, 7 L. T. N. S. 638, 11 Week. Rep. 239.

But one who sells cotton to another believing him to be the agent of other persons, but intending at the time of the sale to part with his title to the person with whom he is dealing as such agent, and delivers the possession to him, cannot recover of the persons for whom the vendor thought the agent was acting, where they, ignorant of the representations of the pretended agent and without intention to defraud, purchased the cotton from him and paid him for it. Hawkins v. Davis (1875) 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 506. In such a case the sale may be avoided for fraud while the agent retains possession, but until avoided title is in the agent, and after he has sold the property, the claim of the original vendor cannot defeat that of the purchaser.

So, one who dealt with a commission merchant in a sale of goods, saying nothing as to any other party to the sale, cannot recover in tort for the conversion of the property, from one to whom the commission merchant in turn sold it, where the commission merchant, who was in the habit of purchasing goods on his own account, honestly bought the goods for himself and sold them to the defendant as his own. Stoddard v. Ham (1880) 129 Mass. 383, 37 Am. Rep. 369.

<sup>27</sup> Peters Box & Lumber Co. v. Lesh (1888) 119 Ind. 98, 12 Am. St. Rep. 367, 20 N. E. 291, allowing recovery of the value of the lumber and logs, the owners of the logs were held not estopped in this case by reason of permitting the bills of lading to be made out in the name of the supposed agent.

A manufacturer of cheese who had sold to a certain firm through an agent on several occasions, and who, on the occasion out of which grew the controversy in question, sold to the same agent supposing the cheese was going to the same persons he had previously sold to, may reclaim the cheese so sold where the agent fraudulently sold it to a firm of which he was a member, and such firm transferred it to the firm to which the manufacturer had been accustomed to sell. Kinsey v. Leggett (1877) 71 N. Y. 387. The sale here was one for cash and the agent represented that the money for the cheese was on the way to the manufacturer,—a representation which was in fact untrue.

Where the owner of stock relied on the representations of an impostor that he was the agent of a well-known stock dealer, and agreed to sell the stock to the dealer on credit, and, in the belief that the impostor was such agent, delivered the chattels to him, when in fact he was not such agent, nor did he have authority to purchase for the dealer, as he well knew, the property in the stock does not pass from the owner, and the dealer who subsequently bought it of the impostor and converted it to his own use without knowledge of the fraud is liable to the owner for its value. The fact that the impostor at the time the stock was delivered to him paid the owner part of the price agreed on makes no difference except as to the amount of the recovery against person with whom the owner thought he was dealing, and such person in turn sold to a bona fide purchaser.<sup>28</sup>

Some of these sales have been sales for cash.<sup>29</sup> And in some in addition it was provided that title was to remain in seller until paid for.<sup>30</sup> In others, however, the sale was on time.<sup>31</sup>

In certain circumstances the right to recover has been limited to cases in which the right of a bona fide purchaser did not intervene.<sup>32</sup>

Some cases involving actions against carriers for delivery of the goods to the wrong person contain principles bearing upon the present question. In one such case, where the vendor sold goods to a responsible party through one who without authority represented himself to be the agent of such party, it was held that there was no contract of sale made, and that the railroad company which delivered the goods to the swindler could not defend an action against it to recover the value of the goods so delivered on the ground that it delivered the goods to the real owner.<sup>33</sup>

But where a swindler represents himself to be another who is a reputable and responsible merchant, and appears personally and buys goods of a dealer, there is a sale voidable only, but not void because the seller is induced to sell by fraud. Consequently, a railroad company which delivered goods to the person who actually bought them is not liable in an action to recover the value of the goods on the theory that they were wrongfully delivered.<sup>34</sup> It is stated by the court that the seller could not have supposed that he was selling to any other person than the one present; that the sale is not defeated because the buyer assumed a false name or practised any other deceit to induce the vendor to sell, but there was a de facto contract by which the seller intended to pass the property and possession of the goods to the person buying them; that the carrier was guilty of no default or negligence in delivering them to this person; that it delivered them to the person who bought and owned them, and who went by the assumed name and thus answered the direction upon the package, and who was the person to whom the seller sent the goods.

So, a carrier which delivers goods to an impostor who assumes the name of a responsible merchant in a town, obtains a postoffice box, and thereafter enters into the correspondence through which the goods are bought, is not liable for delivering the goods to the impostor, since he is the person with whom the seller is in correspondence.<sup>35</sup> The facts the dealer. Hamet v. Letcher (1881) 37 Ohio St. 356, 41 Am. Rep. 519.

The owner of grain who sold it through an impostor, thinking he was selling to another, may recover it although it was placed in the hands of a common carrier and the bill of lading assigned to the person to whom the owner thought he was selling for value on account of advances made thereon. Decan v. Shipper (1860) 35 Pa. 239, 78 Am. Dec. 334.

An owner of wool who dealt with one who represented himself to be a member of a well-known firm, and, in accordance with a contract of sale made with him, shipped his wool to the firm, may recover the wool or its value from the firm, although they have already paid the impostor for it. Barker v. Dinsmore (1872) 72 Pa. 427, 13 Am. Rep. 697.

A wholesaler who in selling goods mistakenly thinks the purchaser is the agent of a third party to whom the wholesaler intends to sell may recover the goods from the third party, who has taken possession under a chattel mortgage. Kemper, H. & McD. Dry Goods Co. v. Kidder Sav. Bank (1897) 72 Mo. App. 226.

<sup>28</sup> Alexander v. Swackhamer (1886) 105 Ind. 81, 55 Am. Rep. 180, 4 N. E. 433, 5 N. E. 908 (title to remain in the seller until paid for).

<sup>29</sup> Peters Box & Lumber Co. v. Lesh (Ind.) supra (promised draft was not sent); Decan v. Shipper (Pa.) supra. L.R.A.1916D.

A check from the agent for a balance claimed to be due was received and cashed in Mayhew v. Mather (1892) 82 Wis. 355, 52 N. W. 436, but the money tendered back before action was brought to recover the property.

<sup>30</sup> Alexander v. Swackhamer (Ind.) supra (payment by worthless check).

<sup>31</sup> Moody v. Blake (1875) 117 Mass. 23, 119 Am. Rep. 394; Hamet v. Letcher (Ohio) supra; Hollins v. Fowler (1875) L. R. 7 H. L. (Eng.) 757, 44 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 168, 33 L. T. N. S. 73, 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 410 (ten days' credit.)

<sup>32</sup> Where a vendor sold goods to a person whom he erroneously believed to be a member of a firm to which he intended to sell, and such person, claiming and exercising ownership over the goods, resold them to another in pursuance of a fraudulent combination and purpose to cheat the owner out of his goods, he is entitled to a rescission of the contract and the recovery of the goods, unless the second purchaser sustains the character of a bona fide purchaser. Howe v. Combs (1897) 18 Ky. L. Rep. 1002, 38 S. W. 1052.

<sup>33</sup> Edmunds v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. (1883) 135 Mass. 283.

<sup>34</sup> (Mass.) Ibid.

<sup>35</sup> Samuel v. Cheney (1883) 135 Mass. 278, 46 Am. Rep. 467.

See King's Norton Metal Co. v. Edridge (1897) 14 Times L. R. (Eng.) 98 supra.

in the last case are very similar to the facts in Cundy v. Lindsay.<sup>36</sup> The Massachusetts court states that it is not necessary, however, to decide whether the property in the goods passed, because the liability of the common carrier does not necessarily turn upon it.

<sup>36</sup>(1878) L. R. 3 App. Cas. (Eng.) 459, 47 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 481, 38 L. T. N. S. 573, 26 Week. Rep. 400, 14 Cox, C. C. 936, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 211. W. A. E.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.
(Division No. 1.)

WILLIAM LEAVEA
v.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

(— Mo. —, 181 S. W. 7.)

Evidence — transaction with person since deceased — assault.

The statutory provision that in actions where one of the original parties to the cause of action is dead the other shall not be admitted to testify either in his own favor or in favor of any person to the action claiming under him, applies to exclude in an action against a railroad to recover damages for assault by its agent, since deceased, the testimony of the victim as to the assault.

For other cases, see Witnesses, I. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 2, 1915.)

CERTIFICATION by the St. Louis Court of Appeals for the determination by the Supreme Court of a question arising upon appeal by defendant from a judgment of the St. Louis Circuit Court in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for an assault by defendant's agent. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Samuel B. McPheeters for defendant.

Messrs. Frank A. Thompson and Guy A. Thompson, for plaintiff:

Plaintiff was a competent witness.

Drew v. Wabash R. Co. 129 Mo. App. 459, 107 S. W. 478.

The petition was broad enough to allow the plaintiff to tell of his injuries to his back and shoulder, which he did. At the most it constitutes a very slight variance, which is waived unless an affidavit of surprise is filed setting out that it is a material variance.

Note.—The question whether statutes disqualifying a party as a witness because of death of other party apply to actions ex delicto is the subject of annotation following this case, post 811. L.R.A.1916D.

Fisher & Co. Real Estate Co. v. Staud Realty Co. 159 Mo. 562, 62 S. W. 443; Mellor v. Missouri P. R. Co. 105 Mo. 455, 10 L.R.A. 36, 16 S. W. 849; Turner v. Chillicothe & D. M. City R. Co. 51 Mo. 501; Albin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 103 Mo. App. 317, 77 S. W. 153; Fischer v. Max, 49 Mo. 405; Litton v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 111 Mo. App. 147, 85 S. W. 978.

Railey, C., filed the following opinion:

Plaintiff brought suit in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, Missouri, to recover damages on account of injuries claimed to have been inflicted upon him, in the form of an assault, by an alleged agent of defendant, while acting within the scope of his employment. Since said assault, and before the trial in the circuit court, the alleged agent, Teague, departed this life. Notwithstanding the prior death of Teague, who is charged with having made the assault, and thus created the cause of action, plaintiff was permitted, over the objection and exception of defendant, to detail in evidence at the trial his version of the controversy and the assault made upon him. To the offer of this evidence concerning all that was said and done by Teague, defendant's alleged agent and watchman at the time, an objection and exception was interposed, on the ground that Teague, the other party to the transaction in issue and on trial, was dead. The trial court overruled said objection, and permitted plaintiff to testify as to what was said and done between himself and Teague.

Upon the trial in the circuit court, the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $999 as compensatory damages, and $1,000 as exemplary damages, and judgment was entered accordingly. Defendant filed a motion for new trial and in arrest of judgment in due time. The trial court ordered a remittitur so as to reduce the compensatory damages to $500 and the exemplary damages to same amount. Thereupon the court, after a remittitur was entered, rendered judgment for $1,000, and overruled defendant's motion for a new trial and in arrest of judgment. The case was duly appealed to the St. Louis court of appeals, and the latter reversed and remanded the cause, on the ground that the trial court erred in permitting plaintiff to testify over defendant's objection, to the transactions and conversations which occurred between himself and Teague after the latter had died.

The opinion of the court of appeals was written by Judge Nortoni, and concurred in by each of the other judges of said court. The latter, deeming the conclusion reached to be in conflict with the opinion of Judge Broadus in Drew v. Wabash R. Co. 129 Mo. App. 459, 107 S. W. 478, on identically the same question, certified the case to this court, as provided by law under such circumstances. Counsel for appellant, at the oral argument of said cause here, announced with commendable fairness that the only question before us was whether the testimony of plaintiff in regard to the transactions and conversations between himself and Teague was competent under our statute.

The controversy is thus narrowed down to a construction of § 6354, Rev. Stat. 1909, which reads as follows: "No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any civil suit: . . . Provided, that in actions where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial is dead, or is shown to the court to be insane, the other party to such contract or cause of action shall not be admitted to testify either in his own favor or in favor of any party to the action claiming under him. . . ."

We have carefully examined the opinion of Judge Broadus in the Drew Case, supra, in connection with many other authorities in respect to the same subject, and have been unable to reach the conclusion that the disqualification called for in the above section of our statute does not apply in actions ex delicto. We can conceive of no good reason for applying the provisions of said section to actions upon contracts which would not apply with equal force to circumstances like those in the case at bar. We are therefore of the opinion that the Drew Case does not properly declare the law in respect to foregoing matter, and should not be followed.

The opinion of the St. Louis court of appeals herein is reported in 171 Mo. App. at pages 24 and following, 153 S. W. 500. It contains a full statement of the case, and presents an able review of the principles of law in regard to the matter under consideration. The conclusion reached by the above court in its treatment and disposition of this cause is accordingly affirmed.

In the recent case of Eaton v. Cates, — Mo. —, 175 S. W. 953, loc. cit., we construed § 6354, supra, in accordance with the views of the St. Louis court of appeals, supra. Cogent reasons for observing the above construction of said section of our statute will be found discussed in Chandler v. Hedrick, 187 Mo. App. loc. cit. 670, 173 S. W. 93; Diggs v. Henson, 181 Mo. App. 34, 163 S. W. 565; Bone v. Friday, 180 Mo. App. 577-581, 167 S. W. 599; Taylor v. George, 176 Mo. App. loc. cit. 222, 223, 161 S. W. 1187; Leavea v. Southern R. Co. 171 Mo. App. loc. cit. 27, 153 S. W. 500; Lieber v. Lieber, 239 Mo. loc. cit. 1, 143 S. W. 458; Williams v. Edwards, 94 Mo. 447, 7 S. W. 429; as well as other cases in this state.

The judgment of the St. Louis Court of Appeals is therefore affirmed, and the cause reversed and remanded, with directions to the Circuit Court to proceed with the case in accordance with the views here expressed.

Brown, C., not sitting.

Per Curiam:

The foregoing opinion of Ralley, C., is hereby adopted as the opinion of the court.

All concur.

Annotation—Do statutes disqualifying party as a witness because of death of other party apply to actions ex delicto.

This note merely deals with the question whether statutes of the kind in question are applicable at all to actions ex delicto; and does not purport to deal with the admissibility or inadmissibility of particular testimony in such an action, assuming the applicability of the statute to the class of actions. No attempt has been made to gather cases which tacitly assume the applicability of the statute in a proper case to actions ex delicto without discussing the point.

While but few cases have expressly considered and passed upon the question under annotation, these, with the exception of the Drew Case, infra, cited and disapproved in LEAVEA v. SOUTHERN R. Co. ante, 810, are in accord with the latter case, which affirmed the judgment of the St. Louis court of appeals in (1913) 171 Mo. App. 24, 153 S. W. 500. Thus, a statute excluding the testimony of a party to an action in his own behalf, after the death of his opponent, as to matters occurring during the life of the latter, and conversations had with him, is not confined to cases of contracts, but applies to an action of trespass q. c. f. Irwin v. Nolde (1894) 164 Pa. 205, 30 Atl. 246.

And a statute excluding the testimony of parties in their own behalf when, at the time of the trial, "the party prosecuting, or the party defending, or any one of them, is an executor or an administrator," applies to an action on the case by an administrator for negligence in the operation of an automobile whereby the plaintiff's intestate was so injured that he subsequently died, to exclude the testimony of the defendant as to the circumstances of the accident. Hallowach v. Priest (1915) 113 Mo. 510, 95 Atl. 146. The court said: "The statute makes no distinction between actions of contract and actions of tort. Nor do we think there is any distinction in reason. The statutory policy that living parties should not be permitted to tell their stories when the lips of adverse parties are sealed by death applies with equal force to torts and contracts. In torts, as in contracts, all the parties ordinarily are cognizant of the circumstances attending the tort. And if by reason of death some of them cannot testify, the others should not. That is the policy of the statute. And this policy has been enforced many times by the court."

And in Di Nardi v. Standard Lime & Stone Co. (1912) 3 Boyce (Del.) 369, 84 Atl. 124, which was an action for wrongful death brought by the administrator of the decedent, the applicability to actions ex delicto, of the Delaware statute providing "that in actions or proceedings by or against executors, administrators or guardians in which judgment or decree may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate or ward," seems to have been recognized.—Woolley, J., saying: "The court appreciate that in an action ex delicto, where the cause of action is based upon an act of negligence, charged to the defendant, rather than upon a transaction or intercourse with the defendant, there must somewhere be a line dividing the testimony which, under the statute, the plaintiff may give in his personal capacity and which he may not give in his representative capacity." And it was held that certain testimony of the plaintiff was incompetent, and certain other testimony competent, depending upon whether it was or was not "as to any transaction with" the intestate.

L.R.A.1916D.

In Drew v. Wabash R. Co. (1908) 129 Mo. App. 459, 107 S. W. 478, however, it was held that the Missouri statute did not apply to disqualify the plaintiff as a witness in an action against a railroad company for the alleged wrongful act of one of its conductors in putting her off the train, by reason of the death of the conductor before the trial, "as this is not an action on contract, but ex delicto; nor was he a party to the cause of action within the meaning of the statute."

But, as noted above, this case is expressly disapproved by the supreme court of Missouri in LEAVEA v. SOUTHERN R. Co., the court saying that it is of the opinion that the Drew Case does not properly declare the law in respect to the applicability of the provision of the statute in question to actions ex delicto.

In a few cases of actions ex delicto somewhat similar to LEAVEA v. SOUTHERN R. Co. it has likewise been held that a party to an action cannot, under statutes of the kind in question, testify to a transaction with an agent of the other party, where the agent has since died. Thus, in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Martin (1908) 33 Ky. L. Rep. 666, 110 N. W. 815, which was an action against a railroad company for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of one of its engineers who was dead at the time of the trial, it was held that, under a statute providing that no person may testify for himself concerning any act done or omitted to be done by one who is dead, the plaintiff could not testify as to anything the engineer did or omitted to do, as "it has been repeatedly held that, where the agent with whom a transaction occurred is dead, the other party may not testify for himself as to the transaction."

And in Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Martin (1912) 146 Ky. 260, 142 S. W. 410, which was also an action against a railroad company for personal injuries, it was held that, under a statute providing that no person shall testify for himself concerning any verbal statement of, or any transaction with, one who is dead, the plaintiff should not have been allowed to testify to a conversation between himself and one of the defendant's engineers in charge of a train, who was dead at the time of the trial. The court said: "We have repeatedly held that in a case of this kind the agent stands in the place of the principal under that section of the Code, and where the conversation was had with an agent, the opposing party cannot testify concerning it, if the agent is dead when the testimony is offered to be given."

And in Williams v. Edwards (1887) 94 Mo. 447, 7 S. W. 429, which was an ejectment action, it was held that, "according to the rule laid down by Wharton," that "under statutes which exclude the surviving party to a contract, the death of a contracting agent excludes the surviving party who contracted with him," one who has made a contract with an agent of a corporation cannot, after the death of the contracting agent, testify in an action against the corporation concerning the contract or any admission or declaration of the agent with reference thereto.

The position that statutes of this kind are applicable to actions ex delicto is also supported, inferentially at least, by many cases which, apparently assuming the applicability, have held, in such actions, that testimony of the kind prohibited by the statutes was incompetent under the facts and circumstances appearing. Thus, for example, it has been held that a statute providing that no person shall testify for himself concerning any verbal statement of, or any transaction with, one who is dead when the testimony is offered to be given, prohibits a physician who is the defendant in an action by the administrator of a deceased person, for malpractice, from testifying for himself concerning conversations which he had with the decedent, or conditions which he discovered in performing various operations upon her, or the circumstances attending the various operations. Barnett v. Brand (1915) 165 Ky. 616, 177 S. W. 461.

And "where trover was brought by an administrator to recover a bond, the defendant in the suit was incompetent as a witness to testify that the plaintiff's intestate during her life had given the bond to such defendant. Code, § 3854." Elsinger v. Beytagh (1884) 74 Ga. 399.

Under a statute "disallowing the testimony of 'one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial' in his own favor, where the other party is dead," the plaintiff in an action of trover, who claims title to the property in question by purchase from a former owner, since deceased, is incompetent to testify in his own behalf as to his purchase from or contract with the decedent, against the defendant, who claims title by purchase from the administrator of the estate of the decedent, as the plaintiff's purchase from or contract with the decedent is involved in the issue on trial, although the conversion is the gist of the action; proof of the plaintiff's purchase being necessary to show the defendant's conversion. Hall v. Hamblett (1879) 51 Vt. 589.

And the plaintiff in an action of trespass and trover, who claims title to the property in question by virtue of his marriage to the former owner, since deceased, is incompetent to testify in his own behalf as to his marriage to the deceased, against the defendant, who took and claims the property as administrator of the deceased, as the deceased was "a party to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial" within the meaning of the statute, although the alleged cause of action is, technically, the defendant's personal tort; the title to the property being the real matter in controversy, proof of which in the plaintiff, by showing his marriage to the deceased, is necessary to sustain the cause of action alleged. Fitzsimmons v. Southwick (1866) 38 Vt. 509.

And in Brooks v. Goss (1872) 61 Me. 307, which was an action of trespass de bonis asportatis brought by an executor, it was held simply that, "as the executor did not offer himself as a witness the defendants were properly excluded."

Under a statute providing "that in all suits where an . . . administrator . . . is a party in a case, where a judgment may render either for or against the estate represented by such . . . administrator, . . . neither party shall be allowed to testify as a witness," etc.,—the defendant in an action of replevin brought by three coplaintiffs is incompetent to testify as a witness in his own behalf as to conversations between himself and one of the coplaintiffs, where the latter has died and his administrator has been substituted as a coplaintiff in the action. Charles v. Malcott (1879) 65 Ind. 184.

And under the Missouri statute, the plaintiff in an action of replevin is incompetent to testify as a witness in his own behalf in regard to the ownership of the property in question, where the defendant has died and his administrator has been made a party to the action. Blobaum v. Gambs (1874) 56 Mo. 183.

Under a statute providing "that in actions where one of the original parties to the contract, or cause of action, in issue and on trial, is dead, . . . the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor," the defendant in a statutory action of ejectment by one claiming under the deceased grantee in a deed executed by him, is not a competent witness in his own behalf as to the delivery or nondelivery of the deed, as it is the title to the premises in controversy, including all the means and documents which evidence and establish the right of the plaintiff to recover in the action, which is in issue and on trial, and the defendant is one of the original parties to the deed which evidences the title on which the plaintiff relies. Chapman v. Dougherty (1885) 87 Mo. 617, 56 Am. Rep. 469.

So, in Hollister v. Young (1868) 41 Vt. 156, which was an action of ejectment, a statute providing "that in all actions, except actions on book account, where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial is dead, or is shown to the court to be insane, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor,—was held to apply to the facts of the case as to the relations and interests of the parties.

And the defendant in an action of ejectment by the heir of the former owner is incompetent to testify in his own behalf as to an alleged contract between himself and the former owner by virtue of which he claims the premises in question, as this contract is "in issue" within the meaning of the statute, being within the substantial issues made by the evidence, although not within the merely formal issues made by the pleadings. Pember v. Congdon (1883) 55 Vt. 58.

And in Napier v. Elliott (1907) 152 Ala. 248, 44 So. 552, it was held that the plaintiff in an action of ejectment, who claimed title under a deed from her deceased father, was incompetent to testify as a witness in her own behalf, against the defendants, who claimed as heirs of the alleged grantor, as to conversations and transactions between herself and the deceased relative to the execution and delivery of the deed.

Similarly, a statute declaring that "a party or a person interested in the event (of an action) . . . shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf or interest . . . against the executor, administrator or survivor of a deceased person . . . concerning a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the deceased person," has been held to apply to an action brought by an administrator to recover damages for the wrongful killing of his intestate, to exclude the testimony of the defendant as to the transaction between himself and the plaintiff's intestate, which resulted in the latter's death, and as to his conversation with the intestate at the time; the defendant's argument to the contrary having been "that, inasmuch as a cause of action arising out of the death of one person by reason of the wrongful or negligent acts of another . . . is not given to the estate of a deceased person for the purpose of general administration, but for the exclusive benefit of a husband, wife, or next of kin, the plaintiff is not an administrator in the ordinary acceptance of that term, but simply a trustee for a certain specified purpose." Abelein v. Porter (1899) 45 App. Div. 307, 61 N. Y. Supp. 144.

And under a statute allowing parties to testify on their own behalf, which expressly excepts from its operation a party or person interested in an action in which the adverse party sues as administrator, etc., the defendants in a statutory action for wrongful death, brought by an administratrix, for the use of the next of kin, are incompetent as witnesses as to matters anterior to the death of the intestate, although the damages in such an action are not strictly any part of the estate of the intestate, as they nevertheless come within the letter of the statute, and "the same reasons which justify the limitation of the general statute so as to silence adverse parties where the effect of the proceeding is to increase or decrease the estate seem equally cogent in a case like the present." Forbes v. Snyder (1880) 94 Ill. 374.

Likewise, under a statute providing that "in suits or proceedings in which an executor or administrator is a party, involving matters which occurred during the lifetime of the decedent, where a judgment or allowance may be made or rendered for or against the estate represented by such executor or administrator, any person who is a necessary party to the issue or record, whose interest is adverse to such estate, shall not be a competent witness as to such matters against such estate,"—the defendant in a statutory action for wrongful death brought by the administrator of the deceased is incompetent to testify as a witness in his own behalf, notwithstanding the judgment, when recovered, inures to the benefit of the heirs of the decedent, regardless of the rights of creditors, as "this affords no sufficient reason why the plain letter of the statute . . . should be disregarded." Hudson v. Houser (1890) 123 Ind. 309, 24 N. E. 243.

And under a statute declaring "that in all suits where an executor, administrator or guardian is a party in a case where a judgment may render either for or against the estate, represented by such executor, administrator or guardian, neither party shall be allowed to testify as a witness unless required by the opposite party, or by the court trying the cause,"—a defendant in a statutory action for wrongful death brought by the administrator of the deceased is incompetent to testify in his own behalf. Sherlock v. Alling (1873) 44 Ind. 184.

In Kentucky Utilities Co. v. McCarty (1916) — Ky. —, 183 S. W. 237, which was a statutory action for wrongful death brought by the father of the deceased, as administrator, it was held that he was incompetent to testify to a conversation which he had with his son, the decedent, and to a message sent by the son to the defendant, as the conversation and message constituted a "transaction" with the decedent, and the father was testifying "for himself," within the meaning of the Kentucky statute providing that no person shall testify for himself concerning any transaction with one who is dead when the testimony is offered to be given.

On the other hand, it has been held, in some cases of actions for wrongful death, that statutes of the class in question did not apply to render one of the parties incompetent as a witness in his own behalf,—not, however, because of inapplicability of the statutes to actions ex delicto, but because such actions for wrongful death, brought by or for the benefit of the widow or next of kin of the decedent, were not within the terms of the statute. Thus, for example, a statute excluding testimony as to transactions with or statements of a deceased person, in any action in which judgment may be rendered for or against his administrator, does not apply to a statutory action for wrongful death brought by the widow of the deceased in the name of his administrator, for the benefit of herself and an infant child of the deceased,—the administrator having refused to bring the action,—to exclude the testimony of the defendant as to the circumstances of the killing of the deceased, as the administrator is merely a nominal party, and the estate of his intestate has no interest whatever in the result of the suit, and no judgment can be rendered either for or against him which can affect the estate of his intestate. Hale v. Kearly (1874) 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 49.

And a statute declaring that "no interest nor policy of law shall exclude a party or person from being a witness in L.R.A.1916D.

any civil proceeding;" provided, "this act shall not apply to actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, nor where the assignor of the thing or contract in action may be dead," has been held not to apply to a statutory action for wrongful death brought by the widow of the deceased, as "this action is not by or against an executor, administrator, or guardian; nor is the assignor of the thing in action dead. There is no assignment, either actually or constructively. If an action had been brought by Weiland [the deceased] to recover damages for injuries he had sustained, it would have survived to his personal representatives under the eighteenth section of the act of April, 1851, supra; and after his death the plaintiff in error would not have been competent to testify to matters which occurred during the life of Weiland. This action, however, was not brought by him, nor is it for the recovery of damages for injuries he sustained; but it is for injuries his wife sustained by his death. It is for a cause of action her husband never had. It arose on and after his death, and accrued to his widow." Mann v. Weiland (1876) 81 *Pa. 243.

So, in McEwen v. Springfield (1879) 64 Ga. 159, which was an action by a widow to recover damages for the killing of her husband, it was held that the defendants had properly been allowed to testify fully as to their version of the homicide,—the court saying: "Mrs. McEwen, who was the plaintiff and solely interested as such, had testified in the case and had given her version of the homicide of her husband, whose estate was in no way interested in the issue or cause of action on trial. The plaintiff was in life to confront the witnesses who were called to testify against her, the only party plaintiff interested in the cause of action or the issue on trial."

And a statute providing that "in all suits by or against heirs or devisees, founded upon a contract with or demand against the ancestor, to obtain title to or possession of property, real or personal, of or in right of such ancestor, or to affect the same in any manner, neither party to such suit shall be a competent witness as to any matters which occurred prior to the death of the ancestor," does not apply to an action for wrongful death. Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Cregor (1898) 150 Ind. 625, 50 N. E. 760.

And in Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Thompson (1886) 107 Ind. 442, 57 Am. Rep. 120, 8 N. E. 18, which was an action by an administrator to recover for the death of his intestate, caused by the negligence of the defendant, the court, on denying a rehearing, in (1886) 107 Ind. 456, 9 N. E. 357, said: "We said in our former opinion, that even if it were conceded that the widow of Andrew Eichler [the plaintiff's intestate] was not a competent witness, no material error was committed in permitting her to testify [as all that was material in her testimony related to matters subsequent to her husband's death, or else to matters which were open to the knowledge of all persons who knew the parties], and we still adhere to that view; but we are prepared to go further, and hold that she was a competent witness, for the statute does not apply to cases of tort resulting in the death of the husband. Neither § 498 nor § 499 of the code applies to a case like this, for the widow is not a party to the record, nor is her interest adverse to the estate, and the case is not one between heirs. The case is not 'founded on a contract with or demand against the ancestor' or 'to obtain title to or possession of property, real or personal,' but is an action to recover damages for a tort causing the ancestor's death." A. C. W.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

RE PETITION OF WILLIAM W. FARLEY, State Commissioner of Excise, Appt., For Cancellation of a Liquor Tax Certificate Issued to William A. Thater, and Transferred to Catherine Cronin.

(213 N. Y. 15, 106 N. E. 756.)

Intoxicating liquor — consent by infant to license — effect.

Neither an infant nor his mere agent can give a valid consent to the conducting of a liquor business in such proximity to his property that the law requires the consent of its owner before the issuance of a license to conduct the business there.

For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 10, 1914.)

A PPEAL by petitioner from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, reversing an order of a Special Term for Onondaga County, revoking and canceling a liquor tax certificate transferred to respondent. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Louis M. King, and Mr. A. M. Sperry, for appellant:

The consents signed by Anna Carroll and Joseph Carroll, infants, are not valid and binding.

People v. Griesbach, 211 Ill. 35, 71 N. E. 874; Thompson v. Eagan, 70 Neb. 169, 97 N. W. 247.

An infant can neither himself, nor through any power which such infant con-

Note. — As to consent of infant or incompetent, or his guardian, committee, or agent, to a license for the sale of intoxicating liquors, see annotation following this case, post, 819.

L.R.A.1916D.

fers upon another, give consent for the traffic in liquor.

People v. Griesbach, supra.

The respondent herein has failed to establish by any evidence guardianship of the infants, or any sufficient agency or authority to grant consent for the infants.

McCoy v. Forbush, 104 App. Div. 215, 93 N. Y. Supp. 401.

The liquor tax law is a statute, penal in its nature, and should be strictly construed against the respondent herein.

Re Haight, 33 Misc. 544, 68 N. Y. Supp. 920; People ex rel. Clausen v. Murray, 3 App. Div. 442, 39 N. Y. Supp. 1130; United States v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 395, 18 L. ed. 832; Re Lyman, 48 App. Div. 275, 62 N. Y. Supp. 846; People ex rel. Cairns v. Murray, 148 N. Y. 171, 42 N. E. 584.

Messrs. Welch & Parsons, for respondent:

The consents signed by said infants are valid and binding.

Re Sherry, 25 Misc. 361, 55 N. Y. Supp. 421; Re Townsend, 195 N. Y. 214, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 194, 88 N. E. 41, 16 Ann. Cas. 921; Beardsley v. Hotchkiss, 96 N. Y. 201; O'Donohue v. Smith, 130 App. Div. 214, 114 N. Y. Supp. 536; Smith v. Ryan, 191 N. Y. 452, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 461, 123 Am. St. Rep. 609, 84 N. E. 402, 14 Ann. Cas. 505.

The statute was not intended to make it impossible to obtain a liquor tax certificate.

Re Clement, 101 N. Y. Supp. 447.

All statements contained in the application for the liquor tax certificate are presumed to be true, and the burden is on the excise department to show that such statements are not true.

Farley v. Soherno, 147 App. Div. 375, 132 N. Y. Supp. 170; Rosendorff v. Haas, N. Y. L. J. Dec. 18, 1907.

The revocation signed by Mrs. Barry is not valid and binding.

Re Adriance, 59 App. Div. 440, 69 N. Y. Supp. 314.

In order to cancel a certificate on the ground that a false statement was made in the application therefor, such false statement must be material.

Hawkins v. Thiel Bros. 165 N. Y. 188, 58 N. E. 884, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 336; Moulton v. Acconcia, 59 App. Div. 25, 69 N. Y. Supp. 14, affirmed in 168 N. Y. 645, 61 N. E. 1131.

The certificate is a contract between the person who received it, and the state, for the absolute right to traffic in liquor for one year, of which he can only be deprived by some violation of the law, so long as the statute is in force, and such right may be regarded in a sense as property of the holder.

Lyman v. Malcom Brewing Co. 160 N. Y. 96, 54 N. E. 577.

Hiscock, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Application was made to the deputy commissioner of excise of the county of Onondaga for the transfer to respondent and to new premises of a liquor tax certificate theretofore issued to another person. The transfer was made by the commissioner, and later this proceeding was instituted to have such certificate canceled, on the ground that respondent's application for the issue of the certificate to her falsely stated that she had secured the requisite number of consents to the prosecution of said business in the new location.

The Liquor Tax Law (Consol. Laws, chap. 34, § 15, subd. 8), as amended (Laws 1911, chap. 643, § 2), provide that "when the nearest entrance to the premises described in said statement as those in which traffic in liquors is to be carried on is within 300 feet, measured in a straight line, of the nearest entrance to a building or buildings occupied exclusively for a dwelling, there shall also be filed simultaneously with said statement [on the application for a certificate] a consent in writing that such traffic in liquors be so carried on in said premises during a term therein stated, executed by the owner or owners, or by a duly authorized agent or agents of such owner or owners of at least two thirds of the total number of such buildings within 300 feet so occupied as dwellings."

The question whether respondent's statement that she had secured the requisite number of consents of owners of buildings occupied as dwellings within the prescribed limit is true depends on the further query whether infant owners of such dwellings may give a legal consent. There were one or more dwellings within 300 feet of the premises where respondent proposed to conduct her liquor business of which infants were owners, and consents in the form required by law were obtained from them and filed. If they are valid, the respondent had a sufficient number of consents; without them she did not have, and is not entitled to have her certificate and carry on her business.

We do not think that infant owners of property may give a valid consent to the issue of a liquor tax certificate.

At the outset we find in the liquor tax law various provisions which indicate a policy on the part of the state to prevent any relationship between infants and the sale of liquor, which we think are entitled to some consideration in interpreting the particular provision relating to consents.

Section 29 provides, in substance, that it shall be unlawful to sell, deliver, or give away liquor to any minor under the age of eighteen years, or to such minor for any other person.

Section 30 provides that it shall not be lawful to permit any minor under such age to sell or serve any liquors, or to enter or remain in any barroom where liquors are sold.

Section 21 of said law provides that no person under the age of twenty-one years shall traffic in liquor.

As we read these provisions it would seem to be a fair inference that a legislative policy which prohibited an infant from using, serving, or trafficking in liquors did not contemplate that he should be authorized to give a consent that some other person might carry on the business. And in entertaining this view sight is not lost of the argument made by the learned appellate division that because the legislature expressly prohibited certain acts such as those mentioned, it may be assumed that it did not intend to prohibit certain other acts which were not mentioned, such as the right of an infant to give a consent to traffic in liquors by another person. That argument, however, does not, in this case, seem to be very persuasive. The legislature might very well prohibit the specific acts which have been mentioned, and which, without express provision, were not unlawful, and rely on general principles for the proper decision of the question whether an infant might perform some other act, such as executing one of the consents required by the statute; and we therefore pass to the consideration, on such general principles, of the question whether an infant ought to be allowed to give such a consent.

The rule is well understood that attempted contracts by an infant are incomplete and imperfect, and do not become valid and binding except by the act or failure to act of the infant after he reaches the age of maturity. He is regarded as not having sufficient capacity to understand and pass upon questions involving contractual rights, and, therefore, a person dealing with him does so at his peril, and subject to the right of the infant to avoid his contract when he becomes of age.

It seems to us that an attempted consent by an infant to the issue of a liquor tax certificate and the prosecution of that business involves considerations which are in the nature of a property right, and is subject to the infirmities of infancy which would attach to an ordinary contract executed by a minor. It appears to have been assumed by the legislature that neighboring property used for dwellings might be affected by opening a saloon, as we very well know might be the case; and hence the requirement for consents thereto, which are to be given, not by persons dwelling within a certain radius, but by the persons who own property within that radius. If considerations of property rights are involved in giving such a consent, it would seem that the act of an infant should be safeguarded in the same way as would be an attempt on his part to sell, lease, or mortgage his real estate.

But, reverting to the principles governing an ordinary contract by an infant, it is urged that since his contracts are not void, but voidable, at his election, the same rule should be applied to a consent to the issue of a liquor tax certificate, and that such consent should be held valid until the infant, under proper conditions, disaffirms said act.

There are two answers to this proposition. In the first place, the principle which allows the executed contract of an infant to stand as valid unless the infant shall disaffirm the same after becoming of age is not practically adapted to such an instrument as a consent to the issue of a liquor tax certificate. In many cases, at least, the office of the certificate would have been completed and any injury flowing from the issue thereof consummated long before the infant would arrive at those years of maturity where the law would regard him as reaching for the first time sound discretion in such a matter.

But the more important objection to this theory rests on the distinction between an act of an infant which only affects himself and his property, and an act like that involved in the present proceeding, which is also of public consequence. If an infant makes a lease or sale of his real estate, it legally touches no one but himself, and if, when he becomes of age, he chooses to affirm the contract, no one should object. But that is not the present case. The people of the state, acting within well-defined and established powers, have deemed it wise to regulate the traffic in liquor. The liquor tax law, with its many provisions, is sufficient evidence of the extent to which the legislature has attempted to do this. Amongst other things it has been deemed wise and very just that the prosecution of this traffic should not be permitted in certain localities occupied by dwelling houses unless a large proportion of the owners of such property are in favor of such traffic. As has already been said, a property owner, in consenting to the prosecution of this business, performs an act which might be regarded as affecting the value of his own property, and in that aspect no one has any interest in the question except himself. But, in addition to this, each owner of property within the prescribed limit has an interest in the execution of such a consent by every other property owner. His effective opposition or consent to the prosecution of the business depends on the action of other property owners, and he is interested in having such other property owners pass on the question intelligently and wisely. It is a matter of importance to every property owner in the neighborhood and to the people of the community that consents should not be given by persons whom the law regards as deficient in judgment and capacity to act. Every property owner is entitled to have every other property owner within the prescribed radius pass intelligently on the question whether it is best to have a saloon within the proposed area; and, of course, such intelligent action cannot be secured, either presumptively or actually, if infants may give such consents. In the present case the infants at the time in question were of the ages, respectively, of fourteen and ten years. Nobody would claim that they could pass with mature judgment on the question whether a saloon should be located at the proposed spot. Moreover, if these particular infants can execute valid consents, there is no reason why still younger children might not perform similar acts, until the process of securing consents from property owners where there happened to be infant owners would be made absurd and ridiculous, and any benefits anticipated from these provisions in securing a limited form of local option be lost.

While this question of the power of an infant to execute such a consent has not been heretofore decided by this court, authorities found in other states and entitled to great respect adopt the conclusion which we now reach, that such power is lacking. Thompson v. Eagan, 70 Neb. 169, 97 N. W. 247; People v. Griesbach, 211 Ill. 35, 71 N. E. 874.

The consent in question was not only signed by the infants personally, but also by "Martin J. McArdle, Agent for" said infants, and it is further urged by the respondent that this latter signature rendered the consent effective under that provision of the statute which authorizes a consent to be executed not only by the owner of premises, but also "by his duly authorized agent." We do not intend to hold that a consent to the issue of a certificate may not be executed on behalf of an infant by a guardian, or by some other person authorized in some unusual manner to execute such consent. We simply do not pass on that question, as we do not regard it as here presented. It certainly is clear that an infant, who cannot himself execute a consent, cannot by himself and in any ordinary manner create an agent who will have greater powers than he himself possesses. The evidence makes it fairly apparent that whatever agency for the infants McArdle enjoyed sprang from the fact that he collected rents and managed the property. If there was any other agency or power of representation I think that evidence thereof should have been produced by the respondent, and such agency did not clothe the alleged agent with greater powers in respect of this consent than the infants themselves possessed.

The order of the Appellate Division should be reversed, and that of the Special Term affirmed, with costs in both courts.

Werner, Chase, Collin, Hogan, Miller, and Cardozo, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Consent of infant or incompetent, or his guardian, committee, or agent, to a license for the sale of intoxicating liquors.

In accordance with the decision in RE FARLEY, ante, 816, it was held in People v. Griesbach (1904) 211 Ill. 35, 71 N. E. 874, where the consent of the owners of neighboring property was necessary to the establishing of a liquor business, that an owner who was a minor could not consent. It is stated that the peace, morals, order, and safety of a community may be affected by the grant of a license to sell intoxicating liquor. Accordingly, those invested with the power to consent or refuse to consent to such establishment are charged with a duty to the public; that the proper discharge of this duty demands the consideration of the interest of all who are to be affected, and the exercise of mature judgment and discretion. The statutes prohibiting the sale to minors were urged also as a reason why a minor is incompetent to consent.

Certain minor children who were heirs to estates in the territory involved were held not entitled to be counted among the legal resident freeholders of the precinct, in Thompson v. Eagan (1903) 70 Neb. 169, 97 N. W. 247, and in the course of the opinion the court states that the statute never contemplated infant children, although residents and heirs to estates of inheritance in the precinct, as proper persons to sign a L.R.A.1916D.

petition for a license to sell intoxicating liquors; that this right was intended to be reserved for the full-grown resident freeholders of the precinct.

Under a statute making it unlawful to issue a license to keep a dramshop until a majority of the "assessed taxpaying citizens" in the block or square in which the dramshop is to be kept shall sign a petition asking for the same, it was held in State ex rel. McCampbell v. County Ct. (1886) 90 Mo. 593, 2 S. W. 788, that minors, resident in the city, who have guardians, and who own property, and are regularly assessed, should be counted in determining whether a petition presented for a dramshop license in the town or city is signed by a majority of the assessed taxpaying citizens; but whether they are to be counted in determining the whole number of taxpaying citizens, or the number who have signed the petition, is not made clear from the report. Apparently, however, the question was whether the minors should be counted in determining the whole number of assessed taxpaying citizens.

There is dictum in People v. Griesbach (Ill.) supra, that a person so insane as to be irresponsible cannot consent.

Some statutes provide for the signing of a consent by the guardian of an interested minor.

W. A. E.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

JAMES G. SACKETT et al., Pliffs. in Err.,
v.
MARTHA ROSE.

(— Okla. —, 154 Pac. 1177.)

Abstracts — liability of abstractor.

1. Under § 1, Wilson's Rev. Statutes 1903, an abstractor of title is liable on his bond to pay all damages that may accrue to any person by reason of any incompleteness, imperfection, or error in any abstract furnished by him and relied on by such person to his injury, and such liability is not confined to the person for whom he makes or furnishes an abstract.

For other cases, see Abstracts, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statutes — construction — harmonizing.

2. In the construction of statutes, harmony, not confusion, is to be sought. Conflicts between different provisions of the statute are not to be held to exist, if harmony, by any reasonable construction of them, can be discovered. The true rule has often been said to be that where two acts or parts of acts are reasonably susceptible of a construction that will give effect to both and to the words of each, without violence to either, it should be adopted in preference to one which, though reasonable, leads to the conclusion that there is a conflict. There is no conflict between different provisions of a statute if there is a reasonable meaning of the words used, considering the manner of their use, which will bring them into harmony.

For other cases, see Statutes, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — parol — alteration of record.

3. The alteration of a record may be shown by parol evidence; such evidence not being within the rule excluding evidence to vary the record, but for the purpose of showing that the record in question is not the true record which was actually made.

For other cases, see Evidence, VI. l, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Damages — compensation.

4. Where a wrong has been done and the law gives a remedy, the compensation shall be equal to the injury, and the latter is the standard by which the former is to be measured. The injured party is to be placed as near as may be in the situation which he would have occupied had not the wrong been committed.

For other cases, see Damages, III. e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — mistake in abstract of title.

5. A party injured on account of the incompleteness or error in an abstract is entitled to all the damages proximately resulting from such injury.

For other cases, see Damages, III. e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — duty to mitigate.

6. Where an injured party finds that a wrong has been perpetrated on him, he should use all reasonable means to arrest the loss. It is only incumbent on him, however, to use reasonable exertion and incur reasonable expense, and the question in such cases is always whether the act was a reasonable one, having regard to all the circumstances of the particular case.

For other cases, see Damages, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — burden of proof — mitigation of damages.

7. The burden of proving mitigation of damages is upon the party guilty of the tortious act or breach of contract.

For other cases, see Evidence, II. m, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Jury — disqualification — waiver.

8. A known ground of disqualification of a juror, before or during the progress of a trial, is waived by withholding it or failure to raise the objection until after the verdict.

For other cases, see Jury, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 4, 1916.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Oklahoma County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for loss resulting from an incorrect abstract on certain property on which plaintiff loaned money and subsequently purchased. Remanded with instructions.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. George J. Eacock and Jennings & Levy, for plaintiffs in error:

An abstractor and his sureties on his bond are liable only to such person or persons for whom he may compile, make, or furnish the abstract.

Bremerton Development Co. v. Title Trust Co. 67 Wash. 268, 121 Pac. 69; Mal-lory v. Ferguson, 50 Kan. 685, 22 L.R.A. 99, 32 Pac. 410; Symms v. Cutter, 9 Kan. App. 210, 59 Pac. 671; Thomas v. Guarantee Title & T. Co. 81 Ohio St. 432, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1210, 91 N. E. 183, 2 N. C. C. A. 80; National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. ed. 621; Zweigardt v. Birdseye, 57 Mo. App. 462; Glawatz v. People's Guaranty Search Co. 63 N. Y. Supp. 691; Schade v. Gehner, 133 Mo. 252, 34 S. W. 576; Talpey v. Wright, 61 Ark. 275, 54 Am. St. Rep. 206, 32 S. W. 1072; Equitable Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Bank of Commerce & T. Co. 118 Tenn. 678, 19 L.R.A.

Headnotes by BOWLES, C.

Note. — As to liability of title abstractor, see annotation following this case, post, 826. I.R.A.1916D.

(N.S.) 449, 102 S. W. 901, 12 Ann. Cas. 479.

Where two sections of the same statute, or particularly two parts of the same section of the statute, are flatly contradictory of each other, that which is the latter in position will be deemed to govern and control.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 220; Howard v. Bangor & A. R. Co. 86 Me. 387, 29 Atl. 1101; Omaha Real Estate & T. Co. v. Reiter, 47 Neb. 592, 66 N. W. 658; Ex parte Hewlett, 22 Nev. 333, 40 Pac. 97; Hand v. Stapleton, 135 Ala. 156, 33 So. 689; Sanford v. King, 19 S. D. 334, 103 N. W. 28; Gish v. Shaver, 140 Ky. 647, 131 S. W. 515; Branagan v. Dulaney, 8 Colo. 408, 18 Pac. 669; Re Richards, 37 C. C. A. 634, 96 Fed. 935; Brown v. Philadelphia County, 21 Pa. 42.

Where general terms or expressions in one part of the statute are inconsistent with more specific or particular provisions in another part of the same statute, the particular and specific provisions will be given effect as clearer and more definite expressions of the legislative will.

King v. Armstrong, 9 Cal. 368, 99 Pac. 627; Sanford v. King, 19 S. D. 334, 103 N. W. 28; State, Bartlett, Prosecutor, v. Trenton, 38 N. J. L. 67; Gish v. Shaver, 140 Ky. 647, 131 S. W. 515; Hodges v. Dawdy, 104 Ark. 583, 149 S. W. 656; McGrew v. Missouri P. R. Co. 230 Mo. 496, 132 S. W. 1076; Stadler v. Helena, 46 Mont. 128, 127 Pac. 454; Columbia Bank & T. Co. v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 33 Okla. 543, 126 Pac. 556.

When a party offers in evidence a public record, parol evidence cannot thereafter be introduced by such party to impeach or contradict the record.

Richardson v. South Western Cotton Seed Oil Co. 15 Okla. 263, 81 Pac. 781; Yates v. People, 207 Ill. 316, 69 N. E. 775; Darr v. Darrow, 120 Iowa, 29, 94 N. W. 245; Toliver v. Brownell, 94 Mich. 577, 54 N. W. 302; Sweet v. Gibson, 123 Mich. 699, 83 N. W. 407; Union & Planters' Bank v. Memphis, 107 Tenn. 66, 64 S. W. 13; Hulbert v. Hammond, 41 Mich. 343, 1 N. W. 1040.

A person who is being damaged by the negligence or carelessness of another cannot sit idly by and make no reasonable efforts to prevent the increase in the damage to himself, and not notify the other party and thereby give him opportunity to prevent the increase in damage, and then seek to hold the other person responsible for the damage or the increased damage.

Washington County Abstract Co. v. Harris, — Okla. —, 149 Pac. 1075; Roberts v. Leon Loan & Abstract Co. 63 Iowa, 76, 18 L.R.A.1916D.

N. W. 762, 69 Iowa, 673, 29 N. W. 776; Mabb v. Stewart, 147 Cal. 413, 81 Pac. 1073.

Mr. James S. Twyford, for defendant in error:

The terms of the bond and the statute extend such liability to cover any damage sustained by and accruing to any person who relied upon such abstract, or to any person for whom such abstract was made.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1168; Young v. Lohr, 118 Iowa, 624, 92 N. W. 684; Allen v. Hopkins, 62 Kan. 175, 61 Pac. 760; Arnold v. Barner, 91 Kan. 768, 139 Pac. 404, 6 N. C. C. A. 965, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 446; Gate City Abstract Co. v. Post, 55 Neb. 742, 76 N. W. 471; Dickle v. Nashville Abstract Co. 89 Tenn. 431, 24 Am. St. Rep. 616, 14 S. W. 896; Goldberg v. Sisacaton Loan & Title Co. 24 S. D. 49, 140 Am. St. Rep. 775, 123 N. W. 266; Western Loan & Sav. Co. v. Silver Bow Abstract Co. 31 Mont. 448, 107 Am. St. Rep. 435, 78 Pac. 774; Burton v. Larkin, 36 Kan. 246, 59 Am. Rep. 641, 13 Pac. 398; McLaren v. Hutchinson, 22 Cal. 187, 83 Am. Dec. 59.

Evidence must be objected to at the time offered, or the same is waived.

Jones v. Citizens' State Bank, 39 Okla. 393, 135 Pac. 373; State v. Hope, 100 Mo. 347, 8 L.R.A. 608, 13 S. W. 490.

A known disqualification of a juror at or before the trial, and not then raised, such disqualification is waived.

Horton v. State, 10 Okla. Crim. Rep. 294, 136 Pac. 177; Fooshee v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 666, 108 Pac. 554.

The alteration of a record may be shown by parol evidence, such evidence not being within the rule excluding evidence to vary the record, but for the purpose of showing that the record in question is not the true record which was actually made.

10 Enc. Ev. 968; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Malone, 116 Ala. 600, 22 So. 897; Olmsted v. Hoyt, 4 Day, 436; Sebastian v. Rass, 57 Ill. App. 417; Brier v. Woodbury, 1 Pick. 363; Herring v. Lee, 22 W. Va. 661; Dyer v. Brogan, 70 Cal. 136, 11 Pac. 589; Lowry v. McMillan, 8 Pa. 157, 49 Am. Dec. 501; Wilkinson v. Carter, 22 Neb. 186, 34 N. W. 351; Woodville v. Harrison, 73 Wis. 360, 41 N. W. 526; Mitchell v. Kintzer, 5 Pa. 216, 47 Am. Dec. 408.

Reduction of damages is always a question of fact for the jury.

Cobb v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 85 S. C. 430, 67 S. E. 549; 1 Sutherland, Damages, 152; Sedgw. Damages, 8th ed. 201-205.

A party claiming mitigation of damages is required to plead and prove the same.

Ramsay v. Meade, 37 Colo. 465, 86 Pac. 1018; Knapp v. Roche, 94 N. Y. 320; United States v. Mullen Fuel Co. 118 Fed. 663; Reed v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 21

Utah, 295, 61 Pac. 21; Sedgw. Damages, ¶ 227; Merrill v. Blanchard, 7 App. Div. 167, 40 N. Y. Supp. 48; King v. Steiran, 44 Pa. 99, 84 Am. Dec. 419; Leonard v. New York, A. & B. Electro Magnetic Teleg. Co. 41 N. Y. 544, 1 Am. Rep. 446.

Bowles, C., filed the following opinion:

The defendant in error (plaintiff below) instituted this action in the superior court of Oklahoma county, against James G. Sackett, an abstractor of title, and Robert I. Sackett, Lizzie Jennings, and A. C. Farmer, bondsmen for said James G. Sackett, plaintiff in error (defendants below), hereinafter referred to respectively as "plaintiff" and "defendants," for damages resulting from an incorrect abstract on certain property in Oklahoma City on which the plaintiff loaned $1,750 and subsequently thereto purchased what she thought was a fee title to said property. The defendant James G. Sackett, in making the abstract, prior to the loan above referred to, omitted in his certificate to disclose the existence of a judgment which was then a lien on said property, which said judgment was against one Dewaide, a former owner of the property, in favor of J. W. Morrison. After the plaintiff had purchased the property, said property was sold under said judgment and entirely lost to plaintiff. Plaintiff recovered judgment in the court below for the value of said property so lost to her; hence this appeal.

At the outset, we are called upon to construe § 1, Wilson's Revised & Annotated Statutes of 1903; plaintiff in error claiming that an abstractor is only liable for damages for any incompleteness, imperfections, or errors in any abstract furnished by him to the person or persons for whom he may compile, make, or furnish an abstract of title. The court below held that a party furnishing an abstract was liable in damages to any person relying upon said abstract to his detriment. We believe this construction of the statute clearly right. Section 1 reads as follows: "That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to hold themselves out as abstractors and to engage in the business of abstracting title to real estate in any of the counties of the territory of Oklahoma, without first having executed and filed with the county clerk of the county in which said person, firm or corporation intends to engage in the business of abstracting, a bond, to be approved by the board of county commissioners of said county, with three or more good and sufficient sureties residing in the county, and worth not less than double the amount of the bond over and above all debts, liabilities and exemptions, in the sum of $5,000, conditioned that he will properly demean himself in the business of abstracting, and will pay all damages that may accrue to any person by reason of any incompleteness, imperfections or error in any abstract furnished by him, and will in no way mutilate, deface or destroy any of the records of the several offices to which he may have access, and that he will not in any way interfere with, hinder or delay the several county officers in the discharge of their duties, while using said records, in the prosecution of said business of abstracting: Provided, however, that the records shall in no case be taken from the county office to which they belong. The person, firm or corporation who shall execute and file said bond of $5,000 for said purpose, shall, together with the sureties thereon, be liable on said bond to the territory of Oklahoma in the penalty of one hundred dollars ($100); and to any county or person who shall be in any way damaged by any mutilation, injury or destruction of any record or records of the several county offices to which he or they may have access, to the amount of damage actually done said county or person; and to any person or persons for whom he or they may compile, make or furnish abstracts of title, to the amount of damage done to said person or persons by any incompleteness, imperfection or error made by said person, firm or corporation, in compiling said abstract."

This statute seemingly has two inconsistent provisions. The first part of the section provides that the abstractor shall give bond, etc., said bond conditioned that he will properly demean himself in the business of abstracting and pay all damages that may accrue to any person by reason of any incompleteness, imperfection, or error in any abstract furnished by him. The latter part of the same section provides that the abstractor and his bond shall be liable to the state or territory in the penal sum of $100 and to any county for mutilating the records, etc., and to any persons for whom he or they may compile, make, or furnish abstracts of title, to the amount of damage done to said person or persons by any incompleteness, imperfection, or error made by such person, firm, or corporation in compiling said abstract.

It is clear that the former part of the section makes the abstractor liable to any person by reason of any error in any abstract furnished by him. The latter part of the section provides that the abstractor is liable to any one to whom he furnishes an abstract. It seems to us that these two expressions can be construed together without doing violence to either. The latter part of the section in no wise repeals, modi-ties, or curtails the clear import and purpose of the legislature to make an abstractor liable to any person injured by relying upon his abstract as provided in the first part of the section. The liability in the first portion of the section is general. The latter part of the section provides that he is liable to the party to whom he furnishes the abstract, and does not undertake to confine or curtail his liability to any other person relying upon the correctness thereof to his injury. The section might well read: "The abstractor will pay all damages that may accrue to any person by reason of any incompleteness, imperfections, or error in any abstract furnished by him, and to any person or persons for whom he or they may compile, make, or furnish an abstract."

Would it be contended that the provisions, read together as above, indicated anything else than that the abstractor's liability extends to any person relying upon the abstract, whether it was furnished to him in the first instance or furnished to some other person?

This construction of the statute makes it a harmonious whole, and gives full effect to all of its provisions, and does violence to none. Harmony, not confusion, is to be sought for by statutory construction. Conflicts between different provisions of a statute are not to be held to exist, if harmony, by any reasonable construction of them, can be discovered. The true rule has often been said to be that where two acts or parts of a construction that will give effect to both and to the words of each, without violence to either, it should be adopted, in preference to one which, though reasonable, leads to the conclusion that there is a conflict. There is no conflict between different parts of a statute if there is a reasonable meaning of the words used, considering the manner of their use, which will bring them into harmony. See Atty. Gen. ex rel. Taylor v. Brown, 1 Wis. 513; Atty. Gen. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 425; Mason v. Ashland, 98 Wis. 540, 74 N. W. 357.

Before we would be justified in applying the doctrine contended for by plaintiff in error, that, where two sections of the same statute or particularly two parts of the same section of a statute are flatly contradictory of each other, that which has the latterly position will be deemed to govern and control, we must first conclude that there is an irreconcilable conflict, which we cannot say of this statute. Having come to this conclusion, it is plain that the law as to agency and privity of contract has no application, and is therefore not considered. L.R.A.1916D.

It is next contended by plaintiff in error that the court below erred in permitting evidence to go to the jury for the purpose of contradicting the record as to when the judgment complained of in this case was rendered against Dewaide, the original owner of the property. The judgment docket showed on its face that this judgment was recorded on the 23d day of July, 1909; the abstractor made his abstract, or the extension thereof, March 18, 1909; the judgment was rendered February 17, 1909. The claim of plaintiff below was that the record had been changed; in other words, the judgment had been recorded on the 23d day of February and afterwards changed to read July 23d.

The evidence complained of was admitted, not for the purpose of impeaching the record, but for the purpose of showing that the record had been tampered with, and the judgment was actually recorded February 23d. The authorities cited by plaintiff in error, that the record of a court cannot be impeached in a collateral proceeding, are the law; but was this evidence admitted for that purpose? We think not. The evidence was introduced and admitted for the purpose of showing what the record actually was and for the purpose of ascertaining the truth. The alteration of a record may be shown by parol evidence, such evidence not being within the rule excluding evidence to vary the record, but for the purpose of showing that the record in question is not the true record which was actually made. See Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Malone, 116 Ala. 600, 22 So. 897; Dyer v. Brogan, 70 Cal. 136, 11 Pac. 589; Wilkinson v. Carter, 22 Neb. 186, 34 N. W. 351; Woodville v. Harrison, 73 Wis. 360, 41 N. W. 526; Lowry v. McMillan, 8 Pa. 157, 49 Am. Dec. 501.

In Lowry v. McMillan, supra, the court uses this language: The "record is entitled to great sanctity, in the law. But then it must be an honest record. It is in vain to talk of the danger of altering or explaining a record by parol; everything imbued with fraud must give way before credible sworn testimony."

Plaintiff in error again contends that the jury to which the case was tried was not impaneled and drawn according to law; in other words, that talesmen were ordered at a time when there were ample jurors on the regular panel present and qualified to try the case, and not otherwise engaged. This fact was known to counsel for plaintiff in error, if such was the fact, at or before the trial, according to their own affidavit. The record shows no objection made or exception saved to the impaneling of the jury at the time. This being true, such disqualification was waived. Horton v. State, 10 Okla. Crim. Rep. 294, 136 Pac. 177; Fooshee v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 666, 108 Pac. 554.

Defendant again assigns error in the refusal of the trial judge to give instruction No. A, as requested, which reads as follows: "You are further instructed that, if you find for the plaintiff in this case, you will find for her in a sum not to exceed $1,047.90."

This instruction was requested upon the theory that the "Morrison judgment" against Dewaide, the judgment upon which the property was finally sold and the judgment which the defendant Sackett omitted from the abstract, was the extent of defendants' liability, upon the theory that it was the duty of the plaintiff, when she found that a wrong had been perpetrated upon her, to use all reasonable means to arrest the loss, and that she could not stand idly by and permit the loss to increase, and then to hold the wrongdoer liable for loss which she might have prevented; the evidence failing to show that the plaintiff did anything to lessen the damages.

It will be noted that no amount of diligence on her part could have averted the loss of the amount of the Morrison judgment. Satisfaction of the judgment was her only remedy; consequently, she was entitled to a judgment for that amount, but so far as a further judgment, for additional damages, was concerned, the duty to exercise ordinary care and reasonable diligence to mitigate the same rested upon her. It was only incumbent upon her, however, in this regard, to use reasonable diligence to mitigate the damages and to lessen the injury. The question in such cases is always whether the necessary acts to mitigate the damages were reasonable, having regard to all the circumstances of the particular case.

In Uhlrig v. Barnum, 43 Neb. 584, 61 N. W. 749, the syllabus reads as follows: "Where two parties have made a contract, which one of them has broken, the other must make reasonable exertions to render his injury as light as possible; and he cannot recover, from the party breaking the contract, damages which would have been avoided, had he performed such duty."

In Washington County Abstract Co. v. Harris, — Okla. —, 149 Pac. 1075 (No. 4080), opinion by Judge Robberts, not yet officially reported, Ira S. Hopkins, on July 16, 1909, deeded to the plaintiff, F. E. Harris, certain lands in Washington county, and which deed was recorded on July 20, 1909. On July 19, 1909, Ira S. Hopkins deeded the same land to Delilah B. Hopkins. This deed was recorded on July 19, L.R.A.1916D.

1909. On or about the 21st of July, 1909, the plaintiff, Harris, through his agents, employed the Washington County Abstract Company to furnish an abstract of title to the land, and on July 21, 1909, the abstract company did furnish said abstract to Harris, but failed to show the deed from Ira S. Hopkins to Delilah B. Hopkins, which was recorded two days before the abstract was furnished to Harris. Harris, after receiving the abstract and relying on the same, paid $500 for the land. Delilah B. Hopkins then sued Harris to quiet her title, and Harris gave notice to the abstract company and its sureties of that suit, and they refused to defend it. Harris defended the suit alone, was defeated, and afterward sued the abstract company. One item of damages recovered was the expense of the suit, including attorney fees. This case was appealed to this court, and one of the questions passed upon was whether or not the attorney fee and cost were proper items of damages. Judge Robberts in the opinion says: "Under such circumstances, evidently it was the duty of the defendant in that case (defendant in error herein) to use reasonable means, including necessary and reasonable expenses, to defeat, if possible, that cause of action, not only that he might reduce his own loss, but it was a duty he owed to the defendant (plaintiff in error herein) to reduce any damage he might sustain by reason of the erroneous abstract."

This case is squarely in point in our judgment, and decisive of the proposition at bar, and therefore binding upon us, as to the duty devolving upon the plaintiff to exercise reasonable diligence to reduce any damages she sustained by reason of the erroneous abstract, after she had notice.

Roberts v. Leon Loan & Abstract Co. 63 Iowa, 76, 18 N. W. 702, is a case in point. The syllabus reads as follows: "The defendant furnished plaintiff with an abstract of title, in which the period allowed for redeeming the land appeared by mistake to be ten days longer than it actually was. Plaintiff discovered the error a day before the expiration of the time allowed for redemption, but failed to obtain the money in time to redeem, and neglected to apprise defendant of the mistake. Held, that defendant was entitled to be informed of his mistake in time to enable him to avert the consequences, and that plaintiff could not recover damages without showing that such timely information was given, and that reasonable effort had been made to secure the money."

This case goes a step further than we concede to be the law, that a failure to notify the abstractor precludes a party from recovery. A failure to notify the defendant in time to enable him to protect himself is a fact to go to the jury to aid them in determining whether plaintiff was negligent and failed to exercise ordinary care to reduce or lessen the damages.

The American and English Encyclopedia, vol. 8, p. 605, states the general rule to be: "As it is the duty of a party injured by a breach of contract or tort to make reasonable effort to avoid damages therefrom, such damages as might by reasonable diligence on his part have been avoided are not to be regarded as the natural and probable result of the defendant's acts. There can be no recovery, therefore, for damages which might have been prevented by reasonable efforts on the part of the person injured."

We believe these decisions and the text declare a doctrine consonant with honesty and fair dealing. To hold otherwise would be an absolute perversion of justice, and would many times work injuries destructive and ruinous in their consequences. However, reasonable diligence and ordinary care is all that is necessary or can, in justice, be required. Time, knowledge, opportunity, and expense are all to be taken into consideration in determining whether or not the party injured exercised ordinary care to lessen the loss and mitigate the damages. The want of ordinary care is a question of fact to be submitted to the jury and to be determined by them.

The instant case was tried upon the theory, on the part of the plaintiff, that she was entitled to recover all the damages proximately resulting to her on account of the mistake in the abstract, and that no duty devolved upon her to make any effort to lessen or mitigate the damages. The defendant seemed to be of the opinion that, if liable at all, the maximum of recovery was the amount of the Morrison judgment. The plaintiff's theory was correct, with this modification: she was entitled to all of the damages proximately resulting to her on account of the failure of defendant to note the existence of the Morrison judgment in the abstract, except damages as might, by reasonable diligence on her part, have been avoided. Such damages are not to be regarded as the natural and probable result of defendant's acts.

Under the admitted facts in this case, the plaintiff, after discovering the property was advertised for sale and about to be sold under the Morrison judgment, made no effort either to satisfy the judgment or notify the defendant. It is true, she was in Arlington, Ohio, but she had two days, or possibly three, in which to satisfy the judgment or notify the defendant, or have made some effort with this end in view, or given some reasonable explanation for her neglect. This property, according to plaintiff's evidence, was worth $5,000. It was within the range of possibilities for her to have borrowed sufficient money upon this property to have satisfied the judgment.

We believe plaintiff's right to recover included all the damages suffered by her proximately resulting from the failure of the defendant to include the Morrison judgment in the abstract; in other words, the general rule is that, when a wrong has been done and the law gives a remedy, the compensation shall be equal to the injury; the latter is the standard by which the former is to be measured. The injured party is to be placed as near as may be in the situation which he would have occupied had the wrong not been committed. With this modification, that where a party is entitled to the benefit of a contract and can save himself from a loss arising from the breach of it at a trifling expense, or with reasonable exertion, it is his duty to do it, and he can charge the delinquent with such damages only as with reasonable diligence and expense he could not prevent. The burden of proving circumstances in mitigation of damages is upon the party guilty of the tortious act or breach of contract.

The evidence was before the jury as to what the plaintiff did to lessen the damages, and it was the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to her duty to exercise ordinary care and reasonable diligence to avert the loss, if the same could be done at trifling expense and reasonable exertion on her part. This evidence showing lack of diligence on the part of the plaintiff was admissible under the general issue, and it was the duty of the court to instruct the jury that, if they believed that the Morrison judgment was of record at the time this abstract was made and delivered, the plaintiff, in any event, would be entitled to the value of that judgment as heretofore suggested, and such other damages as proximately resulted to her by reason of the erroneous omission in the abstract, and which she could not have prevented by the exercise of reasonable diligence and care on her part. We therefore believe that instruction No. 10 should have been given, as plaintiff's right to recover the amount of the Morrison judgment was unquestioned, if the judgment was of record at the time the abstract in question was extended; but her further recovery should have been limited by the instructions of the court, as heretofore suggested.

We therefore recommend that the judgment be remanded, with instructions that if the plaintiff remit all that part of the judgment over and above the amount of the Morrison judgment, with interest, the case be affirmed, and, should the plaintiff fail to agree to said remittitur, a new trial be granted.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

Petition for rehearing denied February 15, 1916.

Annotation—Liability of title abstractor.

This annotation supplements on the same question, notes to Equitable Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Bank of Commerce & T. Co. 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 449; Stephenson v. Cone, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1207; and Anderson v. Spriestebach, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 176.

Generally speaking, the duty of an abstractor to his client is to make a painstaking examination of the records, and to set forth in the abstract all the facts relating to the title under investigation. He is not called on for professional opinions as to any of the matters reported. He is therefore liable for any injury that may result from negligence in the performance of his duties; that is, from a failure to exercise ordinary care and skill in discovering in the record and noting in the abstract all the deeds, mortgages, etc., that affect the title in respect to which he is employed. 1 R. C. L. 92, § 4.

Thus, an abstract company is liable for mistakes made in the preparation of an abstract whereby the person for whom it is made is legally damaged. Hillock v. Idaho Title & T. Co. (1913) 24 Idaho, 242, 133 Pac. 119 (former appeal (1912) 22 Idaho, 440, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 178, 128 Pac. 612); Walker v. Bowman (1910) 27 Okl. 172, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 642, 111 Pac. 319, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 839.

So, an abstract company cannot escape liability by claiming that a tax deed is invalid which ought to have but did not appear on the abstract; for abstracts of title should show every instrument affecting the title which is a matter of record, and if an abstract fails to show certain instruments that cast a cloud upon the title, and the person who procures such abstract is damaged thereby, the abstract company is liable. Hillock v. Idaho Title & T. Co. (1913) 24 Idaho, 242, 133 Pac. 119.

So, under the amendment to the law regulating abstracting (Laws 1903, chap. 1) the abstractor and his sureties are liable upon the abstractor's bond for all negligent errors and omissions in an abstract, not only to a person who employs him, but also to all persons who purchase or invest in land relying on an abstract furnished for that purpose. Arnold v. Barner (1914) 91 Kan. 768, L.R.A.1916D.

139 Pac. 404, 6 N. C. C. A. 965, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 446. See also SACKETT v. ROSE, ante, 820.

And a bond conditioned that an abstractor "shall well and properly demean himself in the business of abstracting," and also "shall honestly and faithfully discharge and perform such other duties as abstractor as are prescribed by law," makes the abstractor and his sureties liable in the manner and to the extent provided for in the statute which is in effect read into the bond. Arnold v. Barner (Kan.) supra.

Under § 1, Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, an abstractor who furnishes an abstract of title for a party, by and through an agent of such party, which abstract fails to show a deed on record at the time the abstract was made and delivered, whereby the party for whom the abstract was furnished, relying on it, purchase the land described therein, and the title thereto thereafter fails in the purchaser because of the deed omitted from the abstract, the purchaser may recover damages sustained by reason of the abstractor's negligent and careless act in failing to show the deed in the abstract, including the price paid for the land and reasonable attorney's fees, costs, and other necessary expenses expended by him in attempting to defeat the outstanding title under the deed, provided there was a reasonable probability of defeating the title. Washington County Abstract Co. v. Harris (1915) — Okl. —, 149 Pac. 1075.

And the proximate cause of the injury in such a case is the failure of the abstractor to show in the abstract the record of the outstanding deed; and the fact that the title in the purchaser might have failed for some other cause not shown in the record would not itself defeat the plaintiff's right to recover against the abstractor and his bondsmen. (Okl.) Ibid.

So, where it was contended that an abstract, incorrectly certifying that there were no taxes or liens against certain property, was not made for the person claiming to have been damaged by reason of this incorrect certification, and for such reason there was no privity of contract between complainant and ab-stracter, and that without first showing this fact, complainant could not recover for a breach of obligation, the court in Gregory v. Harper (1915) — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 70, stated that the statute (Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, chap. 1, § 1) was too broad to defeat recovery on that ground, the statute expressly providing that the bond of abstracters shall be conditioned "he will properly demean himself in the business of abstracting and will pay all damages that may accrue to any person by reason of any incompleteness, imperfections or error in any abstract furnished by him." The court observed that there were reasonable inferences and deductions showing that complainant relied on the abstract, and for that reason the court failed to sustain the contention "that the evidence does not show that the plaintiff in error relied on the abstract, but on the contrary shows that the same was not relied on by him, but that he had actual information as to the existence of the taxes on this property."

It seems that an abstracter is liable as for a breach of contract, and not in tort, for damages resulting from his negligence in preparing the abstract; and the rule is that, when an abstract is prepared to cover only a limited period, it need not include anything of record outside of such period. Consequently, an abstract company, assuming to abstract only such records and proceedings between certain dates as affect the title to the property, is not liable for failure to notice interlocutory proceedings in an action begun before, and judgment entered after, the time limit of the certificate, such proceedings not affecting the title. Douglas v. Title Trust Co. (1914) 80 Wash. 71, 141 Pac. 177. In this case the court distinguishes the Bremerton Development Co. Case (set out in note 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 176) in that the liability of the abstract company was held to rest not upon one, but upon several, certificates.

Ordinarily an abstracter who is employed to extend an abstract previously made is only liable for negligent errors and omissions in the extended part of the abstract, yet if, when the extension is made, he reissues and recertifies the original with the extended part, his liability will be the same as if a complete abstract had been made at the time of the extension. Arnold v. Barner (1914) 91 Kan. 768, 139 Pac. 404, 6 N. C. C. A. 965, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 446.

An abstracter has been held not liable for failure to show a judgment against L.R.A. 1916D.

William J. Rideout upon search for William G. Rideout. Turk v. Benson (1915) 30 N. D. 200, L.R.A. 1915D, 1211, 152 N. W. 354 (Goss, J. dissents).

Statute of limitations.

The earlier cases on the question of the running of the statute of limitations against an action to hold a title abstracter liable may be found in note to Aachen & M. F. Ins. Co. v. Morton (1907) 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 156; and supplementary thereto are the following cases:

Thus, where a prospective purchaser of a tract of land purchased from an abstract company an abstract of title to such property, accompanied by certificate to the effect that such abstract contained a notation of all instruments of record affecting the title, including tax certificate and tax deeds, and relying upon the correctness of the abstract as the truth of the certificate annexed thereto, the purchaser of the abstract subsequently purchased the land therein described, and it thereafter developed that at the time of the making and delivery of such abstract there was an outstanding tax deed to such property which was not disclosed by the abstract, and the purchaser of the abstract and land therein described was obliged to expend money to procure a cancellation and release and satisfaction of the tax deed, and thereafter commenced an action against the abstract company to recover damages sustained on account of the mistake and false representation made by the abstract and certificate thereto,—it was held in Hillock v. Idaho Title & T. Co. (1912) 22 Idaho, 440, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 178, 126 Pac. 612, that the limitation of such action is governed by subdivision 4 of § 4054 of the Revised Codes, and that the cause of action in such case does not accrue until the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake.

So, one who sustains damage by reason of the mistake and false and fraudulent representations contained in an abstract may, under the provisions of subdivision 4 of § 4054 of the Revised Codes, commence his action to recover damages within three years after discovering the fraud or mistake. Hillock v. Idaho Title & T. Co. (Idaho) supra. The above case was affirmed in (1913) 24 Idaho, 242, 133 Pac. 119, without reference to the statute of limitations.

But it is held in Arnold v. Barner (Kan.) supra, that the statute of limitations begins to run on a cause of action against an abstracter for negligent errors and omissions in an abstract, from the time the abstract is furnished, rather than from the time the negligent errors and omissions are discovered, or when damages result therefrom.

So, a right of action against an abstracter for damages resulting from incompleteness, imperfection, or error in an abstract furnished by him accrues at the time the examination is made and reported, and not when the error is discovered and the damages resulting therefrom have been paid. Walker v. Bowman (1910) 27 Okla. 172, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 642, 111 Pac. 319, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 839.

So, as stated in Bodine v. Wayne Title & T. Co. (1907) 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 68, the cause of action against the conveyancer was the breach of duty, not the damages, which are only an incident; and it has been uniformly held that the right of action is complete so that the statute of limitations begins to run from the breach, although the damage may not be known or may not in fact occur until afterwards.

The decision Lilly v. Boyd (1883) 72 Ga. 83, holds that the statute of limitations begins to run from the date of the breach of duty of an attorney retained to examine titles.

And in Owen v. Western Sav. Fund (1881) 97 Pa. 47, 39 Am. Rep. 794, it is held that a cause of action against a recorder of deeds for damages by reason of a false certificate of search accrued so soon as claimant parted with its money on the faith of it.

It may be observed, however, that neither of the last two cases is strictly within the scope of this note, which is limited to abstracters, and does not extend to officers and attorneys; other notes covering such cases. J. D. C.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

W. A. EGERTON

v.

B. T. FLESHER et al., Plffs. in Err.

(— W. Va. —, 86 S. E. 34.)

Ferry — application — necessity.

1. Upon an application to a county court to establish a third ferry, where there are already two ferries serving the same public, the imperative public need for such additional ferry, and not the private ends of the promoters, or their selfish desires to absorb the business of one or both of the other ferries, should control the sound discretion of the court in refusing or granting such franchise.

For other cases, see Ferries, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — sufficiency.

2. Applying this rule, the facts established by the evidence in this case did not warrant the action of the county court in establishing such third ferry.

For other cases, see Ferries, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(June 15, 1915.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Cabell County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the County Court in plain-tiff's favor in a proceeding for the establishment of a steam ferry. Reversed.

Headnotes by MILLER, J.

Note. — As to establishment, regulation, and protection of ferries, see annotation following this case, post, 831. L.R.A.1916D.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Neal & Strickling and Campbell, Brown, & Davis, for plaintiffs in error:

It was the duty of the applicant to affirmatively show the conditions of all the ferries existing between Huntington and the state of Ohio, and that by reason of the want of ferry facilities, having taken all of the ferries into the estimate, that there was an imperative public demand for an additional ferry, and that the traffic would well support it.

Sistersville Ferry Co. v. Russell, 52 W. Va. 361, 59 L.R.A. 513, 43 S. E. 107; Williamson v. Hays, 25 W. Va. 609.

Messrs. Paul W. Scott and George S. Wallace, for defendant in error:

The testimony taken has shown an imperative public demand and need for an additional ferry, and the action of the court in granting the franchise was not an abuse of its discretion.

Williamson v. Hays, 25 W. Va. 609; Sistersville Ferry Co. v. Russell, 52 W. Va. 356, 59 L.R.A. 513, 43 S. E. 107.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By its judgment of March 11, 1914, complained of, the circuit court of Cabell county, upon an appeal by defendants, affirmed the final judgment or order of the county court, pronounced on June 12, 1913, establishing on the application of plaintiff a ferry from a point on the Ohio river at or near the foot of Sixteenth street, in the city of Huntington, West Virginia, to a point nearly opposite on the river bank in Lawrence county, Ohio.

The defendants, D. T. Fleisher and Mary A. Fleisher, husband and wife, who owned and had operated successfully, since the year 1901, another ferry, below the proposed ferry, and from a point on said river, at or near the foot of Tenth street, in said city, to a point opposite on the Ohio side and near the mouth of Symmes creek, were admitted as defendants and resistants to the granting of the proposed franchise; and deeming themselves aggrieved by the adverse judgments of the county court and of the circuit court upon their appeal have brought the case here for review, on writ of error awarded them on their petition assigning error.

The record, very voluminous, shows that at the time of plaintiff's application there were already established and in operation within the corporate limits of said city, besides appellants' ferry at the foot of Tenth street, a ferry at Central City, and about 2 miles below their ferry; another above it at the foot of Twenty-sixth street, and another some 3 miles still farther up the river and known as the Guyandotte or Proctorville ferry. It is claimed, also, that there are two or three other ferries at other intermediate points, some, if not all, of which are operated for carrying passengers only. The evidence also shows a turnpike road paralleling the Ohio river on the Ohio side, and connecting all these ferries.

The testimony also shows that at least 60 per cent of the patronage of appellants' ferry comes from the Symmes creek valley; that the people inhabiting that valley are principally engaged in truck farming and fruit raising, and that considerable tobacco is also raised there, and that a large part of these products find an outlet by way of the roads leading up this valley and over the ferries at Tenth and Twenty-sixth streets, and ready market in the city of Huntington, where there are also cold-storage houses. The principal road up the Symmes creek valley follows the creek, and is called the Eaton turnpike, the general trend thereof being north and south, but when at a point within about half a mile from the Ohio river the road forks, one fork going directly to the river, and to a point directly opposite the foot of said Sixteenth street, the location of the proposed ferry, the other following the course of the creek and with it paralleling the Ohio river in a south-westerly direction and then making a sharp bend in a southeasterly direction and coming to the Ohio river almost opposite appellants' ferry, and a distance of about a mile and a half from the forks of the road. The point at which the first prong of this road reaches the river is about equidistant between appellants' ferry and the ferry at Twenty-sixth street, and the natural result would be to divide about equally between these two ferries the patronage from the Symmes creek valley, for the evidence is that the road by way of the creek valley on account of its condition is not much used. Moreover, the evidence shows that besides what patronage the Symmes creek valley furnishes the Twenty-sixth street ferry that ferry is patronized, or naturally should be, by the people living on the Greasy ridge road, running up from the Ohio river between Bear creek and Bent creek, and which naturally would not go to the appellants' ferry.

With these natural conditions obtaining on both sides of the river and about equally divided between these two ferries, the plaintiff and petitioner proposes to establish, and the county court by its judgment, so affirmed by the circuit court, has undertaken to establish, a ferry at the foot of Sixteenth street, and directly opposite the point where the first branch of the road up the Symmes creek valley intersects the turnpike along the river.

On the trial before the county court the applicant proposed and was permitted to show in evidence what purported to be a contract in writing between the Central Ferry Company, a corporation, owning and operating the Twenty-sixth street ferry, signed on behalf of this company by W. E. Neal, its president, and by three persons, represented as owning a majority of the stock of the company, as parties of the first part, and the plaintiff or applicant, as party of the second part, and whereby in effect the Central Ferry Company, and the three stockholders named, proposed, that Egerton should proceed to acquire the franchise for the ferry at Sixteenth street, transfer it and the land acquired therefor to this corporation, and that in consideration thereof the ferry company should issue additional stock and give Egerton or his assignee the right to subscribe for said issue, or any part thereof, and pay out of said subscription the cost of securing the license or franchise and all permits, leases, etc., incurred by him, and the cost and expense of removing the boat, equipment, and tackle, then owned by the Central Ferry Company, from Twenty-sixth street to said Sixteenth street, the same to be there operated under the franchise so to be obtained by the said company, and the ferry at Twenty-sixth street to be thereafter abandoned. Other details of the contract are unimportant in the consideration of this case.

The record shows that the principal object of Egerton in seeking the establishment of the additional ferry at Sixteenth street was to exploit and develop a tract of land owned by him and associates in Ohio, immediately opposite the foot of Sixteenth street, and that to this end it was thought necessary, in order to establish a successful ferry, to consolidate with it the Twenty-sixth street ferry, which the evidence shows had been run at a loss, or at least unsuccessfully, and also as far as possible to absorb the business and patronage which would naturally go to appellants' ferry, and which for many years has been successfully operated and managed, and in the main, so far as the record shows, to the satisfaction of the public generally. There is a question made as to the validity of the alleged contract. The evidence tends to show that there was no meeting of the stockholders authorizing it; but that the three stockholders signing the contract owned a majority of the stock of the ferry company, and had obligated themselves thereby to vote their stock and vote in the directors' meeting so as to accomplish the objects of said contract. Whether said contract be valid or not, on grounds of public policy or otherwise, is a question not necessary to be decided for the purposes of this case.

In the case here, as in all cases of like character, the principal question for determination within the sound, but not arbitrary, discretion of the county court, is the imperative public need for the additional ferry, for if there be no such need our decisions hold such additional ferry should not be established. The public need therefore, and not the private ends of the promoters, or their selfish desires to absorb the successful and prosperous business of another ferry, should be the guiding star in all such cases. Sistersville Ferry Co. v. Russell, 52 W. Va 356, 59 L.R.A. 513, 43 S. E. 107; Williamson v. Hays, 25 W. Va. 609.

To bring his case within these well-established and recognized rules, plaintiff undertook the burden of showing, notwithstanding the conditions already described and proven, that appellants were unable, or at least had failed, to take care of the public business offered them, and that because of this there was necessity for the proposed ferry. But in this we do not think he has succeeded. The sum of all the evidence of the numerous witnesses examined on this subject is this, that during certain months in the year, when the crops are being harvested and marketed, there has been in the early morning hours a congestion of business at appellants' ferry, delaying patrons in getting over the river at from half an hour to an hour and a half. Some of the witnesses say that they have seen as high as from fifteen to twenty-seven wagons, in the early morning before the ferry started, waiting to get across, but none of the evidence shows that any such condition ever occurred at any other time of the day. This congestion, the evidence shows, was due to the fact that these market people, some of them, would leave their homes as early as 11 o'clock the night before, and reach the ferry at very early hours of the morning, in order to gain some advantage of their competitors, in getting over the river. The evidence shows clearly that appellants' boat was well manned and well equipped; that the boat had a capacity of seven to eight wagons or vehicles, and that a round trip could be made in from ten to fifteen minutes, and that three quarters of an hour, or, at the outside, an hour would then be necessary to put all over the river. Besides, there was the ferry at Twenty-sixth street, as easily reached by the short branch of the Eaton turnpike as appellants' ferry, to relieve all such congestion. But, as noted, the evidence tends to show the ferry at Twenty-sixth street was poorly and unsuccessfully operated from a financial standpoint, that no dividends had ever been paid to the stockholders, and that at the time of the trial of this case the ferry boat seems to have been beached by the high water, and that the owners were then engaged in trying to get it back into the river.

Assuming that there may have been these slight congestions in the business, and that the public might to some extent be inconvenienced by another ferry at Sixteenth street, these are not the only elements to be considered in determining the question of the imperative public need. The public is concerned also in the financial success of the owners and operators of the ferries, for without this they could not long hold out in giving any public service. If one ferry can hold and serve better than two, the public interests would be better subserved by the one, than to divide the business with another, and neither be able because of want of sufficient financial support to serve the public well. We know from this record that the Twenty-sixth street ferry had been a financial failure, notwithstanding its ability to draw from the Symmes creek valley, and from the territory east of it not tributary to appellants' ferry.

On the trial appellants exhibited their books and vouchers, in connection with a comprehensive tabulated statement, showing in accurate figures the results of their business, by periods of four years, and for the whole time, from 1901 to 1912, inclusive, and although they offered this testimony, and offered their books and vouchers, they were not questioned upon the subject by plaintiff or his counsel, or otherwise, and there can be no question about the verity of these statements and the books and papers back of them. These figures show in round numbers an original capital investment of $15,000. For the first four years, the gross receipts were $23,701.45; gross expenses, $15,162.17; net proceeds, $8,539.28, or an annual net income of $2,134.82; for the following four years, the gross receipts were $32,965.15; gross expenses $18,695.20; net proceeds, $14,269.95, or an annual income of $3,567.48; and for the last quadrennial, the gross receipts were $32,471.09; gross expenses $24,040.69; net proceeds $8,430.40, or an annual net income of $2,107.60. It thus appears that during this last quadrennial the gross receipts fell off several hundred dollars, and the gross expenses increased several thousand dollars, and that the net annual income decreased $1,459.88. These figures show great fluctuation in annual receipts and expenses, and also as compared by quadrennial periods. During some years the expenses were greatly increased by the necessity of docking and repairing the boat.

As already noted, the evidence tends to show, it does show to our satisfaction, that 60 per cent of appellants' business comes from the Symmes creek valley, and it is fair to assume, we think, from the evidence, that if the proposed ferry is located and operated successfully, it will at least divide the present patronage of the appellants' ferry. This would take away from it about one third of its entire patronage. Using the figures covering the last quadrennial for illustration, this would reduce the gross receipts to $21,000, in round numbers, and assuming that the expenses would remain the same, and we can see no reason why they should be reduced, the result would be a net loss to appellants, in round numbers, of $2,000 for that period. Appellants undertook but were not permitted to show in evidence, and plaintiff did not undertake to show, the result of the business of the ferry at Twenty-sixth street. According to our decisions this was a proper subject of inquiry, on the question of the imperative public need, but in the case at bar we think the error was harmless, because in our view of the case the petitioner has wholly failed to show any imperative public need for the additional ferry. That it might serve well his private ends and needs may be granted; that the public might be to some extent inconvenienced by the proposed ferry may be assumed, but these are uncontrolling considerations. The imperative public need must furnish the foundation for action, and we find no such public need evidenced by the record. Appellants' ferry is well located with reference to the business center of the city of Huntington, and the evidence shows that they have made application to the county court for the establishment of night rates, and propose to operate the ferry in the nighttime so as to relieve the congestion of the early morning hours during the harvest months. Why they have applied for night rates, as they explained, was that the income would be small, and the expenses naturally as great as for operating the ferry in the daytime, and their evidence is that at best the night operation will be at a loss to them. Increased population on the Ohio side of the river was also relied on; but the last census showed an actual decrease of several hundred in the population in Lawrence county, as compared with the last preceding census, and an increase only of four hundred or five hundred in the township immediately opposite the city of Huntington. Alleged increase in agricultural products was also relied on; but neither increased population nor increased products seem to have increased the income at appellants' ferry during the last preceding quadrennial; on the contrary, as we have seen, there was a considerable falling off in the gross receipts as compared with the preceding four years.

Our conclusion from the whole evidence, which we will not undertake to detail, is that the plaintiff and petitioner has wholly failed to show any imperative public need for the proposed ferry; and we are of opinion, upon the principles enunciated in the two cases cited, to reverse the judgment of the Circuit Court, and to enter here such judgment as we think that court should have pronounced, reversing the judgment of the County Court, and dismissing the application of the plaintiff to establish such proposed ferry, and the judgment here will go accordingly.

Petition for rehearing denied September 7, 1915.

Annotation—Establishment, regulation, and protection of ferries.

This annotation is supplementary to a note on the same subject attached to L.R.A.1916D. Sistersville Ferry Co. v. Russell, 59 L.R.A. 513.

As to ferryman as a common carrier, see note to Rosen v. Boston, 68 L.R.A. 153.

For other annotation considering questions relating to ferries, see Index to L.R.A. Notes, "Ferries."

Definition.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 513.

A steam ferryboat is a steamer within the meaning of § 4472, Revised Statutes of the United States (Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8242), which provides that certain enumerated dangerous articles shall not be carried "as freight or used as stores on any steamer carrying passengers." The Nassau (1911) 110 C. C. A. 184, 188 Fed. 46, writ of certiorari denied in 223 U. S. 722, 56 L. ed. 630, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524.

Necessity of license.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 515.

The requirement of a franchise or permit for the conduct of a ferry upon navigable waters of a state, which by act of Congress have been declared to be common highways and forever free to the inhabitants of said state and to the citizens of the United States, is not an invasion of the right of free navigation nor a violation of such congressional act. Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Lang (1911) 161 Cal. 672, 120 Pac. 421.

How establishment proved.

The repeated issuance of an annual license to the operator of a ferry by the clerk of the county court is sufficient to make out a prima facie case of establishment by the county court of a ferry. Finley v. Shemwell (1910) 94 Ark. 190, 126 S. W. 717.

Authority to establish on boundary waters.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 518; also note in 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 574.

The St. John river being an international river and, under the terms of the Ashburton treaty, free alike to citizens of each country, it is not in the power of Canada or of the state of Maine to grant a license which would entitle the licensee to ferry from Canada to the United States and vice versa, to the exclusion of any person else who might choose to do so. Ex Parte Dufour (1893) 32 N. B. 357.

The fact that ferry rates over a boundary stream were fixed by the state of incorporation of the ferry company did not preclude the state on the other side of such stream from establishing, L.R.A.1916D.

subject to the paramount authority of Congress, the rates to be charged for ferriage from its own shore to the shore of the other state. Port Richmond & B. P. Ferry Co. v. Hudson County (1914) 234 U. S. 317, 58 L. ed. 1330, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 821.

State regulation of the rates to be charged for a ticket for a round trip over an interstate ferry from the shore of such state to the shore of another state and return is valid until Congress undertakes to regulate such rates, where the ferry company is not thereby required to issue round-trip tickets at its office within the state. (U. S.) Ibid.

The state of Mississippi may grant the right to operate a ferry across the Mississippi river to a point on the Louisiana shore, and such grant is not an interference with the power to regulate commerce among the states delegated to Congress by the Federal Constitution. Marshall v. Grimes (1866) 41 Miss. 27.

And in State v. Hudson County (1851) 23 N. J. L. 206, it was held that the power to regulate ferries between two states is vested in the states.

Power of municipality to establish and regulate.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 521.

The power to establish and permit the operation of all ferries using any part of the water front of the city of greater New York is by the greater New York Charter, § 83, exclusively vested in the city, and it so far as concerns the territorial water rights of the city impliedly repeals § 270 of the Highway Law, which empowers county courts and city courts to grant licenses for keeping ferries in the respective counties and cities. New York v. New Jersey & S. I. Ferry Co. (1915) 92 Misc. 40, 155 N. Y. Supp. 937.

A charter of a city which conferred upon its board of trustees the power "to grant licenses and franchises in the manner provided by law for boards of supervisors of counties for constructing, keeping, and taking tolls on roads, bridges, ferries, wharves, chutes, and piers within the limits of" such city, empowered the city to grant ferry licenses although, by general statutes then in force, the power to grant ferry licenses was vested in the boards of supervisors, as under the Constitution in force when such charter was granted special legislation was not forbidden, nor was the conferring of special powers upon municipalities by their charters, even when a general law upon the same subject-matter stood upon the statute books; and a provision in a subsequent Constitution forbidding local or special laws in the matter of "chartering or licensing ferries, bridges, or roads" was prospective, and did not operate to destroy the force of existing special laws. Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Lang (1911) 161 Cal. 672; 120 Pac. 421.

And Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Lang (Cal.) supra, was approved and followed in Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Solano Aquatic Club (1913) 165 Cal. 255, 131 Pac. 864, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1197, as to the power of the city to grant a ferry franchise.

Nor does the fact that one terminus of a ferry is upon territory owned by and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States in the least militate against the validity or legality of a franchise to operate a ferry granted by a city. Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Solano Aquatic Club (Cal.) supra. It may be conceded or declared, the court stated, that the United States government would have power to forbid the ferryboats from landing upon the island, but this would in no way affect the legality of the franchise.

But the general powers of a city to lay out, establish, and maintain highways, and to improve rivers, to widen and straighten their channels when adjoining the town, does not empower a city to maintain a ferry outside the city limits. Re Woolley (1913) 75 Wash. 206, 134 Pac. 825.

Who may exercise authority.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 523.

As part of a general plan to construct a system of highways throughout a county, and connect and extend them, the county has authority to establish free ferries, the court stating that a ferry is to be construed as a part of a highway and a necessary incident to the general plan. Reid v. Lincoln County (1912) 46 Mont. 31, 125 Pac. 429.

Under § 6 of chapter 448 of the statute of 1899, as read into § 14 of chapter 448 of the same statute, the Joint Board of Public Service Commissioners and Harbor and Land Commissioners has power to establish a suitable temporary ferry over the Cape Cod canal. Bourne v. Joint Board (1915) 221 Mass. 293, 108 N. E. 941.

A permit granted by the United States government to one to land his launches at the government floats at times and under circumstances which will not interfere with the government's L.R.A.1916D.

use of those floats, which permit, the government stated, it would revoke if it be declared to be inconsistent with its contracts with the owner of a ferry and an interference with the latter's franchise, is not a license paramount to a state license granted to operate a ferry. Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Solano Aquatic Club (Cal.) supra.

Restrictions on exercise of authority.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 524.

An act granting a special franchise and providing that it "shall be unlawful for any person to establish any other ferry within 1½ miles" was held in Re Spease Ferry (1905) 138 N. C. 219, 50 S. E. 625, to be a restriction upon the general power conferred upon the county commissioners under the Code "to appoint and settle ferries," and so the county commissioners had no authority to grant a ferry privilege within said prohibited distance.

The limitation upon the power of a city to grant ferry franchises whose termini shall be within the limits of the city is not abused nor violated by reason of the fact that one terminus is upon land over which the United States admittedly exercises exclusive jurisdiction. Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Lang, and Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Solano Aquatic Club (Cal.) supra.

Riparian owner as entitled to ferry privileges.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 528.

The right to keep a public ferry for toll is a franchise which cannot be exercised without legislative authority, and so, therefore, is not appurtenant to the land of the riparian owner. Graham v. Caperton (1912) 176 Ala. 116, 57 So. 741.

A ferry privilege may be granted to one of several tenants in common of land bordering on a river. Guinn v. Eaves (1906) 117 Tenn. 524, 101 S. W. 1154.

—priorities.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 531.

The Code provision that preference for a ferry franchise be given to the owner of land on both sides of a river is not applicable where the possessor of such franchise has a landing on one side of the river at the foot of a public road which passes through his land, and the landing on the opposite shore is on the land of another, although he may be the owner of land on both sides of the stream, so as to give him preference over the possessor of a ferry franchise who owns land on one side only but has his landing on his own land. Guinn v. Eaves (Tenn.) supra.

Right to landings.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 535.

To form a foundation for a proceeding to obtain a license for a ferry, the petitioner is the owner of the land at the point of embarkation of the proposed ferry, or he must, if not such owner, bring himself within the exception of the statute that the landing place is at the end of a street in an incorporated city or town, or that the owner of the land has neglected to apply for a license; and the latter exception should be coupled with proof that the landowner has been served with notice in writing of the proposed application. Dean v. Washington Nav. Co. (1911) 59 Or. 91, 115 Pac. 284.

—on opposite shore.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 536.

Under a statute providing that a landowner on one side of the river shall have the privilege of a public ferry from his own shore, with the privilege of landing his boat and passengers on the opposite shore, and making the landing and road up said opposite bank, and keeping the same at all times in good repair and condition for ascending and descending, one operating a ferry from his own land has the right to land on the opposite shore only where the public have a right to land, that is, at a public road or other highway, and has no right to tie the end of his ferry cable to the land of another. Lake v. Combs (1907) 84 Ark. 21, 104 S. W. 544, 1094.

Exclusive ferry franchises.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 538-540.

In Green v. Ivey (1903) 45 Fla. 338, 33 So. 711, it was held that the county commissioners had no authority under statute to grant an exclusive ferry franchise, but that they had discretionary powers as to the necessity for more than one ferry at any point.

A statute which forbids the erection and operation of a second toll bridge or ferry within 1 mile above or below a regularly established ferry, unless public convenience renders necessary the franchise for a second ferry, is no invasion of private rights, no bestowal of monopolistic special privileges, no interference with the free right of navigation. Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Solano Aquatic Club (1913) 165 Cal. 255, 131 Pac. 864, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1197. The court stated that ferries are established primarily for the convenience of the people. It is the duty of the government which has thus invited private capital to aid in the comforts and conveniences of its citizens, to safeguard the rights which it had bestowed, and to see that the enjoyment of those rights is coextensive with the grant of them.

Regulation and supervision.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 542.

Congress under its maritime powers has authority to subject steam ferryboats to legislation enacted for the purpose of protecting passengers and crews, although such ferryboats are not engaged in interstate commerce, where they navigate waters of the United States which are common highways of commerce. The Nassau (1911) 110 C. C. A. 184, 188 Fed. 46.

A state may fix reasonable rates for ferriage from its shore to the shore of another state, over a boundary stream, until Congress undertakes to regulate such rates. Port Richmond & B. P. Ferry Co. v. Hudson County (1914) 234 U. S. 317, 58 L. ed. 1330, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 821.

Right to transfer of ferry franchise.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 543.

A ferry franchise may be voluntarily transferred. Evans v. Kroutinger (1903) 9 Idaho, 153, 72 Pac. 882, 2 Ann. Cas. 691.

Interference with rights of ferryman.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 546-548. Also see note in 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 462, on "What amounts to interference with ferry franchise."

There is an infringement of a ferry franchise where employees combined ostensibly to form an aquatic club, but in reality to operate a ferry to carry them back and forth from their work. Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Solano Aquatic Club (Cal.) supra.

And the rights of a landowner who has obtained a license to establish a ferry after the abandonment of ferry privileges by another landowner, and has preserved his rights from year to year by procuring a renewal of such license, are infringed by an attempt by such other landowner to re-exercise ferry rights. Finley v. Shemwell (1910) 94 Ark. 190, 126 S. W. 717.

Remedy for violation of right—who entitled to.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 549.

A grantee of a ferry privilege who has not used or plied a ferry such as was stipulated for in the grant is not entitled to an injunction to restrain the operation of a ferry by another. Gibson v. Garvie (1912) — B. O. —, 7 D. L. R. 933.

And one who is operating a ferry without a license will not be permitted to attack the method adopted by a city granting a ferry license, where the city had power to grant such license. Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Lang (1911) 161 Cal. 672, 120 Pac. 421.

Also one who fails to give adequate accommodations, and whose ferryboat is so out of repair that it is dangerous to attempt to cross on it, is not in a position to obtain equitable relief restraining others from operating a ferry. Crane v. Jackson (1915) 116 Ark. 102, 172 S. W. 890.

But one legally licensed to operate a ferry, although the right is not exclusive, is entitled to an injunction to prevent an infringement upon his ferry rights by any person or persons not legally licensed to operate a ferry. Green v. Ivey (1903) 45 Fla. 338, 33 So. 711.

And one who has obtained a license to establish a ferry after the abandonment of ferry rights by another landowner is entitled to equitable relief upon an attempt by such other landowner to re-establish his ferry rights, and although he has obtained a license therefor from the county court. Finley v. Shemwell (Ark.) supra.

So, also, one who is entitled to an ancient ferry may have an injunction restraining the setting up of another ferry near by, where the evidence shows that no new traffic has arisen which could justify the setting up of another ferry, and this although the ancient ferry is a point to point, and not a vil to vil, ferry. Dysart v. Hammerton [1914] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 822, 83 L. J. Ch. N. S. 530, 110 L. T. N. S. 879, 78 J. P. 297, 30 Times L. R. 379, 58 Sol. Jo. 378, 12 L. G. R. 653; General Estates Co. v. Beaver [1914] 3 K. B. 918, 30 Times L. R. 634, 12 L. G. R. 1146.

One whose ferry privilege has been infringed is not bound by the order of the county court granting a license to another, but may invoke the aid of a court of chancery for redress. Crane v. Jackson (Ark.) supra.
L.R.A.1916D.

—action at law.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 551.

In Maine the proprietor of a ferry has no common-law remedy against those who, without right, interfere with his profits. Peru v. Barrett (1905) 100 Me. 213, 70 L. R. A. 567, 109 Am. St. Rep. 494, 60 Atl. 968.

—equitable remedy.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 552.

One who has abandoned his ferry rights will be enjoined from infringing the rights of another who has obtained a license to establish a ferry, so long as such latter ferry is not abandoned by the owner or discontinued by order of the county court. Finley v. Shemwell (Ark.) supra.

And where it is necessary to have a city license to operate a ferry, one who is operating a ferry without such license will be enjoined from so operating it, although he has a license from the county court. Cauble v. Craig (1902) 94 Mo. App. 675, 69 S. W. 49.

Extinguishment of ferry rights.

For other cases, see note in 59 L.R.A. 554.

Ferry rights are not lost by a sale or lease without consent of the county as required by statute. They are revokable, but only by the county in direct proceedings brought for that purpose. Willis v. Calhoun (1911) 145 Ky. 95, 140 S. W. 199.

Nor are perpetual ferry rights granted by two counties on opposite sides of the river abandoned by the owner of such rights having them recognized by and recorded in a new county formed from portions of those two counties which contained the ferry. (Ky.) Ibid.

But a ferry franchise, while not actually abandoned, will be considered as temporarily abandoned so as to preclude the owner thereof from obtaining equitable relief against infringement of his rights, where, by failing to give adequate accommodations or because his ferryboat is so out of repair it is dangerous to attempt to cross on it, travelers must of necessity make some other provision for crossing. Crane v. Jackson (Ark.) supra.

J. H. B.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

RICHARD ELLINGHOUSE, Appt.,

v.

AJAX LIVE STOCK COMPANY, Resp't.

(51 Mont. 275, 152 Pac. 481.)

Appeal — defective complaints — aided by evidence.

1. A complaint to recover damages from a property owner by one employed by a person contracting to do work for him, because of negligence of servants of the property owner who are assisting in the work, will not, when attacked for the first time on appeal, be held insufficient although it fails to show the relation of the contractor to defendant or the capacity in which the negligent servants are acting, if such facts appear in the evidence, since the complaint will be assumed to have been amended to comply with the evidence.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. j, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Negligence — concurrent — liability.

2. A property owner is not absolved from liability for injury to the servant of an independent contractor to which the negligence of his own servants contributed, by the fact that negligence of the contractor's servants also contributed to the injury.

For other cases, see Negligence, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Master and servant — fellow servant — employee of owner and contractor.

3. The fellow servant doctrine will not prevent recovery by an employee of an independent contractor against the property owner for injuries caused by the negligence of his servants, although they are assisting in the performance of the work upon which he is engaged.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. e, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — negligence of servant — scope of employment.

4. The owner of a ranch is liable for injury to the employee of one contracting to saw wood for him by the negligence of his foreman, who, in order to get the wood cut in proper lengths, displaces one of the contractor's servants and attempts to feed the wood to the saw himself, although he is not in so doing acting under the orders of the ranch owner.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, III. a, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trial — jury — liable for act of servants.

5. An action for personal injuries caused by defendant's servants must be submitted to the jury where the evidence justifies a prima facie conclusion that the servants were, at the time their negligence caused the injuries, acting within the line of their employment.

For other cases, see Trial, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 13, 1915.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Beaverhead County granting defendant's motion for nonsuit in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McCaffery & Tyler, Robison & Gilbert, and Maury, Templeman, & Davies, for appellant:

The relationship between the plaintiff and the person who injured him being that of servant of independent contractor and servant of proprietor, the two cannot be considered as, or held to be, fellow serv-

4 Thomp. Neg., § 4997; United States ants.

Board & Paper Co. v. Landers, — Ind. App. —, 92 N. E. 203.

If it could be said under the evidence that the operation of the wood saw at the time plaintiff was injured was a joint operation of the same by the plaintiff's master and the master of the negligent servant, Mr. Louk, the defendant would be liable for the latter's negligence.

4 Thomp. Neg. §§ 5002, 5003.

The relation of master and servant must exist between the plaintiff and the defendant before the defense of fellow servant can be available to the defendant.

4 Labatt, Mast. & S. §§ 1414, 1418; 26 Cyc. 1283.

Louk, at the time of the injury, was acting "within the scope of his employment."

6 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 2226; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 6th ed. §§ 146, 147, 158, 159; Barmore v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 85 Miss. 426, 70 L.R.A. 627, 38 So. 210, 3 Ann. Cas. 594; Conchin v. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. 13 Ariz. 259, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 88, 108 Pac. 260; Kelly v. Tyra, 103 Minn. 176, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 334, 114 N. W. 750, 115 N. W. 636; 1 Thomp. Neg. § 613; Coggin v. Central R. Co. 62 Ga. 685, 35 Am. Rep. 132; The Slingsby, 57 C. C. A. 52, 120 Fed. 748; The Gladestry, 63 C. C. A. 198, 128 Fed. 591.

Messrs. Rodgers & Gilbert, for respondent:

The true test in ascertaining who is responsible for a servant's negligence is to ascertain who directs the movements of the person committing the injury.

Higgins v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 156 N. Y.

Note. — For amendment of pleadings in appellate court to conform to proof, see annotation following this case, post, 841. L.R.A.1916D.

75, 66 Am. St. Rep. 537, 50 N. E. 500, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 320.

Louk, as well as all others engaged in sawing the wood, was at the time of the accident complained of a servant of the contractors.

Pendelton v. The Martin Kalbfleisch, 5 C. C. A. 120, 14 U. S. App. 187, 55 Fed. 336; Samuelian v. American Tool & Mach. Co. 168 Mass. 12, 46 N. E. 98, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 447; Parkhurst v. Swift, 31 Ind. App. 521, 68 N. E. 620; Higgins v. Western U. Teleg. Co. supra; Wyllie v. Palmer, 137 N. Y. 248, 19 L.R.A. 285, 33 N. E. 381.

It is incumbent upon plaintiff to prove his cause of action substantially as alleged, and if he has not done so he has no case to submit to the jury.

Thurman v. Pittsburg & M. Copper Co. 41 Mont. 141, 108 Pac. 688; Knuckey v. Butte Electric R. Co. 41 Mont. 314, 109 Pac. 979; Bracey v. Northwestern Improv. Co. 41 Mont. 338, 137 Am. St. Rep. 738, 109 Pac. 706; Forsell v. Pittsburgh & M. Copper Co. 38 Mont. 403, 100 Pac. 218; Flaherty v. Butte Electric R. Co. 40 Mont. 454, 135 Am. St. Rep. 630, 107 Pac. 416.

If, from the evidence, it cannot be said that plaintiff has established the cause of his injury as alleged, or if it can be said that it is equally probable that the cause was some other than that alleged, the plaintiff has failed to sustain the burden of proof.

Winnicott v. Orman, 39 Mont. 339, 102 Pac. 570; Andree v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. 47 Mont. 554, 138 Pac. 1090.

It is necessary that the complaint show a duty existing upon the part of defendant, and that duty cannot be shown by mere conclusions of law, but the facts must be stated.

Faris v. Hoberg, 134 Ind. 269, 39 Am. St. Rep. 261, 33 N. E. 1028; Thiele v. McManus, 3 Ind. App. 132, 28 N. E. 327; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Clausen, 173 Ill. 100, 50 N. E. 680; Angus v. Lee, 40 Ill. App. 304; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. James, 69 Ill. App. 609, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 700.

Brantly, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff brought this action for damages for the loss of his right hand through the alleged negligence of the defendant. At the trial the court sustained defendant's motion for nonsuit. Judgment was entered accordingly. Plaintiff has appealed.

At the time of the accident plaintiff, with four others, was employed by C. H. Strowbridge and Fred H. Holman in the operation of an ordinary circular wood saw which was propelled by steam. Strowbridge and Holman had contracted with the defendant, L.R.A.1916D.

through Jacob Louk, the foreman in charge of the ranch, to saw a quantity of logs into lengths rendering them suitable for use as stovewood on defendant's ranch. They were to furnish their own machine and servants, and to receive $2.50 per hour. Strowbridge was not present. Holman was operating the machine. The logs were passed from left to right. To plaintiff was assigned the duty of operating the saw, which required him, as a log was passed, to force the carriage back with his left hand to bring the log in contact with the saw, and at the same time to hold the log steady by placing his right hand on it, a few inches to the left of the saw. To one of the other employees was assigned the task of carrying away the lengths or blocks as fast as they were cut off. To the remaining three was assigned the task of bringing the logs up and putting them upon the carriage or table of the machine. One of them (Worcester) was required also to act as guard by standing at the left of plaintiff, and, besides assisting to place the logs upon the carriage, to pass them along or feed them to the saw. It was also his duty, when a log was being placed upon the carriage, to see that it was not thrust against the log upon which plaintiff was engaged, and thus to prevent the obstruction of his part of the work, and to guard him against the danger of having his right hand forced into contact with the saw. After the work had proceeded for a short time Louk voluntarily took the place of Worcester, saying, as he did so, that he wanted to do the feeding; that theretofore the wood had been cut too long; and that he wanted to see that it was cut short. On prior occasions Strowbridge and Holman had cut wood for defendant. Two other subordinate employees of the defendant were engaged with Strowbridge and Holman's employees in bringing up and placing logs upon the carriage. Whether they were doing this at the instance of Louk or not does not appear, except inferentially from the fact that they were in the employ of the defendant and Louk was its foreman. Holman had not requested their services, nor was he to pay them any compensation. A few minutes after Louk took the place of Worcester a log was thrust against the end of a short piece of another in which plaintiff was about to make the last cut. This forced plaintiff's hand upon the saw, with the result that it was so badly lacerated that amputation of it at the wrist was necessary. Holman and Strowbridge were equipped with help sufficient to enable them to carry out the contract without assistance from Louk and his subordinates. They therefore did not need any assistance. Plaintiff did not see Louk or either of his subordinates have hold of the log at the time he was hurt, because his attention was directed to the operation of the saw. Apart from displacing Worcester, Louk did not assume to control the conduct of the work, Holman continuing otherwise in control.

The complaint charges that while the plaintiff was engaged in the work of feeding the logs to the saw, under his employment aforesaid, the servants of the defendant negligently shoved against the log which plaintiff was feeding to the saw, another log which they were about to put upon the carriage, thus pushing the former and forcing plaintiff's hand upon the saw, whereby it was cut off at the wrist. The answer, besides denying all the allegations of the complaint alleges as special defenses that the plaintiff assumed the risk, and that the injury was caused by the negligence of his fellow servants. All the evidence tendered by plaintiff was admitted without objection.

At the outset we are met with the contention by counsel for the defendant that the complaint does not state a cause of action, and that, however meritorious the case disclosed by plaintiff's evidence, the judgment must be affirmed for this reason. The sufficiency of the complaint was not challenged in the trial court either by demurrer or by objection to the admission of evidence, and, though one of the grounds of the motion for nonsuit was that the pleadings are not sufficient to support a judgment, this ground was apparently not seriously urged upon the attention of the court. The order sustaining the motion is couched in general terms, but the court seems to have proceeded upon the theory that the evidence is insufficient to make a case for the jury.

It is well settled by the decisions of this court that the sufficiency of a complaint may be questioned for the first time on appeal, and that, if found fatally defective, a judgment rendered thereon for the plaintiff will be reversed. Foster v. Wilson, 5 Mont. 53, 2 Pac. 310; Tracy v. Harmon, 17 Mont. 465, 43 Pac. 500; Shober v. Blackford, 46 Mont. 194, 127 Pac. 329; Cole v. Helena Light & R. Co. 49 Mont. 443, 143 Pac. 974. These cases merely give force to the rule declared by the statute (Rev. Codes, § 6539) that a failure to question the sufficiency of a complaint by demurrer in the trial court does not amount to a waiver of the right to question it thereafter. When, however, the point is made in this court for the first time on appeal, the objection is regarded with disfavor, and every reasonable deduction will be drawn from the facts stated in order to uphold the pleading. So, also, will the pleading be held sufficient if the defect made the basis of the objection is not a matter going to the root of the cause of action, but is such as might have been remedied by an amendment. Again, though it be deficient in its omission to state a particular fact necessary to make out a cause of action, it will be deemed amended by the answer when the latter contains allegations which supply the omission (Wilson v. Harris, 21 Mont. 374, 54 Pac. 46), or assumes that the complaint contains the allegation in question (Lynch v. Bechtel, 19 Mont. 548, 48 Pac. 1112; Hefferlin v. Karlman, 29 Mont. 139, 74 Pac. 201; Stephens v. Conley, 48 Mont. 352, 138 Pac. 189, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 958). And when a trial has been had upon the evidence which has been introduced without objection, a judgment for plaintiff will not be reversed for a defective complaint, but the complaint will be regarded as having been amended in the trial court, if this is necessary to sustain the judgment. Moss v. Goodhart, 47 Mont. 257, 131 Pac. 1071. When, under the same condition of the case, the judgment is for the defendant, whether on motion for nonsuit or on the merits, the point that the complaint is not sufficient will not be entertained, but the case will be considered on the merits and disposed of as if the proper amendment had been made upon request of plaintiff or by order of the trial court, unless the defect is of such a character that it cannot be removed by an amendment. Post v. Liberty, 45 Mont. 1, 121 Pac. 475; Lackman v. Simpson, 46 Mont. 518, 129 Pac. 325. The rule applies also to the answer of the defendant. Lackman v. Simpson, supra.

Of course, if the sufficiency of the pleading has been challenged in the trial court by appropriate method, the ruling thereon properly presents a question for consideration by this court, and it will review the action of the trial court thereon and determine the rights of the parties accordingly, subject to the injunction found in § 6593 of the Revised Codes: "The court must, in every stage of an action, disregard any error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties, and no judgment shall be reversed or affected by reason of such error or defect."

It is elementary that, when a plaintiff seeks recovery for actionable negligence, his complaint must allege facts showing these three elements: (1) That the defendant was under a legal duty to protect him from the injury of which he complains; (2) that the defendant failed to perform this duty; and (3) that the injury was proximately caused by defendant's delinquency. All of these elements combined constitute the cause of action; and if the complaint fails to disclose, directly or by fair inference from the facts alleged, the presence of all of them, it is insufficient, for it fails to state the facts constituting a cause of action. The rule, broadly stated, has application only to cases in which seasonable attack has been made upon the pleading in the trial court. If this is not done, and the defendant—as was the case here—allows the plaintiff to submit the case to a trial without objection, and permits him to establish by his evidence the presence of all the elements of his cause of action which the complaint shadows forth, but fails to state as definitely as it might have done, even the trial court should not nonsuit plaintiff because of the defective pleading, but direct it to be amended so as to remove the defect. As already said, when the case reaches this court, it will be presumed that the trial court has done its duty, and the defect will be disregarded. We have referred to the requirements to be observed in formulating a complaint in an action for wrong caused by negligence because the case at bar is one of that kind. The rule applies as well to any other kind of action.

We shall not quote the complaint in extenso. It is defective in that it does not state what was the relation of the defendant to Strowbridge and Holman. It does not allege that they were sawing wood for the defendant, or that they were upon its premises; nor does it allege, except by way of conclusion, that Louk and his two subordinates were defendant's servants, or were not servants of Strowbridge and Holman. In the absence of a statement of facts disclosing the relation existing between the defendant and Strowbridge and Holman, and the capacity in which Louk and his subordinates were acting, a liability on the part of the defendant is not made apparent, because it does not appear that defendant owed any duty to plaintiff.

Under the rule of the cases cited supra, however, the question before us is not one of pleading, but one arising upon the pleading and evidence; in other words, whether the direction of nonsuit was proper is to be determined upon the pleading as aided by the evidence.

It appears from the above summary of the evidence that Strowbridge and Holman had an independent contract to saw a quantity of wood for the defendant, and were upon its premises for that purpose. They were furnishing their own employees, and needed no assistance. Louk, with his two subordinates, who inferentially acted under his direction, volunteered to assist in the accomplishment of the work. It does not appear whether Louk had hold of the log which pushed plaintiff's hand upon the saw, but, inasmuch as he had assumed to perform Worcester's duty, and this duty required him to assist in putting logs upon the carriage and to pass them to the saw, the fact that the injury occurred while he was engaged in doing this warrants the inference that he either alone or by the aid of his subordinates, in assisting the employees of Strowbridge and Holman in bringing up the log, negligently thrust it forward too rapidly, and thus caused the plaintiff's injury. That the employees of Strowbridge and Holman were negligent and their negligence concurred with that of defendant's servants would not exculpate the defendant. Freeman v. Sand Coulees Coal Co. 25 Mont. 194, 64 Pac. 347. The evidence is therefore sufficient to show prima facie that the injury was caused by Louk's negligence, and hence that he became personally liable. Whether this wrong is imputable to the defendant depends upon the further inquiry whether, by assuming the position he did, he became the fellow servant of the plaintiff for the time and, if not, he was acting within the scope of his employment by defendant.

We understand the accepted rule to be that the fellow servant doctrine has no application to a case in which the injury complained of was caused by the servant of a stranger to the common employment, even though such servant was at the time engaged in the same general operation as the injured servant. In such a case the injured servant will not be held to have assumed the risks incident to the negligence of the other, any more than he would the risks incident to the negligence of a stranger; and if the other at the time of the injury is acting within the general scope of his duty to his master, his master is liable under the rule of the maxim respondet superior. On this subject Mr. Labatt says: "In cases where a third person is sued for injuries caused by the negligence of his servants, it is considered that the fact of their having been at the time of the accident engaged in the same general operation as the injured servant is not a sufficient ground for putting him upon a footing different from that upon which any other stranger would stand in an action against the same defendant for injuries caused by the negligence of his servants. That is to say, as the mere general knowledge that the servants of a person with whom a stranger is brought into contact in the transaction of everyday life may act negligently has never been considered to involve the corollary that he accepted the risks of the situation, so the rule is now well settled, both in this country and in England, that 'unless the person sought to be rendered liable for the negligence of his servant can show that the person so seeking to make him liable was himself in his service, the defense of common employment is not open to him.' In brief, the doctrine of common employment 'applies only where the action is brought for an injury to a servant or agent against the principal by whom such servant was himself employed.' The rationale of this rule is that a defense which . . . is based upon the hypothesis that, as accessory to the contract of hiring, there is implied on the servant's part an agreement to assume the risk of being injured by the negligence of his coemployees, cannot properly be invoked where he is suing a person with whom he has no contractual relations." 4 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 1414.

That Louk and his subordinates were not the servants of Strowbridge and Holman is apparent. Louk's declared purpose at the time he displaced Worcester indicates this; for he took the place not merely to assist the work, but to see that it was done to meet his approval, thus indicating that he was not submitting himself to the control of Holman, and that he was assuming, for this purpose, to control the conduct of the work. Under the rule recognized by the authorities generally, he did not become the plaintiff's fellow servant; nor did his subordinates become such, for they were acting under his direction.

"The real test by which to determine whether a person is acting as the servant of another is to ascertain whether at the time the injury was inflicted he was subject to such person's orders and control and was liable to be discharged by him for disobedience of orders or misconduct." Wood, Mast. & S. § 317.

See also 4 Thomp. Neg. 4996; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 225; United States Board & Paper Co. v. Landers, — Ind. App. —, 92 N. E. 203; Union P. R. Co. v. Billeter, 28 Neb. 422, 44 N. W. 483.

"The rule quoted by the greatest number of adjudged cases is that all who serve a common master, work under the same control, derive authority and compensation from the same common source, and are engaged in the same general business, though it may be in different grades or departments of it, are fellow servants, who, under the rule under consideration, are deemed to take the risk of each other's negligence. It is said that subjection to control and direction by the same general master in the same common object, and not the fact that employees are paid by the same general master, is the test of fellow service." 4 Thomp. Neg. § 4917.

Under this test, Louk and his subordinates were acting upon his initiative, or else for the benefit of the defendant under their employment by it.

The servant of one master may temporarily enter the service of another and for the time become the servant of the other; as when the servant is lent by his master to the other for the particular employment and becomes subject to the control of the other. For anything done in that employment he becomes, for the time being, the servant of the person to whom he is lent, provided he has consented to be lent. Johnson v. Lindsay [1891] A. C. 371, 16 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 90, 65 L. T. N. S. 97, 40 Week. Rep. 405, 55 J. P. 644; Rourke v. White Moss Colliery Co. L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 205, 46 L. J. C. P. N. S. 283, 36 L. T. N. S. 49, 25 Week. Rep. 263; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Hardy, 59 N. J. L. 35, 34 Atl. 986; Delory v. Blodgett, 185 Mass. 126, 64 L.R.A. 114, 102 Am. St. Rep. 328, 69 N. E. 1078, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 581. The evidence in this case does not suggest that Louk and his subordinates were lent to Strowbridge and Holman by the defendant. So far as the evidence justifies any inference, it implies that for the time Louk was the alter ego of the defendant. Louk was therefore a stranger to the plaintiff. So, also, were his subordinates; and, since it appears that they were engaged with Louk in assisting in the bringing up and placing the logs in position to be sawed, they presumably contributed to his injury. But it would not affect the result if blame could not attach to them, but to Louk exclusively. All, however, were prima facie strangers to the plaintiff, and if it should be made to appear that any one of the three only caused his injury, this would be sufficient to fix liability upon him.

It remains, then, to inquire whether they were acting within the scope of their employment. In determining this question the inquiry is not, Was the servant at the particular time acting in obedience to the direction of the master? but, Was he acting in furtherance of his master's business? A servant may abandon his master's employment for the time to accomplish some purpose of his own. If in accomplishing this purpose he does an injury to another, his master is not liable; but a mere deviation from the master's directions with reference to the business in which he is employed is not an abandonment of his employment, and so long as he is doing some act in furtherance thereof he will be regarded as acting within its scope, and the master will not be excused on the ground that he did not authorize the particular act, or that he had no knowledge of it, or that in doing it the servant exceeded his authority, or, again, that he did it at a place to which his duty did not call him. Barmore v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 85 Miss. 426, 70 L.R.A. 627, 38 So. 210, 3 Ann. Cas. 594; Geraty v. National Ice Co. 16 App. Div. 174, 44 N. Y.

Supp. 659, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 624; Higgins v. Watervliet Turnp. & R. Co., 46 N. Y. 23, 7 Am. Rep. 293; Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 697, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 536; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. McKee, 99 Ind. 519, 50 Am. Rep. 102.

"The rationale of the master's liability for tortious acts which 'come within the scope of the servant's general duty, although in doing the particular act complained of he may have exceeded his authority,' is that, in most cases where a duty is to be performed or an act done by a servant, some discretion must be vested in him to whom the doing of it is committed; and, where this is so, the master cannot enjoy the benefit of his servant's acts which involve this discretion without being responsible for their result. The rule is held especially applicable 'where the master is absent, and the duty to be performed vicariously is general in character, as in the case of conductors of public vehicles, railway servants, and the like.'" 6 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 6868.

Louk was in charge of the ranch. He had let the contract for the work, and it seems clear that it was his duty to see that it was properly done without loss of time.

As the solution of the question turns in each case upon the proper inference to be drawn from the facts, if they present no conflict and furnish the basis for but a single inference, and that favorable to the master, his freedom from liability is to be determined by the court as a question of law. If there is a conflict in the evidence, or more than one inference may be drawn from it, the liability of the master is an issue to be determined by the jury. 6 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 2275.

We are of the opinion that the evidence here justifies a prima facie conclusion that Louk and his subordinates were within the line of their employment as servants of defendant, and thus a case was made for the jury.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for trial on the merits.

Sanner, J., concurs.

Holloway, J.: I concur in the result reached above. As I understand the general rule announced in Moss v. Goodhart and Lackman v. Simpson, to which reference is made, it is that, when a cause has been tried, and evidence has been admitted without objection which tends to prove a material fact which should have been pleaded, but was not, the deficient pleading will be deemed to have been amended to conform to such proof.

Annotation—Amendment of pleadings in appellate court to conform to proof.

I. Introduction, 841.

II. General rules and their limitations:

- a. Power of appellate court as to amendments, 842.
- b. Rule allowing amendments, 843.
- c. Limitations of rule, in general, 849.
- d. Objections erroneously overruled in lower court:
  1. In general, 854.
  2. Not affecting merits, 858.
- e. Amendments to reverse judgment, 861.

III. Applications:

- a. In general, 862.
- b. Recovery exceeding amount claimed, 877.

I. Introduction.

Questions as to amendments of the pleadings in particular proceedings,<sup>1</sup> the relation of new pleadings to statutes of limitations,<sup>2</sup> and the right to amend the pleadings after final decision on appeal,<sup>3</sup> have been considered in other notes.

The present note includes, in general, only cases heard on the record, and not those tried de novo in the appellate court. It is confined to such cases as treat the matter from the standpoint of amendment of the pleadings, and does not include generally that large class of cases which apparently reach a substantially similar result on other grounds, as that of waiver, curing of defects by verdict and judgment, or immateriality of the variance. The question of presumption that an amendment has been in fact made below is beyond the scope of the note. The note also does not cover the question of amendment of the pleadings as to jurisdiction;<sup>4</sup> and does not treat exhaustively the question of amendment on appeal as to parties, this being a distinct class in which the requested amendments frequently cannot be regarded as merely for the purpose of conforming the pleadings to the proof. Some cases of this kind are, however, included for purposes of illustration.

<sup>1</sup> As to relation of new pleadings to statutes of limitation, see Index to L.R.A. Notes, and Supplemental Index, Limitation of actions, § 64.

<sup>2</sup> See note to Todd v. Bettingen, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 263.

<sup>1</sup> Generally, as to amendment of pleadings, see Index to L.R.A. Notes, and Supplemental Index, Pleadings, §§ 10, 11. L.R.A.1916D.

The note does not include the question of review by the appellate court of the granting or refusing of amendments by the trial court, and it does not include generally cases in which the appellate court directed or authorized the allowance of an amendment by the lower court on proper terms, and remanded the case for further proceedings.

The term "proof" as used in the title of the note has been liberally construed, so that the note has a broader scope than the mere question of amendments of the pleadings to conform to evidence, strictly speaking, which is introduced on the trial, and includes cases generally which deal with the question of amendments of the pleadings on appeal to conform to the facts, whether they appear in the evidence, the pleadings of the adverse party, or are admitted by the parties.

In most of the cases cited in the note the appellate court has deemed the amendment made, and has not apparently required an actual amendment of the pleadings. It has been said<sup>5</sup> that the general rule in respect to statutes of amendment and jeofails is that the amendment need not in point of fact be made, but that the benefit of the statute is obtained by the court's overlooking the exception or considering the amendment as made. Whether the amendment is actually made seems to depend largely on the local practice, an actual amendment being apparently made in some jurisdictions. But generally the appellate court has apparently considered it as immaterial whether the amendment was actually made or was merely regarded as made, frequently stating the matter in the alternative that it would permit an amendment or regard it as made. In a New York case,<sup>6</sup> however, it was considered that, although the variance between the pleadings and the proof might be immaterial, an amendment of the pleadings was proper for the purpose of securing certainty and harmony in the record.

II. General rules and their limitations.

a. Power of appellate court as to amendments.

"The power of amendment is incidental to the exercise of all judicial power. . . . So far as the mere power to amend is concerned, the statutes of amendment are only declaratory of the common law."<sup>7</sup> The Federal Supreme Court<sup>8</sup> has observed that there is nothing in the nature of an appellate jurisdiction proceeding, according to the common law, which forbids the granting of amendments. The subject of amendments of pleadings is controlled largely by statutes,<sup>9</sup> it being provided in most jurisdictions having the Code procedure that the

<sup>4</sup>As to amendment of complaint in suit for divorce or separation, so as to show residence or domicile, see note to Holton v. Holton, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 779. See also note 51, infra.

<sup>5</sup>Eakin v. Burger (1853) 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 417. The rule laid down in this case, that amendments which the court is authorized to make need not in fact be made, but will be considered as made, was approved in McBee v. Petty (1866) 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 178, this being, however, a case involving amendments of the summons. The rule was also approved in Beeler v. Huddleston (1866) 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 201, involving an amendment of a writ of attachment.

In Canavan v. Canavan (1913) 17 N. M. 503, 131 Pac. 493, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1064, the court, in holding that a complaint in an action for divorce which failed to allege the residence of the plaintiff necessary to confer jurisdiction would be considered amended on appeal to conform to proof received without objection showing this fact, stated that it assumed the actual amendment need not be made, but the complaint would be treated as amended. L.R.A.1916D.

<sup>6</sup>Clark v. Dales (1855) 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 42. The court said that "whether the amendment should be ordered at general term and without formal notice of motion for that purpose, or on notice as a special motion, is a question of practice, not entirely settled. . . . In a case like the present, where the amendment is only to conform the pleading to the facts specifically found by the court, and where the record furnishes the only grounds for and against the amendment, a motion is quite unnecessary.

<sup>7</sup>1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. pp. 508, 509.

<sup>8</sup>Kennedy v. Bank of Georgia (1850) 8 How. (U. S.) 586, 12 L. ed. 1209. To a similar effect, see Anonymous (1812) 1 Gall. 22, Fed. Cas. No. 444. It was said also in the former case that the section of the judiciary act of 1789 allowing amendments was sufficiently comprehensive to embrace cases of appellate as well as original jurisdiction.

<sup>9</sup>31 Cyc. 360.

court may, either before or after judgment, on such terms as may seem proper, permit the amendment of any pleading by adding or striking out the name of any party, by correcting a mistake in the name of any party, or a mistake in any other respect, or, when the amendment does not change substantially the claim or defense, by conforming the pleadings to the facts proved; also that the courts may, in every stage of the action, disregard any error or defect in the pleadings which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties; that no variance between the allegations in a pleading and the proof shall be deemed material unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice, and that whenever it shall appear that a party has been misled the court may order the pleading to be amended on such terms as may be just. These statutory provisions have been regarded as applying to amendments in the appellate court as well as in the trial court, no question generally being raised in this regard. It has been intimated, however, that while the statutes of amendments are liberally construed when relief under them is sought in the trial courts, they will be more strictly construed when their aid is sought in the appellate courts.<sup>9</sup>

As to the English practice, it is stated in Laws of England (Halsbury)<sup>10</sup> regarding amendments of the pleadings and other matters in the record, that an amendment may be allowed at any stage of the proceedings, not only before, but at and even after, trial, and after judgment, and on or after appeal.<sup>11</sup>

b. Rule allowing amendments.

The appellate courts have been liberal in allowing an amendment of the pleadings or in regarding the amendment as made, to support the judgment, where the amendment is of such a nature that it should have been allowed by the lower court upon request, and substantial justice would be promoted by such procedure. Under these circumstances, it is held generally that the judgment will not be reversed because of defects or omissions in the pleadings which are supplied by the proof or the pleadings of the adverse party, or because of a variance between the pleadings and the proof, if the sufficiency of the pleadings was not properly challenged in the lower court, or the evidence was introduced without objection, or the defect or variance appears clearly not to have affected the substantial rights of the parties; but the pleadings may be amended in the appellate court to support the judgment, if necessary, or the amendment will be deemed made.<sup>12</sup> The rule has become

<sup>9</sup> Peterson v. Lincoln County (1912) 92 Neb. 167, 188 N. W. 122, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1309.

Attention is called in this connection to the rule laid down in Todd v. Bettingen (1907) 102 Minn. 260, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 263, 113 N. W. 906, on facts, however, not within the scope of the note, that "liberality in allowing amendments to pleadings is greatest in the early stages of a lawsuit, decreases as it progresses, and changes to a strictness ordinarily amounting to a prohibition after the matters litigated have received the normally final sanction of an adjudication by the trial court, affirmed on appeal by the court of last resort."

<sup>10</sup> Vol. 23, p. 140.

<sup>11</sup> In Montreal v. Hogan (1900) 31 Can. S. C. 1, the court said: "The allegations and conclusions of the declaration, as it reads now, are undoubtedly deficient, but we order such amendments to be made thereto 'as are necessary' (to use the express words of § 63 of the supreme court act) 'for the purpose of determining the real controversy between the parties as disclosed by the pleadings and evidence.'"

The English and Canadian cases, so far as they clearly appear in point, will be found in the appropriate subdivisions of the note.

<sup>12</sup> See also cases cited elsewhere in the L.R.A.1916D.

annotation under more specific rules and applications thereof.

Ala.—Boddie v. Ely (1830) 3 Stew. 182; Thompson v. Pierce (1831) 3 Stew. 427.
Ark.—Dorris v. Grace (1866) 24 Ark. 326; Hanks v. Harris (1874) 29 Ark. 323; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Harper (1884) 44 Ark. 524; Healy v. Conner (1883) 40 Ark. 352; Sorrels v. Self (1884) 43 Ark. 451; Caldwell v. Meshew (1890) 53 Ark. 263, 13 S. W. 761; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Triplett (1891) 54 Ark. 289, 11 L.R.A. 773, 15 S. W. 831, 16 S. W. 266; Texarkana Gas & E. L. Co. v. Orr (1894) 59 Ark. 215, 43 Am. St. Rep. 30, 27 S. W. 66; Davis v. Goodman (1896) 62 Ark. 262, 35 S. W. 231; Shattuck v. Byford (1896) 62 Ark. 431, 35 S. W. 1107; Young v. Stevenson (1905) 75 Ark. 181, 86 S. W. 1000; Waterman v. Irby (1905) 76 Ark. 551, 89 S. W. 844; Bynum v. Brady (1907) 82 Ark. 603, 100 S. W. 66; Roach v. Richardson (1907) 84 Ark. 37, 104 S. W. 538; Kahn v. Metz (1908) 88 Ark. 363, 114 S. W. 911; Griffin v. Anderson Tully Co. (1909) 91 Ark. 292, 134 Am. St. Rep. 73, 121 S. W. 297; Rucker v. Martin (1910) 94 Ark. 365, 126 S. W. 1062; Pulaski Gaslight Co. v. McClintock (1911) 97 Ark. 576, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 825, 134 S. W. 1189, 1199; Citizens' F. Ins. Co. v. Lord (1911) 100 Ark. 212, 139 S. W. 1114; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. King

(1912) 104 Ark. 215, 148 S. W. 1035; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bird (1913) 106 Ark. 177, 153 S. W. 104; Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Campbell (1913) 106 Ark. 379, 153 S. W. 256; Simpson v. Blewitt (1913) 110 Ark. 87, 160 S. W. 1087; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Coy (1914) 113 Ark. 265, 168 S. W. 1106. See also Hurley v. Oliver (1909) 91 Ark. 427, 121 S. W. 920, approving rule.

Fla.—McKay v. Friebele (1858) 8 Fla. 21. See also Campbell v. Chaffee (1856) 6 Fla. 724, where an omission in the summons in an action of assumpsit, to state the damages, was regarded as cured by amendment on appeal.

Ill.—Law v. Fletcher (1876) 84 Ill. 45; American Ins. Co. v. Walston (1903) 111 Ill. App. 133. •

Ind.—Saxton v. State (1846) 8 Blackf. 200; Alden v. Barbour (1852) 3 Ind. 414; Lawrenceburgh Ferry Boat Co. v. Smith (1856) 7 Ind. 520; Langdon v. Bullock (1856) 8 Ind. 341; Warbritton v. Cameron (1858) 10 Ind. 302; Alvord v. Moffatt (1858) 10 Ind. 366; Harris v. Osenback (1859) 13 Ind. 445; Cleveland v. Roberts (1860) 14 Ind. 511; Case v. Wandel (1861) 16 Ind. 459; Fankboner v. Fankboner (1863) 20 Ind. 62; Torr v. Torr (1863) 20 Ind. 118; Hobbs v. Cowden (1863) 20 Ind. 310; McKinlay v. Shank (1865) 24 Ind. 258; Hull v. Green (1866) 26 Ind. 388; Lowry v. Dutton (1867) 28 Ind. 473; Barnes v. Bell (1872) 39 Ind. 328; Lucas v. Smith (1873) 42 Ind. 103; Hamilton v. Winterrowd (1873) 43 Ind. 393; Krewson v. Cloud (1873) 45 Ind. 273; Voris v. State (1874) 47 Ind. 345; Gimbel v. Stolte (1877) 59 Ind. 446; Randles v. Randles (1878) 63 Ind. 93; Fisher v. State (1878) 65 Ind. 51; Scheible v. Law (1878) 65 Ind. 332; Bristol Hydraulic Co. v. Boyer (1879) 67 Ind. 236; Davis v. Doherty (1879) 69 Ind. 11; Krutz v. Howard (1880) 70 Ind. 174; Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Hinesley (1881) 75 Ind. 1; Shryer v. Morgan (1881) 77 Ind. 479; Breedlove v. Bundy (1884) 96 Ind. 319; Hedrick v. D. M. Osborne & Co. (1884) 99 Ind. 143; Buchanan v. State (1886) 106 Ind. 251, 6 N. E. 614; Chaney v. State (1889) 118 Ind. 494, 21 N. E. 45; Watt v. Pittman (1890) 125 Ind. 168, 25 N. E. 191; Evansville & R. R. Co. v. Maddux (1893) 134 Ind. 571, 33 N. E. 345, 34 N. E. 511; Aedes v. Levi (1894) 137 Ind. 506, 37 N. E. 388; Taylor v. Calvert (1894) 138 Ind. 67, 37 N. E. 531; Browning v. Smith (1894) 139 Ind. 280, 37 N. E. 540 (obiter); Kohli v. Hall (1895) 141 Ind. 411, 40 N. E. 1060; Praigg v. Western Paving & Supply Co. (1895) 143 Ind. 358, 42 N. E. 750. See also South Bend v. Turner (1901) 156 Ind. 418, 54 L.R.A. 396, 83 Am. St. Rep. 200, 60 N. E. 271, where uncertainty or inadequacy of averment in complaint was deemed waived on appeal; Consumers' Paper Co. v. Eyer (1903) 160 Ind. 424, 66 N. E. 994; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Slaughter (1906) 167 Ind. 330, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 597, 119 Am. St. Rep. 503, 79 N. E. 186; Noble v. Davison (1911) 177 Ind. 19, 96 N. E. 325; L.R.A.1916D.

Crawfordsville Trust Co. v. Ramsey (1912) 178 Ind. 258, 98 N. E. 177; First Nat. Bank v. Peck (1913) 180 Ind. 649, 103 N. E. 643; Shedd v. American Maize Products Co. (1915) — Ind. App. —, 108 N. E. 610; Goodbub v. Sheller (1891) 3 Ind. App. 318, 29 N. E. 610; Perry County v. Lomax (1892) 5 Ind. App. 567, 32 N. E. 800; Steinke v. Bentley (1892) 6 Ind. App. 663, 34 N. E. 97; Clark v. Trueblood (1896) 16 Ind. App. 98, 44 N. E. 679; Robison v. Wolf (1901) 27 Ind. App. 683, 62 N. E. 74; Whittern v. Krick (1903) 31 Ind. App. 577, 68 N. E. 694; Richardson v. Stephenson (1906) 38 Ind. App. 339, 78 N. E. 256; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. State (1907) 40 Ind. App. 136, 81 N. E. 226; Radebaugh v. Scanlan (1907) 41 Ind. App. 109, 82 N. E. 544; Oil-Well Supply Co. v. Priddy (1908) 41 Ind. App. 200, 83 N. E. 623; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Warrum (1907) 42 Ind. App. 179, 82 N. E. 934, petition for rehearing denied in (1902) 42 Ind. App. 196, 84 N. E. 356; Indianapolis v. City Bond Co. (1908) 42 Ind. App. 470, 84 N. E. 20; Artell v. State (1909) 43 Ind. App. 131, 86 N. E. 999; Rooker v. Ludowici Celadon Co. (1913) 53 Ind. App. 275, 100 N. E. 469; Jann v. Standard Cement Co. (1913) 54 Ind. App. 221, 102 N. E. 872; Louisville & S. I. Traction Co. v. Lloyd (1914) — Ind. App. —, 105 N. E. 519; Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Gorman (1914) — Ind. App. —, 106 N. E. 897.

Kan.—Missouri Valley R. Co. v. Caldwell (1871) 8 Kan. 244; Pape v. Capitol Bank (1878) 20 Kan. 440, 27 Am. Rep. 183; Grandstaff v. Brown (1879) 23 Kan. 176; Sanford v. Willetts (1883) 29 Kan. 647; Wilcox & W. Organ Co. v. Lasley (1888) 40 Kan. 521, 20 Pac. 228; Tipton v. Warner (1892) 47 Kan. 606, 28 Pac. 712; Capitol Ins. Co. v. Bank of Pleasanton (1892) 48 Kan. 397, 29 Pac. 578; Carnahan v. Lloyd (1896) 4 Kan. App. 605, 46 Pac. 323. See also Smith v. Burnes (1871) 8 Kan. 197; Mitchell v. Milhoan (1873) 11 Kan. 617; and Hummer v. Lamphear (1884) 32 Kan. 439, 49 Am. Rep. 491, 4 Pac. 865, which reach a similar result, but do not treat the question particularly from the view point of amendments.

Ky.—Bolinger v. Hanson (1883) 5 Ky. L. Rep. 186; Louisville Trust Co. v. Louisville Fire Proof Constr. Co. (1900) 22 Ky. L. Rep. 433, 57 S. W. 506; Ruffner v. Ridley (1883) 81 Ky. 165.

Me.—Conway F. Ins. Co. v. Sewall (1867) 54 Me. 352; Cowan v. Bucksport (1903) 98 Me. 305, 56 Atl. 901; Wyman v. American Shoe Finding Co. (1909) 106 Me. 263, 76 Atl. 483; Cyr v. Landry (1915) — Me. —, 95 Atl. 883.

Mass.—Cleaves v. Lord (1854) 3 Gray, 66; Stone v. White (1857) 8 Gray, 589; Nichols v. Prince (1864) 8 Allen, 404; Peck v. Waters (1870) 104 Mass. 345; Whitney v. Houghton (1879) 127 Mass. 627; Arlington v. Lyons (1881) 131 Mass. 328; Batchelder v. Hutchinson (1894) 161 Mass. 462, 37 N. E. 452; Beers v. McGinnis (1906) 191 Mass. 279, 77 N. E. 768.

Mich.—Johnson v. Spear (1890) 82 Mich. 453, 46 N. W. 733; Wright v. Treat (1890) 83 Mich. 110, 47 N. W. 243; Warder, B. & G. Co. v. Gibbs (1892) 92 Mich. 29, 52 N. W. 73; Robinson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1895) 103 Mich. 607, 61 N. W. 1014; Lockwood v. Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1896) 108 Mich. 334, 66 N. W. 229; Thomas v. Ann Arbor R. Co. (1897) 114 Mich. 59, 72 N. W. 40; Smith v. Cowles (1900) 123 Mich. 4, 81 N. W. 916; Bean v. Bean (1910) 163 Mich. 379, 128 N. W. 413.

Minn.—Almich v. Downey (1891) 45 Minn. 460, 48 N. W. 197.

Mo.—Sawyer v. Wabash R. Co. (1900) 156 Mo. 468, 57 S. W. 108; Weissenfels v. Cable (1907) 208 Mo. 515, 106 S. W. 1028 (obiter); Shantz v. Shriner (1912) 167 Mo. App. 635, 150 S. W. 727 (amendment ordered by lower court, if not actually made, will be regarded as made).

Mont.—ELLINGHOUSE v. AJAX LIVE STOCK CO., ante, 836; Nyhart v. Pennington (1897) 20 Mont. 158, 50 Pac. 413; O'Brien v. Corra-Rock Island Min. Co. (1909) 40 Mont. 212, 105 Pac. 724; Post v. Liberty (1912) 45 Mont. 1, 121 Pac. 475; Lackman v. Simpson (1912) 46 Mont. 518, 129 Pac. 325; Moss v. Goodhart (1913) 47 Mont. 257, 131 Pac. 1071. See also other Montana cases cited in ELLINGHOUSE v. AJAX LIVE STOCK CO., which treat omissions in the complaint as supplied by the allegations in the answer.

Neb.—Ure v. Bunn (1902) 3 Neb. (Unof.) 61, 90 N. W. 904; Homan v. Steele (1886) 18 Neb. 652, 26 N. W. 472; Scott v. Spencer (1895) 44 Neb. 93, 62 N. W. 312.

N. J.—Price v. New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. (1865) 31 N. J. L. 229; Lomerson v. Hoffman (1855) 24 N. J. L. 674; Willis v. Fernald (1868) 33 N. J. L. 206; American Popular L. Ins. Co. v. Day (1876) 39 N. J. L. 89, 23 Am. Rep. 108; McAndrews v. Tippet (1876) 39 N. J. L. 105, 14 Mor. Min. Rep. 616; Blackford v. Plainfield Gaslight Co. (1881) 43 N. J. L. 438; Redstrake v. Cumberland Mut. F. Ins. Co. (1882) 44 N. J. L. 294; Ware v. Millville Mut. M. & F. Ins. Co. (1883) 45 N. J. L. 177; Finegan v. Moore (1884) 46 N. J. L. 602; Haabrouck v. Winkler (1886) 48 N. J. L. 431, 6 Atl. 22; Monmouth Park Asso. v. Warren (1893) 55 N. J. L. 598, 27 Atl. 932; Excelsior Electric Co. v. Sweet (1894) 57 N. J. L. 224, 30 Atl. 553; United States Pipe Line Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1898) 62 N. J. L. 254, 42 L.R.A. 572, 41 Atl. 759; O'Neill v. Leeds (1899) — N. J. L. —, 43 Atl. 650; Hanrahan v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. (1906) 72 N. J. L. 504, 63 Atl. 280; Miller v. West Jersey & S. R. Co. (1908) 76 N. J. L. 282, 70 Atl. 175 (obiter); Holt v. United Security L. Ins. & T. Co. (1909) 76 N. J. L. 585, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 691, 72 Atl. 301.

N. M.—Brown & M. Co. v. Gise (1907) 14 N. M. 282, 91 Pac. 716; Canavan v. Canavan (1913) 17 N. M. 503, 131 Pac. 493, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1064.

N. Y.—Bate v. Graham (1854) 11 N. Y. 237; Lounsbury v. Purdy (1859) 18 N. Y. L.R.A.1916D.

515; Bennett v. Judson (1860) 21 N. Y. 238; Pratt v. Hudson River R. Co. (1860) 21 N. Y. 305; Thompson v. Kessel (1864) 30 N. Y. 383; Sherman v. Parish (1873) 53 N. Y. 483; Tyng v. Commercial Warehouse Co. (1874) 58 N. Y. 308; Haddow v. Lundy (1874) 59 N. Y. 320; Reeder v. Sayre (1877) 70 N. Y. 180, 26 Am. Rep. 567; Harris v. Tumbidge (1880) 83 N. Y. 92, 38 Am. Rep. 398; Fallon v. Lawler (1886) 102 N. Y. 228, 6 N. E. 392; Frear v. Sweet (1890) 118 N. Y. 454, 23 N. E. 910; Union India Rubber Co. v. Tomlinson (1852) 1 E. D. Smith, 384; Parsons v. Suydam (1854) 3 E. D. Smith, 276; Douai v. Lutjens (1897) 21 App. Div. 254, 47 N. Y. Supp. 659, affirmed without opinion in (1900) 165 N. Y. 622, 59 N. E. 1121; Rifenburgh v. Ham (1899) 44 App. Div. 620, 60 N. Y. Supp. 124; Grifhahn v. Kreiger (1901) 62 App. Div. 413, 70 N. Y. Supp. 973, affirmed without opinion in (1902) 171 N. Y. 661, 64 N. E. 1121; Liekens v. Staten Island Midland R. Co. (1901) 64 App. Div. 327, 72 N. Y. Supp. 162; Leiser v. McDowell (1902) 69 App. Div. 444, 74 N. Y. Supp. 1021; Nelson v. Hatch (1902) 70 App. Div. 206, 75 N. Y. Supp. 389, affirmed without opinion in (1903) 174 N. Y. 546, 67 N. E. 1085; Harris v. Harris (1903) 83 App. Div. 123, 82 N. Y. Supp. 568; Johnson v. Albany (1903) 86 App. Div. 567, 83 N. Y. Supp. 1002; Martin v. Flahive (1906) 112 App. Div. 347, 98 N. Y. Supp. 577 (obiter); Palmieri v. S. Pearson & Son (1908) 128 App. Div. 231, 112 N. Y. Supp. 684; Jacobs v. Beyer (1910) 141 App. Div. 49, 125 N. Y. Supp. 597; Montague v. Hotel Gotham Co. (1912) 149 App. Div. 687, 133 N. Y. Supp. 954; Tripp v. Pulver (1874) 2 Hun, 511; Clemons v. Davis (1875) 4 Hun, 260; Tisdale v. Morgan (1876) 7 Hun, 583; Argersinger v. Levor (1889) 54 Hun, 613, 7 N. Y. Supp. 923; Listman v. Hickey (1892) 65 Hun, 8, 19 N. Y. Supp. 880; Tannenbaum v. Armeny (1894) 81 Hun, 581, 31 N. Y. Supp. 55; Drexel v. St. Amant (1891) 37 N. Y. S. R. 166, 13 N. Y. Supp. 774; Gombert v. Schane (1915) 154 N. Y. Supp. 114 (obiter); Rowland v. Sprouls (1893) 66 Hun, 635, 50 N. Y. S. R. 921, 21 N. Y. Supp. 895; Hooper v. Beecher (1887) 7 N. Y. S. R. 405; Davis v. Grand Rapids F. Ins. Co. (1895) 15 Misc. 263, 36 N. Y. Supp. 791, affirmed without opinion in (1898) 157 N. Y. 685, 51 N. E. 1090; Van Orden v. Morris (1897) 19 Misc. 497, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1108; Rein v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1905) 47 Misc. 675, 94 N. Y. Supp. 636; Alexander v. Harkin (1907) 53 Misc. 317, 103 N. Y. Supp. 56; Foote v. Roberts (1867) 7 Robt. 17; Hoffman v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1884) 18 Jones & S. 403; White v. Reed (1890) 26 Jones & S. 333, 11 N. Y. Supp. 575; Harrower v. Heath (1855) 19 Barb. 331; Clark v. Dales (1855) 20 Barb. 42; Hunter v. Hudson River Iron & Mach. Co. (1855) 20 Barb. 493; Cady v. Allen (1856) 22 Barb. 388; Coleman v. Palysted (1861) 36 Barb. 28, appeal dismissed in (1869) 40 N. Y. 341; Wright v. Whiting (1863) 40 Barb. 235; Hamilton v. Gridley

(1868) 54 Barb. 542; Smith v. Holland (1872) 61 Barb. 333, affirmed in (1874) 61 N. Y. 635; Bartholomew v. Lyon (1874) 67 Barb. 86; Borst v. Griffin (1832) 9 Wend. 307; Hinman v. Booth (1839) 21 Wend. 267; Schmidt v. Gunther (1874) 5 Daly, 452 (holding, however, amendment will not be allowed where attention is called to defects by objections below and party neglects to amend); Flaherty v. Greenman (1878) 7 Daly, 481; Snyder v. Snyder (1825) 4 Cow. 394; Bowdoin v. Coleman (1856) 3 Abb. Pr. 431; Manice v. Brady (1860) 15 Abb. Pr. 173; Hudson v. Swan (1879) 7 Abb. N. C. 324, reversed on other grounds in (1881) 83 N. Y. 552, as indicated in note 40, infra; Kennedy v. Crandell (1870) 3 Lans. 1.

N. C.—Weed v. Richardson (1837) 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 535; Baxter v. Baxter (1856) 48 N. C. (3 Jones, L.) 303; Bibbs v. Fuller (1872) 66 N. C. 116; Allen v. Sallinger (1891) 108 N. C. 159, 12 S. E. 896; Franks v. Nolop (1913) 164 N. C. 390, 80 S. E. 383; Kenney v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (1914) 165 N. C. 99, 80 S. E. 1078; Deligny v. Tate Furniture Co. (1915) — N. C. —, 86 S. E. 980.

Ohio.—Benninger v. Hess (1884) 41 Ohio St. 64. But see the earlier case of Homer v. Williams (1833) Wright, 355 (the court stating that the statute of amendments in that state "limits the right to amend to some time before writ of error brought, and does not extend beyond. . . . We have no power to amend, or to disregard even matters of form, after writ of error").

Okla.—Mulhall v. Mulhall (1895) 3 Okla. 252, 41 Pac. 577; Mulhall v. Mulhall (1895) 3 Okla. 304, 41 Pac. 109; Carson v. Butt (1896) 4 Okla. 133, 46 Pac. 596; El Reno Electric Light & Teleph. Co. v. Jennison (1897) 5 Okla. 759, 50 Pac. 144; Ryndak v. Seawell (1904) 13 Okla. 737, 76 Pac. 170; St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Mitten-dorf (1909) 24 Okla. 651, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 651, 104 Pac. 354; Kaufman v. Boismier (1909) 25 Okla. 252, 105 Pac. 326; First Nat. Bank v. Langston (1912) 32 Okla. 795, 124 Pac. 308; St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Griffin (1912) 33 Okla. 178, 124 Pac. 300; Carson v. Vance (1913) 35 Okla. 584, 130 Pac. 946; Midland Valley R. Co. v. George (1912) 36 Okla. 12, 127 Pac. 871; Love v. Kirkbride Drilling & Oil Co. (1913) 37 Okla. 804, 129 Pac. 858; Homeland Realty Co. v. Robison (1913) 39 Okla. 591, 136 Pac. 585; Carson v. Butt (1896) 4 Okla. 133, 46 Pac. 596.

Pa.—Downing v. Lindsay (1845) 2 Pa. St. 382; Morris v. McNamee (1851) 17 Pa. 173; Robertson v. Reed (1864) 47 Pa. 115; Loew v. Stocker (1869) 61 Pa. 347; Waite v. Palmer (1875) 78 Pa. 192; Shryock v. Basehore (1876) 82 Pa. 159, followed in Shryock v. McClure (1876) 82 Pa. 165; Passenger Conductors' L. Ins. Co. v. Birnbaum (1887) 116 Pa. 565, 11 Atl. 378; Erie City Iron Works v. Barber (1888) 118 Pa. 6, 12 Atl. 411; Harley v. Lebanon M. Ins. Co. (1888) 120 Pa. 182, 13 Atl. 833; Trainer L.R.A.1916D.

v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (1890) 137 Pa. 148, 20 Atl. 632; Chapin v. Cambria Iron Co. (1891) 145 Pa. 478, 22 Atl. 1041; Kroegher v. McConway & T. Co. (1892) 149 Pa. 444, 23 Atl. 341; Clifford v. Prudential Ins. Co. (1894) 161 Pa. 257, 28 Atl. 1085; Taylor v. Sattler (1897) 179 Pa. 451, 36 Atl. 323; C. & C. Electric Co. v. St. Clair (1897) 182 Pa. 274, 37 Atl. 814; Fisher v. Fidelity Mut. Life Assn. (1898) 188 Pa. 1, 41 Atl. 467; Hurat v. Brennen (1913) 239 Pa. 216, 86 Atl. 778, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 428; Stuart v. Line (1899) 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 345; Com. v. Patterson (1900) 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 136; Braker v. Deuser (1912) 49 Pa. Super. Ct. 215; Fonder v. Rosenstein (1913) 53 Pa. Super. Ct. 161; Palmer v. Waite (1875) 1 W. N. C. 363; Jones v. Freyer (1877) 3 W. N. C. 365; Wampler v. Shissler (1841) 1 Watts & S. 365; Cummings v. Lebo (1829) 2 Rawle, 23, 19 Am. Dec. 615; Prevost v. Nicholls (1808) 4 Yeates, 479.

R. I.—Cimini v. Zambarano (1914) — R. I. —, 89 Atl. 711.

S. D.—National Bank v. Feeney (1897) 9 S. D. 550, 46 L.R.A. 732, 70 N. W. 874.

Vt.—Chaffee v. Rutland R. Co. (1899) 71 Vt. 384, 45 Atl. 750.

Wash.—Tolmie v. Dean (1858) 1 Wash. Terr. 47; Ward v. Moorey (1860) 1 Wash. Terr. 104; Allend v. Spokane Falls & N. R. Co. (1899) 21 Wash. 324, 58 Pac. 244; Richardson v. Moore (1902) 30 Wash. 406, 71 Pac. 18; Gallamore v. Olympia (1904) 34 Wash. 379, 75 Pac. 978; Jones v. Herrick (1904) 35 Wash. 434, 77 Pac. 798; Bonne v. Security Sav. Soc. (1904) 35 Wash. 696, 78 Pac. 38; Iverson v. McDonnell (1904) 36 Wash. 73, 78 Pac. 202; Weber v. Snohomish Shingle Co. (1905) 37 Wash. 576, 79 Pac. 1126; Hodges v. Price (1905) 38 Wash. 1, 80 Pac. 202; Stern v. Sill (1905) 39 Wash. 557, 81 Pac. 1007; Irby v. Phillips (1905) 40 Wash. 618, 82 Pac. 931; Collins v. Denny Clay Co. (1905) 41 Wash. 136, 82 Pac. 1012; Lang v. Crescent Coal Co. (1906) 44 Wash. 267, 87 Pac. 261; Hester v. Stine (1907) 46 Wash. 469, 90 Pac. 594; Brummett v. Gleason (1907) 47 Wash. 439, 92 Pac. 266; Campbell v. Order of Washington (1909) 53 Wash. 398, 102 Pac. 410; Klaska v. Yeomans (1909) 54 Wash. 465, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1121, 103 Pac. 819; Staats v. Pioneer Ins. Assn. (1909) 55 Wash. 51, 104 Pac. 185; Alkire v. Myers Lumber Co. (1910) 57 Wash. 300, 106 Pac. 915; Spokane Merchant's Assn. v. Parry (1910) 60 Wash. 204, 110 Pac. 991; Holden v. Romano (1911) 61 Wash. 458, 112 Pac. 489; Carlisle Packing Co. v. Deming (1911) 62 Wash. 455, 114 Pac. 172; Domke v. Gunning (1911) 62 Wash. 629, 114 Pac. 436; Potter v. Spokane (1911) 63 Wash. 267, 115 Pac. 176; Overacker v. Northern P. R. Co. (1911) 64 Wash. 491, 117 Pac. 403; Powell v. Powell (1912) 66 Wash. 561, 119 Pac. 1119; Godfrey v. Olson (1912) 68 Wash. 59, 122 Pac. 1014; Perkins v. Lyons (1912) 68 Wash. 498, 123 Pac. 793; McCreery v. Carter (1913) 73 Wash. 394, 131 Pac. 1125; Lamoon v. Smith Cement Brick Co. (1913) 74 Wash. 164, 132 Pac. 880; elementary, it has been said,<sup>13</sup> that "if a good cause of action is established upon a trial and all controversies in reference to the matter are fully tried without objection, and such cause is within the jurisdiction of the court and might have been, but was not, fully pleaded, or was not the particular cause of action the pleader had in mind at the outset, though the facts are fairly stated, the complaint may . . . on appeal be deemed amended in accordance with the judgment;" and that almost any conceivable mistake that the parties, their attorneys, or the officers may make may be corrected by amendment under the very liberal and comprehensive provisions of the statute of jeofails, provided it is one by which neither party was prejudiced.<sup>14</sup> "It is difficult to conceive of a case," said the New York court,<sup>15</sup> "in which, after a trial and decision of Kelly v. Lum (1913) 75 Wash. 135, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 134 Pac. 819; Klein v. Phelps Lumber Co. (1913) 75 Wash. 500, 135 Pac. 226; Sjong v. Occidental Fish Co. (1914) 78 Wash. 4, 138 Pac. 313; Yeisley v. Smith (1914) 82 Wash. 693, 144 Pac. 918; Mason County v. McReavy (1915) 84 Wash. 9, 145 Pac. 993; Cook v. Washington-Oregon Corp. (1915) 84 Wash. 68, 146 Pac. 156, 149 Pac. 325; Stewart v. Stewart (1915) 85 Wash. 202, 147 Pac. 1157. See also Brown v. Baldwin (1907) 46 Wash. 106, 89 Pac. 483.

Wis.—Paine v. Smith (1873) 32 Wis. 335; Flanders v. Cottrell (1875) 36 Wis. 564; Giffert v. West (1875) 37 Wis. 115; Miller v. Spaulding (1876) 41 Wis. 221; Weston v. McMillan (1877) 42 Wis. 567; Aschermann v. Philip Best Brewing Co. (1878) 45 Wis. 262; Vassau v. Thompson (1879) 46 Wis. 345, 1 N. W. 4; Forcy v. Leonard (1885) 63 Wis. 353, 24 N. W. 78; Murray v. Scribner (1889) 74 Wis. 602, 43 N. W. 549; Deuster v. Mittag (1900) 105 Wis. 459, 81 N. W. 643; Hocks v. Sprangers (1902) 113 Wis. 123, 87 N. W. 1101, 89 N. W. 113; Rule v. J. L. Gates Land Co. (1904) 121 Wis. 544, 99 N. W. 333; Sherry v. Madler (1910) 123 Wis. 621, 101 N. W. 1095; Coe v. Rockman (1906) 126 Wis. 515, 106 N. W. 290; Nelson v. Campbell & C. Co. (1906) 128 Wis. 82, 107 N. W. 297; Donner v. Genz (1906) 129 Wis. 245, 107 N. W. 1039, 109 N. W. 71; Bieri v. Fonger (1909) 139 Wis. 150, 120 N. W. 862; Latton v. McCarty (1910) 142 Wis. 190, 125 N. W. 430; Swanby v. Northern State Bank (1912) 150 Wis. 572, 137 N. W. 763; Morehouse v. Voight (1913) 151 Wis. 580, 139 N. W. 423; Van Dinter v. Worden-Allen Co. (1912) 153 Wis. 533, 138 N. W. 1016, 142 N. W. 122; Kiefert v. Maple Valley Mut. Home F. Ins. Co. (1914) 158 Wis. 340, 148 N. W. 864; Callahan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1915) 161 Wis. 288, 154 N. W. 449.

U. S.—Grant Bros. Constr. Co. v. United States (1913) 232 U. S. 647, 58 L. ed. 776, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452; National Waterworks Co. v. Kansas City (1894) 27 L.R.A. 827, 10 C. C. A. 653, 27 U. S. App. 165, 62 Fed. 853; Keener v. Baker (1899) 35 C. C. A. 350, 93 Fed. 377; Columbus Constr. Co. v. Crane Co. (1900) 40 C. C. A. 35, 98 Fed. 946, rehearing on other points denied in (1900) 41 C. C. A. 189, 101 Fed. 55; Haley v. Kilpatrick (1900) 44 C. C. A. 102, 104 Fed. 647; Mine & S. Supply Co. v. Park & L.R.A.1916D.

L. Co. (1901) 47 C. C. A. 34, 107 Fed. 881; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Voelker (1904) 70 L.R.A. 264, 65 C. C. A. 226, 129 Fed. 522; A. Coolot Co. v. Kahner (1905) 72 C. C. A. 248, 140 Fed. 836; Michigan Home Colony Co. v. Tabor (1905) 72 C. C. A. 480, 141 Fed. 332; Schaeffer Piano Mfg. Co. v. National Fire Extinguisher Co. (1906) 78 C. C. A. 293, 148 Fed. 159; United Kansas Portland Cement Co. v. Harvey (1914) 132 C. C. A. 460, 216 Fed. 816; Crescent Mill Co. v. H. N. Strait Mfg. Co. (1915) — C. C. A. —, 227 Fed. 804 (trial court, without ordering amendment, having treated complaint as amended after notice that plaintiff would apply for an amendment).

Can.—Jones v. Davenport (1900) 7 B. C. 452; Sonier v. Breau (1912) 3 D. L. R. 184, 10 East. L. R. 391.

<sup>13</sup> Bieri v. Fonger (1909) 139 Wis. 150, 120 N. W. 862. The court said: "The fact is that there is little room, if any, for mere technicalities in our system of jurisprudence. It deals with rights and remedies for the sole purpose of the attainment of justice, not for the purpose of dignifying into a controlling feature any of the numerous little inconsequential defects that may arise in the course of litigation, not seasonably mentioned by the adverse party, or, if mentioned, not affecting him substantially in any respect of the matter."

<sup>14</sup> Witte Iron Works v. Holmes (1895) 62 Mo. App. 372, upholding the power of the appellate court to allow an amendment by inserting the real instead of the fictitious name of the plaintiff.

<sup>15</sup> Tyng v. Commercial Warehouse Co. (1874) 58 N. Y. 308.

The New York courts in some cases have laid down the rule that, as against an objection made for the first time in the appellate court, the pleadings will be deemed amended to conform to the proof, to support the judgment, wherever such an amendment ought to have been allowed by the trial court, had it been requested, and it does not appear that the adverse party has been prejudiced or misled by failure to make the amendment in the trial court. See, for instance, Manice v. Brady (1860) 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 173; Wright v. Whiting (1863) 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 235; Kennedy v. Crandell (1870) 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 1; Bowdoin v. Coleman (1856) 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 431.

The supreme court of Oklahoma has said that if the case is one in which an amend-the controversy as appearing on the proofs, when no question has been made during the trial in respect to their relevancy under the pleadings, it would be the duty of a court, or within its rightful authority, to deprive the party of his recovery on the ground of incompleteness or imperfection of the pleadings."

ment should upon an application have been allowed, and was tried without objection to the defects which appear in the pleadings, the appellate court will treat the amendment as having been made. Mulhall v. Mulhall (1895) 3 Okla. 304, 41 Pac. 109.

In Carson v. Butt (1896) 4 Okla. 133, 46 Pac. 596, the court stated generally that "averments which might have been amended below on motion, to correspond with the proof, will in the supreme court be deemed to have been made." The complaint in this instance, when attacked for the first time on appeal, was held sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a judgment for possession, and such a judgment was rendered although the prayer of the complaint did not ask for possession, but asked only that the defendant be adjudged to hold the legal title of the land in question in trust for the plaintiff.

In Ward v. Moorey (1860) 1 Wash. Terr. 104, the court said: "We think it unnecessary to decide whether all the necessary allegations were contained in the complaint or not. The defendant, instead of allowing judgment to go against him, answered over, and under our statute a defect in the complaint could have been cured at any time, by amendment; and this court is required to consider all amendments that could have been made in the court below as made."

In Cook v. Washington-Oregon Corp. (1915) 84 Wash. 68, 146 Pac. 156, 149 Pac. 325, the court said it had repeatedly held that, where a case has proceeded to judgment, it would not consider any defects in the pleadings that might have been cured by amendment, but would, as admonished by statute, decide the case on the merits, disregarding all technicalities, and consider all amendments as made which could have been made.

And in Weber v. Snohomish Shingle Co. (1905) 37 Wash. 576, 79 Pac. 1126, it was said: "As to the first alleged cause of action in the complaint, we do not believe it states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; but this point is not raised in the brief, and does not appear to have been raised in the lower court. It would therefore be disregarded, and the complaint deemed amended to correspond with the proof, if the latter were sufficient to sustain a cause of action."

The conclusion was reached by the Pennsylvania supreme court that "generally, an amendment will be allowed whenever justice requires it;" and that when the merits of the case have been fully heard and tried, L.R.A.1916D.

In a Federal case,<sup>18</sup> it was held that a petition may be considered upon appeal as having been amended to conform to the facts proved, where it is manifest that the defendant was not misled or surprised by the variance, so that the trial court would doubtless have permitted the amendment upon request.

These cases apparently proceed upon and it appears that the matter assigned for error could have produced no possible injury to the party complaining of it, the court will, in general, allow the amendment to be made in furtherance of justice. Wampler v. Shissler (1841) 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 365. Applying these principles to the facts in the case before it, the court held that an amendment might be made in the supreme court of a declaration in an action on a recognizance, to support the judgment, so as to make it conform to the record of the recognizance intended to be set out therein.

It was said in Prevost v. Nicholls (1808) 4 Yeates (Pa.) 479, regarding amendments by the supreme court, that where the objection is as to a matter merely of form, and the real merits of the controversy have been fairly tried, the court will be very liberal as to granting amendments.

The principle adopted in Stuart v. Line (1899) 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 345, was that, "after a trial on the merits of a case, a defect in the pleadings will not be considered as fatal, unless it is shown to have injuriously affected the trial, and a proper amendment will be considered to have been made."

An amendment of the pleadings may be allowed on appeal if justice appears to require it. Jones v. Meehan (1899) 175 U. S. 1, 44 L. ed. 49, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1.

In Holt v. United Security L. Ins. & T. Co. (1909) 76 N. J. L. 585, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 691, 72 Atl. 301, it was held that under the practice act in that state amendments in matters of form that have not affected the fair trial and determination of the real question in controversy may be allowed in the court of review.

"The course of practice in the courts of this state, under the statutes permitting amendments, has been that wherever the real question in controversy has been fairly tried and correctly settled upon the merits, the court will not set aside the result for an objection that might have been avoided by amendment, but will, in such case, exercise the power of amendment." Vunk v. Raritan River R. Co. (1894) 56 N. J. L. 395, 28 Atl. 593.

It was said in Palmer v. Waite (1875) 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) 363, that "the rule is to allow the amendment to be made in this court [supreme court], or treat the record as amended, where it is in furtherance of justice and the case has been heard and decided on its merits, and no real injury will be done to the party complaining of it." And in this case, where there was a the principle that "while parties have the right to try the issues made by the pleadings, yet they are not bound to, but may try any other issue by mutual consent," and that "the court, in reviewing such cases, is only called upon to determine whether the parties have consented to try the substituted issue and whether the decisions of the court upon the new issue are according to law."<sup>17</sup>

c. Limitations of rule, in general.

But, although the appellate courts are very liberal in permitting an amendment of the pleadings to conform to the proof, or in regarding the amendment as made, to support the judgment, where no proper objection has been made to the pleadings or the introduction of the evidence, or the defect or variance appears clearly not to have affected the substantial right of the parties, there are certain circumstances under which courts on appeal have considered such a course improper. It has been held that the doctrine of regarding the pleadings amended on appeal, to support the judgment, does not apply in the case of a judgment by default. On this point, the supreme court of Indiana<sup>18</sup> has said: "It will be presumed, to the extent that the plaintiff's cause of action was defectively or inaccurately stated, no fact essential to the cause of action being omitted, that the facts imperfectly stated which were necessary to support the action were proved at the trial, and the complaint will be considered as having been amended to correspond with the proof. This rule has, however, no application to a case where judgment has been taken by default. One who takes a judgment by default must, on an appeal seasonably taken, be content to stand upon his complaint as he makes it, for, in considering whether or not it is sufficient to support a judgment so taken, the court cannot assume that anything was proved beyond what was alleged in the complaint, nor can the complaint be considered as having been amended to meet the proof."

It has been held also that if a party declines to amend his pleading when offered the opportunity to do so, he cannot afterward be allowed to treat it as amended, when no amendment has in fact been made.<sup>19</sup> And where the lower court refuses an amendment, but the party seeking it nevertheless recovers a judgment, it has been held that the variance between the declaration and the proof as to the date of the bill sued on, an amendment of the declaration was allowed in the supreme court to correspond with the proof on payment by the plaintiff of the defendant's costs in error, the defendant having objected on the trial to the introduction of the bill in evidence and his objection having been overruled.

In Erie City Iron Works v. Barber (1888) 118 Pa. 6, 12 Atl. 411, it was said that "after a trial on the merits, no defect of pleading which could have been raised by a demurrer will be fatal to the judgment, unless it is shown to have injuriously affected the trial. The proper amendment will be considered to have been made. This is the outgrowth of the policy which has prevailed in practice in the allowance of amendments. The effect of our statutes has been to give more prominence to the trial of the cause had on its intrinsic merits, in the interest of a rational and speedy administration of justice, than to the exact and precise observance of the artificial forms originally devised for this purpose, but which are supposed in some instances, at least, to defeat rather than to promote the ends of justice."

Under the Washington statute providing that the supreme court shall hear and determine all cases upon the merits, disregarding all technicalities, and shall consider all amendments which could have been made as made, the court in Allend v. Spokane Falls & N. R. Co. (1899) 21 Wash. 324, 58 Pac. 244, laid down the rule that the supreme court would treat the complaint as amended whenever it was necessary to do justice between the parties, and when to do so would not deprive either party of a substantial right.

<sup>18</sup> Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Voelker (1904) 70 L.R.A. 264, 65 C. C. A. 226, 129 Fed. 522.

<sup>17</sup> Frear v. Sweet (1890) 118 N. Y. 454, 23 N. E. 910.

<sup>18</sup> Old v. Mohler (1889) 122 Ind. 594, 23 N. E. 967, where a judgment by default was reversed because, in an action for breach of a covenant in a deed against encumbrances, the deed or a copy was not filed with and made a part of the complaint, as required by statute.

<sup>19</sup> Carpentier v. Brenham (1875) 50 Cal. 549.

The rule was laid down in Davidson v. Weems (1877) 58 Ala. 187, that the appellate court cannot consider an amendment as made when counsel decline or omit to ask leave to make an amendment upon their attention being directed to the defect by an objection thereto.

Where the trial court correctly sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and the plaintiff having declined to amend, appealed from a judgment for the defendant, it was held that the appellate court would not grant leave to amend. People ex rel. Hastings v. Jackson (1864) 24 Cal. 630. To a similar effect is Sutter v. San Francisco (1868) 36 Cal. 112.

See also notes 30-38, infra.

appellate court will not, on a new motion to amend, permit an amendment, in order to sustain the judgment.<sup>20</sup> So, unless the evidence or findings properly presented for the consideration of the appellate court clearly establish the facts set out in the proposed amendment, it will not be permitted or deemed made on appeal.<sup>21</sup>

<sup>20</sup> Where the district court on error refused a motion to add to the petition in an action on a note, allegations which were necessary to a statement of a cause of action, the plaintiffs having in the county court obtained leave to amend, but the amendment not having been made, it was held on appeal to the supreme court that the plaintiffs could not, by a new motion to amend, be permitted to make an amendment of the petition to sustain the judgment in their favor. Spellman v. Frank (1885) 18 Neb. 110, 24 N. W. 442. The court said: "We are not asked to review the action of the district court, but a new motion is made in this court. As the jurisdiction of this court is appellate only, in such cases, there is no warrant for granting the motion, and it is therefore overruled."

<sup>21</sup> In Stephens v. Stephens (1913) 108 Ark. 53, 156 S. W. 837, where a suit was brought to cancel a deed executed by the plaintiff to his wife and their infant children, it was held, on appeal from a decree for the plaintiff, that the court would not deem the complaint amended as to allege that the land conveyed was a homestead and therefore the conveyance void because the wife did not join in the deed, as the proof was insufficient that the land conveyed was a homestead.

An amendment of a petition by inserting therein an allegation necessary to the statement of a cause of action cannot be made in the appellate court to support the judgment, if proof of the facts alleged does not appear in the abstract of the record brought up on appeal. Chandler v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1913) 251 Mo. 592, 158 S. W. 35; Sheets v. Mississippi River & B. T. R. Co. (1911) 152 Mo. App. 376, 133 S. W. 124. The action in each case was for the death of the plaintiff's husband. In the former action, brought nine months after the husband's death, the petition contained no allegations which would toll the six-months statute of limitations. On appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff it was held that an amendment could not be made in the supreme court, that the widow brought an action within six months of the husband's death, and, having suffered a nonsuit, brought the present action within the year allowed by statute. In the latter case the petition alleged that the plaintiff brought the action "within one year of the nonsuit which she suffered in her former action on this cause," but failed to allege that the first action was begun within six months of the husband's death. The appellate court held that evidence not preserved in the bill of L.R.A.1916D.

In several instances, a distinction has been made as regards the allowance of amendments by the appellate court to sustain the judgment, between cases where the cause of action is merely defectively stated, and where there is an entire omission in the petition to allege facts necessary to constitute a cause of action. Thus, in a Missouri case<sup>22</sup> it was exceptions could not be considered on appeal for the purpose of amending the petition so as to supply the omission.

So, in Manhattan Co. v. White (1913) 48 Mont. 565, 140 Pac. 90, it was held that a complaint could not be deemed amended in the appellate court where the bill of exceptions did not present any evidence establishing the facts to be incorporated in the amendment.

Where both the complaint and the findings in an action for divorce are deficient in failing to show residence of the plaintiff necessary to confer jurisdiction, and the evidence is not before the supreme court on appeal, a judgment for the plaintiff cannot be sustained by indulging in presumptions and deeming the complaint amended to conform to the presumed proof. Ramsdell v. Ramsdell (1907) 47 Wash. 444, 92 Pac. 278.

The rule was laid down in Sutherland v. County Ct. (1907) 62 W. Va. 1, 57 S. E. 274, that a motion in the supreme court on appeal for leave to amend a bill for an injunction, unsustained by anything in the record showing facts which, if incorporated in the bill, would sustain the injunction, will be refused.

Where there is nothing on the record from which it can be legally inferred in what way the declaration should be amended, an amendment will not be regarded as made. Ballou v. Hill (1870) 23 Mich. 60.

See also Crandall v. Lee (1916) — Wash. —, 154 Pac. 190, where, in a suit to quiet title, the trial court made no findings of fact, and, the facts being disputed, it was held on appeal that the plaintiff could not invoke the rule that where the trial had proceeded on the merits, the appellate court would deem the pleadings amended to conform to the proof.

<sup>22</sup> O'Toole v. Lowenstein (1913) 177 Mo. App. 662, 160 S. W. 1016.

The rule was laid down in Corson v. Waller (1903) 104 Mo. App. 621, 78 S. W. 656, that a statement of a cause of action may be amended in the appellate court to supply any deficiency or omission therein when by such amendment substantial justice would be promoted, but that no new item or cause of action not embraced, or intended to be embraced, in the original statement, shall be added by such an amendment; and that when the statement of the cause of action is so entirely barren as to state nothing at all,—is a mere nullity,—it is not amendable in the appellate court. In this instance, however, the question was held that, although a demurrer had not been filed to the petition, a judgment for the plaintiff could not be sustained in an action of trover where the petition alleged the plaintiff's ownership of the property, but contained no allegation that he had or was entitled to the possession of the property; and that an amendment could not be made in the supreme court to supply the omitted allegation. The statute of jeofails, providing that no judgment shall be reversed for omitting any allegations, without proving which the triers of the issue ought not to have given such a verdict, was regarded as declaratory of the common law that a verdict will aid a cause of action defectively stated, but not a defective cause of action.

An apparently sound rule has been laid down that an amendment of the declaration to conform to the proof as to a material issue omitted from the declaration should be allowed in the appellate court only when it is clear that the matter was an issue on the trial, and as fully litigated as though it had been raised by the pleading; for otherwise great injustice might be done to a party by being compelled to try an issue that he had no notice of and did not come prepared to try.<sup>23</sup> In this instance the Vermont court held that a declaration could not be amended on appeal to support a judgment for the plaintiff by inserting a material allegation which was proved in connection with and as a part of the issues made by the pleadings, and was apparently not noticed by either side as a distinct issue, since it could not be said that the question raised by the amendment was fully litigated. Similarly in a New York case<sup>24</sup> it was said that while an appellate court in some instances may disregard the form of the pleadings and affirm or reverse the judgment in accordance with the proof presented on the question litigated, this should be done only in cases where the parties present their proof with a view to the litigation of that particular question, regardless of the pleadings; and that if, on the trial of the issues raised by the pleadings, evidence whether the circuit court should have allowed an amendment of the statement of the cause of action on appeal from the probate court.

The same distinction has been noted by the supreme court of South Dakota. Thus, where the defendant alleged that the consideration of the notes sued on had failed, but did not claim special damages, and affirmative relief for damages was given the defendant by the verdict and judgment, it was held on appeal that, as there was an entire want of averments to support the verdict, the court would not presume an amendment of the pleadings in the trial court, or permit their amendment on appeal, to support the judgment, but that it must be reversed. Seiberling v. Mortinson (1898) 10 S. D. 644, 75 N. W. 202. The court said, however, that if in fact there was a counterclaim pleaded, but it was defective for want of some technical averment, and it was made to appear affirmatively that evidence was admitted to supply the defect in the pleadings, the court on appeal would permit an amendment of the pleadings to conform to the facts proved, or would presume that such an amendment was made in the lower court, and refuse to reverse the judgment for such apparent error; but that where there is an entire want of averments to support the verdict, the court could not presume that the pleadings were amended in the trial court in such manner as to support the verdict and judgment.

And the fact that the plaintiff replied to the answer when not required to do so was held in Seiberling v. Mortinson (S. D.) supra, not to justify the appellate court in L.R.A.1916D.

treating the answer as asking for affirmative relief.

<sup>23</sup> Baker v. Sherman (1901) 73 Vt. 26, 50 Atl. 633.

An amendment of the pleadings in the supreme court to sustain the judgment by the filing of an additional plea should be allowed only where it is certain that the case has been tried as it would have been if the plea had been properly filed. Poole v. Massachusetts Mut. Acci. Asso. (1902) 75 Vt. 85, 53 Atl. 331.

<sup>24</sup> L. G. Catty Co. v. Cantor (1911) 127 N. Y. Supp. 311. In this case the plaintiff brought an action under oral pleadings for fraud and conversion of money paid to the defendant by the plaintiff for the purpose of making a machine for the plaintiff's use. The evidence showed no cause of action for fraud or conversion, but the trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff on the ground of breach of contract to deliver a completed machine within the required time.

The power of amendment of the pleadings should not be exercised by an appellate court to support a verdict and judgment that may have been based upon an issue which was not really in controversy between the parties and was not fairly litigated. Excelsior Electric Co. v. Sweet (1895) 59 N. J. L. 441, 31 Atl. 721.

So, if at the trial the parties have confined the controversy to the issues raised by the pleadings, the pleadings should not on appeal be amended so as to present a different issue, which was first suggested in the charge of the trial judge and submitted to the jury against the objection of the appellant. (N. J.) Ibid.

is introduced showing a state of facts which might entitle the plaintiff to recover on a different cause of action, a judgment rendered for him by the trial court based upon a finding of such a state of facts cannot be sustained on appeal by amending the pleadings to conform to the proof, since the defendant may not have attempted to meet an issue outside of the pleadings. And in a Canadian case<sup>25</sup> the court approved and followed the doctrine that if a party at a trial "deliberately elects to fight one question, on which he is beaten, he cannot afterwards on appeal raise another question, although that question was at the trial open to him on the pleadings and on the evidence."

It has been held also that the authority of the appellate court to direct an amendment of the pleadings obtains only in cases where the amendment could have been directed by the trial court; and that while issues other than those created by the pleadings may be litigated by consent of the parties, and, where this has been done, the trial court may direct an amendment of the pleadings to conform to the proof, and, if the amendment is not made on the trial, the appellate court may direct it or deem the pleadings amended, yet the pleadings cannot be amended in the trial or appellate courts to state a new and entirely different cause of action from that alleged, merely because the evidence might justify recovery upon the new cause of action.<sup>26</sup> In this instance the New York court held that it should not, to support the judgment, allow an amendment of a complaint alleging a cause of action for money loaned, so as to state a cause of action for money paid under mistake or obtained by fraud, where the judgment for the plaintiff was erroneous on the cause of action alleged because barred by the statute of limitations, and all the evidence introduced was competent on this issue, although the evidence showed a state of facts which would have entitled the plaintiff to recover had the action been brought for money paid under mistake or obtained by fraud.

So, in a number of cases appellate courts have refused to permit amendments of the pleadings to conform to the proof, or to regard such amendments as made, where the proposed amendments changed substantially the nature of the claim or defense, and introduced new issues which it did not clearly appear had been fully litigated; or where the amendment was of a nature that it could not have been allowed by the trial court.<sup>27</sup>

<sup>25</sup> Sales v. Lake Erie & D. R. Co. (1896) 17 Ont. Pr. Rep. 224, following the doctrine of Browne v. Dunn (1894) 6 Reports (Eng.) 67, 1 Mews, Eng. Case Law Dig. 452.

<sup>26</sup> Riker v. Curtis (1894) 10 Misc. 125, 30 N. Y. Supp. 940.

<sup>27</sup> In some cases amendments of the pleadings which would raise new issues or change the issues in the lower court were refused on appeal, it not appearing, however, that the proposed amendment was to conform the pleadings to the proof. Cases of this kind are not covered in the note. See, however, among other cases supporting the general rule that amendments will not be allowed on appeal which change the issues tried below, Manatt v. Starr (1887) 72 Iowa, 677, 34 N. W. 784; Ottumwa Brick & Constr. Co. v. Ainley (1899) 109 Iowa, 386, 80 N. W. 510; Levandowski v. Althouse (1904) 136 Mich. 631, 99 N. W. 786; State v. Great Northern R. Co. (1908) 106 Minn. 303, 119 N. W. 202; Hill v. Stocking (1844) 6 Hill (N. Y.) 277; Holderness v. Welling (1853) 7 N. B. 572; Howard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. (1899) 125 N. C. 49, 45 L.R.A. 853, 34 S. E. 199; Whitehead v. Spivey (1889) 103 N. C. 66, 9 S. E. 319 (holding that on appeal by the plaintiff to the supreme court, he would not be allowed to make an amendment which would introduce substantially a new cause of action which had arisen after the appeal was taken). L.R.A.1916D.

In Brown v. Collie (1851) 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 265, it was held that an amendment of an answer changing the nature of the defense and rendering a new trial necessary would not be allowed on appeal, although the case was one in which the court was of the opinion that an amendment would have been allowed at special term, had the defendant applied therefor, even after the referee's report.

In an action on a joint contract against two defendants for goods sold, the trial court in Dobbs v. Purington (1901) 136 Cal. 70, 65 Pac. 1091, 68 Pac. 323, found that the goods were sold to one of the defendants, and rendered judgment against him. It was held on appeal by this defendant that the judgment could not be sustained, as the finding of separate liability was altogether outside the issues, and that, while the complaint might have been amended on the trial to make it conform to the evidence, and, on the case being remanded, such amendments might be allowed as the court might deem just, yet the issues could not be changed on appeal to support the judgment.

On appeal from a decree dismissing a bill in equity for a reconveyance of real estate, it was held that an amendment of the bill so as to include averments set out in the answer would not be allowed where it would raise an issue which should have been heard and determined in the lower

It has been held that a statute authorizing an appellate court, in furtherance of justice, and upon such terms as may be just, to permit an amendment in affirmance of a judgment of any record, pleading, or process, by adding or striking out the name of a party, or by correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or a mistake in any other respect, or by rectifying defects or imperfections in matters of form, does not authorize an amendment in the appellate court by striking out an allegation relied upon as the basis of the cause of action, which court, and the facts sought to be introduced by the amendment were known more than two years prior to the date of the motion and more than one year before the decree of the lower court dismissing the bill, the court, however, basing its decision partly, at least, on the ground of laches. Jackson v. Thomson (1902) 203 Pa. 622, 63 Atl. 506.

In an action by an assignee of an assessment collector against a city for fees on the ground of refusal by the city to permit him to perform the duties of his office, the collections having been made and the fees received by another, the court in Smith v. New York (1868) 37 N. Y. 518, in holding that a judgment for the plaintiff on the cause of action alleged could not be sustained, as there was no contract obligation for breach of which an action would lie, stated: "It is suggested that an amendment of the complaint should be permitted at this time, by which the same may be converted into an action for money had and received. . . . I have never known the exercise of such a power by this court, and am not aware of any authority for it. In no event could it be granted, except by a motion of which the defendants had notice, and in which the necessary terms could be imposed."

When, upon appeal from a judgment granting the petition of a city to extend its limits to embrace outlying territory, the petition as allowed is found to include lands not proper to be annexed, the petition cannot be amended so as to exclude such lands, and the judgment affirmed as to the remainder, but the whole case must be remanded for a new trial. Vestal v. Little Rock (1891) 54 Ark. 321, 11 L.R.A. 778, 15 S. W. 891, 16 S. W. 291.

An amendment of the pleadings changing the nature of the action from one for specific performance of a contract, or, in the alternative, damages, to an action simply for damages, was denied in the appellate court in Hipgrave v. Case (1885) L. R. 28 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 356, 54 L. J. Ch. N. S. 399, 52 L. T. N. S. 242, where the evidence showed that the plaintiff had rendered performance on his part impossible, and, there being no request to amend the pleading in the lower court, the action had been dismissed.

Under the Nebraska Code the power of the supreme court to amend the pleadings on appeal exists only where the amendment does not change substantially the claim or defense. Peterson v. Lincoln County (1912) 92 Neb. 167, 138 N. W. 122, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1309.

So, in Scott v. Spencer (1895) 44 Neb. L.R.A.1916D.

93, 62 N. W. 312, it was held that while the supreme court on appeal might in some instances allow an amendment in order to conform the pleadings to the proof, an amendment would not be allowed which changed substantially the nature of the action or defense. Accordingly, in an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien, where the answer was, in effect, a disclaimer of title, and a decree was rendered for the plaintiff, it was held that the supreme court, on appeal, would not permit the defendant to amend his answer so as to show title. It was contended that the cause had been tried on its merits, and that the answer had been construed not as a disclaimer, but as putting in issue the validity of the lien, and that the amendment should be allowed, therefore, so that the answer would conform to the issues tried; but the supreme court held that, as there had been a failure to secure a bill of exceptions, it would not examine ex parte affidavits accompanying the application to amend for the purpose of ascertaining what issues had been tried.

In an action against a city for salary alleged to be due the plaintiff for services performed under an appointment as "record clerk of the board of police justices," where the defense was that the office had been abolished by statute, and the complaint was dismissed on this ground, it was held on appeal that the plaintiff should not be permitted to amend his complaint so as to be designated therein as "record clerk of the court of special sessions." Fitch v. New York (1882) 88 N. Y. 500. It was said that if the statute allowed amendments to be made in the court of appeals, the power should not be exercised unless no substantial right of the adverse party would be affected, and that here the case had been tried upon a different issue from that presented by the amendment.

An amendment of an answer to conform to the proof was denied on appeal in Hondorf v. Atwater (1894) 75 Hun, 369, 27 N. Y. Supp. 447, where it had not been asked for in the lower court, would have changed substantially the nature of the defense, and was sought by the appellant for the purpose of reversing the judgment.

An amendment of a complaint will not be allowed on appeal, which would present a case substantially different from the one which was tried below, and raise a question of law not involved in the appeal. Bonner v. Stotesbury (1905) 139 N. C. 3, 51 S. E. 781.

The rule that an appellate court will not permit an amendment of the pleadings to support the judgment on a different theory was not inserted in the petition by mistake or inadvertence, and which is essential to the theory on which the case was tried.<sup>28</sup>

d. Objections erroneously overruled in lower court.

1. In general.

Another class of cases in which appellate courts have usually refused an amendment of the pleadings, or declined to treat the pleadings as amended, in order to sustain the judgment, is that involving an erroneous ruling of the trial court when objection is properly made to the sufficiency of the pleadings or the admission of evidence under them. "There are cases," it has been said,<sup>29</sup> "which having proceeded in disregard of the pleadings, and wherein the whole case has been presented by both parties in their proofs without objection, in which an amendment has been allowed, after the evidence is closed, to conform the pleadings to the proofs; so also where the court can see that a trial has been had upon the real issue without objection, it will not disturb a recovery upon the ground that it was not embraced in the pleadings; but when the objection has been properly taken or an exception presents the question, it is fatal to a recovery that it does not conform in all material respects to the allegations of the pleadings." Thus, when a complaint is attacked by demurrer for want of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, but the demurrer is erroneously overruled, on appeal from the ruling the complaint will not be deemed amended, although the defect might have been cured by amendment in the lower court.<sup>30</sup> The same rule also applies to other pleadings,—for instance, where the answer does not state from that on which the case was tried was applied in State, Weigel, Prosecutor, v. Hartman Steel Co. (1899) 51 N. J. L. 446, 20 Atl. 67, where the supreme court held that it would not permit an amendment of the state of demand in an action upon an account stated to one for goods sold and delivered, to support the judgment for the plaintiff, the case having been tried upon the theory of the pleadings, and counsel for the defendant having obviously shaped his client's cause in accordance with the demand as filed.

In Jordan v. Reed (1908) 77 N. J. L. 584, 71 Atl. 280, it was held that a declaration setting up a contract arising out of commercial paper, and entered into by the defendant alone, could not be amended on error to conform to proof of a contract of a different nature entered into by the defendant and others, so as to sustain the judgment for the plaintiff, because thereby the defendant would be bound by a verdict upon a matter which he had not expected or intended to try.

It was said in Spokane Grain Co. v. Great Northern Exp. Co. (1909) 55 Wash. 545, 104 Pac. 794, that the rule that if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence the appellate court will not disturb the findings of the jury, but will, if necessary, treat the pleadings as amended to conform to the facts proved, must not be held to permit a plaintiff to allege one cause of action and prove an entirely different cause, wholly foreign to the one alleged.

An amendment of an answer by pleading the defense of purchaser for valuable consideration without notice in an action for recovery of real estate was denied in Robert v. Ellis (1900) 59 S. C. 137, 37 S. E. 250, on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, where no motion to amend was made or considered in the lower court, and the amendment involved an entire and radical change in the defense, and was not sustained by the proofs.

ical change in the defense, and was not sustained by the proofs.

<sup>28</sup> St. Louis v. G. H. Wright Contracting Co. (1907) 210 Mo. 491, 109 S. W. 6, where a city brought an action against a contractor and his sureties on the bond for breach of contract to do public work, alleging that the plaintiff brought the suit as trustee for the lot owners to recover the excess paid in special tax bills by reason of the defendant's breach of contract, the amendment sought being the elimination of the allegation that recovery was sought as trustee.

<sup>29</sup> Romeyn v. Sickles (1888) 108 N. Y. 650, 15 N. E. 698. In this case the amendment had been erroneously deemed made by the trial court to permit a recovery on a different cause of action from that alleged or tried.

<sup>30</sup> Rogers v. State (1881) 78 Ind. 329 (where the complaint in an action on a bond failed to allege that a copy of the bond was filed therewith); Utica Twp. v. Miller (1878) 62 Ind. 230 (where the complaint alleged a cause of action against the school township, and the civil, and not the school, township was sued). In the latter case, the court said: "We do not think a complaint not stating facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action can be deemed so amended in this court as to make it good. . . . The amendment which we are asked to consider as made is one which involves an entire change of the party defendant. We are not aware of any authority for considering such an amendment as made."

Where the complaint in an action on a note was materially defective in that it did not allege that the note remained unpaid, but the court erroneously overruled a demurrer to the complaint, and rendered judgment for the plaintiff, it was held on appeal that the complaint could not be facts sufficient to constitute a good defense, and a demurrer thereto is erroneously overruled, on appeal from the ruling the answer will not be deemed amended.<sup>31</sup> And the provision of the Code that "no judgment shall be stayed or reversed . . . by the supreme court for any defect in form, variance, or imperfections in the record, pleadings, . . . 'which by law might have been amended by the court below,'" does not aid the defect in the pleadings where the question on appeal is the correctness of the ruling below on the demurrer.<sup>32</sup>

So, also, if the evidence to which it is sought to conform the pleadings by amendment was introduced over objection that it was not within the pleadings, the appellate court will not permit the amendment, or regard it as made, in order to support the judgment, if the variance is not merely formal, but relates to a matter of substance, but it will reverse the judgment.<sup>33</sup> In a New York deemed amended, but that the judgment should be reversed. Friddle v. Crane (1879) 68 Ind. 583.

So, in Sinker v. Fletcher (1878) 61 Ind. 276, where a demurrer was erroneously overruled to a complaint in an action against an indorser of a note, the complaint being insufficient in that it failed to allege a filing of a copy of the indorsement, it was held on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, that the appellate court would not consider the complaint amended. The court said: "It is also insisted by the appellees that the complaint ought to be deemed amended in this court, under the provisions of § 580 of the Code. But we can conceive of no case in which a complaint will be deemed amended in this court, which is so defective as that a demurrer filed to it for the want of a statement of sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action should be sustained, where the question here arises upon the correctness of the ruling below on the demurrer."

Where an action was brought by an executrix to recover the purchase price of goods alleged to have been sold by her as executrix to the defendant, and the defendant demurred on the ground that the plaintiff had no legal capacity to sue, and that the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and a motion by the plaintiff for judgment on the pleadings was granted, it was held on appeal that as the action should have been brought by the plaintiff in her individual capacity, the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained, and the appellate court could not permit an amendment by striking out the allegations that the action was brought by the plaintiff as executrix and permit the recovery to stand as though the action had been brought by the plaintiff individually. Ehrman v. Bassett (1913) 159 App. Div. 752, 144 N. Y. Supp. 976. The court said that such an amendment should not be allowed especially when the defendant at the first opportunity had challenged the right of the plaintiff to maintain the action in its present form.

<sup>31</sup> Johnson v. Breedlove (1880) 72 Ind. 368. The court said: "It can make no difference in principle whether the defective pleading, erroneously held to be good on demurrer for want of facts, was a complaint or an answer. In either case, when L.R.A.1916D

the question presented here involves the correctness of the ruling on the demurrer, we cannot regard the defective pleading as amended."

<sup>32</sup> (Ind.) Ibid.

<sup>33</sup> Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Webb (1910) 94 Ark. 350, 126 S. W. 1072; Loper v. State (1892) 48 Kan. 540, 29 Pac. 687; Northam v. Dutchess County Mut. Ins. Co. (1903) 177 N. Y. 73, 69 N. E. 222; Brown v. Haley (1909) 56 Wash. 218, 105 Pac. 478; Oldfield v. Angeles Brewing & Malting Co. (1913) 72 Wash. 168, 129 Pac. 1098.

In Barnes v. Seligman (1890) 55 Hun, 339, 8 N. Y. Supp. 834, the court adopted as a familiar rule the proposition "that a complaint cannot be amended to conform to the facts proved where an objection has been taken in time to the proving of the facts because of the insufficiency of the pleadings."

In Smith v. Wetmore (1899) 41 App. Div. 290, 58 N. Y. Supp. 402, it was held that an omission in the complaint in an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien, to allege the procuring of, or a legal excuse for failure to procure, the engineer's certificate required by the building contract, might be cured by an amendment on appeal, to support the judgment, where there was evidence introduced, over objection, sufficient to support a finding that the certificate had been unreasonably withheld. Regarding this case, the court in Bossert v. Poerschke (1900) 51 App. Div. 381, 64 N. Y. Supp. 733, said that it was there held that the appellate division might presume that the complaint was amended upon the trial so as to conform to the proof, although the fact seemed to have been overlooked that the evidence when offered was objected to; but that it was probable the objection to the evidence was not put on the ground of failure to plead an excuse for not producing the certificate. In affirming the decision in the Smith Case, the court of appeals, however, in (1901) 167 N. Y. 234, 60 N. E. 419, held that an amendment of the complaint to conform to the proof had properly been allowed, because evidence introduced without objection as to the insufficiency of the complaint showed that the owner by his own acts had rendered production of the certificate unnecessary to the plaintiff's recovery.

The rule that an appellate court will not case<sup>34</sup> the rule was laid down that while it is undoubtedly within the power of the court in a proper case to amend the pleadings to conform to the proof brought out on the trial, that power should never be exercised where the facts have been proved over the objection of the party against whom they are offered; that an amendment is allowable only where the proof has been admitted without objection, and the attention of the party offering the evidence has not been called to the defect in the pleadings. Accordingly, it was held that a judgment for the plaintiff in an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien, where the complaint was defective because it failed to allege a performance or waiver of the provision in the contract requiring the architect's certificate, could not be sustained on the theory that the complaint would be deemed amended in the appel-permit amendments of the pleadings to conform to the proof, in order to support the judgment, where the evidence has been erroneously admitted over a proper objection by the adverse party that it is not within the pleadings, was applied in Page v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1902) 76 App. Div. 160, 78 N. Y. Supp. 454, where evidence was erroneously admitted over the defendant's exception, in an action for personal injuries, to show injuries not alleged or necessarily and immediately resulting from those alleged.

It was held also in Page v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (N. Y.) supra, that the appellate court in such a case would not permit an amendment of the complaint to conform to the proof because of the fact that the trial on which the evidence was erroneously admitted was a second trial of the case, and on a former trial similar evidence had been admitted without objection, the contention being overruled that because of this fact the defendant was not surprised upon the trial, and that therefore the appellate court should amend the pleadings to conform to the proof.

In Smith v. Auburn (1903) 88 App. Div. 396, 84 N. Y. Supp. 725, the complaint in an action against a city for the overflow of land predicated liability on an abuse of rights in a natural water course flowing across the plaintiff's premises, and the defendant was erroneously held liable on the theory that the water course had been abandoned and a sewer constructed, for the condition and operation of which it was responsible, evidence tending to sustain liability on the latter theory having been introduced over the defendant's objection. It was held that, as there was a substantial variance and the trial court had refused an amendment and erroneously rendered judgment for the plaintiff notwithstanding the variance, the pleadings could not be amended on appeal to conform to the proof, in order to support the judgment.

If evidence affecting the substantial rights of the parties is introduced over the objection of the adverse party that the issue raised is not within the pleadings, the appellate court will not permit an amendment of the pleadings to conform to the proof thus introduced over objection, since the defeated party is not obliged to introduce evidence to controvert evidence not properly within the issues. Blydenburgh v. Ely (1914) 161 App. Div. 91, 146 N. Y. Supp. 259.
L.R.A.1916D.

It was held in Epstein v. Cohen (1907) 56 Misc. 579, 107 N. Y. Supp. 148, that where the case was tried and submitted to the jury on a theory not sanctioned by the pleadings, and proper objections were made on the trial and no amendment of the pleadings requested, the judgment cannot be sustained on appeal, nor the pleadings amended to conform to the proof so as to support the judgment. In this case the complaint charged an ordinary bailment of a horse to the defendant and failure to return the same, and liability was denied on the ground of death of the horse without the fault of the bailee. On the trial evidence was admitted, over objections by the defendant, of a guaranty for the return of the horse, and the case was submitted to the jury on the theory of a breach of contract of guaranty.

A petition will not be treated as amended on appeal to conform to the plaintiff's evidence, where defendant objected to its introduction and the case was not submitted to the jury on the issue made thereby, and the evidence is controverted by evidence for the defendant. Matthews-Linton Grain Co. v. Shannon (1915) — Okla. —, 153 Pac. 631.

In Oldfield v. Angeles Brewing & Malt-ing Co. (1913) 72 Wash. 168, 129 Pac. 1098, it was said that the rule that the complaint should be treated as amended to conform to the proof had no application where the evidence had been introduced over objection, and the issue tried was in no manner tendered in the complaint; that, leave to amend not having been requested, no rule of construction, however liberal, could permit the trial of an issue not tendered in the complaint over the objection of the defendant; and that to permit such a course would be to ignore the statute, dispense with formal pleadings, and invite endless confusion.

Where proper objection is taken to the insufficiency of a complaint which fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and objection is made and overruled to the introduction of evidence tending to establish the omitted facts, the complaint on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff will not be deemed amended for the purpose of determining the correctness of the rulings of the lower court, although the complaint might have been amended on the trial, had an amendment been asked. Tooker v. Arnoux (1879) 76 N. Y. 397.

<sup>34</sup> Bossert v. Poerschke (1900) 51 App. Div. 381, 64 N. Y. Supp. 733.

late court, although it was found on the trial that the defendant had waived the certificate, this evidence being received over objection on the ground of the insufficiency of the complaint.

And so in the case of the erroneous overruling of other proper objections or motions taken on the trial, where the correctness of the lower court's decision is before the reviewing court, an amendment of the pleading in fact or in theory will not generally be permitted to cover up the error so as to affirm the judgment.<sup>35</sup> Thus, the New York court has held that "the pleadings cannot be conformed to the proof where there is an objection taken in due time to the sufficiency of the pleading which sets forth the cause of action. It is only where no objection is taken, or where, if at the end of the case evidence has been admitted without objection, the objection is taken, the court makes an order amending the pleadings to conform to

<sup>35</sup> In Schmidt v. Gunther (1874) 5 Daly (N. Y.) 452, it was said: "We might, if the objection had not been taken below, have, upon appeal, amended the proceeding so as to conform it to the proof. . . . But as a general rule we have refused to do so where the objection was taken upon the trial, and the party, being then advised of the defect, had the opportunity, but neglected to apply to the court, to amend the proceeding."

The rule was laid down in Askew v. Pollock (1872) 66 N. C. 49, that where the ground of the appeal is an erroneous ruling of the lower court, an amendment cannot be allowed on an appeal which would defeat the appeal. In this case the lower court had erroneously refused to quash proceedings which were not brought against the board of county commissioners, but improperly brought against certain individuals who were styled commissioners in the petition.

It was held in Gill v. Aetna Live Stock Ins. Co. (1894) 82 Hun, 363, 31 N. Y. Supp. 485, that an amendment of a complaint which failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action would not be allowed on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, where the defendant, before the introduction of any evidence, moved that the complaint be dismissed for failure to state a cause of action and the motion was denied and judgment erroneously entered for the plaintiff on the pleadings, an amendment of the complaint not being requested in the trial court. To a similar effect, see Pope v. Terre Haute Car & Mfg. Co. (1887) 107 N. Y. 61, 13 N. E. 592.

Where, in an action against a physician for malpractice, the plaintiff failed to plead that he was not guilty of contributory negligence, and did not offer to cure the defect by amendment, it was held that he could not be relieved from the consequences of his neglect on appeal from an erroneous ruling of the lower court denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment. Decatur v. Simpson (1902) 115 Iowa, 348, 88 N. W. 839.

It was held in Baker v. Winter (1859) 15 Md. 1, a proceeding to enforce a mechanics' lien, that failure of the lien claim to state the nature and character of the contract on which it was based, as required by statute, could not be cured by amendment on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff after overruling of a motion to quash. And it was held also that this conclusion was not affected by the fact that the statute provided that "amendments may at any time hereafter be made in the proceedings, . . . commencing with the claim or lien filed . . . and extending to all subsequent proceedings as may be necessary and proper to effect the objects" of the statute, except that the amount of the claim or lien should not be increased. The court said that notwithstanding the apparently comprehensive language of the statute it could not be supposed that the legislature designed to authorize such an amendment in a court having appellate jurisdiction only, that "where a scire facias issues upon a lien claim which the defendant's counsel believes to be essentially defective on its face, although he may have other valid grounds of defense he may think it is quite safe to rely only upon the apparent defect. Should the decision be against the defendant and he appeals, then, if, in the court above, an amendment of the defect is applied for and granted, and the decision below is affirmed, there can be no opportunity for the defendant ever to avail himself of his other grounds of defense. Whereas, if such amendments are required to be made in the court below, then the defendant will be in a position where he may present his defense by such pleas and issues as may be proper for the decision of the court or of a jury."

So, in West v. Aberdeen & R. F. R. Co. (1906) 140 N. C. 620, 53 S. E. 477, 6 Ann. Cas. 360, the supreme court held that it would not exercise its discretionary power of amendment on appeal to destroy an exception duly taken below, the case being one in which an action was brought by the husband alone for damages to land held by entireties, the plaintiff moving on appeal to make his wife a party, and the objection for defect of parties having been made below and overruled.

Where the complaint did not state a cause of action, and the defendant moved for dismissal of the suit at the beginning of the trial, which was denied, and objected to the introduction of evidence tending to supply the deficiencies in the complaint, it was held that the appellate court could not sustain the judgment for the plaintiff by allowing an amendment of the pleadings to conform to the proof. Thrall v. Cuba (1903) 88 App. Div. 410, 84 N. Y. Supp. 661.

the proof."<sup>36</sup> So, if there is a failure to prove the cause of action alleged, and proper objection on this ground is taken at the trial, and no amendment requested or granted, a recovery upon another cause of action distinct from that alleged cannot be sustained on the ground that the appellate court should allow an amendment of the pleadings to conform to the proof.<sup>37</sup> And that the defendant was probably not misled is not an answer on appeal to the objection of the variance.<sup>38</sup>

Under a count for money had and received, a judgment for damages for breach of a bond cannot be sustained on appeal, where the point of the insufficiency of the pleadings was raised below, by granting leave to the plaintiff to apply to the trial court for an amendment of the bill of exceptions to show that there was no surprise and that the case was fully tried, so as to enable him to save his verdict by an amendment of the pleadings; but the judgment will be reversed. Field v. Banks (1900) 177 Mass. 36, 58 N. E. 155.

In an action by a shipper against a railroad company for the value of live stock alleged to have been converted by the defendant to its own use during transportation, where the case was tried and submitted to the jury on the theory of an unlawful conversion by the defendant, and the jury found for the plaintiff, it was held on appeal that, as the evidence conclusively showed that there was no conversion, and the court had erroneously denied a motion by the defendant for a directed verdict, the judgment could not be sustained on the theory that the evidence showed negligence on the part of the defendant, and that the complaint should therefore be amended to conform to the facts proved. Spokane Grain Co. v. Great Northern Exp. Co. (1909) 55 Wash. 545, 104 Pac. 794.

A complaint will not be amended on appeal to conform to the facts proved, so as to support a recovery on a ground of liability not suggested by the pleadings, where the defendant has taken proper objection in the lower court. Springer v. Westcott (1895) 87 Hun, 190, 33 N. Y. Supp. 805.

An amendment of a complaint will not be allowed on appeal, by changing the cause of action alleged to one resting on different grounds, so as to conform the complaint to the theory of the case erroneously submitted to the jury over the defendant's objection. Thus, in an action for injury sustained in falling upon the sidewalk in front of premises owned by the defendant, a complaint charging that the injuries were caused wholly by the carelessness and negligence of the defendant, and stating a cause of action based only on negligence, cannot be amended on appeal, to support the judgment, to show a cause of action based on nuisance, the case having been L.R.A.1916D.

2. Not affecting merits.

It has been held, however, that if the objection which is erroneously overruled by the trial court is one of form rather than of substance, the party objecting is not justified in relying thereon for a reversal in the appellate court, and under such circumstances, if judgment is rendered against him, the appellate court may deem the formal defect in the pleading cured by amendment and affirm the judgment.<sup>39</sup> The New York court in this instance stated in effect erroneously submitted to the jury on the latter theory. Fisher v. Rankin (1889) 55 Hun, 606, 25 Abb. N. C. 191, 7 N. Y. Supp. 837.

In Scheuer v. Rosenbaum (1900) 33 Misc. 768, 67 N. Y. Supp. 936, where the complaint alleged a contract for delivery of goods ordered by the defendant from the plaintiff on a specified date, and a tender on that date, but the evidence was insufficient to warrant a finding of performance of the contract as alleged, it was held that an amendment of the pleading could not be made on appeal, to conform to the proof, to support a judgment for the plaintiff, so as to allege a waiver of performance of the contract as to time, in view of the fact that no waiver had been pleaded, and after a motion had been made to dismiss at the close of the evidence, the court had erroneously submitted the case to the jury on the theory of waiver.

Where the defendant has directed his evidence to the issues raised by the pleadings, and the proof establishes his defense, but the trial court erroneously rules against him on a requested direction for a verdict, the judgment for the plaintiff cannot be sustained by permitting an amendment of the complaint in the appellate court to conform to the proof, so as to permit a recovery on a different theory from that on which the action was brought and thereby eliminate this defense. O'Connell v. George Morrison Co. (1911) 132 N. Y. Supp. 358.

<sup>36</sup> Rutty v. Consolidated Fruit Jar Co. (1889) 52 Hun, 492, 6 N. Y. Supp. 23.

<sup>37</sup> Southwick v. First Nat. Bank (1881) 84 N. Y. 420.

<sup>38</sup> (N. Y.) Ibid.

So, if the plaintiff has been permitted to prove and recover upon a wholly different cause of action from that alleged, without an amendment being requested or allowed, and against a seasonable objection by the defendant, the pleadings cannot be amended on appeal to conform to the proof, even though the defendant was probably not misled. Hill v. Weidinger (1906) 110 App. Div. 683, 97 N. Y. Supp. 473.

<sup>39</sup> Borst v. Griffin (1832) 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 307, where, in an action of ejectment for dower, the plaintiff claimed in her declaration an undivided third of the premises, and on the trial proved an assign-that the presumption that the defeated party, relying on his objection at the trial, which was sound, omitted to bring forward any other objection or defense that he might have had, must be confined to cases where the objection taken is one of substance, and that in all other cases the party omits the introduction of his defense on the merits at the peril of an amendment under the statute.

So, in a Pennsylvania case,<sup>40</sup> under the rule that an amendment may be made or deemed made on appeal where it is in furtherance of justice and the case has been heard and decided on its merits, and no real injury will be done to the party complaining of it, it was held that an amendment of a declaration on a note might be amended on appeal to the supreme court and the judgment for the plaintiff affirmed, where there was a variance between the declaration and the note introduced in evidence as to the date of the note; but that, as the defendant's objection to the introduction of the note in evidence because of the variance was good, an amendment would be allowed only on payment of costs in error.

The supreme court of Wisconsin has laid down the rule that where evidence has been admitted over a general objection, although it was in strictness inadmissible on technical grounds, as that the pleadings did not properly state the facts or contained no statement thereof, yet if the evidence admitted establishes a good cause of action or defense on the merits, and it appears that justice has been done and that there was no surprise or improper advantage taken, the judgment on appeal will not be disturbed, but an amendment will be directed, or the court will consider the pleadings as having been amended in the lower court.<sup>41</sup> And under the Indiana statute, the mere fact that objection has been made and overruled to the introduction of evidence on the ground of a variance between it and the pleadings does not entitle the party objecting to a reversal of the judgment against him because of the variance, if he makes no claim on the trial that he has been surprised or misled, since the variance under these circumstances, it is provided by the statute, is immaterial, and the trial court might have ordered an amendment of the pleadings, and the appellate court is required in such a case to treat the pleadings as amended.<sup>42</sup>

Even where a demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained on the ground that it failed to state a cause of action, it has been held that the overruling of the demurrer is not reversible error if the proofs introduced by the defendant supplied the defect in the complaint, since the complaint may be amended after judgment to conform to the proof, or the defect disregarded.<sup>43</sup> It has been held also that even if a ment to her by admeasurers of a certain part, for which a verdict was found in her favor over the objection of the defendant that the plaintiff should be nonsuited because by her own showing she was not entitled to recover the property demanded, it being held that to support the judgment the declaration might be amended in the supreme court so as to claim the land specifically assigned.

<sup>40</sup> Waite v. Palmer (1875) 78 Pa. 192.

<sup>41</sup> Bowman v. Van Kuren (1871) 29 Wis. 209, 9 Am. Rep. 554.

This rule was in effect applied in Gill v. Rice (1861) 13 Wis. 549, where there was no claim of surprise and the case had been fairly tried on its merits, the supreme court affirming the judgment and directing the case to be remanded that the pleading might be amended to conform to the facts proved, although the defeated party had objected to the admission of the evidence because of the defective pleading.

<sup>42</sup> N. S. Huey Co. v. Johnston (1905) 164 Ind. 489, 73 N. E. 996. To a similar effect is Louisville & S. I. Traction Co. v. Lloyd (1914) — Ind. App. —, 105 N. E. 519.

In Louisville & S. I. Traction Co. v. Lottich (1914) — Ind. App. —, 106 N. E. 903, an action for damages for personal injuries, where the defendant objected to L.R.A.1916D

the introduction of evidence of certain injuries claimed to have been sustained by the plaintiff, on the ground that they were not alleged in the complaint, and the court overruled the objection and admitted the evidence, the appellate court, in affirming the judgment, said: "Where there is neither objection nor proof that the complaining party is unprepared to meet such evidence, and the objection rests on the ground of variance, or that the averments of the complaint are insufficient to warrant the admission of such evidence, the trial court may order the pleading to be so amended as to admit the proof, and where that has not been done, on appeal, this court will consider the pleading so amended as to conform to the proof, where, as here, such amendment and proof do not relate to a new or different cause of action, or give any new right to a recovery separate and distinct from that already stated in the pleading so amended, or where the amendment does not change the theory of the complaint or pleading amended, but simply permits proof of an additional phase of the injury resulting from the causes originally stated in the complaint."

<sup>43</sup> McKinney v. Jones (1882) 55 Wis. 39, 11 N. W. 606, 12 N. W. 381.

complaint is subject to demurrer for failure to state a material fact essential to the recovery, and a demurrer is overruled, a judgment for the plaintiff will not be reversed on appeal where it appears to be right, and the omitted fact was the principal issue on the trial; but the court will treat the complaint as amended to conform to the proof, if necessary to support the judgment.<sup>44</sup>

And in other cases amendments of the pleadings have in some instances been permitted on terms, or regarded as made, in the appellate court, to support the judgment, notwithstanding an erroneous ruling of the trial court against the defeated party, where such a course appeared to be in the interest of substantial justice.<sup>45</sup>

<sup>44</sup> Lang v. Crescent Coal Co. (1906) 44 Wash. 267, 87 Pac. 261. In this case an action was brought on a contract which contained a provision that the work was to be done to the satisfaction of the defendant's superintendent, and the complaint failed to allege that the work was so performed. This, however, was the principal issue tried in the case after the overruling of the defendant's demurrer. The court on appeal held that, assuming that the complaint was deficient and that the court should have sustained the demurrer, under the liberal practice permitted by it, the error was not sufficient to require a reversal, since, had the demurrer been sustained, the plaintiff would have been allowed to amend.

Although the declaration in an action of ejectment failed to state the extent of the plaintiff's interest in the land, as required by a statute, and objection on this ground was taken by demurrer, which was overruled, it was held that after a verdict specifying such interest, the appellate court would not reverse because the objection had become one merely of form, and by the statute all defects in form after judgment might be amended by the court in which the judgment was rendered or by the court on appeal, if substantial justice required the amendment and it was in affirmance of the judgment. Royston v. Wear (1859) 3 Head (Tenn.) 7.

Where a special demurrer alleging a misjoinder of parties defendant should have been sustained, the court on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff in Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. McElmurray (1915) — Ga. App. —, 85 S. E. 804, allowed the plaintiff to amend his petition on payment of costs of the writ of error, by dismissing the suit as to one of the defendants who was not liable and had been improperly joined, and affirmed the judgment.

<sup>45</sup> Where the defendant in an action for damages for assault objected to evidence of the effect of the assault on the health of the party assaulted, but made no claim of surprise or unpreparedness to meet the proof when offered over his objection, and offered evidence in rebuttal, it was held that the admission of the evidence over objection, if erroneous because the complaint contained no allegation to support it, was not reversible error, and that the complaint might be deemed amended on appeal to support the judgment for the plaintiff. Winston v. Terrace (1914) 78 Wash. 146, 138 Pac. 673. L.R.A.1916D.

Where the case had been fully and fairly tried on the merits, and there was no claim of surprise, but the plaintiff's objection that certain evidence was not admissible under the defendants' answer was erroneously overruled and the evidence admitted, it was held on appeal that the defendants should be allowed to amend their answer on such terms as appeared just to the superior court, and that on the filing of this amendment the exceptions should be overruled. Denham v. Bryant (1885) 139 Mass. 110, 28 N. E. 691.

And where the defendant directed the trial court's attention to the fact that no action could be maintained upon the declaration, the form of the action being erroneous, but the case was fully and fairly tried on the merits without surprise to the defendant, it was held that the appellate court might overrule exceptions after judgment for the plaintiff, upon amendment of the declaration from trespass quare clausum to case, on such terms as might be ordered by the superior court. Beers v. McGinnis (1906) 191 Mass. 279, 77 N. E. 768.

Where the declaration in an action for breach of contract alleged an agreement by the plaintiff to sell to the defendant a certain quantity of lead, to be delivered in lots of 100 casks "at different times in the year 1877," and the defendant objected on the trial to the introduction of evidence showing a contract for delivery of 100 casks per month, on the ground of a variance between the proof and the declaration, but the objection was overruled and a verdict found for the plaintiff, it was held on appeal that while there was a variance as to the description of the contract between the declaration and the proof, as the merits of the case had been fully tried, the variance could be cured after verdict by an amendment of the declaration, the plaintiff taking no costs since the trial, and the exceptions being overruled on such an amendment. Keller v. Webb (1879) 126 Mass. 393.

In Bennett v. Baum (1911) 90 Neb. 320, 133 N. W. 439, where the defendants had objected to the introduction of the evidence, the court, while stating that ordinarily such amendments would not be permitted, held that, as the action was of an equitable nature and it was clear that all the evidence to sustain or defeat the issue had been produced by the respective litigants in the district court, it was competent for the supreme court on appeal, in the interests of justice, to permit amended pleadings to be filed so as to conform to the proof.

c. Amendments to reverse judgment.

While, as appears from the above discussion, the practice is common of allowing amendments of the pleadings on appeal to conform to the proof, in order to support a judgment, the appellate courts have refused to regard such an amendment as made, or permit an amendment to conform to the proof, for the purpose of reversing a judgment otherwise correct.<sup>46</sup> Thus, in a New York case<sup>47</sup> in which a motion was made at general term for an order conforming the complaint to the facts as proved, the court said: "The only effect of the amendment would be to make the judgment erroneous and reversible solely by reason of such amendment, notwithstanding the decisions at the trial and subsequently at the general term were correct and according to law, as the pleadings stood when those decisions

An amendment of the answer nunc pro tunc, so as to make it a general denial, was allowed on terms in the appellate court in Hoffman v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1884) 18 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 403, to support a judgment dismissing the complaint, where the plaintiff failed to establish a cause of action, although the trial court had erroneously denied a motion by the plaintiff at the beginning of the trial for judgment on the pleadings.

Under the Washington statute requiring the supreme court on appeal to hear the case on its merits, disregard all technicalities, and consider amendments as made which could have been made, it was held not prejudicial error for the court to permit the plaintiff in an action for personal injuries, to prove, over the defendant's objection, acts of negligence not specifically set forth in the complaint, where it did not appear that the defendant had been surprised or misled, or had been prevented from fully presenting his case to the jury. Sjong v. Occidental Fish Co. (1914) 78 Wash. 4, 138 Pac. 313.

See also Landers v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. (1905) 114 Mo. App. 655, 90 S. W. 117, where the plaintiff voluntarily dismissed a count of his petition under the mistaken impression that the allegations therein were also in the remaining count, and the instructions erroneously related to the allegations of both counts, and it was held that the plaintiff could not on appeal amend his petition so as to restore the dismissed count; but that the case would not be reversed unless the error materially affected the merits.

<sup>46</sup> Peterson v. Lincoln County (1912) 92 Neb. 167, 138 N. W. 122, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1309; Star S. S. Co. v. Mitchell (1865) 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 396; Williams v. Birch (1860) 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 674; McGinniss v. New York (1876) 6 Daly (N. Y.) 416; Weems v. Shaughnessy (1893) 70 Hun, 175, 24 N. Y. Supp. 271; Howell v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1895) 92 Hun, 423, 36 N. Y. Supp. 544; Volkening v. De Graaf (1880) 81 N. Y. 263; Amherst College v. Ritch (1897) 151 N. Y. 282, 37 L.R.A. 305, 45 N. E. 876; Justices of Tyrrel v. Simmons (1855) 48 N. C. (3 Jones, L.) 187, see also Englis v. Furniss (1856) 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 82 (the court stating that there is nothing in the Code warranting any amendment of the pleadings except for the purpose of sustaining the judgment).

In Howell v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1895) L.R.A.1916D.

92 Hun, 423, 36 N. Y. Supp. 544, the court said that "in support of a judgment the court may on review treat pleadings as though they had been amended so as to conform to the facts found, when it can be done without overruling an exception well taken upon the question of variance between the pleadings and proofs. . . . But that rule does not apply with the same force to create error and for the purpose of reversal of a judgment." In this case it was held that the appellate court would not amend the complaint or regard it as amended, to reverse the judgment, where the evidence did not entitle the plaintiff to recover on the cause of action alleged in the complaint, and the defendant on the trial properly raised the question that the plaintiff must rely upon the cause of action alleged, and no motion for leave to amend the complaint was made.

The rule that an amendment of the pleadings will not be allowed by an appellate court to reverse the judgment was applied in Justices of Tyrrel v. Simmons (1855) 48 N. C. (3 Jones, L.) 187, where the action for a breach of contract should have been by a county instead of by justices of the peace in their individual names, and the lower court had rightly ordered a nonsuit.

It was held in Abbott v. Reedy (1904) 9 Idaho, 577, 75 Pac. 764, that where the issue as to the existence of a separate and distinct water right and appropriation is not made by the pleadings, and the proofs tend to establish such a right, but no amendment of the pleadings is offered in the trial court, the appellate court will not go beyond the issue so made to modify the judgment.

The North Carolina statute authorizing the supreme court to make amendments in the same manner as they should have been made in the superior or county courts, "at any time, in any thing" was said (dictum) in Grist v. Hodges (1831) 14 N. C. (3 Dev. L.) 198, to contemplate such amendments only as were necessary to support the judgment below, and not to contemplate an amendment which would require a new plea or replication, and render the reversal of a judgment on a new trial necessary.

<sup>47</sup> Williams v. Birch (1860) 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 674.

Attention is called to a class of cases represented by Balcom v. Woodruff (1849) 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 13, and Harrison v. Magoon (1905) 16 Haw. 485, which this annotation does not purport to cover, dealing were made. We are not aware of any decisions which hold it a proper exercise of discretion, or that the court has the power to so amend the pleadings, after a trial and a review at the general term of exceptions there taken, as to convert, merely by force of such amendment, a correct decision into an erroneous one, and an irreversible into a reversible judgment."

Although the facts were such as to call only for the application of the rule that an appellate court will in a proper case permit an amendment of the pleadings to conform to the proof for the purpose of sustaining a judgment, but will not grant such permission to defeat a judgment, the majority of the court in a Nebraska case<sup>48</sup> indicated that there might be circumstances under which a different rule would obtain. Part of the

with the question whether the appellate court may under some circumstances, in order, for instance, to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations, permit an amendment of the pleadings and a new trial, the judgment being otherwise correct. In the latter case on appeal from a judgment for the defendant, the court held that, although a new action would be barred by the statute of limitations, it could not permit the plaintiff to amend the complaint, and have a new trial rendered necessary by the amendment, in the absence of error in the judgment rendered. But in the former case the general rule that a party who has not applied for an amendment until he has been nonsuited cannot at general term obtain an amendment, and a new trial rendered necessary by the amendment, was held to yield to an exception under the peculiar circumstances existing, the statute of limitations having run against the demand, and the objection being technical, and not having been made on a previous trial.

<sup>48</sup> Peterson v. Lincoln County (1912) 92 Neb. 167, 138 N. W. 122, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1309 (suit to quiet title).

<sup>49</sup> In an action against a railroad company for damages for delay in the transportation and delivery of goods, a judgment for special damages will not be reversed on the ground that the complaint did not contain sufficient allegations to warrant a recovery for such damages, if the facts proved without objection sustain the judgment, but the complaint on appeal will be considered as amended to conform to the proof. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. King (1912) 104 Ark. 215, 148 S. W. 1035.

After a general verdict for the plaintiff in an action to recover the amount of a note where the complaint erroneously contained two counts, the two together stating but one cause of action, it was held that on appeal the court would regard as done what ought to have been done and L.R.A.1916D.

court were of the opinion that an amendment not for the purpose of sustaining a judgment, but for the purpose of reversing it, not to cure error, but to create it, should never be allowed on appeal; but the rule laid down by the majority was that "the power of the supreme court to permit an amendment of a pleading to conform to the proofs is, as a rule, only exercised to sustain a judgment, and not to reverse it, except where it clearly appears that a refusal to permit the amendment would cause a miscarriage of justice."

III. Applications.

a. In general.

The principles above considered have been applied under various circumstances.<sup>50</sup> Sometimes, it will be ob-treat the two counts as one. Oley v. Miller (1901) 74 Conn. 304, 50 Atl. 744.

Where an amendment in matter of form is allowable, the appellate court will give the party entitled to the amendment the benefit of it as though it had been actually made. McKay v. Friebele (1858) 8 Fla. 21.

On exception to a judgment refusing a petition for certiorari after a verdict in a justice's court adverse to the plaintiff in a lien foreclosure proceeding, where the case was argued on appeal by both sides upon the theory that one of the contested issues was whether or not demand for payment was made before the institution of the proceeding, it was held that the case would be dealt with as though a counter affidavit was duly filed, denying that such demand was made. Hutson v. Sutton (1912) 10 Ga. App. 844, 74 S. E. 447.

In an action on an insurance policy where evidence of forfeiture was introduced without objection, and this question was treated by both parties as an issue on the trial, it was held that the plaintiff on an appeal could not insist that this was not an issue, although forfeiture was not especially pleaded. American Ins. Co. v. Walston (1903) 111 Ill. App. 133.

In Missouri Valley R. Co. v. Caldwell (1871) 8 Kan. 244, it was held in an action against a carrier to recover the value of property damaged in transportation, that a judgment for the plaintiff would not be reversed on the ground of variance in that the petition alleged that the defendant as a common carrier received the property for transportation and so negligently handled it that it was damaged, and the proof showed an agreement for transportation relieving the carrier from its liability as an insurer, but not relieving it from liability for ordinary negligence. The court stated that, assuming this to be a case of variance, it was such a case as would manifestly have required the court to give leave to amend the petition to conform to served, the defects or variances are of a formal or technical nature, which it seems might simply have been regarded as of too immaterial or unsubstantial a the facts proved, since the defendant could not claim to be prejudiced by such an amendment, and the judgment ought therefore not to be disturbed because no formal amendment was made.

Without indicating the particular defects, the court in Grandstaff v. Brown (1879) 23 Kan. 176, stated: "If some of the allegations of the petition might be considered as slightly defective, still the petition may now be considered as amended, so as to make its allegations correspond to the facts proved. . . . There can be no question but that the evidence was sufficient as to all facts concerning which it is claimed that the petition was defective. Besides, after all the evidence was introduced, . . . the defendant . . . filed an amended answer, which helped to supply the supposed defective allegations of the petition."

"A defect in the pleadings or proceedings, which ought to have been corrected below by amendment, will be disregarded in the supreme court on appeal, or considered as amended. Wilkins v. Tourtellott (1883) 29 Kan. 513 (obiter).

In Wilcox & W. Organ Co. v. Lasley (1899) 40 Kan. 521, 20 Pac. 228, the court said: "Conceding the variance between some of the allegations of the answer and the facts established, still, as the case is such a one as would manifestly require the trial court to give leave to amend the answer to conform to the facts proven, and as the plaintiff could not justly claim to be prejudiced by such an amendment, we do not think the judgment ought to be disturbed because no formal amendment has actually been made. We will consider the amendment as having been made."

In Carnahan v. Lloyd (1896) 4 Kan. App. 605, 46 Pac. 323, where the trial court sustained a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence, it was held that the ruling could not be sustained on the ground of a technical variance between the petition and the proof, in that the petition alleged that the note evidencing the debt sued for had been transferred by the original payee to the plaintiff, and the proof showed that there had been several intermediate transfers. It was said: "If an amendment in this respect was necessary, this court, in furtherance of justice, will consider such an amendment made, for it is evident that no one has been misled to his prejudice."

Where an allegation in the reply was treated as an amendment to the petition, and the rights of the parties fairly and fully considered under it, it was held that the appellate court would treat the petition as amended. Ruffner v. Ridley (1883) 81 Ky. 165.

In an action involving a settlement of partnership accounts, it was held in Bolinger v. Hanson (1883) 5 Ky. L. Rep. 186 (abstract), that, as the pleadings did not state facts showing that a partnership existed, the parties on appeal should be permitted to reform the pleadings and to present issues which it seemed were supposed to have been made.

Under the Massachusetts statute authorizing the court to allow amendments upon just and reasonable terms at any time before judgment, it has been held on the hearing of exceptions taken by the defendant after a verdict for the plaintiff, that the supreme court may allow amendments of the complaint so as to cure a variance between the complaint and the proof which has not affected the merits of the case or misled or surprised the defendant; but that where objection on the ground of variance is made at the trial, the plaintiff, if he amends, is not entitled to cost accrued after the trial. Cleaves v. Lord (1854) 3 Gray (Mass.) 66; Peck v. Waters (1870) 104 Mass. 345; Nichols v. Prince (1864) 8 Allen (Mass.) 404.

It was held in Stone v. White (1857) 8 Gray (Mass.) 589, that the supreme court had power under statute to allow an amendment of a declaration in an action on a contract, by striking out an alleged consideration of which there was no proof, the declaration alleging two good and distinct considerations; but as the trial court had erroneously refused to instruct the jury that the plaintiff was bound to prove the whole consideration as alleged, the plaintiff would be allowed no costs incurred since the trial.

An objection that there was a variance between the declaration and the theory upon which the case was submitted to the jury, made for the first time on appeal, is not available to reverse the judgment, if the variance is one which might have been cured by amendment, since the appellate court will regard the amendment as made to conform to the proof. Scendar v. Winona Copper Co. (1912) 169 Mich. 665, 135 N. W. 951.

In Humphries v. Spafford (1883) 14 Neb. 488, 16 N. W. 911, the court said: "We have no doubt whatever that an amendment at this stage of the case is in harmony with § 144 of the Code, where the ends of justice seem to demand it." The court was of the opinion that the plaintiff should be permitted in the supreme court to have the petition amended and the case remanded to the district court for further proceedings, where the petition apparently failed to set forth her claim, although she had recovered the amount claimed in the petition.

Where substantial justice has been done and evidence has been introduced without objection showing that the plaintiff is entitled to recover, an objection on appeal that the action should have been to recover on a quantum meruit, and not on contract, is not available to reverse the judgment for the plaintiff, but the appellate court will, if necessary, permit an amendment of the petition to conform to the proof, or remand nature to require a reversal of the judgment or an amendment of the pleadings.

And in cases of this kind some courts have held simply that the defect or varithe cause to the district court for that purpose. Homan v. Steele (1886) 18 Neb. 652, 26 N. W. 472.

On error from a judgment for the plaintiff in an action to recover the amount due on a note, the court held that, although it had no power to grant leave to amend the declaration, it could disregard what was clearly a clerical mistake in the name of the party alleged to have made the promise to pay. Rowell v. Bruce (1831) 5 N. H. 381.

The power of amendment conferred by the New Jersey practice act of 1874 extends to the court of errors and appeals; and that court may allow an amendment to sustain a judgment where the defect is merely a matter of form, and has not prejudiced in any way the adverse party. American Popular L. Ins. Co. v. Day (1876) 39 N. J. L. 89, 23 Am. Rep. 198. The rule was applied in this case to uphold a judgment for the plaintiff in an action on an insurance policy which was under seal, where the form of the action should have been covenant instead of assumpsit.

An amendment of an action from assumpsit to one of covenant, the instrument sued upon being found to be under seal, may be permitted in the appellate court to support the verdict, where the real controversy has been tried and it is not claimed that the defense was in any respect limited or abridged by the error. Redstrake v. Cumberland Mut. F. Ins. Co. (1882) 44 N. J. L. 294.

Where, upon the incontrovertible facts, a verdict must necessarily pass in favor of the plaintiff for false representation, although the recovery by him cannot be sustained on the ground of a breach of contract, on which the action is based, a new trial will not be granted, but the pleadings may be amended on appeal to support the recovery. Westervelt v. Demaree (1884) 46 N. J. L. 37, 50 Am. Rep. 400.

An objection made for the first time on appeal, that the form of the action should have been trespass instead of trespass on the case, which might have been obviated by amendment in the lower court, may be cured by amendment on appeal, to support the judgment. Hasbrouck v. Winkler (1886) 48 N. J. L. 431, 6 Atl. 22.

In O'Neill v. Leeds (1899) — N. J. L. —, 43 Atl. 650, where it appears that the real issue between the parties had been tried, and that the trial court had properly directed a verdict for the plaintiff, it was held that an amendment of the declaration might be made in the supreme court on a rule to show cause why a new trial should not be granted, by inserting in the declaration a count which the plaintiff had failed to insert after having obtained permission so to do from the trial court.

Where the complaint alleged a contract for railroad grading to be done by the plaintiff for the defendant, and a refusal by the defendant to permit the plaintiff to L.R.A.1916D.

perform the work, while the proof showed a refusal by the defendant to execute the contemplated written contract embodying the terms agreed upon, it was held that, as the variance did not affect the merits of the case and the defect was merely formal, the complaint could be amended on appeal so as to support a judgment for the plaintiff. Pratt v. Hudson River R. Co. (1860) 21 N. Y. 305. The case was decided under § 173 of the Code, providing that the court may, before or after judgment, in furtherance of justice and on such terms as may be proper, amend any pleading by correcting a mistake in any respect or inserting other allegations material to the case, or, where the amendment does not change substantially the claim or defense, by conforming the pleading to the facts proved. And it was said that before the enactment of the statute a new trial would have been necessary.

Under the above provision of the New York Code, in an action against partners, an amendment of a supplemental answer setting up a claim by one member of a firm was held properly allowed at general term after a judgment for the defendant, so as to assert a claim by all the members of the firm, in accordance with the proof. Thompson v. Kessel (1864) 30 N. Y. 383.

In Fallon v. Lawler (1886) 102 N. Y. 228, 6 N. E. 392, it was held that a complaint in an action to enforce a mechanics' lien might be considered on appeal as amended to conform to the proof, so as to support the judgment, by alleging a new contract between the parties for the completion of the work, which was shown by evidence introduced without objection.

An objection that the complaint in an action on a contract does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is not available on appeal to reverse a judgment for the plaintiff, if the evidence introduced without objection as not within the pleadings warranted the judgment, although at the opening of the case the defendant moved to dismiss the complaint as not stating facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and the motion was denied with leave to renew, where subsequent motions during the trial to dismiss the complaint did not include its insufficiency as a ground therefor; but the complaint on appeal may be amended to conform to the proof, if necessary to sustain the judgment. Johnson v. Albany (1903) 86 App. Div. 567, 83 N. Y. Supp. 1002.

In Reit v. Meyer (1914) 160 App. Div. 752, 146 N. Y. Supp. 75, it was held that, for the purpose of determining on appeal the correctness of a judgment dismissing the complaint in an action for malicious prosecution, the allegations of the complaint would be deemed supplemented by the opening statement of counsel for the plaintiff as to the manner in which the prosecution had terminated, it not being ance should be disregarded on appeal as immaterial. As before stated, cases of this kind are not generally included in the note. But even where the variance claimed that in so far as the opening statement was broader than the allegations of the complaint in this respect the evidence would not have been admissible.

Where the complaint in an action to recover payments and expenses under a contract for conveyance of property to the plaintiff alleged a refusal by the defendant to convey and an election by the plaintiff to rescind the contract, and evidence was introduced without objection as to its admissibility under the pleadings, showing a partial destruction of the property by fire before the time agreed upon for the conveyance, which would justify the plaintiff in rescinding the contract, it was held that the pleadings on appeal might be amended to conform to the proof, to support a judgment for the plaintiff. Listman v. Hickey (1892) 65 Hun, 8, 19 N. Y. Supp. 880.

In an action for an accounting between partners, in affirming a judgment for the plaintiff the court, in Tannenbaum v. Armeny (1894) 81 Hun, 581, 31 N. Y. Supp. 55, said: "It is urged that there is a material variance between the agreement alleged in the complaint and the proof adduced by the plaintiff, the plaintiff alleging no time for the copartnership, and the court having found that it was to exist for one year, and that there were some discrepancies in the proof and allegations in regard to localities. These objections are of no avail upon this appeal, because if there is any discrepancy between the allegations of the complaint and the findings and judgment of the court, the pleadings will be amended in order to support the judgment."

A complaint in an action on an insurance policy, showing ownership of the property in the plaintiff when the insurance was effected, may be amended on appeal, if necessary to support the judgment, to conform to the proof showing that the plaintiff continued to be the owner to the time of the trial. Davis v. Grand Rapids F. Ins. Co. (1895) 15 Misc. 263, 36 N. Y. Supp. 792, affirmed without opinion in (1898) 157 N. Y. 685, 51 N. E. 1090.

Under § 723 of the New York Code, providing that the court may, upon the trial or at any other stage of the action, before or after judgment, in furtherance of justice, and on such terms as it deems just, amend any pleading or other proceeding by adding or striking out the name of a party, or by correcting a mistake in any respect, or by inserting an allegation material to the case, or, where the amendment does not change substantially the claim or the sense, by conforming the pleading or other proceedings to the facts proved, and that in every stage of the action the court must disregard an error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party, it was held in Van Orden v. Morris (1897) 19 Misc. 497, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1108, an action for a broker's commission for procuring a loan, that a variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof, in that the complaint alleged the procuring by the plaintiff of the proposed lender and the making of the loan, and the proof showed that the loan was never actually made, although the lender was ready to make the loan, would be disregarded on appeal, or the complaint amended to conform to the facts proved, the evidence having been introduced without objection.

In an action against a railroad company for assault of a passenger by a conductor, where the action was brought in the municipal court, which was without jurisdiction because the complaint alleged a cause of action for assault, but the case was tried on the merits without objection and a judgment rendered for the plaintiff, it was held on appeal that, since the complaint could have been framed according to the evidence for damages for breach of contract, and such an action would have been within the jurisdiction of the municipal court, the complaint could be amended accordingly on the appeal and the judgment affirmed. Rein v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (1905) 47 Misc. 675, 94 N. Y. Supp. 636. The court cited § 166 of the municipal court act, which it stated required the court to allow a pleading to be amended at any time if substantial justice would be promoted thereby, and § 326, extending, it was said, that requirement by implication to the appellate court.

In an action for injury to mortgage security, an omission in the complaint to allege insolvency of the mortgagor may be cured by amendment in the appellate court to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff, where evidence introduced without objection establishes such insolvency, and the course of the trial is the same as if the allegation had been in the complaint. Rowland v. Sprauls (1893) 66 Hun, 635, 50 N. Y. S. R. 921, 21 N. Y. Supp. 895.

Where the judgment contained an item of recovery not embraced in the pleadings, but sustained by the proof, and the question had been fairly litigated, it was held that the appellate court might treat the pleadings as amended, or allow an amendment, in such respect as the court at special term would have allowed. Foote v. Roberts (1867) 7 Robt. (N. Y.) 17.

It was held in White v. Reed (1890) 26 Jones & S. 333, 11 N. Y. Supp. 575, that the appellate court in an action to set aside a sale of partnership property and for an accounting might, if necessary to sustain a judgment for the defendants for the sum found due them from the plaintiff, order the answers to be amended by inserting a prayer for affirmative relief. The judgment was on appeal modified on other points in (1891) 124 N. Y. 468, 26 N. E. 1037.

Where evidence was admitted without objection to disprove the due execution of an assignment by a firm, it was held on appeal from a judgment declaring the assignment void, that, although the plead-appeared to be of an unsubstantial nature the courts in some cases have treated the matter from the standpoint of amendment of the pleadings, and ings were insufficient to warrant the introduction of the evidence over objection, the case would be treated as if the pleadings had been properly amended. Hooper v. Beecher (1887) 7 N. Y. S. R. 405.

It was held in Hudson v. Swan (1879) 7 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 324, that a complaint in an action to recover possession of personal property which alleged ownership in the plaintiff could be amended, on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, to conform to the proof, which showed that the plaintiff and the defendant were tenants in common of the chattel, and that the plaintiff had a lien thereon by agreement and was entitled to possession until satisfaction of the lien, the case having been tried without objection that under the pleadings the plaintiff could not recover by proving a right to possession as lienor. The decision, upholding the judgment for the plaintiff, was, however, reversed in (1881) 83 N. Y. 552, on the ground that the question was not simply one of amendment of the pleadings to conform to the proof, but that there had been error in permitting the plaintiff, who throughout the trial claimed as sole owner of the property, and had submitted this issue to the jury, to be allowed, over the defendant's objection, at the same time to submit to the jury, without abandoning the former claim, the inconsistent theory that he was entitled to possession as lienor.

It was held in Flaherty v. Greenman (1878) 7 Daly (N. Y.) 481, that, if necessary to support the judgment, the general term would allow an amendment of a complaint in an action against a carrier for loss of a trunk, alleging the loss while in charge of defendants "as common carriers of passengers and baggage," to conform to the proof, showing that the defendants were carriers of freight as well as of passengers, and that the trunk might have been lost while being carried as freight.

It was held in Hinman v. Booth (1839) 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 267, that a declaration in an action of ejectment in which the plaintiffs claimed one half of the premises might be amended in the supreme court to support a verdict for the plaintiffs for one fourth of the premises, to which it was found they were entitled. It was said that there was no objection of a variance made at the trial, but if it were otherwise, the court would now allow the plaintiffs to amend on easy terms rather than grant a new trial.

An amendment of the declaration which would have been allowed as of course in the lower court after verdict was held allowable in the supreme court on appeal in Weed v. Richardson (1837) 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 535, to support the judgment for the plaintiffs, on payment by them of the costs in both courts.

In Baxter v. Baxter (1856) 48 N. C. (3 Jones, L.) 303, the supreme court allowed an amendment of the declaration by extending the term of the demise in an action of ejectment, so as to support the judgment for the plaintiff, the term stated having expired before the judgment in the lower court was rendered, but the point not having been called to the attention of the court.

Where a petition in an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien was defective in failing to allege that the material was actually used in the building, but no proper objection was taken to the petition to reach this defect, and evidence introduced without objection showed that the material was actually used in the construction of the building, it was held that, to support the judgment, the petition would be considered on appeal as if the proper amendment had been made. Ryndak v. Seawell (1904) 13 Okla. 737, 76 Pac. 170.

Where the petition in an action on an insurance policy alleged performance of all conditions precedent to a recovery, which the defendant specifically denied, and on the trial, in the cross-examination of the plaintiff, the defendant brought out evidence without objection sufficient to prove a waiver, it was held that, to support the judgment, the petition would be considered amended to conform to the facts proved, so as to put in issue a waiver of one of the conditions of the policy. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Griffin (1912) 33 Okla. 178, 124 Pac. 300.

Where, in an action for commission for a sale of land, the plaintiff declared upon an express contract for payment of 5 per cent commission, and the proof failed as to this allegation, but evidence was introduced without objection proving that 5 per cent was the usual and customary commission, it was held that the pleadings might be regarded as amended to conform to the proof, to justify an instruction submitting to the jury the question of a reasonable commission. Carson v. Vance (1913) 35 Okla. 584, 130 Pac. 946.

In Morris v. McNamee (1851) 17 Pa. 173, it was held on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, that a declaration might be amended in the supreme court by striking out an improper allegation which had not affected the trial of the case, but might, it was feared, prejudice the rights of the defendant in another action. The court said: "Our statute of amendments declares a valuable principle, when it requires that no suit 'shall be set aside for an informality;' and this improper averment is a mere informality, if it has not entered into the merits of the cause before the jury."

In Chapin v. Cambria Iron Co. (1891) 145 Pa. 478, 22 Atl. 1041, where the plaintiff's statement of claim in an action of assumpsit was, the court said, perhaps open to criticism for want of clearness, it was held that as there was no demurrer, after a trial on the merits, verdict, and judgment for the plaintiff, no defect would be fatal held that the pleadings might be amended on appeal to conform to the proof, or the amendment would be regarded as made. This treatment of the question unless it was shown to have injuriously affected the trial; but the proper amendment would be considered to have been made.

Where an action was begun by scire facias on the bond of a committee of a lunatic, but was amended before trial by changing the form of the action to assumpsit, and on the trial the affidavit filed with the precipe for scire facias was treated as a statement, it was held on appeal that it would be so regarded for the purpose of sustaining the judgment for the plaintiff. Com. v. Patterson (1900) 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 136.

In an action of debt on a bond, where the plaintiff filed a copy of the bond, but no declaration, and the defendant pleaded nil debet, it was held on error, after the overruling of a motion for arrest of judgment for the plaintiff, that the judgment would not be reversed because of failure to file a declaration, the court saying: "The act of 14th March, 1872, § 1, . . . cures the alleged error in this case. It was in the power of the court under that act to order a declaration to be filed. After verdict, and in this court, the practice is to consider an amendment as made." Jones v. Freyer (1877) 3 W. N. C. (Pa.) 365.

The Washington statute providing that the supreme court shall consider all amendments as made which could have been made below was applied in Richardson v. Moore (1902) 30 Wash. 406, 71 Pac. 18, where the petition in a will contest case did not show upon its face any interest of the petitioner to entitle her to maintain the action, but evidence was introduced of the petitioner's interest under an earlier will of the decedent without objection as to the insufficiency of the pleadings.

The statute was also applied in Gallamore v. Olympia (1904) 34 Wash. 379, 75 Pac. 978, where, in an action for personal injuries, evidence was admitted without objection of pain and suffering, and the jury were instructed that they might take these elements into consideration in determining the amount of the verdict, the complaint making no special demand for such damages.

In Paine v. Smith (1873) 32 Wis. 335, where, over objection, proof of items not contained in the copy of the bill of particulars served was admitted, and the defendant made no affidavit of surprise, and no facts appeared which would have made an amendment of the bill improper, it was held that, on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, the admission of the proof would be regarded as equivalent to a direction by the lower court that the bill be amended.

In Giffert v. West (1875) 37 Wis. 115, it was held where the plaintiff, whose proof showed an implied warranty, under a complaint on an express warranty, offered to amend his complaint, the evidence having been introduced without objection, and the L.R.A.1916D.

lower court held the amendment unnecessary, that on appeal from a judgment in his favor the amendment would be considered as having been made, the court stating, however, that it might have been better practice to have amended the complaint.

The Wisconsin statute provides that the court may, in furtherance of justice before or after judgment, amend any pleading when the amendment does not change substantially the claim or defense, by conforming the pleading or proceeding to the facts proved. It was held in Murray v. Scribner (1889) 74 Wis. 602, 43 N. W. 549, that under this statute, in an action for damages for the flowage of the plaintiff's land by means of a dam, while an answer alleging that neither the dam nor the water therein had been changed in height within the preceding ten years did not state a good defense under the ten years' statute of limitations, as it did not allege the length of time the defendant had flowed the land of the plaintiff by means of the dam, yet where evidence on the latter issue was admitted without objection, the answer would be regarded on appeal as amended to conform to the proof.

Where a defense was not pleaded, but was established by evidence admitted without objection, the court in Deuster v. Mittag (1900) 105 Wis. 459, 81 N. W. 643, stated that the pleadings might have been amended on the trial or after judgment, or the court of its own motion might have amended the pleadings, so as to have made the same conform to the facts proved; and that the rule on appeal, in such a case, where there was no doubt but that the judgment was supported by the evidence, is to consider what ought or might have been done as done, or to make the proper amendment in the appellate court. The practice, it was said, was general in the appellate courts, but in this instance was enjoined on the court by statutes to the effect that the court should disregard every error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which did not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party, and that no judgment should be reversed by reason of such error or defect.

Where, in an action for damages, it was not objected that the question of estoppel by former recovery could not properly be shown under the general issue raised by the pleadings, and the court and counsel treated the question as properly within the issues, and tried the case upon that theory, it was held on appeal that the court would, for the purpose of determining the correctness of the ruling of the lower court, deem the answer amended to include that issue. Nelson v. Campbell (1906) 128 Wis. 82, 107 N. W. 297.

Where the county court held that the answer sufficiently alleged a denial of the plaintiff's claim, and the circuit court apparently so treated it, or deemed the plead-from the standpoint of amendments, even where the variance or defects were of a technical nature, appears to be due, in part at least, to statutory provisions

ing amended to conform to the evidence, it was held, on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, that, for the purpose of determining the sufficiency of the evidence, the answer would be deemed amended, if necessary, to conform to the proof. Donner v. Genz (1906) 129 Wis. 245, 107 N. W. 1039, 109 N. W. 71.

In Latton v. McCarty (1910) 142 Wis. 190, 125 N. W. 430, the complaint in an action to foreclose a mortgage, which alleged all the facts necessary to the right of a vendor's lien and a foreclosure thereof, was deemed amended on appeal to conform to proof showing a right on the part of the plaintiff to enforce the lien for a part of the debt remaining unpaid, the mortgage having been discharged.

It was held in State ex rel. Conway v. District Board (Wis.) ante, 399, that if such power did not exist independently of statute, the supreme court on appeal had at least statutory power to permit an amendment of the pleadings, if the plaintiffs had a cause of action, but had mistaken their remedy, counsel on both sides requesting the decision of the case on the merits.

In Columbus Constr. Co. v. Crane Co. (1900) 40 C. C. A. 35, 98 Fed. 946, the rule was laid down that there should be a liberal practice in allowing amendments of notices of a counterclaim accompanying a plea of the general issue, and on appeal any amendment should be regarded as having been made, which if allowed would have caused no injustice to the adverse party.

The appellate court, in furtherance of justice, also, permitted an amendment of the pleadings to conform to the proof, or regarded the amendment as made, to support the judgment, —where, in an action against a railroad company for injury to an employee by the explosion of a locomotive boiler, the complaint, critically considered, charged only an injury to a servant by a coservant, but the defendant made no objection to the sufficiency of the complaint, and permitted the plaintiff to introduce evidence showing that the boiler was defective, and that the company was chargeable with notice thereof, St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Harper (1884) 44 Ark. 524;

—where, in an action against a railroad company for death of an employee, the complaint alleged the killing by the negligent operation of the defendant's cars, and evidence was introduced without objection that the company had failed to provide a safe place for the decedent to work, and failed to exercise proper care to protect him against the carelessness of his fellow servants, St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Triplett (1891) 54 Ark. 289, 11 L.R.A. 773, 15 S. W. 831, 16 S. W. 266; to recover for wrongful death, and the cause was tried on that issue, Pulaski Gas-light Co. v. McClintock (1911) 97 Ark. 576, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 825, 134 S. W. 1189, 1199;

—where evidence was admitted without objection to support a ground of negligence not charged in the complaint, in an action L.R.A.1916D.

—where the petition in a suit to enforce a mechanics' lien failed to allege that the architect's certificate, upon the granting of which final payment was due, had been demanded or wrongfully refused; that the case was tried on the theory that there had been a refusal to grant the certificate, one of the principal issues being whether the refusal was justifiable, Louisville Trust Co. v. Louisville Fire Proof Constr. Co. (1900) 22 Ky. L. Rep. 433, 57 S. W. 506;

—where the complaint raised the issue of an express contract, but the case was submitted to the jury on the theory of an implied contract, which evidence introduced without objection tended to show, Nyhart v. Pennington (1897) 20 Mont. 158, 50 Pac. 413;

—where the cross petition for foreclosure of a mortgage lacked the required averment that no proceedings had been had at law, Ure v. Bunn (1902) 3 Neb. (Unof.) 61, 90 N. W. 904;

—where, in an action for trespass, the only plea on the record was the general issue, but the defense of justification was fully considered by counsel, United States Pipe Line Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1898) 62 N. J. L. 254, 42 L.R.A. 572, 41 Atl. 759;

—where, on appeal from a judgment for the defendant in an action on a note, it appeared that the defense that the note was without consideration was inartificially pleaded, but the intent was clear, and the trial court could have permitted an amendment if the pleading was defective, Douai v. Lutjens (1897) 21 App. Div. 254, 47 N. Y. Supp. 659, affirmed without opinion in (1900) 165 N. Y. 622, 59 N. E. 1121;

—where the complaint in an action for services for a sale of defendant's land alleged a contract to pay a certain sum per acre, which amounted to much more than the sum found due on the trial as the value of the plaintiff's services, Rifenburgh v. Ham (1899) 44 App. Div. 620, 60 N. Y. Supp. 124;

—where the point was not raised at the trial in an action for death through the fall of a freight elevator, that proof of defective construction of the elevator was not within the pleading, Grifhahn v. Kreizer (1901) 62 App. Div. 413, 70 N. Y. Supp. 973, affirmed without opinion in (1902) 171 N. Y. 661, 64 N. E. 1121;

—where the complaint in an action for an injury by a railroad company alleged that the plaintiff, when the injury occurred, was rightly driving upon a public highway on which the defendant's tracks were laid, and the evidence showed that defendant owned the fee of the premises where the injury occurred, but that they constituted practically a part of the system of public on the question of immaterial variances. For example, the Indiana statute provides that no variance between the allegations in a pleading and the proof is to be deemed material unless it has actually misled the adverse party, to his prejudice, in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits; that whenever it is alleged that a party has been so misled, that fact must be proved to the satisfaction of the court, and it must be shown in what respect he has been misled, and thereupon the court may order the pleading to be amended on such terms as may be just; that where the variance is not material, as above provided, the court may direct the fact to be found according to the evidence, or may order an immediate amendment, without costs; and that no judgment shall be stayed or reversed by the supreme court for any defect in form, variance, or imperfections in the record, pleadings, etc., which by law might be amended by the court below, but such defect shall be deemed to be amended in the supreme court.

The specific instances which are given highways which the public were tacitly invited to use, Liekens v. Staten Island Midland R. Co. (1901) 64 App. Div. 327, 72 N. Y. Supp. 162;

—where evidence was introduced without objection in an action for breach of contract, tending to show a breach not alleged in the complaint, Nelson v. Hatch (1902) 70 App. Div. 206, 75 N. Y. Supp. 389, affirmed without opinion in (1903) 174 N. Y. 546, 67 N. E. 1085;

—where, in an action on an insurance policy, the petition alleged certain specific acts of waiver of proof of loss, and uncontradicted evidence was introduced, without objection, sufficient to prove a waiver on other grounds, St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Mittendorf (1909) 24 Okla. 651, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 651, 104 Pac. 354;

—where a proposed amendment to make the pleadings conform to the proof was erroneously denied by the lower court on the ground that it was unnecessary, and the rights of the parties were determined on the facts as established by the evidence, National Bank v. Feeney (1897) 9 S. D. 550, 46 L.R.A. 732, 70 N. W. 874;

—where the question tried without objection in an action for commission for a sale of property was whether the plaintiff was instrumental in enabling the defendants to sell the property, and not whether the plaintiff had sold the property for the defendants at their request, as alleged, the latter allegation being entirely unproved, Flanders v. Cottrell (1875) 36 Wis. 564;

—where a small item incidental to the plaintiff's claim not covered by the complaint was included in the verdict, Weston v. McMillan (1877) 42 Wis. 567; L.R.A.1916D.

are intended merely as illustrative of the practice in the different jurisdictions. Other illustrations will be found in connection with the statement of the general rules in other parts of the annotation. While in some cases the defects in the pleadings, or the variances between the pleadings and the proof, are of a formal or technical nature, the rule permitting amendments on appeal in furtherance of justice, or regarding them as made, to support the judgment, has been applied to cure defects and omissions of the most substantial character. The cases cited, which have been grouped according to jurisdictions because of the diversity of circumstances under which the amendments were allowed or deemed made, include instances of amendment of the pleadings to conform to the proof, so as to allege special damages or items of damages not originally alleged, but proved without objection, defects in the form of the action, omissions in the complaint of allegations necessary to the maintenance of the action or to the support of the judgment rendered. Thus, where the complaint —where the answer and evidence introduced without objection tended to remove the ambiguity in the translation of certain defamatory words alleged in the complaint in an action for slander, Hocks v. Sprangers (1901) 113 Wis. 123, 87 N. W. 1101, 89 N. W. 113. It was held that the lower court had properly overruled an objection to further evidence on the alleged cause of action where the evidence introduced without objection tended to remove the ambiguity;

—where the issues presented by the pleadings in an action for commission for a sale of land were whether the defendant's agents made an agreement with the plaintiff as alleged in the complaint, and whether they had authority to bind the defendant by such an agreement, and the court found that the agents made the agreement, but were induced to do so by false representations on the part of the plaintiff, and rendered judgment for the defendant without passing on the question of the agent's authority, Rule v. J. L. Gates Land Co. (1904) 121 Wis. 544, 99 N. W. 338;

—where neither the complaint nor the claim for liens in an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien set forth the contract as required by statute, but the contract on which the plaintiff recovered was proved by evidence introduced on the trial without objection, Sherry v. Madler (1910) 123 Wis. 621, 101 N. W. 1095; —where, in an action to cancel a tax deed as a cloud on title, evidence was introduced without objection of irregularities in the tax sale which were not alleged in the complaint, Coe v. Rockman (1906) 126 Wis. 515, 106 N. W. 290.

was subject to demurrer for failure to state a cause of action, but no demurrer was taken, and the proof or pleadings of the adverse party supplied the omission, the appellate courts, to sustain the judgment, have allowed an amendment of the pleadings to conform to the proof, or deemed the amendment made.<sup>50</sup> In holding that an objection made for the first time on appeal, that the complaint in an action for divorce was defective in failing to allege residence of the plaintiff necessary to confer jurisdiction, was not available to reverse the decree for the plaintiff, the supreme court of New Mexico<sup>51</sup> laid down the rule that "where a material, even jurisdictional, fact omitted from the complaint is as fully litigated, without objection, as if said fact had been put in issue by the pleadings, it is the duty of the trial court, and of this court on appeal, to amend the complaint in aid of the judgment so as to allege the omitted fact." And in Arkansas, in an action against a railroad company for injuries caused by a train at a crossing, it was held that, although there was no charge of negligence in the complaint, the judgment for the plaintiff would not be reversed, but the complaint would be deemed amended on appeal to conform to the proof, where the defendant did not demur, but answered, denying negligence, and evidence to show negligence was introduced without objection.<sup>52</sup> It has been held also, for example, in an action for damages for negligence, that where no questions are raised as to the admissibility of the evidence, the appellate court, to support a judgment for the plaintiff, will treat the complaint as being as broad as the evidence, and hold any act of negligence proved to be within the issues.<sup>53</sup> And that on appeal from a judgment in a case submitted to the court on an agreed statement of facts, the complaint will be deemed amended to conform to the facts stipulated.<sup>54</sup> So, a variance between a copy of an instrument filed with a pleading as an exhibit, forming the basis of the action, and the averments of the pleading, which can be avoided by an amendment in the lower court, will be disregarded or deemed cured by an amendment on appeal, to support the judgment.<sup>55</sup> And a complaint in an action by an employee against a railroad company for damages has been regarded as amended to conform to the proof, so as to allege the interstate character of the business in

<sup>50</sup> See ELLINGHOUSE v. AJAX LIVE STOCK Co. ante, 836.

Where no objection was taken to the complaint until the trial, although it was subject to demurrer on the ground of failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, but the answer contained the necessary averments omitted in the complaint, it was held that, as the lower court should have permitted or ordered an amendment of the complaint, the omissions would be regarded on appeal as supplied, in order to support the judgment. Bate v. Graham (1854) 11 N. Y. 237.

Where the appellate court was bound by a statute to consider all amendments as made which could have been made below, a complaint in an action on a contract, although subject to demurrer because failing to show the relation of the defendant to the company with whom the contract was alleged to have been made, was held sufficient when questioned for the first time on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, in Tolmie v. Dean (1858) 1 Wash. Terr. 46.

In an action for personal injuries sustained by an employee, it was held in the Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Campbell (1913) 106 Ark. 379, 153 S. W. 256, that, it being assumed that the complaint failed to state a cause of action, the judgment for the plaintiff would not be reversed where there was no demurrer to the complaint, and testimony introduced without objection was sufficient to warrant the finding of the jury and the judgment, the complaint on appeal being deemed amended to conform to the proof.

That a judgment will not be reversed because of a defect in the complaint rendering it subject to a demurrer, where the defendant does not demur, but answers, and on the trial objects to the introduction of evidence on the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, if evidence admitted over the objection supplies the omitted allegations in the complaint, see Johnson v. Burnside (1892) 3 S. D. 230, 62 N. W. 1057, and Sherwood v. Sioux Falls (1898) 10 S. D. 405, 73 N. W. 913. The defects were regarded, however, as cured, the court not directing attention especially to the question of amendments on the appeal.

In Excelsior Electric Co. v. Sweet (1894) 57 N. J. L. 224, 30 Atl. 553, the court said that the power of amendment by the court on error extended to matters of substance as well as form, citing Price v. New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. (1865) 31 N. J. L. 229.

<sup>51</sup> Canavan v. Canavan (1913) 17 N. M. 503, 131 Pac. 493, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1064. See note 4, supra.

<sup>52</sup> St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bird (1913) 106 Ark. 177, 153 S. W. 104.

<sup>53</sup> Domke v. Gunning (1911) 62 Wash. 629, 114 Pac. 436.

<sup>54</sup> O'Connor v. Enos (1909) 56 Wash. 448, 105 Pac. 1039.

<sup>55</sup> Ind.—Ebersole v. Redding (1864) 22 Ind. 232; Estep v. Estep (1864) 23 Ind. 114; Carver v. Carver (1876) 53 Ind. 241; Single- which the defendant was engaged, and thereby sustain the recovery as under the Federal statute.<sup>56</sup>

Under the Indiana statute above set out, the rule that if the defect in the pleadings is of a nature that it might have been cured by amendment in the lower court, and no substantial prejudice has resulted to the defeated party

by the failure to amend, the appellate court, after a trial and determination of the case on the merits, will deem the amendment made, to support the judgment, has been applied in various instances.<sup>57</sup>

The New Mexico statute expressly requires that all omissions, imperfections, defects, and variances not against the ton v. O'Brien (1890) 125 Ind. 151, 25 N. E. 154; Stockwell v. Whitehead (1911) 47 Ind. App. 423, 94 N. E. 736. See also McDonald v. Yeager (1873) 42 Ind. 388; Brownlee v. Kenneipp (1872) 41 Ind. 216, among possibly other cases in this state which reach a similar result, but do not treat the question especially from the standpoint of amendments of the pleadings.

A defective allegation in an action on a note may be amended on appeal, if necessary to support the judgment, to conform to the particulars of demand annexed to the declaration. Finney v. Pennsylvania Iron Works Co. (1903) 22 App. D. C. 476.

<sup>56</sup> In an action by an employee against a railroad company for personal injury, where there was no allegation in the complaint that the plaintiff was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the injury, or that his cause of action was controlled by the Federal statute, but the answer alleged the interstate character of the commerce in which the plaintiff was engaged, and the court submitted the case to the jury on the theory that the action was governed by the Federal statute, which the undisputed evidence showed, it was held on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff that the complaint would be deemed amended to conform to the proof. Callahan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1915) 161 Wis. 288, 154 N. W. 449.

And where, in an action by an employee against a railroad company for injury sustained in a train collision, the evidence for the defendant showed that it was liable, if at all, under the Federal employers' liability act rather than under the state statute, it was held that since the declaration otherwise set out facts which would impose a liability under the Federal act, the court on error from a judgment for the plaintiff would deem the declaration amended so as to allege that the defendant was engaged in interstate commerce, and affirm the judgment. Fernet v. Pere Marquette R. Co. (1913) 175 Mich. 653, 141 N. W. 1084, 144 N. W. 834.

<sup>57</sup> See, for example, the following:

Where, in an action for injuries by a train at a railroad crossing, both parties introduced evidence without objection respecting the failure of the defendant to give the statutory signals, and the case was tried on the theory that the question whether or not the whistle was sounded as required by statute was in issue, it was held that on appeal the complaint, although not containing a sufficient averment that the statute was violated in this regard, L.R.A.1916D.

would be deemed amended so as to raise the issue, and that therefore the giving of an instruction on this point was not reversible error. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Gorman (1914) — Ind. App. —, 106 N. E. 897.

An amendment of a paragraph of a complaint which the lower court allowed as to another paragraph, and might have allowed as to both, will be deemed on appeal to extend to both if necessary to support the judgment. Laramore v. Blumenthal (1915) — Ind. App. —, 108 N. E. 602.

In Case v. Wandel (1861) 16 Ind. 459, a suit to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the payment of certain notes, the court dismissed the point that the notes should not have been admitted in evidence with a statement that if there was any variance between the notes as described in the complaint and as offered in evidence, the complaint might have been amended on the trial, and would be deemed amended on the appeal.

In Harris v. Osenback (1869) 13 Ind. 445, it was held that failure to subscribe the complaint was such a merely formal or clerical error as the plaintiff should have been permitted to amend, and would be considered as amended on appeal, to support the judgment for plaintiff.

And where an amended complaint was not signed by the plaintiff or his attorney, but no motion was made to strike it from the files, it was held that, the original complaint having been signed, the defect would be regarded on appeal as cured by amendment, to support the judgment. Lowry v. Dutton (1867) 28 Ind. 473.

See also Fankboner v. Fankboner (1863) 20 Ind. 62, where it was held that the defendant had waived a defect in that the replication was not signed by the plaintiff or his attorney, by failure to make an objection thereto until after the trial.

Where a complaint might have been amended in the lower court so as to state the amount demanded, it was held on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff that it would be deemed amended. Gimbel v. Stolte (1877) 59 Ind. 446.

An immaterial variance between the complaint and the proof which might have been amended in the lower court after the evidence had all been produced will be deemed cured by an amendment on appeal, to support the judgment. Taylor v. Calvert (1893) 138 Ind. 67, 37 N. E. 531.

Amendments of the pleadings were also deemed made on appeal under the Indiana statute, to support the judgment, right and justice of the matter, and not altering the issues between the parties on the trial, shall be supplied and amended by the court where the judgment is given, or by the court into which the cause is removed by writ of error or appeal;<sup>58</sup> and in Maine a statute provided that no declaration or other proceeding in a court of justice shall be reversed "for any kind of circumstantial errors or mistakes, when the person and case may be rightly understood by the court, nor for want of form only, and which by law might have been amended."<sup>59</sup> In Massachusetts it has been held that if issues not presented by the pleadings were fully tried, the appellate court may remand the cause with permission to amend the pleadings to meet the issues without awarding a new trial.<sup>60</sup>

While this note does not purport to cover the question generally whether and under what circumstances an actual amendment is necessary to entitle a party who applies for and obtains permission to amend a pleading, to the benefit of the proposed amendment, attention is called to a class of cases which, although in reality involving this question, from another view point, may be regarded as coming within the scope of

—where, in an action for damages for personal injuries, the jury were permitted to take into consideration loss of time as an element of damages, it being assumed on appeal that the complaint failed to allege special damages on this account, Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Warrum (1907) 42 Ind. App. 179, 82 N. E. 934, petition for rehearing denied in (1907) 42 Ind. App. 196, 84 N. E. 356;

—where there was a variance between the allegations of the complaint in an action on a life insurance policy, and the date of payment of the premium notes, not affecting the substance of the matters in issue, Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Hinesley (1881) 75 Ind. 1;

—where, in an action on a note containing a provision for payment of all necessary expenses of collection, the judgment by default included a sum as expenses of collection, although the complaint did not allege the amount of such expenses, Barnes v. Bell (1872) 39 Ind. 328;

—where the form of the complaint in a civil action was defective in that it omitted the venue, Fisher v. State (1878) 65 Ind. 51;

—where it was alleged in an action on a lost note, that the note was transferred and delivered to the plaintiff without indorsement in writing, the evidence showing that the note had been assigned in writing to the plaintiff, Cleveland v. Roberts (1860) 14 Ind. 511;

—where the complaint in an action by husband and wife failed to show in what respect the wife was the meritorious cause of action, Langdon v. Bullock (1756) 8 Ind. 341;

—where, in an action by a guardian against the administrator and surety of a deceased guardian, to recover money belonging to the wards, for which the former guardian had failed to account, on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff an amendment was regarded as having been made in the lower court by adding to the complaint an allegation that the money had not been paid by the defendants after the death of the former guardian, Buchanan v. State (1886) 106 Ind. 251, 6 N. E. 614;

—where the complaint in an action for failure to carry out a trust of real estate devised to the defendant for the support of the plaintiff did not aver with certainty the death of the testatrix, but alleged that the will was admitted to probate, and that the defendant took possession and accepted the devise, Watt v. Pittman (1890) 125 Ind. 168, 25 N. E. 191;

—where the complaint in an action by an employee for damages for being thrown from a train by reason of the negligent construction of the roadbed did not allege at what point the defect existed, Evansville & R. R. Co. v. Maddux (1893) 134 Ind. 571, 33 N. E. 345, 34 N. E. 511;

—where, in an action to foreclose a mortgage, the indebtedness was treated in the complaint as evidenced by notes, and the proof showed that prior to the beginning of the action it had been reduced to judgment, Kohli v. Hall (1895) 141 Ind. 411, 40 N. E. 1060;

—where, in an action for medical services rendered a pauper, the complaint alleged that the township physician refused to perform the operation on the ground of inexperience, lack of proper instruments, etc., and the evidence showed that he was not qualified to perform the operation by reason of want of skill and experience, but did not show that he had been requested so to do by the trustee before the plaintiff was employed, Perry County v. Lomax (1892) 5 Ind. App. 567, 32 N. E. 800;

—where the complaint in an action on a lost note varied from the evidence in the description of the note, Clark v. Trueblood (1896) 16 Ind. App. 98, 44 N. E. 679;

—where the complaint in an action to recover an insurance premium alleged a written promise by the defendant to pay the premium, and the evidence showed facts from which an implied promise would arise, Robinson v. Wolf (1901) 27 Ind. App. 683, 62 N. E. 74.

<sup>58</sup> Canavan v. Canavan (1913) 17 N. M. 503, 131 Pac. 493, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1064.

<sup>59</sup> Page v. Danforth (1865) 53 Me. 174; Lord v. Pierce (1851) 33 Me. 350.

<sup>60</sup> Lemay v. Springfield Street R. Co. (1911) 210 Mass. 63, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 43, 96 N. E. 79, and other cases in the state cited in note 12, supra.

the present annotation. No attempt has been made to treat the general question indicated, and the cases in this connection are merely illustrative. Thus, there are a number of cases holding that where an amendment of the pleadings has been requested and properly allowed by the trial court, and the trial thereafter has proceeded as though the pleadings were amended, the court on appeal will deem the amendment made, or permit an amendment to support the judgment, although it does not appear that an actual amendment was made,<sup>61</sup> or, as held in some cases, where the trial court upon request properly orders an amendment of the pleadings, the amendment will be regarded on appeal as having been made, whether the verbal changes have actually been made or not.<sup>62</sup> In an

<sup>61</sup> Aylesworth v. Brown (1869) 31 Ind. 270 (amendment as to parties); Bank of Lindsborg v. Ober (1884) 31 Kan. 599, 3 Pac. 324; Merrill v. St. Louis (1884) 83 Mo. 244, 53 Am. Rep. 576; Oberg v. St. Joseph Town Mut. F. Ins. Co. (1899) 82 Mo. App. 64; Maders v. Whallon (1893) 74 Hun, 372, 26 N. Y. Supp. 614; Ufford v. Lucas (1822) 9 N. C. (2 Hawks) 214; Holland v. Crow (1851) 34 N. C. (12 Ired. L.) 275; Bullen v. Arkansas Valley & W. R. Co. (1908) 20 Okla. 819, 95 Pac. 476. See also Johnston v. Farmers' F. Ins. Co. (1895) 106 Mich. 96, 64 N. W. 5 (regarding as immaterial the failure actually to make an amendment which the trial court had permitted and treated as made).

Although there was no formal order of the trial court granting the defendant's request to amend his answer to conform to the proof, if the case was decided below as if the amendment had been made, it will be regarded as made on appeal for the purpose of determining the correctness of the decision. Lazelle v. Miller (1902) 40 Or. 549, 67 Pac. 307.

Where an order is made in the lower court for an amendment of the petition, but the amendment is not actually made, and all the subsequent proceedings are based on the assumption that it has been made, the appellate court will consider the order as standing for the amendment. Holland v. Crow (1851) 34 N. C. (12 Ired. L.) 275.

Where permission was granted in the trial court to a minor plaintiff to amend his bill of particulars to show that he prosecuted the action by his adult brother as next friend, and both parties to the action and the court in the subsequent proceedings on the trial treated such amendment as made, and no objection was made in the trial court by the defendant that the amendment had not actually been made, it was held that the amendment would be treated by the supreme court on appeal as having been made, in order to support the judgment. Hill v. Reed (1909) 23 Okla. 616, 103 Pac. 855.

And in Excelsior Mfg. Co. v. Boyle (1891) 46 Kan. 202, 26 Pac. 408, it was held that the lower court had properly granted permission for the answer of a judgment creditor to be amended to correspond with the facts, to show a levy of execution, and that on appeal, where it appeared that the trial had proceeded in the lower court as if the answer had been amended, the amendment would be deemed made, although in L.R.A.1916D.

fact there had been no actual amendment. The rule was quoted that "a defect in the pleadings or proceedings which ought to have been corrected below by amendment will be disregarded here or considered as amended."

Where the parties agreed that the case might be amended so as to change the form of action from trespass to assumpsit, but no formal amendment was made of the statement of claim, it was held that, although the defendant objected on the trial to the introduction of evidence on the ground that the statement was for damages for a tort and the evidence offered was on a contract, the appellate court, after a trial on the merits, would permit an amendment of the statement to conform to the facts proved. Grim v. Rohn (1913) 53 Pa. Super. Ct. 59.

And in Hines v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (1886) 95 N. C. 434, 59 Am. Rep. 250, where it was agreed by the parties that the court should make an order allowing the plaintiffs to amend their complaint so as to conform to the facts agreed upon, but the amendment was not in fact made, it was held that the amendment might be made in the supreme court on appeal "for the sake of uniformity and order," and the judgment affirmed.

In Hoffman v. Keeton (1901) 132 Cal. 195, 64 Pac. 264, the court regarded it as immaterial on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff foreclosing a mortgage, that the real name of one of the defendants had not been substituted in the complaint for a fictitious name, the lower court having directed the substitution. The court stated, in affirming the judgment, that it would have been more regular to have made the amendment in the complaint, but that the error, if any, was merely clerical, and might be corrected by the lower court at any time.

<sup>62</sup> Underwood v. Bishop (1878) 67 Mo. 374; Young v. Glascock (1883) 79 Mo. 574; Shantz v. Shriner (1912) 167 Mo. App. 635, 160 S. W. 727; Locke v. Bowman (1912) 168 Mo. App. 121, 161 S. W. 468.

In Balkou v. Hill (1871) 23 Mich. 60, it was said that where an amendment is ordered or permitted, and is of such a nature that the record furnishes upon its face all the data for applying it, the amendment may be considered as made, though no verbal changes are made in the pleadings, which are then to be read as if they had been actually amended.

Oregon case,<sup>63</sup> it was said on this point: "The principle obtains that permission to amend a pleading does not usually amount to an alteration of a party's formal allegations of his cause of action or the averments of his defense, but where an order has been made granting leave to amend, and the subsequent proceedings in the cause are predicated on the supposition that the change has actually been made, it is proper to treat the order as equivalent to amendment itself.

. . . The exception to the general rule is particularly applicable to a party who has been permitted to amend his pleadings so as to allow the introduction of important evidence, although he has not in fact made any alteration or additional averments to his original formal allegations."

Some courts have, however, refused on appeal to regard the amendment as made where it was merely authorized and treated as made in the lower court.<sup>64</sup> As before stated, the general question whether an authorized amendment must be actually made in order to be effective is beyond the scope of the note.

The question of amendment of the pleadings in the appellate court as to parties does not in many instances appear simply as one of amendment of the pleadings to conform to the proof. In some cases, however, an amendment as to the parties does appear to be of this nature. Without attempting to exhaust the cases on the question of amendment as to parties in the appellate courts, attention is called to a number of such cases as illustrative of the application in this regard of the general rules above indicated. The appellate courts have liberally allowed amendments of the pleadings as to parties to conform to the facts in the case, or deemed such amendments made, to support the judgment, where no substantial rights of the adverse party would be prejudiced thereby. Thus, in many instances, formal defects in the pleadings in the names of the parties, or the capacity in which they sue or are sued, not affecting the merits of the case, have been cured by amendment on appeal, to support the judgment, or the amendment has been deemed made.<sup>65</sup> And in other cases, it

<sup>63</sup> Casner v. Hoskins (1912) 64 Or. 254, 128 Pac. 841. The rule was applied in this instance by treating an amendment of the reply as made in order to support the judgment. Petition for rehearing was denied in (1913) 64 Or. 282, 130 Pac. 55.

<sup>64</sup> In an action for damages for the construction and operation of a railroad, where the declaration alleged that the track was laid on a street adjacent to and within 10 feet of the plaintiff's property, and the evidence showed that it was not laid on the street, but on land on the opposite side thereof 50 feet or more from the property of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff did not amend the declaration after obtaining leave of court to do so, it was held that on appeal, although the words of the amendment and the place where it should be placed in the pleadings were shown by the bill of exceptions, the amendment could not be regarded as actually made. Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Wiczorek (1894) 151 Ill. 579, 38 N. E. 678. It was said: "While the appellate court saw fit to treat the leave given as amounting in effect to an amendment actually made, we do not feel at liberty to so regard it. If a party, for any reason, disregards the leave given by the trial court to amend his pleading so as to make it correspond with the proofs, and omits, without justifiable cause, the due incorporation into the record of the amendment pursuant to the leave, this court, sua sponte, has no authority to carry out the leave, make his amendment for him, interpolate it into the record, and thereby save him harmless of error assigned. After obtaining such leave, the plaintiff was in no wise obliged to exercise the privilege given and L.R.A.1916D.

make the amendment, and until the amendment was in fact made, the declaration in all respects remained the same, as though no leave to amend it had been given."

Ill.—Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Wiczorek, supra, was followed, among possibly other cases, in Ogden v. Lake View (1887) 121 Ill. 422, 13 N. E. 159; Sinsheimer v. Skinner Mfg. Co. (1896) 165 Ill. 116, 46 N. E. 262; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. McCallum (1897) 169 Ill. 240, 48 N. E. 424; Landt v. McCullough (1903) 206 Ill. 214, 69 N. E. 107; Condon v. Schoenfeld (1905) 214 Ill. 226, 73 N. E. 333, and Christensen v. Oscar Daniels Co. (1908) 142 Ill. App. 129.

See also Lohrfink v. Still (1857) 10 Md. 530, holding it error for the lower court to treat leave to amend the declaration by inserting an essential allegation as an actual amendment.

<sup>65</sup> Drummond v. Wright (1840) 1 Ala. 205 (names of parties plaintiff and defendant having been transposed in declaration); Alabama Conference v. Price (1868) 42 Ala. 39; Alameda County v. Crocker (1899) 125 Cal. 101, 57 Pac. 766 (amendment of complaint in condemnation proceedings by substituting real for fictitious names of defendants); Sinton v. The R. R. Roberts (1874) 46 Ind. 476 (clerical mistake in name of defendant); Waltz v. Waltz (1882) 84 Ind. 403 (where an action by certain heirs was brought in their maiden names, although in the evidence each was mentioned by a different surname); Bullard v. Nantucket Bank (1809) 5 Mass. 99; Berrien County v. Bunbury (1881) 45 Mich. 79, 7 N. W. 704; Smith v. Pinney (1891) 86 Mich. 484, 49 N. W. 305; Stanton v. Estey

has been held that where the cause has been tried on the merits between the real parties in interest, the appellate court, to support the judgment, may

Mfg. Co. (1892) 90 Mich. 12, 51 N. W. 101; Enright v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. (1892) 91 Mich. 238, 51 N. W. 928; Stofflet v. Strome (1894) 101 Mich. 197, 59 N. W. 411; Newton v. Detroit United R. Co. (1910) 163 Mich. 373, 128 N. W. 184; Witte Iron Works v. Holmes (1895) 62 Mo. App. 372 (amendment allowed by inserting real instead of fictitious name of plaintiff); Holt v. United Security L. Ins. & T. Co. (1909) 76 N. J. L. 585, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 691, 72 Atl. 301; Daly v. Haight (1914) 163 App. Div. 234, 148 N. Y. Supp. 42; Risley v. Wightman (1878) 13 Hun (N. Y.) 163; Bartholomew v. Lyon (1874) 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 86; Howard v. United States (1900) 42 C. C. A. 169, 102 Fed. 77, affirmed in (1901) 184 U. S. 676, 46 L. ed. 764, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 543; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. First M. E. Church (1900) 50 L.R.A. 488, 42 C. C. A. 178, 102 Fed. 85.

In Reeder v. Sayre (1877) 70 N. Y. 180, 26 Am. Rep. 567, it was held that to support a judgment an amendment might be allowed on appeal to conform the pleadings to the proof, so that the complaint would allege the character of the plaintiffs as surviving partners instead of tenants in common.

In Clifford v. Prudential Ins. Co. (1894) 161 Pa. 257, 28 Atl. 1085, where an action was begun by an administrator on a life insurance policy of the intestate, and the evidence showed that the insured had transferred the policy to the plaintiff as collateral security for a debt, and it was contended that the action should have been by the plaintiff as assignee, and not as administrator, it was held that the supreme court might allow an amendment, if necessary to support the judgment for the plaintiff, by permitting the plaintiff to describe himself as the assignee of the decedent.

In Shaffer v. Eichert (1890) 132 Pa. 285, 19 Atl. 81, where an action of ejectment was brought by the plaintiffs in right of their wives, it was held that an amendment might be made on appeal by adding the names of the wives as coplaintiffs, to support the judgment for the plaintiffs, the court stating that this was a mistake amendable below; that it was a technical matter, and that the allowance of the amendment in the supreme court could do the defendant no injury.

In an action for mesne profits brought by husband and wife in right of the wife, where the case had been tried on the merits as brought by the husband for the use of the wife, it was held that the error, being formal, might be cured by amendment in the supreme court, to support the judgment for the plaintiff. Thornton v. Britton (1891) 144 Pa. 126, 22 Atl. 1048.

In an action on the bond of a county treasurer, where the action was brought in the name of the board of supervisors instead of in the name of the county, but L.R.A.1916D.

a trial on the merits resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff, it was held on appeal that the error, if any, in the name of the party plaintiff, might be corrected by amendment in the appellate court. Johr v. St. Clair County (1878) 38 Mich. 532.

And in Shryock v. Basehore (1876) 82 Pa. 159, followed in Shryock v. McClure (1876) 82 Pa. 165, it was held that a declaration in assumpsit by the assignees of a bank against its debtor on a note, which should have been brought by the assignees in the name of the bank, could be amended, or would be regarded as amended, in the supreme court.

Where a county attorney as such sued for the benefit of the territory of Oklahoma to prevent the misapplication of county funds by its officers, without naming the territory as the plaintiff, and the cause of action, the issues made by the pleadings, the scope of the evidence, and the issue and relief given were clearly what they would have been if the suit had been in name, as it was in fact, by the territory on the relation of the county attorney, and no substantial right of the adverse party was affected to his prejudice, it was held that the petition would be treated on appeal as if amended as to the name of the proper party plaintiff. Dolezal v. Bostick (1914) 41 Okla. 743, 139 Pac. 964.

An amendment of parties plaintiff was allowed on appeal in Com. v. Mahon (1900) 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 616, to support the judgment for the plaintiff in an action against a property owner for taxes which the sureties on the tax collector's bonds had been compelled to pay, the action having been irregularly brought in the name of the commonwealth for the use of the sureties, instead of by the sureties in their own names, and the case having been tried on the merits between the real parties. The court said that the irregularity, though formal, would have been fatal at common law, but it was amendable under the legislation in that state.

And in Robertson v. Reed (1864) 47 Pa. 115, where, on a settlement between the defendant and a third party, the latter directed a balance due him to be placed to the credit of the plaintiff, which was done, it was held on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff that, although the plaintiff could not maintain the action in his own name to recover the amount so placed to his credit, a judgment in his favor would not be reversed for this reason alone, the court saying that, as the defect would undoubtedly be amendable under the statute authorizing a change or alteration in the names of parties, it would treat the amendment as made, or permit the amendment to be made on the appeal.

In Bailey v. Lankford (1916) — Okla. —, 154 Pac. 672, it was held that while a suit to collect a note which the bank commissioner had taken over as part of the allow an amendment by adding or striking out the names of parties or regard the amendment as made.<sup>65</sup>

In Indiana it has been held that a judgment in the name of a wrong relator cannot be affirmed on the ground that the complaint might have been amended by inserting the name of a new relator, as this would be in effect a total change of one of the parties to the action,<sup>67</sup> and an amendment making such a change of parties, it was held, should not be deemed made on appeal to support the judgment.<sup>68</sup> assets of an insolvent bank should be brought in the name of the state on the relation of the bank commissioner, yet where a suit was brought in the name of the bank commissioner, and no one could be prejudiced thereby, the petition would be treated on appeal as amended, to support the judgment.

A complaint for damages in a firm name which fails to state the individual names of the partners is sufficient on appeal, after a judgment by default, where the names of the individual partners are set out in the summons, the complaint being considered as amended. Galliard v. Dubose (1859) 34 Ala. 207.

<sup>66</sup> As observed above, these cases are merely illustrative.

First Presby. Church v. Lafayette (1873) 42 Ind. 116; Elmore v. McCrary (1881) 80 Ind. 544 (where an administrator brought an action and then resigned, and his successor prosecuted the suit to judgment without having the complaint amended by the insertion of his own name); Fay v. Welch (1906) 190 Mass. 374, 77 N. E. 44; Cruchon v. Brown (1874) 57 Mo. 38 (action by husband to use of wife amended in appellate court by striking out name of wife); State, Willa, Prosecutor, v. Shinn (1880) 42 N. J. L. 138 (recognizing power of amendment on appeal in a proper case); State, Jones, Prosecutor, v. Cook (1892) 54 N. J. L. 513, 24 Atl. 758; Vunk v. Raritan River R. Co. (1894) 56 N. J. L. 395, 28 Atl. 593; Neher v. Armijo (1898) 9 N. M. 325, 54 Pac. 236; Ackley v. Tarbox (1864) 31 N. Y. 564; Benyak v. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. (1915) 166 App. Div. 829, 152 N. Y. Supp. 329; Barnhill v. Haigh (1866) 53 Pa. 165; Weaver v. Iselin (1894) 161 Pa. 386, 29 Atl. 49; Natalie Anthracite Coal Co. v. Ryon (1898) 188 Pa. 138, 41 Atl. 462; Thomas v. Dickerson (1913) 52 Pa. Super. Ct. 507; Fritz v. Heyl (1880) 93 Pa. 77; Quison v. Salud (1908) 12 Philippine, 109; Alonso v. Villamor (1910) 16 Philippine, 315.

In Baldwin v. Bornheimer (1874) 48 Cal. 433, the court, on appeal by the defendants, affirmed the judgment and directed the lower court to amend the complaint by the insertion therein of the name of one for whom counsel had entered an appearance and for whom an answer on file had been considered, by stipulation, as an answer.

The substitution in the complaint of the name of the successors of an administrator against whom an action is pending being a mere formal amendment which might have been made at any time in the lower court on the motion of either party, on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, the L.R.A.1916D.

complaint will be regarded as having been amended, where the case has been tried on its merits without objection on this ground. Niblack v. Goodman (1879) 67 Ind. 174.

In Fenton v. Lord (1880) 128 Mass. 466, where an action on a contract brought by the wife alone should have been brought by the husband and wife, and the defendant's objection in the lower court that the plaintiff should not have sued alone was overruled and judgment rendered for the plaintiff, it was held on appeal that, as the merits of the case had been fully tried, the plaintiff should be allowed to amend by joining her husband in the suit, but was not entitled to costs incurred after the trial.

In Heidelberg School Dist. v. Horst (1869) 62 Pa. 301, it was held that an amendment might be made on appeal, if necessary to support the judgment, by substituting the name of the township for that of the school district as the party defendant in an action of debt, where the evidence showed that the township was liable and the lower court had treated the case as amended.

In an action against a landlord and a constable for unlawful distraint, where the evidence showed that the plaintiff's claim was exclusively against the constable, and the case had been submitted to the jury as against him alone, it was held that the appellate court, to sustain a judgment for the plaintiff, might allow an amendment by striking out the name of the landlord. Oliver v. Wheeler (1904) 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 5.

In Grant v. Rogers (1886) 94 N. C. 755, it was held that a complaint in an action on an administrator's bond brought by the administrator de bonis non might be amended in the supreme court so as to make the action in the name of the state, to support a judgment for the plaintiff, the objection having been first made on appeal. And to a similar effect is Wilson v. Pearson (1889) 102 N. C. 290, 9 S. E. 707.

In Vunk v. Raritan River R. Co. (1894) 56 N. J. L. 395, 28 Atl. 593, it was held that the appellate court would not refuse to exercise its power of amendment in the interest of justice, by adding the name of the plaintiff's wife as a coplaintiff, because of the fact that the suit of the wife had become barred by the statute of limitations.

<sup>67</sup> See, for instance, Snyder v. State (1863) 21 Ind. 77, and Taggart v. State (1874) 49 Ind. 42, followed on similar facts in 49 Ind. 45; 49 Ind. 46; 49 Ind. 47; 49 Ind. 49; 49 Ind. 50.

<sup>68</sup> In an action by an alleged firm for

b. Recovery exceeding amount claimed.

The doctrine that an amendment of the pleadings to conform to the proof introduced without objection may be allowed or deemed made on appeal to support the judgment, where this course appears clearly to be in furtherance of justice, has been applied in a number of cases in which the amount found due on the price of goods sold to the defendants, where the evidence showed that the plaintiffs were the sole stockholders in the corporation which had sold the goods, it was held that a judgment for the plaintiffs could not be sustained on the theory that the complaint would be deemed amended by substituting the corporation as the party plaintiff. Cutshaw v. Fargo (1893) 8 Ind. App. 691, 34 N. E. 376, 36 N. E. 650. The court quoted with approval the rule laid down in Snyder v. State (1863) 21 Ind. 77, that such a radical amendment as a total change of one of the parties to the action could not on appeal be deemed made.

See also Utica Twp. v. Miller (Ind.) under note 30, supra.

<sup>60</sup> Carpenter v. Sheldon (1864) 22 Ind. 259 (excess being interest which had accrued owing to a delay in the trial); Webb v. Thompson (1864) 23 Ind. 428 (the court declining to follow Roberts v. Muir (1856) 7 Ind. 544, where a judgment was reversed because for a sum exceeding that claimed in the complaint, it being said that in the latter case the provisions of the Code had apparently been overlooked); Raymond v. Williams (1865) 24 Ind. 416 (excess being interest); Numbers v. Bowser (1868) 29 Ind. 401 (same); Robinson v. Jamison (1870) 33 Ind. 122 (same); White v. Stellwagon (1876) 54 Ind. 186; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Doney (1878) 65 Ind. 65; McKinney v. State (1898) 117 Ind. 26, 19 N. E. 613; Kettuc-e-mun-guah v. McClure (1890) 122 Ind. 541, 7 L.R.A. 782, 23 N. E. 1080; Decatur v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. (1897) 146 Ind. 577, 45 N. E. 793; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Steele (1892) 6 Ind. App. 183, 33 N. E. 236; Bozarth v. McGillicuddy (1897) 19 Ind. App. 36, 47 N. E. 397, 48 N. E. 1042 (complaint as to amount claimed for attorneys' fees being deemed amended); Helms v. Appleton (1908) 43 Ind. App. 483, 85 N. E. 733, petition for rehearing denied in (1908) 43 Ind. App. 490, 86 N. E. 1023 (same); Noyes Carriage Co. v. Robbins (1903) 31 Ind. App. 300, 67 N. E. 959 (excess being interest); Southern R. Co. v. Bulleit (1907) 40 Ind. App. 457, 82 N. E. 474; Wyandotte & K. C. Gas Co. v. Schliefer (1879) 22 Kan. 468 (excess being interest); Earle v. Gorham Mfg. Co. (1896) 2 App. Div. 460, 37 N. Y. Supp. 1037; Schultz v. 3d Ave. R. Co. (1882) 89 N. Y. 242; Costes v. Donnell (1881) 16 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 43; Withers v. New Jersey S. B. Co. (1867) 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 455; Grist v. Hodges (1831) 14 N. C. (3 Dev. L.) 198 (decided under statute of 1824, authorizing amend-the trial exceeded the amount claimed, and verdict and judgment were rendered for the larger sum, the pleading on appeal being amended or regarded as amended to conform to the proof in respect to the amount claimed, in order to sustain the judgment.<sup>60</sup> In Maryland it was expressly declared by statute that "no judgment shall be reversed in the court of appeals because the verdict was ments on appeal in the same manner as they could have been made in the superior or county courts); Clayton v. Liverman (1846) 29 N. C. (7 Ired. L.) 92; Miller v. Weeks (1863) 22 Pa. 89 (excess being interest); Trago v. Lewis (1868) 58 Pa. 463 (same).

As sustaining the above rule, see also Kettry v. Thumma (1893) 9 Ind. App. 498, 36 N. E. 919, where, although the verdict was for less than the total amount claimed, it was contended that on a particular item of the claim the plaintiff could not recover more than he had alleged as due on that item.

If the verdict and judgment are for a larger sum than that claimed in the complaint, application should be made to the court below for their correction; and in the absence of such an application, as presumably the complaint would have been amended in the lower court if objection to the amount of recovery had been made, the amendment will be treated as made, on appeal. McKinney v. State (1898) 117 Ind. 26, 19 N. E. 613.

In Boddie v. Ely (1830) 3 Stew. (Ala.) 182, the court said that whatever was amendable in the lower court would be considered in the supreme court as amended, and affirmed a judgment for the plaintiff in an action of debt, for damages in addition to the amount of the debt, where in the writ damages were claimed in a sum exceeding those allowed, but in the declaration the amount of damages claimed was left blank.

In an action for damages for personal injuries where the amount claimed in the complaint for medical services was $50, and a verdict was found on this item for $300, it was held on appeal that, as an answer had been filed and the complaint might have been amended in the lower court in respect to the amount claimed, and the evidence warranted the amount recovered, the complaint would be deemed amended on appeal. Southern R. Co. v. Bulleit (1907) 40 Ind. App. 457, 82 N. E. 474.

In Schultz v. 3d Ave. R. Co. (1882) 89 N. Y. 242, it was held that a judgment for damages for personal injuries would not be reversed because for a larger amount than that claimed in the complaint, but since the defect in the complaint did not affect the trial in any way, or mislead or prejudice the defendant, the complaint might be amended on appeal or the defect disregarded. The action was for damages for personal injury.

Where the note sued on provided for at-rendered for a larger sum than the amount laid in the declaration."<sup>70</sup>

In a Pennsylvania case<sup>71</sup> involving this question, it was said: "The legislature has led the way to the making of amendments of the most vital character, altering names Christian and surname, changing and adding names of parties, and even striking out parties where too many have been included. It becomes us to keep pace with legislative reform instead of lagging in its rear. Nothing is a matter of more form than the sum inserted at the conclusion of a narr. as the damages suffered. We therefore will allow the amendment which would have been of course in the court below."

A distinction not apparently generally recognized in other jurisdictions has been made on this point in a New Jersey case.<sup>72</sup> Thus, it was held that a declaration in an action for personal injuries should not be considered amended on appeal so as to claim an increased sum found due by the verdict, the court distinguishing between cases where the action was for unliquidated damages and the only indication of the amount claimed was in the ad damnum clause, and cases where the declaration alleged a cause of action on proof of which a larger sum must be due than was alleged. It was said: "If a declaration should allege a cause of action on proof of which a larger sum must be due than is stated in the ad damnum clause, then that clause might be deemed formal, and, after verdict, might be amended to conform with the real claim set forth in the pleadings. But where, as in this case, the declaration is for unliquidated damages, and contains no indication of the extent of the plaintiff's claim outside of the ad damnum clause, we must presume that the defendant regulated his conduct at the trial with reference to a claim for the damages there stated, and might have modified his course of defense had a claim for a larger sum been in controversy."

Another distinction has been observed in a few cases, namely, that while the declaration may be amended by the writ, if the former fails to allege any damages or an insufficient amount, the amendment cannot be allowed or deemed made on appeal, to support the judgment, if both the writ and declaration are defective in this regard. Thus, in an early Virginia case<sup>73</sup> it was held that while a declaration in an action for slander which failed to allege any sum torneys' fees, while the note set out in the findings provided for 5 per cent attorneys' fees, it was held that the complaint might be deemed amended on appeal to conform to the proof, and the judgment for the plaintiff affirmed, on the excess over 5 per cent allowed in the judgment as attorneys' fees being remitted. Cummings v. Girtton (1897) 19 Ind. App. 248, 49 N. E. 360.

<sup>70</sup> Marburg v. Marburg (1866) 26 Md. 8, 90 Am. Dec. 84.

<sup>71</sup> Trego v. Lewis (1868) 58 Pa. 463.

In Miller v. Weeks (1853) 22 Pa. 89, in holding that a declaration in an action on a note might be amended in the supreme court by increasing the damages asked to an amount to comprehend the verdict, the excess being interest which had accrued pending the action, the court said: "In Spackman v. Byers (1820) 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 385, where the damages found by the verdict exceeded the amount laid in the declaration, this court held that the record might be taken back for amendment, and that the judgment, so amended, should be affirmed. But when there is matter on the record to amend by, and there is no possibility of surprise or injustice to the defendant, why send the record down for purpose of amendment, instead of allowing it to be done here? A copy of the note on which the action was brought has been on the record ever since the institution of the suit, and nothing but the persevering resistance of the defendant has caused the interest to swell beyond the sum originally L.R.A.1916D.

demand. It is taking no undue advantage of him, therefore; it is indeed only administering the justice of the cause, to permit the plaintiff to amend here where we have the full record. This has been often allowed in regard to other amendments of equal or more materiality."

<sup>72</sup> Excelsior Electric Co. v. Sweet (1895) 59 N. J. L. 441, 31 Atl. 721.

<sup>73</sup> Hook v. Turnbull (1806) 6 Call (Va.) 85.

On the authority of Hook v. Turnbull (Va.) supra, it was held in Palmer v. Mill (1809) 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 502, that where the damages were laid in the writ at a sum exceeding the amount of the verdict and judgment, but in the declaration at a sum less than that in the verdict and judgment, the writ might be referred to for the purpose of amending the declaration, and the judgment affirmed.

And, on the same authority, it was held in Craghill v. Page (1808) 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 446, that if no amount of damages is alleged in the declaration, the omission is not fatal on appeal, but the declaration may be amended by the writ and the omission cured to support the judgment.

An omission in the declaration to state the damages sustained was held cured by the statute of jeofails in Stephens v. White (1796) 2 Wash. (Va.) 203, and not to be a ground for arresting the judgment for the plaintiff.

In Robinett v. Morris (1807) Hardin (Ky.) 93, it was held that the writ might as damages would be considered amended on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff to correspond with the amount of damages claimed in the writ, yet, if the judgment was for a larger sum than that claimed in the writ, a new trial would be necessary.

It has also been held, it appears, that if a judgment in an intermediate court on appeal is for a sum exceeding the jurisdiction of the court in which the action was begun, it may not be sustained by an amendment of the pleadings increasing the amount claimed to conform to the proof.<sup>74</sup>

The Indiana Code provides that the

be looked to for amendment of the declaration where the amount of the damages was omitted in the latter, but that the judgment must be reversed if for a larger amount than stated in the writ. This case was followed in Walker v. Kendall (1808) Hardin (Ky.) 404, holding in effect that the defect in the declaration in that it failed to state the damages was cured after verdict by the statement of damages in the writ.

Where, in an action for assault, the damages were laid in the writ at $1,000 and in the declaration at $100, and the verdict and judgment were for $120, it was held on appeal that the defect in the declaration was cured by the statute of jeofails. Kennedy v. Woods (1814) 3 Bibb (Ky.) 322.

<sup>74</sup> Where the plaintiff in an action commenced before a justice of the peace could recover only $100 damages, and the circuit court on appeal rendered judgment for a sum exceeding $100, it was held that the judgment of the circuit court could not be upheld by disregarding the error or permitting an amendment of the pleadings on the appeal by increasing the ad damnum. Dunbar v. Bittle (1859) 7 Wis. 143.

<sup>75</sup> Webb v. Thompson (1864) 23 Ind. 428.

<sup>76</sup> May v. State Bank (1857) 9 Ind. 233. Regarding this decision it was said in Webb v. Thompson (Ind.) supra, that the reasoning, while broad enough to cover a case where the judgment was not by default, apparently proceeded upon the ground that the Code made no change in the subject, and overlooked the provision which plainly required reversal where the judgment for a larger sum than was claimed was by default.

As to default judgment in other cases, see note 18, supra.

<sup>77</sup> It was said in Corning v. Corning (1851) 6 N. Y. 97, that before the adoption of the Code it was well settled that the supreme court had no power to allow an amendment of the declaration after verdict by increasing the amount of damages claimed to correspond with the amount of the verdict, except on the condition that the plaintiff relinquished the verdict, paid the defendant's costs of the trial, and consented to a new trial, and that the Code L.R.A.1916D.

relief granted to the plaintiff, if there is no answer, cannot exceed the relief demanded in his complaint.<sup>75</sup> Accordingly, if a judgment by default is for a sum exceeding that claimed in the complaint, the complaint cannot be deemed amended on appeal, in order to support the judgment.<sup>76</sup>

Although the appellate courts have generally permitted an amendment of the pleadings as to the amount claimed, or regarded the amendment as made, in order to support a recovery of a larger amount shown to be justly due, a few decisions appear to be to the contrary,<sup>77</sup> and in other cases, without apparently had not changed its rule. As sustaining the rule the court cited Dox v. Dey (1829) 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 356, and Curtiss v. Lawrence (1819) 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 112.

In Hawk v. Anderson (1827) 9 N. J. L. 319, and Lake v. Merrill (1829) 10 N. J. L. 288, judgments were reversed because for a larger amount than that claimed in the demand filed in the justice's court; but these decisions, it was said in Excelsior Electric Co. v. Sweet (1894) 57 N. J. L. 224, 30 Atl. 553, were before the amendment act in that state.

In Hooper v. Wells, F. & Co. (1864) 27 Cal. 11, 85 Am. Dec. 211, the supreme court of California stated that there was no provision in the practice act in that state authorizing it to allow an amendment to the complaint to make it correspond with the verdict, and held that where the verdict and judgment exceeded the amount of damages claimed in the complaint, while the lower court before a judgment might have permitted an amendment so as to make the complaint correspond with the verdict, on appeal the judgment must be reversed unless the respondent consent to remit the excess.

So, in Perkins v. West Coast Lumber Co. (1893) 4 Cal. Unrep. 155, 33 Pac. 1118, the court denied the contention of the plaintiff that he should be permitted to amend his complaint so that it would sustain a judgment for a larger amount than that claimed.

In Morgan v. Hall & L. Co. (1912) — R. I. —, 83 Atl. 401, an application was made in the supreme court on the hearing of a rule on the defendant to show cause why judgment should not be entered for the plaintiffs after their exceptions were sustained, for leave to increase the ad damnum, since the aggregate amount of the interest and judgment would exceed the sum for which the action had originally been brought. But the court denied the motion, stating that it did not think it should be entertained at this late stage of the proceeding when the case was before it upon exceptions, and remitted the case to the superior court with direction to enter judgment for the sum due the plaintiffs and so much of the interest as, added to the considering the matter of a possible amendment of the pleadings on appeal, the courts have reversed judgments on the ground that the recovery was for a substantially larger amount than was claimed in the pleading.<sup>78</sup> principal sum, should not exceed the amount of the ad damnum.

In Tomlinson v. Blacksmith (1797) 7 T. R. (Eng.) 132, the court was of the opinion that it would be going too far, without sending the cause down for a new trial, to allow an amendment of the declaration as to the amount of damages claimed from £100 to £1,000, the amount alleged being evidently a mistake not discovered until after the jury had found a verdict for more than £600, it being said that the defendant might have gone to trial relying that no more than £100 damages could be recovered against him.

<sup>78</sup> See, for example, Lester v. Barnett (1857) 33 Miss. 584. R. E. H.

ARIZONA SUPREME COURT.

IKE DIAMOND, Doing Business as N. Diamond & Brother, Appt.,

v.

WILLIAM JACQUITH.

(14 Ariz. 119, 125 Pac. 712.)

Statute of frauds — contract for services — extension beyond year.

1. A contract made in June to render personal services for a year from the following October is within the statute making voidable all contracts not to be performed within one year from the making thereof.

For other cases, see Contracts, I. c, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — performance — rendition of services.

2. Complete performance of a contract to render services during a period extending beyond a year from the making of the contract, for a monthly salary and a percentage on gross sales, and the payment of the stipulated salary, take the case out of the statute of frauds, so as to warrant recovery of the commission.

For other cases, see Contracts, I. c, 6, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(June 29, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Maricopa County in plaintiff's favor, and from an order overruling a motion for new trial, in an action brought to recover an amount alleged to be due under a contract for services. Affirmed.

Statement by Ross, J.

The appellee brought his action in the lower court against the appellant, alleging that, in the month of June, 1909, he entered into a verbal contract with the defendant to act as manager of defendant's mercantile business and general merchandising store in the city of Phoenix for the period between the 15th day of October, 1909, and the 15th of October, 1910; the appellant (defendant below) agreeing to pay as compensation $150 per month and 2 per cent on all gross sales made in said store under appellee's management over the sum of $144,000. Appellee further alleged that the gross sales of said business amounted to $273,107.79, and that his percentage at 2 per cent on the gross sales, over the sum of $144,000, was the sum of $2,582.14. Appellee alleged the payment of the salary of $150 a month, or $1,800, on account, and alleged that there was still due, under his contract, $2,582.14. He alleged that he performed each and every service required by him to be performed under the provisions of the contract. The appellant, in his answer, denied that he ever agreed to pay any percentage, and alleged that, prior to October 18, 1909, in the city of New York, he hired appellee under a verbal contract to work from month to month as manager of the dry goods and notions department of his store, at the agreed price of $150 a month, and for no other compensation whatsoever. Appellant alleged payment in full of the stipulated salary. The defendant, by way of demurrer and answer, set up the provisions of the statute of frauds, requiring contracts and agreements not to be performed within one year to be in writing. It was stipulated in the trial of the case that the gross sales of appellant's business, from October 15, 1909, to October 15, 1910, amounted to $273,107.79. Appellee testified: "There were no percentages to be paid until the expiration of the year. If I didn't stay my year out, I didn't get any percentage." The evidence shows that at the time the contract was entered into between the parties, appellee was in

Note.—For part performance to take contracts to render services not to be performed within a year out of the statute of frauds, see annotation following this case, post, 884.

L.R.A.1916D.

For right to quantum meruit for services rendered under parol contract, unenforceable because not to be performed within a year, see annotation following Fabian v. Wasatch Orchard Co. post, 895.

Phoenix; that he was making arrangements to move himself and family to Connecticut, with a view of entering business there; that he did in fact go to Connecticut, after the contract was concluded, on a visit; and remained there a couple of months; that he met appellant in New York and had several conversations with him concerning his employment, the details of which were discussed between them; that with his family he returned to Phoenix and entered upon the discharge of his labors for the appellant, continuing to work for him the entire year. The appellee also testified that he had received from the appellant $450 in cash and $107.10 in goods, amounting in all in cash and goods to $557.10. The cause was tried to a jury, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of appellee for the sum of $2,582.14, less the amount of the counterclaim for cash and goods paid and advanced to appellee by appellant, amounting to $557.10. The judgment followed the verdict and was for $2,025 and legal interest, and costs in the sum of $105.30. From this judgment and the order overruling motion for a new trial an appeal is taken.

Messrs. Kibbey, Bennett, & Bennett, and Barnett E. Marks, for appellant:

No action will lie upon a contract for services not to be performed within a year from the making of the contract. For services rendered under such contract, the plaintiff can only recover upon a quantum meruit to recover the value of the services rendered.

McElroy v. Ludlum, 32 N. J. Eq. 828; Riiff v. Riibe, 68 Neb. 543, 94 N. W. 517, 4 Ann. Cas. 462; Hillhouse v. Jennings, 60 S. C. 373, 38 S. E. 599; Patten v. Hicks, 43 Cal. 511; Pierce v. Paine, 28 Vt. 34; Emery v. Smith, 46 N. H. 151; Dunphy v. Ryan, 116 U. S. 497, 29 L. ed. 705, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 486; Scheuer v. Monash, 35 Misc. 276, 71 N. Y. Supp. 818; Hertzog v. Hertzog, 34 Pa. 418; Ewing v. Thompson, 66 Pa. 382; Fuller v. Reed, 38 Cal. 100.

In a contract of employment not to be performed within one year from the making, the rendering of the services does not take the case out of the statute so as to make an action on the contract sustainable.

Patten v. Hicks, 43 Cal. 511; Wood, Mast. & S. 2d ed. § 193; McElroy v. Ludlum, 32 N. J. Eq. 828; Quinn v. Stark County Teleph. Co. 122 Ill. App. 133.

Full performance by plaintiff alone does not take the case out of the statute of frauds.

Cooley v. Miller & Lux, 156 Cal. 510, 105 Pac. 981; Baxter v. Baxter, 46 Ind. App. 514, 92 N. E. 881, 1039; Lipscomb v. Lipscomb, 66 W. Va. 55, 66 S. E. 8; Graham v.

Graham, 134 App. Div. 777, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1013; McKinley v. Hassen, 135 App. Div. 832, 120 N. Y. Supp. 257; King v. Brown, 2 Hill, 485; Whipple v. Parker, 29 Mich. 369.

Messrs. G. P. Bullard and Alexander & Christy for appellee.

Ross, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant relies upon paragraph 2696, Revised Statutes of Arizona (Civil Code) 1901, for a reversal of the judgment of the lower court. That paragraph is as follows: "(§ 1) No action shall be brought in any of the courts in any of the following cases, unless the promise or agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum thereof, shall be in writing and signed by the parties to be charged therewith, or by some person by him thereunto lawfully authorized: . . . (5) Upon any agreement which is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof."

Under similar statutes, it has been held that verbal contracts not to be performed within a year are not void, but voidable. The language forbids the bringing of an action, but does not declare the contract void. 20 Cyc. 279 A. 2.

Clearly the contract here sued on falls within the statute of frauds (20 Cyc. 198 B) and is not enforceable, unless the acts of the parties to it take it out of the statute. The plaintiff (appellee) alleges that he was to receive, under his agreement, "as compensation, . . . the sum of $150 per month and 2 per cent on all gross sales made in said store and business under the management of said plaintiff over and above the sum of $144,000." This was the contract sued on. The percentage was as much a part of his salary as was the $150 per month. It was not ascertainable at the date of the contract, nor at any time before the end of the year; but at the end of the year, by a simple process of arithmetical computation on the excess over $144,000, the plaintiff's salary could be known. The fixed part of the plaintiff's salary, $150 per month, and the percentage, $2,582.14 added, determined the year's compensation to be $4,382.14.

The question as to whether the contract alleged by the appellee was, in fact, the contract of the parties or not, and as to whether appellee had performed all of its terms and conditions, was submitted to a jury, and that jury, by its verdict, found in favor of the appellee.

The item of $150 per month was no more a part of the contract for salary, nor any less a part thereof, than the item of percentage.

The question is, then, the appellant having partly performed the contract, by monthly payments, and the appellee having fully performed on his part, does this part performance by one of the parties and full performance by the other take the case out of the statute of frauds?

This is a case of first impression in this jurisdiction, and we are therefore not bound by any decision of this court; but we are at liberty to adopt that view of the law that appeals to us as most consonant with reason and justice. If it were an executory contract, we would not hesitate in holding it unenforceable; but the fact is that it has been executed by appellee and largely by appellant.

MacDonald v. Crosby, 192 Ill. 283, 289, 61 N. E. 505, 507, announced this rule: "It is insisted that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the pleas setting up the statute of frauds. The first plea is that the promise declared upon was not to be performed within one year; and, the second, that whatever promise was made by the defendants was a promise to answer for the debt of Mr. Crosby. As to the first, the demurrer was properly sustained, on the ground that the contract declared upon was fully and completely performed upon the part of the plaintiff, and nothing remained to be done by the defendants but to pay the money. Curtis v. Sage, 35 Ill. 22. We do not understand, under the rule in this state, that the statute of frauds can be interposed as a defense where the contract is fully performed on the part of the plaintiff; in other words, the statute of frauds cannot be availed of for the purpose of perpetrating a fraud."

In Lowman v. Sheets, 124 Ind. 416-422, 7 L.R.A. 784, 24 N. E. 351, 353, the court said: "The sale and delivery of a one-half interest in the mares in controversy is not within the statute of frauds, because it was fully executed by Templeton. The statute prohibiting the making of contracts not to be performed within one year has no application to contracts which have been fully performed by one of the parties."

The Iowa court, in Murphy v. De Haan, 116 Iowa, 61, 62, 89 N. W. 100, in passing upon the right of an employee to recover on an oral contract, said: "It is contended that, while the petition states a valid cause of action, plaintiff proved a contract within the statute of frauds, in that, according to his evidence, he was not to commence work on the day the contract was entered into, but at some future time, and that the contract was made three or four days before he actually began the service. Defendant moved to strike out this evidence, because within the statute, but the motion was overruled. He also challenges the instructions of the court, for the reason that they ignore the statute of frauds. Remembering that this is an action for work and labor performed at an agreed price per month, it is difficult to see how the statute of frauds affects the case. Contracts within the statute are not void, and, if performed or partly performed, they are, to the extent of such performance, taken out of the statute. When executed, or so far as executed, such contracts are valid, and as binding as if they had been in writing. This statute was not enacted for the purpose of aiding one in the perpetration of a fraud, but to secure him from the consequences thereof. It was intended as a shield, and not as a sword. According to the evidence, defendant had the benefit of plaintiff's services, and he cannot be heard to say that they were performed under a contract which would have been invalid had it remained executory in character."

In Marks v. Davis, 72 Mo. App. 557-563, the court, after reviewing the Missouri cases bearing on oral contracts for labor and services not to be performed within a year, said: "In view of this line of decisions, we think we can safely say that the rule is firmly established in this state that a full and complete performance of a contract by one of the contracting parties takes the contract out of the statute of frauds, and that the party so performing his contract may sue upon it in a court of law, and that he is not compelled to abandon the contract and sue in equity or upon a quantum meruit, as seems to be the law in some of the states."

In Wehner v. Bauer (C. C.) 160 Fed. 240, 244, it is said: "Nor do I think the objection well taken that the contract is void within the statute of frauds because not in writing, and one which, by its terms, was not to be performed within a year. The statute of frauds has no application to a contract which has been fully performed or executed by one of the parties thereto; and here the evidence shows that complainant had immediately, and before the parties left the mine, fully performed the contract on his part by turning over and delivering to the defendant all the machinery, stock, material, and tools, in accordance with its terms."

There is a line of cases that turns on the question of the election of remedies, holding that, when the contract is within the statute of frauds, the suit should be on quantum meruit, in which case the contract may be used as evidence of the value of the services.

The distinction drawn by this line of cases is technical rather than substantial. To say that a contract fully performed by one of the parties to it cannot be sued upon because the statute is evidentiary, and the contract, being within the statute of frauds, cannot avail as evidence in a suit on the contract, but in a suit on quantum meruit the contract, if fully performed by one of the parties, can be used as evidence of the value of the services, is a technical distinction, it seems to us, in the matter of remedy, and is not a distinction on principle. It goes rather to the form than to the substance of the matter. If, on full performance by one of the parties, the contract is taken out of the statute, to the effect that it may be introduced as evidence in aid of a common count, we can perceive no reason why such performance will not take it out of the statute so that suit may be maintained on the contract.

That, in a suit on the contract, its terms determine the value of the services, while in a suit on one of the common counts the terms of the contract may only be evidence of the value of the services, does not militate against the reasoning that, if it can be held to be taken out of the statute in the one case, it should be so held in the other case.

Another aspect of the case is that appellee was closing out his business connections in Arizona, with a view of locating in Connecticut; but, having concluded his contract with appellant, he returned from the East, where he went on a visit, bringing his family. Relying upon his engagement with appellant, he made the trip to Arizona, and necessarily at considerable expense for himself and family. He made no effort, as was his intention until employed by appellant, to secure a business or employment in the East.

Having induced appellee by means of his oral contract to return to Arizona, to abandon his search for other business connections, we think it does not lie in the mouth of the appellant to deny the contract, especially after its full and complete performance by appellee.

In Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 794, 134 Am. St. Rep. 154, 106 Pac. 88-94, it L.R.A.1916D.

is said by the California court: "The right of courts of equity to hold a person estopped to assert the statute of frauds, where such assertion would amount to practising a fraud, cannot be disputed. It is based upon the principle, 'thoroughly established in equity, and applying in every transaction where the statute is invoked, that the statute of frauds, having been enacted for the purpose of preventing fraud, shall not be made the instrument of shielding, protecting, or aiding the party who relies upon it in the perpetration of a fraud, or in the consummation of a fraudulent scheme.' 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 921. It was said in Glass v. Hulbert, 102 Mass. 24, 25, 3 Am. Rep. 418: 'The fraud most commonly treated as taking an agreement out of the statute of frauds is that which consists in setting up the statute against its enforcement, after the other party has been induced to make expenditures, or a change of situation, in regard to the subject-matter of the agreement, or upon the supposition that it was to be carried into execution, and the assumption of rights thereby to be acquired; so that the refusal to complete the execution of the agreement is not merely a denial of rights which it was intended to confer, but the infliction of an unjust and unconscionable injury and loss. In such case, the party is held, by force of his acts or silent acquiescence, which have misled the other to his harm, to be estopped from setting up the statute of frauds.' This statement has been accepted as setting forth a plain and satisfactory ground for equitable jurisdiction, together with a clear indication of the proper limitation of its exercise. . . . We can see no good reason for limiting the operation of this equitable doctrine to any particular class of contracts included within the statute of frauds, provided always the essential elements of an estoppel are present, or for saying otherwise than as is intimated by Mr. Pomeroy in the words already quoted, viz., that it applies 'in every transaction where the statute is invoked.'"

For the reasons given above, we think the judgment of the lower court was in accordance with law, and that no errors were committed in the trial.

The judgment of that court is therefore affirmed.

Franklin, Ch. J., and Cunningham, J., concur.

Annotation—Part performance to take contracts to render services not to be performed within a year out of the statute of frauds.

I. Scope, 884.

II. Part performance on one or both sides.

- a. In actions to recover for services rendered, 884.
- b. In actions for breach of the contract, 886.
- c. In equity, 888.
- d. Sufficiency of acts to constitute part performance, 889.

III. Complete performance of services.

- a. In actions to recover for services rendered, 890.
- b. In actions for breach of the contract, 891.
- c. In equity, 892.

I. Scope.

This note is confined to a consideration of those cases in which the contracts to render services were looked upon as coming within the operation of the portion of the statute of frauds dealing with contracts not to be performed within a year. The scope, therefore, does not include cases in which the contracts, although apparently not to be performed within a year, are objected to, not upon that ground, but because they fall within some other clause of the statute, e. g., the clause requiring all contracts relating to realty to be in writing.

Part performance, as used in the title of this note, refers to any performance by one or both parties falling short of complete performance on both sides. All cases are therefore included in which the performance has fallen short of absolute execution.

Upon the right to quantum meruit for services rendered under contract unenforceable because not to be performed within a year, see note to Fabian v. Wasatch Orchard Co.<sup>1</sup>

For a discussion of the validity of an oral contract for a year's services, to commence in futuro, see note to Chase v. Hinkley.<sup>2</sup>

As to the effect of the statute of frauds upon a parol contract for services which may, but are not intended to, be performed within a year, see note to White v. Fitts.<sup>3</sup>

And see, upon the matter of the specific performance of oral contract to devise or convey land in consideration of performing services or furnishing support, where no possession is taken or improvements made, the note to Grindling v. Reyhl.<sup>4</sup>

II. Part performance on one or both sides.

a. In actions to recover for services rendered.

Only one state has committed itself to the unqualified rule that part performance of a parol contract for services, unenforceable because not to be performed within a year, will remove the contract from the operation of the statute of frauds.<sup>5</sup> On the other hand, however, several courts have laid down the rule that part performance of such a contract will remove it from the operation of the statute so far as it has been performed.<sup>6</sup> Such a rule is the result of

<sup>1</sup> Post, 892.

<sup>2</sup> 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 738.

<sup>3</sup> 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 313.

<sup>4</sup> 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 466.

<sup>5</sup> In Heery v. Reed (1909) 80 Kan. 380, 102 Pac. 846, an action to recover from the estate of a deceased person for services performed under a contract that she should live with and work for deceased during his lifetime, and have all his property at his death, it is held that the part performance by plaintiff of her contract up till the time its performance was prevented by deceased was sufficient to remove the bar of the statute of frauds, assuming such contract to be one not to be performed within a year.

And this case is referred to in Longhofer v. Herbel (1910) 83 Kan. 278, 111 Pac. 483, an action by a minor against his stepfather on a parol contract to pay for his services after he was thirteen years old, where it is said that "under somewhat similar circumstances this court has held that an oral L.R.A.1916D.

contract may be taken out of the statute by the rendition and acceptance of services under it."

<sup>6</sup> Where a salesman is suing for the contract price of work and labor performed under a parol contract for a year, to commence at a future date, the court, in Murphy v. De Haan (1902) 116 Iowa, 61, 89 N. W. 100, says: "Contracts within the statute are not void, and, if performed or partly performed, they are, to the extent of such performance, taken out of the statute. When executed, or so far as executed, such contracts are valid, and as binding as if they had been in writing."

The preceding case was cited and followed in Hahnel v. Highland Park College (1915) — Iowa, —, 152 N. W. 571, an action by a teacher to recover the contract price of services rendered under a parol contract of employment for three years, in which it is said: "We have held that contracts for services partly performed are, to a very proper endeavor on the part of the courts to remove the rigor of the statute without destroying its entire effect. Its purpose is the same as that which is the basis of the principle upon which, in a number of states, an employee who has performed services under a parol contract not to be performed within a year is permitted to recover the value of the services rendered.<sup>7</sup> The employer having permitted the services to be performed, and having received their benefit, it is considered proper that he should pay for them. It should be noted, however, that these two rules, while accomplishing a similar purpose, are based upon antagonistic theories. In the one case, the recovery is upon the express contract, which is held to be removed from the operation of the statute by the part performance; in the other, the part performance is looked upon as inefficacious to remove the operation of the statute, and the recovery is upon an implied contract. The practical result of this difference of opinion becomes evident when the question of the amount of the recovery comes up for consideration.

The doctrine of part performance, however, is not always invoked on behalf of the employee; where the contract provides for payment at the completion of the term of employment, the employee can base no claim for services thereon until he has completed such term, and the performance of the services for a portion of the term, although serving to remove the operation of the statute therefrom, leaves him in no better position than if the statute still obtained.<sup>8</sup> It may even be said that he is in a less favorable position, inasmuch as, being bound by the terms of the express agreement, he cannot sue in quantum meruit on an implied contract.

In other instances part performance

the extent of the performance, taken out of the statute."

In Fuller v. Rice (1884) 52 Mich. 435, 18 N. W. 204, an action for services performed under a parol contract to cut and haul logs for defendant at a certain rate for three years, defendant's objection to evidence of the agreement, as being within the statute of frauds, was held not to be valid, on the ground that "so far as the parties had acted in performance of the agreement, they had consented to be governed by its terms." The court says further that "if the plaintiff had performed valuable services for the defendant under the contract, of which the latter had reaped the advantage, he was entitled to recover therefor at the rate fixed by the contract, less any damages the defendant may have suffered by reason of failure in complete performance."

And the preceding case is cited and followed in Smith v. Chase & B. Piano Mfg. Co. (1913) 176 Mich. 371, 141 N. W. 563, an action to recover certain instalments of salary under a parol contract of employment in the capacity of superintendent and manager, for a period of three years, where it is held that parties to the contract "were bound thereby so far as it was performed." In this case the instalments sued for had not been earned when plaintiff was discharged. In a later appeal (1915) 185 Mich. 313, 151 N. W. 1025, where plaintiff was suing for the recovery of the same instalments upon an implied contract, the recovery was denied, and the court said: "If one makes a contract for services which is void under the statute, he can recover at the contract price for the services actually rendered."

See also Swanzy v. Moore (1859) 22 Ill. 63, 74 Am. Dec. 134; Philbrook v. Belknap (1834) 6 Vt. 383; Mack v. Bragg (1858) 30 Vt. 571, infra, footnote 8.

<sup>7</sup>See the note to Fabian v. Wasatch Orchard Co. post, 895.
L.R.A.1916D.

<sup>8</sup>In Swanzy v. Moore (1859) 22 Ill. 63, 74 Am. Dec. 134, an action for work and labor rendered in part performance of a contract for a year, to begin at a future date, it is said that "a parol contract which that statute requires to be in writing is as good as any when performed, or while being performed, or when partly performed, so far as the performance goes." Where, therefore, as in this case, plaintiff breached a contract by the terms of which he engaged to work for a year before receiving compensation, his part performance up till the time of the breach takes the contract, so far as it deals with the work so performed, out of the statute, and puts it in operation, thereby shutting plaintiff off, under its terms, from any compensation for his labor.

And in Philbrook v. Belknap (1834) 6 Vt. 383, an action on a book account for the value of services rendered by plaintiff up to the time of his breach of a parol contract of employment for a period of three years, by the terms of which plaintiff was to receive no compensation if he left the service before the expiration of the three years, it was held that the plaintiff's part performance of the contract rendered the statute inoperative as to the part performed, and that, consequently, there could be no recovery.

And, although seeming to enunciate a different principle, the decision is based upon the same grounds in Mack v. Bragg (1858) 30 Vt. 571, an action by the father of an infant to recover the value of his son's services rendered up till the time of his breach of a parol contract, by the terms of which he was to receive a certain sum of money at the expiration of his period of employment, some four years later, where the part performance was held to remove from the operation of the statute the portion of the contract performed, and recovery was accordingly denied.

by one or both of the parties has been held to have no effect on the operation of the statute.<sup>9</sup> This view seems to be the one taken by the greater number of courts. Additional weight is given to this rule by the number of cases involving part performance in which the matter has been disregarded.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>9</sup> The doctrine of part performance was, in Union Sav. & T. Co. v. Krumm (1915) — Wash. —, 152 Pac. 681, held to have no application to the clause of the statute dealing with contracts not to be performed within a year. In that case defendant set up as an affirmative defense, in an action by the trust company, a claim for saw logs furnished under a parol contract which, by its nature, could not be performed within a year. Recovery on the contract was denied.

So, it is said in Draheim v. Evison (1901) 112 Wis. 27, 87 N. W. 795, an action by a father to recover the value of services rendered by his son in part performance of his oral contract of employment for a year, to begin in the future, that the part performance did not remove the contract from the operation of the statute, either in favor of plaintiff, so that he might maintain an action thereon or in favor of defendant, so that he might found a defense thereupon.

"Partial performance of a contract void under the statute of frauds does not save it," is the way it is put in Chase v. Hinkley (1905) 126 Wis. 75, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 738, 110 Am. St. Rep. 896, 105 N. W. 230, 5 Ann. Cas. 328, an action by an employee to recover for services rendered in part performance of a parol contract of employment for a year, to begin in the future.

The partial performance of a parol contract of employment to begin in the future, consisting of plaintiff's coming to the United States and entering upon the employment, is held, in Turnow v. Hochstadter (1876) 7 Hun (N. Y.) 80, not to remove the contract from the operation of the statute.

While of the opinion that full performance by an employee of a parol contract for the term of a year, to begin in the future, will remove it from the operation of the statute, it is held in Scheuer v. Monash (1901) 35 Misc. 276, 71 N. Y. Supp. 818, that where the employee has left the employment without the consent of his employer, before the expiration of the term, he cannot recover on the contract.

Where a laborer who entered into an oral contract to work for defendant for a year, to begin at a future date, leaves the employment before his term has expired, and sues for the value of the services rendered, the employer cannot set up the part performance by plaintiff, in order to take the contract out of the statute, so that he may rely upon it for a defense. Comes v. Lamson (1844) 16 Conn. 246.

And it was held in Patten v. Hicks (1872) 43 Cal. 509, that plaintiff could not recover L.R.A.1916D.

b. In actions for breach of the contract.

The rule that part performance will prevent the operation of the statute so far as performance has gone, can, by the nature of things, have no application to actions for the breach of contract. In such actions recovery is based not upon the contract rate for logs which he had furnished defendant under a parol contract to cut and deliver to him at his mill saw logs sufficient to keep the mill running for two years.

<sup>10</sup> In McGartland v. Steward (1871) 2 Houst. (Del.) 277, an action for the partial services rendered by plaintiff's son before defendant's breach of a parol contract with plaintiff for an employment for three years, the court held that the recovery, if at all, would have to be on the count on quantum meruit, and not on the one upon special agreement. In this case no mention is made of the matter of part performance.

So, in Barrett v. Riley (1891) 42 Ill. App. 258, an action by a mother on the contract of employment under which her son was engaged by defendant for a period of three years, where defendant successfully set up the statute of frauds, the matter of the part performance during the time the boy had worked for defendant is not discussed.

And in Tague v. Hayward (1865) 25 Ind. 427, an action by an apprentice for the value of the work and labor performed during the five years prior to his breach of the parol contract of apprenticeship, no question was made of the effect of the part performance.

And the matter of part performance is given no consideration in William Butcher Steel Works v. Atkinson (1873) 68 Ill. 421, an action by an employee upon a parol contract of employment for three years, which he had performed in part before his discharge by his employer, although the statute of frauds is held to be a good defense to the action.

In Hill v. Hooper (1854) 1 Gray (Mass.) 131, an action by a father to recover one of the instalments due under his parol contract with defendant for the employment of his infant son for a period of five years, recovery is denied, no force being given to the part performance on the part of the son.

Where, in Giles v. McEwan (1896) 11 Manitoba, L. R. 150, an action for services rendered under a parol contract of employment for a year, to begin in the future, plaintiffs had completed the year all but two days, the contract was held to be within the operation of the statute, no weight being given to the part performance.

And where, in Thacher v. New York W. & B. R. Co. (1912) 153 App. Div. 186, 138 N. Y. Supp. 463, plaintiffs sued on a count in quantum meruit for work done, and on a count on a parol contract of employment, not to be performed within a year, it is held that the recovery should be in quantum what has been done under the contract, but upon the loss accruing from what has not been done. Therefore, even in jurisdictions which have adopted that rule, there can be found no ground upon which to base a right of recovery for the breach of a contract not to be performed within a year.<sup>11</sup> It may consequently be stated as a rule without exception that the part performance of services under a parol contract not to be performed within a year does not remove the contract from the operation of the statute of frauds, so that an action may be maintained for its breach, either by the master<sup>12</sup> or servant.<sup>13</sup> Additional indirect meruit, no attention apparently being given to the part performance, as operating to prevent the operation of the statute.

In Salb v. Campbell (1888) 65 Wis. 405, 27 N. W. 45, in which the father of an apprentice who had left his master before the expiration of the four years of apprenticeship provided for in the parol contract sought to recover the contract price of the services performed, and in which the defendant also claimed damages for breach of the contract, it was held that no action on the contract could be maintained, no mention being made, however, of the effect of part performance on that question.

<sup>11</sup>In Murphy v. De Haan (1902) 116 Iowa, 61, 89 N. W. 100, an action by a salesman for the contract price of work and labor performed under a parol contract not to be performed within a year, where, after holding part performance sufficient to take the contract out of the statute of frauds for the purpose of that action, it is said that, "if the action were to recover damages for breach of the contract, a different rule would apply."

<sup>12</sup>In Seymour v. Warren (1903) 86 App. Div. 403, 83 N. Y. Supp. 871, former appeal in (1901) 59 App. Div. 120, 69 N. Y. Supp. 236, an action by the owner of premises for the breach of a parol contract not to be performed within a year, under which defendants undertook to take charge of the premises, and keep them in good repair, and pay all the expenses connected therewith, for a certain consideration, it was held that partial performance of such agreement did not remove it from the operation of the statute, so as to afford any right to an action for its breach.

Where defendants have entered into an oral subcontract with plaintiffs, who have a contract with the United States for carrying mail, and defendants have carried the mail, and plaintiffs have paid them the stipulated rate, for several months, such part performance is not sufficient to take the contract out of the statute of frauds, so that plaintiffs may maintain an action for breach thereof. Long v. Long (1912) 162 Cal. 427, 122 Pac. 1077.

And in Squire v. Whipple (1827) 1 Vt. 69, an action on a parol contract of apprenticeship, to last for four years, by the master against the father of the apprentice, who, without plaintiff's consent, had left his employ, it was held that the part performance during the six months in which the boy had remained in plaintiff's employ would not remove the contract from the operation of the statute. The court said: "There has been no more execution of this agreement by one party than the other, and hence they stand on equal ground in respect to fraud or hardship."

<sup>13</sup>In Britain v. Rossiter (1883) L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 123, an action by a clerk for the breach of a contract of employment for a year, to begin in the future, the court denies the doctrine of part performance as extending to contracts for services. The distinction between the part performance of such contracts and those relating to land is explained as follows: "It is well known that where a contract for the sale of land had been partly performed, courts of equity did in certain cases recognize and enforce it; but this doctrine was exercised only as to cases concerning land, and was never extended to contracts like that before us, because they could not be brought within the jurisdiction of courts of equity. Those courts could not entertain suits for specific performance of contracts of service, and therefore a case like the present could not come before them. As to the application of the doctrine of part performance to suits concerning land, I will merely say that the cases in the court of chancery were bold decisions on the words of the statute."

And it is held, obiter, in Bracegirdle v. Heald (1818) 1 Barn. & Ald. (Eng.) 722, 19 Revised Rep. 442, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 177, an action by a groom for the breach of a parol contract of employment for a year, to begin in the future, caused by defendant's refusal, upon the agreed date, to take plaintiff into his service, that part performance will not remove such a contract from the operation of the statute. "Will an inchoate performance, or a part execution, satisfy the terms of the statute?" Lord Ellenborough, Ch. J., asks. "I am of opinion that it will not, and that there must be a full, effective, and complete performance."

An oral contract of employment for a year, to begin in the future, is held not to be removed from the operation of the statute of frauds by the part performance of the employee, in San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Moore (1907) 46 Tex. Civ. App. 259, 101 S. W. 867, an action for breach of the contract.

Where, in Hillhouse v. Jennings (1900) 60 S. C. 373, 38 S. E. 599, plaintiff sought to recover for the breach of a parol contract of employment for a year, to begin in the future, evidence of such contract was excluded under the statute, and it was held that plaintiff's part performance would not serve to relax the rule.

In Smith v. Bowler (1857) 1 Disney (Ohio) 520, 12 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 770, affirmed in (1858) 2 Disney (Ohio) 153, an authority for this rule is furnished by several cases in which recovery for the breach of such contracts has been refused on the ground that they come within the operation of the statute, no reference being made to the part performance of the services contracted for.<sup>14</sup> action by an employee under a parol contract of employment for three years, it is held that part performance for two years will not take the contract out of the operation of the statute, so that plaintiff may maintain an action for its breach.

Part performance on the part of the employee was held not to avail him, in Baker v. Codding (1892) 44 N. Y. S. R. 787, 18 N. Y. Supp. 159, affirmed in (1893) 21 N. Y. Supp. 1131, an action for damages for the breach of a parol contract of employment for a year, to begin in the future.

And in Spinney v. Hill (1900) 81 Minn. 316, 84 N. W. 116, an action for the breach of a parol contract of employment for three years, it is likewise held that, while plaintiff is entitled to recover the value of the services rendered, he cannot maintain an action on the contract for the breach thereof.

While stating, in Lally v. Crookston Lumber Co. (1902) 85 Minn. 257, 88 N. W. 846, that an employee under a parol contract of employment for a year, to begin at a future date, might recover in quantum meruit for the value of services rendered, it is held that he cannot maintain an action for the breach of the contract.

Where an employee who has been engaged under a parol contract for a year, to begin at a future date, is discharged without cause at the end of four months, and paid for his work during that time, he cannot maintain an action on the contract for damages sustained by the breach; "nor does a partial performance authorize an action to be maintained on the contract." Kleeman v. Collins (1872) 9 Bush (Ky.) 460.

It is said in Clark County v. Howell (1899) 21 Ind. App. 495, 52 N. E. 769, an action by a person engaged under a parol contract as janitor for the courthouse for a year, to commence at a future date, to recover damages for the breach of his contract, caused by his discharge before the expiration of his term of employment, that "the doctrine of part performance has no application in the case of a contract that cannot be performed by either party within a year."

In Oak Leaf Mill Co. v. Cooper (1912) 103 Ark. 79, 146 S. W. 130, an action by an employee, discharged a short time after entering upon his employment, and paid one month's wages, to recover the remainder of his year's wages under a contract of employment for one year, to begin at a future date, it is held that "a part performance of such a verbal contract does not take the case out of the provisions of the statute."

So, in Scoggin v. Blackwell (1860) 36 Ala. 351, an action by an employee dis-

c. In equity.

Parol contracts for services not to be performed within a year have rarely come before courts of equity, but, in the few instances in which they have, part performance has been held inefficacious charged a few days after entering upon his employment, to recover his year's salary, under a contract of employment for one year, made in the month preceding the one in which the employment was to begin, it was held that "so long as the contract remained executory, no action could be predicated upon it for its breach or nonperformance."

One who has entered into an oral contract to cultivate certain land for a period of more than fourteen months cannot recover for the breach of the defendant, who refused to perform his duties under the contract, although he himself has entered upon the performance of his labors. Treadway v. Smith (1876) 56 Ala. 345.

And where, under an oral contract to serve as a bartender for a period exceeding a year, plaintiff has entered upon the employment and worked for several months, he cannot, upon discharge without cause, recover his wages for the remaining months. Henry v. Wells (1886) 48 Ark. 486, 3 S. W. 637. "Partial execution has no effect at law to take any case out of the provisions of the statute," says the court.

In Seymour v. Oelrichs (1909) 156 Cal. 782, 134 Am. St. Rep. 154, 106 Pac. 88, an action to recover for the breach of an oral contract of employment for ten years, the court says: "The claim of plaintiff is not that mere part performance of a contract for personal services which, by its terms, is not to be performed within a year, 'invalid' under our statute because not evidenced by writing, renders the same valid and enforceable. Such a claim would, of course, find no support in the authorities."

But see Shumate v. Farlow (1890) 125 Ind. 359, 25 N. E. 432, infra, footnote 19; Johnson v. Upper (1905) 38 Wash. 693, 80 Pac. 801, infra, footnote 19; and Chenoweth v. Pacific Exp. Co. (1902) 93 Mo. App. 185, infra, footnote 27.

<sup>14</sup> In Meyer v. Roberts (1885) 46 Ark. 80, 55 Am. Rep. 567, the plaintiff, who had been engaged as manager of defendant's plantations for a year, to begin at a future date, and who had been paid and discharged after a few months, was suing to recover the salary due for the remainder of the term. The attention of the court was not called to the question of part performance, and the recovery was denied.

So, in Frazer v. Howe (1883) 106 Ill. 563, where an employer successfully set up the statute of frauds as a defense to a set-off set up by the employee for the breach of the oral contract of employment, which was to last five years, and which he had partly performed, the matter of part performance was not raised.

to prevent the operation of the statute, both in actions for accounting<sup>15</sup> and for specific performance.<sup>16</sup>

d. Sufficiency of acts to constitute part performance.

Where, as in Georgia, the statute itself provides for an exception in the case of part performance, the only question which remains for the court is the meaning of the term "part performance," as used in the statute. In the jurisdiction mentioned, the court is not liberal in its construction, and while it is held that the surrender of one position to accept another is a sufficient part performance,<sup>17</sup> the removal of the employee from one city to another, and his entering upon the employment, has been held to be insufficient.<sup>18</sup>

And it has been held in other jurisdictions making no exception to the statute of frauds for the part performance of contracts not to be performed within a year, that entry upon and occupancy of the premises upon which the services are to be performed do not constitute a sufficient part performance.<sup>19</sup>

And in Wonsettler v. Lee (1888) 40 Kan. 367, an action for the breach of a parol contract under which plaintiff had performed the services agreed upon for two years, he was permitted to recover in quantum meruit, and the question of part performance was disregarded.

And where, in Hambell v. Hamilton (1835) 3 Dana (Ky.) 501, the validity of a parol contract of apprenticeship for three years, breached by the apprentice after performance for a year, came into question, neither court nor counsel raised the point as to the effect of the part performance.

In Bethel v. A. Booth & Co. (1903) 115 Ky. 145, 72 S. W. 803, an action for breach of a parol contract whereby defendant engaged to employ plaintiff for ten years, no mention is made of the year during which plaintiff remained in defendant's employ, as taking the contract out of the statute.

And in Drummond v. Burrell (1835) 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 307, an action by an employer against his employee, who had left his service at the end of six months for breach of a parol contract of employment for two years, recovery was denied, no reference being made to the part performance.

<sup>15</sup> Where, in McElroy v. Ludlum (1880) 32 N. J. Eq. 828, an employee brought suit against employers for an accounting and share of profits due under a parol contract of hiring for five years, the court makes the following reference to the matter of plaintiff's performance of the contract: "Performance of a contract invalid by the statute will not validate the contract so as to enable a party to enforce it by an action upon the contract. Unless in cases specially provided for in the statute, part performance will not validate the contract at law. The dictum that part performance will make valid a contract invalid by the statute of frauds is exclusively the creature of equity, and applies only to contracts relating to lands, and does not extend to contracts relating to other matters."

And in Van Horn v. Van Horn (1890) — N. J. Eq. —, 20 Atl. 826, a suit for a partnership accounting, involving a claim by an employee for her wages for the remainder of the term of her employment, the claim is held to be within the statute of frauds as one not to be performed within a year, L.R.A.1916D.

and her recovery is measured by the value of her services, nothing being said with respect to the part performance for ten months taking the contract out of the statute.

<sup>16</sup> Part performance of a parol contract for the clearing of land, to extend over a period of years, while sufficient to remove the portion performed from the operation of the statute, will not entitle the employee to compel the owner of the land to complete the performance of the contract. Sheldon v. Preva (1884) 57 Vt. 263.

But see Johnson v. Upper (1905) 38 Wash. 693, 80 Pac. 801, infra, footnote 19.

<sup>17</sup> It is held in Bagwell v. Milam (1911) 9 Ga. App. 315, 71 S. E. 684, an action by a discharged teacher of telegraphy to recover the salary due him under his contract for the remainder of his term of employment, that, conceding the contract to be one not to be performed within a year, the surrender by plaintiff of his former position, in order to take employment with defendant, constitutes such part performance as will take the contract out of the statute of frauds. The court lays down the following general rule: "The contract will be taken out of the operation of the statute of frauds whenever one party to the contract performs some act essential to the contract that results in loss or injury to him and in benefit to the other party."

<sup>18</sup> In an action on a contract of employment for more than a year, brought by a discharged employee for an unpaid balance, it is held that neither the removal of plaintiff with his family to the city in which the defendant's store was located, nor the fact that he entered upon the employment, was such part performance as is referred to in a statute making an exception on that ground. Bentley v. Smith (1907) 3 Ga. App. 242, 59 S. E. 720.

<sup>19</sup> In Shumate v. Farlow (1890) 125 Ind. 359, 25 N. E. 432, an action for damages sustained by reason of defendant's refusal to permit plaintiff to perform services on his farm after he had moved in, in accordance with the terms of a parol contract which was not to be performed within a year, it is said: "The taking possession and occupancy of the house were not the performance of a substantive part of, but a mere incident to, the contract for per-

III. Complete performance of services.a. In actions to recover for services rendered.

It seems to be the better rule that complete performance of the services specified in a parol contract not to be performed within a year prevents the operation of the statute of frauds, so that the servant may recover his salary.<sup>20</sup> And where the contract provides for the payment of a sum in addition to salary, conditioned upon the profits of the business,<sup>21</sup> or for the payment of a commission upon the sales made,<sup>22</sup> recovsonal service, and did not have the effect to rescue the agreement from the prohibition of the statute."

After holding, in Johnson v. Upper (1905) 38 Wash. 693, 80 Pac. 801, an action for the breach of a parol contract by the terms of which plaintiff was to care for defendant's farm for a period of five years, for a share of the profits, that, inasmuch as the damages claimed were not for labor expended, but for the loss of profits, "the action is substantially one in specific performance of the contract," the court, in discussing the case from the view point of a court of equity, finds that plaintiff's allegation that he entered upon the premises and continued to reside thereon for several months, and that defendant furnished a portion of the stock, "falls far short of showing any changed relation, 'or unconscientious injury and loss,' which are essential to authorize a court exercising both law and equity jurisdiction to declare that the defendant is bound as upon an executed contract."

<sup>20</sup> Re Chamberlain (1911) 146 App. Div. 583, 131 N. Y. Supp. 245, affirmed in (1912) 204 N. Y. 665, 97 N. E. 1103, was an action on an unsigned contract of employment for five years, which had been executed by the plaintiff. While plaintiff's right of recovery is not based wholly upon such performance, the court gives it as one of the grounds for its decision. It is said: "This agreement was not signed, but it was a part of the contents of a communication signed by the decedent, and was a part of a series of communications passing between the parties, and there is no dispute that Miss Smith has performed the agreement in good faith on her part, and it is conceded that Miss Maurice made payments upon the account during her lifetime, so that we are of the opinion that the suggestion that the contract was void because of the statute of frauds is without force."

And where, in Durfee v. O'Brien (1888) 16 R. I. 213, 14 Atl. 857, plaintiff had performed within a year his parol contract to build a house for the defendant, it was held that such performance was sufficient to warrant his action upon the contract for the contract price of the labor and materials furnished.
L.R.A.1916D.

ery of such sum may be had. But the complete performance on one side having removed the contract from the operation of the statute, the employee, as well as the employer, is bound thereby, and he cannot repudiate it and sue in quantum meruit.<sup>23</sup> The unfairness of any other rule is evident. A part performance that removes the contract from the operation of the statute in favor of one of the parties should have the same effect in favor of the other.

In a few instances complete performance of the services specified in the contract has been held inefficacious to pre-

And a ruling that one who had fully performed his portion of a parol contract to act as defendant's overseer for a year, to begin in the future, could not recover the compensation specified in the contract, but that he could recover only so much as his services were worth, was held in Carter v. Brown (1871) 3 S. C. 298, to be erroneous.

And in Gee v. Hicks (1830) Rich. Eq. Cas. (S. C.) 5, it is said obiter: "If a contract, not to be performed within a year, is, after the expiration of the year, entirely executed by one party, at the request, or by the consent, of the other party, then the promise to pay for this performance cannot be within the statute."

<sup>21</sup> In Marks v. Davis (1897) 72 Mo. App. 557, an action on a parol contract of employment for a year, to begin at a future date, to recover a sum of money which defendants had agreed to pay to plaintiff if the profits on his sales should exceed a certain amount, it was held that, plaintiff having completely performed his part of the contract, he might recover. The court said: "The rule is firmly established in this state that a full and complete performance of a contract by one of the contracting parties takes the contract out of the statute of frauds, and that the party so performing his contract may sue upon it in a court of law, and that he is not compelled to abandon the contract and sue in equity or upon a quantum meruit, as seems to be the law in some of the states."

<sup>22</sup> DIAMOND V. JACQUITH, ante, 880, in which it is held that complete performance of a contract to render services during a period extending beyond a year from the making of the contract, for a monthly salary and a percentage on gross sales, and the payment of the stipulated salary, take the case out of the statute, so as to warrant a recovery of the commission.

<sup>23</sup> In Van Valkenburg v. Croffut (1878) 15 Hun (N. Y.) 147, an action for the recovery of the value of services rendered by plaintiff under a parol contract between his father and defendant, by the terms of which plaintiff was to work for defendant for a number of years, it is held that, plaintiff having fully performed his part of the contract, he cannot repudiate it and sue in quantum meruit for the value of the services vent the operation of the statute.<sup>24</sup> And in one jurisdiction the view is taken that where complete performance of the services is said to remove the contract from the operation of the statute, "it is only an artificial method" of stating that the servant may recover upon the contract implied from the master's acceptance of such services.<sup>25</sup> The position taken in this last case, however, is wholly unwarranted by a review of the decisions in other states.

There seems to be a close analogy between the rule stated above, to the effect that complete performance of services removes a parol contract not to be performed within a year from the operation of the statute, and the rule which permits a recovery of the purchase price named in a parol contract for the sale of land, where the deed has been delivered. For cases sustaining the latter rule, reference is made to the note discussing that question.<sup>26</sup>

b. In actions for breach of the contract.

If complete performance of the services under a parol contract not to be performed within a year is sufficient to remove the contract from the operation of the statute of frauds for purposes of actions to recover compensation for the services rendered, it should, with equal propriety, be sufficient to accomplish the same result in actions for breach of the contract. Cases of this latter kind are rare, but those which have been discovered agree that the complete performance of the services is sufficient to take the contract out of the statute.<sup>27</sup> rendered; but that his action must be on the contract.

<sup>24</sup> Price v. Press Pub. Co. (1907) 117 App. Div. 854, 103 N. Y. Supp. 296, was an action by an employee, who had served the term of his employment, to recover a bonus promised him by parol more than a year before his contract of service expired, to be paid at the conclusion of such term of employment, in consideration of his remaining. With reference to the complete performance of the contract on the plaintiff's part, the court said: "If it could be said that the employee performed under it, it could be void just the same."

And in Emery v. Smith (1865) 46 N. H. 151, an action by a clerk, who had completed his two years of service provided for in the parol contract of employment, to recover the balance due him for his second year's work, it was held that "the execution of the agreement upon one side, whether partial or complete, does not take it out of the statute."

In Aiken v. Nogle (1891) 47 Kan. 96, 27 Pac. 825, an action by a servant for wages due under a parol contract by which defendant agreed to pay her at a specified rate for each year she worked as a servant, the court mentions the fact that the contract has been fully performed on plaintiff's part, but does not speak of such performance having any effect upon the application of the statute.

<sup>25</sup> Towsley v. Moore (1876) 30 Ohio St. 184, 27 Am. Rep. 431, was an action on a parol contract by the terms of which plaintiff had agreed to work for defendant for a period of more than six years, which promise she had fully performed. This performance was set up in the reply after defendant had answered, setting up the statute. The court said: "When courts say that performance takes a case out of the statute, or that where the contract has been fully completed on both sides, or where it has been completed on one side and payment alone remains, the statute has no application, it is only an artificial method of stating a very simple proposition. That is this: When one has received money, goods, or benefits from another, justice and equity demand that he should pay therefor, and the law will, if necessary, imply a promise to that effect. And although such benefits may have been rendered under a void contract, or one that cannot be enforced, it cannot be allowed that a defendant can retain his advantage without compensation. This would be unconscionable. In the case before us plaintiff agreed to labor for defendant for board and clothing, and such sum as her services were reasonably worth. If this contract cannot be enforced, by reason of the statute, the law can imply a promise precisely like it. The defendant has received the benefit of the services, whatever they were, and it would be a reproach to the law if he were permitted to retain these benefits without just payment."

<sup>26</sup> Appended to Malzer v. Schisler, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 77.

<sup>27</sup> It was held in Westfall v. Perry (1893) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 23 S. W. 740, where three persons had erected a windmill on the land of a fourth, under an unsigned contract whereby the three were to have the use of the water for three years in payment, that after the completion of the windmill one of the three might maintain an action for breach of the contract against another of the three, who fenced in the well and cut off his use of the water, on the ground that the full performance on one side had removed the contract from the operation of the statute.

And full performance on one side is held, in Chenoweth v. Pacific Exp. Co. (1902) 93 Mo. App. 185, to be sufficient to take a parol contract of employment, not to be performed within a year, out of the statute. In that case the contract had been one for life employment, entered into in consideration of plaintiff's agreement not to sue for personal injuries sustained in defendant's employ. The defendant, after

c. In equity.

The doctrine of part performance being of equitable origin, courts of equity would naturally be expected at least not to be less favorably disposed than courts of law towards the doctrine which removes from the operation of the statute parol contracts for services not to be rendered within a year, when the services have been fully performed. No direct authority has been discovered upon this point, however, but the inference deducible from one case<sup>22</sup> is harmonious therewith.

fifteen years' employment, had discharged plaintiff, and he brought an action for breach of contract. While no criticism is made with respect to the rule of law applied, it should be noted that what the court here calls a complete performance on the part of the plaintiff is nothing more than a performance until the breach by defendant.

<sup>22</sup>In Vose v. Strong (1891) 45 Ill. App. 98, affirmed in (1893) 144 Ill. 108, 33 N. E. 189, a bill in equity in which plaintiff claimed money due from the estate of a deceased person under a parol contract whereby plaintiff agreed to transact deceased's business during his lifetime for a certain compensation, the court, in refusing the relief sought on the ground that the evidence was not clear and convincing, refers to the matter of part performance in the following language: "The law is well established that a court of equity will not enforce a parol agreement, when it is obnoxious to the statute of frauds, even if performed, unless the evidence . . . is clear and convincing." E. L. D.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

FERD J. FABIAN, Respt.,

v.

WASATCH ORCHARD COMPANY, Appt.

(41 Utah, 404, 125 Pac. 860.)

Statute of frauds — oral contract for services — compensation.

A broker may recover the reasonable value of services rendered under a contract void under the statute of frauds because not in writing, in selling goods for another, if the services are accepted, without showing that they result in a profit to the employer. For other cases, see Contracts, I. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(July 31, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Salt Lake County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the value of services rendered by plaintiff for defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Dickson, Ellis, Ellis, & Schuller, for appellant:

Where a person performs services under a contract which is void because the same is within the statute of frauds, he can recover only the value of the benefits received by the person for whom the services are performed.

Note. — For right to quantum meruit for services rendered under parol contract unenforceable because not to be performed within a year, see annotation following this case, post, 895.

As to part performance to take contracts to render services not to be performed within a year out of the statute of frauds, see annotation following Diamond v. Jacquith, ante, 884. L.R.A.1916D.

Browne, Stat. Fr. 5th ed. 118a; Keener, Quasi Contr. p. 279; Gazzam v. Simpson, 52 C. C. A. 19, 114 Fed. 71; Reed v. McConnell, 133 N. Y. 425, 31 N. E. 22; Dowling v. McKenney, 124 Mass. 478; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 836; Henrikson v. Henrikson, 143 Wis. 314, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 534, 127 N. W. 963; Bristol v. Sutton, 115 Wis. 365, 73 N. W. 424; Clark v. Terry, 25 Conn. 395; Davenport v. Gentry, 9 B. Mon. 427; 20 Cyc. 299; Banker v. Henderson, 58 N. J. L. 26, 32 Atl. 700.

Messrs. Stephens, Smith, & Porter and Dey, Hoppaugh, & Fabian, for respondent:

Plaintiff was entitled to recover the reasonable value of the services rendered by him and accepted by defendant.

Vickery v. Ritchie, 202 Mass. 247, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 810, 88 N. E. 835; 3 Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. 684; 9 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 717, 718; Werre v. Northwest Thresher Co. 27 S. D. 486, 131 S. W. 721; King v. Brown, 2 Hill, 485; Graham v. Graham, 134 App. Div. 777, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1013; Cozad v. Elam, 115 Mo. App. 136, 91 S. W. 434; Jackson v. Stearns, 58 Or. 57, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 639, 113 Pac. 30, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 284; Stout v. Royston, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1055, 107 S. W. 784; Grant v. Grant, 63 Conn. 530, 38 Am. St. Rep. 379, 29 Atl. 15; Snyder v. Neal, 129 Mich. 692, 80 N. W. 588; Hull v. Thoms, 82 Conn. 647, 74 Atl. 925; Patten v. Hicks, 43 Cal. 509; Hindmarch v. Hoffman, 127 Pa. 284, 4 L.R.A. 368, 14 Am. St. Rep. 842, 18 Atl. 14; Salomon v. United States, 19 Wall. 17, 22 L. ed. 46; Wojahn v. National Union Bank, 144 Wis. 646, 129 N. W. 1068.

Straup, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint is in two counts. One that the plaintiff, a merchandise broker, rendered services for the defendant, a Utah corporation engaged in canning and selling fruits and vegetables, in advertising, introducing, and selling its products in eastern markets, in consideration of which it, by a written agreement, agreed to give the plaintiff the exclusive right for three years to sell, as a broker, all its manufactured products in the state of Utah and in southern Idaho, for which the plaintiff was to have a brokerage of 2½ per cent of the amount of all sales made by him or by others in such territory during such time. In the second count, it is alleged that the plaintiff, at the instance and request of defendant, rendered services for it in advertising, introducing, and selling its products in eastern markets, and there creating a market for its products, which services were reasonably worth the sum of $6,000.

The case was tried to the court, without a jury. The court found that the defendant had invested a considerable sum of money in growing asparagus for canning purposes, and that the asparagus plants had reached a stage where they would be producing in considerable quantities. That the defendant was heavily in debt, and in straitened financial circumstances. That it had a large quantity of such product on hand, but had no market or outlet for it. That it desired to convert the products into cash, regardless of the profit from the sales thereof, and to create a market therefor in eastern cities, especially in Kansas City, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, and to advertise and introduce its products in such markets. That thereupon the plaintiff, a merchant broker at Salt Lake City, at the solicitation and request of the general manager of the defendant, and for and on its behalf, visited such cities and there advertised the defendant's products, and devoted time and services in introducing them and in creating a market for them, and solicited and obtained orders amounting, at the prices fixed for the products, to the aggregate sum of between $30,000 and $35,000. That the defendant accepted the benefit of such services, and, to the extent of its capacity, filled such orders to the amount of at least $16,000, and that the reasonable value of plaintiff's services was $2,300.

The court further found that, in consideration of the services to be rendered, the defendant's general manager orally agreed to give plaintiff for three years the exclusive right to sell the defendant's products in Utah and southern Idaho, and to give him

2½ per cent commission of all sales made in such territory during such time, either by himself or others. The oral contract was made about the 18th day of April, 1909. The services rendered by plaintiff, and for which compensation is sought, were rendered by him between that day and the 23d day of May of that year. The contract was reduced to writing in December, 1909, and was signed and delivered in the name of the defendant and by the person purporting to act as its general manager, the same person who made the oral contract with the plaintiff. The court found that the person so acting was the defendant's general manager when the oral contract was made, and that he then had authority to make such a contract, but that when the written contract was made he then was not its general manager, and was not in its employ, he having theretofore left it, and hence found that the written contract was unauthorized, and was not the defendant's contract. The defendant, after the rendition of the services, repudiated the contract, notified the plaintiff to that effect, and refused to ratify, confirm, or approve it, or to be bound by it. The court also found that the oral contract, though made by an authorized agent of the defendant, nevertheless was unenforceable, because by its terms it was not to be performed within one year, and was therefore within the statute of frauds. The court further found that in January, 1910, the defendant discontinued the business of canning fruits and vegetables, and in the spring of that year sold and disposed of its business.

Upon the findings, and in response to the second count of the complaint, the court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $2,300, the reasonable value of the services rendered by the plaintiff and received and accepted by the defendant. From the judgment, the defendant appeals.

In its brief it states the proposition for consideration to be: "There is but one question in this case, and that is: Was the defendant enriched in any manner by the part performance of the oral contract, which was within the statute of frauds, and what was the value of that enrichment? In other words, what was the value of the benefits received by the defendant from the part performance of the oral contract by the plaintiff?"

Both parties agree that the law on the subject is as stated in Browne on Statute of Frauds, 5th ed. § 118a, that "the rule that, where one person pays money or performs services for another upon a contract void under the statute of frauds, he may recover the money upon a count for money paid, or recover for the services upon a quantum meruit, applies only to cases where the defendant has received and holds the money paid or the benefit of the services rendered;" and, as stated in 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 836, that, "although part performance by one of the parties to a contract within the statute of frauds will not, at law, entitle such party to recover upon the contract itself, he may nevertheless recover for money paid by him, or property delivered, or services rendered, in accordance with and upon the faith of the contract. The law will raise an implied promise on the part of the other party to pay for what has been done in the way of part performance. But this right of recovery is not absolute. The plaintiff is entitled to compensation only under such circumstances as would warrant a recovery in case there was no express contract; and hence it must appear that the defendant has actually received, or will receive, some benefit from the acts of part performance. It is immaterial that the plaintiff may have suffered a loss because he is unable to enforce his contract."

But the defendant asserts that under the facts found by the court the "benefits" received by the defendant cannot be measured by ascertaining and determining the reasonable value of the services rendered by plaintiff, and accepted and received by the defendant, but by ascertaining and determining whether the services resulted to the defendant's profit or gain, whether it "was enriched" thereby, and, if so, "what was the value of that enrichment?" Hence it urges that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff to prove the reasonable value of the services, and in giving the plaintiff a judgment for the sum of $2,300, the found reasonable value thereof, and further assails the judgment for the reason, as contended by it, that the products sold by it in the eastern markets on the orders solicited and procured by the plaintiff were sold for less than cost of manufacturing them, and were therefore sold, not to the defendant's profit or gain, but to its loss; and hence the defendant received no "benefit" from the services rendered by the plaintiff and accepted and received by it.

It is not contended that the services rendered by the plaintiff, or the orders obtained by him, were not rendered or obtained in accordance with the contract. No such claim is made. The claim made is that the defendant did not profit, "was not enriched," by the transaction. The defendant's contention leads to this: If A should orally employ B for a period of three years to do the labor in the manufacture of 100,000 brick (assuming such a contract to be within the statute of frauds), and if B, on the faith of and in accordance with the contract, should, within the first nine months, make and produce 20,000, which were received and accepted by A, and A should then repudiate the contract and refuse to longer engage B's services, B could not recover the reasonable value of the services on a quantum meruit, but to entitle him to recover it would be essential for him to show that the market value of the brick so made by him and received by A was more than the cost of manufacture; otherwise A received no "benefit" from B's services. Or, if A should orally employ B to work on his farm for a term of three years, and agree to give him 10 acres of land at the end of that period, and if B, on the faith of the contract, should work nine months on the farm for A in tilling the soil, sowing grain, and reaping crops, and A should then repudiate the contract and refuse to longer engage B's services, again B could not recover the reasonable value of his services; and if it were made to appear that because of drought or a falling market, or other causes not due to his negligence or wilfulness, the market price of the products was less than the cost of production, then A received no benefit from B's services, and the latter could not recover from the former.

We think appellant's notion of what is meant by "benefit," as the term is used by textwriters and courts, and applied in cases of the nature under consideration, is not borne out by the authorities. The texts and cases cited by it do not support its contention. Dowling v. McKenney, 124 Mass. 478, is cited. There A orally agreed to convey land to B, and to take in exchange or payment a monument to be made by B. B finished the monument and tendered it with the money; but A refused to receive the monument, and refused to convey. There A did not receive or accept the monument. He did not receive or accept the fruits of B's services, and hence received no benefit. Had he received and accepted the monument and then repudiated the contract and refused to convey, then, clearly, B would have been entitled to recover the reasonable value of the monument so delivered to and accepted by A. The case in no wise makes against that doctrine, and falls within the rule stated in 20 Cyc. 299, that, "where services are rendered on an agreement which is void by the statute, an action will lie on the implied promise to pay for such services; but the promise is implied, not from the services alone, but from the benefit to defendant as well, and if defendant has received no benefit, as, for instance, where work has been performed on a chattel which is never delivered, there can be no recovery." To that effect is also cited the case of Banker v. Henderson, 58 N. J. L. 26, 32 Atl. 700.

We are also referred to Henrikson v. Henrikson, 143 Wis. 314, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 534, 127 N. W. 963. That was an action to enforce specific performance of an oral contract to convey real estate upon performance by the purchaser and the making of valuable permanent improvements on the land by him. The lower court denied, and the appellate court granted, specific performance of the contract. The case is not in point, and does not decide anything in support of the appellant here.

Bristol v. Sutton, 115 Mich. 365, 73 N. W. 424, is also cited. There a minor was emancipated and left home. Shortly afterwards his uncle agreed to give him $1,000 if he would return home and remain with and assist his father on the father's farm until he should attain his majority. The minor carried out the agreement. It was held that, the contract being within the statute of frauds, the approval by the uncle of the minor's conduct was not such a subsequent act as to create an obligation to pay; and that, since the uncle had derived no benefit from the plaintiff's labor, the contract was void. This case also falls within the rule stated in Downing v. McKenney, supra, and in no way supports the defendant's contention.

It is unnecessary to review in detail all the cases cited by appellant. An examination of them will show that they do not support any such doctrine as is contended for by it. We think the well-established rule is that, where one, not in default, on faith of and in accordance with a contract unenforceable because within the statute of frauds, but not malum prohibitum nor malum in se, has, in pursuance of the contract, rendered services for the adversary party, who, with knowledge or acquiescence, accepted them and received the benefit of them and repudiated the contract, he may recover on a quantum meruit the reasonable value thereof,—not the profit or gain resulting to the adversary party by reason of the transaction, nor the loss suffered or sustained by the other, but compensation for the reasonable value of the services rendered by the one and accepted and received by the other. Page, Contr. chap. 74; Vickery v. Ritchie, 202 Mass. 247, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 810, 88 N. E. 835; Stout v. Royston, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1055, 107 S. W. 785; Cozad v. Elam, 115 Mo. App. 136, 91 S. W. 434; Hull v. Thoms, 82 Conn. 647, 74 Atl. 925; Wojahn v. National Union Bank, 144 Wis. 646, 129 N. W. 1068; Jackson v. Stearns, 58 Or. 57, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 639, 118 Pac. 30, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 284; Patten v. Hicks, 43 Cal. 509; Lapham v. Osborne, 20 Nev. 168, 18 Pac. 881; Snyder v. Neal, 129 Mich. 692, 89 N. W. 588; Werre v. Northwest Thresher Co. 27 S. D. 486, 131 N. W. 721.

We see nothing in appellant's cases which makes against this. On this theory the case was tried and the judgment rendered. We think it should be affirmed, with costs.

Frick, Ch. J., and McCarty, J., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied August 16, 1912.

Annotation—Right to quantum meruit for services rendered under parol contract unenforceable because not to be performed within a year.

I. Scope, 895.

II. Right to quantum meruit in general, 895.

III. Reference to contract, 900.

I. Scope.

This note is confined to a consideration of those cases in which the contracts to render services were looked upon as coming within the operation of the portion of the statute of frauds dealing with contracts not to be performed within a year. The scope, therefore, does not include cases in which the contracts, although apparently not to be performed within a year, are objected to, not upon that ground, but because they fall within some other clause of the statute, e. g., the clause requiring all contracts relating to realty to be in writing.

Upon the question of part performance to take contracts to render services not to be performed within a year out of the statute of frauds, see note to Diamond v. Jacquith.<sup>1</sup>

For a discussion of the general question of quantum meruit as remedy of wrongfully discharged servant with respect to services actually rendered, see note to Davidson v. Laughlin.<sup>2</sup>

And as to the right to recover value of services rendered in consideration of contract to convey or devise property, which is void by the statute of frauds, see note to Jackson v. Stearns.<sup>3</sup>

II. Right to quantum meruit in general.

Where either goods or services are furnished by one person to another who accepts them and derives the benefit therefrom, the courts hold, as a general rule, that the latter is liable as upon an implied contract to pay the value of that which he receives. Where services are performed under a parol contract unenforceable because not to be performed within a year, the situation is the same and the same principle is applicable.

<sup>1</sup> Ante, 884.

<sup>2</sup> 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 582.

<sup>3</sup> 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 639.

In such a case the contract is either void and considered as nonexistent ab initio, or voidable and considered as nonexistent as soon as it is repudiated by either party. Repudiation may be effected by a breach on either side, or, in absence of a breach, by an action by the servant in quantum meruit, or by the setting up by the master of the statute in an action brought by the servant on the contract. Thus, it is only in cases where neither party has breached the contract and, in addition thereto, where the servant bases his action upon contract, and the master makes no defense on the ground of the statute, that even a contract considered voidable may, aside from the matter of part performance, be given any effect in an action to recover for services rendered thereunder. And in cases of that kind the matter of quantum meruit would not be raised. Therefore, for the purposes of this discussion it may be said that the rights and obligations of the parties depend in no way upon the express contract, but arise wholly out of the contract implied by law from the acceptance of the services rendered. For that reason the question as to who breached the express contract is, even in jurisdictions where the statute is held to render parol contracts merely voidable, not a proper one for consideration. The breach by either party will avoid it, and, having been avoided, no liability or obligation can be imposed upon the party guilty of the breach. And, moreover, the rights and liabilities existing between the parties under the implied contract can scarcely be said to be in any way dependent upon the identity of person who breached a wholly independent and void express contract. The servant has performed certain services and the master, having had the benefit of them, must make compensation. Therefore, for a court to inquire, before rendering judgment in an action of quantum meruit, into the question as to who breached the contract, is both unnecessary and improper, and a decision based upon any such consideration must be deemed incorrect.

If it is objected that under this rule a servant may by his own default avoid a contract and recover greater compensation than that agreed upon, it may be answered that a master may by his default avoid a contract and, in a suitable case, compel his servant to be satisfied with a lesser compensation than that specified in the contract. But, aside from this, both the master and the servant enter into the parol contract knowing that it may be avoided by either, and if they are satisfied to take that risk they should not be heard to complain when called upon to abide by the consequences.

While, in many instances, the courts are so hazy and indefinite in their reasoning that a perusal of the cases without independent consideration is liable to prove both unsatisfactory and misleading, practically all the decisions are in harmony with these principles. There are numerous authorities for the proposition that where the master has breached the contract,<sup>4</sup> or has refused to pay the contract price for the services rendered

<sup>4</sup>In Emery v. Smith (1865) 46 N. H. 151, an action by a clerk who had completed his two years of service provided for in the parol contract of employment, to recover the balance due him for his second year's work, it was said that "where the defendant has received a benefit from the part execution by the plaintiff of such a contract, and then refuses to complete his part of it, he may be compelled to answer for what he has so received, either by a quantum meruit or other appropriate remedy."

And where, in Smith v. Chase & B. Piano Mfg. Co. (1915) 185 Mich. 313, 151 N. W. 1025, the administrator of a person engaged under a parol contract of employment for three years was suing as on implied contract to recover instalments of salary not earned at the time of the employee's discharge, it is said, in holding recovery improper, that if the employee "has rendered L.R.A.1916D.

services in reliance upon a void contract, he may recover the value of the services actually rendered, under the common counts."

Where defendant removed from the state and thus prevented plaintiff from continuing to render his services in assisting her with her business and her children, and defendant further refused to convey to plaintiff the ranch which, under the parol contract, he was to receive for his services, it was held in Stout v. Royston (1908) 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1055, 107 S. W. 784, an action for the value of the services rendered, which defendant sought to defeat on the ground that the contract was void, that plaintiff might recover upon quantum meruit.

In Wonsettler v. Lee (1888) 40 Kan. 367, 19 Pac. 862, an action for the breach of a parol contract under which plaintiff had performed the services agreed upon for two years, in which defendant successfully thereunder,<sup>5</sup> the servant may recover the value of such services as upon quantum meruit. And where the servant has breached the contract, the courts are pleaded the statute of frauds, it was held that, the allegations of the petition being sufficiently broad, a recovery might be had upon quantum meruit.

And in Frazer v. Howe (1883) 106 Ill. 563, where the employer successfully set up the statute of frauds as a defense to a set-off set up by the employee for the breach of the oral contract of employment which was to last five years, it was held that the employee might recover in quantum meruit the value of the services rendered and the money expended in executing his portion of such contract.

So, in William Butcher Steel Works v. Atkinson (1873) 68 Ill. 421, 18 Am. Rep. 560, where an employer successfully set up the statute of frauds as a defense to an action by an employee on a contract of employment for three years which he had partly performed before his discharge, it is held that plaintiff may recover in quantum meruit.

In Cohen v. Stein (1884) 61 Wis. 508, 21 N. W. 514, an action by discharged employees to recover the value of the services rendered under a parol contract of employment not to be performed within a year, the right to such recovery is admitted with respect to services not compensated.

Where plaintiff agreed under a parol contract to cultivate defendant's land for two years for a share of the crop, both parties understanding that a large part of the labor performed the first year was a preparation for the increased productiveness in the second year, and defendant at the end of the first year paid plaintiff his share of that year's crop, and refused to let him cultivate the second year, plaintiff may maintain an action to recover the value of the labor performed and not paid for in his share of the first year's profits. Williams v. Bemis (1871) 108 Mass. 91, 11 Am. Rep. 318.

In Cadman v. Markle (1889) 76 Mich. 448, 5 L.R.A. 707, 43 N. W. 315, an action to recover the value of services rendered prior to plaintiff's discharge, in the promotion of corporations under a parol contract of employment not to be performed within a year, plaintiff is held to be entitled to a recovery.

So, in Kleeman v. Collins (1872) 9 Bush (Ky.) 460, where an employee who had been engaged under a parol contract for a year to begin at a future date had been discharged without cause at the end of four months, and was suing for breach of the contract, and the employer set up the statute of frauds, the court said: "The only remedy the party has is by quantum meruit, or some appropriate action other than on the contract itself." In this case, however, the plaintiff had been paid in full for the four months he had worked, and was seeking damages for the failure to furnish work during the remainder of the year. L.R.A.1916D.

In McGarland v. Steward (1860) 2 Houst. (Del.) 277, an action on quantum meruit by a mother for the partial services of her son rendered before defendant's breach of a contract of quasi apprenticeship for a term of three years, to which defendant attempts to set up the contract, it is held that the plaintiff may recover. The court said: "Where either party has partially performed the special agreement pursuant to the terms of it, but has been prevented from completing or perfecting it by the default or misconduct of the other party, the party so interrupted and prevented from completing it may recover on the common counts and in quantum meruit for his partial services up to the time when he was stopped, whatever they were reasonably worth."

Where defendant set up the statute of frauds in an action for the breach of an oral contract whereby plaintiff was to be given the timber cleared from land and the use of the land for two years in consideration of his services in clearing it, a judgment, not on the contract, but for his services in clearing the land, was held proper. Gates v. Davis (1905) 28 Ky. L. Rep. 490, 89 S. W. 490.

And in Giles v. McEwan (1896) 11 Manitoba L. R. 150, an action on a parol contract of employment for a year to begin at a future time, where defendant had dismissed plaintiffs two days before the end of the year, it was held that they could recover the value of the services performed as upon a quantum meruit.

<sup>5</sup> In McElroy v. Ludlum (1880) 32 N. J. Eq. 828, an action by an employee on a parol contract of hiring for a term of five years, to recover the share of the profits due him as compensation, where defendant relied upon the statute of frauds, the court says that "the only remedy in such cases is by an action on a quantum meruit to recover the value of the services."

And in a subsequent action, Buckingham v. Ludlum (1883) 37 N. J. Eq. 137, brought to enforce a judgment obtained upon quantum meruit, it is again said that "it is a well-established legal principle that where one person renders valuable services to another, under a contract invalid by the statute of frauds, and the person to whom the services are rendered, after getting them, refuses to perform his part of the contract, the person rendering the services may, in such event, treat the contract as a nullity, and recover the value of his services in an action on the quantum meruit."

In Price v. Press Pub. Co. (1907) 117 App. Div. 854, 103 N. Y. Supp. 296, an action by an employee who had served the term of his employment, to recover a bonus promised him by parol more than a year before his contract of service expired, to be paid at the conclusion of such term of employment in consideration of his re-practically unanimous in holding that he may recover the value of the services maining, it is said that plaintiff's action was not on the void agreement, but in quantum meruit.

Van Horn v. Van Horn (1890) — N. J. Eq. —, 20 Atl. 826, was suit for an accounting between partners, involving, among other things, a claim by an employee for wages. Employee sought at first to enforce the contract and demanded compensation for the full term of her employment, but, upon learning that such contract of employment was within the statute as one not to be performed within a year, she sought to recover a larger sum by showing that her services were worth more than the amount agreed upon. "That she had a right to make such an effort is not questioned," says the court. "The real question is, What were her services fairly worth?"

Where, in Union Sav. & Trust Co. v. Krumm (1915) — Wash. —, 152 Pac. 681, defendant set up as an affirmative defense in an action by the trust company, a claim for saw logs furnished under a parol contract which, by its nature, could not be performed within a year, to which defense the trust company successfully set up the statute of frauds, defendant was permitted to recover in quantum meruit.

So, in Patten v. Hicks (1872) 43 Cal. 509, an action to recover the contract price of logs under an oral agreement by plaintiff to cut and deliver to defendant saw logs sufficient to keep the mill running for two years, to which defendant set up the statute of frauds, it is held that plaintiff's remedy is on quantum meruit, but recovery is denied because such count is not found in the complaint.

And in Hill v. Hooper (1854) 1 Gray (Mass.) 131, an action by a father to recover one of the instalments due under his parol contract with defendant for the employment of his infant son for a period of five years, which defendant successfully defended on the ground that the contract was within the statute of frauds, it is said that plaintiff may have any action "on an implied contract, as for work and labor done."

In Barrett v. Riley (1891) 42 Ill. App. 258, an action by a mother on the contract of employment under which her son was engaged by the defendant for a period of three years, to recover a sum of money retained from his wages as a guaranty of his faithful execution of the contract, it was held that, the statute of frauds being presumed to have been pleaded thereto, plaintiff could not recover, there being no recovery possible except "upon a quantum meruit as to services actually rendered."

It is said in Jones v. Hay (1868) 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 501, where plaintiff was suing both upon the parol contract of hiring for more than two years which he had made with defendant for his son, and also upon quantum meruit for the value of the services rendered until the employment was terminated by mutual consent, that, "in the L.R.A.1916D.

absence of any new, binding agreement between the parties relative to the services of the plaintiff's son, he could recover upon a quantum meruit for the services performed."

And where in Shute v. Dorr (1830) 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 204, plaintiff had contracted orally with defendant to employ his son for a period of several years, it was held that, the contract having been abandoned by the assent of the parties, plaintiff might recover on quantum meruit for the services performed.

It is held in La Du-King Mfg. Co. v. La Du (1887) 36 Minn. 473, 31 N. W. 938, in which defendant set up a counterclaim for services rendered under a parol contract of employment for five years, that where an employee leaves the service of his employer for good cause, he is entitled to recover the value of his services "not exceeding the compensation fixed by the agreement under which the service was rendered."

After holding, in Myers v. Korb (1899) 21 Ky. L. Rep. 163, 60 S. W. 1108, an action under a parol contract for a balance of wages earned, that a contract for services until plaintiff should learn his trade may be performed within a year, and is not within the statute of frauds, the court adds: "But, if no action could be maintained upon the contract, appellee [employer] would not be allowed to shelter himself behind the statute of frauds, and so obtain an infant's services for less than they were worth."

Where, in Miller v. Wisener (1898) 45 W. Va. 59, 30 S. E. 237, an attorney set up a counterclaim for services rendered under a parol contract of employment for four years, to which plaintiff objected as being within the statute, it was held that defendant might recover as on quantum meruit the value of the services rendered.

And an action of quantum meruit to recover the value of the services rendered was held proper in Nones v. Homer (1858) 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 116, where plaintiff was suing to recover for such services under a parol contract for a year to begin in the future, which he had partly performed.

Where, in Towsley v. Moore (1876) 30 Ohio St. 184, 27 Am. Rep. 434, an action on a parol contract of employment for a term of more than six years, which plaintiff had fully performed, defendant set up the statute, plaintiff was permitted to recover in quantum meruit for the value of the services rendered.

And where a servant sues for wages due under an oral contract by which defendant agreed to pay her at a specified rate for each year she worked as a servant, it is held that, assuming the contract to come within the statute of frauds as not to be performed within a year, as contended by defendant, plaintiff still has an action for the value of services actually performed. Aiken v. Nogle (1891) 47 Kan. 96, 27 Pac. 825.

rendered.<sup>6</sup> In only two jurisdictions have the courts held otherwise,<sup>7</sup> and in one of these the rule has been questioned in a later case.

While this position seems at first inharmonious with the rule sustained by the great weight of authority, that money paid upon a parol contract for the sale of land cannot be recovered back if the vendor is willing to perform his part,<sup>7a</sup> the two rules are found to be distinguishable. In a decision by a court which adheres to both rules<sup>8</sup> the distinction is clearly made between them.

<sup>6</sup> Where, in Chase v. Hinkley (1905) 126 Wis. 75, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 738, 110 Am. St. Rep. 896, 105 N. W. 230, 5 Ann. Cas. 328, an action on a parol contract of employment for a year to begin in the future, to recover for services rendered, defendant set up plaintiff's breach, recovery was held proper in quantum meruit. "Either party," says the court, "can terminate the services at any time and the employee recover . . . the reasonable value of the work done."

And the father of an apprentice who leaves the employ of his master long before the four-year period of apprenticeship, as provided in the parol contract, has expired, may, it is held in Salb v. Campbell (1896) 65 Wis. 405, 27 N. W. 45, recover the reasonable value of the services performed.

In Comes v. Lamson (1844) 16 Conn. 246, an action for the value of services rendered by a laborer who entered into a parol contract to work for defendant for a year to begin at a future date, and who left the employment before the term had expired, the plaintiff was held to have the right to the relief sought, although defendant set up the contract.

Where, in Draheim v. Evison (1901) 112 Wis. 27, 87 N. W. 795, an action by a father to recover the value of services rendered by his son under a parol contract of employment for a year to begin in the future, defendant set up the son's breach, it was held that the plaintiff might recover upon a quantum meruit.

And where plaintiff was suing for services rendered as morocco dresser under a parol contract of employment for two years, it was held that he was "under no obligation to continue in his employer's service for that length, and could recover for the value of the service he had rendered." McGlucky v. Bitter (1852) 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 618.

In Hartwell v. Young (1893) 67 Hun, 472, 22 N. Y. Supp. 486, an action by an employee under a parol contract for a year to begin in the future, to recover the value of the services rendered prior to the time she left defendant's employ, it is held that a verbal contract for services, void under the statute, which does not involve the investment of capital further than the mere compensation for services, can be treated by the employee as void, so that he may abandon performance and recover upon quantum meruit for the services rendered prior to his breach.

In King v. Welcome (1855) 5 Gray (Mass.) 41, an action by an employee who wrongfully left defendant's employ and sought to recover upon quantum meruit for the work performed, it is held that defendant could not defend on the ground that the contract under which the work was performed, which was oral, was entire and for the term of a year to begin at a future date.

And it is held in Tague v. Hayward (1865) 25 Ind. 427, an action by an apprentice for the value of the work and labor performed during the five years prior to his breach of the contract, that the master cannot set up the parol contract of apprenticeship as a bar thereto.

In Clark v. Terry (1856) 25 Conn. 395, an action by an employee under a parol contract of employment for a year and a day, for the value of services rendered before his breach of the contract, where defendant attempted to set up the contract in defense, on the theory that by its terms performance was a condition precedent to plaintiff's right of recovery, quantum meruit is said to be the proper action, the recovery being denied, however, on the ground that, while the contract fell within the statute, its terms should still control with respect to the date of payment.

<sup>7</sup> Abbott v. Inskip (1875) 29 Ohio St. 59, was an action by an infant who had rendered services under a parol contract not to be performed within a year, to recover the value thereof. Such recovery was denied because plaintiff had left defendant's service without cause. "The default of a defendant," says the court, "or his refusal to go on with a contract which falls within the statute of frauds, is an essential condition of the right to recover for services rendered under it. It is only in cases where the defendant, by reason of his own breach of such contract, is estopped from setting it up as a defense, that an action for the value of the work done under it can be maintained."

Where, in Galvin v. Prentice (1871) 45 N. Y. 162, 6 Am. Rep. 58, an action upon quantum meruit for services performed upon a parol contract of employment for three years, the court below had charged the jury that it was immaterial whether plaintiff had been discharged or had voluntarily left the employment, it was held that before plaintiff can maintain his action, he must show the defendant, and not himself, to be in default. This part of the opinion, however, is designated in Hartwell v. Young (1893) 67 Hun, 472, 22 N. Y. Supp. 486, supra, footnote 6, to be obiter.

<sup>7a</sup> Cook v. Griffith (W. Va.) ante, 466.

<sup>8</sup> King v. Welcome (1855) 5 Gray (Mass.) 41, supra, footnote 6.

See, however, Swanzy v. Moore (1859) 22 Ill. 63, 74 Am. Dec. 134; Philbrook v.

In the case of the action to recover money paid upon a parol contract for the sale of land, the "action rests upon an implied assumpsit. The implied promise arises only upon the failure of the consideration upon which the money was paid. The plaintiff fails to show any failure of consideration. He shows the money was paid upon a contract not void, and which the defendant is ready to perform. The consideration upon which it was paid exists unimpaired. . . . In the case of the money paid upon a contract for the sale of land, the action fails because no failure is shown of the consideration from which the implied promise springs. In the case at bar, the defense fails because the contract upon which the defendant relies is not evidenced as the statute requires."

The implied contract which is the foundation of the action of quantum meruit is, as stated above, based upon the fact that the master has received the benefit of such services. Such services having been performed and the benefit duly accepted, nothing further is necessary to the servant's right of action; and it is not incumbent upon him to show that the services resulted in profit to his master.<sup>9</sup>

It should be noted, in connection with the cases here discussed, that the position is taken by several courts that the part performance by a servant of his contract will remove the contract from the operation of the statute of frauds.<sup>10</sup> And in still a larger number of jurisdictions it is held that complete performance by the servant will remove the operation of the statute.<sup>10a</sup> Where this is the case there is, of course, no necessity for a right of action upon quantum meruit, and it has been held that no such right exists.<sup>11</sup>

III. Reference to contract.

In a few jurisdictions parol contracts for services not to be performed within a year are held admissible in actions of quantum meruit as evidence upon the point as to the value of the service rendered.<sup>12</sup> In other states, however, an opposite opinion is held.<sup>13</sup> While it may be a close question as to which of these Belknap (1834) 6 Vt. 383; and Mack v. Bragg (1858) 30 Vt. 571, in footnote 8 of the note to Diamond v. Jacquith, ante, 880, which, it seems, are really opposed to the doctrine of King v. Welcome, although the language employed suggests that the decisions are based upon the theory that part performance removes the contracts involved from the operation of the statute of frauds.

<sup>9</sup> FABIAN V. WASATCH ORCHARD CO. ante, 892, in which it is held that a broker may recover the reasonable value of services rendered under a parol contract not to be performed within a year, if the services are accepted, without showing that they result in profit to his employer.

<sup>10</sup> See note to Diamond v. Jacquith, supra, upon the question of part performance to take contracts out of the statute of frauds.

<sup>10a</sup> Ibid.

<sup>11</sup> See Van Valkenburg v. Croffut (1878) 15 Hun (N. Y.) 147, footnote 23 of the note to Diamond v. Jacquith, supra.

<sup>12</sup> In an action for work and labor performed by plaintiff prior to his discharge, under a parol contract of employment for a year to begin in the future, evidence of the terms of the contract is admissible on behalf of the plaintiff to show the value of his services as agreed upon by the parties. Moore v. Capewell Horse Nail Co. (1889) 78 Mich. 606, 43 N. W. 644.

And in Clark v. Terry (1856) 25 Conn. 395, an action by an employee under a parol contract of employment for a year and a day, for the value of services performed in the period before he left defendant's service, it is held that the contract is not to be entirely disregarded. The court says: "It is true that if the plaintiff can recover at all, it must be for a quantum meruit, or so much as he deserves to have for the service performed. But this is not to be measured by the value of such services alone, as if no contract had been made between the parties." And further on in the opinion it is said again: "Now, in respect to the question whether wages have been earned which ought to be paid for, . . . it appears to us that all the circumstances under which they are claimed to have been earned, including the contract under which the service was performed, although it may be one that cannot be enforced by an action directly upon it, may and ought to be considered."

In Giles v. McEwan (1896) 11 Manitoba L. R. 150, an action involving a parol contract for a year's employment to begin in the future, breached by defendant two days before the expiration of the year, evidence of the contract is held proper "for a collateral purpose, such as to ascertain the terms of the engagement and the value of the services."

And the agreement is held in Nones v. Homer (1858) 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 116, to be the measure of damages for the value of services rendered under a parol contract of employment for a year to begin in the future, "in the absence of proof as to the value" of such services. While seeming to be authority for the proposition that the contract is the measure of damages in actions in quantum meruit, all that is in fact held in this case is that, when there is no other evidence as to the value of the services, the contract may be considered upon that point.

<sup>13</sup> In Thacher v. New York, W. & B. R. Co. (1912) 163 App. Div. 186, 138 N. Y.

views is right, there seems to be little doubt as to the impropriety of making use of such a contract, not for the mere purpose of furnishing evidence of value, but for the purpose of measuring the compensation. While such a practice has been held improper in several states,<sup>14</sup> it has been upheld in a number of others.<sup>15</sup> But how it can be held that the adoption of the rate of compensation fixed in the contract as the measure of the servant's recovery does not amount to the giving of effect to a contract within the statute of frauds is not easy to comprehend. And the distinction sometimes attempted to be made between jurisdictions in which the statute is held to render offensive contracts void,

Supp. 463, an action involving a count in quantum meruit for the value of work done under a parol contract not to be performed within a year, the court says: "The whole theory of allowing a recovery upon quantum meruit where the contract is found to be void under the statute proceeds upon an elimination of the contract. There is no contract in existence to be availed of by either the plaintiff or the defendant to fix their several rights, duties, or obligations. The action is based upon the equitable doctrine that the defendant, having received the benefit, should pay therefor what it was reasonably worth; that the implied promise to pay became enforceable when the services were rendered. . . . It is true the later cases hold that the amount of remuneration provided by the alleged contract may be looked at as some evidence of the value of the services, but the jury are not bound thereby. It is admitted in evidence as in the nature of an admission as to value. If, although the statute declared the contract to be void and incapable of enforcement, it could still be made use of to fix the respective liabilities of the parties, the statute would become a nullity."

Where, in McElroy v. Ludlum (1890) 32 N. J. Eq. 828, an action by an employee on a parol contract of hiring for a term of five years, to recover the share of profits due him as compensation, plaintiff's remedy is held to be quantum meruit, it is said: "The policy of the statute is to prevent frauds which may be accomplished by setting up contracts of the interdicted class, by parol testimony. That policy is infringed upon equally whether the contract be used for the purpose of influencing the amount of the recovery or be made the foundation of the action."

In McGartland v. Steward (1860) 2 Houst. (Del.) 277, an action on quantum meruit by a mother for the partial services of her son rendered before defendant's breach of a contract of quasi apprenticeship for a term of three years, it is held that plaintiff may recover such compensation as the jury may "consider reasonable for such services, to be determined, however, without reference to any rate of wages stipulated to be paid for them in the special agreement."

<sup>14</sup> Where, in William Butcher Steel Works v. Atkinson (1873) 68 Ill. 421, 18 Am. Rep. 560, an action of assumpsit by an employee to recover the value of services performed up to the time of his discharge, under a parol contract of employment for three years, the defendant urged that the rate fixed by the contract should control upon the measure of the value of plaintiff's services, the court says that "this position is neither equitable nor is it well founded in law."

And this case is followed in Schanzenbach v. Brough (1895) 58 Ill. App. 526, an action by an employee discharged without cause, to recover for services rendered under a parol contract of employment not to be performed within a year, where it is said that plaintiff "is not limited to the price fixed by his contract, . . . but may recover what his services were really worth."

Referring to actions in quantum meruit to recover the value of services rendered under parol contracts not to be performed within a year, the court in Cohen v. Stein (1884) 61 Wis. 508, 21 N. W. 514, says: "The logic of the rule is, inasmuch as the contract has no legal validity, it is not admissible in evidence to determine the value of the services, but the servant recovers what he can show his services were reasonably worth."

<sup>15</sup> Where, in Union Sav. & T. Co. v. Krumm (1915) — Wash. —, 152 Pac. 681, defendant set up as an affirmative defense in an action by the trust company, a claim for saw logs furnished under a parol contract which, by its nature, could not be performed within a year, the court held that it was the rule "that a party performing services under a contract void as in contravention of the one-year statute of frauds may recover for the work actually performed on a quantum meruit, and the value of the services is measured by that fixed in the contract."

In La Du-King Mfg. Co. v. La Du (1887) 36 Minn. 473, 31 N. W. 938, involving a counterclaim in quantum meruit for services rendered under a parol contract of employment for five years, the court fixes the amount of the recovery at the value of the services, "not exceeding the compensation fixed by the agreement under which the service was rendered." The court then quotes from Clark v. Terry (1856) 25 Conn. 395, infra, footnote 18, and adds: "This rule we think applicable in the case at bar."

In Kruger v. Leppel (1889) 42 Minn. 6, 43 N. W. 484, an action of quantum meruit to recover for services as a farm laborer rendered under an oral contract to work for a year from a future date at a fixed gross price to be paid at the end of the year, the court said: "So far, however, as the parties have voluntarily acted under and performed them [parol contracts not to be performed within a year], they are to be taken and those in which it is held merely to render them voidable,<sup>16</sup> is of no avail. The very act of bringing an action in quantum meruit is a repudiation of the contract which will avoid it and render it as null as if the statute were held to have the effect of rendering it void in the first instance. In passing, it should be noticed that the practical result of the rule establishing the contract as the measure of compensation in quantum meruit is the same as that of the rule which holds that part performance removes the contract from the operation of the statute so far as performance goes.<sup>17</sup> In each instance a way is found to avoid the harsh effect of the statute and compel the parties to abide by the terms of the contract so far as it has been executed, the only difference being in the form of action in which the remedies are obtainable.

The question of the propriety of referring to the contract arises also with respect to contracts in which the payment of the compensation is postponed until the expiration of the term of service. It has been held in cases where the servant was chargeable with the breach of the contract, first, that he ought not to be permitted to recover before the expiration of the term of service,<sup>18</sup> and, second, that he ought not to recover at all, so long as he did not complete the

as defining and measuring the rights of the parties." And assuming plaintiff to be at fault for breaching the contract, it is said that "if, by the terms of the agreement, he would be entitled to pay for the part performance, the rate fixed by it must be the measure he is to receive."

And these two cases are followed in the later cases of Spinney v. Hill (1900) 81 Minn. 316, 84 N. W. 116, and Lally v. Crookston Lumber Co. (1902) 85 Minn. 257, 88 N. W. 846, actions for breach of parol contracts of employment not to be performed within a year, in which it is held that plaintiff's remedy is for the value of the services rendered, to be measured by the terms of the contract.

In Shumate v. Farlow (1890) 125 Ind. 359, 25 N. E. 432, an action for damages sustained by reason of defendant's refusal to permit plaintiff to perform services on his farm after he had moved in, in accordance with the terms of a parol contract which was not to be performed within a year, the court says: "No action can be maintained upon such an agreement, either for the purpose of enforcing it or to recover damages for its breach. . . . If such a contract can be looked to or respected for any purpose whatever, it is only to define and measure the rights of the parties so far as it has been voluntarily executed. It may well be that to the extent that either party has derived any advantage under the contract on account of the voluntary part performance of the other, the contract may be referred to in determining and considering the amount of compensation which may be recovered."

And in Ryan v. Dayton (1856) 25 Conn. 188, 65 Am. Dec. 560, an action of assumpsit for work and labor, without specifically deciding that the contract between the parties under which the services were performed came within the statute, the court holds that reference may be had thereto for the purpose of determining the amount of the recovery.

In Cohen v. Stein (1884) 61 Wis. 508, 21 N. W. 514, an action by discharged employees to recover the value of the services rendered under a parol contract of employment not to be performed within a year, the court, while admitting the propriety of quantum meruit for services not compensated, denies recovery, inasmuch as plaintiffs have received in full the contract price for the services rendered.

<sup>16</sup> It is held in Miller v. Wisener (1898) 45 W. Va. 59, 30 S. E. 237, where defendant set up a counterclaim for services rendered under a parol contract of employment for four years, that "as our statute does not declare the contract void, it would furnish the measure of recovery" in quantum meruit.

<sup>17</sup> See the note on the question of part performance to take contracts to render services not to be performed within a year out of the statute of frauds, appended to Diamond v. Jacquith, ante, 880.

<sup>18</sup> In Clark v. Terry (1856) 25 Conn. 395, an action by an employee under a parol contract of employment for a year and a day, brought before the expiration of the term of service, for the value of services performed in the period before he left defendant's service, it is held that the contract is not to be disregarded with respect to the date of payment. The court says: "Nor can the time of payment for the service, as it was agreed to in the contract, be disregarded. It would obviously be unjust for a party to contract to labor for a year and a day at a stipulated rate of wages to be paid at the end of the term, and after he had labored half the time, refuse to go on and demand immediate payment for the wages earned, before the expiration of the time." And it is said later on: "Now, in respect to the question whether wages have been earned which ought to be paid for, and if so, to what extent or amount, and when the payment ought to be made, it appears to us that all the circumstances under which they are claimed to have been earned, including the contract under which the service was performed, although it may be one that cannot be enforced by any action directly upon it, may and ought to be considered."

execution of his contract.<sup>19</sup> These cases proceed upon the theory that the servant ought not to profit by his own default, and are answerable by the observation that the master entered into the parol contract with the knowledge of such a possibility in mind. Further than that, such rules give effect to the terms of the contract in direct contravention of the terms of the statute.

<sup>19</sup> And in Kruger v. Leppel (1889) 42 Minn. 6, 43 N. W. 484, an action of quantum meruit to recover for services as a farm laborer rendered under an oral contract to work for a year from a future date at a fixed gross price to be paid at the end of the year, it is held that so far as such parol contracts have been performed "they are to be taken as defining and measuring the rights of the parties," and, assuming plaintiff to be chargeable with the breach, that he cannot recover unless he performs the whole of the contract. E. L. D.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.
(In Banc.)

FIDELITY & DEPOSIT COMPANY OF MARYLAND

INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION
OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al.

(— Cal. —, 154 Pac. 834.)

Master and servant — workmen's compensation — driving automobile at excessive speed.

Driving an automobile on a public highway at a speed prohibited by statute under penalty is wilful misconduct, which will prevent the recovery of compensation for the death of an employee so doing, under a workmen's compensation act providing compensation for injuries arising in the course of employment except in case of wilful misconduct on the part of the employee.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 18, 1916.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of review to determine the lawfulness of an award of the Industrial Accident Commission given under the workmen's compensation act for the death of an employee. Award annulled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Alfred C. Skaife, Guy Le Roy Stevick, and Redman & Alexander, for petitioner:

At the time of the accident the deceased was engaged in acts constituting a crime, which caused his death; this is wilful misconduct as a matter of law.

Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury,

Note.—As to the construction and effect of the workmen's compensation acts generally, see annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 23.

As to what constitutes serious and wilful misconduct within the meaning of the compensation acts, see annotation following Clem v. Chalmers Motor Co. L.R.A.1916A, 355.

L.R.A.1916D.

170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35, 9 N. O. C. A. 460; Bist v. London & S. W. R. Co. [1907] A. C. 209, 76 L. J. K. B. N. S. 703, 96 L. T. N. S. 750, 23 Times L. R. 471, 9 W. C.-C. 19, 8 Ann. Cas. 1; Bradbury, Workmen's Compensation, pp. 480 et seq.; Waddell v. Coltness Iron Co. 50 Scot. L. R. 29, 2 Scot. L. T. 301, 6 B. W. C. C. 306; Willis, Workmen's Compensation, 15th ed. p. 58.

At the time of the accident, Head was not performing service growing out of his employment.

Neumann v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 3 N. C. C. A. 703, note; Greene v. Shaw [1912] 2 I. R. 430, 46 Ir. L. T. 18, 5 B. W. C. C. 578; Kitchenham v. The Johannesburg [1911] A. C. 417, 80 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1102, 105 L. T. N. S. 118, 27 Times L. R. 504, 55 Sol. Jo. 599, 4 B. W. C. C. 311; Rodger v. School Board, 49 Scot. L. R. 413, 5 B. W. C. C. 547; Barnes v. Nunnery Colliery Co. [1912] A. C. 44, 81 L. J. K. B. N. S. 213, 105 L. T. N. S. 961, 28 Times L. R. 135, 56 Sol. Jo. 159, 49 Scot. L. R. 688, 5 B. W. C. C. 195; Milliken's Case, 216 Mass. 293, L.R.A.1916A, 337, 103 N. E. 898, 4 N. C. C. A. 512; Lowe v. Pearson [1899] 1 Q. B. 261, 68 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 122, 47 Week. Rep. 193, 79 L. T. N. S. 654, 15 Times L. R. 124; Siemientkowski v. Berwind White Coal Min. Co. — N. J. L. —, 92 Atl. 909; Bryant v. Fissell, 84 N. J. L. 72, 86 Atl. 458, 3 N. C. C. A. 585.

Mr. Christopher M. Bradley, for respondents:

The deceased was not guilty of wilful misconduct as a matter of law or fact.

Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35, 9 N. C. C. A. 460; Rumboll v. Nunnery Colliery Co. 80 L. T. N. S. 42, 63 J. P. 132, 1 W. C. C. 28; Casey v. Humphries [1913] W. N. 221, 29 Times L. R. 647, 57 Sol. Jo. 716, 6 B. W. C. C. 520.

Deceased suffered accidental death while he was performing a service growing out of and incidental to his employment, and while he was acting within the course of his employment, and the accident arose out of his employment, as provided in § 12 (a) of the workmen's compensation act.

Filder v. Davison, 139 Ga. 509, 77 S. E. 618; Linville v. Nissen, 162 N. C. 95, 77 S. E. 1096; Re Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 215 Mass. 497, L.R.A.1916A, 306, 102 N. E. 697.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By this review petitioner seeks to have an award given under § 84 of the workmen's compensation act of 1913, as that act was amended in 1915, declared invalid. W. D. Head, president and superintendent of the Head Drilling Company, a corporation, was killed. The award was made to his widow. There is thus within this case the question of the power of the Commission to make any award in case of death. But, as that question is not necessary to the decision of this case, and as it is now under the consideration of this court in another case, it is here passed over without determination.

The question presented is whether or not Head was guilty of wilful misconduct when he met his death. Workmen's compensation act, § 12a, subdiv. 3. This question is a jurisdictional one, and therefore subject to review by this court. Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35, 9 N. C. C. A. 460. Over the facts there is no dispute. In the course of his employment Head, who was at Taft, was directed to go to Los Angeles on the work of his company. He hired an automobile, with a driver, to take him from Taft to Bakersfield, at which point he proposed to embark on a train for Los Angeles. The distance between Taft and Bakersfield is about 40 miles, and he had four hours of time to make the run and catch his train. Leaving Taft, he displaced the driver, and took the wheel himself. It was in the nighttime. The Commission finds the following: "That at said time he was driving the automobile at a rate of speed from 35 to 45 miles per hour. That said rate of speed was not entirely safe in view of the condition of the road at the place of the accident, but that the evidence is insufficient to establish that such speed was unusual, according to the usual custom of drivers of automobiles in that vicinity, or that it was so in excess of customary rates of speed as to amount to speed mania, or that said excessive speed amounted to more than ordinary negligence or amounted to foolhardiness or dare-deviltry; that the act of the deceased in driving at said rate of speed was not in violation of any instructions, rules, or orders made by the said employer, the W. D. Head Drilling Company, L.R.A.1916D.

for the safety of its employees or any of them."

While so driving the car it ran into a sandy piece of road and overturned. Head was killed, and the driver injured.

The law of this state in the motor vehicle act (Stat. 1913, p. 649) declares: "Every person operating . . . a motor . . . vehicle on the public highways of this state shall operate . . . the same in a careful and prudent manner and at a rate of speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway, and no person shall operate or drive" an automobile "or other vehicle on a public highway . . . as to endanger the life or limb of any person or the safety of any property: Provided, that it shall be unlawful to drive at a rate of speed in excess of 30 miles an hour." § 22.

A violation of this provision is declared a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment or both. Admittedly, therefore, under the very findings of the Commission, Head was violating the express mandate of the law designed for his own protection, for the protection of the other occupants of the car, and for the protection of the general public. His act in so doing was criminal. Much of the finding of the Commission which we have quoted at length is quite beside the question and without the slightest persuasive force. It matters not, for example, that the evidence is insufficient to establish that such speed was "unusual according to the usual custom of drivers of automobiles in that vicinity." That forty men violate the law and commit crimes is neither justification nor excuse for the forty-first man, who does the same thing. Nor yet does it matter that Head was not afflicted with "speed mania," nor that his excessive speed did not "amount to foolhardiness or dare-deviltry." Nor is it of the slightest consequence that Head was not violating any rule or order made by his company. Indeed, it would be as remarkable as it would be unnecessary for an employer to give a specific instruction upon a matter completely covered by a penal statute. The plain and unescapable fact is that Head was criminally violating a law designed for his own protection and for that of the general public. The statute itself forbade him from endangering "the life or limb of any person," himself as well as others, and fixed the danger point of speed at 30 miles an hour. The finding is that his rate of speed "was not entirely safe." But even without such a finding, or if the finding declared it to be a safe rate of speed, the fact still remains that the deceased wilfully and deliberately misconducted himself and violated the plain mandate of the law. Says Willis, Workmen's Compensation, p. 58: "Where there is a deliberate and unmistakable act of disobedience to an express order, or where there is a deliberate breach of a law or rule, which is framed in the interests of the workman, it will be held that such a breach or such disobedience amounts to serious misconduct."

There is no finding and indeed nothing in the record extenuating or excusing the conduct of the deceased. He was not even impelled by the desire to make the train connection. He had four hours in which to travel 40 miles. The conclusion is unavoidable that he was guilty of the wilful misconduct contemplated by the law.

For this reason, without consideration paid to any of the other propositions urged upon our attention, the award of the Commission must be and hereby is annulled.

We concur: Angellotti, Ch. J.; Melvin, J.; Sloss, J.; Shaw, J.; Lawlor, J.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT. (In Banc.)

RE APPLICATION OF WILLIAM J. DART.

(— Cal. —, 155 Pac. 63.)

Constitutional law — power to prohibit charitable work.

1. A municipal corporation cannot, in view of the constitutional recognition of the right to pursue happiness, arbitrarily say, through its Charity Commission, what person or institution may or may not engage in charitable work dependent wholly or in part upon voluntary contributions from the public.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II, c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — religious liberty.

2. Under the constitutional guaranty of religious liberty, a municipal corporation cannot, through its Charity Commission, arbitrarily say who may or may not engage in charitable work dependent wholly or in part on voluntary contributions from the public.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II, d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 3, 1916.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of habeas corpus to secure petitioner's release from custody to which he had been committed for alleged violation of an ordinance creating a Municipal Charities Commission and an ordinance prohibiting begging in the public streets. Petitioner discharged.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gibson, Dunn, & Crutcher, Edward E. Bacon, and William A. Barnhill, for petitioner:

The ordinance of the city of Los Angeles here in question violates the constitutional guaranties of liberty and property.

Stimson Mill Co. v. Braun, 136 Cal. 122,

Note. — For state or municipal power to control private charity, see annotation following this case, post, 912.
L.R.A.1916D.

57 L.R.A. 726, 89 Am. St. Rep. 116 68 Pac. 481; Ex parte Dickey, 144 Cal. 234, 66 L.R.A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 77 Pac. 924, 1 Ann. Cas. 428; Re Kelso, 147 Cal. 609, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 796, 109 Am. St. Rep. 178, 82 Pac. 241; Ex parte Drexel, 147 Cal. 763, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 588, 82 Pac. 429, 3 Ann. Cas. 878; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 579, 589, 590, 41 L. ed. 832, 835, 836, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Hughes v. Los Angeles, 168 Cal. 764, 145 Pac. 94.

The ordinance, by its necessary operation and effect, is an unwarranted interference with religious liberty.

San Antonio v. Salvation Army, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 860.

The ordinance cannot be sustained as a reasonable or valid exercise of the police power.

Re McCapes, 157 Cal. 26, 106 Pac. 229; Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 19 L.R.A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152, 32 Pac. 870; Ex parte Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 468, 32 L.R.A. 664, 44 Pac. 803; Ex parte Dickey, 144 Cal. 234, 66 L.R.A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 77 Pac. 924, 1 Ann. Cas. 428; Ex parte Hayden, 147 Cal. 649, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 184, 109 Am. St. Rep. 183, 82 Pac. 315; Ex parte Drexel, 147 Cal. 763, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 588, 82 Pac. 429, 3 Ann. Cas. 878; Ex parte Dietrich, 149 Cal. 104, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 873, 84 Pac. 770; Re Kelso, 147 Cal. 609, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 796, 109 Am. St. Rep. 178, 82 Pac. 241; Lawton v. Steel, 152 U. S. 133, 137, 38 L. ed. 385, 388, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Re Smith, 143 Cal. 368, 77 Pac. 180.

The ordinance, in conferring upon a Municipal Commission uncontrolled discretion to grant or refuse licenses, is unconstitutional and void.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 366, 368, 369, 30 L. ed. 220, 225, 226, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 354, 24 L.R.A. 195, 31 Am. St. Rep. 218, 31 Pac. 245; Los Angeles County v. Hollywood Cemetery Asso. 124 Cal. 344, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75, 57 Pac. 153; Re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973; Sonora v. Curtin, 137 Cal. 583, 70 Pac. 674; Re McCapes, 157 Cal. 26, 106 Pac. 229; Hewitt v. State Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 590, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 84 Pac. 39, 7 Ann. Cas. 750; Schaezlein v. Cabaniss, 135 Cal. 466, 56 L.R.A. 733, 87 Am. St. Rep. 122, 67 Pac. 755; Richmond v. Model Steam Laundry, 111 Va. 758, 69 S. E. 932; Montgomery v. West, 149 Ala. 311, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 659, 123 Am. St. Rep. 33, 42 So. 1000, 13 Ann. Cas. 651; Walsh v. Denver, 11 Colo. App. 523, 53 Pac. 458; Cicero Lumber Co. v. Cicero, 176 Ill. 9, 42 L.R.A. 696, 68 Am. St. Rep. 155, 51 N. E. 758; Richmond v. Dudley, 129 Ind. 112, 13 L.R.A. 587, 28 Am. St. Rep. 180, 28 N. E. 312; Boyd v. Frankfort, 117 Ky. 199, 111 Am. St. Rep. 240, 77 S. W. 669; State v. Dubarry, 44 La. Ann. 1117, 11 So. 718; Newton v. Belger, 143 Mass. 598, 10 N. E. 464; St. Louis v. Atlantic Quarry & Constr. Co. 244 Mo. 479, 148 S. W. 948; State v. Tenant, 110 N. C. 609, 15 L.R.A. 423, 28 Am. St. Rep. 715, 14 S. E. 387; Sioux Falls v. Kirby, 6 S. D. 62, 25 L.R.A. 621, 60 N. W. 156; Goodale v. Sowell, 62 S. C. 516, 40 S. E. 970; Newbern v. McCann, 105 Tenn. 159, 50 L.R.A. 476, 58 S. W. 114; State v. Smith, 67 Conn. 541, 52 Am. St. Rep. 301, 35 Atl. 506; Ex parte Theisen, 30 Fla. 529, 32 Am. St. Rep. 36, 11 So. 903; Bear v. Cedar Rapids, 147 Iowa, 341, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1150, 126 N. W. 324; Anderson v. Wellington, 40 Kan. 173, 2 L.R.A. 110, 10 Am. St. Rep. 175, 19 Pac. 719; Hagerstown v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 107 Md. 178, 126 Am. St. Rep. 382, 68 Atl. 490; Re Frazee, 63 Mich. 396, 6 Am. St. Rep. 310, 30 N. W. 72; State ex rel. Collinge v. Crepeau, 29 R. I. 340, 71 Atl. 449; State ex rel. Garrahad v. Dering, 84 Wis. 535, 19 L.R.A. 858, 36 Am. St. Rep. 948, 54 N. W. 1105; Lynch v. North View, 73 W. Va. 609, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1038, 81 S. E. 833.

The ordinance is void for the further reason that it is an attempt to delegate legislative powers of the city council to an administrative board.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 137; People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 624; Ex parte Cox, 63 Cal. 21; Harbor Comrs. v. Excelsior Redwood Co. 83 Cal. 491, 22 Am. St. Rep. 321, 26 Pac. 375; San Francisco Gaslight Co. v. Dunn, 62 Cal. 580; Scollay v. Butte County, 67 Cal. 249, 7 Pac. 661; Holley v. Orange County, 106 Cal. 420, 39 Pac. 790; House v. Los Angeles County, 104 Cal. 73, 37 Pac. 796; Knight v. Eureka, 123 Cal. 192, 55 Pac. 768; Schaezlein v. Cabaniss, 135 Cal. 466, 56 L.R.A. 733, 87 Am. St. Rep. 122, 67 Pac. 755; Los Angeles Gas & E. Corp. v. Los Angeles, 163 Cal. 621, 126 Pac. 594; Egan v. San Francisco, 165 Cal. 576, 133 Pac. 294, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 754. L.R.A.1916D.

Messrs. Albert Lee Stephens, Charles S. Burnell, Warren L. Williams, and Samuel Barnes Smith for respondent.

Mr. Andrew J. Copp, Jr., for Municipal Charities Commission:

The regulation of charity is a public, and not a private, function.

Re Coleman, 167 Cal. 212, 138 Pac. 992, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 682; Re Sutro, 155 Cal. 727, 102 Pac. 920; 2 Perry, Tr. § 697; Sacramento Orphanage v. Chambers, 25 Cal. App. 536, 144 Pac. 317; Tyssen, Charitable Bequests, p. 170; University of London v. Yarrow, 1 De G. & J. 72, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 430, 3 Jur. N. S. 421; Re Douglas, L. R. 35 Ch. Div. 472, 56 L. J. Ch. N. S. 913, 56 L. T. N. S. 786, 35 Week. Rep. 740; Armstrong v. Reeves, Ir. L. R. 25 Eq. 325; Re Foveaux [1895] 2 Ch. 501, 64 L. J. Ch. N. S. 856, 13 Reports, 730, 73 L. T. N. S. 202, 42 Week. Rep. 661.

Charity is a proper subject of police regulation.

Tiedeman, Pol. Power, § 48; People ex rel. State Bd. of Charities v. New York Soc. 25 Misc. 53, 53 N. Y. Supp. 1017; 42 App. Div. 82, 58 N. Y. Supp. 953, 161 N. Y. 233, 55 N. E. 1063; People ex rel. New York Inst. v. Fitch, 154 N. Y. 14, 38 L.R.A. 591, 47 N. E. 983; Ex parte Cheney, 90 Cal. 617, 27 Pac. 436; Ex parte Delaney, 43 Cal. 478; Ex parte Smith, 38 Cal. 702; Re Newell, 2 Cal. App. 767, 84 Pac. 226; Re O'Meara, 11 Ont. Rep. 603; 3 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. 1886.

Each individual case as it presents itself must be investigated, considering the character of work, the degree of efficiency, and its responsibility, and upon such investigation the discretion of the investigator must be exercised in granting or withholding permission to do any of the things enumerated in the begging ordinance, and such discretion is not unreasonable.

Ex parte Fiske, 72 Cal. 127, 13 Pac. 310; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730; Re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 558, 27 L.R.A. 529, 38 Pac. 981; Pedrick v. Dailey, 12 Gray, 161; Com. v. Abrahams, 156 Mass. 57, 30 N. E. 79; Los Angeles County v. Spencer, 126 Cal. 670, 77 Am. St. Rep. 217, 59 Pac. 202, 385; Pacific States Supply Co. v. San Francisco, 171 Fed. 727; Lassen v. Dental Examiners, 24 Cal. App. 767, 142 Pac. 505; Roberts v. Duffy, 167 Cal. 629, 140 Pac. 260.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The authorities of the city of Los Angeles adopted two ordinances. By one was created a Municipal Charities Commission, whose powers and duties were defined. Amongst those powers and duties are: "(1) To investigate all charities dependent upon public appeal or general solicitation for support, and to indorse such of them as meet actual needs of the community, attain a reasonable standard of efficiency, and are so conducted as to insure the public of the wise use of the funds."

The second of these ordinances prohibits begging in the public streets or places in the city, and regulates the soliciting of alms and contributions for charitable purposes. It provides as follows:

"Section 2. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to solicit alms, food, clothing, money, or contributions within the city of Los Angeles, without first securing a permit so to do from the Municipal Charities Commission of said city. Provided, however, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to properly accredited solicitors of established churches of said city soliciting for purely religious purposes, but it shall apply to the various institutional works carried on by said churches in like manner as other persons, firms, corporations, and associations. The permit from the Charities Commission above referred to shall consist of a written certificate issued by the said Commission certifying that the object of said solicitation is worthy and meritorious, and authorizing the soliciting of gifts and donations therefor; said permits may be revoked by said Commission at any time.

"Section 3. It shall be unlawful for any person to solicit or collect for any charitable or philanthropic organization, without first obtaining a written permit so to do from the Municipal Charities Commission; said permit shall be revocable at any time in the discretion of said Commission, which may adopt such regulations regarding the soliciting and collecting of funds as its judgment may dictate; and it shall be obligatory upon the holders of such permits to abide by such rules and regulations.

"Section 4. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to give or promote any entertainment, fair, bazaar, or benefit in the name of charity or philanthropy, without first obtaining a written permit so to do from the Municipal Charities Commission, said permit to be revocable at any time at the discretion of said Commission.

"Section 5. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to solicit funds within the city of Los Angeles for any ethical, evangelistic, religious, missionary, or charitable purposes, without having first obtained an indorsement certificate from the Municipal Charities Commission. L.R.A.1916D.

mission. Provided, however, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to established and recognized churches or other religious organizations in the city of Los Angeles.

"Section 6. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to sell, or offer for sale, any clothing, household goods, or other goods, wares, or merchandise which have been solicited or donated for charity or philanthropy, without first obtaining a written permit so to do from the Municipal Charities Commission, said permit to be revocable at any time at the discretion of said Commission."

Petitioner was arrested under two criminal complaints charging violations of these ordinances. By the first of these complaints he was accused of soliciting "alms, food, clothing, money, and contributions . . . without first securing or having a permit or written certificate so to do from the Municipal Charities Commission." By the second of these complaints his crime was in "selling and offering for sale clothing, household goods, and other goods, wares, and merchandise which had been solicited and donated for charity and philanthropy, without first obtaining or having a written permit so to do from the Municipal Charities Commission."

The following facts appear without controversy: The Salvation Army is a religious organization founded on and believing in the teachings of Christ. It has been established for fifty years. It has its churches and charitable organizations throughout the United States and other countries. Profoundly impressed with the Founder's sympathy for the poor and afflicted and with His teachings that "Now abideth faith, hope and charity, these three, but the greatest of these is charity," and, "Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart," it has made its special field of religious work the relief of the destitute and the rescue of society's outcasts. It has found that it cannot lead the spirit of the weary and heavy burdened without first ministering to his physical necessities. While "man does not live by bread only," he cannot live at all without bread. Therefore the charitable organizations of the Salvation Army are vital, integral parts of its religious life and work. For twenty-five years it has prosecuted its religious and charitable work in the city of Los Angeles. It there maintains an "Industrial Home," where men out of employment are given food and lodging without charge, but are required, for their own self-respect and to the end that mere professional beggary be not fostered, to perform such labor as is within their power, being paid the value thereof. It maintains a "Rescue Home and Maternity Hospital," in which, without charge, food, lodgings, and hospital service are afforded needy married women and unfortunate girls. It maintains a "Young Woman's Boarding House," giving for an extremely low price to homeless girls and women clean, wholesome food and lodging and helpful moral influences. It maintains four other hotels and lodging houses where the destitute are housed and homed free of charge, and where but a small charge is exacted from those able to pay. An average of twenty-seven persons per night are given shelter in these hotels free of all charge. It also maintains nine stores where secondhand clothing, furniture, rags, paper, and junk of various kinds, contributed by the charitable, are sold at low prices. In these stores and in the renovatory work necessary to make many contributed articles salable, employment is given to the needy, who thus become self-sustaining and self-respecting. In the years of its labors the Salvation Army has acquired properties of much value in Los Angeles, all of which are used for one or another of the described purposes. It has alleviated suffering, and given relief and employment in thousands of cases. Its books of financial account are and always have been open to the inspection and examination of its contributors, and no one of those contributors has ever voiced any complaint touching the honesty and efficiency of the Army's administrative work.

After its creation, the Charities Commission, claiming the power so to do under the aforesaid ordinances, on or about the 6th day of October, 1913, demanded, in writing, of the Salvation Army, that it should, as a condition precedent to obtaining the indorsement or permit of the Commission for carrying on or soliciting contributions for any of its above described charitable work in said city, be governed by a local board of managers, or trustees, all of whom should be residents of the city of Los Angeles, and representative Los Angeles citizens, and that all the property of the Salvation Army in the city should be conveyed to and held by such local board, and that the financial work of the Salvation Army in the city should be conducted by such local board; that no budgets for funds should be prepared and enforced on the Los Angeles workers for any purpose other than Los Angeles work; and that no funds should be sent out of Los Angeles for the use of the Salvation Army elsewhere, except by the direction of such local board, or of the Municipal Charities Commission; and that Christmas offerings, self-denial, harvest festival, and like accustomed contributions of the Salvation Army should not be used except for local purposes; and that all proceeds derived by the Salvation Army from the conduct of its aforesaid institutions in Los Angeles (whether self-sustaining or not) should be used exclusively for the extension of its work in the city, and not be subject to assessment by territorial (i. e., national) officers of the Salvation Army. Next, the Charities Commission exacted that title to all property of the Salvation Army in Los Angeles should be vested in a corporation, and this was done. Thereafter the Salvation Army and its corporation petitioned the Charities Commission for a permit allowing it to continue its charities, and its petition was denied. Always desirous of yielding obedience to the law, and of "rendering to Caesar the things that are Caesar's," the Salvation Army endeavored to comply with the exactions of the Charities Commission, but was unable to comply with some of them without impairing its efficiency and integrity as an organized society for religio-charitable work. Failing to secure the permit, the Salvation Army continued this work. The petitioner is one of its officers. In the performance of his duties as such officer, and not otherwise, he has been subjected to these arrests and charged with these crimes.

In setting forth the foregoing facts we are not unmindful of the limitations put on our inquiry under this writ. The validity of these ordinances is to be determined from their provisions, and the question of their validity or invalidity is all that concerns us here. Nevertheless, and assuming for the moment the validity of the ordinances, these facts are highly instructive as illustrating the extent of the power conferred and the manner of its exercise. Here is a great and living charity doing good to thousands of the needy and heavy-laden of Los Angeles, struck dead because it does not make over the management of its affairs to a local board of "representative citizens," and cannot agree that it will dispense the bounty which it receives exclusively for local purposes. Charity is not only to begin at home, but to end at home, saving as under "permit" it may be suffered to go abroad. The quality of mercy (and so necessarily of charity), we are told,

—"is not strained;

It droppeth as the gentle rain from Heaven
Upon the place beneath."

But in Los Angeles it is to be strained and drop as from a sprinkling pot in the guiding hand of the Charities Commission. But this exemplification of the use of the power is not, of course, an argument against the existence of the power itself. Conceding the existence of the power, if in any instance an illegal exercise of it has been made, that fact will constitute a defense to a prosecution, but will not be effective to destroy the validity of the grant of power itself. The basic question still remains: May a private charitable association, order, or organization be denied the right to fulfil the purposes of its existence saving under a "permit" from the authorities? We here use the term "private charity" as meaning one not supported in whole or in part by state or municipal funds. Over the latter class manifestly the power of regulation and control is great, if not plenary.

Certain features of these ordinances at once strike the reader. Money may be freely sent abroad by any "established church" for the uplift of the soul of the Senegambian, and this is very well; but no penny can be sent to Belgium, to Poland, to Serbia to still the wailing of the children or allay the anguish of the women except under a "permit" from the Charities Commission. Nay, more, in the city of Los Angeles itself its needy childhood goes unfed and unclothed, its dependent womanhood unprotected and uncared for by organized charities, except they have a "permit." Surely here, if anywhere, is

"The organized charity, scrimped and iced
In the name of a cautious, statistical Christ."

Respondent argues that charitable institutions soliciting contributions from the general public thus secure public trust funds, and that it is quite within governmental powers for the state or its municipal agencies to regulate the collection and disposition of such trust funds. It is freely conceded, indeed it is proclaimed, that reasonable regulations may be adopted touching, and to a limited extent controlling, the operation of charitable institutions dependent in whole or in part on public beneficence. But respondent fails to perceive or at least to discuss the distinction, as broad as the temperate zone, between a law imposing reasonable regulations to effectuate these ends on all such charitable institutions, and a law which makes the right to solicit at all, and thus the right of a given charity to exist, dependent on the arbitrary will of a Charities Commission. Again, let us illustrate. Respondent in its brief thus defines the power of the Charities Commission:

"The Municipal Charities Commission is delegated power to indorse (which means L.R.A.1916D.

grant permits to charitable institutions under which alone they are entitled to live) such charitable institutions as meet the actual needs of the community, attain a reasonable standard of efficiency, and are so conducted as to insure the public in the wise use of funds."

This language taken from the first of the ordinances above quoted sounds reasonable. But as interpreted by the Municipal Charities Commission, what does it mean? In their own language it is this: Such a charity is "one that will execute every trust for charity with the least possibly delay, with the greatest possible efficiency, and with the least possible deduction for expense." Here is a mark set, and that mark is the absolute perfection of human endeavor. No tolerance, no charity is shown by this Commission of Charities, for any human effort, however self-sacrificing and efficient, that does not attain perfection. Charities in Los Angeles must reach a pitch of perfection unattained by any other human institution, or in the view of the Municipal Charities Commission they are unfit to live.

But let us eliminate from consideration these constructions put by the Municipal Charities Commission on their own powers, which are but delegated powers, and meet the question of the existence of this power at its source. Can the municipal authorities of a city arbitrarily say what person or what institution may or may not engage in charitable work dependent wholly or in part upon voluntary contributions from the public? Unhesitatingly we answer that this cannot be done; that it constitutes an attempt to use the police power in an arbitrary, unreasonable, and oppressive manner. It necessarily contains an assertion of the power to prohibit and suppress vocations and occupations which, entirely aside from their religious character, are from a worldly point of view in and of themselves not only harmless, but positively beneficial to humanity. The power to pass reasonable regulations in such a case bears no relationship to the power to prohibit or suppress. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Los Angeles County v. Hollywood Cemetery Asso. 124 Cal. 344, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75, 57 Pac. 153; Re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973; Sonora v. Curtin, 137 Cal. 583, 70 Pac. 674.

Such charitable work is not to be confounded with beggary, which imports personal gain. Most often those who devote themselves to such charities live lives of self-denial and self-abnegation for the sake of others. And the utmost limit of reasonable regulation in the matter is reached by acts protecting the public from charlatans and impostors, insuring knowledge on the part of the donors of the purposes to which their contributions may be put, coupled with adequate safeguards against malversation as to the funds received. But this falls far short of the law here under review, which permits such charitable work to be carried on only by (again to quote respondent) "trustees satisfactory to the Municipal Charities Commission."

But in further support of the argument that the Charities Commission or the municipal council may thus forbid a man from devoting his life to this form of self-denial and good works, it is said that neither the Constitution of the United States nor the Constitution of this state guarantees him the right so to do as they guarantee him the free exercise of his religion. They do not. Neither do they guarantee to a man the right to love, to show mercy, to forgive his enemies, or to walk in the path of rectitude. The existence of some human rights is taken for granted in both of those august instruments. We have heard one Chief Executive of this nation declare that he construed the Constitution as conferring on his department all powers not expressly withheld. The construction has not as yet met with favor from the juriconsults. As little accord can be given to a construction which denies to the individual any right not expressly reserved and preserved to him. But if driven to authority to support this declaration, we can at least point out that the Declaration of Independence recognizes the right of all mankind to pursue happiness. When that pursuit takes the innocent and admirable form of effort to better the lot of the poor and oppressed, whether happiness be found solely in the consciousness of the doing of kindly deeds, or whether it be found in the conviction that one is thereby following the precepts of a Divine Teacher, in either case it lies not within the ordained powers of our government, national, state, or municipal, to say that such a vocation shall not be followed, such a life shall not be led.

So far we have dealt with the question in what, for lack of a better word, we may term its secular aspect only. From this point of view our remarks and conclusion apply equally to all charities, whether temporal or religious.

But there is another aspect of the question clearly presented and as clearly demanding consideration. This is the religious aspect. The petition shows that the charities of the Salvation Army are a vital part of its religious life work. One need not write as a theologian in expressing as we do the most profound veneration for religion as embodying the highest ethical concepts of a people and as satisfying their spiritual yearning for a life finer than this earthly one. The two religions exercising the most potent influence in shaping the material and spiritual destinies of the white-skinned races are the Jewish and the Christian. To these, as to all others, perfect freedom of exercise is constitutionally guaranteed. In both of these religions charity is the central word. It is enjoined, not as a good thing or a wise thing, or as a kindly thing only, but as a fundamental part of the religion itself. Says the Jewish faith: "On three things the world is stayed; on the Torah (the law) and on worship and on the bestowal of kindness." "Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart," says Paul to Timothy.

"Charity is the scope of all God's commands," preaches Chrysostom.

"All perfection of the Christian life is to be attained according to charity," declares Thomas Aquinas.

Does it need more, does it need so much, to show that in these religions the bestowal of charity, the devotion of life to charity, are a part of the religion itself? And does it demand discussion to establish so plain a truth as that touching religion there is a doubtful zone which legislation should be most reluctant to enter? The founders of the nation recognized it when they placed the great guaranty of religious liberty in the Constitution of a free people, and it is for every court to see that that liberty is not encroached upon, and that freedom gnawed and impaired, by any experimental legislation however well meant. So, when legislation does enter that uncertain domain, the fact that it is there must bring to it condemnation. In accordance with the dictate of the Constitution itself, the doubt will be resolved in favor of religious liberty. And it will be found better in the long run that the free exercise of religion be preserved in its integrity, better for the nation, better for charity itself, which owes so much to religion,—even if the efficiency of religious charities be not up to the standard of perfection set by the Municipal Charities Commission. If under that standard 75 cents of every dollar would go to the objects of charity, while under the less efficient methods in vogue but 50 cents of each dollar actually reaches the beneficiaries, it is not to be forgotten that there will be many millions fewer of these dollars to be distributed in charity if the activities of the religious are hampered, thwarted, and stayed.

Wherefore the prisoner is discharged from custody.

We concur: Melvin, J.; Lorigan, J.

Shaw, J., (concurring):

The occupation of soliciting contributions to charitable purposes is clearly so far subject to the police power that it may be regulated by laws or ordinances providing for a reasonable supervision over the persons engaged therein, and for the application and use of the contributions received to the purposes intended, in order to prevent unscrupulous persons from obtaining money or other things under the pretense that they were to be applied to charity, and to prevent the wrongful diversion of such funds to other uses, or to secure them against waste. Measures reasonably tending to secure these ends are unquestionably valid.

If the ordinances in question here were reasonably appropriate for the attainment of these objects, there could be no valid objection to them based on the ground that they deprived persons of liberty or unduly restricted them in the pursuit of happiness. But they do not merely empower the Municipal Charities Commission to inquire or examine into the character of persons soliciting for charity and withhold permits from all who do not come within fixed standards of character and fitness. They give the Commission absolute and arbitrary power to forbid any person from soliciting for charity, regardless of his personal character, worth, or fitness. No standard of character or fitness is set by which the Commission is to be guided in giving or withholding permits. The only thing required is that the Commission shall find that the "object of said solicitation is worthy and meritorious." Persons of the highest character desiring to solicit for a worthy cause might be refused a permit for no reason except the arbitrary will of the Commission. Every person has the right, under our Constitution, and perhaps without its guaranty, to solicit contributions for a worthy charitable purpose, provided he acts in good faith and honestly applies them to that purpose. The ordinances give the Commission power to deprive persons of that right without cause or reason. To the extent that they give this arbitrary power they are contrary to the Constitution and void. They come within the principles stated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 366, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064, and by this court in Ex parte Sing Lee, L.R.A.1916D.

96 Cal. 359, 24 L.R.A. 195, 31 Am. St. Rep. 218, 31 Pac. 245; Los Angeles County v. Hollywood Cemetery Asso. 124 Cal. 349, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75, 57 Pac. 153; Schaezlein v. Cabaniss, 135 Cal. 469, 56 L.R.A. 733, 87 Am. St. Rep. 122, 67 Pac. 755; and Hewitt v. State Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 593, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 84 Pac. 39, 7 Ann. Cas. 750.

In the Yick Wo Case, referring to ordinances prohibiting laundries in wooden buildings except by permission from the board of supervisors, the court said: "They seem intended to confer, and actually do confer, not a discretion to be exercised upon a consideration of the circumstances of each case, but a naked and arbitrary power to give or withhold consent, not only as to places, but as to persons. So that, if an applicant for such consent, being in every way a competent and qualified person, and having complied with every reasonable condition demanded by any public interest, should, failing to obtain the requisite consent of the supervisors to the prosecution of his business, apply for redress by the judicial process of mandamus, to require the supervisors to consider and act upon his case, it would be a sufficient answer for them to say that the law had conferred upon them authority to withhold their assent, without reason and without responsibility. . . . It does not prescribe a rule and conditions for the regulation of the use of property for laundry purposes, to which all similarly situated may conform." 118 U. S. 366, 368.

And in Los Angeles County v. Hollywood Cemetery Asso. 124 Cal. 344, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75, 57 Pac. 153, the court said: "There is a wide difference between regulation and prohibition,—between regulatory provisions as a condition imposed for the exercise of a lawful occupation, and making the right itself to depend upon the unrestrained will of the municipality. . . . If the business be lawful, and having no injurious tendency, they cannot say who shall and who shall not exercise the right itself. Under the guise of regulating a business, the municipality cannot make prohibition possible by committing to the officers of the municipality the arbitrary power to deny permission to engage in that business."

The proper method of regulating a lawful business is indicated in Hewitt v. State Medical Examiners, supra, as follows: "The right of the physician to be secure in his privilege of practising his profession is thus made to depend, not upon any definition which the law furnishes him as to what shall constitute 'grossly improbable statements,' but upon the determination of the board after the statement is made and simply upon its opinion of its improbability. No definite standard is furnished by the law under this provision whereby a physician with any safety can advertise his medical business, nor is there any definite rule declared whereby after such advertisement is had the board of medical examiners shall be controlled in determining its probability or improbability. The physician is not advised what statements he may make which will not be deemed 'grossly improbable' by the board. No rule is provided whereby he can tell whether the publication he makes will bring him within the ban of the provision or not. . . . If a physician's license is to be revoked for 'grossly improbable statements,' if he is to be thereby deprived of his means of livelihood, of his right to practise a profession which it has taken him years of study and a large expenditure of money to qualify himself for, on the ground that he has made 'grossly improbable statements' in advertising his medical business,—it is requisite that the statute authorizing such revocation define what shall constitute such statements, so that the physician may know in advance the penalty he incurs in making them." 148 Cal. 593.

Other methods of regulation may also be allowable; but a law or ordinance by or under which a lawful occupation, in itself, when properly conducted, in no wise injurious to persons, property, or the public interest, may be absolutely prohibited at the dictation of any official body without other cause than its own will or desire, is beyond the legislative power, and to that extent void.

There is a class of cases upon which the respondent relies as contravening the above-stated principles, such, for example, as Ex parte Fiske, 72 Cal. 127, 13 Pac. 310, Re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 558, 27 L.R.A. 529, 38 Pac. 981; and Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357. It will be found, however, that these cases relate to things which in their nature are or may be injurious to public health, safety, comfort, or welfare, and that they do not infringe upon the principles above stated with regard to the regulation of occupations which are both lawful and innocuous. In the Flaherty Case the distinction is stated. After holding that an ordinance forbidding the beating of drums upon the streets without a permit from the president of the board of trustees was valid, the court, referring to other cases which seemed to conflict with the decision, and which are similar to the case at bar, said: "But upon closer examination they will be found to go upon a distinction or principle, whether sound or not, that is not applicable to the case at bar. They are based upon the theory that the lawful inherent rights of men cannot be entirely suppressed or destroyed by statute or ordinance, but can only be regulated, and that all regulations of such rights must be uniform." 105 Cal. 565.

And again: "At all events, the cases referred to deal with a right. But the proposition that a man has a natural, ingrained, inviolate, common-law, or constitutional right to beat a drum on the traveled streets of a city, has no foundation in reason or authority. As therefore it is not a right that may not be entirely suppressed, it may be regulated as the lawmaking power may determine," and that, "as it could be suppressed, no one could be heard to complain of an ordinance regulating it because thereby special privileges accrued to particular persons." 105 Cal. 566.

The distinction between cases like Ex parte Fiske and the present case is that in this case the right which the Commission has power absolutely to take away is a lawful and innocent occupation which the legislature cannot entirely suppress, and as to which its functions are merely to regulate its conduct and prevent abuses. There are other cases relating to ordinances which, after prohibiting certain things, delegate to some officer or board the power to decide whether or not a given person or subject comes within the terms of the prohibition. These are not in conflict with the principles above stated, nor are they applicable to this case. For these reasons, I am of the opinion that the portion of the ordinance in question imposing a penalty upon anyone who solicits contributions for charitable purposes without a permit from the Commission is void. The section of the ordinance prohibiting the sale of any goods donated to charity without first obtaining a similar permit is invalid for like reasons.

I concur in the judgment discharging the prisoner.

We concur: Angellotti, Ch. J.; Sloss, J.; Lawlor, J.

Annotation—State or municipal power to control private charity.

RE DART, ante, 905, appears to be the only case discussing the power of a L.R.A.1916D.

state or municipality to control the solicitation of funds for charitable purposes.

An interesting case in connection with RE DART is People ex rel. State Bd. of Charities v. New York Soc. (1900) 161 N. Y. 233, 55 N. E. 1063, reversing (1899) 42 App. Div. 83, 58 N. Y. Supp. 953, in which it is held that the constitutional and statutory provisions of the state giving the state board of charities power to enact rules and regulations for the government and management of charitable institutions do not apply to a society for the prevention of cruelty to children, as such society is not a charitable institution or corporation within the meaning of the Constitution and statutes, although its purposes are in the broadest sense charitable, and it has legal capacity to take and administer gifts and bequests that would be called charitable under general rules of law applicable to trusts, as the scheme of state supervision was not intended to apply to every institution engaged in some good or commendable work for the relief of humanity from some of the ills with which it is afflicted, but only to those maintained in whole or in part by the state or some of its political divisions through which charity, as such, is dispensed by public authority to those having claim upon the generosity or bounty of the state, and having the distribution of relief or public aid, the fruit of taxation levied alike upon the willing and unwilling. And the fact that the society received from the city $30,000 per annum did not affect its status as a charitable organization, as, in receiving and disbursing that sum of money, it neither received nor administered any charity, but was simply allowed something by the city for doing work that otherwise would devolve upon the police department, which the society could do better and with much less expense than the police. It should be noted that this case does not discuss the power of the state to exercise supervision over private charitable institutions, but only the question whether defendant came within the constitutional and statutory provisions which purport to be applicable to institutions, societies, and associations, whether state, county, municipal, incorporated or not incorporated, private or otherwise, which are of a charitable, eleemosynary, reformatory, or correctional character or design. R. L. S.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

CITY OF JACKSONVILLE et al., Appts.,
v.

J. E. T. BOWDEN.

(87 Fla. 181, 84 So. 769.)

Statute — constitutionality.

1. The lawmaking power of the legislature of a state is subject only to the limitations provided in the state and Federal Constitutions; and no duly enacted statute should be judicially declared to be inoperative on the ground that it violates organic law, unless it clearly appears beyond all reasonable doubt that, under any rational view that may be taken of the statute, it is in positive conflict with some identified or designated provision of constitutional law. For other cases, see Statutes, I. c. 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — giving effect.

2. A statute should be so construed and applied as to make it valid and effective, if

Headnotes by WHITFIELD, J.

Note. — For statutes conferring powers upon municipalities or counties in respect to their officers as a delegation of legislative power, see annotation following this case, post, 921.
L.R.A.1916D.

its language does not exclude such an interpretation.

For other cases, see Statutes, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — power of court.

3. Where a statute does not violate the Federal or state Constitution, the legislative will is supreme, and its policy is not subject to judicial review. The courts have no veto power, and do not assume to regulate state policy, but they recognize and enforce the policy of the law as expressed in valid enactments, and decline to enforce statutes only when to do so would violate organic law.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, I. c. 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — interpretation.

4. The Constitution is the controlling law, and, while, in appropriate proceedings properly taken, it may be the duty of the court to declare a legislative enactment to be inoperative in whole or in part, if it plainly violates the Constitution, yet, as under our system of government the lawmaking power of the legislature is subject only to the limitations contained in the state and Federal Constitutions, the court should, in deference to the legislature, take care to so interpret an enactment as to make it consistent with the Constitution, if it can be done upon any reasonable consideration of the legislative intent, as shown by a fair application of all the language used to the purpose designed to be accomplished by the enactment.

For other cases, see Statutes, II, c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Municipal corporation — delegated power — validity.

5. In conferring upon municipalities appropriate quasi legislative powers for local governmental purposes, the legislature does not violate the implied principle of organic law that the legislature shall not delegate its general lawmaking power.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, I, d, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — constitutional power.

6. The express authority given to the legislature by the Constitution to "prescribe" the "powers" of municipalities, and "to provide for their government," is not subject to implied limitations that would curtail the real intent and purpose of the authority expressly conferred as disclosed by a consideration of the language used and the subject-matter upon which it operates.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, I, d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — form of government.

7. While, under the express authority "to provide for the government" of municipalities, and to "prescribe their jurisdiction and powers and to alter or amend the same at any time," the legislature cannot delegate to a municipality its general lawmaking power for the state, nor confer a power that violates any other express provision of organic law, nor confer "powers" other than for municipal purposes, yet the legislature has a wide discretion in the government it may provide and in the powers it may prescribe for a municipality, and also in the means and instrumentalities it may use in providing the government and prescribing the powers, when organic law is not plainly violated.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, I, d, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statute — implied repeal.

8. A statute may be, in whole or in part, repealed or superseded or abrogated by implication of law as a result of the due enactment of a subsequent statute covering the same subject, or by the operation of a later statute upon the occurrence of a definitely specified contingent event.

For other cases, see Statutes, III, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — intent to supersede.

9. If it is clear from its terms and purpose that the intent of a statute is that it shall supersede another statute upon a stated contingent event, the courts will give effect to such intent, when organic law is not thereby plainly violated, since the intent of the law is its vital force, and the province of the courts is to ascertain and effectuate the valid legislative purpose.

For other cases, see Statutes, III, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Legislature — what powers may be delegated.

10. Neither the Constitution nor the com-L.R.A.1916D.

mon law defines the line of separation between the powers that shall be exercised directly by the legislature and those that may be indirectly exercised through delegated authority conferred upon municipal governmental agencies.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, I, d, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — governmental regulation.

11. Where the legislature has authority to provide a governmental regulation, and the organic law does not prescribe the manner of adopting or providing it, and the nature of the regulation does not require that it be afforded by direct legislative act, such regulation may be provided either directly by the legislature, or indirectly by the legislative use of any appropriate instrumentality, where no provision or principle of organic law is thereby violated.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, I, d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Municipal corporation — creation of offices.

12. Uniformity is not required in the character and number or in the powers and duties of municipal officers, and it is entirely clear that the legislature may authorize a municipality to create and abolish its own municipal offices, and to define and change their powers and duties.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, I, d, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statute — implied repeal.

13. Chapter 6705, Acts 1913, confers a limited power upon the city of Jacksonville to regulate the character and number and the powers and duties of its administrative officers and boards for municipal purposes; and when that power is duly exercised within the limitations of the law, conflicting statutes are superseded by the force and operation of this statute in conferring the power upon the municipality, and in expressly repealing all inconsistent statutory provisions.

For other cases, see Statutes, III, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Municipal corporation — regulation of offices.

14. Chapter 6705, Acts 1913, is limited in its operation, is confined to municipal governmental regulations, and is not, beyond all reasonable doubt, in conflict with the principle of organic law which forbids a delegation of the general lawmaking power of the state. Nor does the statute, in effect, authorize a municipality to repeal a state law.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, I, d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 10, 1914.)

A PPEAL by defendants from an order of the Circuit Court for Duval County restraining them from submitting certain ordinances to the voters of the city for adoption or rejection. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. P. H. Odom, James M. Carson, and Ion L. Farris, for appellants:

The powers which belong to a municipal corporation are determined by its charter, which consists of the creative act and all laws in force relating to the corporation, whether defining its powers or regulating their mode of exercise.

St. Petersburg v. English, 54 Fla. 585, 45 So. 483; Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 264-266.

The power given to a city or town to change its corporate limits is a delegation of power, but not such a delegation as to render the act conferring such power unconstitutional.

Saunders v. Pensacola, 24 Fla. 226, 4 So. 801; Jacksonville v. L'Engle, 20 Fla. 344; Pensacola v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 21 Fla. 492; Orlando v. Orlando Water & Light Co. 50 Fla. 207, 39 So. 532; Ormond v. Shaw, 50 Fla. 445, 39 So. 108; McQuillin Mun. Corp. §§ 269-273; Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 353.

The legislature cannot delegate its authority to repeal a statute.

Rex v. Miller, 6 T. R. 277, 3 Revised Rep. 172; Rex v. Barber Surgeons, 1 Ld. Raym. 585; Haywood v. Savannah, 12 Ga. 404.

A municipal corporation may be authorized by its charter to repeal or suspend by ordinance the operation of a general law within its corporate limits.

28 Cyc. 366, 367; Ingersoll, Pub. Corp. 236, 237; Smith, Mun. Corp. § 522; St. Johnsbury v. Thompson, 59 Vt. 300, 59 Am. Rep. 731, 9 Atl. 571; Beiling v. Evansville, 144 Ind. 644, 35 L.R.A. 272, 42 N. E. 621; McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 43; State v. Binder, 38 Mo. 451; State v. Clarke, 54 Mo. 17, 14 Am. Rep. 471; State v. De Bar, 58 Mo. 395; Seibold v. People, 86 Ill. 33; Olmstead v. Crook, 89 Ala. 228, 7 So. 776; Hooper v. Young, 140 Cal. 274, 98 Am. St. Rep. 56, 74 Pac. 140; Ex parte Hughes, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 614, 100 S. W. 160; Iowa City v. McInnerny, 114 Iowa, 586, 87 N. W. 498; Thum v. Pingree, 21 Utah, 348, 61 Pac. 18; Burlington v. Burlington Traction Co. 70 Vt. 491, 41 Atl. 514; State, Cross, Prosecutor, v. Morristown, 33 N. J. L. 57; State v. Clarke, 25 N. J. L. 54; Mark v. State, 97 N. Y. 572; State ex rel. Love v. Cosgrave, 85 Neb. 187, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 207, 122 N. W. 885; Theisen v. McDavid, 34 Fla. 440, 26 L.R.A. 234, 16 So. 321; Porter v. Vinzant, 49 Fla. 213, 111 Am. St. Rep. 93, 38 So. 607.

Municipal corporations as an incidental power have the right to create such offices as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes and objects of their creation.

Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. §§ 384, 385; McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 411. L.R.A.1916D.

Where a statute directs a person to do a thing within a certain time, without any negative words restraining him from doing it afterwards, the naming of the time is usually considered as directory to him, and not as a limitation of his authority.

Pond v. Negus, 3 Mass. 230, 3 Am. Dec. 131; Fay v. Wood, 65 Mich. 390, 32 N. W. 614; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Wood, 115 Mich. 444, 74 N. W. 656; People ex rel. Solano County v. Lake County, 33 Cal. 487; St. Louis County Ct. v. Sparks, 10 Mo. 117, 45 Am. Dec. 355; Hurford v. Omaha, 4 Neb. 336; Pensacola v. Bell, 22 Fla. 469; Stieff v. Hartwell, 35 Fla. 606, 17 So. 899; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 2d ed. §§ 616, 617.

Messrs. Kay & Doggett, for appellee:

The holding of an election pursuant to the provisions of a void statute or void ordinance not involving solely the question of public office may be enjoined.

Macon v. Hughes, 110 Ga. 795, 36 S. E. 247; De Kalb County v. Atlanta, 132 Ga. 740, 65 S. E. 72; Conner v. Gray, 88 Miss. 489, 41 So. 186, 9 Ann. Cas. 120.

A taxpayer has a right to restrain a city from holding an election in a new ward unlawfully created, and from expending the public revenues in defraying the expense thereof.

Cascaden v. Waterloo, 106 Iowa, 673, 77 N. W. 333; Peck v. Spencer, 26 Fla. 23, 7 So. 642; Chamberlain v. Tampa, 40 Fla. 74, 23 So. 572; Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. §§ 1479-1587; Crawford v. Gilchrist, 64 Fla. 41, 59 So. 963, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 916.

The matters and things to be done by the board of election commissioners and inspection of election are merely ministerial functions, and if the acts which they undertook to perform were not authorized by law, and would incur expenses to be paid from public funds, their acts were properly enjoined.

Macon v. Hughes, 110 Ga. 795, 36 S. E. 247; De Kalb County v. Atlanta, 132 Ga. 727, 65 S. E. 72; Crawford v. Gilchrist, 64 Fla. 41, 59 So. 963, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 916.

When the voters of a district forming part of or contiguous to a city or town, by an affirmative vote, throw off or accept an existing municipal charter, such act does not make or amend such municipal charter.

State ex rel. Cheyney v. Sammons, 62 Fla. 308, 57 So. 196; People ex rel. Cuff v. Oakland, 123 Cal. 598, 56 Pac. 445.

The matter of fixing appropriate boundaries under the general incorporation act is "essentially political or administrative."

Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 363; Jacksonville v. L'Engle, 20 Fla. 351.

Therefore, it is not competent for the legislature to delegate to the municipality the power to repeal or suspend statutes creating municipal offices.

Theisen v. McDavid, 34 Fla. 440, 26 L.R.A. 234, 16 So. 321; State ex rel. Garrison v. Putnam County, 23 Fla. 632, 3 So. 164; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Smith, 53 Fla. 383, 43 So. 235; State ex rel. Lamar v. Dillon, 42 Fla. 95, 28 So. 781; State, Taintor, Prosecutrix, v. Morristown, 33 N. J. L. 57; Iowa City v. McInnery, 114 Iowa, 586, 87 N. W. 498; State ex rel. Cheyney v. Sammons, 62 Fla. 303, 57 So. 196.

When the meaning of a statute is clear, its consequences, if evil, can be avoided only by a change of the law itself, to be effected by the legislature, and not by judicial construction.

Florida R. Co. v. Adams, 56 Fla. 294, 47 So. 921.

The provision of the statute with reference to the time of holding the election is mandatory.

State ex rel. McQuaid v. Duval County, 23 Fla. 486, 3 So. 193; Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. D'Alemberte, 39 Fla. 37, 21 So. 570; Futch v. Adams, 47 Fla. 257, 36 So. 575; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 2d ed. 352, § 617; Washington v. State, 48 Fla. 62, 37 So. 573; Lamb v. State, 50 Fla. 106, 38 So. 906; Doores v. Varnon, 94 Ky. 507, 22 S. W. 852; Jones v. State, 1 Kan. 273; La Floridienne v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 59 Fla. 196, 52 So. 298; State ex rel. Hess v. Washoe County, 6 Nev. 104; Gossard v. Vaught, 10 Kan. 169.

Power to frame or amend a city charter cannot be delegated to a city in the absence of constitutional provisions to that effect.

Elliott v. Detroit, 121 Mich. 611, 84 N. W. 820; Jackson v. Harrington, 160 Mich. 550, 125 N. W. 383; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Hudson v. Detroit, 164 Mich. 369, 129 N. W. 879; State, Dexheimer, Prosecutors, v. Orange, 60 N. J. L. 111, 36 Atl. 706; State ex rel. Mueller v. Thompson, 149 Wis. 488, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 339, 137 N. W. 20, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 774; Re Municipal Charters, 86 Vt. 562, 86 Atl. 307; Yazoo City v. Lightcap, 82 Miss. 148, 33 So. 949; Dobbin v. San Antonio, 2 Posey, Unrep. Cas. (Tex.) 708; Cook v. Dendinger, 38 La. Ann. 262; Nelson v. Homer, 48 La. Ann. 258, 19 So. 271; Brown v. Lakeland, 61 Fla. 568, 54 So. 716.

Whitfield, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal is from an order restraining the city of Jacksonville and its officers from submitting to the voters of the city, for adoption or rejection, at an election called for October 28, 1913, certain ordinances that had been adopted by the city council under chapter 6705, Acts of 1913, and designed, upon approval by the electors of L.R.A.1916D.

the city, to supersede portions of the city charter statutes. The suit is properly maintained by Bowden, a resident, citizen, and taxpayer of the city. See Crawford v. Gilchrist, 64 Fla. 41, 59 So. 963, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 916.

The statute which was, in effect, held by the chancellor to be inoperative, is as follows:

Chapter 6705—(No. 285)

An Act Amending the Charter Affecting the Government, Powers, Duties, Jurisdiction, Officers, Boards, and Elections of the City of Jacksonville, and Extending and Enlarging the Powers of the Government of Said City, and Providing a Method Whereby the Charter of Said City May Be Hereafter Amended by Ordinance, Approved by the Electors of Said City, and to Repeal All Laws Inconsistent Herewith.

Be it enacted by the legislature of the state of Florida:

Section 1. That the numbers, powers, duties, terms of office, and the time and manner of election or appointment of any and all boards and officers of the city of Jacksonville, whether created by or recognized in state legislation or city ordinance, excepting only the legislative powers and duties of the city council, may be amended and changed, and any and all boards and officers, whether created by or recognized in state legislation or city ordinance, may be abolished and new boards and officers created, by ordinance adopted by the affirmative vote of a majority of all the members of the city council, and approved by the mayor or passed over his veto, and at a special municipal election approved by the affirmative vote of a majority of the qualified electors of said city who shall vote thereon in such special municipal election:

Provided, that the first such special municipal election shall be held on a date to be fixed by the city council not less than three months, and not more than six months, after the passage and approval of this act;

Provided, further, that such ordinance or ordinances shall be published in one or more newspapers published in said city not less than three times a week for eight weeks next preceding such special municipal election;

Provided, further, that the electors of said city shall be given an opportunity at such election or elections to vote separately upon each amendment to said charter, and upon the proposed change or changes as to each office to be affected thereby;

Provided, further, that this act shall not deprive the city council, under existing state legislation, of the power to create or abolish any office not created by or recognized in state legislation or by ordinance approved by the vote of the electors of said city.

Section 2. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Section 3. This act shall take effect immediately upon its passage and approval by the governor.

Approved May 23d, 1913.

The ordinance sought to be submitted to the electors for adoption or rejection is designed to transfer to the city council some of the powers and duties now exercised by the board of bond trustees of the city under legislative enactment, and to define the powers and duties of the mayor with reference to the police force of the city. It apparently follows the authority expressly given.

It is contended, in support of the order appealed from, that the statute above set out is unconstitutional, because it attempts to authorize the municipality to repeal certain statutes, and because it attempts to delegate to the municipality the legislative powers of the state in violation of §§ 1 and 24 of article 3 and § 8 of article 8 of the state Constitution.

The lawmaking power of the legislature of a state is subject only to the limitations provided in the state and Federal Constitutions; and no duly enacted statute should be judicially declared to be inoperative on the ground that it violates organic law, unless it clearly appears beyond all reasonable doubt that, under any rational view that may be taken of the statute, it is in positive conflict with some identified or designated provision of constitutional law. See State ex rel. Van Alstine v. Frear, 142 Wis. 320, 125 N. W. 961, 20 Ann. Cas. 633; Wooten v. State, 24 Fla. 335, 1 L.R.A. 819, 5 So. 39; Duval County v. Jacksonville, 36 Fla. 196, 29 L.R.A. 416, 18 So. 339.

In construing a statute, it must be assumed that in its passage the legislature intended to conform to the requirements and limitations of organic law, and to provide a valid effective statute in accord with all the provisions of the Constitution affecting the subject. Where one construction of a statute would render it unconstitutional, and another construction that is fairly warranted by its terms and purpose would accord with organic law, the latter construction should be adopted, since legislation is subject to applicable limitations of the Constitution, and a valid statute is presumed to have been intended by the lawmaking power in its enactment. A statute should be so construed and applied as to make it L.R.A.1916D.

valid and effective, if its language does not exclude such an interpretation. See Peninsular Industrial Ins. Co. v. State, 61 Fla. 376, 55 So. 398; The Abby Dodge, 223 U. S. 166, 56 L. ed. 390, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 310; United States ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Central R. Co. 213 U. S. 366, 53 L. ed. 836, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 527.

It is essentially the duty of the courts to sustain the Constitution, and to decline to enforce a statute when its enforcement would violate organic law; yet, in exercising the exceedingly delicate and responsible power and duty to declare legislative enactments to be contrary to the Constitution, and therefore inoperative, the courts should, to maintain the judicial authority unsullied, be assiduous to keep entirely within their own organic limitations, and to refrain from declining to enforce statutes, except in cases of clear and unmistakable violations of the Constitution that require judicial action to give effect to the supreme law of the land on the subject, pursuant to the oath taken by all officials to "support . . . the Constitution."

In order to justify the courts in declaring inoperative as a delegation of legislative power a statute conferring particular duties or authority upon administrative officers, it must clearly appear beyond a reasonable doubt that the duty or authority so conferred is a power that appertains exclusively to the legislative department, and the conferring of it is not warranted under the provisions of the Constitution. In vesting the legislative power of the state in the senate and house of representatives, the Constitution by implication forbids the delegation by the legislature of the general lawmaking power of the state to any other officers; but, by immemorial usage based on public necessity, this implication does not apply to the powers that may be conferred upon municipalities for local governmental purposes, and the terms of the present Constitution contemplate the giving of large and varied governmental powers to municipalities. Where a statute does not violate the Federal or state Constitution, the legislative will is supreme, and its policy is not subject to judicial review. The courts have no veto power, and do not assume to regulate state policy; but they recognize and enforce the policy of the law as expressed in valid enactments, and decline to enforce statutes only when to do so would violate organic law. See State v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 56 Fla. 617, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 639, 47 So. 969; Davis v. Florida Power Co. 64 Fla. 246, 60 So. 759, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 965, 5 N. C. C. A. 926; State ex rel. Moodie v. Bryan, 50 Fla. 293, 39 So. 929; Escambia County v. Pilot Comrs. 62 Fla. 197, 120

Am. St. Rep. 196, 42 So. 697; State ex rel. Wilkinson v. Lane, 181 Ala. 646, 62 So. 31.

Statutes authorizing municipalities by stated procedure to change their corporate territory and limits as fixed by statute have been applied under the present Constitution of this state. See §§ 172 et seq. Gen. Stat. 1906; Orlando v. Orlando Water & Light Co. 50 Fla. 207, 39 So. 532; Ormond v. Shaw, 50 Fla. 445, 39 So. 108.

Under the provisions of § 5, art. 9, of the Constitution, "the legislature may . . . provide for . . . a tax on licenses," a statute may authorize a municipality to impose by ordinance license taxes, though such statute and the ordinances adopted under it and the licenses imposed may be inconsistent with other statutes covering the particular subject. Hardee v. Brown, 56 Fla. 377, 47 So. 834; Ferguson v. McDonald, 66 Fla. 494, 63 So. 915.

The Constitution of the state contains the following:

Section 2, Declaration of Rights: "All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security and benefit of the citizens, and they have the right to alter or amend the same whenever the public good may require it."

Section 24, Declaration of Rights: The "renunciation of rights" contained in the Constitution "shall not be construed to impair or deny others retained by the people."

Section 1, art. 3: "The legislative authority of this state shall be vested in a senate and a house of representatives."

Section 24, art. 3: "The legislature shall establish a uniform system of county and municipal government, which shall be applicable except in cases where local or special laws are provided by the legislature that may be inconsistent therewith."

Section 20, art. 3: "The legislature shall not pass special or local laws . . . regulating the jurisdiction and duties of any class of officers, except municipal officers, . . . regulating the practice of courts of justice, except municipal courts."

Section 8, art. 8: "The legislature shall have power to establish and to abolish municipalities, to provide for their government, to prescribe their jurisdiction and powers, and to alter or amend the same at any time. When any municipality shall be abolished, provision shall be made for the protection of its creditors."

Whether the first sentence of § 8, art. 8, above quoted, is a declaration of the common-law powers of the lawmaking body of a sovereign state or not, it is a specific definition in general and comprehensive terms of the powers of the legislature with reference to municipalities.

At common law the legislative authority L.R.A.1916D.

could empower a municipality to pass ordinances that had the force of law in their proper sphere; and this legislative authority is not curtailed by the provision of the Constitution vesting "the legislative authority of the state . . . in a senate and house of representatives."

In conferring upon municipalities appropriate quasi legislative powers for local governmental purposes, the legislature does not violate the implied principle of organic law that the legislature shall not delegate its general lawmaking power. See State v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 56 Fla. 617, text 634, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 639, 47 So. 969; State v. Westmoreland, 133 La. 1016, 63 So. 502; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 138; McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 124; Stoutenburgh v. Henrick, 129 U. S. 141, 32 L. ed. 637, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 256.

The section of the Constitution empowering the legislature "to establish and to abolish municipalities, to provide for their government, to prescribe their jurisdiction and powers, and to alter or amend the same at any time," does not prescribe the manner by which, or the instrumentalities through which, the legislature, in dealing with municipalities, shall "provide for their government" or "prescribe their jurisdiction and powers." In the absence of organic direction or limitation, the legislature may adopt any appropriate instrumentalities in discharging its duty "to provide for the government" of a municipality. Purely local regulations may as legally and more conveniently be provided through municipal governments, and liberal use of municipalities for local governmental purposes is clearly contemplated by the quoted provisions of the Constitution.

The express authority given to the legislature by the Constitution to "prescribe" the "powers" of municipalities, and "to provide for their government," is not subject to implied limitations that would curtail the real intent and purpose of the authority expressly conferred, as disclosed by a consideration of the language used and the subject-matter upon which it operates.

While, under the express authority "to provide for the government" of municipalities, and to "prescribe their jurisdiction and powers, and to alter or amend the same at any time," the legislature cannot delegate to a municipality its general lawmaking power for the state, nor confer a power that violates any other express provision of organic law, nor confer "powers" other than for municipal purposes, yet the legislature has a wide discretion in the government it may provide and in the powers it may prescribe for a municipality, and also in the means and instrumentalities it may use in providing the government and prescribing the powers, when organic law is not plainly violated. See Eckerson v. Des Moines, 137 Iowa, 452, 115 N. W. 177.

The exercise of the power conferred by the statute here considered does not change existing state laws or declare what the laws of the state shall be, except in so far as the law affects the particular municipality in its municipal affairs; and the specific and limited powers conferred by this particular statute upon the municipality cannot be said to be a delegation of the general law-making power of the legislature in plain violation of the Constitution. Certainly by giving this limited authority the legislature has not lost its control over every municipal power. See Straw v. Harris, 54 Or. 424, 103 Pac. 777; Chicago v. M. & M. Hotel Co. 248 Ill. 264, 93 N. E. 753. Under the Constitution the legislature may "alter or amend the same at any time."

A statute may be in whole or in part repealed or superseded or abrogated by implication of law as a result of the due enactment of a subsequent statute covering the same subject, or by the operation of a later statute upon the occurrence of a definitely specified contingent event.

If it is clear from its terms and purpose that the intent of a statute is that it shall supersede another statute upon a stated contingent event, the courts will give effect to such intent, when organic law is not thereby plainly violated, since the intent of the law is its vital force, and the province of the courts is to ascertain and effectuate the valid legislative purpose.

The statute expressly provides "that all laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed." This repeal of conflicting charter powers becomes operative upon the taking of the specifically designated action by the municipality for municipal purposes, under the limited authority expressly given by the statute. This is manifestly the legislative intent, and such intent is the vitality of the law. Thus, the statute amends the charter powers of the city, but it does not repeal or suspend the operation of particular features of the charter acts, except in the event that expressly authorized action is duly taken by the municipality that is in accord with this statute, but is in conflict with other charter acts. The authority conferred by the statute is for a municipal purpose, and is within the powers that the legislature could lawfully confer upon the municipality, viz., the creation, change, and duty of municipal officers and boards; the legislative powers and duties of the city council being expressly excluded.

Neither the Constitution nor the common L.R.A.1916D.

law defines the line of separation between the powers that shall be exercised directly by the legislature and those that may be indirectly exercised through delegated authority conferred upon municipal governmental agencies. Where the legislature has authority to provide a governmental regulation, and the organic law does not prescribe the manner of adopting or providing it, and the nature of the regulation does not require that it be afforded by direct legislative act, such regulation may be provided either directly by the legislature or indirectly by the legislative use of any appropriate instrumentality, where no provision or principle of organic law is thereby violated. If this rule is not recognized, many useful governmental regulations may be practically unattainable to the detriment of the public, when, in the language of the Constitution, the "government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the citizens." This salutary principle is observed with reference to administrative boards and officers, and it is specifically applicable to powers that may be conferred upon municipalities for local governmental purposes. Such a principle is particularly useful in our system, where the Constitution, in fixing the status and powers of municipalities, expressly authorizes the legislature "to provide for their government," and "to prescribe their jurisdiction and powers, and to alter or amend the same at any time," by "local or special laws" to meet the inherently varied local conditions and requirements that are particular to this state, in the interest of the public welfare.

The Constitution expressly provides the manner in which statutes shall be enacted by the legislature itself; but, in providing for legislative control of municipalities, the Constitution ordains, in general terms, that the legislature shall prescribe the "jurisdiction and powers" of municipalities and "provide for their government." While the legislature may itself enact all the laws required by a municipality, it certainly may delegate to the municipality power to enact ordinances not in conflict with the Constitution, that have the force of law within their proper sphere. In its discretion, the legislature may, by its own direct enactment or through the agency or municipal ordinances and regulations, prescribe and provide for the "numbers, powers, duties, terms of office, and the time and manner of election or appointment of any or all boards and officers of the city of Jacksonville;" and the legislature may itself provide how any and all boards and officers of the city may be abolished and new boards and officers created, or it may delegate this power to the municipality or its electors, without violating the organic law of the land. This being so, the fact that some of these regulations may be already directly prescribed by statute does not deprive the legislature of the right to alter or amend them; and it may do so through the medium of the municipality, by express authority duly given, where no provision of the Constitution is thereby plainly violated. By authorizing the municipality to adopt regulations pertaining to the creation and abolishment and powers and duties of municipal officers and boards that are in conflict with existing statutes, the legislature, in effect, expressly authorized municipal action within its province; and, when that authorized municipal action is duly taken, the existing statutory regulations in conflict therewith are, by force of the statute giving the authority, suspended or abrogated. This does not in reality amount to the repeal of a statute by municipal action; but the operation of a statute upon a particular subject may be suspended by the force and effect of another statute authorizing conflicting municipal action to be taken for a municipal purpose in accordance with express legislative authority given to that end.

Uniformity is not required in the character and number or in the powers and duties, of municipal officers; and it is entirely clear that the legislature may authorize a municipality to create and abolish its own municipal offices, and to define and change the powers and duties of its municipal officers. If the subject is already covered by the statute, the legislature may abrogate the statute and confer the stated authority upon the municipality. If the conflicting statutes are abrogated by force and operation of the statute conferring upon the municipality the power to create and regulate its own officers and boards, there is no obstacle to the exercise of the authority by the municipality. Such is the situation here. The statute complained of confers a limited power upon the municipality to regulate the character and number and the powers and duties of its administrative officers and boards for municipal purposes; and when that power is duly exercised within the limitations of the law, the conflicting statutes are superseded by the force and operation of the statute in conferring the power upon the municipality, and in expressly repealing all inconsistent statutory provisions.

The statute here involved is limited in its operation, is confined to municipal governmental regulations, and is not, beyond all reasonable doubt, in conflict with the principal of organic law which forbids a delegation of the general lawmaking power of the state. Nor does the statute in effect authorize a municipality to repeal a state law. See Munn v. Finger, 66 Fla. 572, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 631, 64 So. 271; Yazoo City v. Lightcap, 82 Miss. 148, 33 So. 949; Dobbin v. San Antonio, 2 Posey, Unrep. Cas. (Tex.) 708; St. Johnsbury v. Thompson, 59 Vt. 300, 59 Am. Rep. 731, 9 Atl. 571; San Luis Obispo v. Fitzgerald, 126 Cal. 279, 58 Pac. 699; Bearden v. Madison, 73 Ga. 184, 28 Cyc. 365 et seq; McQuillin Mun. Corp. §§ 643, 843; Plinkiewisch v. Portland R. Light & P. Co. 58 Or. 499, 115 Pac. 151; Smith, Mun. Corp. § 106; Dill. Mun. Corp. 69, 573.

The Constitution is the controlling law, and while, in appropriate proceedings properly taken, it may be the duty of the court to declare a legislative enactment to be inoperative in whole or in part, if it plainly violates the Constitution, yet, as under our system of government the lawmaking power of the legislature is subject only to the limitations contained in the state and Federal Constitutions, the court should, in deference to the legislature, take care to so interpret an enactment as to make it consistent with the Constitution, if it can be done upon any reasonable consideration of the legislative intent, as shown by a fair application of all the language used to the purpose designed to be accomplished by the enactment.

In State ex rel. Lamar v. Dillon, 42 Fla. 95, 28 So. 781, the portion of the ordinance condemned was in direct conflict with the prior statute on the subject, and not authorized by the later statute. Here the ordinance apparently accords with the statute authorizing its adoption.

In the cases of State ex rel. Mueller v. Thompson, 149 Wis. 488, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 339, 137 N. W. 20, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 774; State, Dextheimer, Prosecutor, v. Orange, 60 N. J. L. 111, 36 Atl. 706; Elliott v. Detroit, 121 Mich. 611, 84 N. W. 820, and other cases holding such authority to be a delegation of lawmaking power in violation of organic law, the decisions were apparently controlled by the restrictive provisions of the Constitution or by the unrestricted nature of the authority conferred. In this state uniformity of municipal government is not required, and the legislature has plenary powers in the premises. The ordinance is apparently in substantial accord with the statute, and it is not clearly void for uncertainty. The statute is not affected by the restraining of the first election thereunder at the time required by the act.

See State ex rel. Law v. Saxon, 25 Fla. 792, 6 So. 858. The discussion herein has reference to the particular statute as applied to a municipality under the present Constitution of this state.

The restraining order appealed from is reversed.

Schackelford, Ch. J., and Taylor, Cockrell, and Hocker, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Statutes conferring powers upon municipalities or counties in respect to their officers as a delegation of legislative power.

The present note is concerned with the authority which may be delegated by the legislature to a municipality or county over its officers without violating the constitutional restriction against a delegation of legislative power.

The right to confer upon a municipality an option as to whether or not it will adopt a law enacted by the legislature is a different question, although the adoption or rejection of such a law may affect the municipal officers. Consequently, cases of such a character have been excluded. Likewise, the right to confer upon a municipality power to redistrict its subdivisions has been excluded, although a redistricting may indirectly affect its officers.

As to the power of the legislature to delegate to a municipality authority to form or amend its charter, see note to State ex rel. Mueller v. Thompson, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 339.

Upon the general question of the constitutionality of a commission form of government for municipalities, see note to State ex rel. Hunt v. Tausick, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 802, and supplementary notes to State ex rel. Simpson v. Manakato, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 111, and Munn v. Finger, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 632.

Some constitutional provisions require the legislature to provide for certain offices. The legislature, under such a constitutional provision, cannot delegate to county supervisors the power to create an office included in the provision. Eldorado County v. Meiss (1893) 100 Cal. 274, 34 Pac. 716 (dictum); Los Angeles County v. Lopez (1894) 104 Cal. 257, 38 Pac. 42; People v. Wheeler (1902) 136 Cal. 655, 69 Pac. 435 (dictum), disapproving People v. Ferguson (1884) 65 Cal. 288, 4 Pac. 4, holding that the power to appoint a licensed tax collector implied from a statute empowering the board of supervisors of the several counties to levy and collect certain licenses was not in conflict with the constitutional provision requiring the legislature by general and uniform laws to provide for the election or appointment of the county officers, prescribe their duties, and fix their terms of L.R.A.1916D.

office. Nothing is said in the latter case of this being a valid delegation of power to the board of supervisors.

The legislature cannot delegate to a city the power to create police courts, under a Constitution giving to the legislature such power. Re Cloherty (1891) 2 Wash. 137, 27 Pac. 1064. The power conferred by such a constitutional provision upon the legislature to create additional inferior courts is not one of its original inherent powers as the supreme legislative body of the state, which can be delegated by it, but is a delegated power which must be exercised in the manner pointed out, and cannot be again delegated.

Without referring to any particular constitutional provision, a statute authorizing a municipal council to create new departments in the government, and to define their powers, was held illegal in Pittsburgh's Petition (1890) 138 Pa. 401, 21 Atl. 757, 759, 761, the court stating that the legislature must settle the system of government for each class of cities, and it must be the same for each and every member of each class. No city in any class can change the number or the distribution of powers among the departments into which its government is cast by the legislature.

An act conferring upon the common council of a city power to consolidate any two public offices of the city, or of any of its departments, and to enact that the duties of the offices so consolidated shall thereafter be performed by one and the same person, is an invalid attempt to delegate to municipalities powers which can be exercised only by the legislature itself. State, Dexheimer, Prosecutor, v. Orange (1897) 60 N. J. L. 111, 36 Atl. 706. It is stated by the court that, by the exercise of the powers conferred in the act, the common council can, not only consolidate any two public offices of the city, but they have power by ordinance to fix and determine the nature of the duties of the consolidated office, and to a certain extent to fix the length of the term for which the holder thereof shall be elected or appointed; that by the exercise of these powers the common council can change the whole scheme of government provided by the charter of its city, and, by a series of consolidations, concentrate most, if not all, of the functions of government in one and the same persons.

With reference to the number of officials, it has been held that the legislature cannot delegate to a county board the power to determine the number of municipal courts there shall be in the county, under a Constitution vesting in the legislature the exclusive power to create and establish courts. State ex rel. Williams v. Sawyer County (1909) 140 Wis. 634, 123 N. W. 248. The legislature in this case had passed a municipal court act and provided that the board of supervisors of any county may, by a majority vote of all its members, adopt it. So far as the act enabled the board of supervisors to adopt or reject the law for its county, it was held valid, but in so far as it went further and authorized the board to determine the number of municipal courts, it was held an invalid delegation of legislative power.

On the contrary, a provision in a statute empowering cities to frame their own charters, as authorized by a constitutional provision, that the cities so framing their charters shall fix the number of members of the board of education and their terms of office, and regulate the time and manner of their election, has been held not an invalid delegation of legislative power over the school system of the state. Cottrel v. Barker (1912) 34 Okla. 533, 126 Pac. 211.

And it has been held that the legislature may delegate to the board of county commissioners authority to increase the number of justices of the peace within their respective counties whenever the precinct of a justice increases to more than a stated number of inhabitants. Pueblo County v. Smith (1896) 22 Colo. 534, 33 L.R.A. 465, 45 Pac. 357. This decision is upon the theory, however, that whenever the prescribed conditions are made to appear in any precinct, it is the imperative duty of the board of county commissioners to appoint the additional officers therein prescribed.

A law enacting that whenever a county court shall be of opinion that the public service requires a greater number of justices or constables in any district than those specified in the Constitution, and shall so enter of record and designate the number of such additional officers, and give notice thereof, such L.R.A.1916D.

officers shall be elected, is not an unwarranted delegation of legislative power. Ex parte Bassitt (1894) 90 Va. 679, 19 S. E. 453. "There is here," says the court, "no delegation of legislative power, but the county courts are merely empowered to declare the event, so to speak, upon which the act is to take effect within their respective counties."

The right to authorize the appointment of municipal officers by the municipality has not been directly decided, but the court expressed an opinion in Nelson v. Troy (1895) 11 Wash. 435, 39 Pac. 974, that the legislature might delegate to the board of supervisors of a county authority to appoint deputies for the county officers and fix the compensation. But this appears to have been conceded in the case.

And it is stated in Re Cleveland (1889) 52 N. J. L. 188, 7 L.R.A. 431, 19 Atl. 17, 20 Atl. 317, with reference to an act concerning the government of cities which vested in the respective mayors of the cities the power to appoint the chief municipal officers, in substitution for the previously existing methods of appointment, that any legislative act which puts it within the power of any political district to exercise a function of local government, and which is a complete and perfect declaration of the legislative will, is not obnoxious to the charge that it delegates the law-making power. It does not appear, however, that the statute in this case was attacked directly upon this theory.

The right to define the duties of municipal officers may be delegated to the municipality. Thus, the legislature may delegate to a municipal council the power to prescribe the duty and fix the compensation of all officers and employees of the municipality, and require bonds with sureties for the performance of the duties of all officers and employees. State ex rel. Gentry v. Dodson (1909) 123 La. 903, 49 So. 635.

It is stated in Gould v. Baltimore (1913) 120 Md. 534, 87 Atl. 818, to be perfectly clear that, as the legislature has the right and power to change at any time the duties and compensations of constables, it can also delegate and confer upon a city the power to pass ordinances to accomplish the same purpose.

The legislature may confer upon a municipality power to confer on justices of the city jurisdiction over offenses against its ordinances. State ex rel. Dunlap v. Nohl (1902) 113 Wis. 15, 88 N. W. 1004. The act of the legislature created the justices of the peace and invested them with all jurisdiction belonging to such officers. The city elected from among the other city officers certain justices to enforce its ordinances. The court states that such an act is entirely local in its character; that it relates only to the peace and welfare of the community incorporated, and not of the state generally, and the corporation may properly be given power to legislate thereon.

The legislature may delegate to the board of trustees of a municipality authority to make the city treasurer ex officio city tax collector and license tax collector. Woodland v. Leech (1912) 20 Cal. App. 15, 127 Pac. 1040. This simply amounts to a grant of power to be exercised in the discretion of the trustees to relieve one municipal officer of a ministerial executive duty and transfer it to another. Even if it be regarded as a legislative attempt to confer authority upon the local lawmaking body to create the office of city tax collector, it does not seem to be obnoxious to any constitutional provision. The municipal government act in this case made the marshal collector of city licenses, but contained the provision that the board of trustees might make the city treasurer ex officio city tax collector and license tax collector.

And the municipality may be empowered to fix the compensation of its officers. State ex rel. Gentry v. Dodson (La.); Gould v. Baltimore (Md.); and Nelson v. Troy (Wash.) supra.

It was decided in Re Salary of Superior Ct. Judges (1914) 82 Wash. 623, 144 Pac. 929, that the legislature might delegate to the board of county commissioners of a county authority to increase the salary of the judges of the superior court to an amount not exceeding a named maximum. The court states: "But if we concede, as we must, that the legislature has power to authorize the board at its option to increase salaries at all, it is difficult to see why it may not authorize such board to fix the amount of such salaries between a minimum and a maximum amount."

The legislature may delegate to the county board authority to fix the fees to be allowed justices of the peace in certain cases before them. Ryan v. Outgamie County (1891) 80 Wis. 336, 50 N. W. 340; Wentworth v. Racine County (1898) 99 Wis. 26, 74 N. W. 551. So, the legislature may confer upon a city the power to fix the compensation of the members of its police force. Sullivan L.R.A.1916D.

v. Bridgeport (1909) 81 Conn. 660, 71 Atl. 906.

The legislature may delegate to the board of county commissioners the discretionary power of fixing the compensation of county officers other than themselves within certain prescribed limits fixed by the legislature. Stookey v. Nez Perces County (1899) 6 Idaho, 542, 57 Pac. 312. The Constitution of this state granted to the boards of county commissioners discretionary power with reference to the salary of the county attorney. This is stated to have shaped the public policy with reference to the question under consideration, the court saying that, this vesting of the discretionary power in the board of county commissioners having been indorsed by the people in the Constitution, and there being nothing in the Constitution prohibiting such a delegation of power, the delegation of power must be held valid. This decision was approved in Reynolds v. Oneida County (1899) 6 Idaho, 787, 59 Pac. 730.

A statute empowering municipalities to provide by ordinance that certain municipal officers shall receive in lieu of all fees allowed by law or ordinance a fixed salary, and providing further that no such officer shall receive any fees or any other compensation for his services, was held not open to the objection that it was a delegation of power on the theory that it could take effect only upon a vote of the city council, thus making a law of the state dependent upon the action of a municipality. Des Moines v. Hillis (1881) 55 Iowa, 643, 8 N. W. 638.

A provision in a statute fixing the compensation of a county superintendent at a per centum of state money disbursed by him, that if the county board of education should by majority vote require the full time of the county superintendent in the discharge of the duties of his office, the county board shall fix his compensation on a salary basis within certain limits and terms of payment, is not a delegation of legislative power to the county board. McNiell v. Sparkman (1913) 184 Ala. 96, 63 So. 977. The court states that by the enactment of the law in question the legislature has not delegated any part of that constitutional and prerogative power which is peculiarly its own. It has not delegated any power strictly and exclusively legislative. It has committed to the discretion of the representative county board certain matters of detail in the administration in the educational system in the county.

Some constitutional provisions require the legislature to fix the compensation of certain officers.

Under such a constitutional provision the legislature cannot delegate the power. The board of supervisors of a county cannot be empowered to fix the salaries of officers coming within such a provision. People ex rel. Atkinson v. Johnson (1892) 95 Cal. 471, 31 Pac. 611; Doherty v. Ransom County (1895) 5 N. D. 1, 63 N. W. 148.

The legislature has no power, after fixing the salaries of county clerks and providing that each clerk should pay his own deputy, to authorize the boards of supervisors to allow one or more deputies at the expense of the county, if in their opinion the salary provided is insufficient. Dougherty v. Austin (1892) 94 Cal. 601, 16 L.R.A. 161, 28 Pac. 834, 29 Pac. 1092.

But it has been held under such a constitutional provision, where a maximum is prescribed by the legislature, the county commissioner may be empowered to fix the compensation within this maximum. Staples v. Llano County (1894) 9 Tex. Civ. App. 201, 28 S. W. 569, holding that the legislature may empower the commissioners to fix the commission to be received by the county treasurer on moneys received and disbursed by him within a fixed maximum.

And in Brookings County v. Murphy (1909) 23 S. D. 311, 121 N. W. 793, a statutory provision fixing the compensation of registrars of deeds and county auditors at a percentage of the value of the property in their respective counties, but containing a proviso that it shall not in any event exceed $1,200 per annum, and a second proviso that in counties over a certain population the board of county commissioners may in their discretion allow a salary not exceeding $1,500 per annum to the county auditor, was sustained, the court stating that, while the statute does not prescribe the precise number of dollars which shall be paid in compensation to the auditor, it does prescribe a definite rule by which compensation shall be determined and allowed.

Deputies of officers have been held not officers within the meaning of such a constitutional provision. Accordingly, the right to delegate authority with reference to deputies is not limited thereby. Nelson v. Troy (1895) 11 Wash. 435, 39 Pac. 974.

On the same theory it was held to be within the power of the legislature to direct the county commissioners to fix the sum to be paid deputies, assistants, book-keepers, clerks, and other employees of an officer of the county, as compensation, under a constitutional provision requiring the general assembly to fix the term of office and compensation of all officers. Theobald v. State (1907) 30 Ohio C. C. 414.

And in Bennett v. State (1915) — Okla. —, 150 Pac. 198, deputies were held not to be officers. Consequently, an act vesting the board of county commissioners with authority to fix their salaries was held not a delegation of legislative power fixed by the constitutional provision that, until otherwise provided by law, the terms, duties, powers, qualifications, and salary and compensation of all county and township "officers" not otherwise provided by this Constitution shall be as now provided by the laws of the territory of Oklahoma for like-named officers.

Such a constitutional provision does not apply to officers created by the legislature under a constitutional provision authorizing the appointment of sealers of weights and measures, who exercise a part of the police powers of the state. Consequently, the legislature may delegate to the board of supervisors of a county or city and county the duty of fixing the salaries of such officers instead of doing so itself. Scott v. Boyle (1912) 164 Cal. 321, 128 Pac. 941.

W. A. E.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

KENTLAND COAL & COKE COMPANY

et al.

v.

THOMAS KEEN et al.

(168 Ky. 836, 183 S. W. 247.)

Deed — condition subsequent — prohibition of sale.

1. A provision in a deed that the grantee L.R.A.1916D.

is not to sell the land in the lifetime of the grantor is a condition subsequent.

For other cases, see Covenants and Conditions, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — validity.

2. A condition subsequent in a deed of real estate prohibiting the grantee from selling the property during the lifetime of the grantor is valid.

Note. — As to validity and effect of provision in deed that the grantee shall not sell in the lifetime of the grantor, see annotation following this case, post, 930.

For other cases, see Covenants and Conditions, II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — breach of condition — waiver.

3. Failure of a grantor who has deeded land on condition that it shall not be sold during his lifetime to proceed for a forfeiture on condition broken waives the forfeiture.

For other cases, see Covenants and Conditions, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Incompetent person — deed — right to defeat.

4. A deed before inquisition found by one afterwards adjudged incompetent cannot be defeated by the grantor or his heirs in the hands of a subsequent purchaser without notice, in due course, and for a valuable consideration.

For other cases, see Incompetent Persons, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 7, 1916.)

CROSS APPEALS from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pike County in a suit for the cancelation of certain deeds, defendants appealing from the judgment in plaintiffs' favor, and plaintiffs' appealing from the portion of the judgment directing them to pay to grantee Justice the consideration paid by him to their father for certain land. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. F. W. Stowers for plaintiffs.

Messrs. Auxler, Harman, & Francis and Hager & Stewart, for defendants:

Plaintiffs were estopped, under the circumstances proven in this case, to claim the land sold and deeded by Keen to Justice, or to ask in any way to invalidate the deed or defeat the title of Justice and the subsequent purchasers thereof.

Pond Creek Coal Co. v. Runyan, 161 Ky. 64, 170 S. W. 501; Foreman v. Lloyd, 156 Ky. 772, 162 S. W. 83; Malone v. Mark, 6 Ky. Opin. 177; Malone v. Barrell, 6 Ky. Opin. 502; Simmons v. Simmons, 150 Ky. 85, 150 S. W. 59; Fields v. Napier, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 240, 80 S. W. 1110; Poindexter v. Rawlings, 106 Tenn. 97, 82 Am. St. Rep. 869, 59 S. W. 766; Beasley v. Phillips, 20 Ind. App. 182, 50 N. E. 488.

Mr. J. S. Cline also for defendants.

Thomas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The purpose of this suit, which was brought in the court below by appellees, being the children and heirs at law of George W. Keen, is to obtain a cancelation of the deeds by which appellants Kentland Coal & Coke Company and G. E. Rowe, who were defendants below, hold title to the land in dispute, and to have the court adjudge them to be the owners of the tract of land containing 208 acres.

The facts are these: On the 17th day of December, 1880, Harper Keen, the father of George W. Keen, conveyed the fee simple title to the land to the latter, but in that deed there was inserted this clause: "And said George Keen is not to sell this land in my (Harper Keen's) lifetime." On January 9, 1892, and while Harper Keen was still living, George W. Keen and his wife executed an absolute deed to the land to one W. H. Justice, and by mesne conveyances, consisting of some eight or nine, the appellant G. E. Rowe became the owner of the surface of the land, and the appellant Kentland Coal & Coke Company became the owner of the mineral under the land and all the mineral rights incident thereto, and were such at the time this suit was filed.

The relief is sought upon the two grounds as alleged, that: (1) The deed executed by George W. Keen to W. H. Justice on January 9, 1892, was, because of the prohibitive clause above, absolutely void at the time it was executed, and was wholly ineffectual to convey any kind of title or interest to the grantee Justice, and as a consequence all subsequent conveyances were likewise null and void; (2) that the father of appellees, George W. Keen, at the time he executed the deed to Justice, was non compos, and wholly disabled mentally from realizing the import of his act, and therefore his deed was ineffectual to pass the title to the land, it being claimed that his grantee had knowledge of his mental condition. Upon a submission of the cause the trial court sustained the first contention made by appellees, and not only canceled the deeds of appellants, but also canceled all intervening deeds, although none of the parties to them were parties to the suit. It also by its judgment ordered the appellees, before taking possession of the land, to pay to W. H. Justice the consideration which he had paid their father for the land, and adjudged it to be a lien thereon, all of which was done without Justice being made a party, or without anyone asking that it be done. Complaining of this judgment, the defendants prosecute this appeal, and appellees have prayed a cross appeal from that portion of the judgment directing them to pay Justice the consideration which he paid to their father.

A consideration of the first question raised by the petition involves an inquiry into the nature, effect, and scope of the inserted clause in the deed from Harper Keen to his son, George W. Keen, and also, what would be the effect if the restraint upon alienation attempted to be imposed by it should be violated by the grantee during the lifetime of the grantor? That this clause creates what is known in the law of real estate conveyances as a condition subsequent there can be no doubt. This is so manifest as to be at once accepted without the citation of authorities. It is well known that this character of condition is disfavored in the law because its tendency is towards an impairment of the fee and in derogation thereof; consequently, the common law, as well as modern courts, have construed such stipulations, wherever the language used was sufficiently ambiguous to justify it, as covenants between the grantor and the grantee, and not as conditions subsequent. Devlin, Deeds, §§ 970b, 970c, and the many cases referred to in the notes thereto. However, where the language used is plain and unambiguous, and the intent of the grantor clear, it will be construed to be a condition subsequent. The rule, as stated by the author of the work on Deeds, supra, in § 970d, is: "The general rule undoubtedly is that courts will incline to construe the language, wherever it is possible to do so, into a covenant rather than a condition. Still, if it is the clear intention of the parties to create an estate upon condition subsequent, the courts must give effect to the intention of the parties."

Restraints upon alienation imposed by conditions subsequent may be absolute or partial, and wherever absolute, unless there is a limitation over of the fee after breach, they are void. Co. Litt, § 360; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. page 867; Devlin, Deeds, § 965; Lawson v. Lightfoot, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 217, 84 S. W. 739; Harkness v. Lisle, 132 Ky. 767, 117 S. W. 264; Stewart v. Brady, 3 Bush, 623; Stewart v. Barrow, 7 Bush, 368; Rice v. Hall, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 814, 42 S. W. 99; Kean v. Kean, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 956, 18 S. W. 1032, 19 S. W. 184; Johnson v. Dumeyer, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2243, 66 S. W. 1025; Morton v. Morton, 120 Ky. 251, 85 S. W. 1188. This court, however, has upheld the validity of conditions subsequent imposing a partial restraint upon alienation perhaps to a greater extent than any other state in the Union. This is shown by the opinion of this court in the case of Lawson v. Lightfoot, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 217, 84 S. W. 739, from which we quote as follows: "It must be conceded that the great weight of authority outside of Kentucky is to the effect that where the fee simple title to real estate passes under a deed or will, any restraint attempted to be imposed by the instrument upon its alienation by the grantee or devisee is to be treated as void, and such is clearly the rule announced by Mr. Gray in his excellent work on 'Restraints on Alienation.' But the contrary view has been adopted by this court in repeated decisions, beginning with Stewart v. Brady, 3 Bush, 623, and ending with Wallace v. Smith, 43 Ky. 263, 68 S. W. 131 (Stewart v. Barrow, 7 Bush, 368; Rice v. Hall, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 814, 42 S. W. 99; Kean v. Kean, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 956, 18 S. W. 1032, 19 S. W. 184; Johnson v. Dumeyer, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2243, 66 S. W. 1025.) In other words, the accepted doctrine in this state is that restraints upon alienation may be imposed for a reasonable period. This court has, however, never fixed a limit to such restraint, but in Stewart v. Brady, 3 Bush, 623, it was held that a devise of land to the testator's daughter with the limitation that it should not be disposed of by her until she became thirty-five years of age was reasonable; and in Kean v. Kean, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 956, 18 S. W. 1032, 19 S. W. 184, it was held that a restriction accompanying a devise of real estate to a son of the testator, that he should not have the power to dispose of it until he became twenty-eight years of age, was good. If such a restriction may be imposed for the periods indicated by the cases supra, why may it not endure for a longer time, or, as contemplated by the testator in this case, during the life of his widow, the tenant for life of the real estate, the alienation of which is attempted to be restricted?"

This case was followed by that of Harkness v. Lisle, 132 Ky. 767, 117 S. W. 264, in which the Kentucky doctrine of upholding a partial restraint upon alienation as imposed by the conditions subsequent was upheld to the extent that the limit upon such partial restraint might be for a period during the life of the grantor, or, perhaps, of some third person, but denied the restraint to be extended to the life of the grantee or devisee. The language of this court in so holding is as follows: "Here the testator attempted to impose a restraint upon alienation, not for a specified period of time, nor until the devisee arrived at a certain age, but during the entire lifetime of the devisee. The general rule is that the right of alienation is an inherent and inseparable quality of every vested fee simple estate. To hold that alienation could be restrained during the lifetime of the fee simple holder would be to deprive the fee of all its essential qualities. As said by Littleton: 'If such a condition be good, then the condition should oust him of all power which the law gives him, which should be against reason.' While bound by the former adjudication of this court to adhere to the doctrine that a limitation for a reasonable length of time is valid, we have no hesitation in saying that the limitation attempted to be imposed by the will in question is unreasonable. A testator cannot devise a fee, and then destroy it entirely. We therefore conclude that clause 15 of the will is invalid."

See also Chappell v. Frick Co. 166 Ky. 311, 179 S. W. 203.

It will be seen, therefore, that the settled doctrine in this state is to the effect that the clause restraining the right of George W. Keen is a condition subsequent, and this restraint, being limited by the life of the grantor, in this state, is valid.

What, then, are the rights of the parties if this restraint is violated, or condition broken during the lifetime of the grantor, and he at no time made any effort to re-enter after condition broken, or to take any steps to have a forfeiture declared? A proper solution of this question is dependent upon the still further one as to who can take advantage of a broken condition subsequent. There is no room for dispute in cases where there is a limitation over after condition broken. Manifestly in such cases the person to whom the estate is made by the limitation over, or his heirs, would be the proper ones to re-enter or proceed for a forfeiture. In the instant case there is no limitation over. In such cases the grantor in the deed containing the limitation, or his heirs, are the only ones who can take advantage of a breach. This rule is laid down by all authors upon the subject, and is expressed by the author of the works on Deeds, supra, in § 9679, as follows: "No one can take advantage of a breach of a condition subsequent but the grantor or his heirs. If they do not take steps to enforce a forfeiture of the estate on the ground of a breach of the condition, the title remains unimpaired in the grantee."

And again the rule is stated in 13 Cyc. p. 706, as follows: "A breach of condition subsequent in a deed does not, ipso facto, operate to determine and revest the estate, but the same remains in the grantee, subject to be defeated only by some sufficient act at the election of the grantor or his heirs. So a provision that the title shall revert is not self-executing where the title passes absolutely by the deed and the clause is only a covenant. Again, where a purchase is made under color of lawful authority and at a time when the law was presumptively valid, it must be regarded as having been lawfully made, and the fact that the law is subsequently declared unconstitutional, thereby preventing performance, does not, ipso facto, revest title in the grantor under a condition to that effect; the failure to perform merely making the deed voidable."

The text is fortified by many authorities from various states of the Union, including the Kentucky case of Kenner v. Ameri- L.R.A.1916D.

can Contr. Co. 9 Bush, 206. In that case Kenner conveyed to the railroad company a right of way over his farm for the purpose of constructing a railroad, but provided that if the people of Christian county should subsequently "vote a tax for the building or completion of said road, then this right of way to be null and void."

The people of the county did subsequently vote a tax for that purpose, but in the meantime Kenner had died. He lived, however, a number of years after executing the deed, during which time the road was constructed, and three years after the voting of the tax the heirs of Kenner, including his widow, brought the suit to recover damages from the railroad company, charging that the happening of the event, which was the voting of the taxes, rendered the conveyance void, ipso facto, and converted the occupancy of the right of way by the railroad company into a trespass, and it was sought to be made to respond in damages for this supposed trespass. The plaintiffs failed in the trial court, and that judgment was affirmed by this court. In declaring the effect of a breach of a condition subsequent, as well as what is requisite to complete the forfeiture, this court in that opinion said: "It is insisted by counsel for appellee that this action cannot be maintained unless there was an entry upon the premises by either the grantor or his heirs after the condition broken. The effect of a subsequent condition is either to enlarge or defeat an estate already created; or, in the language of Chancellor Kent: 'Such conditions operate to defeat estates already created, and there must be an actual entry in order to defeat the livery made on the creation of the particular estate; and, although there is a breach of the condition, it does not defeat the estate until an entry is made by the grantor or his heirs.' 4 Kent, Com. 159. 'Regularly, where a man will take advantage of a condition, if he may enter, he must enter, for an estate of freehold or inheritance will not cease without entry or claim.' 1 Shep. Touch. p. 153. 'Where an estate is upon condition in deed, and to be void provided the grantee goes to York, the law permits the estate to continue beyond the time when the contingency happens, unless either the grantor or his heirs make an entry or claim in order to avoid the estate.' 2 Bl. Com. p. 155. The doctrine is well settled at common law that no freehold or fee simple estate can be destroyed by the breach or non-performance of a condition subsequent, unless there is an entry by the grantor or his heirs after the breach, or some claim equivalent to it."

That a deed made in violation of the restraint upon alienation found in the condition subsequent is voidable and not void in the absence of a limitation over is recognized by all of the text writers, and, so far as we are able to learn, all the courts of last resort in this country. It is stated in 13 Cyc. p. 711, as follows: "The grantor may elect to re-enter for breach or non-performance of the conditions annexed to his deed. Upon the breach or nonperformance of a condition annexed to the grant of a freehold estate, the title conveyed is not void, but is only voidable by the act of the grantor or his heir, who must take advantage of the condition and repossess himself of the estate by actual re-entry, or by some act equivalent thereto, and manifesting an intent to terminate the estate. This rule applies even though the land is expressly conditioned to revert upon breach or nonperformance of the condition. But ejectment may be maintained without previous entry, demand, or notice. And re-entry is unnecessary where the grantor or his heirs retain possession, but such party must manifest an intent to hold possession."

According to some of the authorities to which we have referred herein, the right of re-entry, or to proceed for a forfeiture, must be exercised by the person in whom it lies within a reasonable time after the breach, and certainly must it be exercised within the lifetime of the one who possesses the right when the limit of the restraint imposed by the condition is measured by his life. The right of such a one under such conditions to insist on the breach is not an estate, but only a personal privilege to reclaim the land at any time after breach within the time limiting the restraint. If it is not exercised within such time, the right is gone, and the title becomes absolute in those to whom the conveyance was made.

We have found no decision in conflict with these views, except two comparatively recent cases in this court, wherein the opinions seem to hold that the deed executed in breach of the partial restraint is absolutely void and conveys no title whatever, and is not effectual for any purpose, these cases being Frazier v. Combs, 140 Ky. 77, 130 S. W. 812, and Pond Creek Coal Co. v. Runyan, 161 Ky. 64, 170 S. W. 501. The first case mentioned was decided on September 28, 1910, and the other one was decided on November 17, 1914. The deed involved in the Frazier Case was not so absolute in its nature as the one involved in the instant case; the clause considered in that case being as follows: "Conditioned that the party of the first part reserves unto himself the full control of the said property during his natural life and all the rents, profits, and proceeds thereof that are necessary for maintaining the party of the first part during his life, and conditioned further that the party of the second part shall not have power to sell, grant, or convey said lands during the life of the party of the first part, but shall, after the death of the party of the first part, be seised of an indefeasible title to the lands herein described forever."

It will be observed that the grantor in that deed expressly reserved unto himself the full control of the property during his natural life, which was done for his maintenance, and in the subsequent part of the clause it was expressly stated that the grantee should not be seised of an absolute fee until after the death of the grantor. These differences might be held to inject different features in that deed from those in the one we now have under consideration. But, however that may be, the opinion proceeds upon the idea that the attempted conveyance constituting the breach was absolutely void, and that the right to insist upon the forfeiture survived to the children of the grantee (who committed the breach), and permitted them to maintain an action to recover the land from a remote grantee.

In the Runyan Case, the suit was brought by the grantor in the deed containing the restriction after the breach of the condition and, of course, during his lifetime, the children of the grantee in that deed becoming parties to the suit by intervening petition. In disposing of the question presented this court therein said: "Appellant contends that the effect of this action is to claim a forfeiture, and that forfeitures are not favored in law. His statement of the law is correct, but we do not understand the question is involved here. Appellant never had any interest in this land to forfeit. One may forfeit a right which at one time he was legally entitled to maintain, but this deed from Jacob Runyan to Bright was void because in direct conflict with Jacob's right to sell, and therefore no claimant thereunder ever acquired any right. If no rights were acquired, there were none to forfeit or surrender."

It will be seen that in these two cases the rule is stated that the deed executed in violation of the condition is void instead of voidable, being directly in conflict with the rule as stated by the authorities to which we have referred. In doing this we are constrained to believe that this court, in the two opinions mentioned, unintentionally departed from the universal rule upon the subject. We fully appreciate the doctrine and the office of the maxim, stare decisis. An adherence to it is necessary to preserve the uniformity of the law; and, where the questions determined by the earlier decisions, in their origin, were doubtful, or were not so far-reaching as to affect the rules governing the acquisition and transmission of real property, the courts should, and do, apply it, but the rule is not so strictly observed where the questioned decision is of recent utterance, nor is the maxim itself always imperative or necessarily binding. 11 Cyc. 745; Montgomery County Fiscal Ct. v. Trimble, 104 Ky. 629, 42 L.R.A. 738, 47 S. W. 773. In the volume of Cyc., supra, 749, the circumstances governing the application or non-application of the maxim are stated thus: "Although the rule of stare decisis is entitled to great weight, and is adhered to in most courts, yet it is not followed to the exclusion in all cases of a departure therefrom, and it is a doctrine, generally recognized, that the rule will not be invoked to sustain and perpetuate a principle of law which is established by a series of decisions clearly erroneous, unless property complications have resulted therefrom and a reversal would result in greater injury and injustice than would ensue by following the rule. But the rule should not be departed from except on the fullest conviction that such an error has been committed."

See also as bearing upon the point, Pratt v. Breckenridge, 112 Ky. 1, 65 S. W. 136, 66 S. W. 405; Tribble v. Taul, 7 T. B. Mon. 456; South v. Thomas, 7 T. B. Mon. 59.

The limitations of the binding force of the maxim are well stated by the supreme court of Colorado in the case of Calhoun Gold Min. Co. v. Ajax Gold Min. Co. 27 Colo. 1, 50 L.R.A. 209, 83 Am. St. Rep. 17, 59 Pac. 607, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 192, as follows: "We understand, generally, that when a decision has established a settled rule of property, upon which rights are predicated (and especially those relating to real estate), the law will be adhered to by the court announcing it and those bound to follow its adjudications, even if erroneous (Black, Interpretation of Laws, § 152), but this rule is not inflexible. Courts are not bound to perpetuate errors merely upon the ground that a previous erroneous decision has been rendered on a given question. If it is wrong, it should not be continued, unless it has been so long the rule of action, and relied upon to such an extent, that greater injustice and injury will result by a reversal, though wrong, than to observe and follow it. Ibid, Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 316; Boon v. Bowers, 30 Miss. 246, 64 Am. Dec. 159."

As we have seen, the rule concerning the nature of conditions subsequent in conveyance of real property, as well as the one governing the rights of the parties upon breach of the condition, are each well rooted and anchored in the law, beginning with the earliest writers upon the subject, and followed without dissent, by their successors, and by practically, if not, all courts of last resort, including our own. These rules are bottomed upon sound reasoning, and are a part of the common law of England and this country. Property has been acquired and transferred for more than a century on the faith of their continued existence. To depart from them now would result in great confusion, as well as to mar the symmetry of the law. Such a course is not enjoined upon us by the doctrine of the maxim under consideration, although its application to conditions for which it had its origin and to meet which it was first invoked, is fully recognized and appreciated by us. Entertaining these views we are constrained to, and do, hereby overrule the two cases referred to in so far as they hold that the character of deed here involved is void, and in so far as they vest a right of action in the heirs of the grantee for a breach committed by him, whereby his estate is defeated, these cases being Frazier v. Combs, 140 Ky. 77, 130 S. W. 812; Pond Creek Coal Co. v. Runyan, 161 Ky. 64, 170 S. W. 501.

It therefore results that the deed executed by George W. Keen to W. H. Justice was not void, but voidable, and, it not having been avoided by any act or proceeding of Harper Keen during his lifetime, the title conveyed by it becomes absolute, nothing else preventing.

We come now to a consideration of the second claim of the appellees, it being the alleged unsoundness of mind of George W. Keen at the time he sold the land to Justice. It will be remembered that this deed was made on the 9th of January, 1902. With the consideration paid him, George Keen purchased other land, upon which he moved and resided until his death in March, 1912, more than twenty years from the time the deed to Justice was executed. He is shown by the testimony to have been a man of irritable temper, and sometimes in fits of anger he would act abnormally. He operated the farm upon which he lived and passed in and out before his neighbors and acquaintances and engaged in trades and transactions such as a man of his circumstances ordinarily does, and but few, if any, persons noticed anything in his actions or condition indicating feebleness of mind until about the year 1904, when from some cause he attempted to commit suicide by cutting his throat. It is shown that he had frequent quarrels with his family, and entertained a great dislike for those supposed to be his enemies. Some two or three years after the effort to commit suicide he was placed in the insane asylum, but what the proof showed upon that trial we are not informed, nor is a copy of the judgment rendered at the inquisition placed in the record. The rule is that, although one's mind may be impaired by anger or other causes temporarily, still he may at other times possess sufficient mind to make a valid contract, including a sale of realty, and if the contract in question was made before inquisition, the presumption is that it is valid; and, when made under such circumstances, an innocent party, who in due course and for a valuable consideration acquires the title, does so free from the right of the grantor or his heirs to defeat it; the deed, when made before inquisition, being voidable, and not void. 22 Cyc. 1171; Breckenridge v. Ormsby, 1 J. J. Marsh. 236, 19 Am. Dec. 71; Arnett v. Owens, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1409, 65 S. W. 151.

The evidence does not, by any means, convince us that George W. Keen did not have mind sufficient to execute the deed on January 9, 1892; but, if we are mistaken in this, there is an utter failure to show by any character of testimony that the appellants or their vendors had any knowledge as to his mental condition at that time. Moreover, there was no effort in this case to return, or offer to return, the consideration which George W. Keen received for the land, so that in no view of the case can we find any ground upon which the judgment may be upheld. As the judgment now stands, the appellees are ordered to pay to W. H. Justice the consideration which he paid their father for the land, and which is questioned by the cross appeal.

It results that the judgment should be, and is, reversed on the appeal and on the cross appeal, with directions to set it aside and to dismiss the petition.

Annotation—Validity and effect of provision in deed that the grantee shall not sell in the lifetime of the grantor.

Generally, as to validity of restraints on the alienation of a fee simple during a limited time, see the note to Latimer v. Waddell, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 668.

As is indicated in the note in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 668, there is much to be said for the theory that any upholding of restraints on alienation for a limited period was originally based on dicta. However, there are cases sustaining such restraints, and in Canada and Kentucky, at least, the doctrine has found considerable countenance; and the approval of the restraint in KENTLAND COAL & COKE CO. v. KEEN, ante, 924, is supported by the local authorities.

There are comparatively few cases involving deeds containing a provision that the grantee shall not sell in the lifetime of the grantor.

Frazier v. Combs (1910) 140 Ky. 77, 130 S. W. 812, is sufficiently dealt with in the opinion in KENTLAND COAL & COKE CO. v. KEEN.

In Pond Creek Coal Co. v. Runyan (1914) 161 Ky. 64, 170 S. W. 501, overruled in part in the principal case, the deed in question was by Asa Runyan and wife to their son and his wife, and contained these clauses: "And Jacob Runyan and Sallie, the party second, is bound not to sell said land during said Asa H. Runyan lifetime without his consent." "The parties of the second part is hereby bound to maintain the said Asa H. Runyan and Sarah Runyan, his wife, they themselves personally. If called on during their natural lives. If they become unable to maintain themselves."

Perhaps the best known of the cases on the subject is M'Williams v. Nisly (1816) 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 507, 7 Am. Dec. 654. In that case Gass and wife made a deed of land to their son-in-law M'Williams in consideration of natural love and affection and 5s., conveying the fee simple, but M'Williams was not to sell the estate in the lifetime of Gass, unless Gass sold the land on which he himself then lived; but if M'Williams should die, living Gass, and before Gass had sold the land on which he lived, in such case he was to leave the estate to his wife, Mary, the daughter of Gass, or to the lawful issue of her body. On the contrary, if Gass should sell the land on which he lived during the life of M'Williams, or if he should die and M'Williams survive him, in either of those cases, M'Williams "is at free liberty to bequeath or sell and convey as he chooses." It turned out that Gass sold about 168 acres (out of about 444 acres) of the land upon which he lived, during the life of M'Williams, but retained his dwelling house and the remainder of his land, after which M'Williams, during the life of Gass, sold to the defendants, or those under whom they claimed, the whole of the estate conveyed to him by Gass, amounting to about 150 acres. Afterwards Gass died, and M'Williams survived him, and after the death of M'Williams his surviving issue brought ejectment for the land and were defeated. Tilghman, Ch. J., seems to have approved of the restriction, but he says: "In the present case, the legal estate being conveyed to James M'Williams, who accepted it on the terms mentioned in the deed, such acceptance may be construed as a covenant by him to stand seised to such uses as appear to be intended in favor of his wife and children." Gibson, J., said: "It is unnecessary to consider whether, as a condition, this restriction would be totally void as being against the policy of the common law, as it is very clear that if the intention of the grantor cannot take effect under this instrument as a conveyance at common law, it may as a conveyance to uses." Both decided that M'Williams's children were estopped to deny their father's deed, and that M'Williams, although selling when he had no power, afterwards became the absolute owner. Christiancy, J., in referring to this case in Mandlebaum v. McDonell (1874) 29 Mich. 78, 18 Am. Rep. 61, says inter alia: "On a careful examination, I think it is stating the case rather strongly to say that the court judicially decided the restriction to be valid. Tilghman, J., does clearly express that opinion, but in substance his conclusion is that, whether good or not, the heirs were estopped, and the case was clear upon that point. Gibson, J., as I understand him, does not expressly hold the restriction good, but the fair result of his opinion is that, assuming it to be good, still the heirs were estopped, and the case was clear upon that point. The last is clearly the real ground of the decision, and, whether right or wrong, it is quite manifest neither of the judges considered the other question as necessary to the decision upon that point, nor therefore upon the case. But so far as it may be said to have treated the restrictions as valid, it was put upon the ground that the acceptance of the deed was equivalent to a covenant to stand seised 'to such uses as appear to have been intended in favor of his wife and children.' And if Gibson, J., can be said to have sustained the condition as good at all, it was, I think, upon this ground only, and it seems to me to be impliedly admitted by the opinions, when taken together, that such a restriction would not be good in common-law conveyances."

In Jennings v. O'Brien (1877) 47 Iowa, 392, where a father conveyed real estate to his son in consideration of $1, on con-L.R.A.1916D.

dition that the said real estate should not be sold or in any manner disposed of during the lifetime of the father, after the father's death the court, in considering whether the land was burdened with any obligation to support the grantor or his wife, found that the deed was intended to convey and did convey the "absolute title," but did not comment on the question whether the restriction was good or not.

In Gallaher v. Herbert (1886) 117 Ill. 160, 7 N. E. 511, a deed was made by a father to his son in consideration of love and affection, $1, the future payment of $200 yearly during the father's life, "and the further consideration that the said party of the second part shall not, during the lifetime of the said party of the first part, bargain, sell, and convey part of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments hereinafter mentioned," the son waiving and releasing any rights as son and heir to his father's estate real and personal. The court construed the deed as giving a lien for the $200 per year, and not as creating a condition subsequent.

In Cox v. Combs (1908) 51 Tex. Civ. App. 346, 111 S. W. 1069, it was held that a covenant, and not a condition, was created by a deed providing, after the description, "Conditioned that the said H. L. Cox shall well and truly perform all of the agreements and obligations and undertakings herein mentioned, the title to the above-described premises to become absolutely in the said H. L. Cox at my death, said conditions above mentioned herein having been by him, the said H. L. Cox, fulfilled." The consideration recited is services rendered and to be rendered by Cox, in this: That he and his family are to occupy the premises, and Combs is to occupy a part of the same, and Cox is to furnish him with a room and board free of charge until his death. The property is not to be encumbered any further than the same is encumbered, until Combs's death, nor until then is the same to be sold or given away. Cox is to assume the payment of a certain mortgage on the property, and pay it off at its maturity, but by an instrument subsequently executed Cox is relieved from the condition of paying off this mortgage at its maturity, and is required only to pay off and discharge the same, so that the property shall not be subjected to sale therefor.

In Chappell v. Chappell (1909) — Ky. —, 119 S. W. 218, it was held that a life estate with power to cut timber was retained by a deed by a man and wife to their son, then about thirteen years of age, reciting the consideration of love and affection, and providing that the grantors "retain a right to live on said land and use the same as they wish their lifetime; the said party (John Chappell) is not to sell or convey the above land to anyone except the heirs of Reuben Chappell and Sarah M. Chappell. To have and to hold the same with all appurtenances thereon unto the party of the second part, his heirs and assigns forever, with covenant of general warranty."

The restraining provision was held bad, and a mortgage by the grantee to a third party without any notice to the grantors held good, where the deed provided: "The said J. B. Galloway and wife, Alice L. Galloway, retaining for themselves and their heirs and assigns the right to repurchase said land when sold, the said Jefferson Evans conveying a title for said land, either by deed or mortgage, to any person without first giving J. B. Galloway and wife and their heirs and assigns the privilege of repurchasing the same, renders this deed null and void, otherwise to remain in full force." Hardy v. Galloway (1892) 111 N. C. 519, 32 Am. St. Rep. 828, 15 S. E. 890.

So, in Murray v. Green (1883) 64 Cal. 363, 28 Pac. 118, it was held that the attempted restraint on alienation was void where a wife and husband conveyed land to McLeran, one half in trust for the wife and the other one half to have and to hold to the proper use and behoof of the grantee, his heirs and assigns, subject, however, to the provisions thereafter inserted, viz., "Provided, however, that the said Thomas G. McLeran shall not have power or authority to sell, convey, or in anywise to dispose of, charge, or encumber any part or portion of said property, land, tenements, or hereditaments hereinbefore mentioned and conveyed to him, whether the same be that moiety conveyed to him for his own use or that moiety conveyed to him in trust for the use and benefit of the said Mary Ann; nor shall he have any authority to make or deliver any lease, leases, or releases, nor any acquittance nor adjustment of or concerning said land, tenements, or hereditaments, without obtaining the proper signature and written consent of the said Mary Ann, to each and every instrument or writing whereby any of said matters and things may be done." The court referred to Cal. Civ. Code, § 711, providing that conditions in restraint of alienation, when repugnant to an interest created in property, are void as simply declaratory of the common law.

In Prey v. Stanley (1895) 110 Cal. 423, 42 Pac. 908, a son bought land as a gift for his mother, the deed being made direct to her, but within a month thereafter a contract was made naming as parties the mother and son, reciting the gift of the land, and containing a covenant by her that no part of the land "shall be sold or conveyed . . . without the consent" of the son; that he was to be known and considered as the manager and superintendent of the land for the interest and benefit of the mother, to whom was to be paid all the income, and that in case of her death the property should be divided between lawful heirs, "who are now at this time" a daughter named and such son. The mother, son, and daughter all signed the instrument. It was held that the mother's later deed to such daughter conveyed an absolute fee.

For the view that a daughter taking a deed from her father with condition to support her parents could not convey so as to transfer the condition, see Barber v. Cobb (1858) 36 N. H. 344.

It may be noted that in Casgrain v. Hammond (1903) 134 Mich. 419, 104 Am. St. Rep. 610, 96 N. W. 510, it was held that a transaction was void as violating the statute against perpetuities, where a woman made a deed to a trustee, who, at the same time, delivered to her a declaration of trust to hold the property for fourteen years or her life, whichever period should be longer.

For validity of limitation upon power of alienation imposed upon grant or devise of equitable estate to married woman, see the note to Hauser v. St. Louis, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 426.

For relief of grantor in conveyance in consideration of agreement to support which is broken by grantee, see the note to Dixon v. Milling, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 916.

For necessity of entry or formal declaration of forfeiture, as a condition of maintaining action, other than for damages, based on breach of condition subsequent in a conveyance of freehold, see the note to Mash v. Bloom, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1187.

B. B. B.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

RE EDNA MAY HARBROE, Widow of William A. Harbroe, Deceased, Employee.

FURST-CLARK CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, Employer.

FIDELITY & DEPOSIT COMPANY OF MARYLAND, Insurer, Appt.

(223 Mass. 139, 111 N. E. 709.)

Master and servant — workmen's compensation act — affray — wilful misconduct.

1. The killing of a night watchman in an affray with police officers whom he mistakes for robbers cannot be said to be by reason of his serious and wilful misconduct within the exception in the workmen's compensation act.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — course of employment — leaving premises.

2. A night watchman killed during working hours while on a path where he was accustomed to go in the performance of his duties, after he had heard of the presence of robbers in the vicinity, cannot, although he was out of the building, be said not to have been in the course of his employment, on the theory that he had abandoned the care of his employer's property and intended to leave the premises.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — arising out of employment.

3. The killing of a night watchman by a police officer under the mistaken belief that he was a robber fleeing from the commission of a job on other property is not an injury arising out of the watchman's employment, although the watchman mistook the officer for the robber, if, in the affray which followed, the watchman was not attempting to protect his employer's property, which was not at the time exposed to danger.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 1, 1916.)

A PPEAL by the insurer from a decree of the Superior Court of Suffolk County

Note. — The question as to what constitutes "serious and wilful misconduct" within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act is discussed in the annotation following Clem v. Chalmers Motor Co. L.R.A.1916A, 355.

The general subject of workmen's compensation acts is treated in an extensive annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 23. The English cases on the construction of the statutory phrase, "arising out of and in the course of the employment," are treated at pages L.R.A.1916D.

confirming a decision of the Industrial Accident Board awarding compensation to the dependent widow in a proceeding by her under the workmen's compensation act to recover compensation for the death of her husband. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Albin L. Richards, for appellant:

The employee, Harbroe, was injured by reason of his serious and wilful misconduct, and therefore, by § 2, part II. of the workmen's compensation act, there can be no recovery.

Rohan v. Sawin, 5 Oush. 281; Com. v. Drew, 4 Mass. 391; Com. v. Carey, 12 Cush. 246; Com. v. Reynolds, 120 Mass. 190, 21 Am. Rep. 510; Brown v. United States, 159 U. S. 100, 40 L. ed. 90, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29; State v. Taylor, 70 Vt. 1, 42 L.R.A. 673, 67 Am. St. Rep. 648, 39 Atl. 447; State v. Shaw, 73 Vt. 149, 50 Atl. 863, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 1; Williams v. State, 44 Ala. 41.

The injury did not arise out of and in the course of the employment.

Milliken's Case, 216 Mass. 293, L.R.A. 1916A, 337, 103 N. E. 898, 4 N. C. C. A. 512; Fumicello's Case, 219 Mass. 488, 107 N. E. 349; Mitchinson v. Day Bros. [1913] 1 K. B. 603, 82 L. J. K. B. N. S. 421, 108 L. T. N. S. 193, 29 Times L. R. 267, 57 Sol. Jo. 300, 6 B. W. C. C. 190; Pritchard v. Torkington [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 271, 111 L. T. N. S. 917, 58 Sol. Jo. 739; Sheldon v. Needham [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 274, 111 L. T. N. S. 729, 58 Sol. Jo. 652, 30 Times L. R. 590.

To vest the right to future payments in the dependent entitled at the time of the decree is to make provision for dependents of dependents. The death of the beneficiary terminates the obligation to pay the weekly payments for specific compensation, under S. 11 of part II. of the act.

Burns's Case, 218 Mass. 8, 105 N. E. 601, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 787, 5 N. C. C. A. 635; Nichols's Case, 217 Mass. 3, 104 N. E. 566, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 862, 4 N. C. C. A. 5.

Mr. Charles Sumner Morrill, for appellee:

There was evidence in support of the finding of the Industrial Accident Board that the injury resulting in death arose 40 et seq. of that annotation (see especially pages 64 et seq., for cases involving an intentional or unlawful injury by a third person); and the American cases at pages 232 et seq. (see especially pages 239 et seq., for cases involving an intentional or unlawful act of a third person).

Other annotation dealing with various specific applications of the phrase may be found by consulting the Index to L.R.A. Notes under the title, "Workmen's compensation."

"out of and in the course of" the employment of the deceased.

Burns's Case, supra.

Said finding was not wrong as a matter of law.

McNicol's Case, 215 Mass. 497, L.R.A. 1916A, 306, 102 N. E. 697, 4 N. C. C. A. 522; Pigeon's Case, 216 Mass. 51, 102 N. E. 932, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 737, 4 N. C. C. A. 516, Sundine's Case, 218 Mass. 1, L.R.A. 1916A, 318, 105 N. E. 433, 5 N. C. C. A. 616.

The burden is on the insurer to show that Harbroe abandoned his duties and abandoned his master's property.

Adams v. Hodgkins, 109 Me. 361, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 741, 84 Atl. 530; New England Structural Co. v. Everett Distilling Co. 189 Mass. 145, 75 N. E. 85; Brightman's Case, 220 Mass. 17, L.R.A. 1916A, 321, 107 N. E. 527, 8 N. C. C. A. 102.

It cannot be said that Harbroe was fatally injured "by reason of his serious and wilful misconduct," as stated in the workmen's compensation act.

Nickerson's Case, 218 Mass. 158, 105 N. E. 604, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 790, 5 N. C. C. A. 645.

De Courcy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The employee Harbroe was night watchman for the Furst-Clark Construction Company, which was engaged in work on the Cape Cod canal, at Buzzard's bay, in Barnstable county. This company had buildings, machinery, and other property on both the northerly and southerly side of the canal, and on the easterly and the westerly side of the tracks of the New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company, which tracks extended in a northerly and southerly direction on a bridge over the canal. At about 3 A. M. on October 9, 1914, one Hart, a deputy sheriff at Buzzard's bay, was notified that "yeggmen" had robbed the safe at the Bourne postoffice. Later Albert L. Trench, the bridge operator employed by the railroad company, and whose station was near the buildings of the construction company, notified the deputy sheriff that the robbers had just crossed the bridge. Hart and his brother, fully armed, started in pursuit. In the vicinity of the company's office building, they saw, and were seen by, Trench and Harbroe. Each party, thinking that the others were acting in a suspicious manner, mistook them for the "yeggmen" in the darkness and fog, shots were exchanged, and Harbroe was fatally injured.

1. The insurer contends that the employee was "injured by reason of his serious and wilful misconduct." Stat. 1911, chap. 751, pt. 2, § 2. According to the findings of the L.R.A. 1916D.

Industrial Accident Board he was defending himself from attack by men whom he thought to be desperate criminals. There was some evidence that he did not use his revolver until after they had given the command "hands up," and had fired upon him and his companion, Trench. We cannot say, as matter of law, that the facts show such misconduct as would deprive an employee of compensation under the statute. And assuming that § 2 is applicable where the employee is killed (see pt. 5, § 2, defining "employee"), the same is true as to his dependents. Nickerson's Case, 218 Mass. 158, 105 N. E. 604, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 790, 5 N. C. C. A. 645; Johnson v. Marshall, Sons & Co. [1906] A. C. 409, 75 L. J. K. B. N. S. 868, 94 L. T. N. S. 828, 22 Times, L. R. 565, 5 Ann. Cas. 630.

2. The finding of the board that Harbroe's injury arose in the course of his employment has some support in the evidence. It occurred during his working hours, and on the path between the office and the machine shop of his employer. The fact that he and Trench had left the office after seeing the supposed "yeggmen" approaching is not conclusive that he had abandoned the care of his employer's property. He may have been on his way to some other part of the plant, where he would be in less apparent danger of bodily harm. At the time of the shooting he was in a place where he was accustomed to go in the performance of his duties. It is merely conjecture to say that he intended subsequently to leave the premises of his employer. Pigeon's Case, 216 Mass. 51, 102 N. E. 932, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 737, 4 N. C. C. A. 516. See Ross v. John Hancock, Mut. L. Ins. Co. 222 Mass. 560, 111 N. E. 390.

3. The doubtful question is whether the injury arose out of the employment. It cannot reasonably be said that the risk of being shot by trespassing lawbreakers is incidental to or has its origin in the nature of a night watchman's ordinary employment. Undoubtedly there are particular instances where the occupation of a night watchman exposes him to risk substantially beyond the ordinary normal ones, and where the employment involves and obliges the employee to face such perils. Where the employee's injury is the result of such special risk incident to the employment, and where there is "a causal connection between the conditions under which the work is required to be performed and the resulting injury," the injury "arises out of" the employment, within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act. McNicol's Case, 215 Mass. 497, L.R.A. 1916A, 306, 102 N. E. 697, 4 N. C. C. A. 522.

In the application of this principle to cases of assault upon employees in the course of their employment the authorities are not in harmony. Some of these cases are referred to in McNicol's Case. In Challis v. London & S. W. R. Co. [1905] 2 K. B. 154, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 569, 53 Week. Rep. 613, 93 L. T. N. S. 330, 21 Times, L. R. 486, where an engine driver was struck by a stone thrown wilfully by a boy from an overhead bridge; and in Nisbet v. Rayne & Burn [1910] 2 K. B. 689, 80 L. J. K. B. N. S. 84, 103 L. T. N. S. 178, 26 Times, L. R. 632, 54 Sol. Jo. 719, 3 B. W. C. C. 507, 3 N. C. C. A. 268, where a cashier employed regularly to carry wages by train to a colliery, was robbed and murdered in the course of the journey, it was held that the injury arose out of the employment. On the other hand, in Blake v. Head, 106 L. T. N. S. 822, 5 B. W. C. O. 303, 28 Times, L. R. 321, where a felonious assault was committed by the employer, and in Mitchinson v. Day Bros. [1913] 1 K. B. 603, 82 L. J. K. B. N. S. 421, 108 L. T. N. S. 193, 29 Times, L. R. 267, 57 Sol. Jo. 300, 6 B. W. C. C. 190, where a carter in charge of his employer's horse was assaulted by a drunken man (both referred to in McNicol's Case), it was held that the injury did not arise out of the employment. Anderson v. Balfour, [1910] 2 I. R. 497, was the case of a game keeper who was attacked by poachers, but the question was whether the injury resulted from an "accident," not whether it arose out of the employment. The same is true of Murray v. Denholm & Co. [1911] S. C. 1087, 5 B. W. C. C. 496, 48 Scot. L. R. 896, where a workman was attacked by strikers. It was also held that the injury arose, out of the employment in Kelly v. Board of Management, Trim Joint Dist. School, 47 Ir. Law Times, 151, affirmed by H. L. [1914] A. C. 667, 83 L. J. P. C. N. S. 220, 111 L. T. N. S. 305, 30 Times, L. R. 452, 58 Sol. Jo. 493, 7 B. W. C. C. 274, 48 Ir. Law Times, 148, where a schoolmaster was assaulted by some of the boys whose enmity he had incurred owing to his efforts to maintain discipline; and in Weekes v. Stead, [1914] W. N. 263, 83 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1542, 111 L. T. N. S. 693, 30 Times, L. R. 586, 58 Sol. Jo. 633, 7 B. W. C. C. 398, 6 N. C. C. A. 1010, where the yard foreman of a firm of furniture movers was fatally assaulted by one of the odd-job men who was employed at times by the firm. See also MacFarlane v. Shaw [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 32, 8 B. W. C. C. 382. Among the cases contra, see Collins v. Collins [1907] 2 I. R. 104; Shaw v. Wigan Coal & I. Co. 3 B. W. C. C. 81; Clayton v. Hardwicke Colliery Co. [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 343, 111 L. T. N. S. 788.

The question we have to determine is whether in the case at bar there was evidence upon which the Board could find that Harbroe's death arose out of a special risk incident to the performance of his duties as a night watchman. There was no evidence that this property ever had been injured by wrongdoers, or that from its character or location it was especially exposed to theft or harm at the hands of trespassers. He was not shot while protecting his employer's property from thieves. At the time of this accident the property was in no way threatened, nor did Harbroe suppose it was. And he was not fired upon because he was the watchman in charge. The injury might quite as well have been suffered by any person who happened to be in the locality, whether employed by the construction company or not. Further, although Harbroe mistakenly believed that the two approaching figures were "yeggmen," they were in fact an officer of the law and his assistant, who were in the performance of their duty, seeking to apprehend the men who recently had robbed the postoffice. The injury which they inflicted was the result of an unfortunate misapprehension on their part (to which Harbroe himself unwittingly contributed), and cannot reasonably be said "to have had its origin in the hazard connected with the employment, and to have flowed from that source as a rational consequence. Reithel's Case, 222 Mass. 163, 165, L.R.A. 1916A, 304, 109 N. E. 951. As was said in Madden's Case, 222 Mass. 487, post, 1000, 111 N. E. 379: "The rational mind must be able to trace the resultant personal injury to a proximate cause set in motion by the employment, and not by some other agency, or there can be no recovery."

We are constrained to say that there was no evidence to support the finding that the employee's injury was one "arising out of" his employment. The decree is reversed and a new decree is to be entered in favor of the insurer.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

AARON LINDSTROM, Appt.,

v.

MUTUAL STEAMSHIP COMPANY, Respt.

(— Minn. —, 156 N. W. 669.)

State — jurisdiction over vessels.

1. Territorial sovereignty of a state ex-

Headnotes by HALLAM, J.

Note. — As to the construction and effect of the workmen's compensation acts generally, see annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 23.

As to the limitation of the application of workmen's compensation acts by Federal laws, see annotation following Staley v. Illinois C. R. Co. L.R.A.1916A, 461.

tends to a vessel of the state, though it is upon navigable waters.

For other cases, see State, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Master and servant — workmen's compensation — injury on vessel.

2. The Minnesota workmen's compensation act (Gen. Stat. 1913, §§ 8195-8230) is general in its terms, and it applies to all cases within the territorial jurisdiction of the state save those expressly excepted. The act excepts cases arising from interstate commerce by railroad. Those arising from interstate commerce by water are not excepted.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Commerce — state compensation act — injury on navigable water.

3. The act in its application to such employment is not invalid as an interference with interstate commerce. Congress has not legislated upon that subject as to interstate commerce by water, and until it does so, such legislation is within the province of the several states.

For other cases, see Commerce, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Admiralty — jurisdiction.

4. The injury sustained in this case was sustained upon the navigable waters of the United States. This brings the case within the jurisdiction of the Federal courts of admiralty.

For other cases, see Admiralty, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Water — injury on — remedy.

5. By virtue of the clause in judiciary act (act Sept. 24, 1789), § 9, saving to suitors the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it, a party so aggrieved may (1) proceed in rem in admiralty, (2) bring suit in personam in admiralty, (3) resort to his remedy at law in personam in a state court, or (4) in the United States circuit court if there are parties proper to give such jurisdiction.

For other cases, see Courts, IV. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — procedure in state court.

6. In its application to this case the important effect of the saving clause is that it saves the right to proceed in the state courts by a suit in personam to redress wrongs committed at sea, although the person injured had the concurrent right to proceed in rem in a Federal court of admiralty.

For other cases, see Courts, IV. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Conflict of laws — injury on sea.

7. When the action is brought in a state court, it must be determined according to state laws, and not according to the laws of admiralty.

For other cases, see Conflict of Laws, I. e, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — state law — power to modify.

8. It is competent for the state to modify L.R.A.1916D.

by statute its common-law rules of liability in their application to such cases, so long as the modification does not amount to a regulation of commerce or an interference with some paramount Federal law.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Master and servant — compensation act — exclusiveness.

9. Since the adoption of the Minnesota compensation act, the question of liability in such cases, and the amount thereof, is to be determined by the compensation act. For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 3, 1916.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for St. Louis County sustaining a demurrer to a complaint filed to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wharton & Wharton, for appellant:

The court erred in sustaining the demurrer and in holding that the facts alleged in the complaint brought the case within the provisions of the Minnesota workmen's compensation act.

The Henry B. Smith, 195 Fed. 312; The Lottawanna (Rodd v. Heartt) 21 Wall. 558, 22 L. ed. 654; Schuede v. Zenith S. S. Co. 216 Fed. 566; Atlantic Transport Co. v. Imbrovek, 234 U. S. 52, 58 L. ed. 1208, 51 L.R.A. (N. S.) 1157, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 733; The Fred E. Sander, 208 Fed. 724, 4 N. C. C. A. 891; The Rosalie Mahoney, 218 Fed. 695; The Max Morris, 137 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 586, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29; The Thode Fagelund, 211 Fed. 685.

Messrs. Washburn, Bailey, & Mitchell, for respondent:

Interstate carriage by water is included under the Minnesota act.

Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Stoll v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. 205 Fed. 169; The Pawnee, 205 Fed. 333; The Lottawanna (Rodd v. Heartt) 21 Wall. 558, 22 L. ed. 654.

All employers and employees not expressly excepted in the workmen's compensation act are presumed to be subject to said act.

Harris v. Hobart Iron Co. 127 Minn. 399, 149 N. W. 662, 7 N. C. C. A. 44; Young v. Duncan, 218 Mass. 348, 106 N. E. 1; Sexton v. Newark Dist. Tele. Co. 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 451, 3 N. C. C. A. 569; Borgnia v. Falk Co. 147 Wis. 327, 37 L.R.A. (N. S.) 489, 133 N. W. 209, 3 N. C. C. A. 649; Gregutis v. Waclark Wire Works, 86 N. J. L. 610, 92 Atl. 354; Johnson v. Nelson, 128 Minn. 158, 150 N. W. 620.

When a stevedore is injured on board a vessel moored to a dock, the rights arising thereunder are to be determined by the law of the state in which the accident occurred.

The Bee, 216 Fed. 709; The Scotland (National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer) 105 U. S. 29, 26 L. ed. 1003; Thompson Towing & Wrecking Asso. v. McGregor, 124 C. C. A. 479, 207 Fed. 209.

Mr. H. A. Carmichael also for respondent.

Hallam, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The complaint alleges the following facts:

Defendant is a Minnesota corporation operating the steamship William Livingstone on the Great Lakes, between Duluth, its home port, and ports outside of Minnesota. The Berwind Fuel Company is an employer owning a dock at Duluth. On June 9, 1914, plaintiff was in the employ of the fuel company engaged in unloading a cargo of coal from said vessel onto the said fuel company's dock. While working in the hold of the vessel he was injured through the negligence of defendant. He brings this common-law action to recover damages. Defendant demurred and the demurrer was sustained.

The demurrer raises one main question; that is: Does the Minnesota workmen's compensation law (Gen. Stat. 1913, §§ 8195 et seq.) apply to such a case? If so, it is conceded the demurrer was properly sustained. We are of the opinion that the Minnesota compensation law does apply.

1. No question of territorial jurisdiction arises, for the territorial sovereignty of the state of Minnesota extends to a vessel of the state, though it is upon navigable waters (Crapo v. Kelly, 18 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed. 430; The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 52 L. ed. 264, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133), even upon the high seas (International Nav. Co. v. Lindstrom, 60 C. C. A. 649, 123 Fed. 475; Thompson Towing & Wrecking Asso. v. McGregor, 124 C. C. A. 479, 207 Fed. 209; The Bee [D. C.] 216 Fed. 709.)

No question of conflict of state laws arises. Duluth being the home port, and also the port where the injury occurred, the laws of no state other than Minnesota could apply.

2. There is no serious doubt that the terms of the statute are broad enough to cover the case. The act is general in its terms and it applies to all cases within the territorial jurisdiction of the state which are not excepted. Section 8202 excepts "any employer acting as a common carrier L.R.A.1916D.

when engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad," and "any employee of such common carrier injured or killed while so engaged." No other exception of consequence here is found in the act. This section does not, either in terms or by any possible implication, except carriers by water or the employees of such carriers.

The negligence that caused the injury was not that of plaintiff's employer, but of another employer who is within the terms of the act. The compensation applies to such a case. Mathison v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 126 Minn. 286, ante, 412, 148 N. W. 71, 5 N. C. C. A. 871.

3. Nor is the act invalid as an interference with interstate commerce. The right of Congress to pass laws governing the liability of employers engaged in interstate commerce for injuries sustained by their employees while engaged in such commerce, to the exclusion of state legislation upon that subject, is unquestioned, and as to railroads Congress has enacted some applicable laws. Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A. (N. S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. O. A. 875. But Congress has passed no laws regulating the liability of interstate carriers by water, at least not as to any matters here involved, and until Congress legislates upon this subject it is within the province of the several states to do so. Ibid; Stoll v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. (D. C.) 205 Fed. 169, 177.

4. The only doubtful question in the case is whether the Minnesota compensation act is, in its application to this case, an infringement upon the Federal jurisdiction over the subject of admiralty. The Constitution of the United States extends the power of the Federal courts "to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction." Article 3, § 2. Section 9 of the judiciary act of 1789 saves to suitors "in all cases the right of a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it." 1 Stat. at L. p. 77, chap. 20. This case hinges on the construction of this saving clause.

The injury was sustained aboard a ship on navigable waters of the United States. This brings the case within the jurisdiction of the Federal courts of admiralty. Atlantic Transport Co. v. Imbrovek, 234 U. S. 52, 58 L. ed. 1208, 51 L.R.A. (N. S.) 1157, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 733. Just as clearly it is subject to the common-law jurisdiction of the courts of this state. The Constitution and the statute conferred upon the national judiciary the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction exactly as it existed in the jurisprudence of the common law. When the admiralty jurisdiction was exclusive, it remained so; when it was concurrent, it remained so. If the suit be in rem against the thing itself the proceeding is essentially one in admiralty, is exclusively cognizable in admiralty courts, and the states cannot confer upon their own courts the cognizance of such cases. But the states did retain jurisdiction in cases of which the cognizance was previously concurrent in the courts of common law, that is, of suits in personam against an individual defendant. "This latter class of cases can be no more deemed cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction than cases of common-law jurisdiction." Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. 583, 598, 15 L. ed. 1028, 1033; Knapp, S. & Co. Co. v. McCaffrey, 177 U. S. 638, 648, 44 L. ed. 921, 926, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824. Accordingly, it is said in The Belfast, 7 Wall. 624, 645, 19 L. ed. 266, 272, that proceedings in a suit at common law on a maritime contract "are precisely the same as in suits on contracts not regarded as maritime, wholly irrespective of the fact that the injured party might have sought redress in the admiralty."

5. By virtue of the saving clause a party so aggrieved may (1) proceed in rem in admiralty if a maritime lien arises, (2) bring suit in personam in an admiralty jurisdiction, (3) resort to his remedy at law in a state court, or (4) in the United States court at law if there are parties proper to give such jurisdiction. American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 534, 21 L. ed. 369, 372.

It has been said that what is reserved to a suitor "is not a remedy in the common-law courts, but a common-law remedy." The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 411, 431, 18 L. ed. 397, 402; Moran v. Sturges, 154 U. S. 256, 276, 38 L. ed. 981, 987, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1019. This is true enough, but it is not very helpful here. This language means, on the one hand, that the saving clause does not confer upon common-law courts the power to entertain an admiralty suit in rem, and, on the other hand, that some remedies are reserved that were enforceable at common law, not in a common-law court, but in a court of equity, and also some remedies recognized at common law, like carriers' liens, which need not be enforced in court at all. Knapp, S. & Co. Co. v. McCaffrey, 177 U. S. 638, 44 L. ed. 921, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824.

6. In its application to this case, the important effect of the saving clause is that it saves the right of a party to proceed in the state courts in personam "according to the course of the common law" to redress wrongs committed at sea, although the person injured had the concurrent right to proceed in rem in the Federal court of admiralty. Knapp, S. & Co. Co. v. McCaffrey, 177 U. S. 638, 648, 44 L. ed. 921, 926, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824; Rounds v. Cloverport Foundry & Mach. Co. 237 U. S. 303, 59 L. ed. 966, 35 Sup. Ct. L.R.A. 1916D.

Rep. 596; American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 21 L. ed. 369; Reynolds v. The Favorite, 10 Minn. 242, Gil. 190; Stapp v. The Clyde, 43 Minn. 192, 45 N. W. 430; Benedict, Adm. § 128.

7. The contention of the plaintiff is that, when action is brought in the state court, the rules of liability are the same as though the proceeding were in admiralty. In other words, the contention is that where a remedy is sought in a state court that court enforces, not the laws of its own jurisdiction, but the general laws of admiralty, much as the courts of one state, in enforcing liabilities which arose in another, will apply the laws of the state where the cause of action arose, and since the state has no right to modify or amend the general maritime law, it is contended the Minnesota compensation law is here inoperative. This is really the crucial question in the case. It is a Federal question, and we think that it is settled adversely to plaintiff's contention by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court.

It is well understood that in the two courts, that is, courts of admiralty and courts of law, not only is the course of proceeding in many respects different, but also "the rules of decision are different." Atlee v. Northwestern Union Packet Co. 21 Wall. 389, 395, 22 L. ed. 619, 621. A striking instance of this difference is the rule for estimating damages in suits for personal injury. In the common-law courts the defendant must pay all the damages or none. If there has been contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, he can recover nothing. In the admiralty court, where there has been contributory negligence, the entire damages must be equally divided between the parties. It is held that when the action is at law the rule of liability prevailing at law, and not the admiralty rule, must be applied. It is also held that the principles which determine the existence of mutual fault in admiralty are not precisely the same as those which establish contributory negligence at law, but that "each court has its own set of rules for determining these questions, which may be in some respects the same, but in others vary materially" (Atlee v. Northwestern Union Packet Co. 21 Wall. 389, 396, 22 L. ed. 619, 621; The Max Morris, 137 U. S. 1, 10, 34 L. ed. 586, 588, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29), and it is held that if a person injured, though he might proceed in admiralty, elects to sue at law, the common-law rule as to contributory negligence must be applied, and he cannot recover "though defendant were negligent, if it appeared that his own negligence directly contributed to the result complained of." Belden v. Chase, 150 U. S. 674, 691, 87 L. ed. 1218, 1224, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 264. If this is the true principle to be applied as to contributory negligence, it must be the true principle to be applied as to all of the rules of law upon which liability depends.

On similar principles it was held in Knapp, S. & Co. Co. v. McCaffrey, 177 U. S. 638, 44 L. ed. 921, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824, that a bill in equity to foreclose a common-law lien upon a raft for towage was a proceeding to enforce a common-law remedy, and that since the supreme court of Illinois had held that plaintiff had a possessory lien upon the raft, and that he had possession, the Federal court "should defer to the opinion of that court in these particulars, as they are local questions dependent upon the law of the particular state."

We take it these Federal cases establish well the rule that when the action is brought in a state court it must be determined according to state law, and not according to the law of admiralty.

8. As the state court in administering its remedy applies its own rules of liability, it must enforce such rules of liability as are in force in the state, whether they arise from the common law or from the statute, and the state may modify by statute its common-law remedies so long as such statutes do not amount to regulation of interstate commerce or an interference with some paramount Federal law. In American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 21 L. ed. 369, defendant took the position that the saving clause must be limited to such causes of action as were known to the common law at the time of the passage of the judiciary act. The contention was held to be unsound. Knapp, S. & Co. Co. v. McCaffrey, 177 U. S. 638, 44 L. ed. 921, 925, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824. And in The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 404, 52 L. ed. 264, 269, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133, it was said that "as the state courts in their decisions would follow their own notions about the law and might change them from time to time, it would be strange if the state might not make changes by its other mouthpiece, the legislature. The same argument that deduces the legislative power of Congress from the jurisdiction of the national courts tends to establish the legislative power of the state where Congress has not acted."

And state courts have used similar language. Walter v. Kierstead, 74 Ga. 18, 22; Dougan v. Champlain Transp. Co. 56 N. Y. 1, 5; Stewart v. Harry, 3 Bush, 438.

This doctrine is further illustrated by other Federal decisions.

In Rounds v. Cloverport Foundry & Mach. Co. 237 U. S. 303, 59 L. ed. 966, 36 L.R.A.1916D.

Sup. Ct. Rep. 596, it is held that a common-law court, as auxiliary to the remedy in personam, may enforce a statutory attachment against the vessel itself.

In Leon v. Galceran, 11 Wall, 185, 192, 20 L. ed. 74, 76, it was held that in the absence of legislation by Congress it is competent for a state to create such liens upon vessels as its legislature may deem just and expedient, not amounting to a regulation of commerce, and to enact reasonable rules and regulations prescribing the mode of their enforcement.

In the Lottawanna (Rodd v. Heartt) 21 Wall. 558, 580, 22 L. ed. 654, 663, it was said that, so long as Congress does not interpose to regulate the subject, the rights of materialmen furnishing necessities to a vessel in her home port may be regulated by state legislation. It was said that the contract for furnishing such necessities is a maritime contract, and that the states cannot alter the limits of maritime jurisdiction, nor confer it upon the state courts so as to enable them to proceed in rem for the enforcement of liens created by such state laws, but that they can authorize the enforcement thereof by "common-law remedies, or such remedies as are equivalent thereto."

It is held that a statute of a state giving to the next of kin of a person an action on the case for damages for the injury caused by the death of such person is a valid and enforceable statute, as applied to maritime torts. It was first held that such a statute was enforceable in an action in the state courts, "whether such a suit may or may not be maintained in the admiralty courts." American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 532, 21 L. ed. 369, 372. Later, indeed, it was held that such a statute was enforceable even in admiralty. The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 52 L. ed. 264, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133. See also The City of Norwalk (D. C.) 55 Fed. 98, 106, where the applicable principles are fully discussed.

We accordingly hold that, where liability is asserted in the courts of this state against the owner of a vessel of this state to redress a maritime tort, the question of whether liability exists is to be determined by the common law of this state, as the same has been modified by the valid general statutes of the state, and, since the compensation act is now the law of this state, substituted for all common-law remedies before existing, that statute furnishes the rule upon which the liability and the extent of it are to be determined.

The conclusion we have reached is sustained by Walker v. Clyde S. S. Co. 215 N. Y. 529, 109 N. E. 604, where it is held that the compensation law of New York was applicable to a precisely similar situation.

The same result was reached in Kennerson v. Thames Towboat Co. 89 Conn. 367, L.R.A. 1916A, 436, 94 Atl. 372, where it is said that the common-law remedies reserved by the judiciary act of 1789 "embrace all methods of enforcing rights and redressing injuries known to the common or statutory law." Stoll v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. (D. C.) 205 Fed. 189, is also in harmony with our views. See also McDonnell v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. 74 C. C. A. 500, 143 Fed. 480; The Fred E. Sander (D. C.) 212 Fed. 545, 5 N. C. C. A. 97.

The only authority we find to the contrary is a well-considered opinion of Killitis, District Judge, in Schuede v. Zenith S. S. Co. (D. C.) 216 Fed. 566, holding that the com-ensation law of Ohio was not applicable to the case of a seaman employed under a maritime contract who was injured in the course of his employment. It was held that the maritime law as to liability was part of his contract, and that that law determined his rights though the action was at law. So far as that decision is inconsistent with the views herein expressed, we cannot follow it. Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 552, 45 L. ed. 314, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212; The Henry B. Smith (D. C.) 195 Fed. 312; The Fred E. Sander (D. C.) 208 Fed. 724, 4 N. C. C. A. 891, and The Thielbek (D. C.) 211 Fed. 685, are distinguishable from the case at bar, since they were actions or proceedings in admiralty, and not at law.

Order affirmed.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

MARTHA W. WHIPPLE

v.

JOHN H. ROSENSTOCK et al., Appts.

(— Neb. —, 155 N. W. 898.)

Intoxicating liquor — civil damage — parties to action.

1. A married woman and her minor children consisting of one family may maintain an action for loss of means of support against all those who have furnished intoxicating liquors to the husband and father, which occasioned or contributed to the damages.

For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, IV. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Damages — civil damage act — elements.

2. In estimating the damages the jury may consider the situation of the deceased, his annual earnings, if any, his habits, health, and reasonable expectancy of life.

For other cases, see Damages, III. e; III. f, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — value of support.

3. The right of support is not limited to the bare necessities of life, but in no case can the judgment be for a greater sum than the value of the means of support of which plaintiff has been deprived.

For other cases, see Damages, III. e; III. f, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Abatement — civil damage act — death of drunkard.

4. The death of the husband and father does not cause an action for loss of means for support to abate, the death being a mere incident, not the principal cause of action. For other cases, see Abatement and Revival, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Intoxicating liquor — license — effect.

5. "A license is no protection to the vendor of intoxicating drinks in an action for loss of the means of support. The statute, in effect, says to everyone engaged in the traffic, 'Beware to whom you sell or furnish intoxicating liquor.'"

For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, IV. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Parties — civil damage act — joinder of bondsmen.

6. The bondsmen of the liquor dealers who have furnished intoxicating liquors to the husband and father may be joined with the liquor dealers as defendants in an action for the loss of support.

For other cases, see Parties, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — damages.

7. Evidence examined, and held, that a verdict for $10,000 was excessive, and that the amount of recovery is reduced to $5,000.

For other cases, see Damages, III. e; III. f, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 23, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Lancaster County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged loss of support because of the sale of intoxicating liquors to plaintiff's husband. Affirmed on condition.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. T. J. Doyle, for appellants:

An undertaking will be strictly construed in favor of sureties, and their liability will not be extended by construction beyond their specific agreement.

Curtin v. Atkinson, 36 Neb. 110, 154 N. W. 131.

Headnotes by BARNES, J.

Note.—As to excessive damage under civil damage act for death through intoxication, see annotation following this case, post, 943.

L.R.A.1916D.

The gist of the action is the loss of means of support, and not any personal injuries Whipple may have sustained as a result of intoxication.

Nelson v. Nevels, 79 Neb. 699, 113 N. W. 119.

In this action against four dealers and their bondsmen for the death of Whipple resulting from being drunk at the time, only such dealer as furnished liquor which contributed to his drunkenness at that time, will be liable for damage resulting from his death.

Dolan v. McLaughlin, 46 Neb. 449, 64 N. W. 1076.

Messrs. Burkett, Wilson, & Brown, for appellee:

As the petition was filed the burden was on the plaintiff to show that her husband had been debauched since January 1, 1912, but if she failed to prove it, and if the court so instructed the jury in effect, then surely the defendants were not prejudiced thereby.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fox, 60 Neb. 531, 83 N. W. 744, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 463; Chmेलir v. Sawyer, 42 Neb. 362, 60 N. W. 547.

Instructions must be construed together.

Omaha & C. B. R. & Bridge Co. v. Levinston, 49 Neb. 17, 67 N. W. 887; Smith v. Meyers, 52 Neb. 70, 71 N. W. 1006; Mack v. Parkieser, 53 Neb. 528, 74 N. W. 38; Pledger v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 69 Neb. 456, 95 N. W. 1057; Lincoln Traction Co. v. Brookover, 77 Neb. 221, 109 N. W. 168, 111 N. W. 357.

The objection of variance was made too late.

Herpolsheimer v. Acme Harvester Co. 83 Neb. 53, 119 N. W. 30; Struebing v. Stevenson, 129 Iowa, 25, 105 N. W. 341; Qualy v. Johnson, 80 Minn. 408, 83 N. W. 393; Schwanager v. E. J. McNeely & Co. 44 Wash. 447, 87 Pac. 514; Galamore v. Olympia, 34 Wash. 379, 75 Pac. 978; Iverson v. McDonnell, 36 Wash. 73, 78 Pac. 202; Missouri River Transp. Co. v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 34 S. D. 1, 147 N. W. 82; Rome Hotel Co. v. Warlick, 87 Ga. 34, 13 S. E. 116; Coppock v. Lampkin, 114 Iowa, 664, 87 N. W. 665; Rosenberger v. Marsh, 108 Iowa, 47, 78 N. W. 837; Madison v. Missouri P. R. Co. 60 Mo. App. 599; Jarmusch v. Otis Iron & Steel Co. 13-23 Ohio, O. C. 122; Scott v. Sheakly, 3 Watts, 50; Davis v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. 63 S. C. 370, 41 S. E. 468; Childs & Childs, 49 Wash. 27, 94 Pac. 660; Bowers v. Thomas, 62 Wis. 480, 22 N. W. 710; Hoyt v. Hoyt, 68 Iowa, 703, 28 N. W. 27; Brusie v. Peck Bros. 135 N. Y. 622, 32 N. E. 76; Fox v. Utter, 6 Wash. 299, 53 Pac. 354.

Several saloon keepers and their several L.R.A.1916D.

bondsmen may be joined as parties defendant; and principals and sureties are jointly and severally liable; and those furnishing liquor producing loss may be joined.

Roose v. Perkins, 9 Neb. 304, 31 Am. Rep. 409, 2 N. W. 715; Kerkow v. Bauer, 15 Neb. 150, 18 N. W. 27; McClay v. Worrall, 18 Neb. 44, 24 N. W. 429; Elshire v. Schuyler, 15 Neb. 561, 20 N. W. 29; Wardell v. McConnell, 23 Neb. 152, 36 N. W. 278; Jones v. Bates, 26 Neb. 693, 4 L.R.A. 495, 42 N. W. 761; Horat v. Lewis, 71 Neb. 365, 98 N. W. 1046, 103 N. W. 460.

The same surety is liable on two or more bonds.

Thomas v. Hinkley, 19 Neb. 324, 27 N. W. 231; Gran v. Houston, 45 Neb. 813, 64 N. W. 245; Jones v. Bates, 26 Neb. 697, 4 L.R.A. 495, 42 N. W. 751.

The verdict, as compared with verdicts in other cases, was not excessive.

Young v. Beveridge, 81 Neb. 180, 115 N. W. 766; Keeling v. Pommer, 83 Neb. 510, 120 N. W. 155; Murphy v. Willow Springs Brewing Co. 81 Neb. 219, 115 N. W. 763; Pilkins v. Hans, 87 Neb. 7, 126 N. W. 864; Craig v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 97 Neb. 586, 150 N. W. 648; Wright v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 94 Neb. 317, 143 N. W. 220; Zitnik v. Union P. R. Co. 95 Neb. 152, 145 N. W. 344; Scott v. Chope, 33 Neb. 41, 49 N. W. 940; Gran v. Houston, 45 Neb. 813, 64 N. W. 245; Coleman v. Loeper, 94 Neb. 270, 143 N. W. 295.

Barnes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff commenced this action against John H. Rosenstock, Alexander Butz, Charles A. Schwedop, and Leonard Bauer, who were licensed saloon keepers in the city of Lincoln, and their bondsmen, to recover damages which she alleged had accrued to herself and her two infant children by reason of the sale of intoxicating liquor to her deceased husband, Frederic H. Whipple. The action as originally commenced was against the persons and bondsmen above named, together with some others.

It was alleged in the petition that from January 1, 1912, the saloon keepers therein named had sold, given to, and furnished her husband, Frederic H. Whipple, with large quantities of intoxicating liquors, which he drank, and thus had caused him to become intoxicated, debauched, and an habitual drunkard; that her husband had abused her and had neglected to furnish any support for herself and minor children; that before he became so debauched he was kind to her and had furnished his family suitable support in the way of food and clothing; that by reason of the use of the intoxicating liquors so sold, given, and furnished him by defendants, he became sick and diseased in mind and body, and died on the 18th day of August, 1912, of an injury to his arm, complicated by delirium tremens, and by reason of which she and her children had sustained damages in the sum of $20,000, for which she prayed judgment.

The defendants answered separately. Each of the saloon keepers denied that he had sold, furnished, or given plaintiff's husband any intoxicating liquors; denied that Whipple was a sober and industrious man, and alleged that for many years he had been a confirmed drunkard. They denied that plaintiff had been damaged in her means of support by reason of any sales of liquor made by them to her husband, and the answers further denied that plaintiff was the wife of Frederic H. Whipple. They admitted that they were licensed saloon keepers doing business in the city of Lincoln, and denied all other allegations of the petition. The reply was a general denial of the facts alleged in the answers.

When the case came on for trial in the district court for Lancaster county, and after plaintiff had introduced her evidence, the action was dismissed as to all of the defendants other than the saloon keepers above mentioned, and their sureties. The petition was amended so as to allege the sale to Whipple of intoxicating liquors from the 1st day of May, 1912, to the 15th day of August of that year, and the case was finally submitted to the jury as to such sales alone. After all of the evidence had been introduced, instructions were given, which were excepted to by each of the defendants. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and against all of the defendants for the sum of $10,000, on which the court rendered judgment, and the defendants have appealed.

It is contended by the appellants that the evidence is insufficient to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff. The record fairly shows that each one of the defendant liquor dealers sold and furnished to plaintiff's deceased husband intoxicating liquors including beer at some time during the period from the 1st of May to the 15th day of August, 1912; that Frederic H. Whipple died on the 18th day of August, 1912, as alleged in plaintiff's petition. While there is some conflict in the evidence, that branch of the case was properly submitted to the jury. Under the provisions of chapter 40, Rev. St. 1913, as construed by the decision of this court, the verdict of the jury on that question should be sustained. The saloon keepers were jointly liable on their bonds for whatever damages the plaintiff may have sustained by reason of the traffic. Roose v. Perkins, 9 Neb. 304, 31 Am. Rep. 409, 2 N. W. 715; Kockow v. L.R.A. 1916D.

Bauer, 15 Neb. 150, 18 N. W. 27; Warrick v. Rounds, 17 Neb. 411, 22 N. W. 785; Gorey v. Kelly, 64 Neb. 605, 90 N. W. 554. The cases cited also dispose of the appellants' claim of misjoinder adversely to their contention, as will presently be seen.

It is strenuously contended that the verdict in this case was excessive. There seems to be merit in this contention. It appears from the record that the plaintiff and Frederic H. Whipple were married on the 28th day of June, 1904; that two children were born to them, both of whom are living, and at the time of the trial were aged five and eight, respectively; that at the time of the marriage the plaintiff's husband had employment as a buggy washer at the Palace Livery Stable in the city of Lincoln. The amount of his earnings at that time is not shown, but it is apparent that they were not large. It also appears that at that time he was addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors, but not to the extent of destroying his ability to work. For some time he had no steady employment, but worked at different places in the city and in private families; and his earnings did not exceed $35 a month. It also appears that about four years before his death Whipple became an itinerant peddler of horse-radish, peanut butter, hominy, and some other household articles of food. There is no evidence in the record as to the amount of his earnings while he was engaged in that business, but it seems clear that they must have been limited to a rather small sum. A little later on Whipple commenced to prepare horse-radish and hominy on his own account. This was peddled, together with ice-cream, popcorn, pop, and some other things which he purchased of the manufacturers. These articles were peddled by him from about the 1st day of June until the latter part of September of each year. The record also shows that he sold hominy, horse-radish, and peanut butter a great part of the year. The plaintiff testified that he made in his business $150 a month, but that was purely her opinion without any competent evidence to support it. She also testified that he furnished, for the support of his family, $25 a week. That testimony was also her opinion, and is not supported by any other evidence. The testimony of the grocer of whom Whipple bought his groceries was that his bills ran from $3.50 to $5 a week, but he was unable to state that Whipple bought all of his meats and foods from him. It may be presumed that, while Whipple had credit at the grocery and ran a weekly account, he bought practically all of his supplies from him. There is no evidence in the record as to how much or what kind of clothing Whipple furnished his family. Plaintiff testified that after the 1st of January, 1912, he furnished them nothing, and that the only money she was able to obtain from him was $5. The record clearly shows that Whipple at all times during the last ten years was an habitual user of intoxicating liquors; that his drinking had increased by January, 1912, to such an extent that he was unable to attend to his business; that just before his death he was trying to sell his wagon and outfit for $40; that his business had become unprofitable; that he procured intoxicating liquors in bottles and jugs from some place other than that disclosed by the testimony, and kept intoxicating liquors in his house, his wagon, and at other places; that he drank to such an extent that on the evening of the 14th day of August, 1912, he fell and broke his arm; that his wife helped him into the house, undressed him, and put him to bed; that on the morning of the 15th a physician was called, who dressed the arm and sent him to a hospital, where he remained until the afternoon of the 17th of August, when he was sent home because of his conduct; that when he arrived at the house he became wild and incoherent and developed symptoms of delirium tremens; his conduct was such that his wife was afraid of him, and he was taken to a room in the county jail, where he died on the morning of August 18, 1912.

At the time of Whipple's death he was fifty-four years of age and had a life expectancy of eighteen years. Considering the evidence contained in the record, we are of opinion that the verdict was excessive; that by Whipple's death plaintiff and her children could not have been damaged in their means of support in any sum exceeding $5,000.

The amount of plaintiff's recovery having been reduced to the penalty mentioned in a single bond furnished by the sureties, there can be no contention of a misjoinder of parties defendant. Plaintiff therefore is required to file a remittitur in the sum of $5,000, within twenty days, and, if this is done, the judgment of the trial court will be affirmed for that amount, with the costs of that court. Otherwise, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded.

Letton, J., not sitting.

Annotation—Excessive damage under civil damage act for death through intoxication.

For illustrative cases as to inadequate or excessive damages for fatal injury to person under survival or death acts, see note appended to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Craft, L.R.A. 1916C, 817.

And for the rules guiding the courts on appeal in determining the excessiveness or adequacy of damages for personal injuries resulting in death, see note appended to Lane v. United Electric Light & W. Co. L.R.A. 1916C, 808.

In general.

It has been said that there is no reason for adopting a different rule in assessing damages under the civil damage act for the death of a person through intoxication, from that applicable where death results through the negligence of another. Pilkins v. Hans (1910) 87 Neb. 7, 126 N. W. 864.

The court on appeal should not interfere with the judgment of the jury in assessing the damages for death through intoxication, where the action is based on a civil damage act, unless the circumstances are such that all reasonable men, when not influenced by passion or prejudice, must agree that the verdict is excessive. (Neb.) Ibid.

The amount of exemplary damages to be awarded where such damages are recoverable rests in the sound discretion of the jury, subject to the control of the L.R.A. 1916D.

court only when the discretion is abused. Schneider v. Hosier (1871) 21 Ohio St. 98.

Not excessive.

In the following cases the damages assessed for death through intoxication, where the action was based on the civil damage act, were held not so excessive as to require the interference of the court on appeal:

—$5,000—married man—twenty-seven years of age—survived by widow and daughter two years old, Roach v. Wolff (1914) 96 Neb. 43, 146 N. W. 1019;

—$5,000—sustained—retired farmer—sixty-two years of age—in good financial circumstances—loss to widow of means of support, Poole v. Lansden (1913) 183 Ill. App. 609;

—$4,500—laborer—twenty-eight years old—strong, able-bodied—earned and capable of earning a good living for his family—widow and four minor children—deceased addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors, Pilkins v. Hans (Neb.) supra;

—$3,500—moderate and equitable damages—laborer about forty years of age—industrious—left surviving and dependent upon him a widow thirty-four years old and infant child four years old, Conklin v. Tice (1888) 48 Hun, 618, 15 N. Y. S. R. 835, 1 N. Y. Supp. 803;

—$2,000—married man — twenty-eight years old—able-bodied, good general health, good education, sober and steady habits—machinist by trade—had been soldier in the regular army for five years—recently discharged, had not yet secured another position—survived by widow, Marschall v. Laughran (1893) 47 Ill. App. 29;

—$1,550—sustained—loss to means of support of minor children—death of father, Buck v. Maddock (1897) 167 Ill. 219, 47 N. E. 208, affirming (1896) 67 Ill. App. 466;

—$1,000—farmer — forty-two years old—contributed to support of wife of same age $200 to $300 per year, Brown v. Butler (1896) 66 Ill. App. 86;

—$850—mechanic—thirty-eight years old—healthy—earning about $3 per day, which he devoted to the support and maintenance of his family, a wife and four minor children, the eldest of whom was twelve years of age—the court said that the evidence was sufficient to support a verdict of $5,000, Schiek v. Sanders (1898) 53 Neb. 664, 74 N. W. 39;

—$254.25—sustained—married man — loss to widow, Fink v. Garman (1861) 40 Pa. 95;

—$200—including exemplary damages —laborer—loss to wife of means of support, not including damages for the death of husband, which finally resulted, however, from the intoxication, Schneider v. Hosier (1871) 21 Ohio St. 98.

Excessive and reduced.

In the following cases damages assessed by the jury for death through intoxication, where the action was based on the civil damage act, were held to be excessive and were reduced as a condition to avoiding a new trial:

—$10,000, reduced to $5,000—laborer and peddler—fifty-four years of age—addicted to the use of intoxicants—for some time prior to death had done but little toward support of family; prior thereto had supported them, but amount of support indefinite — survived by widow and two minor children, aged respectively five and eight years, Whipple v. Rosenstock, ante, 940;

—$3,000, reduced to $2,000—well digger and ditcher—addicted to excessive use of intoxicating liquors—spent a considerable portion of earnings in dissipation—earned about $300 per year—loss to widow, Lahey v. Crist (1906) 130 Ill. App. 152;

—$2,500 reduced to $2,000—married man fifty-eight years old—only partially supported family—extent of support indefinite—survived by widow and four minor children, Curran v. Percival (1887) 21 Neb. 434, 32 N. W. 213.

Excessive.

In Hapenny v. Huffman (1913) 184 Ill. App. 351, the case was reversed on the ground of an erroneous instruction as to the measure of damages to be awarded for the death of a man through intoxication, but the court, in considering the amount assessed by the jury, —$5,000,—said that the amount was excessive. The deceased was a farmer twenty-six years of age, selling as much as $1,200 worth of crops per year, and when not engaged in farm work earned $3 per day teaming. The damages were limited to the loss sustained to the means of support of the widow.

A. G. S.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF OHIO EX REL. LILLIAN MUNDING, Admr., etc., of Mary Picking, Deceased,

v.

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION OF OHIO.

(92 Ohio St. 434, 111 N. E. 299.)

Master and servant — workmen's compensation — death of beneficiary.

An award of compensation from the state insurance fund, under § 35 of the workmen's compensation act (103 O. L. 72), to wholly dependent person, vests in the dependent when the award is made; so that, in case of the death of such dependent, his or her personal representative is entitled to the balance, if any, remaining unpaid.

Headnote by NICHOLS, Ch. J.

Note. — As to the construction and effect of the workmen's compensation acts generally, see annotation in L.R.A. 1916A, 23. The cases passing upon the right of the L.R.A. 1916D.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(July 2, 1915.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to pay to petitioner a certain amount alleged to be due her, as personal representative, upon an award of personal representative of a dependent to any compensation remaining unpaid on the death of the dependent will be found discussed on page 135 of this annotation.

compensation made by defendant to her decedent. Writ awarded.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Walter L. Connors and McGhee, Davis, & Boulger, for plaintiff:

Plaintiff, as personal representative of her decedent, was entitled to the unpaid balance of the award.

Seely v. State, 12 Ohio, 523; Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 879, 880; Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington, 222 U. S. 370, 56 L. ed. 237, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 160; McLean v. United States, 226 U. S. 374, 380, 57 L. ed. 260, 263, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122; Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Stranahan, 214 U. S. 320, 333, 53 L. ed. 1013, 1019, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671; Mosle v. Bidwell, 65 C. C. A. 533, 130 Fed. 334; Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. v. Industrial Commission, 153 Wis. 552, 141 N. W. 1119, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 655, 3 N. C. C. A. 707; United Collieries v. Simpson [1909] A. C. 383, 78 L. J. P. C. N. S. 129, 101 L. T. N. S. 129, 25 Times L. R. 678, 53 Sol. Jo. 630, 2 B. W. C. C. 308; Darlington v. Roscoe [1907] 1 K. B. 219, 76 L. J. K. B. N. S. 371, 96 L. T. N. S. 179, 23 Times L. R. 167, 9 W. C. C. 1, 121 L. T. Jo. 96, 8 W. C. C. 4; Knowles, Workmen's Compensation, 190; 1 Bradbury, Workmen's Compensation Law, 2d ed. p. 585; Ruegg, Employers' Liability & Workmen's Compensation, 404; Boyd, Workmen's Compensation, § 508; Labatt, Mast. § 5474.

Messrs. Edward C. Turner, Attorney General, Freeman T. Eagleson, and John G. Price, for defendant:

Plaintiff, not being a dependent, nor the representative of a dependent, is not entitled to receive any part of this trust fund, which is held in trust exclusively for the injured workman or his dependents.

Polled v. Great Northern R. Co. 5 B. W. C. C. 620; New Monckton Collieries v. Keeling, 27 Times L. R. 551, 4 B. W. C. C. 332; Howells v. Vivian, 50 Week. Rep. 163, 85 L. T. N. S. 529, 18 Times L. R. 36, 4 W. C. C. 106.

Nichols, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The petition in this case and demurrer thereto present the question whether an award of compensation from the state insurance fund, under § 35 of the workmen's compensation act (103 O. L. 72), to a wholly dependent person vests in the dependent when the award is made, so that, in case of the death of such dependent, his or her personal representative is entitled to the balance, if any, remaining unpaid.

The original Ohio workmen's compensation act was passed May 31, 1911 (102 O. L. 524). Its purpose, well expressed in its title, was: "To create a state insurance fund for the benefit of injured, and the dependents of killed employees, and to provide for the administration of such fund by a state liability board of awards."

This act was optional or elective in principle. On February 6, 1912, its constitutionality was upheld by this court in the case of State ex rel. Yaple v. Creamer, 85 Ohio St. 349, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 604, 97 N. E. 602, 1 N. C. C. A. 30. On September 3, 1912, a constitutional amendment was adopted by the people of Ohio (§ 36, art. 2) authorizing the passage of laws providing for a state fund to be created by compulsory contribution thereto by employers, and administered by the state.

Pursuant to this authority the legislature passed the present act (103 O. L. 72). This act is in effect an amendment to the act of 1911, the principal changes being that it is compulsory as to all employers employing five or more workmen, and optional as to those employing less. Section 35 of the act, so far as the question before the court in this case is concerned, may be said to be identical with § 28 of the old law.

The present act was the result of much thought and careful consideration of the operation of workmen's compensation laws of other states and foreign countries, and of the administration of the plan in Ohio under the original law. It made the compensation plan more workable and efficient, and provided fully for the administration of the act in all its features by the state liability board of awards, and may be said to be a model of legislative expression in clarity and comprehension. For convenience the board in charge of the administration of the fund will be referred to in this opinion as the board of awards rather than as the Industrial Commission of Ohio for the commission, in matters pertaining to its administration of the workmen's compensation fund, acts as the state liability board of awards.

Section 14 of the act defines the terms "employee," "workman," and "operative" as used in the act. Section 21 provides in part: "Every employee mentioned in subdivision 1 of § 14 hereof, who is injured, and the dependents of such as are killed in the course of employment, . . . provided the same was not purposely self-inflicted, . . . shall be entitled to receive . . . from the state insurance fund, such compensation for loss sustained on account of such injury or death, . . . as is provided by §§ 32 to 40 inclusive."

Section 35 provides for compensation in case of death, and is as follows:

"In case the injury causes death within the period of two years, the benefits shall be in the amounts and to the persons following:

"1. If there be no dependents, the disbursements from the state insurance fund shall be limited to the expenses provided for in § 42 hereof.

"2. If there are wholly dependent persons at the time of the death, the payment shall be 66⅔ per cent of the average weekly wages, and to continue for the remainder of the period between the date of the death, and six years after the date of the injury, and not to amount to more than a maximum of $3,750 nor less than a minimum of $1,500.

"3. If there are partly dependent persons at the time of the death, the payment shall be 66⅔ per cent of the average weekly wages, and to continue for all or such portion of the period of six years after the date of the injury, as the board in each case may determine, and not to amount to more than a maximum of $3,750.

"4. The following persons shall be presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee:

"(A) A wife upon a husband with whom she lives at the time of his death.

"(B) A child or children under the age of sixteen years (or over said age if physically or mentally incapacitated from earning) upon the parent with whom he is living at the time of the death of such parent.

"In all other cases, question of dependency, in whole or in part, shall be determined in accordance with the facts in each particular case existing at the time of the injury resulting in the death of such employee, but no person shall be considered as dependent unless a member of the family of the deceased employee, or bears to him the relation of husband or widow, lineal descendant, ancestor, or brother or sister. The word 'child' as used in this act, shall include a posthumous child, and a child legally adopted prior to the injury."

Under this section, in case of an injury resulting in death, the essential facts to be determined by the board of awards are: (1) That the employee was injured in the course of his employment; (2) that the injury was not self-inflicted; (3) that it resulted in death within the period of two years; and (4) the question of dependency at the time of death.

The last question is determined by the statute in the case of a wife living with her husband at the time of his death, and children under the age of sixteen living with the parent at the time of death of such parent. Such persons must be presumed to be wholly dependent for support on the deceased employee. All other questions of dependency must be determined by the board L.R.A.1916D.

of awards. If it be found that there were dependents at the time of death, then the board must determine the average weekly wage of the deceased. If it is found that there were wholly dependent persons at the time of death (as in the instant case, the award having been made to relatrix's intestate as sole dependent), then the board can make no determination or finding as to the amount of the compensation which must be awarded; that is fixed by law in a sum certain. See § 35, ¶ 2. The payment shall be two thirds of the average weekly wage, and to continue for a period of six years, and not to exceed $3,750, nor is it to be less than $1,500. There are no qualifying words whatever. The board's duty, after finding the existence of dependents, is but to make a calculation. It is entirely without discretion in the premises.

The statute, in fact, orders that in the case of wholly dependent persons the payment, subject to the fixed maximum and minimum, must be a certain definite sum (two thirds of the average weekly wage) multiplied by a certain definite figure (6 times 52 weeks). Thus, in the case now before the court, the board awarded the defendant $1,872, to be paid in biweekly instalments of $6 a week, and to continue for a period of six years from the date of the death of the employee.

This paragraph of § 35 is practically conclusive of the case, as it has every element necessary to confer a vested right. A fixed amount is awarded to a definite person as a matter of right, with no language suggesting in any way an abatement of the award on the death of the person to whom it is made prior to the payment of the same in full, and we must hold that it speaks for itself, unless some other section or sections of the act condition or limit the right to this compensation.

Section 36 is not applicable to the instant case. It only has application where there are plural dependents, and while it provides for the determination by the board as to the manner in which the benefits or compensation may be apportioned among the several dependents and to which one the payments shall be made for the benefit of all, it gives no discretion whatever to alter the amount of the award so fixed, nor to abate any part of the same.

Sections 39, 40, and 41 of the act provide as follows:

"Section 39. The powers and jurisdiction of the board over each case shall be continuing, and it may from time to time make such modification or change with respect to former findings or orders with respect thereto, as, in its opinion may be justified.

"Section 40. The board, under special circumstances, and when the same is deemed advisable, may commute periodical benefits to one or more lump sum payments.

"Section 41. Compensation before payment shall be exempt from all claims or creditors and from any attachment or execution, and shall be paid only to such employees or their dependents."

It is urged by the attorney general that § 39 must be construed as giving the board continuing power and jurisdiction over the compensation when awarded, so that in case of the death of dependent it can abate the balance due under the award, if any, and revert the same to the state insurance fund. That such was the intention of the legislature is not apparent from the section. We do not think findings and orders which may be changed mean findings and orders which are definitely fixed by law and as to which the board of awards has no discretion.

If the deceased employee left a widow, who was living with him at the time of his death, the board must find that she was wholly dependent upon her deceased husband, and must make a certain award of compensation to her. The questions of dependency and amount of award in such case are both determined absolutely by the statute. The board can only act formally, and must so act. If § 39 gave power to modify, alter, or amend the finding as to the amount of the compensation or its payment, it would do so likewise as to the question of dependency. There are many findings and orders of the board to which § 39 is plainly applicable, and for which it was no doubt intended,—thus, in § 32, in cases of temporary disability; § 33, in cases of partial disability; § 34, in cases of permanent total disability; § 35, in the matter of commuting periodical payments to one or more lump sum payments; § 36, in the matter of the apportionment of compensation, etc.

Section 34, providing for compensation in case of permanent total disability, presents a very strong, if not conclusive, indication that the amount awarded under ¶ 2 of § 35 vests in the dependent, and that § 39 is without application. Section 34 provides in part that in cases of permanent total disability the award shall be two thirds of the average weekly wage, and shall continue until the death of such person so totally disabled.

In ¶ 2 of § 35 the words "until the death of such person" (dependent) are omitted, and substituted therefor, after the words "to continue," appears the phrase, "for the remainder of the period between the date of the death, and six years after the date of the injury."

As both of these sections were enacted by the same legislature, at the same time, as L.R.A.1916D.

part of the same act, and upon the same subject, it must be conceded that the legislature had before it the question of the abatement of an award upon the death of a dependent, and as it provided for such abatement in one instance and failed to do so in another, its action must be deemed intentional, and that § 39 cannot be construed to be equivalent to the words "until the death of such person," or similar words, omitted after the phrase "to continue" in ¶ 2 of § 35, or to vest in the board of awards the power to read in such words.

If § 39 could be construed as giving the board power to abate an award made under ¶ 2 of § 35, in case of the death of dependent prior to completion of payments, it necessarily follows that it could be construed also as giving the board power and jurisdiction to determine dependency at any time during the period covered by the payments, instead of having its determination expressly limited by the statute as it is to dependency at time of death, and although the statute is inflexible as to amount of award, abate the award at any time the person to whom the compensation was granted ceased to be a dependent. This construction would be directly contrary to the statutory requirements.

If this construction were possible, the board, having power to abate compensation, must necessarily keep a strict watch over each case, numbering many thousands, so as to discontinue payments as soon as dependency ceases to exist. Such construction would render § 40 of very doubtful, if any, value, for in each case there would be the possibility of the death of the dependent during the period and the consequent reversion to the insurance fund of all unpaid instalments, and the board would certainly hesitate to commute periodical payments to a lump sum, and thus lose the increment to the fund in case of death of dependent. This would be a distinct backward step toward the old system which resulted in passage of the act. In fact, it is difficult to conceive the theory on which periodical payments can be commuted if the right to the entire award does not vest when made in the dependent.

The word "commute" in this section must mean that the board by commuting the payments pays the dependent something less than he otherwise would receive. So, if the construction contended for by the state were adopted, it would mean that the board, when it made a lump sum award, not only gave dependent something to which he was not entitled and might never be entitled, but also instead of commuting the award, actually increased it. Section 41 exempts "compensation before payment" from attachment and execution. If compensation were not vested, then there could be neither attachment nor execution, and this section would be without meaning, unless we should add after the word "compensation" the words "and each instalment thereof after it has become due and payable."

Since § 35 is entirely clear and unambiguous and is consistent with §§ 39, 40, and 41, the court is not authorized to legislate under the guise of statutory construction and upon the theory that the legislature intended, or should have intended, that the compensation awarded under ¶ 2 of § 35 should abate at the death of dependent, thus changing the plain wording of the statute.

The language of this part of the section, as we have pointed out, is that the payment shall be two thirds of the weekly wage and to continue for the remainder of the period between the date of death and six years after the injury. As stated by Donahue, J., in Sipe v. State, 86 Ohio St. 80, 87, 99 N. E. 208, 210:

"That intent [of the legislature] must be ascertained first, if possible, from the language used, and, where that language is clear and unambiguous, courts have no authority to change it,"—citing King v. Greenwood Cemetery Asso. 67 Ohio St. 244, 65 N. E. 882; Hough v. Dayton Mfg. Co., 66 Ohio St. 427, 64 N. E. 521; Slingluff v. Weaver, 66 Ohio St. 621, 64 N. E. 574.

In the last-cited case, Spear, J., uses language applicable here, when he says:

"To endeavor to make this plainer would be like an effort to reason upon a sum in simple addition. . . . The province of construction is to arrive at the true sense of the language of the act, not to supply language to help out a conjectured intent not to be gathered from the words used. . . . The words asked to be incorporated would be the words of the expounders, and not of the lawmakers."

The only construction that can justifiably be given ¶ 2 of § 35, in the case of a sole dependent, is the plain meaning of the words used. There is no authority under any rule of statutory construction to add to, omit, or change the words used. Compensation is awarded in a definite sum, with no conditions attached, except that the payments are to be periodical.

There seems to be no decision of an American court upon this question arising under workmen's compensation statutes, but long ago this court decided a question which in principle is quite similar. The case of Dorah v. Dorah, 4 Ohio St. 292, presented the question whether the allowance made by the appraisers to a widow for her year's support conferred a vested right of property in such widow, so that, in case of her death before the expiration of the year and L.R.A.1916D.

before the entire allowance had been paid, her personal representative could recover the balance. The court held that the entire amount vested when the allowance was made, and the balance remaining unpaid, though, on account of the death of the widow, impossible of application for which it was intended, could be recovered. Ranney, J., in his opinion, used language and reason applicable to the case we are considering. He says, after pointing out that if the amount allowed did not vest then, if it had been paid, part could be recovered back by the estate upon the death of the widow prior to the expiration of the year, or a proportionate amount in case of the death of a child when the allowance had been made to a widow and minor children: "We can see no reason to suppose that it was ever intended to allow a recovery back of any part of the amount upon the happening of such a contingency [death of a child]. . . .

To allow such a deduction, either by giving an action to the administrator to recover it back where it has been paid, or by permitting him to withhold it where it has not, is to introduce the most perplexing uncertainty as to the rights of the widow and the duties of the administrator. . . . With the construction we adopt, the rights and duties of all concerned are clear, definite, and fixed. It gives to the widow and children a paramount claim upon enough of the estate to support them for one year, over creditors and distributees; and where it has been fixed or set apart by the appraisers, or by the court on review, effectually withdraws it from the balance of the estate, and has all the force and effect of an adjudication in their favor. It confers a vested right of property, conclusively disposes of so much of the estate, and leaves no discretion to the administrator as to complying with it."

The right of the dependent to whom an award has been made under ¶ 2 of § 35 is clearer than that of a widow to whom an allowance has been made on her year's support. The compensation is awarded to the dependent in a fixed sum out of an insurance fund provided wholly for the purpose of paying such compensation. This award effectually withdraws the amount awarded from the fund, and makes it exempt from execution and attachment. Any other holding would introduce into the administration of the workmen's compensation act most perplexing uncertainty both as to the rights of dependents and the duties of the board of awards.

The precise question involved in this case has been before the courts of England, and it is the holding there, not only that an award of compensation to a dependent vests on allowance, but that the right to claim an award vests in the dependent at the time of death of the employee, and if dependent dies before presenting such claim the personal representative of dependent may make the claim and recover upon it. While the English acts are different from ours in many respects, an examination of the cases to which we now refer and to the statutes will show that the same question was before the English courts as is presented by the instant case, and that practically the same reasons were advanced in opposition to the theory which the court adopted as are now advanced by counsel for the state.

In the case of United Collieries v. Simpson, [1909] A. C. 383, the House of Lords held that where a workman has been killed by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and his dependent dies without making a claim, the dependent's legal personal representative is entitled to compensation under the workmen's compensation act of 1906.

At page 389, Lord Loreburn says: "The 8th paragraph also contemplates payment to a dependent. And though the 9th [similar to § 36 of the Ohio act as to apportionment of benefits] reserves a power to vary the apportionment, neither it nor any other paragraph proceeds upon any other view than that there is a definite right on the part of dependents as a class to the money, subject to a parental power of the court in dividing and applying it for their advantage."

The dissenting opinion of Lord Dunedin is interesting because it shows that the court had before it the objection that payments to a personal representative were not authorized because the law provides only for payment to dependents. This case expressly approves the case of Darlington v. Roscoe, [1907] 1 K. B. 219, 76 L. J. K. B. N. S. 371, 96 L. T. N. S. 179, 23 Times L. R. 167, where it was held that if a notice of claim under the workmen's compensation act of 1897 has been given by a sole dependent, who dies before a request for arbitration is made or other proceedings are taken, the right to claim survives to such dependent's legal personal representative, and the maxim, actio personalis moritur cum persona, does not apply.

The only case we have been able to find advancing a contrary view is that of O'Donovan v. Cameron [1901] 2 I. R. 633, where it was held:

"The sole total dependent of a workman, who was killed by an accident arising out of his employment, died before she had filed or served a claim for compensation, under the workmen's compensation act, 1897. Had L.R.A.1916D.

she lived, and taken the necessary steps to recover it, she would have been entitled to £150 compensation. The personal representative of the deceased workman subsequently took proceedings . . . to recover compensation, to be applied for the benefit of the dependent, and in payment of her debts. Held, that neither her personal representative nor the personal representative of the deceased workman was entitled to recover the amount."

This case was distinctly disapproved by the House of Lords in United Collieries v. Simpson, supra. Thus in England the authority is all in favor of the view that the right to compensation vests in the dependent at the time of the death of the employee and is transmitted to his personal representative, even though the dependent has died without having made a claim for compensation. And this is a much more doubtful question than that before us, where the claim has been filed, compensation awarded, and part payment made before death of dependent.

The English cases emphasize the fact that a fixed sum is provided by the act and no provision made for a refund of any part of the award, and that in the case of a dependent dying before the compensation was exhausted, the absence of such a provision shows that, when once the compensation is fixed, there is to be no refund.

The question here, by the application of the most elementary rule of statutory construction, is settled by the statute. It speaks for itself, and there is no ambiguity. It is also settled by all the adjudicated cases on the subject. But, were it necessary to go outside of the statute to sources which we may consider, the result is even more conclusive.

Let us start at the beginning of workmen's compensation in Ohio. On May 10, 1910, the general assembly passed an act (101 O. L. 231) authorizing the governor to appoint a commission of five persons, representative of both employers and employees, to investigate the subject of a direct compensation, law and to report to the next session of the general assembly the result of their investigation, together with a bill or bills providing for the speedy remedy for employees for injuries received in the course of their employment. This commission, of which Mr. J. Harrington Boyd was chairman, filed its report with the legislature in January, 1911.

This report is a remarkable document, probably the most valuable report ever submitted by an investigating committee or commission to the general assembly. It goes into the subject of workmen's compensation from every conceivable angle, gives the result of investigations with the greatest detail, together with a complete statement of the causes which have brought about workmen's compensation, and a full explanation of the laws of other states and countries, and produces an array of facts in regard to industrial accidents which is appalling.

The conclusions of this commission were admirably summed up by Johnson, J., in his opinion in State ex rel. Yapple v. Creamer, supra, at page 389 of 85 Ohio St., 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 694, 97 N. E. 602, 1 N. C. C. A. 30. And the theory upon which the compensation law is based (which is now generally accepted) is that each time an employee is killed or injured there is an economic loss which must be made up or compensated in some way; that most accidents are attributable to the inherent risk of employment—that is, no one is directly at fault—that the burden of this economic loss should be borne by the industry rather than by society as a whole; that a fund should be provided by the industry from which a fixed sum should be set apart as every accident occurs to compensate the person injured, or his dependents, for his or their loss.

The commission recommended that a compensation plan of this kind be adopted, not as "in any sense charity, but only simple justice."

The commission filed with its report, for the consideration of the General Assembly, two tentative acts, one suggested by a majority of the commission, and the other by a minority member. Section 8 of the majority bill provides for compensation in case of death, and is in substance the same as § 35 of the present act. Section 13, paragraph "b," provided:

"The compensation awarded shall never be vested, except subject to such changes as the provisions of this Code allow."

Section 20 (the section on which present § 39 is based) provided: "The said state board of compensation awards shall have entire jurisdiction of the disbursement of the insurance fund provided for in this Code, and in determining the validity of all applications for compensation out of said fund, and of fixing the amount of the award in each instance; but so long as the award or any part of it remains unpaid, their jurisdiction as to the amount of such award and as to the person in any particular class of beneficiaries to which the same shall be payable, shall be continuing so that they may have power to make such changes therein as the circumstances may warrant, and as right and justice may require."

This proposed section reads, it is to be presumed, about as the state would have us L.R.A.1916D.

now read § 39. In the bill submitted by the minority, the following sections appeared: Section 28, providing compensation in case of death, is practically similar to present § 35; § 33, providing that: "The power and jurisdiction of the board over each case shall be continuing, and it may from time to time make such modification or change with respect to former findings or orders with respect thereto, as, in its opinion, may be justified."

Both bills were before the legislature, and at the same session at which the report was submitted the original compensation act was passed, §§ 28 and 33 of which (except for the maximum and minimum amounts) are identical with §§ 35 and 39 of the present act.

It is thus apparent that the legislature, having before it the proposition of limiting payments to the lifetime of dependents and of granting power to the board to change awards, so long as any part of it remained unpaid, by rejecting § 20 of the act proposed by the majority and by accepting § 33 of the minority measure, clearly indicated its intention as to this matter, and in rejecting § 13 (§ "b" of the majority measure) it refused to provide that "compensation awarded shall never be vested."

The only fair inference to be drawn is that the legislature intended that compensation, under ¶ 2 of § 35, should be vested in the dependent when awarded. Again this law was passed, not in a spirit of "charity," but only simple justice. The fund it provides is called, and is in fact, an "insurance" fund, from which payments are to be made, and is in no sense a pension fund, and never, so far as we are aware, has it been contended that injured employees and their dependents were not entitled to compensation as a matter of right.

The right to be compensated for an injury has no element of bounty or charity about it. No part of the fund (except such part as it pays for the protection of its own employees) is contributed by the state.

As we have before stated, the theory is that when an employee is injured or killed in course of his employment, a sum fixed by law is set off from the fund to compensate him for his injuries, or his dependents for his death, to compensate for taking away the man's right to earn a livelihood, which, but for the accident, he would have earned. A fixed sum goes out from the fund to compensate for the loss which has occurred.

In case of death with no dependents, there is no loss to any one except the employee other than the expenses provided for by the statute, which would otherwise fall on society. In case of dependents, the sum is likewise fixed by law and ordered paid to the dependent. There is nothing to indicate that this loss is to be compensated in part by the death of dependents, and the part thus compensated to be returned to the state. On the contrary, the only situation considered is that existing at the date of death. At that time the amount is fixed, not by the board, but by the statute; it is set apart from the general fund, may be paid in lump sums, and there is no provision whatever for rebate.

Thus, the payments being fixed in amount, ordered paid from a certain fund, and awarded to a definite person, every element of a vested right is present, and no element or suggestion of a pension that is to cease at the death of the pensioner. The report of the investigating commission, as well as all of our compensation laws and reports, shows that the provision for periodical payments is solely for the benefit of the injured employee or dependents, for the reason that experience teaches that in a very great many cases a lump sum, if allowed, is dissipated, while small payments, on the other hand, are carefully husbanded.

It may also be noted that the words, "insurance fund," "compensation," "award," and "commutation," all negative the idea of a pension or rebate of any kind.

The intent, apparent and express throughout the act, that compensation is to be paid only to dependents, was not for the purpose of securing an abatement of unpaid compensation upon the death of a dependent. The purpose is to insure that compensation shall go intact to the injured employee or his dependents without any shrinkage by passing through or into the hands of assigns, agents, attorneys, friends, or relatives, it being common knowledge that if a sum of money on its journey from the one from whom to the one to whom it is due passes through the hands of others it is inevitable that it suffer diminution, sometimes almost to the vanishing point.

We hold that when the award is once made to a sole dependent, the right to the compensation vests, and once vested there can be no condition attached except as to the time of payment, and it is equally immaterial whether the dependent subsequently dies or becomes independent.

As to the argument that unless a rebate or refund is allowed in case of death of dependent, a great wrong is done the injured and dependents of killed employees, it is perhaps sufficient to say that the assumption upon which this argument is based is utterly opposed to the theory on which the fund is established, maintained, and administered. It is so plain as to be beyond all argument that the fund is provided to compensate in the manner and amount fixed by L.R.A.1916D.

law for all losses which it covers; that it was never intended that the fund should be enhanced by lapses; that there is no conception of profit in the plan, and no one entitled to an award can have his right affected at all, either as to amount or in any other manner, by the allowance or denial of the claim of any other person to compensation. A study of the act will show that it is the duty of the board to provide an adequate fund to pay all the compensation provided by the act. What amount will be necessary is calculated by the board, the theory being that all losses will be and must be paid in full; the methods of establishing the fund and the sources from which the money is to come are specified, and nowhere, even by inference, is the board authorized to speculate that a greater or less sum will be needed on account of unpaid or partly unpaid awards. Both the letter and spirit of the law show that the right to compensation vests when the same is awarded under ¶ 2 of § 35, and the demurrer to the petition is therefore overruled.

As the board in this case awarded the dependent the sum of $1,972, and ordered the same paid in biweekly instalments at the rate of $6 per week, to continue for six years from the date of the death of the employee, it has, in making the award, fully complied with the law, and the court is without power to require it to commute the balance remaining due to one lump sum. That is a matter, under §§ 39 and 40, wholly within the discretion of the board, but the petition shows that the board has refused to pay to relator any part of the award since the death of the dependent or to continue the biweekly payments. The writ therefore must order the board to pay to relator the sum of the biweekly payments which have accrued since dependent's death, and to continue such payments until the full amount originally awarded is fully paid, unless commutation is ordered by the board.

Demurrer overruled and writ awarded.

Johnson, Wanamaker, and Newman, JJ., concur.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF TENNESSEE EX REL.
FRANK H. THOMPSON, Attorney General.

v.

EDWARD H. CRUMP et al., Appts.

(— Tenn. —, 183 S. W. 505.)

Office — ouster — effect on succeeding term.

1. Judgment against an officer under a statute providing that he shall forfeit his office and shall be ousted therefrom for certain specified offenses does not preclude his entering upon a succeeding term to which he had been elected before the judgment was entered.

For other cases, see Officers, I. a, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statute — ouster of officer — conflict with Constitution.

2. A constitutional provision for the indictment of civil officers guilty of crimes and misdemeanors in office, and removal from office as an incident of conviction, does not deprive the legislature of the power to provide for the ouster of such officers for malfeasance in office.

For other cases, see Officers, I. c, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — testing sections of statute not invoked in case.

3. The constitutionality of sections of a statute which have not been invoked in a case before the court will not be considered if they could be elided and the remainder of the statute enforced should they prove to be unconstitutional.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 16, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Chancery Court for Shelby County ousting them from office, and from an order restraining them from qualifying for new terms to which they had been elected, in a suit for their removal on account of alleged misconduct in office. Decree affirmed and order vacated.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. K. Riddick, J. L. McRee, and K. T. McConnico, for appellants:

Whenever the state Constitution provides the causes for the removal of an officer and the provision under which such removal is to be accomplished, such provisions are exclusive, and such officers cannot be removed for any other causes or in any other manner.

Smith v. Normant, 5 Yerg. 272; Lynn v. Polk, 8 Lea, 169; State ex rel. Halsey v. Gaines, 2 Lea, 347; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 457; Cooley, Const. Lim. 99; Com. v. Williams, 79 Ky. 42, 42 Am. Rep. 204; Lowe v. Com. 3 Met. (Ky.) 240; Throop, Pub. Off. § 341.

Defendants are civil officers within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mechem, Pub. Off. § 471; Pom. Const. Law, § 716; Rawle, Const. p. 231; Story, Const. § 792; Porterfield v. State, 92 Tenn. 289, 21 S. W. 519; State v. Critchett, 1 Lea, 272, 3 Am. Crim. Rep. 83; Wood v. Quimby, 20 R. I. 482, 40 Atl. 161; Gooch v. Exeter, 70 N. H. 413, 85 Am. St. Rep. 637, 48 Atl. 1100; Mallory v. United States, 3 Ct. Cl. 257; Re Newport Charter, 14 R. I. 659; Ballantyne v. Bower, 17 Wyo. 356, 99 Pac. 69, 17 Ann. Cas. 82; Montgomery v. State, 107 Ala. 372, 18 So. 157; Baltimore v. Lyman, 92 Md. 591, 152 L.R.A. 406, 84 Am. St. Rep. 524, 48 Atl. 145; Re House Bill No. 166, 9 Colo. 628, 21 Pac. 473; Opinion to Governor, 28 R. I. 629, 72 Atl. 417; Shelby v. Alcorn, 36 Miss. 273, 72 Am. Dec. 169; State v. O'Driscoll, 3 Brev. 527; United States v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 96, Fed. Cas. No. 15,747; Prescott v. Duncan, 126 Tenn. 146, 148 S. W. 229; Cross v. Fisher, 132 Tenn. 31, 177 S. W. 43; Atty. Gen. v. Tillinghast, 203 Mass. 539, 89 N. E. 1058, 17 Ann. Cas. 449; Throop, Pub. Off. § 10, pp. 10-12.

Wrongs committed outside of the office furnish no grounds for punishment by removal, and officers cannot be removed from office for a violation of their duties in another term of the same office or while serving in another office.

Thurston v. Clark, 107 Cal. 287, 40 Pac. 435; Speed v. Detroit, 98 Mich. 360, 22 L.R.A. 842, 39 Am. St. Rep. 555, 57 N. W. 406; State ex rel. Tyrrell v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 536; State ex rel. Gill v. Watertown, 9 Wis. 261; Re Advisory Opinion, 31 Fla. 1, 18 L.R.A. 594, 12 So. 114, 64 Fla. 168, 60 So. 337; Carlisle v. Burke, 82 Misc. 282, 144 N. Y. Supp. 163; State ex rel. Rawlings v. Loomis, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 29 S. W. 415; Re King, 53 Hun, 631, 25 N. Y. S. R. 792, 6 N. Y. Supp. 420; State ex rel. Schultz v. Patton, 131 Mo. App. 628, 110 S. W. 636; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Hasty, 184 Ala. 121, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 553, 63 So. 559; Com. v. Shaver, 3 Watts & S. 338; State ex rel. Hart v. Duluth, 53 Minn. 238, 39 Am. St. Rep. 595, 55 N. W. 118; Richards v. Clarksburg, 30 W. Va. 491, 4 S. E. 774; People ex rel. Bancroft v. Weygant, 14 Hun, 546; Rex v. Wells, 4 Burr. 1999; Reg. v. Newberry, 1 Q. B. 751, 1 Gale & D. 388, 6 Jur. 365; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 252; Conant v. Grogan, 6 N. Y. S. R. 322; Brackenridge v. State, 27 Tex. App. 513, 4 L.R.A. 360, 11 S. W. 630; Thurston v. Clark, 107 Cal. 285, 40 Pac. 435; Gordon v. State, 43 Tex. 330; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 444, 445; 29 Cyc. 1411; Throop, Pub. Off. § 378, p. 372; 20 Harvard L. Rev pp. 316, 317; Smith v. Normant, 5 Yerg. 272; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 79.

Messrs. Barton & Barton also for appellants.

Messrs. Frank M. Thompson, Attorney General, G. T. Fitzhugh, and P. W. Lanier, for appellee:

The refusal of municipal officers to attempt the enforcement of laws on the ground that the sentiment of the majority of the community was thought by them to be opposed to the enforcement of said laws is no defense to an action brought to remove them from their offices for wilful neglect of their duties.

Note. — As to re-election of public officer after ouster for misconduct, see annotation following this case, post, 959.
L.R.A. 1916D.

State ex rel. Johnston v. Foster, 32 Kan. 14, 3 Pac. 537; State v. Yager, 250 Mo. 388, 157 S. W. 557.

The fact that county officials may not do their duty in the enforcement of said laws is no excuse for the neglect of municipal officers to attempt to discharge their duties in the matter of such enforcement.

State ex rel. Coleman v. Trinkle, 70 Kan. 396, 78 Pac. 854; State v. Roth, 162 Iowa, 638, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 841, 144 N. W. 339.

The court on quo warranto will award a judgment ousting the city from the exercise of unwarranted corporate powers.

State ex rel. Jackson v. Coffeyville, 78 Kan. 599, 130 Am. St. Rep. 386, 97 Pac. 372.

The agreement made between defendants, under which violators of the law were to be permitted to continue their unlawful business on the payment of fines or forfeitures of $50 each, amounted to a conspiracy "for the perversion or obstruction of justice or the due administration of the law."

Williams v. State, 2 Sneed, 162; McMinnville v. Stroud, 109 Tenn. 569, 72 S. W. 949.

The ouster act is a civil and remedial statute, and as such should be liberally construed, in order to effectuate the purpose of the legislature, which was "to rid the public of an unworthy public servant," and in this particular is entirely different from common-law proceedings criminal in nature.

Cannon v. Wood, 2 Sneed, 177; State ex rel. Timothy v. Howse, 132 Tenn. 452, 178 S. W. 1110.

By their flagrant acts of misconduct in office after their re-election on April 8, 1915, for another term, established on their own admissions, defendants disqualified themselves to continue in the same offices under any commission given them by the people prior to said acts of misconduct.

State ex rel. Billon v. Bourgeois, 45 La. Ann. 1360, 14 So. 28; State v. Hill, 37 Neb. 81, 20 L.R.A. 573, 65 N. W. 794; Territory v. Sanches, 14 N. M. 493, 94 Pac. 954, 20 Ann. Cas. 109; State v. Welch, 109 Iowa, 19, 79 N. W. 369; Brackenridge v. State, 27 Tex. App. 513, 4 L.R.A. 360, 11 S. W. 630; State ex rel. Perez v. Whitaker, 116 La. 947, 41 So. 218; Tibbs v. Atlanta, 125 Ga. 20, 53 S. E. 811; People ex rel. Burby v. Auburn, 85 Hun, 601, 67 N. Y. S. R. 3, 33 N. Y. Sup. 165; State ex rel. Douglas v. Megardden, 85 Minn. 41, 89 Am. St. Rep. 539, 88 N. W. 412; State ex rel. Coleman v. Rose, L.R.A.1916D.

74 Kan. 262, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 843, 86 Pac. 296, 10 Ann. Cas. 927.

The fact that at the time of the filing of the bill there had been no formal reinduction into the same offices to which the defendants Crump and Utley were re-elected on April 8, 1915, prior to the commission of many of the grossest acts of misconduct complained of, does not prevent a forfeiture of all rights to said officers.

Brackenridge v. State, 27 Tex. App. 513, 4 L.R.A. 360, 11 S. W. 630.

The commission given to defendants to succeed themselves in said offices as the result of the election of April 8, 1915, for an additional term of four years, was subject to the provision of the ouster statute, that the acts of misconduct in office therein set forth would work an absolute forfeiture of such commission, and disqualify them from continuing in said offices for such additional term.

State ex rel. Caldwell v. Wilson, 121 N. C. 456, 28 S. E. 554.

The ouster act is clearly applicable to municipal officers.

The legislature does not derive the power from the Constitution, but has all power not expressly withheld from it by the Constitution.

Bell v. Bank of Nashville, Peck (Tenn.) 269; Tipton v. Harris, Peck (Tenn.) 414; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. County Ct. 1 Sneed, 637, 62 Am. Dec. 424; Knoxville & O. R. Co. v. Hicks, 9 Baxt. 442; The Judges' Cases, 102 Tenn. 509, 46 L.R.A. 567, 53 S. W. 134; Grainger County v. State, 111 Tenn. 234, 80 S. W. 750; Wright v. Cunningham, 115 Tenn. 445, 91 S. W. 293.

Municipal corporations and their officers are creatures solely of the legislature.

Luehrman v. Taxing Dist. 2 Lea, 425; State v. Wilson, 12 Lea, 246; Davis v. Knoxville, 90 Tenn. 599, 18 S. W. 254.

While municipal officers are agents of the state for the purpose of enforcing the laws of the state within the confines of the municipality, they are agents only in their relation to the state government, and not primarily state officers, and certainly not so in a constitutional sense.

Porterfield v. State, 92 Tenn. 289, 21 S. W. 519; State ex rel. Wilkinson v. Lane, 181 Ala. 646, 62 So. 31; Draper v. State, 175 Ala. 547, 57 So. 772, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 301; State ex rel. Young v. Robinson, 101 Minn. 277, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1127, 112 N. W. 269; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Wilkins v. Connors, 27 Fla. 329, 9 So. 7; State v. Wilmington, 3 Harr. (Del.) 300; Santo v. State, 2 Iowa, 220, 63 Am. Dec. 487; Britton v. Steber, 62 Mo. 374; State ex rel. Hastings v. Smith, 35 Neb. 13, 16 L.R.A. 791, 52 N. W. 700;

State ex rel. Ward v. Churchman, 3 Penn. (Del.) 361, 51 Atl. 50.

A municipal corporation, expressly the city of Memphis, has inherent power to remove its officers for cause.

Hayden v. Memphis, 100 Tenn. 582, 47 S. W. 182.

The state has the power to remove municipal officers for official misconduct.

State ex rel. Young v. Robinson, 101 Minn. 277, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1127, 112 N. W. 269; Rankin v. Jauman, 4 Idaho, 53, 36 Pac. 502.

But even if the officers of municipal corporations which were not a part of the system of government established by the Constitution were nevertheless intended by the Constitution to be embraced in the title "civil officers," the power of the legislature to provide for the removal of officers of such corporations so created by it was not limited to securing such removal as an incident to indictment and conviction for misdemeanor in office.

Fields v. State, Mart. & Y. 168; Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 27 L. ed. 552, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; State ex rel. Henson v. Sheppard, 192 Mo. 497, 91 S. W. 477; Moore v. Strickling, 46 W. Va. 515, 50 L.R.A. 279, 33 S. E. 274; McDonald v. Guthrie, 43 W. Va. 595, 27 S. E. 844.

Green, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This bill was filed by the state, on relation of the attorney general, against Edward H. Crump, mayor of the city of Memphis, R. A. Uteley, vice mayor and commissioner of the department of fire and police of the city of Memphis, Oliver H. Perry, inspector of police of the city of Memphis, and W. M. Stanton, city judge of Memphis, to remove them from their several positions on account of alleged misconduct in office. The suit was instituted on October 14, 1915, and was based on chapter 11 of the Acts of 1915, known as the ouster law.

The bill averred that defendant Crump was first inducted into the office of mayor of Memphis in January, 1910, and that he was thereafter re-elected for a term of four years beginning January 1, 1912, and it appeared from the bill that said Crump was again re-elected to the said office for a term beginning January 1, 1916.

It was averred that R. A. Uteley was first inducted into the office of vice mayor and commissioner of the department of fire and police in 1912, for a term of four years, and it appeared that he was also re-elected in April, 1915, for another term beginning January 1, 1916.

It was averred that defendant Stanton was elected to the office of city judge by the L.R.A.1916D.

commissioners of the city of Memphis in the summer of 1915, apparently to fill out an unexpired term which ended January 1, 1916.

Proceedings against defendant Perry were dismissed below, and there was no appeal on the part of complainant, and the case against him need not therefore be further noticed.

The bill filed by the attorney general was quite lengthy, and charged defendants Crump, Uteley, and Stanton with various acts of misfeasance and nonfeasance in office covering the entire time during which they held their several positions. It was charged that they had neglected to enforce the laws against the sale of liquor, against gambling, and against prostitution, that they had connived at and encouraged the violation of these laws, and that there existed and had been conducted, during their terms, in open violation of law, in the city of Memphis, numerous liquor saloons, gambling houses, and houses of ill fame. All these matters were set out in detail, and the bill charged the employment of certain colorable devices by which the defendants permitted the aforesaid unlawful occupations to be pursued in the city of Memphis.

Passing over some of the preliminary steps taken by the defendants, and noticing only those things which are before us on this appeal, it is sufficient to say that defendants filed an answer to the bill of the attorney general in which they denied many of the charges made against them, and assailed the ouster act as unconstitutional, and contended that at any rate said act had no application to them. Defendants also demanded a jury to try the issues of fact, and raised some other questions which will be noticed in the course of this opinion.

The chancellors were of opinion that chapter 11 of the Acts of 1915 was constitutional, and that it did apply to the defendants, and they were furthermore of opinion that defendants were not entitled to a jury trial. Certain other questions of law were likewise determined adversely to defendants, and the case was thereupon set for hearing on its merits by the chancellors.

When the case was called for trial, counsel were asked for a preliminary statement of the issues and the probable course of the proof. Counsel for the attorney general told the court that they expected to prove and had witnesses ready to prove every material allegation of the bill.

Counsel for defendants thereupon stated that, relying on all the preliminary questions made by them, such as the right to trial by jury, the applicability of the act, etc., and desiring an early determination of those questions by this court, they had concluded to introduce no proof and thereby delay final determination of the cause. They agreed that for the purposes of this case they would admit that the attorney general could prove all the relevant charges made against defendants in the bill.

After much controversy between the court and counsel as to the effect of this admission, the chancellors proceeded to treat the facts charged in the bill as if they were facts proven, and pronounced a judgment of ouster against the defendants.

We do not deem it necessary to dwell upon the discussion of counsel as to the effect of defendants' admission. According to the language of defendants' counsel, the relevant facts charged in the bill were admitted to be true for the purposes of this case. "This case" is the only case we are here undertaking to determine, and we accordingly treat the charges of the bill as true.

The decree of the chancellors herein removing defendants from office was pronounced November 4, 1916.

The first question presented for our determination is as to the effect of this decree upon the terms of defendants Crump and Utley beginning January 1, 1916. Their terms pending at the date of the decree expired January 1, 1916.

These defendants insist that their terms, beginning January 1, 1916, were not in issue in the proceedings below, and were not affected thereby. Defendants were assuming that such was the case, and were about to qualify and enter into the office of mayor and vice mayor, to which they had been elected in April, 1915, for terms beginning January 1, 1916, when they were restrained from so doing by an interlocutory order heretofore made by this court. The court thought it best to preserve the existing status until the case was finally determined.

It is insisted on behalf of the state that the decree of November 4, 1915, was effective, not only to remove defendants Crump and Utley from their offices for the terms they were then serving, ending January 1, 1916, but that said decree deprived said defendants of all rights to their future terms, beginning January 1, 1916, to which they had been elected in April, 1915.

There has been much discussion as to whether the 1916-20 terms of defendants Crump and Utley were fairly involved upon the pleadings in this case, and likewise as to whether the decree below undertook to adjudicate anything with reference to defendants' rights respecting these terms. We do not find it necessary to consider either the pleadings or the decree to determine this dispute. To reach the true result, we must go further back and examine the act upon which these pleadings and this decreed are based, and ascertain from this statute if proceedings had thereunder can by any possibility affect defendants' enjoyment of a term of office not then current.

Chapter 11 of the Acts of 1915, known as the ouster act, is entitled: "An Act to Provide for the Removal of Unfaithful Public Officers, and Providing a Procedure therefor."

The first section of the act provides that any state, county, or municipal officer who knowingly or wilfully misconducts himself in office, or who knowingly or wilfully neglects to perform any duty enjoined upon him by the laws of the state, or who shall become intoxicated, engage in gambling, or violate any penal statute involving moral turpitude, "shall forfeit his office, and shall be ousted from such office in the manner hereinafter provided."

Section 8 of this statute provides: "That if the defendant shall be found guilty, judgment of ouster shall be rendered against him, and he shall be ousted from his office."

There is no provision whatever in the act attaching to a judgment of ouster any disqualification on the part of the ousted official to hold any other office in the state or to hold the same office thereafter. It was stated at the bar that the bill originally contained this feature, but that such provision for disqualification was eliminated before it was finally enacted into a law.

The sole penalty provided by the statute is that a defendant found guilty thereunder shall forfeit his office or shall be ousted from his office.

What, then, was defendant Crump's "office," and what was defendant Utley's "office," at the time of the institution of the present suit and at the time of final decree?

This court has recently had several occasions to consider the matter of title to office and possession of office. In State ex rel. Gann v. Malone, 131 Tenn. 149, 174 S. W. 257, a sheriff-elect died between the time of his election and the date fixed by law for the beginning of the term. After his death the county court assumed that there was a vacancy in his office, and proceeded to elect his successor. This court, however, held that deceased never acquired the office, and never possessed it, inasmuch as he had never executed bond and taken the oath. It was accordingly concluded that, since deceased died prior to his qualification, his death created no vacancy in the office. The case was the same as if there had been no election at all, and the old official was adjudged entitled to hold over, under well-known provisions of the law. It follows from this decision that defendants Crump and Utley had no title accrued to their offices for the 1916-20 term at any time during the proceedings below. They were not in office at the time of the chancellors' decree in such a way as that the death of either of them would have created a vacancy in office for the 1916-20 term; that is to say, they were not in possession of these offices for this subsequent term.

To "oust" means "to put out of possession; to eject or dispossess or deprive of." International Dictionary. Our statute gives no additional force to the word. There can, therefore, be no ouster without previous possession, and the contrary contention involves a contradiction in terms and disregard of the meaning of the English language.

But to return to the legal definition of the term "office" and to a consideration of the legal effect of removing one from office. In the late case of Day v. Sharp, 128 Tenn. 340, 161 S. W. 994, the court said that "office" implied "not merely place, but term or tenure as well."

In Day v. Sharp, supra, the court quoted with approval the case of United States v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 385, 18 L. ed. 830, in which it was said that the term "office" "embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties."

Likewise this court cited with approval State ex rel. Childs v. Dart, 57 Minn. 261, 59 N. W. 190; State ex rel. Coleman v. Rose, 74 Kan. 262, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 843, 86 Pac. 296, 10 Ann. Cas. 927; People v. Ahearn, 196 N. Y. 221, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1153, 89 N. E. 930.

In the cases just referred to certain officials were removed from office or declared ineligible for office during the terms to which they had been elected, and undertook to have themselves re-elected to fill out the unexpired portions of the identical terms. Under these facts in all these cases it was held that the particular term or tenure of the officer was a part of and included in his office, and that, when he was removed from his office, he was removed for the particular term or tenure he was then enjoying.

So, when one is removed from an office, he is removed for the current term, and he cannot thereafter be re-elected to that term. This is so because the term is part of the office.

Accordingly, when defendants were removed from the offices of mayor and vice-mayor, they were deprived of the right to exercise certain functions and receive certain compensation, and they were deprived of that right for their terms then current. A removal from office extends to the limit of the current term, but such removal, unless a statute give it greater effect, cannot go beyond the current term because the L.R.A.1916D.

office itself is limited by the term. If we go beyond the current term, then we have to deal with another office.

Another case referred to in Day v. Sharp, which the court said was in accord with the reasoning of Day v. Sharp, was Re Advisory Opinion, 31 Fla. 1, 18 L.R.A. 594, 12 So. 114.

In the latter case one Johnson was tax collector of Duval county, Florida. He was elected for a term beginning in January, 1891, and ending in January, 1893. He was re-elected in the early part of October, 1892, for another term beginning in January, 1893, and ending in January, 1895. On October 29, 1892, after his re-election, he was suspended from office for misconduct, under provisions of the Florida laws. Under these circumstances the governor of Florida was in doubt as to whether he should issue to Johnson, pending his suspension, a commission for the term to which he had been elected, beginning in 1893, and submitted this question to the supreme court of Florida. The court concluded that it was the duty of the governor so to issue such commission; and said:

"The final consummation intended by a suspension must, as shown in State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Johnson, 30 Fla. 433, 18 L.R.A. 410, 11 So. 845, lately decided, always be a removal of the officer; and this removal is for the remainder of the term from which he is suspended, and nothing more. The remainder of the existing term is, including its incidents and rights, in our judgment, all the removal can act on or affect. There is certainly no express provision in the organic law that it shall affect any other term: nor is the officer in the exercise of other official functions than those covered by his title to the pending term.

"Again, the Constitution has not given to the suspension or removal the effect of disqualifying the suspended or removed person from holding the same or any other office in the future; on the contrary, not only is there an utter absence of any such provision, but an intention that it shall not have this effect is also shown in a separate and distinct declaration of what the framers of the Constitution and the people intended should have that effect, which declaration is to be found in the 5th section of the 6th article. That section directs the legislature to enact the necessary laws to exclude from every office of honor, power, trust, or profit, civil or military, within the state, all persons convicted of bribery, perjury, larceny, or of infamous crime, and for other causes therein stated, yet provides that this legal disability shall not accrue until after trial and conviction in due form of law. The legislation enforcing this section is to be found in the Revised Statutes, § 211; and the 214th section enacts that every office shall be deemed vacant upon the conviction of the incumbent of any felony or of an offense involving a violation of his official oath.

"The limited effect which it was intended that the suspensions and removals under discussion should have is also shown by the provision of the section which authorizes them (§ 15, art. 4), that 'the suspension or removal herein authorized shall not relieve the officer from indictment for any misdemeanor in office.'

"A suspension or removal not having of itself the effect to taint the person or officer, either while suspended or after removal, with any disqualification to hold any office, we are unable to see how it can affect his right to exercise the functions of a future term of the same office. He is as qualified for or as eligible to election to a future term pending the suspension, or after the removal, as he was before the suspension.

"Perhaps it may be said that it is contrary to good public policy that a person who has been suspended during one term of an office should be permitted to enter upon the duties of a subsequent term of the same office, pending such suspension. To this the answer is that a public policy which would impose upon the citizen disabilities as to official station must at least be consistent with the organic law which defines the requisites for such station, and not antagonistic thereto. If the Constitution attached to the removal, whenever it might be consummated by the concurrence of the senate, a disability to hold the succeeding or future term or terms of the same office, it might naturally and logically follow that, pending the suspension, the functions of the succeeding term could not be performed; but, where it fails entirely, as it does, to give even the removal, whenever consummated, any such effect, no room is left as a standing place for any such theory of public policy."

The foregoing advisory opinion is referred to by the editor of volume 18 L.R.A. 591, as presenting an unusual question. The question being unusual, and the court's conclusion so well reasoned, we have thought it proper to make the extended quotation.

We find the Florida case referred to only twice,—in Day v. Sharp, supra, as above stated, and in People v. Ahearn, 196 N. Y. 221, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1153, 89 N. E. 930. It seems to be exactly in point here.

In People v. Ahearn a borough president had been removed from office, and his rights were being considered under a subsequent appointment to the same term of the same L.R.A.1916D.

office. It was argued that, if defendant's removal was to be construed as having the effect of barring him from appointment to the vacancy created by his removal, it must likewise be regarded as having effected a general disqualification to hold any office.

The New York court of appeals said: "That argument does not require serious attention. The defendant was tried on charges affecting his administration of a certain office during a certain term, and as a punishment he was removed from that office. Because such removal barred him from immediate appointment to fill the vacancy for the unexpired term, it ought not to be seriously claimed that it disqualified him to take some other office or to be elected to a new term of the same office, neither of which were in any way involved in his trial and from neither of which he was removed." 196 N. Y. 221.

It is urged, however, that inasmuch as these defendants had already been elected to office to the 1916-20 term, at the time the ouster suit was filed, they had some sort of title to the office which could be involved and set aside in the ouster proceedings.

This argument is difficult to follow. The ouster act was passed to remove unworthy public servants from offices they held, not to contest their qualifications for other offices or other terms of the same office. No judgment of disqualification to hold any other office or any other term of the same office can be pronounced in an ouster suit.

Without doubt defendants might have been elected at any time after the decree passed in the case below to the 1916-20 term of their offices; for the judgment of ouster imposed absolutely no disqualification upon them. Since the judgment of ouster in no way affected their eligibility for the subsequent term, and since in such proceedings the validity of their election could not be called into question, it seems utterly immaterial that the election to the 1916-20 term was held prior to the rendition of the court's judgment below. This election did not put them in possession of any offices, as shown in State ex rel. Gann v. Malone, 131 Tenn. 149, 174 S. W. 257, and without possession there can be no ouster. The election without qualification did not make them public officers, and they were therefore not within the purview of the statute as to the future term. To contend that there can be an ouster when there has been no entry, under our statute, is an argument too paradoxical to require further notice.

We do not find the authorities relied on by learned counsel for the attorney general in this connection to be relevant to the facts of this case, and consequently omit any discussion of them.

While from what has been said it seems that little can be accomplished by this particular proceeding, since the terms of the offices in litigation have expired, nevertheless we find it necessary to dispose of other questions arising in the case, inasmuch as salaries and costs are involved.

The first assignment of error makes the point that the defendants below were entitled to a jury to try the issues of fact presented by the pleadings in this case.

It is to be doubted whether defendants are in any position to make such a question in this court after conceding for the purposes of the case that the pertinent allegations of the bill were to be taken as true. If they could, however, reserve the jury question under these circumstances, it has been fully treated by the court, and their contention overruled in the case of State ex rel. Timothy v. Howse, infra, and need not be discussed here.

The second assignment of error goes to the action of the chancellors in holding chapter 11 of the Acts of 1915 applicable to the present defendants. It is contended that defendants are civil officers within the meaning of § 5 of article 5 of the Constitution of Tennessee, and that, as such civil officers, they can only be proceeded against and removed from office by criminal prosecution or indictment under the said section of the Constitution.

An elaborate argument is made by counsel for defendants in which they undertake to demonstrate that defendants are civil officers within the meaning of the Constitution. This question is difficult, but for the purposes of this decision only it will be conceded that defendants are civil officers within the meaning of the Constitution.

In order to get the context and intelligently consider the constitutional provisions relied on, we set out §§ 4 and 5 of article 5 of the Constitution of Tennessee, as follows:

"Section 4. Who may be Impeached.—The governor, judges of the supreme court, judges of the inferior courts, chancellors, attorneys for the state, treasurer, comptroller and secretary of state, shall be liable to impeachment, whenever they may, in the opinion of the house of representatives, commit any crime in their official capacity which may require disqualification; but judgment shall only extend to removal from office, and disqualification to fill any office thereafter. The party shall, nevertheless, be liable to indictment, trial, judgment and punishment according to law. The legislature now has, and shall continue to have, power to relieve from the penalties imposed, any person disqualified from holding office L.R.A.1916D.

by the judgment of a court of impeachment."

Section 5. Officers Liable to Indictment.—Justices of the peace, and other civil officers, not hereinbefore mentioned, for crimes or misdemeanors in office, shall be liable to indictment in such courts as the legislature may direct; and, upon conviction, shall be removed from office by said court, as if found guilty on impeachment; and shall be subject to such other punishment as may be prescribed by law."

The argument for defendants is that, when the Constitution provides the causes for the removal of an officer and the procedure under which such removal is to be accomplished, such provisions are exclusive, and such officers cannot be removed for any other cause or in any other manner. We are referred to Judge Ostron's observation, as follows: "Whenever a state Constitution prescribes a particular manner in which power shall be executed, it prohibits every other mode of executing such power. On that particular subject, the authority is exhausted by the constitutional provision, and an attempt to render it nugatory by law would be an attempt at repeal. The Constitution being the paramount law, the act of assembly coming in conflict would be void." Smith v. Normant, 5 Yerg. 272.

To the same effect, see Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, p. 99; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 457; dissenting opinion of Judge Freeman in State ex rel. Halsey v. Gaines, 2 Lea, 347.

It is urged that by § 5 of article 5 of the Constitution, above quoted, the procedure for removal of certain civil officers is provided; namely, by indictment in such courts as the legislature may direct, and upon conviction therein. It is accordingly contended that, the defendants being such civil officers, and the Constitution having prescribed a method for their removal, the method so prescribed is exclusive, and defendants may not be removed from office in any other way.

The vice on this argument lies in the assumption that § 5 of article 5 of the Constitution designs primarily to provide a method for the removal of the civil officers therein mentioned. Such is not the real object of this section.

The dominant purpose of this section of the Constitution is to provide for the indictment or criminal prosecution of the civil officers indicated. As a part of the penalty to be inflicted upon conviction, officials are to be removed from office as prescribed, and to suffer any other punishment fixed by the legislature. The removal of the officer is incidental in this section. The true subject thereof is the indictment and criminal prosecution of the officer.

This is made manifest by a comparison of § 4 of article 5 of the Constitution with this § 5 of the same article.

Section 4 provides both for the removal and for the criminal prosecution of the governor, judges, and officers therein named. Section 4 provides that the governor, judges, and others shall be liable to impeachment by the house of representatives, and removed from office, disqualified, etc. It also provides that the governor and others shall be liable to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law.

Section 5, however, contains no provisions with reference to bare proceedings for removal. The simple removal of officers is not considered in § 5 at all. No method is provided or suggested for removal alone. Section 5 is obviously intended to secure criminal prosecution of those committing crimes and misdemeanors in office, and, as said before, removal from office is only an incident or part of the punishment following conviction.

Inasmuch, therefore, as the Constitution has not undertaken to regulate proceedings for the removal of officers when such proceedings are civil in character, it follows that it was competent for the legislature to formulate a scheme of its own.

As observed in State ex rel. Timothy v. Howse, 132 Tenn. 452, 178 S. W. 1110, ouster proceedings are civil in their nature. Such is the weight of authority. See cases collected in note to Territory v. Sanches, 20 Ann. Cas. 112.

Section 5 of article 5 relates alone to criminal proceedings against the officers therein named. No civil remedy is suggested. The matter of civil procedure is left entirely open.

We have a number of cases sustaining the removal of officers by civil procedure, where such officers have been guilty of offenses punishable by indictment and criminal prosecution. In such civil proceedings the defendant is not entitled to constitutional rights we might demand in a criminal prosecution. Those civil proceedings are merely collateral to criminal proceedings which result incidentally upon conviction in a judgment of removal. Sevier v. Justices of Washington County, Peck (Tenn.) 335; Tipton v. Harris, Peck (Tenn.) 414; Fields v. State, Mart. & Y. 168.

Consider also proceedings against public officers under our so-called quo warranto statutes contained in Shannon's Code, §§ 5185 et seq.

Our cases are in accord with the general rule. Speaking of statutory removals by civil procedure in court, it is said: "In these cases of removals by courts the courts may remove one for an offense which is punishable criminally, even where such person has not been convicted on an indictment for such offense, and constitutional provisions that one shall not be answerable for a criminal offense except on indictment do not apply." 29 Cyc. 1407.

The other assignments of error interposed in behalf of defendants go to the liability of defendants to proceedings under the ouster act for misdemeanors committed in terms of office previous to the one pending at the time of the suit, and to misdemeanors committed prior to the passage of the ouster act, and prior to the passage of chapter 37, Acts of 1915, imposing certain duties upon municipal officers. These assignments raise no material issues whatever in this case, and need not be considered by the court. The more flagrant misdemeanors charged against these defendants were committed during the terms pending at the time this bill was filed, and after the passage of the ouster act, and after the passage of chapter 37 of the Acts of 1915. All these charges of fact being admitted, there was abundant evidence to justify the decree of the court below.

In a supplemental brief filed for defendants it is insisted that §§ 11 and 12 of the act are without its caption and are otherwise objectionable. We think these sections are within the title. If we should conclude such sections violated other provisions of the Constitution, it would be our duty to elide them from the statute in a proper case in accordance with § 16 of the same statute. Sections 11 and 12 have not, however, been invoked in this case, and there is no occasion to test their validity.

It results that the decree of the chancellors is affirmed. Said decree does not, however, affect the rights of defendants Crump and Utley to their term beginning January 1, 1916. The order heretofore entered restraining them from qualifying for their offices for the 1916-20 term is vacated and set aside.

Annotation—Re-election of public officer after ouster for misconduct.

For unexpired term.

It is generally held that the removal of an officer for misconduct will preclude his re-election for the unexpired L.R.A.1916D.

term. As stated in STATE EX REL. THOMPSON v. CRUMP, ante, 951, the term is part of the office, and when an officer is removed his removal is for the current term, and he cannot thereafter be elected to that term.

Thus, where a mayor of a city of the first class by official misconduct forfeits his office and the forfeiture is judicially declared in a quo warranto proceeding, the judgment of ouster will operate to deprive him of the right to take or hold the office during the remainder of the term to which he has been elected. State ex rel. Coleman v. Rose (1906) 74 Kan. 262, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 843, 86 Pac. 296, 10 Ann. Cas. 927 (writ of error dismissed in (1906) 203 U. S. 580, 51 L. ed 326, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 779).

So, the electors of such a city cannot, in a special election, restore that which was forfeited, nor limit the effect of the enforcement of the judgment of ouster by electing the unfaithful officer for the remainder of the term forfeited (Kan.) Ibid.

In State ex rel. Childs v. Dart (1894) 57 Minn. 261, 59 N. W. 190, a county treasurer was removed in a proper proceeding for the misappropriation of public funds; afterward, the board of county commissioners, which had authority to fill the vacancy, elected him to fill out the term. The question arose whether there was power in the board to reinvest him with the office in that manner. In deciding that there was not, the supreme court of Minnesota said: "The removal proceedings cannot be nullified or reversed in that manner. Such removal proceedings are not merely for the purpose of ousting the person holding the office; they include a charge that he has forfeited his qualification for the office for the remainder of the term. They are brought to declare a forfeiture of a civil right, his eligibility, his qualification to hold that office for the rest of that term. The proceeding is not brought for his removal from a day or a week or a month of his term, but from the whole of the remainder of his term, and the final order of removal is not made for his removal from a day or a week or a month of his term, but from the whole of the remainder of his term. Nothing less is involved in the proceedings. Whether the voters at the polls could condone the offense by which he forfeited his office it is not necessary here to decide. We are of the opinion that the county commissioners could not do so."

So, where a councilman has been ousted from office it is held in Com. v. Hamilton (1910) 19 Pa. Dist. R. 794, that he cannot exercise the office by subsequent appointment during the unexpired term.

The court said that "under the pleadings it is admitted that, immediately on learning of the judgment of ouster, the respondent resigned his office of councilman and was appointed by the borough council to the vacancy created by his resignation. The action of council, we are clear, gives the respondent no title to the office. That which the respondent possessed and enjoyed prior to the entry of judgment of ouster was a term of office, a piece of property as definite and well defined as a piece of land, and that definite entire thing is what he forfeited,—is what the judgment took from him. Manifestly he must remain divorced from this term of office unless the judgment is reversed. While the judgment stands, no power can unite him with his forfeited term."

So, one removed from a municipal office by the governor under statutory authority for maladministration therein is not eligible to re-election by the aldermen, under a statutory provision empowering them to fill a vacancy so caused for the unexpired term. People v. Ahearn (1909) 196 N. Y. 221, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1153, 89 N. E. 930. "It is of course plain," observed the court, "that the legislature intended that the proceeding should be a serious one and an effective method of getting rid of unfit public officials. It is equally clear, and will doubtless be so conceded in anything which may be said or written on the other side of this question, that this purpose will be frustrated and the administration of the law turned into a farce if under it an official may be immediately reappointed and a removal turned into a mere temporary suspension. In order to avoid such a result, and keeping in mind the purpose of the statute, we are justified, in my judgment, in construing the removal for which it provides as meaning a permanent and lasting ouster for the entire remaining term of the incumbent from the office which he has been filling and whose obligations he has been found unable or unwilling to discharge."

The court further observed: "Passing beyond the decisions of courts, the attempt has been made to sustain the views urged in behalf of appellant by reference to the action of legislative bodies in passing on the cases of those who had been re-elected to fill vacancies caused by their expulsion, and much importance has been given to the action of the English House of Commons in the Wilkes Case (1763) 2 Wils. (Eng.) 151. Wilkes was expelled for an offense of a political nature,—a seditious libel,—which does not appear to have been committed in any official capacity or to have involved personal turpitude or misfeasance in office; the House of Commons exercising a very broad power to expel for any cause which in its judgment unfits a member for parliamentary duties. Story, Const. § 838. It was at first determined by the House of Commons that this expulsion rendered Wilkes ineligible for election to fill the vacancy caused by his expulsion; but this action was subsequently rescinded. If necessary it would seem that a substantial distinction might be drawn in resulting effects between a case of expulsion by a legislative body exercising very comprehensive jurisdiction over its own membership, for political or other reasons not amounting to betrayal of official duties, and where there may be no hearing, and a case where the removal is based solely on official misfeasance, and only occurs after a hearing; but it is unnecessary to consider this here, for the legislative doctrine and practice adopted by the House of Commons in the Wilkes Case, if considered applicable to a case of expulsion for official misfeasance, has been fairly rejected by our national House of Representatives upon facts which make the latter's action a basis of very pertinent argument here. In 1870 expulsion proceedings were instituted against one Whittemore for alleged sale of appointments to the naval and military academies. Pending such proceedings, the accused resigned from his office, and he was then, at a special election, chosen to fill the vacancy caused by such resignation. When the credentials of such election were laid before the House, a resolution was duly adopted 'that the House of Representatives decline to allow said Whittemore to be sworn as a representative, . . . and direct that his credentials be returned to him.' Accompanying this resolution was a preamble reciting the facts of the proceedings of expulsion against Whittemore and the fact that he had escaped expulsion by resigning. It was thus determined: First, that a member might not escape the effect of expulsion proceedings by resigning; and, second, that a member thus proceeded against for official misfeasance was not eligible for election to fill the vacancy caused by his resignation to escape expulsion."

It may be stated incidentally that one cannot avoid removal from office for intoxication by resigning and being re-appointed by the proper authority. L.R.A.1916D.

State ex rel. Cosson v. Baughn (1913) 162 Iowa, 308, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 912, 143 N. W. 1100. See also to the same effect, State v. Welsh (1899) 109 Iowa, 19, 79 N. W. 369, involving the right to remove an officer during a term for which he has been re-elected, for official misconduct or neglect of duty during his previous term, wherein it is stated that the very object of removal is to rid the community of a corrupt, incapable, or unworthy official. His acts during his previous term quite as effectually stamp him as such, as those of that he may be serving. Re-election does not condone the offense.

So, as stated in Skeen v. Paine (1907) 32 Utah, 295, 90 Pac. 440, if an official, a member of a board or body in which is vested the power to fill vacancies, can, when his derelictions are discovered, resign and be at once reinstated in his former position and thus escape the effects of a violation of positive law, then the statute giving the right of removal might as well be repealed. In this case one charged with receiving illegal fees as a city councilman resigned his office after the fees had been declared illegal and refunded the same to the city; the council accepted his resignation and then reappointed him to fill the vacancy caused by his resignation. It was held that the resignation was a mere sham and no defense to removal proceedings.

The view, however, taken by the above cases is opposed by State ex rel. Tyrrell v. Jersey City (1856) 25 N. J. L. 536, wherein it was held that where an alderman was expelled from office because of official corruption and bribery, the sentence of expulsion did not disqualify the individual expelled from being re-elected for the unexpired term. The court said: "We are of opinion that the sentence of expulsion, or amotion, did not disqualify Tyrrell to be re-elected to the same office. When the council expelled him, they had exhausted their power; their authority went no further; the charter does not annex to the sentence of expulsion that of disqualification; nor have the council, nor could they legally. Where the law annexes a disqualification to an offense, as part of its punishment, it does it in express terms. U. S. Const. art. 1, § 3, pl. 7; N. J. Const. art. 6, § 3, pl. 3; Nix. Dig., title 'Witness' § 1. It was argued, with some earnestness, that the virtual effect of the re-election in this case was to reverse the judgment of the common council, and that the electors of the ward had no power to do that. The conclusion may be admitted if the premises are sound. But in point of fact here is no reversal of the judgment; that was executed; the offender was deprived of his office. The judgment was a judgment of expulsion, and that was carried into effect. The judgment extended no further, it was not a judgment of disqualification operating in futuro. The law does not add that penalty to the offense of which he was convicted, and we can add nothing to the law. The same answer must be given to the argument that the expulsion was for the term, and operated as a disqualification for the remainder of the term for which Tyrrell had been originally elected. As future disqualification is no part of the sentence authorized or inflicted, no such effect can be given to it by the court. The operation, the effect, the consequences of the judgment, began and ended with the expulsion. It is asked with pungency, by those who represent the common council, whether a member of that body, who is adjudged to-day to be guilty of receiving bribes, of selling his vote and influence, or of other gross official corruption, and is therefore expelled as unfit to exercise his office, or even to associate with men of character, can possibly be fit to fill the same office to-morrow; and whether such a man can be thrust back upon a body of honorable and upright men, as their official compeer and associate, by a misguided constituency, with the odor of his corruption fresh about him. These, however, are questions for the lawmaking power to consider. It is for the legislature to say how far it is necessary, in particular cases, to limit the power of the members of a common council, or punish particular offenses, and not for the courts. The legislature may well have supposed that the power to expel was all that was necessary; and that what remained might safely be trusted to the hands of the voting members of the corporation."

For another or following term.

A removal, however, does not extend beyond the limits of the current term. And the following cases support STATE ex rel. THOMPSON v. CRUMP, ante, 951, in holding that an officer who has been ousted for misconduct is not thereby precluded from entering upon a succeeding term to which he had been previously elected.

Thus, the decision, Re Advisory Opinion (1893) 31 Fla. 1, 18 L.R.A. 594, 12 So. 114, discussed at length in STATE ex rel. THOMPSON v. CRUMP, holds that a suspension from office and appointment to fill the office, under § 15 of article 4 of the Constitution, do not affect the suspended officer's right to qualify for or exercise the duties of a succeeding term of the same office; nor do they prevent a governor succeeding the one who made the suspension from commissioning the suspended officer for the new term.

So, as stated in People v. Ahern (1909) 196 N. Y. 221, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1153, 89 N. E. 930, it is true that it is urged that, if defendant's removal is to be construed as having the effect of barring him from appointment to the vacancy, it must be regarded as having effected a general disqualification to hold any office. That argument does not require serious attention. The defendant was tried on charges affecting his administration of a certain office during a certain term, and as a punishment he was removed from that office. Because such removal barred him from immediate appointment to fill the vacancy for the unexpired term it ought not to be seriously claimed that it disqualified him to take some other office, or to be elected to a new term of the same office, neither of which were in any way involved in this trial and from neither of which he was removed.

J. D. C.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

JOHN W. PERRY, Admr., etc., of Clifford R. Dugger, Deceased,
v.

OHIO VALLEY ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

(72 W. Va. 282, 78 S. E. 692.)

Master and servant — risk of electric wires.

1. A servant employed to reset electric L.R.A.1916D.

poles, requiring his climbing amongst live wires for the purpose of attaching a pulley to the old poles used in hoisting the new ones, assumes the risk of all ordinary dangers incident to so hazardous an employment, but not the risk of unknown and ab-

Headnotes by WILLIAMS, J.

Note. — Upon the general question of a duty to prevent contact of wires carrying electric current, see note to Paducah Light & P. Co. v. Parkman, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 587. As to injury to linemen through defect normal dangers due to the master's negligence.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — uninsulated joint.

2. It is negligence for which the master is liable to a servant so employed, who is injured or killed on account thereof, to permit a joint or connection to be made in a highly charged electric wire and remain uninsulated, and so close to one of the metal braces supporting a cross-arm on the pole as to charge it.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — duty of master — inspection.

3. The master, acquiescing in the use which his servant makes of the old poles in performing his work, is bound to see that the wires thereon are not in an abnormally dangerous condition. The rule in regard to reasonably safe appliances with which to work applies, and the servant is not required to make inspection.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trial — jury — contributory negligence.

4. In view of the evidence in this case the question of contributory negligence is held to be a fact for the jury to determine. For other cases, see Trial, II. c, 8, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(April 15, 1913.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Cabell County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the unlawful death of plaintiff's intestate, for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Vinson & Thompson for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. L. D. Isbell, J. W. Perry, and Holt & Duncan, for defendant in error:

The fact that the work in which the servant is employed is that of repairing or making preparations to repair a railroad track does not diminish the company's duty to furnish safe and suitable means and instruments to do his work. If it requires him to use the old track in doing the work, it should make the track reasonably safe for that purpose.

1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 69, note 7; Madden v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 303, 20 N. W. 317.

in poles or appurtenances, see note to Lynch v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co. 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 174, and Consolidated Gas, E. L. & P. Co. v. Chambers, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 509.

As to whether a servant may assume the risk of dangers created by the master's negligence, see note to Scheurer v. Banner L.R.A. 1916D.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Trespass on the case by the administrator of Clifford R. Dugger, deceased, to recover damages for his unlawful death, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff for $7,500, and defendant was awarded a writ of error.

Deceased was in the service of defendant as foreman of a gang of men engaged in erecting electric poles. Two methods are commonly employed in raising them. One is to lift them by means of spike poles, and the other is, if they are being erected to take the place of old ones, to hoist them with block and tackle attached to the old pole. On the 12th of September, 1910, deceased was preparing to hoist a pole at the corner of Third avenue and Seventh street in the city of Huntington. He ascended the old pole, which was equipped with a primary wire carrying 2,300 voltage, a transformer, and telephone wires, and had fastened the block and pulleys to the pole, just above the lower or third crossbeam, and had begun to descend, when J. W. Sturgeon, defendant's general line foreman, who was standing near the foot of the pole, called to him that the "fall" line was not properly adjusted; that it should hang next to the pole, instead of on the outside of the block, as it was. Deceased then returned, adjusted the rope, and in descending the pole caught hold of one of the metal braces supporting the crossarm. The brace being highly charged with electricity, and his body coming in contact with one of the telephone wires, a short circuit was formed, and he was killed. There was an uninsulated joint, 3 inches long, in the primary wire, which, by contact with the brace, caused it to become charged with a deadly current of electricity.

Workmen in climbing the pole were liable to come in contact with the exposed joint, and it was liable to come in contact with the brace. It was negligence to leave it in such a condition. Mitchell v. United States Coal & Coke Co. 67 W. Va. 480, 68 S. E. 366; Thomas v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 54 W. Va. 395, 46 S. E. 217; and Thornburg v. City & E. G. R. Co. 65 W. Va. 379, 64 S. E. 358. It is a common practice among pole climbers to take hold of the metal braces, and, if the wiring is normal, there is no danger in doing so.

Rubber Co. 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1207; and as to servant's assumption of risk of dangers created by the master's negligence, which he might have discovered by the exercise of ordinary care, see note to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Birch, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1250.

But nonliability is claimed on two grounds: (1) Assumption of risk, and (2) contributory negligence. The availability of the first defense depends upon the scope of deceased's employment. If he was employed to do any and all kinds of work in repairing an old line which he knew was abnormally dangerous, then he assumed the risk of all the dangers incident to that kind of work. If he knew the wires, as well as the poles, were out of repair, and was employed to put both in proper condition, while the current was on the wires, the cause of his death was one of the assumed risks, and plaintiff cannot recover. If such was his knowledge and such the scope of his undertaking, he must have expected to encounter such dangers as the one that caused his death.

But if he was simply employed to set poles, and did not know that the wires were in an abnormally unsafe condition, he had a right to assume that they were no more dangerous than similar wires, in like use, ordinarily are. If such be the case, the exposed wire was an extraordinary hazard which he did not assume, because it is not reasonable to suppose he could have anticipated a condition so abnormal and unusual. The law does not burden the workman with the assumption of extraordinary risks. He assumes only such as an ordinarily prudent man knows are incident to the employment. However dangerous the employment, the workman is never held to assume risks not ordinarily incident thereto, and of which he has no knowledge. 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 270.

The scope of deceased's employment was a fact for jury determination, and we think they could very properly infer from the testimony of defendant's own witnesses that it was limited to setting poles. He had worked as a member of the same gang of which he was made foreman, under another foreman by the name of Shafer, from some time in June to some time in August, 1910, when Shafer quit. He then applied to W. W. Magoon, defendant's general manager, for the position of foreman, and was employed as such. Mr. Magoon testifies that he then said to him: "You must remember that this work down here takes a very careful man, a man who knows how to handle live wires, because that work has got to be done with live wires, in order to keep our service going in town." He said, 'I can handle that all right,' and I then gave him instructions. I said, 'All right, go ahead,' and he took charge of the work."

On cross-examination he said:

Q. He was removing old poles and putting in new ones at the time?

L.R.A.1916D.

A. He was working in the line of his work; yes, sir. . . .

Q. His duty was simply to put in new poles, was it?

A. No, sir; his duties were to make all corrections on that line, changing the wires and general line of work.

But he had been working in this gang either as a common laborer or as foreman, from June to September 12th, and there is no proof that he ever transferred a single wire from an old pole to a new one.

J. W. Sturgeon, who was the "line foreman," testified on his examination in chief as follows, viz.:

Q. Do you know who had charge of the work that was being done there at that place, Mr. Sturgeon?

A. What do you mean, what time?

Q. At the time this accident occurred?

A. Mr. Dugger had charge of setting the poles.

Q. Was there anything else being done?

A. Nothing, only setting poles, at that time.

On cross-examination he testified as follows:

Q. You were foreman there, were you, Mr. Sturgeon?

A. I was foreman over the whole line; yes, sir.

Q. And Dugger was under you, was he?

A. Yes, sir.

The rule in regard to a safe place and safe appliances applies in this case, because the old pole was a means or appliance which deceased used in the performance of his work, with the master's acquiescence. It was therefore defendant's duty to see that the wires on the pole were in a reasonably safe condition. Deceased was bound, of course, to take notice of whether the strength of the pole was sufficient for the purpose for which he was about to use it, because the new one was being erected to take its place, and that was sufficient to put him on guard as to any defect in the pole; but he was not chargeable with the duty to use extraordinary care to avoid unknown danger from imperfect wiring. There being no proof that the line was being repaired because the wires were bad or imperfectly strung, deceased was not bound to use extraordinary caution. He was not required to inspect the wiring to see if there were hidden dangers or latent defects. This case is distinguishable from Whorley v. Raleigh Lumber Co. 70 W. Va. 122, 73 S. E. 263, 3 N. C. C. A. 524, cited by counsel for defendant. In that case Whorley was assisting in installing machinery in a sawmill, and was injured by the bursting of a steam pipe while he was tightening a leaky joint in it. In the present case deceased was killed while making use of an electric pole, an already completed appliance, as a proper means of accomplishing the work he was set to do. He was neither installing nor repairing the appliance that killed him. The case is more analogous to Madden v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 303, 20 N. W. 317, in which Madden, a brakeman on a gravel train, was injured because of a defect in the old track over which gravel and ties were being hauled for the purpose of repairing it. The company was held liable. Says the court: "The fact that the work in which plaintiff was employed was that of repairing or making preparations to repair the track did not diminish its duty to furnish safe and suitable means and instruments to do his work. As it required him in that work to use the old track, it should have had it reasonably safe for the purpose." That the appliance—the old pole in this case—was not erected and equipped with reference to its use as a means for erecting new poles can make no difference in the application of the principle that it is the master's duty to furnish reasonably safe appliances, because defendant knew that the poles were constantly so used, and acquiesced therein. The proof is that block and tackle attached to the old pole was a usual and customary means employed in raising poles. "The master's acquiescence in the use of an appliance for some purpose other than that for which it was intended puts him in the same position as if the appliance had been originally furnished for that purpose." 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 28. The same rule was applied in the following cases, which are very similar to the Madden Case: Dunn v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 46 C. C. A. 546, 107 Fed. 666; Lauter v. Duckworth, 19 Ind. App. 535, 48 N. E. 864. The rule applied in cases of injury to a servant by falling platforms, erected by the master for the use of his servant, is the proper rule to be applied here. In such cases it is uniformly held: (1) That the servant is not bound to make inspection; (2) that the workmen who prepare the place or appliance are not fellow servants to those who are employed to work in the place or with the appliance; and (3) that the master is liable if the defect causing the injury was unknown to the servant. McLean v. Standard Oil Co. 66 Hun, 635, 50 N. Y. S. R. 626, 21 N. Y. Supp. 874; Benzing v. Steinway & Sons, 101 N. Y. 547, 5 N. E. 449; Goldie v. Werner, 50 Ill. App. 297, affirmed in 151 Ill. L.R.A.1916D.

551, 38 N. E. 95; Edward Hines Lumber Co. v. Ligas, 172 Ill. 315, 64 Am. St. Rep. 38, 50 N. E. 225, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 257; Giles v. Diamond State Iron Co. 7 Houst. (Del.) 453, 8 Atl. 368; and Cole v. Warren Mfg. Co. 63 N. J. L. 626, 44 Atl. 647, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 93.

Whether deceased was guilty of negligence contributing to his death was likewise a question of fact for the jury. It is contended that his failure to see that the untaped joint in the primary wire rested against the metal brace was proof of his negligence. It is proven that he was an experienced lineman, and that he climbed the pole in the usual manner. He ascended it on the side opposite the transformer, and the metal brace came between him and the exposed joint in the wire. There is evidence tending to prove that a person in his position could not see whether the wire came contact with the brace or not; and, it being an unusual condition, he may not have been on the lookout for it. He may have noticed that the insulation on other parts of the primary wire, which he could see, was sound and in good condition, and he may have supposed that the parts he could not see were equally good. He had a right to assume that defendant had performed its duty, and that the wires were normal, both as to place and condition, because the evidence is that it is the custom to tape such joints when made. The primary wire carried 2,300 voltage, and the untaped joint, so close as to touch the brace, made the position of deceased extraordinarily dangerous. He was not bound to anticipate such danger. A number of persons were present, around the pole, when deceased was killed, among them defendant's line foreman, and none of them knew that the primary wire was against the brace. It was not discovered until afterwards. That no other witness saw it is evidence tending to disprove that the deceased was negligent. And that witness Rodgers climbed the pole a few minutes before, and found it charged and hot, is not conclusive that deceased was negligent. Why did not Rodgers discover the cause of its being charged? Such evidence is a sword cutting both ways, and the jury considered it.

There were two theories of the case, depending upon the scope of deceased's employment as affecting the risk which he had assumed, and both were fairly presented by the court's instructions to the jury.

We find no error and affirm the judgment.

Petition for rehearing denied June 30, 1913.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

BYSTROM BROTHERS, Appt.,
v.

ERIC JACOBSON et al., Respts.

(— Wis. —, 155 N. W. 919.)

Master and servant — workmen's compensation act — strain as accident.

A strain of muscles causing incapacity to work, by lifting, in the regular duties of the employment, is, although there is no external evidence of injury, an accident within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 11, 1916.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Dane County affirming an award of the Industrial Commission in favor of defendant Jacobson, in an action to test the award. Affirmed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

The action was to test an award made by the Wisconsin Industrial Commission in favor of defendant Eric Jacobson. The award was sustained.

The Commission made the award and it was confirmed on this state of facts, as indicated in a memorandum which such Commission filed in the proceeding as a basis for its conclusion: "May 16, 1914," Eric Jacobson "was in the employ of" Bystrom Brothers "laying cement blocks. He was at work under the porch of a residence, and in attempting to lift a block weighing, approximately, 80 pounds, on the foundation of the wall, while in a sitting position, he strained the muscles of his right side. The accident, occurred during the forenoon. . . . He . . . consulted a physician who pronounced the injury as a muscular spasm. There was no external evidence of injury, but he suffered pain and was disabled until July 6, 1914."

Messrs. Robert R. Freeman, Timothy Brown, and Russell B. James, for appellant:

It is not sufficient that the employee is overtaken by some physical ill, even though

Note.—For the construction and effect of workmen's compensation acts generally, see annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 23. The question whether compensation is recoverable for injuries caused by strain under the English act is discussed on page 22 of the annotation, and the American cases treating the question, what constitutes an accident or personal injury within the meaning of the acts, will be found on page 227. L.R.A.1916D.

it be partially caused by the work he is doing, but an additional element is expressly made necessary by the statute, and the words, "where the injury is proximately caused by accident," do not mean merely that the injury was not anticipated, but that some accident must be present which caused the injury.

Milwaukee v. Industrial Commission, 160 Wis. 238, 151 N. W. 247; Schneider v. Provident L. Ins. Co. 24 Wis. 28, 1 Am. Rep. 157, 7 Am. Neg. Cas. 174; 1 Cyc. 228; Sinclair v. Maritime Pass. Assur. Co. 3 El. & El. 478, 30 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 77, 7 Jur. N. S. 367, 4 L. T. N. S. 15, 9 Week. Rep. 342; Trew v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 6 Hurlst. & N. 839, 30 L. J. Exch. N. S. 317, 7 Jur. N. S. 878, 4 L. T. N. S. 833, 9 Week. Rep. 671; Vennen v. New Dells Lumber Co. 161 Wis. 370, L.R.A. 1916A, 273, 154 N. W. 640; Northwestern Iron Co. v. Industrial Commission, 154 Wis. 97, L.R.A. 1916A, 366, 142 N. W. 271, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 877; Borgnis v. Falk Co. 147 Wis. 327, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 489, 133 N. W. 209, 3 N. C. C. A. 649.

Messrs. W. C. Owen, Attorney General, and Winfield W. Gilman, Assistant Attorney General, for respondents:

A strain, a sudden injury, resulting from the work in which one is engaged, is an accident.

Dawbarn, Employers' Liability, 4th ed. 100; Boyd, Workmen's Compensation, § 458; 1 Bradbury, Workmen's Compensation, 2d ed. 367.

An injury due to strain in performing the work is one covered by the act.

Doughton v. Hickman [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 143; Scales v. West Norfolk Farmers' Manure & Chemical Co. [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 165; Brown v. Kemp [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 595; Fenton v. J. Thorley & Co. [1903] A. C. 443, 72 L. J. K. B. N. S. 787, 52 Week. Rep. 81, 89 L. T. N. S. 314, 19 Times L. R. 684; Winter v. Atkinson Friezelle Co. 37 N. J. L. J. 195; Hanglin v. Swift & Co. 37 N. J. L. J. 81; Boardman v. Scott [1902] 1 K. B. 43, 85 L. T. N. S. 502, 18 Times L. R. 57, 71 L. J. K. B. N. S. 3, 66 J. P. 260, 50 Week. Rep. 184, 4 W. C. C. 1, affirming 3 W. C. C. 33; Purse v. Hayward, 125 L. T. Jo. 10, 1 B. W. C. C. 216; Fulford v. Northfleet Coal & Ballast Co. 1 B. W. C. C. 222; M'Innes v. Dunsmuir & Jackson, 45 Scot. L. R. 804, 1 B. W. C. C. 226; Timmins v. Leeds Forge Co. 16 Times L. R. 521, 83 L. T. N. S. 120, 2 W. C. C. 10; Trodden v. J. McLennard & Sons, 4 B. W. C. C. 190; Borland v. Watson, G. & Co. 49 Scot. L. R. 10, 5 B. W. C. C. 514; Voorhees v. Smith Schoonmaker Co. 86 N. J. L. 500, 92 Atl. 280, 7 N. C. C. A. 646; Connor v. Seattle, 82 Wash. 296, 144 Pac. 52;

Poccardi v. Public Service Commission, — W. Va. —, L.R.A.1916A, 299, 84 S. E. 242, 8 N. C. C. A. 1065; Stewart v. Wilson's & C. Coal Co. 40 Scot. L. R. 80, 5 F. 120; Broforst v. Bloomfield [1913] 1 W. C. & Ins. Rep. 594; Aitken v. Finlayson, B. & Co. [1914] S. C. 770, 51 Scot. L. R. 653, 7 B. W. C. C. 918; Fisher's Case, 220 Mass. 581, 108 N. E. 361; Zappala v. Industrial Ins. Commission, 82 Wash. 314, L.R.A. 1916A, 295, 144 Pac. 54; Clover, C. & Co. v. Hughes [1910] A. C. 242, 79 L. J. K. B. N. S. 470, 102 L. T. N. S. 340, 26 Times L. R. 359, 54 Sol. Jo. 375, 47 Scot. L. R. 885, 3 B. W. C. C. 275; Martin v. Travellers' Ins. Co. 1 Fost. & F. 505; North American Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212; Horsfall v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 32 Wash. 132, 63 L.R.A. 425, 98 Am. St. Rep. 846, 72 Pac. 1028; United States Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 755; Vennen v. New Dells Lumber Co. 161 Wis. 370, L.R.A. 1916A, 273, 154 N. W. 640.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question raised in this case is whether the injury for which compensation was granted was "proximately caused by accident" within the meaning of those words in section 2394—3 (3) of the workmen's compensation law. On behalf of appellant, it is contended that the statute calls for an accident in the sense of the application of some violence or external force to the person of the workman; that a physical ill caused by the labor the workman is engaged in is not sufficient.

It is considered that the term "accident" as used in the workmen's compensation act has a much broader signification than that contended for by counsel for appellant. It is susceptible of being given such scope that one would hardly venture to define its boundaries. Courts have indulged in very general statements in regard to it, but have not worked out any very definite guide. True, as stated by a text writer, such term has been more discussed, probably, in adjudications, "than any other word in the whole English language." What the meaning of it is, in the technical sense, is quite different from what it is in the popular sense. The latter sense was adopted in Fenton v. J. Thorley & Co. [1903] A. C. 443, 72 L. J. K. B. N. S. 787, 52 Week. Rep. 81, 89 L. T. N. S. 314, 19 Times L. R. 684, the leading English case on the subject in regard to such situations as the one we have to deal with. There a workman, in straining to turn a wheel to open a lid, ruptured himself, and it was held that he was injured by accident. The logic of the L.R.A.1916D.

decision is thus stated in Dawbarn, Employers' Liability, 4th ed. 100: "The essential principle and foundation of their judgment was that no arbitrary, legal, technical, or contractual meaning was to be given to the word 'accident,' but that it was to be regarded as used in its popular or ordinary sense. . . . Accident might mean an accident external to, distinct from, or in addition to, the injury to the man, or the accident might mean . . . nothing wrong or no mishap apart from the actual injury sustained by the man himself. The accident was not the lid sticking; the accident was the man rupturing himself."

That was approved in Clover, C. & Co. v. Hughes [1910] A. C. 242, 79 L. J. K. B. N. S. 470, 102 L. T. N. S. 340, 26 Times L. R. 359, 54 Sol. Jo. 375, 47 Scot. L. R. 885, 3 B. W. C. C. 275, as applied to the English workmen's compensation act, where a person was ruptured by overexerting himself about his work.

From numerous authorities such as those cited, Dawbarn, at page 100, deduced this rule: "Roughly speaking, accidents divide into two great classes: (a) Accidents popularly known as such, such as railway accidents, breakdown of machinery, explosions, collisions, etc., where persons injured by them are spoken of as injured by accident; and (b) accidents where there is no such external mishap, but where the man injures himself, as he would say, by accident, when he either strains a muscle or ricks his back or ruptures himself, or otherwise hurts himself in an unexpected manner."

These further English cases are cited in support of that conclusion and illustrating it: Timmins v. Leeds Forge Co. 16 Times L. R. 521, 83 L. T. N. S. 120, 2 W. C. C. 10, where a man strained his back in lifting a plank which unexpectedly stuck owing to frost; Boardman v. Scott [1902] 1 K. B. 43, 85 L. T. N. S. 502, 18 Times L. R. 57, 71 L. J. K. B. N. S. 3, 66 J. P. 260, 50 Week. Rep. 184, 4 W. C. C. 1, where a man strained himself in adjusting a beam he was carrying; Stewart v. Wilson's & C. Coal Co. 5 F. 120, where a minor injured himself trying to replace a derailed hutch; and M'Innes v. Dunsmuir & Jackson, 45 Scot. L. R. 804, 1 B. W. C. C. 226, where a man brought on a cerebral hemorrhage by overexerting himself.

Like conclusions as those above are drawn from the authorities in Boyd, Workmen's Compensation, § 458, and 1 Bradbury, Workmen's Compensation, 2d ed. 367, cited to our attention. From the former we quote: "With good reason, strains sustained by employees of normal health in raising unusual weights in the course of their employment are generally regarded as accidental injuries. . . . Ruptures resulting from lifting heavy objects are generally held fortuitous and unexpected events, in other words, accidents."

Quite commonly these words from Fenton v. J. Thorley & Co. supra, are quoted with approval: "If a man, in lifting a weight, or trying to move something not easily moved, were to strain a muscle or rick his back or rupture himself, the mishap, in ordinary parlance, would be described as an accident."

There are several American authorities to the same effect as the foregoing, to which we are referred, and among them are the following: Fisher's Case (1915) 220 Mass. 581, 108 N. E. 361; Zappala v. Industrial Ins. Commission, 82 Wash. 314, L.R.A. 1916A, 295, 144 Pac. 54; Voorhees v. Smith Schoonmaker Co. (1914) 86 N. J. L. 500, 92 Atl. 280, 7 N. C. C. A. 646; Poccardi v. Public Service Commission (W. Va.) L.R.A. 1916A, 299, 84 S. E. 242, 8 N. C. C. A. 1065.

The broad meaning attributable to the word "accident," as above indicated, and which is called for by the spirit of the workmen's compensation act, was adopted by this court in Vennen v. New Dells Lumber Co. 161 Wis. 370, L.R.A. 1916A, 273, 154 N. W. 640. There the court said: "The term 'accidental,' as used in compensation laws, denotes something unusual, unexpected, and undesigned. The nature of it implies that there was an external act or occurrence which caused the personal injury. . . . It contemplates an event not within one's foresight and expectation, resulting in a mishap, causing injury to the employee."

The contracting of typhoid fever by an employee by his drinking impure water furnished by the employer was held to satisfy all the calls of that definition. It seems, as counsel for respondents contend, that such calls are quite as well satisfied by the circumstances here. The thing which occurred was somewhat unusual. It was unexpected and undesigned. There was an external occurrence. The lifting of the heavy block while the workman was not in an advantageous position to do so required him to unduly strain the muscles of his right side. The undue strain was not foreseen or expected. A mishap resulted,—muscular spasm and consequent disability. There was, plainly, the physical causation spoken of in Milwaukee v. Industrial Commission, 160 Wis. 238-240, 151 N. W. 247,—the effort to handle the block while the workman was so circumstanced as to cause a perilous strain on the muscles of his right side.

We cannot well add anything of value by further discussion. As we have seen, authorities, English and American, generally agree that the term "accident" when used in workmen's compensation laws, should be taken in the broad sense above indicated,—as including a violent straining of the muscles, resulting in a rupture or other bodily hurt to an employee from overphysical exertion in performing his work. It is considered that it was so used by the legislature in § 2394—3 (3) of the statutes, and that the trial court in this case reached the correct conclusion.

The judgment is affirmed.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

FEDERAL RUBBER MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

JOHN HAVOLIC et al., Respts.

(— Wis. —, 156 N. W. 143.)

Master and servant — workmen's compensation — forcing air into body.
The rupture of an employee's intestines by the forcing of compressed air into his body by a fellow employee, when, contrary to rules, he is using the hose to remove dust from his clothing after working hours, is not an injury incidental to and growing out of the employment within the workmen's compensation act.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 1, 1916.)

Note.—As to the construction and effect of the workmen's compensation acts generally, see annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 23.

As to the recovery of injuries received while indulging in horseplay, see pages 47 and 240 of the foregoing annotation; and the cases passing upon the recovery of compensation where a workman suffers injury from assault are gathered and discussed in a note following Re McNicol, L.R.A.1916A, L.R.A.1916D.

309. For other cases in which compensation is sought for injuries resulting from an assault or from play, see Pierce v. Boyer-Van Kuran Lumber & Coal Co. post, 970, and Hulley v. Moosbrugger, L.R.A.1916C, 1203.

As to master's common-law liability for injuries inflicted upon an employee maliciously or in sport by other employees, see notes in 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 109, and 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 385.

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Dane County confirming an order of the Industrial Commission awarding compensation to defendant Havolic for injuries received while in plaintiff's employ, in an action to set aside the award. Reversed.

Statement by Winslow, Ch. J.:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the circuit court of Dane county confirming an award of the Industrial Commission in favor of the respondent Havolic under the workmen's compensation act. Wis. Stat. 1915, §§ 2394—1 — 2394—31.

The essential facts are not disputed. Havolic worked for the plaintiff in its rubber tire factory; his duties being to feed stock into a tubing machine. In the department in which he worked there was a compressed air system with hose and nozzles attached for use in some of the factory operations, but Havolic had no duty which required him either to use or come in contact with the system or the hose. Employees were forbidden to use the hose for the purpose of cleaning their clothes, and Havolic knew of the prohibition, but many employees did do so, and on the evening of the accident Havolic, on quitting work, took down the hose from its place and began to use it to blow the dust from his clothing. He had cleaned a part of his clothing when a fellow workman came up and (whether of his own motion or at Havolic's request is a matter in dispute), took the hose from Havolic's hand, and proceeded to clean his (Havolic's) back. The air in the hose was at a pressure of nearly or quite 80 pounds, and the fellow workman, apparently by way of practical joke, held the nozzle to Havolic's rectum, with the result that the intestines were ruptured. Havolic was compelled to go to the hospital for several weeks, and was totally disabled for seventeen weeks. For these injuries the award complained of was made.

Messrs. Robert R. Freeman and Henry J. Bendinger, for appellant:

Defendant's injury was not one growing out of and incidental to his employment within the meaning of the workman's compensation act.

Moore v. Manchester Liners, [1910] A. C. 498, 79 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1175, 103 L. T. N. S. 226, 26 Times L. R. 618, 54 Sol. Jo. 703, 3 B. W. C. C. 527; Reed v. Great Western R. Co. [1909] A. C. 31, 78 L. J. K. B. N. S. 31, 99 L. T. N. S. 781, 25 Times L. R. 36, 46 Scot. L. R. 700, 53 Sol. Jo. 31, 2 B. W. C. C. 109; Parker v. Pout, 105 L. T. N. S. 493, 5 B. W. C. C. 45; Pope v. Hill's Plymouth Co. 105 L. T. N. S. 678, 5 B. W. C. L.R.A.1918D.

C. 175; M'Allan v. Perthshire County Council, 8 Sc. Sess. Cas. 5th series, 783, 43 Scot. L. R. 592; Jenkinson v. Harrison, A. & Co. 4 B. W. C. C. 194; Marriott v. Brett & Beney, 5 B. W. O. C. 145; Bice v. Edward Lloyd [1909] 2 K. B. 804, 101 L. T. N. S. 472, 25 Times L. R. 759, 53 Sol. Jo. 744, 127 L. T. Jo. 322, 2 B. W. C. C. 26; Clifford v. Joy, 43 Ir. Law Times 192, 2 B. W. C. C. 32; Peel v. William Laurence & Sons, 106 L. T. N. S. 482, 28 Times L. R. 318, 5 B. W. C. C. 274; Dawbarn, Workmen's Compensation, 1910-12, p. 25.

Messrs. W. C. Owen, Attorney General, and Winfield W. Gilman, Assistant Attorney General, for respondents:

There is evidence to sustain the finding that Havolic, at the time of the accident, was performing service growing out of and incidental to his employment.

Hoenig v. Industrial Commission, 159 Wis. 646, L.R.A.1916A, 339, 150 N. W. 996, 8 N. C. C. A. 192.

The accident arose in the course and out of the employment

Milwaukee v. Althoff, 156 Wis. 68, L.R.A. 1916A, 327, 145 N. W. 238, see note to that case in 4 N. C. C. A. 110; Sundine's Case, 5 N. C. C. A. 616, and note, 218 Mass. 1, L.R.A.1916A, 318, 105 N. E. 433; Helmke v. Thilmany, 107 Wis. 216, 83 N. W. 360, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 172; Terlecki v. Strauss, 85 N. J. L. 454, 89 Atl. 1023, 4 N. C. C. A. 584; Challis v. London & S. W. R. Co. [1905] 2 K. B. 154, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 569, 53 Week. Rep. 613, 93 L. T. N. S. 330, 21 Times L. R. 486, 7 W. C. C. 23; Hulley v. Moosbrugger, 87 N. L. L. 103, 93 Atl. 79, 8 N. C. C. A. 283; State ex rel. People's Coal & Ice Co. v. District Ct. 129 Minn. 502, L.R.A. 1916A, 344, 153 N. W. 119; McNicol's Case, 215 Mass. 497, L.R.A.1916A, 306, 102 N. E. 697; Richardson v. Denton Colliery Co. [1913] W. N. 238, [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 554, 109 L. T. N. S. 370, 6 B. W. C. C. 629; East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Scott, 71 Tex. 703, 10 Am. St. Rep. 804, 10 S. W. 298; Kreutz v. Neumann Hardware Co. 37 N. J. L. J. 58; Whitehead v. Reader [1901] 2 K. B. 48, 70 L. J. K. B. N. S. 546, 65 J. P. 403, 49 Week. Rep. 562, 84 L. T. N. S. 514, 17 Times L. R. 387, 3 W. C. C. 40; Edmunds v. The Peterston, 28 Times L. R. 18, 5 B. W. C. C. 157; Cobb v. Simon, 119 Wis. 597, 100 Am. St. Rep. 909, 97 N. W. 276; Daley v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 145 Wis. 249, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164, 129 N. W. 1062; Reinke v. Bentley, 90 Wis. 457, 63 N. W. 1055; Ratcliffe v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 153 Wis. 281, 141 N. W. 229; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fleming, — Ala. —, 69 So. 125; Scott v. Payne Bros. 85 N. J. L. 446, 89 Atl. 927, 4 N. C. C. A. 682.

Winslow, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This court has endeavored to give to the workmen's compensation act a broad and enlightened construction, to the end that it may accomplish to the fullest extent its beneficent purpose. It is to be remembered, however, that this purpose was to compensate for injuries resulting from one class of accidents only, namely, industrial accidents. There is liability only "where, at the time of the accident, the employee is performing service growing out of and incidental to his employment." Wis. Stat. 1915, § 2394—3, subd. 2. It was held in Hoenig v. Industrial Commission, 159 Wis. 646, L.R.A.1916A, 339, 150 N. W. 996, 8 N. C. C. A. 192, after full argument and consideration, that the injuries covered by the act are such as "are incidental to and grow out of the employment." This seems practically to mean the same thing as the expression in the English compensation act, "arising out of and in the course of the employment." Under the English act it has been held that accidents resulting from "larking" or playing with machinery cannot be held to arise out of the employment. Furniss & Co. v. Gartside, 3 B. W. C. C. 411; Cole v. Evans, Son, Lescher & Webb, 4 B. W. C. C. 138.

The Massachusetts act provides compensation for an injury which "arises" out of the employment, and it was well said by the Massachusetts supreme court in McNicol's Case, 215 Mass. 497, L.R.A.1916A, 306, 102

N. E. 697, 4 N. C. C. A. 522: "The causative danger must be peculiar to the work, and not common to the neighborhood. It must be incidental to the character of the business, and not independent of the relation of master and servant. It need not have been foreseen or expected, but after the event it must appear to have had its origin in a risk connected with the employment, and to have flowed from that source as a rational consequence."

The "causative danger" in the present case does not come within the test here prescribed, nor anywhere near it. Had the claimant hurt himself in some way while he was handling the hose in the effort to remove the dust from his clothes, a different question would have been presented. There was proof that employees were accustomed to brush their clothes in this manner without rebuke from the foreman, though there was a formal prohibition of such action, and we express no opinion as to the rights of the parties had the accident happened in this way. But how injuries resulting from such inexcusable and revolting horseplay as this can be said to be incidental to the employment we are unable to understand. It is equally impossible to understand how it can be said that the claimant at the time of the accident was performing service "growing out of and incidental to his employment."

Judgment reversed, without costs, and action remanded, with directions to reverse the award of the Industrial Commission.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

JAMES PIERCE

v.

BOYER-VAN KURAN LUMBER & COAL COMPANY, Appt.

(— Neb. —, 156 N. W. 509.)

Master and servant — workmen's compensation — when granted.

1. An employee is not entitled to compensation for injury under the employers' liability act (Laws 1913, chap. 198), unless the accident which caused the injury happened in the course of his employment and arose out of his employment.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by SEDGWICK, J.

Note. — As to the construction and kind of workmen's compensation acts generally, see annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 23.

As to recovery of injuries received while indulging in horseplay, see pages 47 and 240 of the above annotation; and as to the recovery of compensation where workman L.R.A.1916D.

Same — accident arising out of employment.

2. An accident resulting from a risk reasonably incidental to the employment should be considered as "arising out of the employment."

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — assault by fellow servant.

3. If an employee is assaulted by a fellow workman, whether in anger or in play, an injury so sustained does not arise "out of the employment," and the employee is not entitled to compensation therefor under the employers' liability act.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — statutory provisions.

4. The employers' liability act allows the parties interested to "settle all matters of suffers injury from an assault, see annotation following Re McNicol, L.R.A.1916A, 309. For other cases in which compensation has been sought for injuries caused by horseplay or assault, see Federal Rubber Mfg. Co. v. Havolic, ante, 968, and Hulley v. Moosbrugger, L.R.A.1916C, 1203.

compensation between themselves." Rev. Stat. 1913, § 3677. The amount of compensation, when not agreed upon by the parties, is to be determined by the district court (§ 3680), and, except as expressly provided in the act, must be payable periodically (§ 3666).

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — lump sum.

5. When the amount of compensation in periodical payments has been determined, either by the agreement of the parties or by the decision of the court, it "may be commuted to one or more lump sum payments, except compensation due for death and permanent disability." Rev. Stat. 1913, § 3681.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — agreement of parties.

6. In such case no other or different authority for making such commutation is provided by that section. It still depends upon the agreement of the parties, except that their right to so agree in the specified cases depends upon "the consent of the district court."

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — consent of court.

7. In general, the agreement of the parties will authorize such commutation of payments. In case of death or permanent disability, the consent of the court is also necessary. If the district court, upon careful investigation, finds that special circumstances exist, making it necessary to commute to a lump sum for the protection of the workman or his dependents, the court may "consent" to such agreement by the parties.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 5, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Douglas County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought under the employers' liability act to recover compensation for injuries sustained by plaintiff while in the employ of defendant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Mahoney & Kennedy for appellant.

Messrs. Dunham & Aye, for appellee:

The findings of the court are sustained by sufficient evidence, and are the only findings which the court, under the evidence, was justified in making.

Menson v. Kelley, 81 Neb. 206, 115 N. W. 769; Cooley v. Rafter, 80 Neb. 181, 113 N. W. 1003; Wetherell v. Adams, 80 Neb. 584, 114 N. W. 778, 116 N. W. 861.

Plaintiff's injury was caused by an accident arising out of his employment. L.R.A.1916D.

Hulley v. Moosbrugger, 87 N. J. L. 103, 93 Atl. 79, 8 N. C. C. A. 283; State ex rel. People's Coal & Ice Co. v. District Ct. 129 Minn. 502, L.R.A.1916A, 344, 153 N. W. 119; Chellis v. London & S. W. R. Co. [1905] 2 K. B. 154, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 569, 53 Week. Rep. 613, 93 L. T. N. S. 330, 21 Times L. R. 486, 7 W. C. C. 23; Weekes v. Stead [1914] W. N. 263, 83 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1542, 111 L. T. N. S. 693, 30 Times L. R. 586, 58 Sol. Jo. 633, 7 B. W. C. O. 398 [1914], W. C. & Ins. Rep. 434, 6 N. C. C. A. 1010; Martin v. J. Lovibond & Sons [1914] 2 K. B. 227, 83 L. J. K. B. N. S. 806, 110 L. T. N. S. 455 [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 78, 7 B. W. C. C. 243, 5 N. & C. C. A. 985.

If the Nebraska workmen's compensation act be excluded from consideration as inapplicable, there would be a liability at the common law on the part of the master.

Barrentine v. Henry Warpe Co. — Ark. —, 179 S. W. 328.

There was no error in the order of the court commuting the weekly compensation payments to one lump sum payment.

Sedgwick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

While the plaintiff was in the employ of the defendant, another employee of the defendant threw a small stick which struck the plaintiff in the eye. The plaintiff brought this action in the district court for Douglas county to recover compensation under the employers' liability act. The trial court found in plaintiff's favor, and defendant has appealed.

The defendant presents two questions for consideration, and contends: First, that the finding of the court that the accident arose out of plaintiff's employment is not supported by the evidence; second, that the court erred in finding that the plaintiff is entitled to have his weekly compensation payments commuted to one lump sum payment, and the court erred in entering judgment for the plaintiff for a lump sum. These are important questions under this statute. Rev. Stat. 1913, § 3650, provides: "If both employer and employee become subject to part II. of this article, both shall be bound by the schedule of compensation herein provided, which compensation shall be paid in every case of injury or death caused by accident arising out of and in the course of employment, except accidents caused by, or resulting in any degree from, wilful negligence, as hereinafter defined, of the employee."

It is clear that the meaning is that the employee shall not be entitled to compensation under the act unless the accident which caused his injury happened in the course of his employment. The facts conceded by the parties are that the plaintiff was regularly in the employment of the defendant. He was acting as a teamster, and at the time of the accident complained of was returning with his team and wagon to the yards of the defendant, and as he was entering the yards another employee, Brown, jumped into the wagon and began a playful scuffling with the plaintiff. Brown soon left the wagon, and, after running a short distance, picked up a small stick which he playfully threw at the plaintiff, and which struck the plaintiff in the eye, causing the loss of his eye. The contention is that the plaintiff scuffled with Brown while he was upon the wagon, and that after Brown left the wagon the plaintiff attempted to strike him with one of the lines. This latter contention is alleged in the answer, as follows: "Such injury as the plaintiff has was received through a playful assault or friendly scuffle, which plaintiff provoked and brought upon himself by attempting to strike said Guy Brown with the end of one of the lines with which plaintiff was driving his team, and the action of said Guy Brown in throwing the stick which injured the plaintiff was incited and caused by plaintiff's own action."

The plaintiff in his testimony denied that he engaged voluntarily in any scuffle with Brown, and denied that he struck Brown with the line, or made any attempt or motion towards doing so. Brown testified to something of a scuffle upon the wagon, and also testified positively that the plaintiff attempted to strike him with the line after he left the wagon, which was the cause of his throwing the stick. There was some other evidence upon these two points, but it may be said to be substantially conflicting.

"The accident must 'arise out of' the employment, as well as 'in the course of' the employment. Thus, where a workman during the course of the employment does something entirely foreign to the work which he is employed to do (playing a practical joke, for example), whereby he is injured, this accident could be said to have occurred 'during the course of' the employment, but it could not be said to 'arise out of' the employment, because the workman was not doing anything which he was employed to do when the accident happened." 1 Bradbury, Workmen's Compensation, p. 398.

The parties cite other authorities in the briefs establishing this rule. In this case clearly the plaintiff was not doing "something entirely foreign to the work which he is employed to do." He did not leave his wagon; the team was not stopped; he continued his regular employment. If he resisted the advances of Brown, and attempted to force him from the wagon, there is no evidence whatever that plaintiff did anything to encourage Brown to continue his performances. There is no doubt, under the many authorities cited by both parties, that if the workman abandons his employment, even for a short time, and engages in play, or some occupation entirely foreign to his employment, he is not entitled to compensation for an accident by which he is injured while so doing. It would seem also to be clear that, even if he does not abandon his employment, and even while engaged in the performance of his duty, if he does some act or thing not connected with his employment, which was intended to and probably did provoke an assault or retaliation, he would not be entitled to compensation for an injury the result of an accident so caused by himself. It is difficult to determine from this evidence whether the plaintiff made any motion at or towards striking Brown with his lines, and if he did it was in direct connection with Brown's interference with him, and may reasonably be said to be a part of that transaction.

There is evidence in the record that the defendant's employees were accustomed to join in what they called horseplay, and that the defendant took no precautions to stop such a custom or protect his employees. There is also evidence that this plaintiff was not in the habit of joining in such playful performances. Under such circumstances the supreme court of New Jersey said: "Where the accident is the result of a risk reasonably incident to the employment, it is an accident arising out of the employment (citing cases). The trial judge found, as a fact, that the decedent did nothing to invite the attack, and it is not denied that the decedent was acting, at the time, within the scope of his employment. . . . In the case under consideration, it appears that the prosecutor employed young men and boys. It is but natural to expect them to deport themselves as young men and boys, replete with the activities of life and health. For workmen of that age, or even of maturer years, to indulge in a moment's diversion from work to joke with or play a prank upon a fellow workman, is a matter of common knowledge to everyone who employs labor. At any rate, it cannot be said that the attack made upon the decedent was so disconnected from the decedent's employment as to take it out of the class of risks reasonably incident to the employment of labor." Hulley v. Moosbrugger, 87 N. J. L. 103, 93 Atl. 79, 8 N. C. C. A. 283.

Such rule would perhaps not be unjust in its general application. The question is whether our statute can be so construed. The language of the statute is identical with the earlier statute of England, which was adopted also by some of our states. It had been many times construed by the English courts before it was adopted by our legislature. Under such circumstances the courts always consider that, if the legislature was not satisfied with the construction which had been given to language adopted from another jurisdiction, the language adopted would have been so guarded in the statute adopting it as to make the intention of the legislature clear. In other words, as it is generally stated, when a statute of another jurisdiction is adopted, its known construction and meaning in the jurisdiction of its origin are adopted also, unless a contrary intention is expressed by the legislature adopting it. The case of Hulley v. Moosbrugger, upon appeal to the court of errors and appeals (— N. J. —, L.R.A.1916C, 1203, 95 Atl. 1007), was reversed, and the law stated to be: "An employer is not charged with the duty to see that none of his employees assaults any other one of them, either wilfully or sportively. An employer is not liable, under the workmen's compensation act (P. L. 1911, p. 134), to make compensation for injury to an employee which was the result of horseplay or skylarking, so called, whether the injured or deceased party instigated the occurrence or took no part in it; for while an accident happening in such circumstances may arise in the course of, it cannot be said to arise out of, the employment."

The court cited and quoted from many decisions of the English courts which had so construed the statute long before our legislature adopted it, and we must conclude that our legislature intended that it should be so construed.

Did the court err in entering judgment for the plaintiff in a "lump sum?" The following sections of the Revised Statutes of 1913 appear to bear upon this question:

"Except as hereinafter provided, all amounts of compensation payable under the provisions of this article shall be payable periodically in accordance with the methods of payment of the wages of the employee at the time of his injury or death." Section 3666.

"The interested parties shall have the right to settle all matters of compensation between themselves in accordance with the provisions of this article." Section 3677.

"The amounts of compensation payable periodically under the law, either by agreement of the parties, or by decision of the L.R.A.1916D.

court, may be commuted to one or more lump sum payments, except compensation due for death and permanent disability. These may be commuted only with the consent of the district court." Section 3681.

This court had occasion to consider one phase of this question in the recent case of Bailey v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. — Neb. —, 155 N. W. 237. In that case the employer and the workman had agreed upon such commutation and the trial court rendered judgment in a lump sum. The question was whether the court had power to do so without the consent of the insurance company, which was also a party to the suit and was objecting to such commutation. This court sustained the trial court in so holding. It may no doubt sometimes happen that the workman, or his dependents, will be placed at a disadvantage by the refusal of the employer to agree to commutation in a lump sum. He may be compelled to receive a much less amount than he is entitled to because of his necessity to have the same paid in a lump sum. In the recent case above cited the court construed the statute and held that the statute implies "that a previous agreement must have been reached which will be ratified by the district court, and that without such an agreement the court cannot compel such a commutation of payments. . . . We do not feel at liberty to transpire the language of this section as plaintiff desires, and change its meaning so as to make commutation compulsory. The meaning is not ambiguous. The fact that the legislature did not express such a thought, while many such statutes do, is significant."

The law provides that "interested parties shall have the right to settle all matters of compensation between themselves." Section 3677.

Section 3681, which provides that periodical payments may be commuted, is in harmony with this provision. It does not provide that the district court may order commutation at the request of one of the parties, but does provide that the parties themselves cannot agree upon a commutation in certain cases without the consent of the court. If there is doubt in regard to the justice of this provision, there seems to be nothing in the language of the statute that would justify the court in construing it differently, and the remedy, if one is needed, must be by the legislature. It does not appear that the parties had agreed upon commutation, and the court has no authority to order it without such agreement.

The judgment of the District Court is reversed and the cause remanded.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

GULF COAST TRANSPORTATION COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

C. A. HOWELL et al., Doing Business as Howell & Son.

(— Fla. —, 70 So. 567.)

Carrier — acceptance of freight — location.

1. A common carrier may, by special arrangement with a shipper or by implication through habitual custom and usage, agree to accept and receive goods for transportation placed along its line of shipment at places other than the regularly designated places for the reception and delivery of freight.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — loss of goods — negligence and act of God.

2. Where goods are lost or injured as a result of the negligent act of the carrier to whom they have been delivered for transportation, concurring with an act of God, the carrier cannot maintain that the act of God was the sole proximate cause of the loss of or injury to the goods, so as to relieve it from liability.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — obligation of carrier.

3. The liability of a common carrier intrusted with goods for transportation is that of an insurer of the goods, and it is held to a strict accountability for injury to or loss of such goods.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Pleading — negligence of carrier.

4. A declaration which in substance alleges that, although the goods which were delivered to a carrier for transportation were destroyed by an act of God, yet the carrier could have foreseen such result, and by the exercise of prudence and diligence could have protected the goods from injury, but that it negligently failed to do so, states a cause of action against the carrier.

For other cases, see Pleadings, II. j, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Carrier — negligence of shipper — effect.

5. Negligence of the shipper concurring with an act of God in the destruction of goods delivered to a carrier for transportation constitutes no defense by the carrier

Headnotes by ELLIS, J.

Note. — As to duty of carrier where act of God has occurred or is threatened, see annotation following this case, post, 981.

For prior delay or deviation as affecting carrier's liability for loss of or damage to goods from act of God, see annotation following Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Mullin, post, 982.

L.R.A.1916D.

to an action brought against it by the shipper for damages for loss of the goods, where the carrier is also guilty of negligence which, concurring with the act of God, resulted in the loss of the goods.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — burden of proving custom.

6. Where usage and custom are relied upon to show a constructive delivery of goods to a common carrier for transportation, the burden is upon the party relying upon such custom and usage to clearly and definitely establish it; and where the evidence is uncertain and contradictory, it will be deemed insufficient.

For other cases, see Evidence, II. m, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — burden of proving negligence.

7. Where the claim is made that, notwithstanding the intervention of an act of God, injury to the goods delivered to a common carrier for transportation would not have occurred but for the negligence of the carrier in exposing them, the burden of proof is upon the party asserting such claim.

For other cases, see Evidence, II. k, b, (2), in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — sufficiency.

8. The evidence examined, and found to be insufficient to establish a constructive delivery of the goods by the shipper to the carrier for transportation.

For other cases, see Evidence, XII. k, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 16, 1915.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Lafayette County to review a judgment in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged negligent failure of defendant to accept and transport certain freight belonging to plaintiffs which had been delivered by them at a landing for transportation by defendant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William T. Hendry, for plaintiff in error:

The declaration was not sufficient to show that the negligence of the defendant as alleged was the proximate cause of the injury.

Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 55 Fla. 514, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 92, 46 So. 732; Thomp. Neg. §§ 73, 74; Denny v. New York C. R. Co. 13 Gray, 481, 74 Am. Dec. 645; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. 176, 19 L. ed. 909; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Sigma Lumber Co. 170 Ala. 627, 54 So. 205, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 965; Rodgers v. Missouri P. R. Co. 75 Kan. 222, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 658, 121 Am. St. Rep. 416, 88 Pac. 885, 12 Ann. Cas. 441; Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 56 Fla. 736, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 134, 131 Am. St. Rep. 169, 48 So. 209.

A prior and a remote cause cannot be made the basis of an action if such remote cause did nothing more than furnish the condition or give rise to the occasion by which the injury was made possible, if there intervened between such prior and remote cause and the injury a distinct, successive, unrelated, and efficient cause of the injury.

29 Cyc. 496; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Columbia, 65 Kan. 390, 58 L.R.A. 399, 69 Pac. 338.

Plaintiffs' evidence fails to make out such a custom and usage as would bind the defendant; and, furthermore, defendant's evidence shows clearly that there was no such custom and usage as charged by the plaintiffs.

12 Cyc. 1100, 1101; Gulf Coast Transp. Co. v. Howell, 67 Fla. 508, 65 So. 661.

Mr. C. C. Howell, for defendants in error:

If the carrier and shippers agree that the goods may be deposited for transportation at a particular place and without express notice to the carrier, such deposit will be a sufficient delivery.

Hutchinson, Carr. § 90; Meyer v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 41 La. Ann. 639, 17 Am. St. Rep. 408, 6 So. 218; Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Kolb, 73 Ala. 396, 49 Am. Rep. 54; East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Hall, 64 Tex. 615; Converse v. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. 33 Conn. 166; Whitehurst v. Texas & P. R. Co. 131 La. 139, 59 So. 42; 4 R. C. L. 693; Merriam v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 20 Conn. 354, 52 Am. Dec. 344; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Keith, 8 Ind. App. 57, 35 N. E. 296.

It is unquestionably the law of proximate cause generally, apart from its specific relation to acts of God, that whether the injury is the natural and probable consequence of the act or omission complained of, and such as ought to have been anticipated, is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury.

Cooley, Torts, § 15; 4 R. C. L. 707.

The carrier, in order to excuse himself from liability because of an act of God, must show that the act of God was the proximate, and not the remote, cause of loss.

Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 115, 86 Am. Dec. 292; King v. Shepherd, 3 Story, 349, Fed. Cas. No. 7,804; The Majestic, 166 U. S. 375, 41 L. ed. 1039, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 597, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 282.

The negligence of a carrier in failing to forward promptly goods delivered to him for transportation is the proximate cause of their loss, where, because of such delay, they are overtaken in transit by a flood and destroyed by an act of God, even though the act of God could not have been reasonably anticipated.

Bibb Broom Corn Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. L.R.A. 1916D.

F. R. Co. 94 Minn. 269, 69 L.R.A. 509, 110 Am. St. Rep. 361, 102 N. W. 709, 3 Ann. Cas. 450, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 590; Michaels v. New York C. R. Co. 30 N. Y. 564, 86 Am. Dec. 415; Read v. Spaulding, 30 N. Y. 630, 86 Am. Dec. 426; Deming v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 48 N. H. 455, 2 Am. Rep. 267; Cook v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 98 Wis. 624, 40 L.R.A. 457, 67 Am. St. Rep. 830, 74 N. W. 561; Wolf v. American Exp. Co. 43 Mo. 421, 97 Am. Dec. 406; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 596; Phillips v. Brigham, 26 Ga. 617, 71 Am. Dec. 227; Salisbury v. Herchenroder, 106 Mass. 458, 8 Am. Rep. 354.

It was the grossest continuing negligence of the defendant to pass by and leave the rosin at the mercy of a probable flood, knowing, also, that the height of this flood could be determined only by him who sent it.

Norris v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. 23 Fla. 182, 11 Am. St. Rep. 355, 1 So. 475; Summerlin v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 56 Fla. 687, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 191, 131 Am. St. Rep. 164, 47 So. 557; Clyde S. S. Co. v. Burrows, 36 Fla. 121, 18 So. 349; Ethridge v. Central of Georgia R. Co. 136 Ga. 677, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 932, 71 S. E. 1063, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 128; Durden v. Southern R. Co. 2 Ga. App. 66, 58 S. E. 66; Georgia Southern & F. R. Co. v. Marchman, 121 Ga. 235, 48 S. E. 961; Galena & C. Union R. Co. v. Rae, 18 Ill. 488, 68 Am. Dec. 574; 4 R. C. L. 722; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Quarles, 145 Ala. 436, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 867, 117 Am. St. Rep. 54, 40 So. 120, 8 Ann. Cas. 308; Michaels v. New York C. R. Co. 30 N. Y. 564, 86 Am. Dec. 415; Green-Wheeler Shoe Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 130 Iowa, 123, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 882, 106 N. W. 498; Constable v. National S. S. Co. 154 U. S. 51, 38 L. ed. 903, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1062; Hutchinson, Carr, 2d ed. § 200.

Proof of a constant and habitual practice and usage of the carrier to receive goods when they are deposited for him in a particular place, without special notice of such deposit, is sufficient to show a public offer by the carrier to receive goods in that mode, and to constitute an agreement between the parties by which the goods, when so deposited, shall be considered delivered to him without any further notice.

Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Kolb, 73 Ala. 396, 49 Am. Rep. 54; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Shane, 98 Ark. 132, 135 S. W. 836; Garrett v. Garrett, 252 Ill. 318, 96 N. E. 882; Tarrant v. Tarrant, 156 Mo. App. 725, 137 S. W. 56; O'Kane v. O'Kane, 103 Ark. 382, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 655, 147 S. W. 73; Wolff v. Pomponia, 52 Colo. 109, 120 Pac. 142; Taylor v. Union Sawmill Co. 105 Ark. 518, 152 S. W. 150; Glantz v. Chicago, B. &

Q. R. Co. 90 Neb. 606, 134 N. W. 242; Western R. Co. v. Hart, 160 Ala. 599, 49 So. 371; Gulf Coast Transp. Co. v. Howell, 67 Fla. 508, 65 So. 661.

Ellis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

C. A. Howell and C. C. Howell, partners as Howell & Son, brought suit against the Gulf Coast Transportation Company, a corporation, common carriers of freight for hire upon the Suwannee river, for the alleged negligent failure of the common carrier to accept and transport 101 barrels of rosin belonging to the plaintiffs, and which had been delivered by them at a landing on the river for transportation by the defendant corporation, and by reason of which alleged negligent failure of the defendant corporation to accept and transport the freight, a flood which was then rising in the river swept away 16 barrels of the rosin, which were lost to the plaintiff.

The declaration alleged, in substance, that the defendant corporation was engaged in the business of a common carrier of freight for hire upon the Suwannee river, and for such purpose used a certain steamboat which ran between Cedar Keys and Branford, touching at other landings on the river, among which were Old Town, Wannee, and Rocky Bluff, which latter landing is in Lafayette county. That the defendant kept no agent, station master, nor other servant or agent at Rocky Bluff, but for years previous to the 24th day of April, 1912, it was the constant and habitual custom and usage for persons who desired to ship freight by the defendant's boat to place the freight at the landing at Rocky Bluff, and it was the constant and habitual custom and usage of the defendant to accept and transport all freight placed there for transportation. That prior to said date the plaintiffs and their predecessors in business for years had been engaged in the manufacture of rosin and spirits of turpentine, and had been for years habitually and constantly accustomed to place rosin at that landing for transportation by the defendant without designating the consignee, place of destination, or giving to the defendant any instructions as to the same, but merely marked on the barrels a symbol, initials, or name denoting the consignors, and that the defendant continuously and habitually accepted and carried the rosin so placed for transportation. That when rosin was placed by the plaintiffs at the landing for transportation marked as aforesaid, the defendant would, as the boat made the trip up the river, take the rosin to Branford and deliver it to the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, and on the trip down the river would take the rosin and deliver it to the Seaboard Air Line Railway at Wannee or to the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company at Old Town. That on the 24th day of April, 1912, the plaintiffs had placed 101 barrels of rosin at the Rocky Bluff landing for transportation by the defendant corporation. The rosin was marked and labeled with the name of the consignors, "Howell & Son." That the rosin had been placed there by the plaintiffs for transportation, relying upon the custom of the defendant corporation to carry it to Branford, or Wannee or Old Town, accordingly as the first boat of the defendant passed up or down the river. That on the 24th day of April, 1912, the water in the Suwannee river was rapidly rising, which fact was known to the defendant. That immediately following that date the water rose to such a height that plaintiffs could not get to Rocky Bluff to protect the rosin from the rapid rise of the river. That during that rise of the river Rocky Bluff landing was totally submerged by water, and 16 barrels of the rosin floated away and were lost. That on the said 24th day of April, 1912, and after the 101 barrels of rosin had been placed by the plaintiffs at the landing for transportation, the steamboat of the defendant passed the landing at Rocky Bluff between noon and sundown on its way down the river to Wannee and Old Town. That the agent of the defendant in charge of the boat knew that the rosin was at the landing for transportation, and could have, by the exercise of ordinary diligence and care, taken it aboard the boat and carried it to Wannee or Old Town, as had been its constant and habitual custom to do, but the defendant carelessly, improperly, and negligently failed to stop its boat at the landing, and "to accept and receive" and promptly and securely carry the freight therefrom, by reason of which negligence the plaintiffs lost the 16 barrels of rosin which were washed away by the flood.

A demurrer to the declaration was interposed by the defendant, the first, second, third, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth grounds of which are argued. These grounds present the following points: First, the defendant had no notice from the plaintiffs, or "otherwise," that the goods had been placed at the landing for shipment; second, that the declaration did not allege that the barrels of rosin were properly marked with the name of the consignee and destination, and it was not alleged that the rosin was ready for delivery when the defendant's steamer passed the landing; third, the name of the consignee and destination of the rosin was not alleged; fifth, that the declaration showed that the alleged negligence of the defendant was not the proximate cause of the loss to the plaintiff; sixth, that the declaration showed the damage resulted from the act of God; seventh, the declaration showed that the loss resulted from plaintiffs' negligence; eighth, that the declaration showed contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiffs; and, ninth, that no contract was shown on the defendant's part to carry the goods; that the barrels of rosin were not marked so as to indicate the name of the consignee and destination; that it did not appear that the landing was the "premises of the defendant," nor did the declaration show on the part of the defendant any breach of contract or duty in not carrying the rosin.

The overruling of the demurrer was assigned as the first error.

The theory upon which the declaration is framed is that the defendant, as a common carrier of freight, by habitual custom and usage, agreed with its patrons, particularly the plaintiffs, that the deposit of goods by the shipper for transportation at Rocky Bluff landing would constitute a delivery to the defendant at that point upon the passage of its first steamer; that such custom constituted an offer by the defendant to receive goods in that way for transportation. That by habitual custom and usage, as practised between the plaintiffs and the defendant, rosin in barrels shipped by the plaintiffs bore no other mark or symbol of ownership than the name or initials of the plaintiffs, and no other shipping directions or instructions were required to be given, and that the defendant should, upon the passage of its first steamer, take the freight and carry it to Wannee and deliver it to the Seaboard Air Line Railway, or to Old Town and deliver it to the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, if the defendant's first passing steamer was going down the river, or, in case the steamer should be going up the river, to carry the rosin to Branford and deliver it to the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad; that pursuant to this custom the plaintiffs placed at Rocky Bluff landing 101 barrels of rosin, for transportation by the defendant, marked with the plaintiffs' trading name, "Howell & Son," and that on the 24th day of April, 1912, the rosin so placed by the plaintiffs at the landing was ready for shipment; that the defendant's steamer on its way down the river passed the landing on the afternoon of that date, after the rosin was ready for shipment, but negligently failed to carry it, which act of negligence, in view of the rising river, contributed to the loss which the plaintiffs sustained; that although the flood in the river was the act of God, yet the injury would not have occurred but for the defendant's departure from its line of duty.

L.R.A.1916D.

It is distinctly alleged in the declaration that when the defendant's boat passed the Rocky Bluff landing on the afternoon of April 24, 1912, the rosin was "ready and waiting" to be carried by the defendant.

That a carrier may, by habitual custom and usage, agree to accept and receive freight for transportation under the circumstances alleged in the declaration, we think is undoubtedly true. See 4 Elliott, Railroads, §§ 1411-1413; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 184; 1 Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 115, 116; Van Zile, Bailm. & Carr. § 440; Ethridge v. Central of Georgia R. Co. 136 Ga. 677, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 932, 71 S. E. 1063, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 128; Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Kolb, 73 Ala. 396, 49 Am. Rep. 54; Merriam v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 20 Conn. 354, 52 Am. Dec. 344; Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. American Tobacco Co. 126 Ky. 582, 104 S. W. 377; 4 R. C. L. "Carriers," § 170; Pratt v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 95 U. S. 43, 24 L. ed. 336.

If the act of the defendant in passing the landing with its boat after the rosin had been placed and was ready for transportation was a negligent breach of its duty under the circumstances, then such breach of duty, concurring with the rise of water in the river, caused the loss, and the defendant could not claim that the act of God was the sole proximate cause so as to relieve the defendant from liability. In such case the rise of water in the river was not the immediate, direct, and efficient cause of the loss, but only a secondary cause which without the defendant's negligence would not have resulted in loss to the plaintiffs. See Clyde S. S. Co. v. Burrows, 36 Fla. 121, 18 So. 349; Norris v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. 23 Fla. 182, 11 Am. St. Rep. 355, 1 So. 475; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Mullin, — Fla. —, post, 982, 70 So. 467, decided at this term; 4 R. C. L. "Carriers," § 183; Wolf v. American Exp. Co. 43 Mo. 421, 97 Am. Dec. 406; Davis v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 89 Mo. 340, 1 S. W. 327; Read v. Spaulding, 30 N. Y. 630, 86 Am. Dec. 426; New Brunswick S. B. & Canal Transp. Co. v. Tiers, 24 N. J. L. 697, 64 Am. Dec. 394.

The liability of a common carrier is that of an insurer of goods intrusted to it for transportation, and it is held to a strict accountability for injury to or loss of such goods. While an act of God, as that term is defined in law, may relieve the carrier from liability for the loss of goods in its custody occasioned thereby when the carrier itself is not at fault, it may happen that by the exercise of reasonable diligence and prudence a carrier may foresee the results likely to follow an impending storm or approaching flood, and make such effort and exercise such care and skill as the circumstances seem reasonably to require to protect the goods in its custody for transportation from injury or loss. In the case of Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Mullin, — Fla. —, post, 982, 70 So. 467, this court rejected the doctrine announced in Green-Wheeler Shoe Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 130 Iowa, 123, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 882, 106 N. W. 498, 8 Ann. Cas. 45, to the effect that a negligent delay by a common carrier in transporting goods which are injured by an act of God before they reach their destination renders the carrier liable, notwithstanding the destructive act of God could not reasonably have been foreseen at the time of the negligent delay, but adopted what we consider the more reasonable rule, which exempts the carrier from liability under such circumstances. The declaration in this case, however, presents a situation different from that in which a delay in transporting goods resulted in placing them in the path of a storm or the way of a flood which could not have been reasonably foreseen at the time of the delay. It presents a situation in which the act of God was transpiring at the time of the alleged negligent departure by the carrier from its line of duty, and the question presented is, Could the probable results of that act of God have been reasonably foreseen by the carrier, and by the exercise of reasonable prudence and diligence on its part been guarded against and the goods protected from injury? 1 Hutchinson, Carr. § 292. This question, we think, should have been submitted to the jury.

The seventh and eighth grounds of the demurrer raise the point that the plaintiffs' negligence contributed to the loss. Since a common carrier is liable for loss or injury to goods in its custody for transportation, although such loss resulted from an act of God aided by the carrier's own negligence, it must negative all contributing fault of its own when it relies upon the fault or negligence of the shipper as concurring with the act of God in producing the loss. A case like this is differentiated from those cases resting primarily upon the defendant's negligence in carrying persons. As stated by Judge McClellan in the case of McCarthy v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 102 Ala. 193, 48 Am. St. Rep. 29, 14 So. 370: "The unaided, uncontributed to negligence of the plaintiff producing the injury is a defense, but where there is negligence also on the part of the defendant, without which, notwithstanding plaintiff's fault, the injury would not have happened, this fault of the defendant neutralizes and eviscerates the negligence of the plaintiff as a ground of defense. In the one case, plaintiff's contributory negligence destroys the cause of action; in the other, defendant's concurring negligence destroys the defense." 4 R. C. L. "Carriers," § 203; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Rice, 169 Ala. 265, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1214, 52 So. 918, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 389.

The declaration does not show that the act of the plaintiffs in placing the rosin at the landing was such a negligent act on their part as, concurring with the act of God, without any aiding negligence of the defendant, resulted in the loss. While it is true that the rosin would have been carried away in the flood, if the defendant had not passed the landing with its boat, or if its failure to take it was not a negligent act on its part under the circumstances, the declaration expressly alleges that the defendant's failure to carry the rosin was negligence on its part. The demurrer was properly overruled.

The defendant filed six pleas as follows: First, the general issue; second, that Rocky Bluff landing was not a regular landing for defendant's boat; that it received freight from that landing only on notice; and that it had no notice that the rosin mentioned in the declaration had been placed at the landing for transportation by defendant, and the rosin was never delivered to defendant for transportation; third, that the defendant did not receive the goods for transportation; that they were not marked in the name of the consignee or point of destination nor was defendant requested to receive and transport the goods, and was not advised by plaintiff that the goods were marked and placed at the landing for transportation by defendant. The fourth plea in full is as follows: "(4) And for a fourth plea this defendant says that on the occasion of the alleged negligence, the recent heavy rains had swollen the Suwannee river to such a great extent as to render transportation thereon extremely difficult and perilous, both to defendant and shippers; that at that date the waters in said river were rapidly rising; that down stream, between the point where defendant's steamboat was then located and the mouth of the river and the Gulf of Mexico, there was, and is, a railroad trestle spanning said river, and it had been repeatedly observed by the defendant's employees and agents that when the waters in said river should rise to a great height it was extremely difficult for boats such as ply upon said river to pass through said railroad bridge; that on the date alleged the water in said river was rapidly rising as aforesaid, and defendant's servants realized that it was of great importance, not only to the safety of the defendant's steamboat, but to the shippers whose freight and goods was then in the possession of the defendant and on defendant's steamboat, that the said steamboat should be run by and below said railroad bridge before the waters in said river should rise to such a great height as to endanger the goods of the defendant and shippers who had placed goods in defendant's hands; that if the defendant's servants and agents had stopped said steamboat at said Rocky Bluff landing and remained there for the period of time necessary to take on board the said lot of 101 barrels of rosin, the waters in said river would have risen to such a great height before they could have reached said railroad bridge with said steamboat that the defendant verily believes that the said steamboat would have been in great danger of being wrecked and the owners of the cargo would have suffered a loss of at least a portion of their goods; that the perilous circumstances were beyond defendant's control, and the great freshet then upon said river was the act of God and beyond the defendant's knowledge or control."

Fifth, that it was not defendant's duty to stop its boat at the landing for the purpose of taking the rosin at the time alleged, not having been notified and requested to do so by the plaintiffs; that the plaintiffs, when they placed the rosin on the landing knew, or should have known, that it was in danger of being lost on account of the rising waters of the river; that they placed the rosin at the landing at their own risk and its loss was due to their negligence. It is also alleged in this plea that the loss was due to the act of God. And, sixth, that it had not been the custom and usage of the defendant to receive from the plaintiffs or other shippers rosin or other goods for transportation at said landing without notice to the defendant that the goods were ready for shipment and were properly marked showing consignee and destination.

The plaintiff's demurrer to the second, third, and fifth pleas, replied to the fourth, and joined issue upon the first and sixth pleas, and the defendant joined issue upon the plaintiff's replication to the fourth plea. The demurrer was sustained, and the defendant assigns as the second error that "the court erred in sustaining plaintiffs' demurrer to defendant's third, fourth, and fifth pleas." There was no demurrer to the fourth plea. The counsel for plaintiff in error, probably intended to assign as error the order sustaining the demurrer to the defendant's second, third, and fifth pleas. There was no error in sustaining the demurrer. The matters of defense set up in the second and third pleas were admissible under the general issue, while the fifth plea, stripped of its surplusage, and regarded as one setting up the act of God as a defense, was fully covered by the fourth plea.

The fourth, fifth, and sixth assignments question the sufficiency of the evidence. The case presents questions of constructive delivery by custom and usage of the plaintiffs' goods to the defendant for transportation, and negligence of the defendant in failing to take the goods and carry them under the circumstances; an act of God threatening and impending at the time of such failure of the defendant to carry them. The burden of proof on both issues, we think, was upon the plaintiffs. On the point of an implied or constructive delivery of the goods by the plaintiffs to the defendant, this court said, when this case was here before, that such custom must be clearly and definitely proven, and where the evidence is uncertain and also contradictory, the usage and custom are not established. Gulf Coast Transp. Co. v. Howell, 67 Fla. 508, 65 So. 661.

Where the claim is made, as in this case, that notwithstanding the intervention of an act of God, the loss would not have happened but for the negligence of the carrier in unreasonably delaying the transportation of the goods, and thus negligently exposing them to the destructive act of God, the burden of proof is upon him who affirms it. While it is true that the liability of a common carrier for injury or loss of goods intrusted to him for transportation is that of an insurer, he is relieved of such liability where the destruction of or injury to the goods result solely from an act of God. The carrier's liability in cases where goods are injured or destroyed in his custody by act of God rests upon his negligence, which, mingling or concurring with the act of God, resulted in producing the loss. The carrier's liability in such cases is that of a common carrier, and not that of an insurer. The carrier's position is the same as that where he contracts with the shipper against liability for loss or damage to goods from certain causes or accidents. In one case the carrier is relieved from liability by the act of God, in the other by his contract with the shipper. In each case the plaintiff, alleging negligence of the carrier notwithstanding the excepted causes, has the burden of proof. See Mitchell v. United States Exp. Co. 46 Iowa, 214; Muddle v. Stride, 9 Car. & P. 380; The Glendarroch, 63 L. J. Prob. N. S. 89; L. R. [1894] P. 226, 6 Reports, 686, 70 L. T. N. S. 344, 7 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 420, 24 Eng. Rul. Cas. 385; Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Corcoran, 40 Ark. 375; Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 152 Ind. 333, 53 N. E. 382; Terre Haute & L. R. Co. v. Sherwood, 132 Ind. 129, 17 L.R.A. 339, 32 Am. St. Rep. 239, 31 N. E. 781; Morse v. Canadian P. R. Co. 97

Me. 77, 53 Atl. 874; Sager v. Portsmouth, S. & P. & E. R. Co. 31 Me. 228, 50 Am. Dec. 659; Read v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 60 Mo. 199; Witting v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 101 Mo. 631, 10 L.R.A. 602, 20 Am. St. Rep. 636, 14 S. W. 743; Lamb v. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. 46 N. Y. 271, 7 Am. Rep. 327; Cochran v. Dinsmore, 49 N. Y. 249; Long v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 147 Pa. 343, 14 L.R.A. 741, 30 Am. St. Rep. 732, 23 Atl. 459; Schaeffer v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 168 Pa. 209, 47 Am. St. Rep. 884, 31 Atl. 1088; Hubbard v. Harnden Exp. Co. 10 R. I. 244; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Stone, 112 Tenn. 348, 105 Am. St. Rep. 955, 79 S. W. 1031; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Manchester Mills, 88 Tenn. 653, 14 S. W. 314; Schaller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 97 Wis. 31, 71 N. W. 1042; Clark v. Barnwell, 12 How. 272, 13 L. ed. 985; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. 176, 19 L. ed. 909; Cau v. Texas & P. R. Co. 194 U. S. 427, 48 L. ed. 1053, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663, 16 Am. Neg. Rep. 659; The Lennox (D.C.) 90 Fed. 308; The Henry B. Hyde, 32 C. C. A. 534, 61 U. S. App. 147, 90 Fed. 115; The Hindoustan, 14 O. C. A. 650, 35 U. S. App. 173, 67 Fed. 794; 1 Hutchinson Carr. § 312. Negligence is presumed only when certain facts naturally and logically impute the absence of that degree of care required by law. See East Tennessee V. & G. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 11 Heisk. 400, text, 404, 6 Am. Neg. Cas. 444. The cases touching this point, however, are in irreconcilable conflict. It would be useless to attempt a discussion of the more important adjudications upon both sides of the controversy; it would lead to but one result, and that is that the conflict is irreconcilable. We consider that the safer course is to follow the rule laid down in the authorities above cited, and hold that where the loss or injury to the goods in the hands of a common carrier for transportation is occasioned by an act of God, the carrier is prima facie relieved from all liability, and casts upon the shipper the burden of showing liability nevertheless by evidence of the carrier's negligence. Western Transp. Co. v. Downer, 11 Wall. 129, 20 L. ed. 160.

A careful examination of the evidence in the case as exhibited by the bill of exceptions fails to show that the second trial of the case developed any clearer proof of the alleged usage and custom of the defendant to stop its boat at Rocky Bluff landing upon its first passage, after goods had been placed there by the plaintiffs for transportation, than was exhibited upon the record when the case was here before. In some particulars the evidence for the plaintiffs may be more certain, but that for the defendant is equally so. Upon the entire record, L.R.A.1916D.

ord, however, there is, in our opinion, a lack of that degree of clearness and definiteness as to the existence of the custom which, in the former opinion, this court said was necessary. C. A. Howell for the plaintiffs testified, that it was the "custom for the boat people to take this rosin on the boat and carry to the railroad company at one of the three points mentioned on their first trip after the rosin was placed there, unless there was just a few barrels."

On cross-examination he said: "I did not know this of my own personal knowledge. I was not always present." That he knew nothing more about the custom than he knew when he testified at the first trial. "I say they took it the first trip so far as I knew."

Dr. J. M. Mann said: "The custom as to carrying freight was, we always taking it when we found it at the landing, and if there was anything for shipment, we carried it on our first trip up the river."

This witness was at one time in the employment of the defendant as purser. On cross-examination he said that at the former trial he testified that "it was the general rule to stop and take on the rosin at the first passing of the boat; and, if we were loaded, we would sometimes pass without taking it on, and then later double back and get it."

E. S. Gauldin said, he had been engaged in the steamboat business on the Suwannee river about twelve years. "Rocky Bluff was a landing from which rosin was carried by my boat. We had a list of the landings all along the river from where we received stuff and delivered to the railroad, and delivered stuff there to the landing were kept on our regular waybills and advertising, and everything. All of the landings we received freight, but at these special landings delivered anything shipped to the landings and received anything on the landing to the railroad; that was the custom of shipping at Rocky Bluff at that time. I am familiar with the custom."

This witness worked for the defendant at one time. He further testified that it was "always customary for the steamboat company to take the spirits and rosin at the landing away on the trip that they went to the point that we shipped to."

On cross-examination he said: "I don't know of my own personal knowledge that the defendant company always took the rosin and spirits placed at the landing on their first trip past."

He also said that, if "it ever failed to carry any rosin we had on the landing on the first trip that way that it was shipped to, I don't know it, and I would have known it if it had." "When it was going the way it was shipped, it never passed there without taking it on."

John H. Peck for the defendant said: he was in the employment of the defendant during the year 1912. He was master of the steamer and agent of the company. He said the custom was to take rosin from the landing when there was a sufficient amount gathered on the bank for shipment; that he did not always stop and take on rosin at Rocky Bluff landing when there was a carload on the bank; he used his own discretion about it, "all the landings the same way." I did not always stop at the first passing and take on rosin deposited at Rocky Bluff; we generally took it off if there was an occasion, but sometimes passed by and got it going back."

The evidence does not, as we stated, clearly and definitely show such a usage or custom, and as to carrying of freight by the defendant from Rocky Bluff landing as is alleged in the declaration. The plaintiffs, therefore, failed to show any contract with the defendant relative to the shipment of the rosin, and showed no actual or constructive delivery of it to the defendant for transportation.

As to proof of defendant's negligence in failing to remove the rosin under the circumstances, even if it had been its duty by reason of any contract of shipment to do so, there is no evidence whatsoever. On the other hand, there was evidence that the flood was an unusual one, and no evidence that the defendant had any reason to believe or anticipate the rising of the waters to the great height which they reached.

The judgment of the court below is reversed.

Taylor, Ch. J., and Shackelford, Cockrell, and Whitfield, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Duty of carrier where act of God has occurred or is threatened.

For the earlier cases upon this question, see note to Armstrong v. Illinois C. R. Co. 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 671.

For the duty of a carrier to hasten shipment or take other precaution to prevent loss threatened without any antecedent fault on its part, see Pine Bros. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 639, and note.

As to prior delay or deviation as affecting carrier's liability for loss of or damage to goods by act of God, see Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Mullin, post, 982.

It is the duty of a carrier to take notice of all signs of an approaching flood, and, if they are of such character as reasonably to awaken apprehension, to take such means as are reasonably within its control for the safety of goods in its care. Davis v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (1883) 13 Mo. App. 449.

So, where a carrier has notice of a flood which is likely to damage goods in its charge, it is its duty to exercise reasonable care in protecting the property, and this duty is a continuing one as long as the loss is avoidable. Cunningham v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1912) 50 Pa. Super. Ct. 609.

Where the evidence tends to show that the carrier might, by the exercise of due care, have placed a car so that the goods contained in it would not have been injured, notwithstanding the severity of the storm, the question of the carrier's liability is for the jury. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Dreyfus (1914) 42 L.R.A.1916D.

Okla. 401, L.R.A. 1915D, 547, 141 Pac. 773.

If a carrier, after becoming aware of a storm and the impending danger to goods in its care, could, by the exercise of such care as a man of ordinary prudence would have exercised under like circumstances, have protected the goods from the consequences of the disaster, and failed to do so, it will be liable notwithstanding the storm itself was of unprecedented violence and could not have been foreseen. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Bergman (1901) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 64 S. W. 999.

Where a carrier knew that the water of a river had risen from 2 to 4 feet above all previous records, and was then rising at a rapid rate, the question whether an ordinarily prudent and diligent person would then have taken steps to save property which was exposed to the perils of the flood was properly submitted to the jury. Ferguson v. Southern R. Co. (1911) 91 S. C. 61, 74 S. E. 129.

Where the evidence is sufficient to sustain a finding that a carrier was guilty of negligence in depositing goods in its yards at the time it did, in view of the history of the stream and of the warnings sent out by the weather bureau, and other evidence of an approaching flood, a verdict against it will be sustained. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Madden (1907) 46 Tex. Civ. App. 597, 103 S. W. 1193.

Where there was some evidence that the carrier had sufficient warning of an approaching flood, and by the exercise of proper care might have protected plaintiff's goods from it, the question of its negligence is for the jury. Fentiman v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1906) 44 Tex. Civ. App. 455, 98 S. W. 939.

In an action for the destruction of goods in a carrier's yards, by an unprecedented flood, based upon its negligence in not removing them before the destructive part of the flood came, the question is whether the defendant was warned, not merely of a rise in the river, but of the approach of the unprecedented flood. Merritt Creamery Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1909) 139 Mo. App. 149, 122 S. W. 322.

Where a carrier placed a car of goods in its yards next to a car of unslaked lime, at a time when it knew that the water was higher than it ever had been known to be before, and was still rising, the negligent placing of the car was the proximate cause of its loss by fire started by the ignition of the unslaked lime upon contact with the rising flood. Barnet v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1915) 167 App. Div. 738, 153 N. Y. Supp. 374.

In National Rice Mill. Co. v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. (1912) 132 La. 615, 61 So. 708, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 1099, where the rise of the river was forecast to within a few inches of the maximum actually attained, and the carrier had notice of this, and of the increasing height of the flood, but made no effort to save the cars containing plaintiff's rice, which had been stored in the lowest part of its yards next to cars containing unslaked lime, which would ignite on contact with water, until it was too late to save them without the risk of life, it was held that the carrier was not excused from liability because of the unprecedented flood.

Where goods were delayed for an unreasonable length of time in the yards of a carrier, and were there overtaken by a flood, the carrier was liable, especially in view of the fact that ample warnings were given of the approach of the flood. Wabash R. Co. v. Sharpe (1906) 76 Neb. 424, 124 Am. St. Rep. 823, 107 N. W. 758; Sunderland Bros. Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1911) 89 Neb. 660, 131 N. W. 1047.

A carrier is liable for injury to stock because of delay en route, when it knew, or should have known, when it accepted them for shipment, that it could not transport them to destination within a reasonable time because of unusual floods. Tate v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1910) 157 Ill. App. 105.

Where cattle were delayed in shipment by a severe snowstorm, but their injury was in part due to failure of the carrier to properly care for them during the delay, it was held liable, as its negligence mingled as an active co-operative cause with the act of God. Bell v. Union P. R. Co. (1913) 177 Ill. App. 374.

In Jonesboro, L. C. & E. R. Co. v. Dunnivant (1915) 117 Ark. 451, 174 S. W. 1187, where the carrier negligently delayed the shipment of corn, although informed that the consignee badly needed it, and that the levee was liable to break and prevent its shipment, a verdict for the cost of shipping it to another point and hauling it by wagon to its destination, which was made necessary by the breaking of the levee, was sustained.

Where a carrier negligently stored casks of wine while they were delayed during a period of severe cold weather, so that they were frozen, it was held that the carrier was liable, as its negligence co-operated with the act of God. Wolf v. American Exp. Co. (1869) 43 Mo. 421, 97 Am. Dec. 406.

R. L. S.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

SEABOARD AIR LINE RAILWAY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
W. H. MULLIN.

(— Fla. —, 70 So. 467.)

Carrier — loss by act of God — liability.

1. Where, in the course of transportation, goods are injured by an unprecedented flood, and there is no negligence on the part of the common carrier in taking care of the goods, or otherwise, the loss is attributable to the flood as an "act of God," and the carrier is not liable.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — For prior delay or deviation as affecting carrier's liability for loss of or damage to goods from act of God, see annotation following this case, post, 988.

As to duty of carrier where act of God has occurred or is threatened, see annotation following Gulf Coast Transp. Co. v. Howell, ante, 974.

Headnotes by WHITFIELD, J.
L.R.A.1916D.

Same — negligent delay — effect.

2. Whether a common carrier is liable for injury to goods, where, after being negligently delayed in transit, they, while still in transit, are injured by an act of God, such as an unprecedented flood, depends upon whether the negligent delay of the carrier has a proximate casual relation, or a mere remote or casual relation, to the subsequent injury.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — proximate cause.

3. A merely negligent delay in transporting goods, which delay causes the goods to be at a point in transit where they are injured or destroyed by an unprecedented flood that could not have been foreseen at the time of the delay, does not render the carrier liable for the direct consequences of the flood upon the goods, if there be no malconduct by the carrier, and negligence of the carrier in not providing reasonably safe and adequate facilities for and attention to the safety of the goods does not directly contribute to the injury, even though the goods would not have been at the point where they were injured, and would have escaped the flood, but for the negligent delay of the carrier at the time when the flood could not have been foreseen. Such an injury is not an ordinary sequence of the delay.

For other cases, see Proximate Cause, III. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 10, 1915.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Marion County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for loss of freight injured by flood while in transit. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. L. N. Green for plaintiff in error.

Mr. H. M. Hampton, for defendant in error:

Defendant being negligent, the act of God will not excuse him from liability.

Michaels v. New York C. R. Co. 30 N. Y. 564, 86 Am. Dec. 415; Norris v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. 23 Fla. 182, 11 Am. St. Rep. 355, 1 So. 475; Read v. Spaulding, 30 N. Y. 630, 86 Am. Dec. 426; Condict v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 54 N. Y. 500; Southern Exp. Co. v. Womack, 1 Heisk. 257; Wabash R. Co. v. Sharpe, 76 Neb. 424, 124 Am. St. Rep. 823, 107 N. W. 758; McClary v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. 3 Neb. 44, 19 Am. Rep. 631; Wald v. Pittsburg, O. C. & St. L. R. Co. 162 Ill. 545, 35 L.R.A. 356, 53 Am. St. Rep. 332, 44 N. E. 888; Wolf v. American Exp. Co. 43 Mo. 421, 97 Am. Dec. 406; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Curtis, 80 Ill. 324; McGraw v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 18 W. Va. 361, 41 Am. Rep. 696; Deming v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 48 N. H. 455, 2 Am. Rep. 267; Read v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 60 Mo. 199; Davis L.R.A. 1916D.

v. Garrett, 6 Bing. 716, 4 Moore & P. 540, 8 L. J. C. P. 253, 31 Revised Rep. 524, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 273; Williams v. Grant, 1 Conn. 487, 7 Am. Dec. 235; Crosby v. Fitch, 12 Conn. 410, 31 Am. Dec. 745; Rodgers v. Central P. R. Co. 67 Cal. 607, 8 Pac. 377, 13 Am. Neg. Cas. 346; Salisbury v. Herchenroder, 106 Mass. 458, 8 Am. Rep. 354; Higgins v. Dewey, 107 Mass. 494, 9 Am. Rep. 63; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 39; Savannah F. & W. R. Co. v. Commercial Guano Co. 103 Ga. 590, 30 S. E. 555; Thomas v. Lancaster Mills, 19 C. C. A. 88, 34 U. S. App. 404, 71 Fed. 481; New Brunswick S. B. & Canal Transp. Co. v. Tiers, 24 N. J. L. 697, 64 Am. Dec. 394; 1 Thomp. Neg. §§ 68-72; Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 274, 301; Adams Exp. Co. v. Jackson, 92 Tenn. 326, 21 S. W. 666; Bostwick v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 45 N. Y. 712; 6 Cyc. 382.

Whitfield, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

An action was brought by Mullen against the carrier to recover damages for the loss of freight injured by a flood in transit. There was judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant took writ of error.

It appears by an agreed statement of facts that the goods were delivered to the defendant carrier at Ocala, Florida, on February 22, 1913, for transportation to Youngstown, Ohio, according to the terms and conditions of a bill of lading delivered to the shipper by the agent of the defendant. That the shipment was loaded on the same day and was by the defendant forwarded on the route towards its destination in the state of Ohio, arriving in Atlanta, Georgia, on March 18, 1913, where it was delivered by the defendant at once to the next succeeding carrier for further transportation. That, if said transportation by the defendant had been with due and reasonable speed and diligence, said shipment would have arrived in Atlanta, Georgia, and been delivered to the next succeeding carrier not later than February 28, 1913, instead of March 18, 1913. That on receipt of said shipment the next succeeding carrier, and those carriers thereafter in the line of transportation, forwarded said shipment with all due and reasonable speed toward the ultimate destination thereof in the state of Ohio, and with no negligence which in any manner contributed to the loss or damage, as hereinafter mentioned, of the aforesaid personal property. That if the defendant had transported said shipment to Atlanta, Georgia, and delivered the same to the next succeeding carrier with due and reasonable speed and despatch, the same would have arrived at its destination in the state of Ohio and been delivered to the plaintiff in time to have avoided the loss. That said shipment having arrived from Atlanta, Georgia, in due course, in the state of Ohio, was caught in the latter state in great rains and floods of water which destroyed certain portions of said shipment and badly injured other portions thereof. That the rains and floods aforesaid were the most sudden and violent ever known at or in the vicinity where said shipment was then caught and damaged as aforesaid, and they occurred at least six days after the defendant had delivered said shipment to the next succeeding carrier at Atlanta, Georgia, as hereinbefore mentioned, the coming or happening of which rains and floods it was utterly impossible for the defendant under any circumstances to have foreseen at any time prior to the delivery of said shipment to the aforesaid next succeeding carrier. That during the months of February, March, April, and May, 1913, the defendant, and other common carriers over whose line of road plaintiff's shipment aforesaid moved, had on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States, and in full force and effect, certain tariffs or schedules of freight rates applicable to this shipment. That as a matter of fact the shipment was turned over by the representative of the plaintiff to the defendant as a carload shipment, which the defendant accepted. The car was duly sealed up at Ocala and moved forward to Youngstown, Ohio, under that seal for the entire distance. That had the shipment gone forward as less than a carload movement, it would have been subject to a number of removals between Ocala and Youngstown, aforesaid, thereby greatly increasing danger of damage and loss thereto. The statement of fact shows that a carload of household goods being transported is interstate commerce from Ocala, Florida, to Youngstown, Ohio, was negligently delayed en route before it reached Atlanta, Georgia. After leaving Atlanta and before reaching destination the goods were injured by an unprecedented flood—an act of God—which could not reasonably have been foreseen when the negligent delay occurred. If there had been no delay in the transportation before reaching Atlanta, the shipment might have been completed without injury from the flood.

The liability of a common carrier of goods is that of an insurer; and in cases of loss of or injury to goods intrusted to it for transportation, no excuse avails the carrier, except that such loss or injury was caused by the act of God, or by the public enemies of the state, or by the sole fault of the shipper or his agent. 1 Moore, Carr. 306. A common carrier of goods is an insurer against all risks of loss or injury, except those resulting directly from the act of God or the public enemy without the intervention of human agency. Clyde S. S. Co. v. Burrows, 36 Fla. 121, 18 So. 349.

The only acts of God that excuse common carriers from liability for loss of or injury to goods in transit are those operations of the forces of nature that could not have been anticipated and provided against, and that by their superhuman force unexpectedly injure or destroy goods in the custody or control of a common carrier. See 4 R. C. L. p. 709; Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 55 Fla. 514, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 92, 46 So. 732. See also 13 Mod. Am. Law, 79.

Where in the course of transportation goods are injured by an unprecedented flood, and there is no negligence on the part of the common carrier in taking care of the goods or otherwise, the loss is attributable to the flood as an act of God, and the carrier is not liable. Norris v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. 23 Fla. 182, 11 Am. St. Rep. 355, 1 So. 475. But where the flood should have been anticipated in time to save the goods, or the carrier was negligent in not protecting the goods, or exposed the goods to the flood, or tortiously withheld the goods, or so deviated from the proper route as to amount to a conversion of the goods, or the negligence of the carrier contributes directly to the injury, or the carrier fails to provide reasonably adequate and safe facilities, which directly contributed to the injury, the carrier is liable. See National Rice Mill Co. v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. 132 La. 615, 61 So. 708, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 1099; Wabash R. Co. v. Sharpe, 76 Neb. 424, 124 Am. St. Rep. 823, 107 N. W. 758; Michaels v. New York C. R. Co. 36 N. Y. 564, 86 Am. Dec. 415; Wolf v. American Exp. Co. 43 Mo. 421, 97 Am. Dec. 406; New Brunswick S. B. & Canal Transp. Co. v. Tiers, 24 N. J. L. 697, 64 Am. Dec. 394; Crosby v. Fitch, 12 Conn. 410, 31 Am. Dec. 745; Henry v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 83 Kan. 104, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1098, 109 Pac. 1005; Davis v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 89 Mo. 340, 1 S. W. 327; Pruitt v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 62 Mo. 527; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Benson, 86 Ga. 203, 22 Am. St. Rep. 446, 12 S. E. 357, 4 R. C. L. p. 718; Pinkerton v. Missouri P. R. Co. 117 Mo. App. 288, 93 S. W. 849; Wabash R. Co. v. Sharpe, 76 Neb. 424, 124 Am. St. Rep. 823, 107 N. W. 758; McGraw v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 18 W. Va. 361, 41 Am. Rep. 696; Hewett v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 611, 19 N. W. 790; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Drayfus, 42 Okla. 401, L.R.A. 1015D, 547, 141 Pac. 773; Bell v. Union P. R. Co. 177 Ill. App. 374; Thomas

v. Lancaster Mills, 19 C. C. A. 88, 34 U. S. App. 404, 71 Fed. 481; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Coutourie, 68 C. C. A. 177, 135 Fed. 465; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Madden S. & Co. 46 Tex. Civ. App. 597, 103 S. W. 1193. See also Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 55 Fla. 514, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 92, 46 So. 732; De Funiak Springs v. Perdue, 69 Fla. 326, 68 So. 234.

In Read v. Spaulding, 30 N. Y. 630, 86 Am. Dec. 426; Green-Wheeler Shoe Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 130 Iowa, 123, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 882, 106 N. W. 498, 8 Ann. Cas. 45; Bibb Broom Corn Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 94 Minn. 269, 69 L.R.A. 509, 110 Am. St. Rep. 361, 102 N. W. 709, 3 Ann. Cas. 450, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 590; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Quarles, 145 Ala. 436, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 867, 117 Am. St. Rep. 54, 40 So. 120, 8 Ann. Cas. 308; Wald v. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 162 Ill. 545, 35 L.R.A. 356, 53 Am. St. Rep. 332, 44 N. E. 888; and other somewhat similar cases,—the courts hold that when there is a negligent delay by a common carrier in transporting goods, and subsequently before reaching destination the goods are injured by an act of God that could not reasonably have been foreseen at the time of the negligent delay, the carrier is liable. 4 R. C. L. p. 722; Moore, Carr. p. 371. Such holdings are presumably predicated upon the theory that the delay is a concurring and proximate cause of the loss or injury, or that because of the delay the law enlarges the liability of the common carrier by withdrawing the exemption from liability that usually exists when goods in transit are injured by an act of God.

The United States Supreme Court and the courts of a number of the states hold that a delay in transportation which places the shipment in the track of an unprecedented flood is a remote, and not a proximate, cause of an injury to the shipment by the flood, and the carrier is not liable merely because of the delay. Such courts base the exemption of the carrier from liability upon the ground that the delay was too remote, and that the proximate cause of the injury, to wit, the destructive act of God, could not have been foreseen and provided against as a probable result of the negligent delay. In this view the carrier is held not liable even though the injury would not have occurred but for the previous delay in transportation which caused the shipment to be in the track of the flood. See Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. 176, 19 L. ed. 909; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. 139 U. S. 223, text 237, 35 L. ed. 154, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554; Empire State Cattle Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. L.R.A.1916D.

Co. (C. C.) 135 Fed. 135; Scott v. Baltimore, C. & R. S. B. Co. (C. C.) 19 Fed. 56; Daniels v. Ballantine, 23 Ohio St. 532, 13 Am. Rep. 264; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Millsaps, 76 Miss. 855, 71 Am. St. Rep. 543, 25 So. 672; Herring v. Chesapeake & W. R. Co. 101 Va. 778, 45 S. E. 322; Morrison v. Davis, 20 Pa. 171, 57 Am. Dec. 695; Rodgers v. Missouri P. R. Co. 75 Kan. 222, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 658, 121 Am. St. Rep. 416, 88 Pac. 885, 12 Ann. Cas. 441; Sauter v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 78 Kan. 331, 97 Pac. 434; Grier v. St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Terminal R. Co. 108 Mo. App. 565, 84 S. W. 158; Armstrong, B. & Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 26 Okla. 352, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 671, 109 Pac. 216; Hunt v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 74 S. W. 69; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Bergman, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 64 S. W. 999; Denny v. New York O. R. Co. 13 Gray, 481, 74 Am. Dec. 645; 4 R. C. L. 721; 1 Hutchinson, Carr. 3d ed. §§ 297 et seq.; Moffatt Commission Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 113 Mo. App. 544, 88 S. W. 117; Lamar Mfg. Co. v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 117 Mo. App. 453, 93 S. W. 851; General Fire Extinguisher Co. v. Carolina & N. W. R. Co. 137 N. C. 278, 49 S. E. 208; Lightfoot v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 126 Mo. App. 532, 104 S. W. 482; 2 Mod. Am. Law, p. 125.

Interstate shipments of freight are subject to the paramount regulations of Congress. One of the regulations prescribed by an act of Congress is "that any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company receiving property for transportation from a point in one state to a point in another state shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor and shall be liable to the lawful holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or by any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company to which such property may be delivered or over whose line or lines such property may pass." [34 Stat. at L. 595, chap. 3591, § 7, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8592].

Within the meaning of the quoted act of Congress, Was the injury to the goods "caused by" any of the railroad companies to which they were intrusted en route?

Treating the interstate shipment under the Federal law or otherwise as involving only one transportation from the point of origin to destination, though different carriers severally covered portions of the entire route, the liability of the defendant initial carrier is no greater than it would be if it transported over the entire route.

Whether a common carrier is liable for injury to goods, where, after being negligently delayed in transit, the goods, while still in transit are injured by an act of God, such as an unprecedented flood, depends upon whether the negligent delay of the carrier has a proximate casual relation, or a mere remote or casual relation, to the subsequent injury.

At common law, in the absence of a binding contract otherwise fixing liability, a common carrier is, with certain exceptions, liable as an insurer to a shipper for losses of or injuries to goods being transported. If the losses or injuries are caused by an act of God that could not have been foreseen, and from which the carrier could not by the exercise of due care protect the goods, the carrier is not liable. But if, prior to a loss of or injury to goods in transit, the conduct of the carrier constitutes in fact or in law a tortious conversion of the goods, the carrier is liable as for the unlawful conversion, even though the goods are subsequently injured or destroyed by an unforeseen and overpowering act of God. And if negligence or fault of the carrier contributed proximately to an injury or loss that was directly caused by an act of God, the carrier is liable if the loss or injury followed in ordinary natural sequence from, or was a natural and probable result of, the carrier's negligence or fault. In the latter class of cases, the liability of the carrier is for a negligent breach of contract or legal duty, and the rights of the parties are determined by the rules of law relative to actionable negligence.

Actionable negligence exists when a loss or injury to one without fault results directly from another's mere negligence, or when the loss or injury sustained by one is such as results in ordinary natural sequence from the negligence, or such as naturally and ordinarily should have been regarded as a probable, not as a merely possible, result of the simple negligence of another. Conversely, when the loss or injury is not a direct result of the mere negligence, and the loss or injury is not a natural ordinary sequence, or such as naturally and ordinarily should have been regarded as a probable, and not a merely possible, result of the simple negligence, the negligence is not actionable. See 2 Mod. Am. Law, pp. 114 et seq. If an independent efficient cause intervenes between the negligence and the injury, and the original negligence does not directly contribute to the force or effectiveness of the intervening cause, the original negligence is not regarded as a proximate cause of the injury, even though the injury might not have occurred but for the original negligence. A proximate cause stands next in casual relation to the effect. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Heerey, 105 Ill. App. 647; Perkins v. Morgan Lumber Co. 68 Fla. 503, 67 L.R.A.1916D

So. 126; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Siler, 229 Ill. 390, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 819, 82 N. E. 362, 11 Ann. Cas. 368. A proximate cause produces the result in continuous sequence, and without which the result would not have occurred. Ramsbottom v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 138 N. C. 38, 50 S. E. 448. These principles are applicable where injuries occur from mere negligence that is a breach of contract or of a public duty by a common carrier, where no malconduct is involved, and the negligence is not in failing to provide reasonable facilities required by law or to give proper attention which directly contributed to the injury. In this case the carrier was merely negligent in delaying the shipment, there being no conversion in law or deviation from the proper route, or malconduct or lack of reasonably adequate and safe facilities. There was subsequent to the delay "no negligence which in any manner contributed to the loss or damage," as is expressly stipulated. An assumption that the goods would not have been injured had the carrier not negligently delayed the shipment en route before the flood happened will not conclusively show liability of the carrier, since the negligent delay did not directly cause or contribute to the injury, and had no causal relation to, and did not contribute to, the injury or to the effectiveness of the flood, the direct cause of the injury, and any character of injury to the shipment from an unprecedented flood could not reasonably be regarded as being an ordinary natural sequence or as naturally and ordinarily a probable result of the merely negligent delay during a period when there was nothing to foretell an unusual flood on the route. The shipment being household goods, loss of their use for a period equal to the delay, and perhaps other losses, would be natural and ordinary results of the delay in their transit that should reasonably have been anticipated for which the carrier would be liable in damages; but injury or loss from an unprecedented flood overtaking them before arriving at their destination was not an ordinary natural sequence of the delay, and such an injury was not naturally or ordinarily a probable result of a delay in transit that should reasonably have been anticipated by the carrier, when there was no reason in experience or in a warning at the time of the delay, for anticipating the unprecedented flood that subsequently injured the goods before they reached their destination. It is expressly agreed that "the coming or happening of which rains and floods it was utterly impossible for the defendant under any circumstances to have foreseen at any time prior to the delivery of said shipment to the aforesaid next succeeding carrier," and "that the rains and floods aforesaid were the most sudden and violent ever known at or in the vicinity where said shipment was then caught and damaged as aforesaid."

Common carriers are not liable in damages for injuries to goods in transit caused solely by an act of God that could not have been foreseen. This exemption from liability is allowed by law because of the assumed inability of the carriers to provide against the consequences of an act of God that could not be foreseen and that is overpowering in its destructive force and effect. A flood of unprecedented volume and destructive force may be such an act of God as relieves a common carrier from its damaging effect upon goods being transported by the carrier, when the flood could not have been anticipated or its effect avoided by the exercise of reasonable foresight and diligence based upon common experience and available information. This rule is predicated upon the principle that, as a carrier cannot reasonably be required to foresee the appearance and consequences of an act of God, or to provide against consequences of an unforeseen and overpowering act of God, it should not be held liable in damages for the injurious effects of an act of God upon the goods being transported by the carrier, when the carrier does not contribute to the injury or loss by some malconduct such as acts amounting to a conversion in law of the goods by an unnecessary deviation, or by a tortious withholding of the goods, or otherwise, and when negligence of the carrier in not providing reasonably adequate and safe facilities and proper use of them for the discharge of its duty as a common carrier, does not directly contribute to the loss or injury.

A merely negligent delay in transporting goods, which delay causes the goods to be at a point in transit where they are injured or destroyed by an unprecedented flood that could not have been foreseen at the time of the delay, does not render the carrier liable for the direct consequences of the flood upon the goods, if there be no malconduct by the carrier, and negligence of the carrier in not providing reasonably safe and adequate facilities for and attention to the safety of the goods does not directly contribute to the injury, even though the goods would not have been at the point where they were injured, and would have escaped the flood, but for the negligent delay of the carrier at a time when the flood could not have been foreseen. Such an injury is not an ordinary natural sequence of the delay.

The rule in this state is that damages may not be recovered for all the injurious consequences that might be shown to have resulted from mere negligence in performing a stipulated or legal duty or service. But where there is negligence, damages may be recovered for such injurious consequences as follow in ordinary natural sequence from the negligence, or such as reasonably should have been contemplated as an ordinary, natural, and probable result of the negligence had proper attention been given to the subject. The particular injury sustained need not have been anticipated. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 55 Fla. 514, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 92, 46 So. 732; Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 56 Fla. 735, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 134, 131 Am. St. Rep. 169, 48 So. 209; Hildreth v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 56 Fla. 387, 47 So. 820; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Milton, 53 Fla. 484, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 560, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1077, 43 So. 495; Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Peninsular Land, Transp. & Mfg. Co. 27 Fla. 1, 157, 17 L.R.A. 33, 65, 9 So. 661, 689; Brock v. Gale, 14 Fla. 523, 14 Am. Rep. 356. See also Moore v. Lanier, 52 Fla. 353, 42 So. 462; James v. Tampa, 52 Fla. 292, 120 Am. St. Rep. 203, 42 So. 729, 11 Ann. Cas. 510.
L.R.A.1916D.

In determining the liability of common carriers for goods injured or lost in transit by an act of God, the true rule is that, in order to relieve the carrier from liability the act of God must be one that could not have been foreseen, and must be the sole proximate cause of the loss or injury. But where the carrier is otherwise without fault, and its mere delay in transportation causes the goods to be where they are injured by an act of God, the carrier is liable only when the injury resulted from the delay by ordinary natural sequence, or where the injury is of a character that is within the probable consequences of the previous negligent delay of the carrier; for otherwise the carrier's liability would be extended to losses that it is not by law required to anticipate and provide against. See Merritt Creamery Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 139 Mo. App. 149, 122 S. W. 322. As the injury to the goods in this case was directly caused by an admittedly unprecedented flood,—an excusing act of God,—to which injury the defendant did not directly contribute, and as such flood could not have been anticipated or the injury regarded as resulting by ordinary natural sequence, or as a natural and probable result of the preceding delay in transit, the injury was not "caused by" the defendant within the meaning of the law, and the defendant is not liable.

The interstate commerce act does not render carriers liable for injuries to shipments that are caused by an act of God. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hayes, 181 Ind. 87, 103 N. E. 839, 104 N. E. 581. The delay in transportation prior to the injury was "caused by" the defendant, but the injury to the goods was "caused by" an unprecedented flood,—an act of God,—the preceding negligence of the carrier in delaying the shipment having merely a casual relation, and not a causal relation, to the act of God and the injury.

The judgment is reversed.

Taylor, Ch. J., and Shackelford and Ellis, JJ., concur.

Cockrell, J., absent on account of sickness.

Annotation—Prior delay or deviation as affecting carrier's liability for loss of or damage to goods from act of God.

This note is not concerned with any question as to the duty or negligence of the carrier in view of an act of God which is threatened or has occurred, that question being treated in the notes to Armstrong v. Illinois C. R. Co. 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 671, and Gulf Coast Transp. Co. v. Howell, ante, 974; but is confined to the effect upon the carrier's liability of its negligent delay or deviation prior to, and independently of, the duty arising when the act of God was threatened or had occurred. In other words, the question is not as to the existence of a duty, or negligence, on the part of the carrier, but whether its prior breach of duty can be regarded as the proximate cause of a loss or damage immediately caused by a subsequent act of God. The two questions are quite distinct from a legal point of view, although both may arise in the same case. See Wabash R. Co. v. Sharpe (1906) 76 Neb. 424, 124 Am. St. Rep. 823, 107 N. W. 758, and Sunderland Bros. Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1911) 89 Neb. 660, 131 N. W. 1047.

For the duty of a carrier to hasten shipment or take other precaution to prevent loss threatened without any antecedent fault on its part, see Pine Bros. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 639, and note.

The question as to the burden of proof when the defense in an action to recover for loss of or injury to goods during carriage is act of God or vis major is discussed in notes to Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Logan, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 663, and St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Dreyfus, L.R.A. 1915D, 547.

Negligent delay.

The position taken in SEABOARD AIR LINE R. Co. v. MULLIN, ante, 982, that a prior delay of goods, but for which they would not have encountered the act of God which injured them, is not such a proximate or concurring cause as will render the carrier liable, is sustained by many of the cases, though there is a L.R.A. 1916D.

decided conflict of authority on the point.

A carrier will not be liable for goods destroyed by an act of God unless there is some causal connection recognized by law between the negligence of the company in failing to make timely delivery of the goods and their destruction by the act of God, and, in order to constitute such negligence, the proximate cause of an injury, the injury must be the natural and probable result of a negligent act. So, mere negligent delay on the part of the carrier in forwarding and delivering cotton, and its destruction by the great Galveston flood while in the company's possession, will not, standing alone, raise the issue of the company's liability. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Bergman (1901) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 64 S. W. 999.

So, the mere fact that a canal boat was started on its way with a lame horse, which caused considerable delay, but for which delay the boat would not have been overtaken by an overwhelming flood, was too remote a cause to make the carrier liable. Morrison v. Davis (1852) 20 Pa. 171, 57 Am. Dec. 695.

An unnecessary delay of a barge, but for which it would not have encountered a storm in which it was lost on one of the Great Lakes, was not the proximate cause of the loss, so as to render the carrier liable. Daniels v. Ballantine (1872) 23 Ohio St. 532, 13 Am. Rep. 264.

Even though there had been a contract by the carrier to start the goods on their way at an earlier time than they were started, and but for the delay they would not have encountered an unprecedented flood, the failure of the carrier to comply with the contract would have been only the remote cause of the loss, and the carrier would not be liable. Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Reeves (1870) 10 Wall. (U. S.) 176, 19 L. ed. 909.

Antecedent delay of a shipment of horses is not the proximate cause of injury to them by encountering an unusually severe storm, although they would not have encountered such storm but for the delay. Herring v. Chesapeake & W. R. Co. (1903) 101 Va. 778, 45 S. E. 322.

So, a few days' delay in transporting wheat to Galveston, and in keeping it there before the storm, would not render the carrier liable for its destruction by flood. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Darby (1902) 28 Tex. Civ. App. 229, 67 S. W. 129.

In Lamont v. Nashville & C. R. Co. (1871) 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 58, it was held that the negligent act of a carrier in detaining goods before shipment was not a proximate cause of the loss, so as to render it liable for their destruction by a flood while en route.

Although it is fairly inferable from the facts that the carrier had negligently delayed forwarding goods, and that, had the usual and reasonable diligence been employed, they would have escaped a flood, the carrier would not be liable where its negligence was the remote, and not the direct, cause of the injury to the goods. Lamar Mfg. Co. v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1906) 117 Mo. App. 453, 93 S. W. 851. See second appeal (1908) 131 Mo. App. 115, 110 S. W. 601, holding that the carrier was not negligent in failing to anticipate the unusual nature of the flood.

The rule as to when an act of God will excuse a carrier for the loss of or injury to goods is stated in Moffatt Commission Co. v. Union P. R. Co. (1905) 113 Mo. App. 544, 88 S. W. 117, as follows: "The act of God must be the sole cause of the loss or injury; and whenever the negligence of the carrier mingles with the act of God as a co-operative cause, he is liable; provided, the resulting loss is within the probable consequences of the negligent act; otherwise, it will be too remote and disconnected to be considered the proximate cause."

So, where a carrier was negligent in delaying for one day the transfer of a car of wheat which was in its yards, and it was destroyed by a sudden and probably unprecedented flood, so that the result was almost altogether out of the course of nature, the loss from such a cause was wholly unlooked for, and was not to be expected, or even taken into consideration, by the most cautious, and therefore the carrier was not liable. (Mo.) Ibid.

In Denny v. New York C. R. Co. (1859) 13 Gray (Mass.) 481, 74 Am. Dec. 645, where the carrier negligently delayed wool while en route over its line, but carried it to the end of its line, and while it was in its depot at that place it was damaged by an unusual flood, it was held that the carrier was not liable, the delay not being the proximate cause of the injury.

The negligent delay of a carrier in moving goods intrusted to it for transportation, not being so unreasonable as to amount to a conversion, will not render it liable for the loss of the goods after they have been carried to their destination, if they are there destroyed by an act of God before delivery. Rodgers v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1907) 75 Kan. 222, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 658, 121 Am. St. Rep. 416, 88 Pac. 885, 12 Ann. Cas. 441.

Where the carrier's negligence in delaying a car in which eggs were shipped was but the remote cause of the injury, the direct cause being a flood which appeared so suddenly and with such magnitude and force that its advent could not be anticipated, nor its consequences averted by the exercise of human care and foresight, it was not liable. Lightfoot v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1907) 126 Mo. App. 532, 104 S. W. 482.

But it has been held that if a carrier negligently delays the shipment of goods, and they are overtaken and damaged by an act of God which would not have caused the damage but for the delay, it is liable, even though the act of God could not reasonably have been anticipated, the negligent delay being such a proximate or concurring cause as to render the carrier liable. Bibb Broom Corn Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1905) 94 Minn. 269, 69 L.R.A. 509, 110 Am. St. Rep. 361, 102 N. W. 709, 3 Ann. Cas. 450, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 590.

So, where goods were negligently delayed by a carrier at a junction point, and while so delayed were overtaken by an unusual flood, the carrier was liable because of its concurring negligence. Michaels v. New York C. R. Co. (1864) 30 N. Y. 564, 86 Am. Dec. 415; Read v. Spaulding (1864) 30 N. Y. 630, 86 Am. Dec. 426; Dunson v. New York C. R. Co. (1870) 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 265.

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Miles (1909) 92 Ark. 573, 123 S. W. 775, 124 S. W. 1043, it was held that a carrier was liable for the loss of a market for cattle owing to a delay in delivery where the delay was caused by its own negligence concurring with an act of God in the shape of a flood which washed away a bridge and caused further delay, which would not have been encountered but for the prior delay, as both the negligence of the carrier and the act of God combined to produce the delay in getting the cattle to their destination in time, and both were the direct and proximate cause of the delay which resulted in the loss.

In Armentrout v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. (1876) 1 Mo. App. 158, an action for injury to a shipment of eggs by extreme cold weather encountered en route, which was defended on the ground that the cold weather was an act of God, it was held that the carrier was nevertheless liable, where it was negligent in delaying the shipment, but for which negligence the eggs would not have encountered the extreme cold weather.

The negligence of a carrier resulting in delay of goods in its hands while en route continues to be an active cause until the consignee has had a reasonable time after the arrival of the goods within which to remove them, and where they are destroyed by an act of God at their destination, before such reasonable time has elapsed, the carrier will be liable. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Elliott (1907) 150 Ala. 381, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1264, 124 Am. St. Rep. 72, 43 So. 738.

A carrier whose negligent delay in transporting goods committed to him subjects them to destruction by an act of God cannot escape liability on the theory that such result could not have been anticipated, as the possibility of accidental destruction is increased by the negligent extension of time during which the goods must remain in the carrier's control, and out of the control of the owner, during which time some casualty may overtake them. Green-Wheeler Shoe Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1906) 130 Iowa, 123, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 882, 106 N. W. 498, 8 Ann. Cas. 45.

Failure of a railroad company for eleven days to forward property delivered to it for transportation prevents it escaping liability in case the property is destroyed by an act of God which would not have been encountered had the property been forwarded promptly. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Quarles (1906) 145 Ala. 436, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 867, 117 Am. St. Rep. 54, 40 So. 120, 8 Ann. Cas. 308.

So, in Gratiot Street Warehouse Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1907) 124 Mo. App. 545, 102 S. W. 11, where it appeared that the negligence of defendant's agent is not advancing the shipping bill and instructions operated to detain the car in which plaintiff's corn was loaded for a considerable time L.R.A.1916D.

after it should have been en route, and that the carrier's agents voluntarily cut an embankment in order to save its main line from washout, and thereby its yards were flooded and the car of corn destroyed, when it might have been removed to a point of safety had the embankment not been cut, it was held that the question of defendant's negligence was for the jury.

Delay in delivering.

In Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Benson (1890) 86 Ga. 203, 22 Am. St. Rep. 446, 12 S. E. 357, where a carrier, after the arrival of goods at their destination, failed to deliver them to the consignee, although they were called for, and they were then destroyed by an unprecedented flood, it was held that the carrier was not excused from liability because the goods were destroyed by an act of God, inasmuch as its failure to deliver the goods amounted to a conversion.

Where the evidence failed to show that at the time the carrier negligently omitted to deliver goods in its care, it had any reasonable grounds to anticipate the unprecedented flood which destroyed the goods, the act of God, and not the negligent omission to deliver the goods, was the proximate cause of the damage. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henry (1908) 78 Kan. 490, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 177, 97 Pac. 465. But upon an appeal from a second trial of this case, reported as Henry v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1910) 83 Kan. 104, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1088, 109 Pac. 1005, where it appeared that, while the testimony was the same as on the former trial, the findings in the second trial were more specific in regard to the fact that the depot was open for business on the day that demand was made for the goods, and that there was a refusal of the demand, the court decided the case upon the basis of there being a wrongful withholding of the goods instead of mere negligence, as in the first trial, and held that the company was liable notwithstanding the fact that the goods were destroyed by an act of God, saying: "While the wrongful withholding of the goods had nothing to do with the occurrence of the flood, it did in fact cause the loss, as there would have been no loss if there had been no wrongful detention. The fact that the intervention of the flood concurred with defendant's own wrong in the injury of the goods does not relieve it from responsibility for the loss."

In Hunt Bros. v. Missouri, K. & T. R.

Co. (1903) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 74 S. W. 69, it is held that, while the negligence of the carrier in failing to notify plaintiff of the arrival of wheat in Galveston, and its failure to place cars on the proper elevator tracks to be unloaded, and to move cars from the lower ground to the middle yard, concurred with the flood in producing the injury complained of, and but for such negligence the damage would not have occurred, still such negligence was the remote, and not the proximate cause, of the damage, and the carrier would be excused by the act of God.

Deviation.

For deviation as affecting carrier's right to avail itself of provisions of special contract of affreightment, see note to McKahan v. American Exp. Co. 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1046.

Deviation by a carrier of live stock from the usual and most direct route, because of a washout on a connecting line and the bad condition of its own track, will not, in the entire absence of negligence in selecting the new route, which is as reasonably direct as is available under existing conditions, render the carrier liable for a loss occasioned by a flood at a point on such new route. Empire State Cattle Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1907) 210 U. S. 1, 52 L. ed. 931, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 607, 15 Ann. Cas. 70, affirming (1906) 77 C. C. A. 601, 147 Fed. 457.

And where the deviation is made necessary by an act of God, such deviation will not render the carrier liable as an insurer for loss in value of sheep owing to delay. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Wentworth (1894) 8 Tex. Civ. App. 5, 27 S. W. 680.

In Green-Wheeler Shoe Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1906) 130 Iowa, 123, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 882, 106 N. W. 498, 8

Ann. Cas. 45, the court says that the distinction which is sometimes attempted to be made between cases in which the goods in the hands of a carrier are brought within the operation of an act of God by a negligent prior delay on the part of the carrier, and those in which they are brought within its operation by a deviation from the route, that a deviation amounts to a conversion, rendering the carrier absolutely liable, is too technical to be considered as persuasive.

But where the master of a barge unnecessarily deviated from the usual course with a cargo of lime, and the vessel was lost through the action of a tempest in wetting the lime and setting it on fire, it was held that the carrier was liable. Davis v. Garrett (1830) 6 Bing. (Eng.) 716, 4 Moore & P. 540, 8 L. J. C. P. 253, 31 Revised Rep. 524, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 273.

Where a carrier by boat agreed to deliver a cargo at a certain place, but stopped at a point short of that place, and while there the goods were damaged by a storm, which was either an excepted peril of the river or an act of God which would have relieved the carrier from liability, if it had been encountered in the ordinary course of the voyage, the carrier was liable for the loss because of its disregard of its duty and of the contract. Cassilay v. Young (1843) 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 265, 39 Am. Dec. 505.

Although the running of a vessel upon an unknown rock is an act of God, where it appears that the master of the vessel was ignorant of the navigation, had no pilot, and had taken the vessel out of the usual course, the running of the vessel on the rock may be attributed to his negligence, and the carrier will be liable. Williams v. Grant (1816) 1 Conn. 487, 7 Am. Dec. 235. R. L. S.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

EASTERN ILLINOIS STATE NORMAL SCHOOL, Plff. in Certiorari,
v.

CITY OF CHARLESTON.

(271 Ill. 602, 111 N. E. 573.)

Water — nominal rates — power of municipality to grant.

1. Authority conferred upon a municipal corporation to supply water to its inhabitants at such rates as the common council shall deem expedient does not include power to contract to furnish water for fifty years L.R.A.1916D.

at a nominal rate to a public institution, to secure its location in the municipality.

For other cases, see Waters, 111, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Municipal corporation — authority to contract for location of public institution.

2. A municipal corporation has no implied authority to undertake to furnish water from its plant to a public institution

Note. — For power of municipality operating a public utility to make a special rate to a particular company or person for public utilities controlled by it, see annotation following this case, post, 996.

for fifty years at a nominal cost, in consideration of its location in the city.
For other cases, see Waters, III, b, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Estoppel — to question municipal contract.

3. The establishment of a state institution in a municipal corporation at large expense on the faith of the municipality's offer to furnish it water for a long term of years at nominal rates does not estop the municipality from questioning the validity of the contract.

For other cases, see Estoppel, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 16, 1916.)

CERTIORARI to the Appellate Court, Third District, to review a judgment affirming a decree of the Circuit Court for Coles County dismissing a bill filed to enforce an alleged contract to supply water to plaintiff and to enjoin the shutting off of the water supply. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. N. Cofer and P. J. Lucey, Attorney General, for plaintiff in certiorari:

A contract to secure the location of a state normal school at a city is within the corporate purposes of the municipality.

Burr v. Carbondale, 76 Ill. 455.

A municipal corporation is estopped to deny the power to make a contract entered into when acting in its private capacity, after it has been fully performed by the other party, and municipality has accepted the benefits and cannot place the other party in statu quo.

10 Cyc. 1156, 1157; 28 Cyc. 674; People ex rel. Fitz Henry v. Union Gas & E. Co. 260 Ill. 395, 103 N. E. 245; Winnetka v. Chicago & M. Electric R. Co. 204 Ill. 304, 68 N. E. 407; De Kalb v. Luney, 193 Ill. 185, 61 N. E. 1036; People ex rel. Jackson v. Suburban R. Co. 178 Ill. 607, 49 L.R.A. 650, 53 N. E. 349; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. People, 91 Ill. 251; Chicago v. Nicholson, 130 Ill. App. 406; Sanitary Dist. v. Martin, 227 Ill. 260, 81 N. E. 417, 10 Ann. Cas. 227, 129 Ill. App. 308; Darst v. Gale, 83 Ill. 141; Bradley v. Ballard, 55 Ill. 413, 8 Am. Rep. 656, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 563; West v. Madison County Agri. Board, 82 Ill. 205.

A municipality can no more work a fraud upon property owners than an individual, and may be estopped by conduct.

Sullivan v. Tichenor, 179 Ill. 102, 53 N. E. 561; Burr v. Carbondale, 76 Ill. 455.

A municipality may be estopped by acquiescence of its officers.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. People, 91 Ill. 251; Murphy v. Chicago, 29 Ill. 279, 81 Am. Dec. 307; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 533. L.R.A.1916D.

A municipality has implied powers to do all things necessary or fairly in or incident to the powers expressly granted.

Rockford v. Mower, 259 Ill. 607, 102 N. E. 1032; Maywood Co. v. Maywood, 140 Ill. 216, 29 N. E. 704.

An ordinance of a city owning its waterworks system, exempting an educational school from payment for water rents, is valid and enforceable.

Chicago v. University of Chicago, 131 Ill. App. 361, affirmed in 228 Ill. 605, 81 N. E. 1138, 10 Ann. Cas. 669.

A municipal corporation is estopped where it would be inequitable to permit the corporation to stultify itself by retracting what its officers had done.

Chicago v. Chicago & O. P. Elev. R. Co. 261 Ill. 497, 104 N. E. 240; Washingtonian Home v. Chicago, 157 Ill. 414, 29 L.R.A. 798, 41 N. E. 893; Logan County v. Lincoln, 81 Ill. 156; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 345.

A contract to establish a college "at" or "in" a town does not require it to be located "within" the corporate limits.

7 Cyc. 26, note; Rogers v. Galloway Female College, 64 Ark. 627, 39 L.R.A. 636, 44 S. W. 454.

If a city may lawfully exercise a power, it may be estopped to deny its validity because of informalities.

Chicago v. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 244 Ill. 232, 135 Am. St. Rep. 316, 91 N. E. 422.

A contract by a municipal corporation with a consumer, to furnish water, is made by the city in its private capacity.

Quincy v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 92 Ill. 21; Rogers v. Wickliffe, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 587, 94 S. W. 24; Dyer v. Newport, 123 Ky. 203, 94 S. W. 25.

The operation of a waterworks system by a municipal corporation is conducted by the city in its private capacity or business powers, as contradistinguished from its public governmental capacity.

People ex rel. Brockamp v. Schlitz Brewing Co. 261 Ill. 25, 103 N. E. 555; Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 21 L.R.A. 519, 34 N. E. 545; Palestine v. Siler, 225 Ill. 636, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 205, 80 N. E. 345; Chicago v. University of Chicago, 131 Ill. App. 361, affirmed in 228 Ill. 605, 81 N. E. 1138, 10 Ann. Cas. 669; Chicago v. Cicero, 210 Ill. 298, 71 N. E. 356; People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 238, 15 Am. Rep. 202; Rogers v. Wickliffe, and Dyer v. Newport, supra.

Messrs. John T. Kincaid, Albert Anderson, and Ben F. Anderson, for defendant in certiorari:

The powers of cities and other municipal corporations are only those expressly granted, and such powers as are necessarily implied in order to make such grant effective.

Illinois Central Hospital v. Jacksonville, 61 Ill. App. 199; Smith v. McDowell, 148 Ill. 55, 22 L.R.A. 393, 35 N. E. 141; Chicago v. M. & M. Hotel Co. 248 Ill. 265, 93 N. E. 753; Seeger v. Mueller, 133 Ill. 87, 24 N. E. 513; People ex rel. Biddison v. Board of Education, 255 Ill. 572, 99 N. E. 659.

A municipal corporation has no power to donate any of its funds or property, and no one can be misled, as all are bound to know this and its powers generally.

People use of Alton v. Parker, 231 Ill. 481, 83 N. E. 282; Hope v. Alton, 214 Ill. 102, 73 N. E. 406; Danville v. Danville Water Co. 178 Ill. 299, 69 Am. St. Rep. 304, 53 N. E. 118; May v. Chicago, 222 Ill. 595, 78 N. E. 912; Roemheld v. Chicago, 231 Ill. 467, 83 N. E. 291; Chicago v. Williams, 182 Ill. 135, 55 N. E. 123.

Everyone is presumed to know the extent of the power of a municipal corporation, and a municipal corporation cannot be estopped to aver its incapacity when an attempt is made to enforce a contract which it has made without authority.

People use of Alton v. Parker, 231 Ill. 481, 83 N. E. 282; Hope v. Alton, 214 Ill. 105, 73 N. E. 406; Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 791; Chicago v. M. & M. Hotel Co. 248 Ill. 272, 93 N. E. 753; Danville v. Danville Water Co. 178 Ill. 299, 69 Am. St. Rep. 304, 53 N. E. 118; Roemheld v. Chicago, 231 Ill. 467, 83 N. E. 291.

The business of furnishing water by municipalities is a right derived wholly from the statute, and it is impressed with a public interest.

Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 140, 21 L.R.A. 519, 34 N. E. 545; Illinois Central Hospital v. Jacksonville, 61 Ill. App. 200; Danville v. Danville Water Co. 178 Ill. 309, 69 Am. St. Rep. 304, 53 N. E. 118; People ex rel. Gaskill v. Forest Home Cemetery Co. 258 Ill. 41, L.R.A.—, —, 101 N. E. 219, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 277; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 1301.

If the power is wholly wanting, a purely private corporation is in the same situation as to estoppel as a public one.

National Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Home Sav. Bank, 181 Ill. 45, 64 L.R.A. 399, 72 Am. St. Rep. 245, 54 N. E. 619.

When the power is lacking, there is no estoppel to plead ultra vires as to private corporation, even where the contract is executed, and the only remedy is for recovery of the consideration paid.

United States Brewing Co. v. Dolese & S. Co. 289 Ill. 280, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 898, 102 N. E. 753; Converse v. Emerson, T. & Co. 242 Ill. 627, 90 N. E. 269; Steele v. Fraternal Tribunes, 215 Ill. 190, 106 Am. L.R.A.1916D.

St. Rep. 160, 74 N. E. 121; De la Vergne Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. German Sav. Inst. 175 U. S. 40, 44 L. ed. 65, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 20.

A city has no power to bind itself to pay a fixed rate for water for a term of years.

Danville v. Danville Water Co. 178 Ill. 299, 69 Am. St. Rep. 304, 53 N. E. 118; Freeport Water Co. v. Freeport, 186 Ill. 179, 57 N. E. 862.

A city council cannot curtail powers of succeeding councils in fixing water rates.

Ibid.

In order to raise an estoppel in pais, a party must have so acted and influenced the conduct of another as to amount to a fraud.

Covenant Mut. Life Asso. v. Kentner, 188 Ill. 431, 58 N. E. 966.

A party claiming the benefit of estoppel must have relied on the faith of the representations. If he knows they are false, no estoppel.

Vail v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 192 Ill. 567, 61 N. E. 651; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Slee, 123 Ill. 57, 12 N. E. 543.

Cartwright, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The general assembly passed an act, in force July 1, 1895, entitled, "An Act to Establish and Maintain the Eastern Illinois State Normal School" (Laws 1895, p. 63), which was created a corporation to be governed by a board of trustees appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate. The trustees were appointed, and planned to receive donations from different localities in consideration of the location of the school. The city of Charleston owned and operated a waterworks plant and system, and as an inducement to procure the location of the school at said city the city council adopted a resolution on July 5, 1895, as follows: "A resolution offering the trustees of the Eastern Illinois State Normal School, providing it be located in this city, all the water it may require for use in its buildings and on its grounds, also for fire protection, for the consideration of $5 for the period of fifty years; which was read and on motion adopted by all voting aye."

As a result of the inducement offered by the resolution, the trustees located the school at the city of Charleston and tapped the water main and connected its water pipes therewith, extending to the building and grounds, at its own expense, and has since kept and maintained the same. The trustees located buildings on the ground where the school was located, adjoining the south corporate line of the city, and the ground was afterward brought within the corporate limits and is now within the city.

The buildings were completed and the school conducted, and it now has an attendance of 500 scholars, with 33 teachers. It has a dormitory furnishing board and rooms to a large number of students, and requires a large amount of water to generate steam for heating and for the other uses of the school. The city complied with its agreement until May 15, 1913, when the city council repudiated it and refused to continue furnishing water as agreed. On July 17, 1913, an ordinance was passed for the installation of water meters, and in compliance with that ordinance meters were installed to measure the water consumed by the school. The cost of meters and installation and a regular rate for water was charged to the school, amounting to $309.30 up to October 1, 1913, and the city threatened to cut off the water and disconnect the water pipes unless the bill were paid. On November 25, 1913, the Eastern Illinois State Normal School filed its bill of complaint in the circuit court of Coles county, alleging in its amended bill the foregoing facts, and asking the court to compel the city to specifically perform its agreement, and to enjoin it from shutting off the water supply. A temporary injunction was ordered and issued, and the defendant appeared and demurred to the amended bill, admitting the facts, but alleging that it had no legal right to make the contract. The demurrer was sustained, and the complainant elected to stand by its bill, and the bill was dismissed. An appeal was prosecuted to the appellate court for the third district, where the decree was affirmed, and a writ of certiorari was granted by this court to review the judgment of the appellate court.

Section 1 of the act authorizing cities, incorporated towns, and villages to construct and maintain waterworks, in force April 15, 1873 (Laws 1873, p. 190), as amended in 1879 (Laws 1879, p. 64), authorizes all cities, incorporated towns, and villages to provide for a supply of water for the purpose of fire protection and for the use of the inhabitants of such cities, incorporated towns, and villages, by erecting, constructing, and maintaining a system of waterworks for fire protection and the use of the inhabitants for domestic and commercial purposes. Section 4 of the act provides that the common council of cities or trustees of towns or villages having a waterworks system shall have power to tax, assess, and collect such tax, rent, or rates for the use and benefit of water used or supplied by such waterworks as the common council or board of trustees, as the case may be, shall deem just and expedient.

Municipalities are created primarily for the exercise of such portion of the powers L.R.A.1916D.

of sovereignty within the corporate limits as the general assembly may see fit to bestow upon them, and they may also be authorized to supply conveniences to the inhabitants, such as bringing water from some source of supply and distributing it to those desiring it. In the creation of a system of waterworks and the operation of the same for the purpose of protection against fire, flushing sewers, or other uses pertaining to the public health and safety, the city is in the exercise of the police power, and is therefore exercising a governmental function. Wilcox v. Chicago, 107 Ill. 334, 47 Am. Rep. 434; Chicago v. Selz, S. & Co. 202 Ill. 545, 67 N. E. 386, 14 Am. Neg. Rep. 23. In supplying water for the use of the inhabitants for domestic and commercial purposes, a municipality is not in the exercise of a governmental power, but acts in the same capacity as a private corporation, although the business is carried on for the public advantage, and, being public in its nature, is impressed with a public use. Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 21 L.R.A. 519, 34 N. E. 545; Chicago v. Cicero, 210 Ill. 290, 71 N. E. 356; People ex rel. Brockamp v. Schlitz Brewing Co. 261 Ill. 22, 103 N. E. 555. There are material distinctions between the exercise of governmental powers and those which are in their nature private, in the fact that in the exercise of governmental powers a municipality is not liable to a private action, while it is liable for injuries resulting from improper exercise of a power in its private capacity. Any distinction, however, based on the nature of the power exercised, is of very little importance in determining whether the city of Charleston is bound by its contract, which rests on the question whether the city had power to enter into it in any capacity. The argument for the sufficiency of the bill is that, because the city was authorized to construct and maintain waterworks and supply water to the inhabitants of the city, and the exercise of that power was in its private capacity, therefore the city could enter into any contract it saw fit for a term of fifty years and would be bound by it. The conclusion does not follow either from the fact that the city had authority to supply water, or that the exercise of the power was in a private capacity; but the question is whether the city had power to make the contract it did make to furnish water to the complainant or to any person or corporation for fifty years for $5. The rule is that the powers of municipalities are only those expressly granted or necessarily implied to make the grant of specific powers effective. Seeger v. Mueller, 133 Ill. 86, 24 N. E. 513; Chicago v.

M. & M. Hotel Co. 248 Ill. 264, 93 N. E. 753.

The only statutory powers conferred by law upon cities in respect to waterworks and water supply are those which have been stated above. If there is no legitimate corporate purpose from which the power to enter into the contract may be implied, the contract was void and cannot be enforced.

The question whether a donation to secure the location of a state institution was a corporate purpose of a county came before this court in Livingston County v. Weider, 64 Ill. 427. In that case the board of supervisors of Livingston county authorized an issue of bonds for the purpose of securing the location of the State Reform School at Pontiac, and afterward filed a bill to enjoin the county treasurer from paying interest on the bonds. Mr. Justice Breese, in delivering the opinion of the court, declared that setting up the location of state institutions to the highest bidder was contrary to public policy and the interests of the people of the state; but the bonds were declared void because of a want of power to issue them, although the county had secured the location of the reform school. The term "corporate purposes" was there defined to be such purposes, and such only, as are germane to the objects of the incorporation of the municipality,—at least such as have a legitimate connection with those objects and a manifest relation thereto,—and it was held that providing a location for a state institution was not a corporate purpose.

Afterward the case of Burr v. Carbondale, 76 Ill. 455, was considered by the court. In that case the general assembly provided for the location of the Southern Illinois Normal University, and required the trustees to advertise for proposals from localities desiring to secure the location of the institution, and to open and examine the proposals and locate the institution at such point as should, all things considered, offer the most advantageous terms. The general assembly passed, also, an act to authorize cities and towns in southern Illinois to issue bonds to be used by municipal authorities in aid of the institution, if the same should be located in the municipality issuing the bonds. The act provided for an election, and an election was held and bonds issued in pursuance thereof and were in the hands of innocent holders. The institution was located at Carbondale, and the city afterward filed its bill to declare its action void. Mr. Justice Breese, speaking for the majority, again expressed the view that setting up the location of the institutions of the state to the highest bidder was impolitic and unwise, but found sufficient distinction between the Livingston Case and that one to sustain the validity of the bonds. The reasons given were that the bonds were issued under an act of the general assembly by a vote of the majority of the legal voters and the bonds were in the hands of innocent holders. The court said: "The disreputable feature of the case is that the same authority doing all these acts, and whose city has received the benefit of them, now seeks to repudiate them. There is no rule of law, equity, justice, or morals compelling this, and we cannot sanction it."

The substantial reason for the decision, however, was that the general assembly had authorized the transaction and was acting within its powers in doing so.

In the case of Danville v. Danville Water Co. 178 Ill. 299, 69 Am. St. Rep. 304, 53 N. E. 118, the city council of Danville passed an ordinance granting to the water company the right to construct and maintain waterworks for a term of thirty years, and by the same ordinance rented fire hydrants for specific sums for that period, with provisions for the rates to be paid for hydrants installed in the future. The city, after obtaining the waterworks and complying with its contract for a time, denied its liability and passed an ordinance reducing the rates fixed by the contract. It was held that the ordinance reducing the rates was valid, and that the city had a right, under the law authorizing it to fix rates, to reduce the rates agreed upon by the contract, notwithstanding its agreement, and had no power to bind itself by fixing a rate for its water supply for thirty years.

In the case of Freeport Water Co. v. Freeport, 186 Ill. 179, 57 N. E. 862, the city of Freeport granted to the water company the right to supply the city, by a system of waterworks, with water for a term of thirty years, and the city agreed to pay certain rates for hydrants and was to be given the free use of water for flushing sewers and various other public purposes. The city council afterward passed an ordinance changing and reducing the price to be paid for each hydrant, and it was held that the city had no power to bind itself to the payment of the fixed sums for the entire period, but might make reasonable reductions in the rates to be paid, notwithstanding its contract and the fact that it had obtained the consideration.

In the Danville and Freeport Cases, the consideration was the construction of waterworks and a supply of water, and upon the faith of the contract waterworks were built in both cities, while in this case the supposed consideration for the agreement was the location of the state institution. If neither the city of Danville nor the city of Freeport could make a binding agreement how much the city would pay for water for a term of years, it cannot be said that the city of Charleston, without legislative authority, could agree to furnish water to the complainant or anybody else for fifty years for $5, whether the exercise of the power was in its nature private or governmental.

It is contended that because it has been held that a private corporation may enter into a contract to secure the location of a postoffice site or a military encampment, a city must have the same right to secure the location of a state institution that will benefit its inhabitants. The question whether a private corporation can make such a contract depends upon the nature of the corporation, and whether the contract is connected with the legitimate exercise of its corporate powers. It has been held that a corporation engaged in business may make a contract to secure the location of a postoffice site at a place that will tend to increase its business, and that a hotel company may contract for the location of a military encampment (Richelieu Hotel Co. v. International Military Encampment Co. 140 Ill. 248, 33 Am. St. Rep. 234, 29 N. E. 1044; B. S. Green Co. v. Blodgett 159 Ill. 169, 50 Am. St. Rep. 146, 42 N. E. 176); but that was because the contract was not foreign to the business of the corporation. If a contract is ultra vires in the proper sense, it is void. National Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Home Sav. Bank, 181 Ill. 35, 64 L.R.A. 399, 72 Am. St. Rep. 245, 54 N. E. 619. In the case of Chicago v. University of Chicago, 228 Ill. 605, 81 N. E. 1138, 10 Ann. Cas. 669, the university filed its bill to enjoin the city from shutting off the water supply of the complainant, which had been remitted by ordinance. The city by its answer alleged that the city waterworks system was private property of the city, conducted as a private enterprise, and not as a governmental function, and that it had a right to charge whatever reasonable rates it saw fit. This court held that the question whether the ordinances were void because the city could not give away public property did not arise on the record, for the reason that the city, having alleged the validity of the ordinances in its answer, could not be heard to say that the circuit court erred in adopting its view. There was therefore no question concerning the want of power of the city to pass the ordinances or its right to assert their invalidity.

The final argument in support of the bill is that the city is estopped to dispute the validity of the contract, although it had no power to enter into it, for the reason that it has received the consideration. That reason did not prevail in any of the cases heretofore considered. Everyone is presumed to know the extent of the powers of a municipal corporation, and it cannot be estopped to aver its incapacity, which would amount to conferring power to do unauthorized acts simply because it has done them and received the consideration stipulated for. Stevens v. St. Mary's Training School, 144 Ill. 336, 18 L.R.A. 832, 36 Am. St. Rep. 438, 32 N. E. 962; Hope v. Alton, 214 Ill. 102, 73 N. E. 406; May v. Chicago, 222 Ill. 595, 78 N. E. 912; People use of Alton v. Parker, 231 Ill. 478, 83 N. E. 282.

The judgment of the Appellate Court is affirmed.

Annotation—Power of municipality operating a public utility to make a special rate to a particular company or person.

A municipality owning or controlling a public utility is subject to the limitation that there must be no unjust discrimination in furnishing the commodity. McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 1697, p. 3591. This general limitation lends support to the decision in EASTERN ILLINOIS STATE NORMAL SCHOOL v. CHARLESTON, ante, 991.

The decision in EASTERN ILLINOIS STATE NORMAL SCHOOL v. CHARLESTON is in accord with an Ohio inferior court decision which denies the power of a municipality through its council or board of gas trustees to enter into a contract to supply gas to a manufacturing company at a special rate made as an inducement to it to rebuild its factory, which had been destroyed by fire. Bel-laire Goblet Co. v. Findlay (1891) 5 L.R.A.1916D.

Ohio C. C. 418, 3 Ohio C. D. 205. A contract to furnish a manufacturing company with gas at a special rate was held invalid in Dalzell, G. & L. Co. v. Findlay (1891) 5 Ohio C. C. 435, 3 Ohio C. D. 214. But this case seems to have turned upon the power of the board of gas trustees to enter into the contract.

Although not directly in point, as a special rate was not involved, a decision tending to support the conclusion that a municipality cannot make a special rate for a particular company or person is that in Kirksville Light Co. v. Kirkville (1911) 159 Mo. App. 460, 141 S. W. 494, holding that a municipality owning its waterworks system has no power to contract with an ice company using the city water, for a credit to it for water returned, the effect of which was that the ice company was permitted to run the city water over and across the heated coils of its pipes for the purpose of cooling them, after which it returned all the water to the city. The court states that "it ought not to require argument or illustration to show that the city, a trustee for the inhabitants thereof, had not the authority to gratuitously divert the city water for private use without compensation. Necessarily, the city was put to great expense in constructing and maintaining a water plant whereby water was pumped from a distant river into reservoirs. The water thus obtained and stored was for the use of citizens upon payment of uniform prices by all of a like class; and any device whereby one or more would obtain the use of it without rendering compensation is contrary to the intent of the statute and object of the power conferred upon the city, and is unlawful." A statute authorizing a municipality owning its waterworks system to supply water to persons and private corporations, and to enter into contracts therefor upon such terms as may be agreed upon, is cited in support of the contract, but not commented upon by the court.

A distinction must be observed between making a special rate to a particular company or person, and making a special rate to a class of consumers, such as manufactories or large consumers. This note does not discuss the power of a municipality to make a special rate to a class.

As to whether money may be raised by taxation for an aid to business corporations or enterprises, see note to Daggett v. Colgan, 14 L.R.A. 474, 478.

As to the general question of discrimination in rates in a public water supply, see note to State ex rel. Hallauer v. Gosnell, 61 L.R.A. 33, on the establishment and regulation of municipal water supply, at page 113.

As to the right of a municipal corporation to contract for free transportation or special rates on street cars, see note to Oklahoma City v. Oklahoma R. Co. 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 651.

As to the power of a municipality to assume part or all of the burden of adapting street or bridges for use of railroads or street railways, see note to Minneapolis St. P. R. & D. Electric Traction Co. v. Minneapolis, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 143. W. A. E.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

ALBERT F. HAUSS, Appt.,
v.
GEORGE SURRAN.

(168 Ky. 686, 182 S. W. 927.)

Sale — warranty — damages or return of property.

1. A purchaser of machinery under a guaranty of satisfaction may retain it and recoup his damages for breach of warranty in an action for the price, although the contract provides that he will be allowed fifteen days' trial and refund of money if not satisfied and purchaser writes for shipping directions.

For other cases, see Sale, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — rescission — necessity of return.

2. A purchaser of machinery cannot, without offering to return it, rescind and recover what he paid for it for breach of warranty.

For other cases, see Sale, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Damages — breach of warranty of machinery.

3. The measure of damages for breach of warranty of machinery not wholly worthless, and retained by the purchaser, is the difference between the value of the property as installed and its value as warranted.

Note.—The holding of HAUSS v. SURRAN that a provision in a contract of sale, permissive in form, and authorizing the seller to return the property for a breach of warranty, furnishes merely an additional remedy, and not a remedy in exclusion of those ordinarily existing, and that hence a seller may retain the article and assert the breach in recoupment in an action for the purchase price, is supported by the great weight of authority, as is shown at pp. 769 et seq. of a note appended to Detwiler v. Downes, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 753. That note also discusses the general question as to the exclusiveness of remedy for breach of warranty provided in a contract for the sale of machinery. In the same volume, at page L.R.A.1916D.

774, is a note discussing the question with reference to the sale of animals, and at page 778 there is a note discussing the question with reference to the sale of other articles. At page 783 there is a note on the necessity and sufficiency of compliance with the conditions of a warranty in the sale of personal property; at page 796, a note on waiver of conditions in a contract of sale, limiting the warranty; at page 805, a note on remedies of parties where the contract of sale provides that the seller will remove the property if it does not fulfill the warranty; and at page 808, a note on remedies of parties under a contract for the sale of an article on approval.

For other cases, see Damages, III. a, 4, c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 24, 1916.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Campbell County in defendant's favor, in an action brought to recover the balance of the purchase price of certain machinery sold by plaintiff to defendant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Judson A. Shuey and Edward C. Lovett for appellant.

Messrs. Barbour & Bassmann for appellee.

Clay, C., filed the following opinion:

Plaintiff, Albert F. Hauss, brought this suit against George Surran to recover the balance of the purchase price of a small electric light plant. Defendant counter-claimed for damages for breach of warranty. The jury found for defendant, and judgment was entered accordingly. Plaintiff has moved for an appeal.

On May 7, 1914, plaintiff contracted with the defendant to install an electric light plant, consisting of machinery and appliances connected to 150 light outlets for tungsten lamps and one G. E. arc light. The purchase price was $611, payable $200 when the machinery was shipped, $200 on June 15, 1914, and $211 on July 15, 1914. Under the contract, the machinery was to consist of one six horse power "Sandow" kerosene engine mounted on skids, fully equipped with oil and water tanks and throttling governor, belted to a 4-kilowatt 115-volt Robbins & Myers direct current generator, type "I," connected to a slate switchboard by main wires, one voltmeter, voltage regulator, and fused main dynamo switch. The warranties of the manufacturers of the engine and generator were made a part of the contract between plaintiff and defendant. With respect to the generator, the warranty is as follows:

"It is guaranteed that the generator installed will be a 4 kilowatt at 115 volts and is capable of carrying 200 twenty watt (16 C. P.) tungsten lamps at its rated voltage continuously without injurious heating.

"The company agrees to furnish all generators in good operative condition, free from all defects in labor and material, and agrees that they will deliver their rated output successfully, provided they are kept in proper condition and operated normally.

"The company agrees to correct at its own expense any defects in labor and material in its apparatus which may develop under normal and proper use within thirty L.R.A.1916D.

days after said apparatus has been placed into service, provided the purchaser gives to the company immediate written notice of such defects. Responsibility for defects resulting from improper storage or handling, prior to placing the apparatus into service, will not be assumed by the company. Liability for consequential damages, due to failure to meet the conditions of this guaranty, will not be assumed by the company."

With respect to the engine, the warranty is as follows:

"We guarantee that the engine will be entirely satisfactory to you, you to be the judge and jury. You will be allowed a fifteen days' trial dating from the time you receive the engine, and if, for any reason whatever, you do not feel entirely satisfied with the engine and wish your money back, every cent you have paid us for it will be refunded without question and without argument if you will write us for shipping instructions, which we will immediately furnish within the fifteen days.

"We guarantee every Sandow engine to be free from defect when shipped from our factory and any part proven defective from this cause will be replaced without costs if the part to be replaced is returned to our factory for examination, transportation charges prepaid. This guaranty is effective for five years from date of sale.

"Furthermore—we guarantee that every Sandow engine has before shipment been tested under actual conditions to insure its satisfactory operation and power and that it has developed its rated horse power on our stand test."

According to the evidence for plaintiff, the plant was installed at Phoenix Grove Park and tested, and gave perfect results. Shortly after the plant was installed, in answer to a complaint, he went to the plant and found that they had blown a fuse, and that the lights had been short-circuited in one of the amusement tents. About a week after the plant was installed he put on a muffling device. One time in August he went up there to see how the plant was running, and operated the plant for two hours. He was in the habit of calling up the plant over the telephone every Monday or Tuesday morning and inquiring how it was working, and always received the message that it was working nicely. The only two times he went to the plant in response to complaints were when the fuse was blown and when he took Mr. Pickett up there in the month of August.

Defendant and his witnesses testified that the plant from the very beginning failed to work properly or to give the necessary light. Plaintiff, in response to numerous complaints, came to the plant on several occasions and was unable to make it work properly. Notwithstanding the failure of the plant to work properly, defendant continued to operate it up to about the 25th day of August. There is further evidence to the effect that the engine in question was not a six horse power engine, and was not sufficient for 150 lights.

For the plaintiff it is insisted that if the defendant retained the machinery and failed to return, or offer to return it, within a reasonable time, he thereby waived the breach of warranty, and the court erred in failing to submit this phase of the case to the jury. In our opinion, this principle is not applicable to the facts of this case. Here the contract was executed. Of course, where the condition is that the article sold shall be deemed to fulfil the warranty unless returned within a specified or reasonable time, and the buyer retains the goods after that time, he cannot avail himself of the breach unless requested by the seller to keep the machinery under the promise that he will make it operate in a satisfactory manner, or the seller, by his course of dealing, has induced the buyer to believe that he may keep the machinery without losing his right to return it within the time fixed. Dick v. James Clark, Jr. Electric Co. 161 Ky. 622, 171 S. W. 198; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Arnold, 116 Ky. 508, 76 S. W. 323. But where the sale is executed and the provision of the contract is not imperative, but merely permits the buyer to return the property, he may, at his election, resort to that remedy, or he may retain the article and recoup his damages for the breach of the warranty in an action by the vendor for the price. Shupe v. Collender, 56 Conn. 489, 1 L.R.A. 339, 15 Atl. 405; Elwood v. McDill, 105 Iowa, 437, 75 N. W. 340; Cook v. Gray, 2 Bush, 121; Harrigan v. Advance Thresher Co. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 317, 81 S. W. 261; Ruby Carriage Co. v. Kremer, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 274, 81 S. W. 251. Unless the article is absolutely worthless for every purpose, the buyer cannot recover the price unless he returns the article or offers to return it. In the case under consideration, defendant not only warranted that the engine was a six horse power engine, but that it had sufficient power to light 150 lights and one arc light. The additional warranties were those contained in catalogues of the manufacturers. It does not appear that there was any defect in the generator. The chief complaint is with respect to the power of the engine. The warranty of the manufacturer with respect to the engine merely permits the buyer to return it. It does not provide that a failure to return shall constitute a waiver of the warranty. That being true, defendant's retention of the machinery did not constitute a waiver of the warranty.
L.R.A.1916D.

Here the answer and counterclaim, after setting out the breach of warranty, asked for damages to defendant's business. To this portion of the answer and counterclaim a demurrer was sustained. The answer and counterclaim further alleges that the light plant was useless to the defendant, and—"that by reason of said failure of said electric light plant, he lost the sum of $200; paid to the said plaintiff."

The mere fact that the plant was useless to the defendant did not dispense with the necessity for his returning, or offering to return, the machinery, if he desired to rescind and recover the price. It is only where the plant is absolutely worthless, and not merely worthless to the defendant, that he may sue for the price without having returned or offered to return the plant. We, therefore, conclude that the answer and counterclaim was not good on demurrer. On the return of the case defendant will be permitted to amend and set up his damages for the breach of the warranty.

The court instructed the jury as follows:

"(1) The jury will find for the plaintiff in the sum of $411, with interest from July 15, 1914, unless they believe from the evidence that the engine installed at the place in question, if kept in proper condition and properly operated, would not develop six horse power and sufficient to successfully and continuously operate the plant with 150 tungsten lamps of 16 and 8 candle power as per contract, and one arc lamp, in which event they will find for the defendant.

"(2) If the jury find for the defendant under instruction No. 1 and believe from the evidence that the engine in question was not sufficient to develop 6 horse power, etc., they shall find for the defendant as damages the difference between what they may believe from the evidence the plant as installed to have been reasonably worth and the amount paid thereon by defendant, to wit, the sum of $200, not to allow under this instruction, however, an amount in excess of $100."

It will be observed that instruction No. 1 authorizes a finding for the defendant if the plant did not come up to the warranty, regardless of the amount of damages to which defendant was entitled. In other words, the jury were compelled, under this instruction, even though they believed defendant had been damaged only to the extent of $100 or $150, to disregard the balance of plaintiff's claim and render judgment for the defendant. It follows, therefore, that instruction No. 1 is erroneous.

The effect of instruction No. 2 is to assume that if the plant did not comply with the warranty, it was worth less than $200. It seems to disregard entirely the fact that defendant was liable for $411, and that, unless his damages exceeded this amount, there should still be a finding in favor of plaintiff. In a case like this, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the machinery as installed and its value as warranted. Marbury Lumber Co. v. Stearns Mfg. Co. 32 Ky. L. Rep. 739, 107 S. W. 200.

Since the machinery is not absolutely worthless and was not returned, or offered to be returned, defendant's defense is confined to his claim for damages. That being true, the court on another trial will instruct the jury in substance as follows:

(1) You will find for plaintiff in the sum of $411, with 6 per cent interest from July 14, 1914.

(2) If you believe from the evidence that the engine in question, if kept in proper condition and properly operated, would not develop six horse power, or power sufficient successfully and continuously to operate the plant with 150 tungsten lamps of 16 and 8 candle power, and one arc lamp, you will find for the defendant and fix his damages as provided in instruction No. 3.

(3) If you find for defendant under instruction No. 2, the measure of his damages is the difference between the value of the plant as warranted and its value as installed.

(4) If you find for defendant, and your finding be less than your finding for plaintiff, you will return a verdict in favor of plaintiff for the difference; but if your finding for defendant exceed or equal your finding for plaintiff, you will either return a verdict in favor of defendant for the excess not exceeding $200, or merely find for the defendant on the whole case.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

HONORA E. MADDEN, Employee.

M. J. WHITTALL CARPET COMPANY, Employer.

AMERICAN MUTUAL LIABILITY INSURANCE COMPANY, Insurer, Appt.

(222 Mass. 487, 111 N. E. 379.)

Master and servant — workmen's compensation — aggravation of existing condition.

1. The further injury of a weak heart so as to incapacitate its owner for physical labor by the performance of the duties of his employment, such as pulling carpet from a roll to repair it, may, although the required exertion was not such as to affect a healthy person, be found to be a personal injury arising out of the employment within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act, so as to entitle the injured person to full compensation under the act.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — As to the construction and effect of the workmen's compensation acts generally, see annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 23.

As to the constitutionality of the workmen's compensation acts, see annotation attached to Jensen v. Southern P. Co. L.R.A. 1916A, 403.

As to the recovery of compensation where accident merely aggravates an existing condition, see annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 32 et seq. and 228 et seq. L.R.A.1916D.

Damages — workmen's compensation act — aggravation of existing trouble.

2. Full compensation for the disability may be awarded under the workmen's compensation act in case of the aggravation by the work required by the employment of an existing heart trouble, so that the employee is no longer able to perform service.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — deprivation of property — compensation for aggravation of employee's malady.

3. An employer is not deprived of his property without due process of law by the provisions of an elective workmen's compensation act, entitling an employee to full compensation in case an existing malady is aggravated so as to incapacitate him for labor by an injury arising out of the employment.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 7, 1916.)

A PPEAL by the insurer from the findings of the Industrial Accident Board, affirming the findings and decision of the committee of arbitration, awarding compensation to plaintiff in a proceeding under the workmen's compensation act to recover compensation for personal injuries sustained by her while in defendant's employ. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. Hovey Gage, Frank F. Dresser, and Charles A. Hamilton for appellant.

Mr. John C. Mahoney, for appellee:

On the findings of the committee of arbittration, Honora E. Madden, at the time she sustained her injury, was acting in the course of her employment.

Brightman's Case, 220 Mass. 17, L.R.A. 1916A, 321, 107 N. E. 527, 8 N. C. C. A. 102.

Her heart muscles may have been tired and exhausted at the time of the injury, and, under all the circumstances, that may have been sufficient cause for the inability of the heart to temporarily perform its ordinary functions.

Fisher's Case, 220 Mass. 581, 108 N. E. 361.

Acceleration of previously existing heart disease to a mortal end sooner than otherwise it would have come is an injury within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act.

Brightman's Case, supra; Wiemert v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 216 Mass. 598, 14 N. E. 360; Clover, C. & Co. v. Hughes [1910] A. C. 242, 79 L. J. K. B. N. S. 470, 102 L. T. N. S. 340, 26 Times L. R. 359, 54 Sol. Jo. 375, 47 Scot. L. R. 885, 3 B. W. C. C. 275.

Rugg, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Honora E. Madden was an employee of a carpet company, which was a subscriber under the workmen's compensation act, Stat. 1911, chap. 751. The Industrial Accident Board found that, while engaged in the performance of the work for which she was hired, she "received a personal injury arising out of . . . her employment, . . . aggravating and accelerating a weak heart condition to the point of total incapacity for work." This finding, standing alone, might be considered indecisive. It simply is a categorical repetition of the words in the statute by which the result is reached entitling the employee to compensation, without a statement of what the personal injury was out of which grows the right to money payments. But, as the Industrial Accident Board "affirms and adopts the findings and decision of the committee of arbitration," resort may be had to the proceedings of that committee and the evidence there reported for the foundation of its conclusions. After reciting the substance of the evidence, most of which was uncontroverted except that from physicians, the finding of the arbitration committee was that "the work which Mrs. Madden was doing on the day on which the injury was received so aggravated and accelerated a weak heart condition as to incapacitate her for work, and that she received a personal injury arising out of and in the course of her employment," whereby she was incapacitated. The personal injury and the circumstances under which it was received are set out in the evidence. A finding was warranted that she had "a weak heart condition" before her injury and before she entered the service of the subscriber. Her work for it was to repair bad spots in the weaving on rolls of carpet. The roll was placed on some device nearby, and she pulled the carpet along and over a table in front of her. Her own description was that "her work was more pulling [that is, dragging the carpet along over the table] than sewing; . . . the carpet was brought to them in a roll and a bar was put through this roll and two girls had to lift it; they undid the carpet on that roll, turned the back over and had to pull it; then they had to turn the face of it over and it was taken to the shears—they had to pull it to them, they dragged them on the floor; there were some carpets that had to be put on the table, but not all of them. . . . She had not been sewing all morning on the day of the alleged injury—there is not as much sewing to do as pulling. . . . She had never had any attack before this one."

Her description of the "personal injury" (part 2, § 1) on which the claim is founded, was this: "She went to work on the morning of July 10 as she had every morning, and worked up to the time she was taken with the pain—that was about 11:40 o'clock; she was pulling carpets at the time she felt something give—she thought it would pass away. . . . She continued to work until it was time to wash up—she heated her tea . . . and sat down to eat her dinner—she could not eat, so she . . . started to work again; then she felt something else give way," and she was taken to the hospital.

Other witnesses testified that the employee exclaimed that she "had an awful pain under her heart" and that she placed some ice over her heart. It might have been inferred from this and other evidence that she suffered an attack of "angina pectoris," which is defined as a "peculiarly painful disease . . . usually associated with organic change of the heart." There was, also, medical testimony to the effect that "hard, laborious work would produce a heart lesion; if there were any previous heart trouble, it would accelerate it." The question is, whether reasonable men could draw an inference that this was a personal injury received by the employee, arising out of her employment. We are not concerned with the inquiry whether there are other inferences, or whether this is the most reasonable one.

Rational minded persons endeavoring to get at the truth might have found upon this evidence, with the deductions reasonably to be drawn from it, that the employee, being under some degree of disability, due to a weak heart, suffered by reason of the exertion in pulling the carpet, as required by her contract of service, a further acute impairment of the strength of the heart, whereby it was disabled from performing its normal functions as it had done theretofore. This was a damage to a physical organ. It was a definite and specific detriment to the physiological structure of her body.

The standard established in this respect by our workmen's compensation act as the ground for compensation is simply the receiving of "personal injury arising out of and in the course of" the employment. This standard is materially different from that of the English act and of the acts of some of the states of this nation. That standard is "personal injury by accident," both in the act of 1897 and 1906. See Stat. 60 & 61 Vict. 1897, chap. 37, § 1 (1); 6 Edw. VII. 1906, chap. 58, § 1 (1).

The difference between the phraseology of our act and the English act in this respect cannot be regarded as immaterial or casual. The English act in its present form was passed several years before ours. It was known to the legislature which enacted our statute and was followed as to its general frame and in many important particulars. Gould's Case, 215 Mass. 480, 486, 102 N. E. 693, 4 N. C. C. A. 60, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 372; McNicol's Case, 215 Mass. 497, 499, L.R.A.1916A, 306, 102 N. E. 697, 4 N. C. C. A. 522. Indeed, "the language of the English act of 1897 was followed whenever possible." See Report of Commission on Compensation for Industrial Accidents, 1912, p. 46. This difference must be treated as the result of deliberate design by the general court after intelligent comprehension of the limitation expressed by the words of the English act. The freer and more comprehensive words in our act must be given their natural construction with whatever added force may come from the intentional contrast in phraseology with the English act. The "personal injury by accident," which by the English act is made the prerequisite for the award of financial relief, is narrower in its scope than the simple "personal injury" of our act. As was said in Fenton v. J. Thorley & Co. [1903] A. C. 443, at 448: "The words 'by accident' are . . . introduced parenthetically, as it were, to qualify the word 'injury,' confining it to a certain class of injuries, and excluding other classes; as, for instance, injuries by disease, or injuries self-inflicted by design."

To the element of "personal injury" the further condition is added, that it must have been received as "an unlooked for mishap or an untoward event which is not expected or designed;" and to this have been appended the words "by the workman himself" in Trim Joint Dist. School v. Kelly [1914] A. C. 667, 679, whereby injuries "designed" by persons other than the workmen are included within that act. An illustration of the difference between "personal injury" and "personal injury by accident," put by Lord Reading, the present Chief Justice of England, in the case last cited, at page 720, is apposite in this connection: "For example, if a workman became blind in consequence of an explosion at the factory, that would constitute an injury by accident; but if, in consequence of the nature of his employment, his sight was gradually impaired and eventually he became blind, that would be an injury, but not an injury by accident."

The wide divergence between a simple "personal injury," the standard of our act, and the "personal injury by accident" of the English and other acts, is exemplified further by reference to some of the decisions. It was held in Steel v. Cammell, L. & Co. [1905] 2 K. B. 232, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 610, 53 Week. Rep. 612, 93 L. T. N. S. 357, 21 Times L. R. 490, 2 Ann. Cas. 142, that lead poisoning resulting from a gradual accumulation of the poison in handling lead, in Broderick v. London County Council [1908] 2 K. B. 807, 77 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1127, 99 L. T. N. S. 569, 24 Times L. R. 822, 15 Ann. Cas. 885, that enteritis from inhaling sewer gas in the course of the employment, and in Eke v. Hart-Dyke [1910] 2 K. B. 677, 80 L. J. K. B. N. S. 90, 103 L. T. N. S. 174, 26 Times L. R. 613, 3 B. W. C. C. 482, 3 N. C. C. A. 230, that ptomaine poisoning from clearing out cesspools, were not within the act. As we understand those judgments, each one rests on the ground that there was a "personal injury," but that it was not "by accident," and hence there could be no recovery. If the words "by accident" had been omitted from the English act, the inference seems irresistible from the chain of reasoning adopted in each of these judgments that a different judicial result would have been reached. That a different result seems to us inevitable is manifest from the course of reasoning and the conclusion in Hurle's Case, 217 Mass. 223, L.R.A.1916A, 279, 104 N. E. 336, 4 N. C. C. A. 527, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 919, and Johnson's Case, 217 Mass. 388, 104 N. E. 735, 4 N. C. C. A. 843. In any event, decisions made as to workmen's compensation acts which base compensation upon "personal injury by accident" instead of upon "personal injury" well may be and may be expected to be divergent from our own, and compensation be denied under them which would be awarded under ours. See Liondale Bleach, Dye & Paint Works v. Riker, 85 N. J. L. 426, 89 Atl. 929, 4 N. C. C. A. 713, and Adams v. Acme White Lead & Color Works, 182 Mich. 157, L.R.A. 1916A, 283, 148 N. W. 495, 6 N. C. C. A. 482. Although the Ohio act in this respect is similar to ours, the history and terms of the Ohio constitutional amendment touching the subject, and of the governing statute and construction placed upon it by the administrative board, led to an interpretation of intent to restrict the operation of that act to personal injuries by accident by a chain of reasoning which has no relevancy to our act. Industrial Commission v. Brown, — Ohio St. —, L.R.A.1916B, 1277, 110 N. E. 744. If there is anything in any of the three decisions last cited inconsistent with our conclusion, we are constrained not to follow them.

Actions for personal injury arising from disease contracted in the course of employment and without physical impact are not uncommon where the other elements exist to establish liability. Thompson v. United Laboratories, 221 Mass. 276, 108 N. E. 1042; Cox v. American Agri. Chemical Co. 24 R. I. 503, 60 L.R.A. 629, 53 Atl. 871, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 434; Wagner v. H. W. Jayne Chemical Co. 147 Pa. 475, 30 Am. St. Rep. 745, 23 Atl. 772; Fox v. Peninsular White Lead & Color Works, 84 Mich. 676, 682, 48 N. W. 203. That they have not been more frequent, perhaps, has been due to the fact that such dangers usually are well known and are assumed by the contract of employment, or are not matters about which a duty has been owed by the employer.

"Personal injury" is materially broader in its scope than is "personal injury by accident." "Personal injury" standing by itself comprehends a wide range of physical harm. Indeed, the phrase has been extended in other connections to comprise a large category of mischiefs which have a theoretical rather than corporeal adjunction to the human body, and which may be intangible or mental rather than tactile and physical. It may comprehend damage to those inherent personal rights which generally are recognized as protected by the law and as sacred as the security from bodily violence. Doubtless many decisions include among personal injuries, wrongs which would not be personal injuries under the workmen's compensation act. For example, the phrase "personal injury" has been held to include even injuries to reputation resulting from libel (Thompson v. Judy, 96 C. C. A. 51, 54, 169 Fed. 553), malicious prosecution and false imprisonment (McChristal v. Clisbee, 190 Mass. 120, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 702, 76 N. E. 511, 5 Ann. Cas. 769), invasion of the right to privacy (Riddle v. MacFadden, 201 N. Y. 215, 94 N. E. 644), as well as the alienation of affection of a husband or wife, L.R.A.1916D.

seduction, false arrest, and kindred tortious acts. That was pointed out in Hurle's Case, 217 Mass. 223, L.R.A.1916A, 279, 104 N. E. 336, 4 N. C. C. A. 527, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 919, after a considerable review of the authorities. It there was expressly held that a disease of the eyes directly induced by inhalation of poisonous gases in the course of the employment might be found to be a "personal injury arising out of" the employment. To the same effect in substance is Johnson's Case, 217 Mass. 388, 104 N. E. 735, 4 N. C. C. A. 843. These cases hold that it is not necessary to "personal injury" that there be a physical impact. That was adjudged also, with a full review of the English decisions, in Coyle v. John Watson [1915] A. C. 1, 12-14, 83 L. J. P. C. N. S. 307, [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 228, 7 B. W. C. C. 259, 111 L. T. N. S. 347 [1914] W. N. 195, 30 Times L. R. 501, 58 Sol. Jo. 533. Even liability for personal injury arising out of tort is not always restricted to cases of physical impact. This was shown by Chief Justice Knowlton in Mulvey v. Boston, 197 Mass. 178, 180, 83 N. E. 402, 14 Ann. Cas. 349. See Megathlin v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 220 Mass. 568, 108 N. E. 362. There is nothing at variance with this in Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 38 L.R.A. 512, 60 Am. St. Rep. 693, 47 N. E. 88, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 566; Id., 172 Mass. 488, 43 L.R.A. 832, 70 Am. St. Rep. 298, 52 N. E. 747, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 367, which was an action for negligence, and where, on the facts presented, it was held that there could be no recovery for mental disturbance without physical injury. In other connections "damage to the person" has a more constricted signification, which excludes indirect and consequential injury ensuing from immediate bodily harm to another. See, for example, Dixon v. Amerman, 181 Mass. 430, 63 N. E. 1057; Hey v. Prime, 197 Mass. 474, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 570, 84 N. E. 141; Keating v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 209 Mass. 278, 282, 95 N. E. 840. These and like decisions do not affect the case at bar.

Varying facts may give rise to questions of difficulty. In this connection it is to be noted that there is no explicit provision for compensation for occupational disease as such. "Personal injury" is the only ground for compensation. The legislative principle declared by the workmen's compensation act, to the test of which all cases arising under it must be subjected, is that whatever rightly is describable as a "personal injury," if received "in the course of" and "arising out of" the employment, becomes the basis for a claim.

If the harm suffered by the employee in the case at bar had been received as the result of physical endeavor or strain in striving to resist tortious conduct by the employer, or in merely being subjected to such conduct, there would be little doubt that recovery could be had in an action at law as for a "personal injury" in the common-law sense of those words. Coleman v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 106 Mass. 160, 178, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 375; Larson v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 212 Mass. 262, 98 N. E. 1048, and cases collected; Wiemert v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 216 Mass. 598, 104 N. E. 360.

Without undertaking to define "personal injury," or to go beyond the requirements of the facts here presented, it is enough to say that the occurrence described by the dependent when she said "she felt something give" and "felt something else give way," accompanied by the symptoms of angina pectoris, may have been found to be a "personal injury."

That injury also may have been found to have arisen out of the employment. The pulling of the carpet, although not requiring such putting forth of muscular power as would have affected a healthy person, yet may have been enough to cause the injury which the employee suffered. It could have been regarded as resulting from the work as a contributing proximate cause. McNicol's Case, 215 Mass. 497, 499, L.R.A. 1916A, 306, 102 N. E. 697; Brightman's Case, 220 Mass. 17, L.R.A. 1916A, 321, 107 N. E. 527, 8 N. C. C. A. 102; Fisher's Case, 220 Mass. 581, 108 N. E. 361.

Even under the English act it seems that a personal injury such as that here disclosed would be held to have arisen "by accident" and hence to be within the act. It has been decided that perforation of a diseased intestine by slight pressure such as would be harmless to a healthy person (Woods v. Wilson, Sons & Co. 84 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1067, [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 285, 8 B. W. C. C. 288, 113 L. T. N. S. 243, [1915] W. N. 109, 31 Times L. R. 273, 59 Sol. Jo. 348, the breaking of an aneurism by normal activity of the workman (Clover, C. & Co. v. Hughes [1910] A. C. 242, 79 L. J. K. B. N. S. 470, 102 L. T. N. S. 340, 26 Times L. R. 359, 54 Sol. Jo. 375, 47 Scot. L. R. 885, 3 B. W. C. C. 275), rupture resulting from ordinary exertion (Fenton v. J. Thorley & Co. [1903] A. C. 443, 72 L. J. K. B. N. S. 787, 52 Week. Rep. 81, 89 L. T. N. S. 314, 19 Times L. R. 684), and pneumonia induced by exposure (Coyle v. John Watson [1915] A. C. 1, 83 L. J. P. C. N. S. 307, [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 228, 7 B. W. C. C. 259, 111 L. T. N. S. 347, [1914] W. N. 195, 30 Times L. R. 501, 58 Sol. Jo. 533), were "personal injuries by accident." None L.R.A. 1916D.

of these instances come within the occupational diseases described in the Third Schedule of Stat. 6 Edw. VII. chap. 58, and hence these decisions are quite pertinent as persuasive authorities in a case like the present.

It has been argued with force on behalf of the insurer that since the harm to the employee was not wholly the effect of the work, but came in large part from the previous weakened condition of the employee's heart, hence, either there can be no award of compensation, or it should be restricted to that part of the injury which resulted directly from the work, and the part of the injury which flowed from the previous condition should be excluded. Even though the premise be sound, the conclusion does not follow. The act makes no provision for any such analysis or apportionment. It protects the "employee." That word is defined in part 5, § 2, as including "every person in the service of another under any contract of hire," with exceptions not here pertinent. There is nothing said about the protection being confined to the healthy employee. The previous condition of health is of no consequence in determining the amount of relief to be afforded. It has no more to do with it than his lack of ordinary care or the employer's freedom from simple negligence. It is a most material circumstance to be considered and weighed in ascertaining whether the injury resulted from the work or from disease. It is the injury arising out of the employment, and not out of disease of the employee, for which compensation is to be made. Yet it is the hazard of the employment acting upon the particular employee in his condition of health, and not what that hazard would be if acting upon a healthy employee or upon the average employee. The act makes no distinction between wise or foolish, skilled or inexperienced, healthy or diseased employees. All who rightly are describable as employees come within the act.

The act is not a substitute for disability or old-age pensions. It cannot be strained to include that kind of relief. Its ultimate purpose simply is to treat the cost of personal injuries incidental to the employment as a part of the cost of the business. It does not afford compensation for injuries or misfortunes which merely are contemporaneous or coincident with the employment, or collateral to it. Not every diseased person suffering a misfortune while at work for a subscriber is entitled to compensation. The relief is so new that the tendency may be to inquire only as to the employment and the injury, and to assume that these two factors constitute ground for compensation. But the essential connecting link of direct causal connection between the personal injury and the employment must be established before the act becomes operative. The personal injury must be the result of the employment, and flow from it as the inducing proximate cause. The rational mind must be able to trace the resultant personal injury to a proximate cause set in motion by the employment, and not by some other agency, or there can be no recovery. In passing upon this question, an humanitarian emotion ought not to take the place of sound judgment in the weighing of evidence. The direct connection between the personal injury as a result and the employment as its proximate cause must be proved by facts before the right to compensation springs into being. A high degree of discrimination must be exercised to determine whether the real cause of an injury is disease or the hazard of the employment. A disease which, under any rational work, is likely to progress so as finally to disable the employee, does not become a "personal injury" under the act merely because it reaches the point of disablement while work for a subscriber is being pursued. It is only when there is a direct causal connection between the exertion of the employment and the injury that an award of compensation can be made. The substantial question is whether the diseased condition was the cause, or whether the employment was a proximate contributing cause. In the former case, no award can be made; in the latter, it ought to be made. This in substance is the test stated in McNicol's Case, 215 Mass. 497, 499, L.R.A.1916A, 306, 102 N. E. 697. It must be applied here, as in other cases. In this respect the same rule governs as under the English act, where acceleration of a diseased bodily condition to the point where it constitutes a personal injury by reason of the strain or exertion of the employment is ground for recovery. See Clover, C. & Co. v. Hughes [1910] A. C. 242, 243, 79 L. J. K. B. N. S. 470, 102 L. T. N. S. 340, 26 Times L. R. 359, 54 Sol. Jo. 375, 47 Scot. L. R. 885, 3 B. W. C. C. 275, and like cases cited above.

This point is governed by Brightman's Case, 220 Mass. 17, L.R.A. 1916A, 321, 107 N. E. 527, 8 N. C. C. A. 102. The insurer asks us to review Brightman's Case, and especially the sentence (220 Mass. at page 20) where it is said: "Acceleration of previously existing heart disease to a mortal end sooner than otherwise it would have come is an injury within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act."

Of course that sentence was applied in its context to an acceleration directly traceable to the employment as the cause. It L.R.A.1916D.

expressed the deliberate and matured judgment of the court. There is not thereby imported into the workmen's compensation act any theory of the law founded upon wrong doing of the employer. It is plain and has been said repeatedly that the act eliminates all consideration of tort, penalty, or negligence, save where there has been "serious and wilful misconduct." It establishes a unique theory of distribution of the human loss directly arising out of commercial and industrial enterprises hitherto unknown to our law. When a pre-existing heart disease of the employee is accelerated to the point of disablement by the exertion and strain of the employment, not due to the character of the disease acting alone, or progressing as it would in any rational work, there may be found to have been a personal injury.

It is contended that since the act contemplates a kind of accident insurance as the means of affording relief to the employee, it cannot have been the intent of the legislature to include such risks as that here disclosed, because of the difficulty of fixing a rate of insurance. But there does not appear as matter of law to be any insuperable difficulty in this respect. Fortuitous events, which appear to be as difficult of forecast as this, are common subjects of insurance.

It is argued that grave economic consequences of far-reaching effect may follow from the act as thus construed. It is said that persons not in good health may be altogether excluded from employment, to their severe hardship, while the cost of conducting commercial and industrial enterprises may become prohibitively large, all to the detriment of the general welfare and of the financial resources of the commonwealth. These considerations are of great public moment. But these factors relate to legislative questions, and the arguments founded on them are distinctly legislative arguments. They may be entitled to attention and deliberation at the hands of the legislative department of government. In the present forum they cannot have decisive significance, even if it were plain that the enumerated consequences were inevitable. The function of the judicial department of the government is simply to determine whether an act is within the power vested by the Constitution in the legislature, and then to enforce it according to its true meaning in cases as they arise. While the consequences to which a particular construction or application of a statute would lead have an important bearing in determining what may have been the intent of the legislature in using words of doubtful import (Greene v. Greene, 2 Gray, 361, 364, 61 Am. Dec. 454), they cannot control a plain rule of positive law established by clear language in a legislative mandate. The words "personal injury" had meaning in the law before the passage of the workmen's compensation act sufficiently well defined clearly to include the kind of personal harm here disclosed, so that it hardly can be assumed, under all the circumstances, that the legislature used them in a different or unusually constricted sense. There are no conditions which warrant a judicial interpretation of the words "personal injury" in the act as meaning the same as "personal injury by accident," or as excluding from the scope of "personal injuries" those instances where a diseased physical condition may have invited, or rendered the employee unusually susceptible to, "personal injury." It may be that the legislature intended a more narrow field than actually was described by the words used. But if that be so, the remedy must be sought from the legislature. There are no means by which the court can ascertain "the purpose and effect of a statute except from the words used when given their common and approved meaning." Re Bergeron, 220 Mass. 472, 475, 107 N. E. 1007.

The constitutionality of the act as thus interpreted is assailed. It is urged that the employer is compelled to part with property for causes for which he is in no wise responsible, and that thus he is deprived of property without due process of law. In its essence that is an attack upon the act as a whole, for in none of its ordinary aspects does the payment required by the act depend upon fault, and may be required in many cases where the employer was wholly free from fault. In support of this attack, cases like Camp v. Rogers, 44 Conn. 291, Dougherty v. Thomas, 174 Mich. 371, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 699, 140 N. W. 615, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1163, Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Lackey, 78 Ill. 55, 20 Am. Rep. 259; Com. v. Herr, 229 Pa. 132, 78 Atl. 68, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 422, and Eastman v. Jennings-McRea Logging Co. 69 Or. 1, 138 Pac. 216, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 185, are relied upon where statutes have been stricken down which have undertaken to make one liable in an action at law for injuries, losses, or expenses for which he was in no way responsible directly or remotely, morally or legally. The case at bar is quite distinguishable. The workmen's compensation act is elective, and not compulsory. It is wholly optional with the employer, as it is with the employee, whether he comes under the provisions of the act or stays outside and stands on his legal rights. The connection between the employment and the injury in the case at bar is the same in kind as in the manifold other instances where the personal injury to the employee is caused by a definite physical blow wholly without fault of the employer. The act is not unconstitutional in this respect. Opinion of Justices, 209 Mass. 607, 96 N. E. 308, 1 N. C. C. A. 557; Young v. Duncan, 218 Mass. 346, 351, 106 N. E. 1.

The reasons which have been set forth in this opinion and in the cases to which reference has been made seem to us to compel the conclusion that, on the evidence here disclosed, it was competent for the Industrial Accident Board to find that the employee had received a "personal injury arising out of and in the course of" her "employment," according to the true meaning of those words in the workmen's compensation act.

Decree affirmed.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

KATHERINE GEARING

v.

JOHN BERKSON et al., Appts.

PERCY A. GEARING

v.

SAME, Appts.

(223 Mass. 257, 111 N. E. 785.)

Food — implied warranty — action for injury.

1. One whose wife, as his agent, purchases meat for food, may hold the vendor liable in damages in case he is made ill by its unfitness, under a statute providing that where the buyer makes known to the seller the purpose for which goods are required, and relies on the seller's skill and judgment, there is an implied warranty that the goods shall be reasonably fit for such purpose.

For other cases, see Food; also Sale, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — action by agent.

2. One who, as agent for her husband, purchases meat for food, of which she subsequently partakes, and is made ill by its unfitness, cannot hold the seller liable in damages as for breach of warranty, since no contractual relation exists between them. For other cases, see Food; also Sale, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — The liability of a manufacturer, packer, or vendor to persons not in privity of contract, for injuries from defects in articles sold, including many cases dealing with articles of food, is treated in annotations to L.R.A.1916D.

Tomlinson v. Armour & Co. 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 923; Mazetti v. Armour & Co. 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 213; and Crigger v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. L.R.A.1916B, 879.

Evidence — presumption — overcoming by finding.

3. A finding that a vendor of food was not negligent in selling that which was unfit overcomes whatever presumption as to evidence of negligence arises from the violation of the statute forbidding such sale.

For other cases, see Evidence, XII. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 1, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendants from orders of the Municipal Court of Boston in plaintiffs' favor, in actions brought to recover damages resulting from a sale by defendants of unwholesome food, in violation of statute. Affirmed as to defendant husband; reversed as to defendant wife.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Harry Bergson, for appellants:

Only parties to the contract can maintain an action upon it.

Roberts v. Anheuser Busch Brewing Asso. 211 Mass. 449, 98 N. E. 95.

This court has never taken the position that the violation of the sales act constitutes negligence per se. At most, it has held such a violation of the statute to be evidence of negligence, for the jury's consideration.

Berdos v. Tremont & S. Mills, 209 Mass. 489, 95 N. E. 876, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 797.

Unless a breach of a warranty or condition, expressed or implied, is shown, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove negligence.

Crocker v. Baltimore Dairy Lunch Co. 214 Mass. 177, 100 N. E. 1078, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 884.

Pork chops are not manufactured concoctions, like drugs or poisons, which may be inherently dangerous; nor were there any representations made by the defendants which could be considered as continuing for the benefit of any person ultimately using the goods, as in Roberts v. Anheuser Busch Brewing Asso. supra.

Mr. Eugene C. Upton, for appellees:

The plaintiff husband is entitled to recover either on "implied warranty" or "malum prohibitum."

Farrell v. Manhattan Market Co. 198 Mass. 271, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 884, 126 Am. St. Rep. 436; 84 N. E. 481, 15 Ann. Cas. 1076, 21 Am. Neg. Rep. 142; Van Bracklin v. Fonda, 12 Johns. 468, 7 Am. Dec. 339; Divine v. McCormick, 50 Barb. 116; Hoover v. Peters, 18 Mich. 51; Wallis v. Russell, [1902] 2 I. R. 585.

A man who deals out to consumers meat that may contain poisonous germs is held to a high degree of care and knowledge. Inherent dangers of the occupation carry responsibility.
L.R.A.1916D.

Terre Haute v. Hudnut, 112 Ind. 542, 13 N. E. 686; Hammack v. White, 11 C. B. N. S. 588, 31 L. J. C. P. N. S. 129, 8 Jur. N. S. 796, 5 L. T. N. S. 676, 10 Week. Rep. 230; Hutchison v. York, N. & B. R. Co. 5 Exch. 343, 6 Eng. Ry. & C. Cas. 580, 19 L. J. Exch. N. S. 296; Munro v. Pacific Coast Dredging & Reclamation Co. 84 Cal. 515, 18 Am. St. Rep. 248, 24 Pac. 303; Lebourdais v. Vitriified Wheel Co. 194 Mass. 343, 80 N. E. 482; George v. Skivington, L. R. 5 Exch. 1; Husset v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 61 L.R.A. 303, 57 C. C. A. 237, 120 Fed. 865; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455; Lewis v. Terry, 111 Cal. 39, 31 L.R.A. 220, 52 Am. St. Rep. 146, 43 Pac. 398; Roberts v. Anheuser Busch Brewing Asso. 211 Mass. 449, 98 N. E. 95; Flint & W. Mfg. Co. v. Beckett, 167 Ind. 491, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 924, 79 N. E. 503; Farrant v. Barnes, 11 C. B. N. S. 553, 31 L. J. C. P. N. S. 137, 8 Jur. N. S. 868; Langridge v. Levy, 2 Mees. & W. 519, 6 L. J. Exch. 137; Heaven v. Pender, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 503, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 81; Blood Balm Co. v. Cooper, 83 Ga. 457, 5 L.R.A. 612, 20 Am. St. Rep. 324, 10 S. E. 118; Wiedeman v. Keller, 171 Ill. 93, 49 N. E. 210.

Notice to the defendant of the intended use of the pork chops was unnecessary.

Farrell v. Manhattan Market Co. 198 Mass. 271, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 884; 126 Am. St. Rep. 436, 84 N. E. 481, 15 Ann. Cas. 1076, 21 Am. Neg. Rep. 142.

Violation of a statutory duty is negligence per se.

Berdos v. Tremont & S. Mills, 209 Mass. 489, 95 N. E. 876, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 797; Gately v. Taylor, 211 Mass. 60, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 472, 97 N. E. 619; Parker v. Barnard, 135 Mass. 116, 46 Am. Rep. 450; Salisbury v. Herchenroder, 106 Mass. 458, 8 Am. Rep. 354; Stone v. Boston & A. R. Co. 171 Mass. 544, 41 L.R.A. 794, 51 N. E. 1, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 490; Queen v. Dayton Coal & I. Co. 95 Tenn. 458, 30 L.R.A. 82, 49 Am. St. Rep. 935, 32 S. W. 460; Burk v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co. 126 Iowa, 730, 106 Am. St. Rep. 377, 102 N. W. 793, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 62; Shields v. Paul B. Pugh Co. 122 App. Div. 586, 107 N. Y. Supp. 604; Nickey v. Steuder, 164 Ind. 189, 73 N. E. 117; Binford v. Johnston, 82 Ind. 426, 42 Am. Rep. 508; Hyde Park v. Gay, 120 Mass. 589; Conn v. May, 36 Iowa, 241; Com. v. Phelps, 210 Mass. 109, 96 N. E. 69; Com. v. Wheeler, 205 Mass. 385, 137 Am. St. Rep. 456, 91 N. E. 415, 18 Ann. Cas. 319; Com. v. Boynton, 2 Allen, 160; Com. v. Huntley, 156 Mass. 236, 15 L.R.A. 839, 30 N. E. 1127; Thomp. Neg. § 10.

The plaintiff husband is entitled to recover for loss of services of his wife and expenses of her sickness.

Feneff v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 203 Mass. 278, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1024, 133 Am. St. Rep. 291, 89 N. E. 436.

The plaintiff wife may recover either as a malum prohibitum or a breach of warranty, or for injuries which, according to the common experience of mankind, were a natural consequence of the defendants' negligence.

Osborne v. Morgan, 130 Mass. 102, 39 Am. Rep. 437.

The plaintiff wife, if agent only of the husband, had sufficient interest in the satisfactory performance of her duty as agent to support an action against a wrongdoer.

Rhoades v. Blackiston, 106 Mass. 334, 8 Am. Rep. 332; Baltimore & P. S. B. Co. v. Atkins, 22 Pa. 522; Graham v. Duckwall, 8 Bush, 12; Tiffany, Principal & Agent, pp. 388, 389.

A mere casual view of meat lying on a plate in a window does not bar this plaintiff.

White v. Newborg, 208 Mass. 280, 94 N. E. 269.

The sale was a prohibited act, and negligence per se.

Hyde Park v. Gay, 120 Mass. 589.

De Courcy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The sales act, Stat. 1908, c. 237, § 15, provides:

"Subject to the provisions of this act, and of any other statute in that behalf, there is no implied warranty or condition as to the quality or fitness for any particular purpose of goods supplied under a contract to sell or a sale, except as follows:

"(1) Where the buyer, expressly or by implication, makes known to the seller the particular purpose for which the goods are required, and it appears that the buyer relies on the seller's skill or judgment, . . . there is an implied warranty that the goods shall be reasonably fit for such purpose."

"(3) If the buyer has examined the goods, there is no implied warranty as regards defects which such examination ought to have revealed."

Even before the enactment of this statute, it was recognized as the law in this commonwealth, that where the buyer at a shop relies on the skill and judgment of the dealer in selecting food, and it is made known to the dealer that his knowledge and skill are relied on to supply wholesome food, he is liable if it is not fit to be eaten; while, in case the buyer himself selects provisions, the dealer's implied warranty does not go beyond the implied assertion that he believes the food to be sound. Farrell v. Manhattan Market Co. 198 Mass. 271, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 884, 84 N. E. 481, 126 Am. L.R.A.1916D.

St. Rep. 436, 15 Ann. Cas. 1076, 21 Am. Neg. Rep. 142.

The application of this rule of law to the facts as found by the trial judge is decisive in the action of Percy A. Gearing. His wife, acting as his agent, left to the defendants the selection of the meat, and paid for it at the current price for sound, wholesome pork chops. See Hunt v. Rhodes Bros. Co. 207 Mass. 30, 92 N. E. 1001. The defendant Freshman undertook to make the selection so left to him. The meat was cooked, and was eaten by the plaintiff and his wife, and both were made sick "because of the unwholesome, unsound, poisonous, or unfit quality or condition of said pork chops. The order of the appellate division in this action must be affirmed.

In the action of the wife, Katherine Gearing, the appellate division ordered judgment for the plaintiff on the first count of her declaration, and from this the defendants appealed. The count is apparently framed in contract, for breach of an implied warranty or condition of fitness for food. The declaration purports to be "in tort," presumably on the theory that an action of tort may be maintained upon a false warranty. See Farrell v. Manhattan Market Co. 198 Mass. 271, 274, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 884, 126 Am. St. Rep. 436, 84 N. E. 481, 21 Am. Neg. Rep. 142, 15 Ann. Cas. 1076, and cases cited. The difficulty with the case on this ground is that there was no contractual relation, and hence no warranty, between Mrs. Gearing and the defendants. The only sale was that made to her husband through her as his agent; and a cause of action in contract accrued to him thereon, as above set forth. The implied warranty, or, to speak more accurately, the implied condition of the contract, to supply an article fit for the purpose required, is in the nature of a contract of personal indemnity with the original purchaser. It does not "run with the goods." Williston Sales, § 244; Lebourdais v. Vitri-fied Wheel Co. 194 Mass. 341, 80 N. E. 482; Roberts v. Anheuser Busch Brewing Asso. 211 Mass. 449, 451, 98 N. E. 95.

It may be added that Mrs. Gearing's right to recover on her second count, added by amendment, which is in tort for negligence is concluded by the findings of fact against her. The sale apparently was one of "adulterated food" under Rev. Laws, chap. 75, §§ 16, 18, 24; and the violation of the statute by the defendants presumably was some evidence of negligence. Berdos v. Tremont & S. Mills, 209 Mass. 496, 95 N. E. 876, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 797. But that is controlled by the finding of the judge, that no negligence in fact was shown on the part of the defendants. Im the absence both of an implied warranty and of negligence on the part of defendants, the action of Mrs. Gearing fails. Roberts v. Anheuser Busch Brewing Assn. ubi supra; Crocker v. Baltimore Dairy Lunch Co. 214 Mass. 177, 100 N. E. 1078, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 884; Gately v. Taylor, 311 Mass. 60, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 472, 97 N. E. 619; Wilson v. B. S. Ferguson Co. 214 Mass. 265, 101 N. E. 381.

Consequential damages for loss of consortium cannot be recovered in either case. Feneff v. New York O. & H. R. R. Co. 203

Mass. 278, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1024, 133 Am. St. Rep. 291, 89 N. E. 436; Bolger v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 205 Mass. 420, 91 N. E. 389; Whitcomb v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 215 Mass. 442, 102 N. E. 663. See 16 Columbia L. Rev. 122.

In the case of Percy A. Gearing the order of judgment for the plaintiff must be affirmed; and in the case of Katherine Gearing, the order of the Appellate Division must be reversed, and judgment entered for the defendant.

So ordered.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 1.)

H. L. KETLER, Respt.,

v.

M. E. MURREY et al., Appts.

(— Wash. —, 154 Pac. 1084.)

Intoxicating liquor — disposing of stock — necessity of license.

A statute requiring a license to sell or dispose of intoxicating liquors does not apply to a sale of a stock of such liquors as part of a hotel, restaurant, and saloon business.

For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 9, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment the Superior Court for Pierce County in plaintiff's favor in an action to recover possession of a hotel, restaurant, and saloon alleged to have been purchased from defendants. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. W. A. Nichols, for appellants:

Equitable construction of statutes, while tolerated in remedial statutes, with great caution, should not be extended to regulations of public policy; and if the language is plain and free from ambiguity, inconvenience in its enforcement can have no weight in its construction.

Walker v. Spokane, 62 Wash. 312, 113 Pac. 775, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 994; 23 Cyc. 334, 335, B, 1 & 2.

Where language is clear, there is no room for construction.

Swarts v. Siegel, 54 C. C. A. 399, 117 Fed. 13.

Messrs. Gordon & Easterday, for respondent:

It is the traffic in intoxicating liquors to which the license laws apply, not to the mere transfer of property in liquors.

Note. — As to sale of stock of intoxicating liquors, see annotation following this case, post, 1010.
L.R.A.1916D.

23 Cyc. 117, 118; Smith v. Heineman, 118 Ala. 195, 72 Am. St. Rep. 150, 24 So. 364; Hagerty v. Tuxbury, 181 Mass. 126, 63 N. E. 333; Wildermuth v. Cole, 77 Mich. 483, 43 N. W. 889; Joyce, Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 302-307; Black, Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 139, 204, 205.

Interpretation may expand the meaning of a statute beyond the mere signification of its words, and "statutes are to be construed so as to not work an absurdity."

Bishop, Statutory Crimes, § 200; Palmer v. Laberee, 23 Wash. 409, 63 Pac. 216.

Chadwick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Respondent purchased a hotel, restaurant, and saloon from the defendants. They refused to make delivery upon the ground that the stock of goods consisted, in part, of two kegs of beer, a barrel of whisky, containing some 7 or 8 gallons, and several bottles of liquors and wines. Appellants rely upon the statute (Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 2962, 6268):

"Any person who shall sell or dispose of any spirituous, malt, or other intoxicating liquors without having first obtained a license from the proper authorities shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000, or imprisoned in the county jail not to exceed six months, or by both fine and imprisonment, for each offense."

"Nothing in this act shall be held or construed to allow any person, firm, or corporation to barter, sell, or otherwise dispose of any spirituous, malt, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors without having first obtained a license therefor, as required by the provisions of this chapter, except as provided in § 6275, infra."

The court below held that a license to sell a quantity was not necessary where the seller was closing out his business as a dealer in intoxicating liquor. The holding was correct. Statutes such as our own are directed to the regulation of traffic in intoxicating liquor, and not to the transfer of property in it. Black, Intoxicating Liquors, p. 139.

In Wildermuth v. Cole, 77 Mich. 483, 43 N. W. 889, under a statute as broad as our own, the supreme court of Michigan held that a sheriff holding intoxicating liquors under a writ of attachment did not need a license to sell on execution sale; that his act did not fall within either the letter or the spirit of the statute, which was directed only to those engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquors. We note this case because appellants contend that all the cases cited by respondent are to be distinguished as covering sales made by public officers in the performance of their duty. If appellants' reasoning be good, it would not be possible so to distinguish the cases; for the statute uses the words "any person," and a sheriff or other officer would fall within the letter of the law. If it were admitted that the sale by a sheriff could be so distinguished, it would not follow that a sale by an assignee of a debtor or an administrator was a sale under the compulsory process of a court, and yet it is held that a sale by either of these agents does not fall within the meaning and intent of the law.

In Williams v. Troop, 17 Wis. 463, the court said: "He [an administrator], is a person whose plain legal duty it is to sell property, collect and pay the debts, and settle up the estate committed to his charge.

In performing this duty and disposing of the spirituous liquors belonging to the estate, it is no more necessary for him to obtain a license than it would be for a sheriff to obtain one before he could sell liquors taken upon an execution."

And the like rule was applied to an assignee in Gignoux v. Bilbruck, 63 N. H. 22.

In Forwood v. State, 49 Md. 531, in discussing the law of the case it is said: If the vendor "had disposed of them [stock of liquors] at private sale by wholesale, and at one time in good faith, solely for the purpose of closing his business, and not in the continued prosecution of his business, this would not have been, in our judgment, any infraction of the license laws."

In Hagerty v. Tuxbury, 181 Mass. 126, 63 N. E. 333, the holding is epitomized in the syllabus: "One owning an interest in a liquor saloon and its stock in trade, but having no license to sell intoxicating liquors, lawfully may sell to his partner his interest in the saloon and the intoxicating liquors it contains."

We find the judgment of the lower court well founded in reason and sustained by ample authority.

Affirmed.

Morris, Ch. J., and Mount, Ellis, and Fullerton, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Intoxicating liquors; sale of stock of liquors.

The sale of a stock of liquors under legal process is excluded from this note. For cases upon that point, the reader is referred to the note to Hines v. Stahl, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1118.

The question as to what amounts to retail sales, as distinguished from wholesale, is treated in the notes to Re Metz Bros. Brewing Co. 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 622, and State v. Cunningham, L.R.A. 1915B, 389.

Although there is some conflict, the weight of authority and better reasoning seem to sustain the position taken in KETLER v. MURREY, ante, 1009, that the sale of a stock of liquor, not in the ordinary course of business, is not within the statutes regulating, but not absolutely prohibiting, the sale of intoxicating liquor.

Sale in gross, generally.

The owner of a saloon may lawfully sell the stock and fixtures and quit the business. Lawlor v. State (1912) 53 Ind. App. 24, 99 N. E. 487. L.R.A.1916D.

So, a note given in part payment of the purchase price of a saloon business, including liquors and other stock in hand, is based upon a lawful consideration. Lackaff v. Hinz (1913) 73 Wash. 21, 131 Pac. 207.

And in Strahn v. Hamilton (1871) 38 Ind. 57, it was held that a note for the price of a saloon, liquors, fixtures, etc., including the license, was without valid consideration only to the extent that the transfer of the license entered into the consideration.

The sale of a stock of liquors in gross to close out a saloon is not rendered illegal by the fact that the seller has not paid his tax to the state as a wholesale dealer. Overall v. Bezeau (1877) 37 Mich. 506.

An option contract for the sale of a retail liquor business with the fixtures, stock, and license is not illegal because the purchaser is not authorized by law to engage in the business, where the law provides for the sale and transfer of a retail liquor license. Strebel v. Bligh (1915) — Ind. —, 109 N. E. 45.

A druggist, in selling out his entire business, does not violate the law prohibiting the sale of liquors except at a dispensary, because his stock of drugs contains some liquor. Long v. Holley (1912) 177 Ala. 508, 58 So. 254.

Ex Parte Aitkin (1900) 1 N. S. W. St. Rep. 214, 18 N. S. W. W. N. Cas. 279, is stated in 2 Woollen & Thornton on Intoxicating Liquors, § 691, as holding that an auctioneer selling out at auction the stock of the owner, who sends the liquor to the former's premises, does not carry on the business of a spirit merchant, and cannot be convicted because he has not the license required of such merchants.

But a sale of a stock of goods, including intoxicating liquors, by one not licensed to sell such liquors, was held illegal in Kidder v. Blake (1864) 45 N. H. 530, and in Ladd v. Dillingham (1851) 34 Me. 316.

And in Gerlach v. Skinner (1885) 34 Kan. 86, 55 Am. Rep. 240, 8 Pac. 257, an indivisible contract for the sale of a building with its contents was held wholly void because it included a stock of liquors which neither of the parties had any permit to sell, and whose sale was in violation of the prohibitory liquor law, which prohibited the sale of liquors, directly or indirectly, except for medical, scientific, or mechanical purposes.

And in McGuinness v. Bligh (1874) 11 R. I. 94, it is held that, under a statute providing that all payments for liquors sold in violation of law shall be considered, as between the parties to such sale, to have been received without consideration, a person who purchases a half interest in a business, the stock of which he knows consists in part of liquor illegally kept for sale, can recover back so much of the amount paid as may be considered to have been received for the liquor, but the illegality does not taint the whole of the sale, and therefore he cannot recover the whole of his payment.

The sale of a saloon and its contents to a minor is illegal under a statute prohibiting the sale of liquor to minors, and where the law provides that no person holding a license shall sell any liquors to any unlicensed dealer, having reason to believe that the same are to be resold, and that all compensation for liquors sold in violation of law shall be held to have been received without consideration, and that no action shall be maintained for the value of liquors sold L.R.A.1916D.

contrary to law, such minor can recover back the purchase price of the saloon, nor is he prevented from disaffirming the contract of sale by the rule that a minor may bind himself by a contract beneficial to him, the business purchased being a profitable one, since the contract cannot be beneficial to him, because he is disqualified by law from obtaining the necessary license. Chabot v. Paulhus (1911) 32 R. I. 471, 79 Atl. 1103.

Sale by retail to close out stock.

It is stated in Forwood v. State (1878) 49 Md. 531, that where a trader or keeper of an ordinary, whose license has expired, discontinues his business, he may, without renewing his license, lawfully sell his stock of liquors remaining on hand, if he does so in good faith, and not in the prosecution of a regular business, but it was held in that case that a hotel keeper who, for six months after the expiration of his license, continued in the occupation of the same premises, selling his liquor on hand to any and all persons who called for it in quantities of half a pint and upwards, did not come within the exception of the statute, although he sold at cost and not by the glass, the court saying that if he had sold at public auction, or at private sale, by wholesale and at one time, it would not have been any infraction of the license law.

And a retail liquor dealer who continued to sell after the expiration of his license was held to have thereby violated the law, although he sold only the stock he had on hand at that time. United States v. Angell (1881) 11 Fed. 34.

Sale by one partner to another.

Statutes prohibiting the sale of liquor without a license have no application to a sale by one partner to another, of his interest in the firm's saloons. Smith v. Heineman (1897) 118 Ala. 195, 72 Am. St. Rep. 150, 24 So. 364.

A contract of sale by one partner to the other of his interest in the furniture, fixtures, and stock in their saloon, and of his license, is not invalid because the transfer of the license is illegal, the other part of the contract being legal, and its consideration separable from the illegal consideration. Pierce v. Pierce (1897) 17 Ind. App. 107, 46 N. E. 480.

The sale by a distiller to his partner of his share of the product of the distillery is not a violation of a local-option law which allows distillers to sell their product by wholesale at the place of distillation, when not to be drunk on the premises. Stamper v. Com. (1907) 31 Ky. L. Rep. 707, 103 S. W. 286.<sup>4</sup>

Hagerty v. Tuxbury (1902) 181 Mass. 126, 63 N. E. 333, is sufficiently set out in KETLER v. MURREY, ante, 1009.

Sale by representative of estate to close out business.

An assignee for the benefit of creditors can sell a stock of liquors belonging to the debtor, although their sale by the latter is prohibited by law. Gignoux v. Bilbruck (1884) 63 N. H. 22. In the foregoing case the assignee recovered the price of intoxicating liquors sold by him at private sale and at different times, against the contention of the defendant that by so doing the assignee was carrying on a retail liquor business, and that such unlawful sale was unnecessary because it was possible for him to sell the liquors in another state where a sale would be lawful.

KETLER v. MURREY, ante, 1009, sufficiently sets forth the holding on this point in Williams v. Troop (1863) 17 Wis. 463, involving a sale of liquors by an administrator.

Mortgage of stock of liquors.

A mortgage of a stock of liquors, to secure the payment of a note, violates a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, except for medical, scientific, or mechanical purposes. Korman v. Henry (1884) 32 Kan. 49, 3 Pac. 764. A motion for a rehearing in this case was overruled in (1884) 32 Kan. 343, 4 Pac. 262.

A sale by way of mortgage of a stock of goods consisting in part of intoxicating liquors is illegal under a statute prohibiting the sale of liquors directly or indirectly by one not licensed. Hay v. Parker (1867) 55 Me. 355.

A mortgage of a stock of drugs, which includes a quantity of intoxicating liquors, is void in toto. First Nat. Bank v. Gerson (1893) 50 Kan. 582, 32 Pac. 905.

The same holding was made in Flersheim v. Cary (1888) 39 Kan. 178, 17 Pac. 825, as to a mortgage of saloon fixtures and liquors.

The right of a druggist, who has no permit to sell intoxicating liquors, to lawfully use them for the purpose of compounding medicines for sale, does not justify a mortgage of such liquors for the purpose of securing a debt due to a creditor who has no permit to engage in their sale. C. D. Smith Drug Co. v. First Nat. Bank (1899) 60 Kan. 184, 55 Pac. 851.

But it was held in Cobb v. Farr (1860) L.R.A.1916D.

16 Gray (Mass.) 597, that a mortgage of intoxicating liquors, though it may be a sale such as a statute, regulating the sale of liquors, prohibits, passes the title to the mortgagee, who may maintain an action against one wrongfully taking the liquors. The court said: "A sale, even when made under such circumstances as the law forbids, yet passes the property to the purchaser. The seller commits an offense for which he is punishable, but he does not retain his property in the article sold. It has never been held, under any of the statutes regulating the sale of spirituous or intoxicating liquors in this commonwealth, that the purchaser was guilty of any offense, or was particeps criminis. . . . As it is not criminal in the buyer to take an absolute title, we cannot see that it is criminal in him to take a defeasible title, or that he will fail to acquire all the rights of property which such a title usually gives."

Where possession is given under a mortgage executed in violation of an act prohibiting the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors by any person, title passes to the mortgagee, and the mortgage is good as against the mortgagor, and also as against his creditors, if not made for the purpose of defrauding them, under the principle that, if an illegal contract is executed, the law will not undo what the parties themselves have done. Bagg v. Jerome (1859) 7 Mich. 145.

Under the same principle, it was held that an assignee in insolvency of a mortgagor of a stock of drugs, including intoxicating liquors, could not recover the value of such stock from the mortgagee in possession, assuming that the presence of the liquors in the stock tainted the mortgage with illegality as to both the mortgagor and mortgagee. Conley v. Murdock (1909) 106 Me. 266, 76 Atl. 682.

And in Korman v. Henry (Kan.) set out supra, where the mortgagee attempted to replevin the mortgaged liquors from a constable who held them under a writ of attachment against the mortgagor, the court said: "If the plaintiff, at any time before the writ of attachment was levied upon the property, had taken possession of the same under his mortgage, a different question would have been raised in this case. Under such circumstances, the plaintiff would hold the property, not only by virtue of his chattel mortgage, but also by virtue of his possession; and if his chattel mortgage should be held to be void, he might still claim the property as against any mere wrongdoer, by virtue of his possession. His possession would undoubtedly give him such a right to the property that he could maintain replevin against any mere wrongdoer who might disturb his possession."

The fact that a stock of drugs contains intoxicating liquors does not make a mortgage thereof illegal as to the mortgagee, where he is ignorant of such fact. Conley v. Murdock (Me.) supra.

And when the validity of such a mortgage is challenged upon the ground that it covers liquors, and was taken by a person who did not have a permit to sell them, to secure a debt due to him, and the description of the mortgaged goods is general and does not specifically mention intoxicating liquors, it is competent for the mortgagee to testify that he did not know or understand that they were included in the stock. C. D. Smith Drug Co. v. First Nat. Bank (Kan.) supra.

G. V. I.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

CLARA A. ARCHIBALD, Appt.,

v.

LEE OTT, State Compensation Commissioner.

(— W. Va. —, 87 S. E. 791.)

Master and servant — workmen's compensation — quenching thirst.

1. Acts of ministration by a servant unto himself, such as quenching his thirst, relieving his hunger, protecting himself from excessive cold, and numerous others, readily conceivable, performance of which while at work are reasonably necessary to his health and comfort, are incidents of his employment and acts of service therein, within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act, though, in a sense, they are personal to himself, and only remotely and indirectly conducive to the object of the employment; and an accidental injury sustained in the performance of such an act is compensable under said statute, as one incurred in the course of the employment and resulting therefrom.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — drinking poison.

2. Death of a servant by poison, occasioned by his drinking from a bottle a poisonous fluid having the appearance of water, under the impression that it was drinking water, while at work on premises on which the workmen supplied themselves with drinking water from a neighboring well, by means of buckets and bottles, on account of the unsatisfactory condition of

of the city water furnished in the building by means of pipes, is an injury which arose in the course of his employment and resulted therefrom, within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — negligence of employee.

3. Mere negligence or carelessness of an employee, causing his death or injury, does not preclude right of compensation under said statute.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 18, 1916.)

APPEAL by applicant from a decision of the State Compensation Commissioner denying compensation for the death of her husband, in a proceeding by her under the workmen's compensation act to recover for his death. Compensation awarded.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Conley & Johnson and Blackford, Bradshaw, & Beans, for appellant: George Archibald received the injuries causing his death in the course of and resulting from his employment.

Burns's Case, 218 Mass. 8, 105 N. E. 601, 5 N. C. C. A. 635, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 787; Industrial Commission v. Brown (1915) 60 Ohio L. J. 57; Johnson's Case, 217 Mass. 388, 104 N. E. 735, 4 N. C. C. A. 843; Hurle's Case, 217 Mass. 223, L.R.A.1916A, 279, 104 N. E. 336, 4 N. C. C. A. 527, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 919; Bryant v. Fissell, 84 N. J. L. 72, 86 Atl. 460, 3 N. C. C. A. 585; Bennen v. New Dells Lumber Co. 161 Wis. 370, L.R.A.1916A, 273, 154 N. W. 640; Zabriskie v. Erie R. Co. 85 N. J. L. 157, 88 Atl. 824, 4 N. C. C. A. 778; Keenan v. Flemington Coal Co. 40 Scot. L. R. 144, 5 Sc. Sess. Cas. 5th series, 164, 10 Scot. L. T. 409; Parker v. Hambrook, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 24, note; Clem v. Chalmers Motor Co. 178 Mich. 340, L.R.A.1916A, 352, 144 N. W. 848, 4 N. C. C. A. 876; Terlecki v. Straus, 85 N. J. L. 454, 89 Atl. 1023, 4 N. C. C. A. 584.

Headnotes by POFFENBARGER, J.

Note. — As to the construction and effect of the workmen's compensation act generally, see annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 23.

As to injuries received while procuring refreshments, as arising out of and in the course of the employment, see annotation following Sundine v. Dunne, L.R.A.1916A, 320; and see also Mann v. Glastonbury Knitting Co. ante, 86, and references in footnote to that case.
L.R.A.1916D.

Messrs. A. A. Lilly, Attorney General, and Frank Lively, Assistant Attorney General, for State Compensation Commissioner:

The injury did not "arise out of and in the course of the employment."

Fitzgerald v. Clarke [1908] 2 K. B. 796, 77 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1018, 99 L. T. N. S. 101, 1 B. W. C. C. 197; Moore v. Manchester Liners [1910] A. C. 498, 79 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1175, 103 L. T. N. S. 226, 26 Times L. R. 26, 54 Sol. Jo. 703, 3 B. W. C. C. 527; Bradbury, Workmen's Compensation, 2d ed. 398; McNicol's Case, 215 Mass. 497, L.R.A.1916A, 306, 102 N. E. 697, 4 N. C. C. A. 522; DeConstantin v. Public Service Commission, — W. Va. —, L.R.A.1916A, 329, 83 S. E. 88.

Poffenbarger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

George Archibald, a husband and the father of three children, while working as a plumber for the Schofield-Cowl Company, at Wheeling, West Virginia, died in consequence of accidental poisoning. That the accident occurred in the course of his employment seems not to be controverted, but that the injury arose out of the employment, or resulted from it, in the legal sense of the terms, is denied; and compensation to the widow was refused, upon the theory that it did not.

The poisoning was not an occupational disease, such as lead poison. Archibald drank a poisonous fluid commercially known as lapidolith, and used for hardening concrete, believing it to be drinking water. His employers were installing the plumbing in the Wheeling High School building. The Fetzer-Winger Company were doing the concrete work in the same building. All of the employees supplied themselves with drinking water from a neighboring well by means of buckets and bottles, the city water piped into the building being unsatisfactory, or less desirable than the well water. Bottles of different sizes and kinds were used. Having occasion to be on the third floor of the building in the course of his work, and becoming thirsty, Archibald discovered what he took to be a large bottle of water in a bucket and drank from it, thinking it had been brought up and left there by some other workman. It proved to be the lapidolith with which a servant of the Fetzer-Winger Company had been treating the concrete floors. Having made one or more applications of it, this servant had set the bottle in a bucket he had used in applying the fluid, and left it there until he should need it for another application. On the bucket he set a broom and placed a card bearing the word "Poison." At Archibald's shop or workbench in another part of the building he had a water bottle of his own. Why he did not notice the warning on the card is not definitely shown. The fluid was clear, and looked like water, and knowledge of the common use of such bottles by the workmen, no doubt, induced the hasty and thoughtless act.

Right of compensation under the statute does not depend upon negligence or fault of the employer, and is not precluded by mere negligence on the part of the employee, causing the injury. It gives compensation for injuries received "in the course of and resulting from" the employment. It specifically denies compensation for injuries self-inflicted or occasioned by the wilful misconduct of the employee, his disobedience of rules and regulations adopted by the employer and approved by the Compensation Commissioner, or his intoxication. Its provisions are based upon the principles of the English compensation act, which has been construed as giving compensation for accidental injuries, though occasioned by negligence of the injured party. In his disposition of the application, the Commissioner does not depart from this construction, nor does he deny right of participation, on the ground of Archibald's negligence or carelessness. The specification of certain grounds of exclusion impliedly limits and confines it to them, and relieves from other circumstances which might be deemed sufficient to exclude, in the absence of an expression of contrary legislative intent. Exclusion on certain grounds argues intent not to exclude on others. "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius."

As Archibald's negligence or carelessness is immaterial, and the injury was incurred manifestly in the course of his employment, it remains only to determine whether it resulted from the employment. To give right of compensation, an injury must result from, or arise out of, the employment. The two phrases "in the course of employment" and "resulting from employment" are not synonymous. The former relates to the time, place, and circumstances of the injury, and the latter to its origin. Fitzgerald v. Clarke [1908] 2 K. B. 796, 77 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1018, 99 L. T. N. S. 101, 1 B. W. C. C. 197; McNicol's Case, 215 Mass. 497, L.R.A.1916A, 306, 102 N. E. 697, 4 N. C. C. A. 522. It is not enough to say the accident would not have happened if the servant had not been engaged in the work at the time, or had not been in that place. It must appear that it resulted from something he was doing in the course of his work, or from some peculiar danger to which the work exposed him. Amys v. Barton [1912] 1 K. B. 40, 81 L. J. K. B.

N. S. 65, 105 L. T. N. S. 619, 28 Times L. R. 29, 5 B. W. C. C. 117.

Instances of injuries deemed not to have arisen out of the employment, although sustained in the course thereof, are found in the reported cases. An injury intentionally inflicted upon one workman by another, by a blow from a piece of iron thrown in anger, or by an assault and battery, is of that kind. Such also is the character of an injury resulting from an assault upon a workman by a stranger, and of one sustained in the course of recreation or diversion at the place of work. In some of these cases an agency wholly independent of the work, foreign to it and unanticipated, intervenes, or there is a turning aside from the employment, for the time being, to engage in a transaction on the workman's own account and for his own purposes. It is quite easy to perceive that violence of a fellow workman or a stranger arises, not out of the work, but out of the vicious or irritable disposition of the assailant, and that play or diversion on the premises is a step outside of the employment, and a thing done for the employee himself, and not for the employer. In none of these instances is the occasion of the injury an incident of the work.

If there is an incidental or causal connection between the employment and the accident, the injury is deemed to have arisen out of the former, even when the connection is somewhat remote, and when the direct and immediate agency of injury is foreign. Murder of a paymaster, incident to his robbery, is an accident arising out of the employment (Nisbet v. Rayne [1910] 2 K. B. 689, 80 L. J. K. B. N. S. 84, 103 L. T. N. S. 178, 26 Times L. R. 632, 54 Sol. Jo. 719, 3 B. W. C. C. 507, 3 N. C. C. A. 268), because the habitual carrying of large sums of money in the course of the employment and as an act of service therein is an exposure to the risk of an attack by robbers. An injury to a railroad engine driver, occasioned by a stone thrown from a bridge by a boy while the engine was passing under it was held to be an accident arising out of the employment (Challis v. London & S. W. R. Co. [1905] 2 K. B. 154, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 569, 53 Week. Rep. 613, 93 L. T. N. S. 330, 21 Times L. R. 486, 7 W. C. C. 23, because such a danger is a matter of common knowledge, and is accordingly deemed to have been within the contemplation of both master and servant. In each of these cases the independent criminal agency of injury was held to be immaterial, because the danger of injury by such means was an incident of the performance of the work, as well as of the time and place of performance.

L.R.A.1916D.

Such acts as are necessary to the life, comfort, and convenience of the servant while at work, though strictly personal to himself, and not acts of service, are incidental to the service, and injury sustained in the performance thereof is deemed to have arisen out of the employment. A man must breathe and occasionally drink water while at work. In these and other conceivable instances he ministers unto himself, but in a remote sense these acts contribute to the furtherance of the work. Vennen v. New Dells Lumber Co. 161 Wis. 370, L.R.A.1916A, 273, 154 N. W. 640; Zabriskie v. Erie R. Co. 85 N. J. L. 157, 88 Atl. 824, 4 N. C. C. A. 778. That such acts will be done in the course of employment is necessarily contemplated, and they are inevitable incidents. Such dangers as attend them, therefore, are incident dangers. At the same time injuries occasioned by them are accidents resulting from the employment.

Here the unfit, unsatisfactory, or undesirable water supply in the building was one of the generally recognized conditions of the place of service. In consequence thereof all of the workmen supplied themselves from the well by means of buckets and bottles, which were left at their respective places of work, and, as may well be supposed, in view of the spirit of comradeship usually prevalent among men working together, it was not unusual for a thirsty workman to take a drink, by tacit permission, from any bucket or bottle that happened to be convenient. Among the bottles in the building there was one that contained a deadly poison having the appearance of water. Its presence there was an incident of the prosecution of the work. It was a substance used therein, and not a thing left on the premises by a stranger, meddler, or miscreant. In the performance of an act attendant upon and incident to all sorts of employment, Archibald, by mistake, drank this fluid for water. That his death was thus accidentally occasioned, in the course of his employment, is admitted, and, in our opinion, the fatal accident arose out of his employment. The case is analogous to several found in the reports. A woolsorter became infected through a bacillus in the wool he was assorting, and died of anthrax. It was held the accident had occurred in the course of his employment and arisen out of it. Brinton v. Turvey [1905] A. C. 230, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 474, 53 Week. Rep. 641, 92 L. T. N. S. 578, 21 Times L. R. 444, 2 Ann. Cas. 137. Through an accident a workman in a coal mine was compelled to stand in cold water until he became thoroughly chilled, and in consequence took pneumonia and died. The injury was held to be legally attributable to accident in the course of employment and arising out of it. Alloa Coal Co. v. Drylie [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 213, [1913] s. c. 549, 50 Scot. L. R. 350, 1 Scot. L. T. 167, 6 B. W. C. C. 398, 4 N. C. C. A. 899. Death of a servant from typhoid fever contracted from infected water furnished by the master was held to be an accidental injury within the meaning of the compensation act. Vennen v. New Dells Lumber Co. 161 Wis. 370, L.R.A.1916A, 273, 154 N. W. 640. A workman was injured while descending from the roof of a building for lunch, and it was held the injury had arisen in the course of employment. Clem v. Chalmers Motor Co. 178 Mich. 340, L.R.A.1916A, 352, 144 N. W. 848, 4 N. C. C. A. 876. A ship's engineer in an intensely cold place rigged up a temporary stove to warm his cabin, and was asphyxiated. Though he was thus ministering unto himself, the accident was compensable. Edmunds v. The Peterson, 28 Times L. R. 18, 5 B. W. C. C. 167. The following cases, involving personal, incidental service, are to the same effect: Morris v. Lambeth, 22 Times L. R. 22, 8 W. C. C. 1; Leach v. Oakley Street & Co. [1911] 1 K. B. 523, 80 L. J. K. B. N. S. 313, 103 L. T. N. S. 778, 27 Times L. R.

124, 55 Sol. Jo. 124, 4 B. W. C. C. 91. If the quenching of a workman's thirst while at work is an act within his employment, then undoubtedly an injurious mistake in the performance of that act is the same in its legal nature and character as a misstep in the performance of any other duty, resulting in injury. A fall from a scaffold, an accidental cutting or mashing of a hand or foot, sustained in the course of work, though negligent, would be a compensable accident. The drinking of water in the course of service is obviously a necessary incident of the work, and, as is disclosed by the facts in this and other cases, is attended by some danger. Such attendant danger as is commonly known was within the contemplation of the parties. Hence, Archibald's fatal mistake in that incident of his service was legally the same as any injurious mistake he might have made in any act of direct service. The only perceptible difference lies in the fact that the drinking of water was a remote, incidental, or indirect, not a direct, act of service to the master, and authorities cited treat this as immaterial.

Our conclusion is that the widow is entitled to compensation, and payment thereof will be ordered.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

BILLINGS HOTEL COMPANY et al.

v.

CITY OF ENID et al.

(— Okla. —, 154 Pac. 557.)

Municipal corporation — abating nuisance — aid of court.

A municipal corporation, in the exercise of a power granted in the charter "... to define what shall be a nuisance in the city, ... and to abate such nuisance by summary proceedings, and to punish the authors by penalties, fines, and imprisonment," may not invoke the aid of a court of equity to abate a nuisance consisting of a rooming house where intoxicating liquors are sold, contrary to § 13, chap. 70, Session Laws 1911, and the city charter, and defined by both to be a nuisance.

For other cases, see Nuisance, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 11, 1916.)

ORIGINAL action for a writ to prohibit further proceedings in an action filed

Headnote by TURNER, J.

Note. — For right of municipality to maintain suit to enjoin or abate a public nuisance, see annotation following this case, post, 1020.
L.R.A.1916D.

by defendants against plaintiffs in the District Court for Garfield County to restrain an alleged nuisance. Writ issued.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hills & Manatt and John F. Curran, for plaintiffs:

There is no ordinance of the city which provides for the abatement of a nuisance, or authorizes the bringing of an action of injunction against those maintaining a nuisance.

Weaver v. Kuchler, 17 Okla. 189, 87 Pac. 600; Clinton Cemetery Asso. v. McAtee, 27 Okla. 160, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 945, 111 Pac. 392; Territory ex rel. Oklahoma v. Robertson, 19 Okla. 149, 92 Pac. 144; Territory v. Long-Bell Lumber Co. 22 Okla. 890, 99 Pac. 911; Ottumwa v. Chinn, 75 Iowa, 405, 39 N. W. 670; State ex rel. Hartung v. Milwaukee, 102 Wis. 509, 78 N. W. 756; Denver v. Mullen, 7 Colo. 345, 3 Pac. 693; Georgetown v. Alexandria Canal Co. 12 Pet. 96, 9 L. ed. 1015; State ex rel. Haskell v. Houston, 21 Okla. 782, 97 Pac. 982; State v. Stark, 63 Kan. 529, 54 L.R.A. 910, 88 Am. St. Rep. 251, 66 Pac. 243; Jones v. Chanute, 63 Kan. 243, 65 Pac. 243.

Mr. Harry O. Glasser, for defendants:

Where a city has power to determine what constitutes a nuisance, and the same is declared to be a nuisance, such determination is conclusive of the question.

Green v. Savannah, 6 Ga. 1; Goddard v. Jacksonville, 15 Ill. 588, 60 Am. Dec. 778; State v. Heidenhain, 42 La. Ann. 483, 21 Am. St. Rep. 388, 7 So. 621; St. Louis v. Schnuckelberg, 7 Mo. App. 536; Van Wormer v. Albany, 15 Wend. 262; Kennedy v. Board of Health, 2 Pa. St. 366; Crosby v. Warren, 1 Rich. L. 385.

A municipal corporation may maintain an action by injunction to abate a public nuisance within its corporate limits.

Pine City v. Munch, 42 Minn. 342, 6 L.R.A. 763, 44 N. W. 197; Huron v. Bank of Volga, 8 S. D. 449, 59 Am. St. Rep. 769, 66 N. W. 815; Houlton v. Titcomb, 102 Me. 272, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 580, 120 Am. St. Rep. 492, 66 Atl. 733; Coast Co. v. Spring Lake, 58 N. J. Eq. 586, 51 L.R.A. 657, 47 Atl. 1131; Metropolitan City R. Co. v. Chicago, 96 Ill. 620; Watertown v. Mayo, 100 Mass. 315, 12 Am. Rep. 694; Board of Health v. Copcutt, 140 N. Y. 12, 23 L.R.A. 485, 35 N. E. 443; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Block v. Jacksonville, 36 Ill. 301; Coulterville v. Gillen, 72 Ill. 509; Red Wing v. Guptill, 72 Minn. 259, 41 L.R.A. 321, 71 Am. St. Rep. 485, 75 N. W. 234; Green v. Lake, 60 Miss. 451; State, Rodwell, Prosecutor, v. Newark, 34 N. J. L. 264; People v. Detroit White Lead Works, 82 Mich. 471, 9 L.R.A. 722, 46 N. W. 735; Harvey v. De-woody, 18 Ark. 252; Baker v. Boston, 12 Pick. 183, 22 Am. Dec. 421; Hickory v. Southern R. Co. 141 N. C. 716, 53 S. E. 955; Stamford v. Stamford Horse R. Co. 56 Conn. 381, 1 L.R.A. 375, 15 Atl. 749; San Francisco v. Buckman, 111 Cal. 25, 43 Pac. 396; Hutchinson Twp. v. Filk, 44 Minn. 536, 47 N. W. 255; Pine City v. Munch, 42 Minn. 342, 6 L.R.A. 763, 44 N. W. 197; Huron v. Bank of Volga, 8 S. D. 449, 59 Am. St. Rep. 769, 66 N. W. 815; Moyamensing Twp. v. Long, 1 Para. Sel. Eq. Cas. 143; Llano v. Llano County, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 132, 23 S. W. 1006; Yates v. Warrentown, 84 Va. 337, 10 Am. St. Rep. 860, 4 S. E. 818; Moore v. Walla Walla, 2 Wash. Terr. 184, 2 Pac. 187.

Turner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original proceeding for a writ of prohibition. The record discloses that on October 22, 1915, the city of Enid, a municipal corporation, as plaintiff, and on the relation of its city attorney, filed in the district court of Garfield county a petition alleging that the Billings Hotel Company, Walter Billings, manager, and seven others, petitioners here, were maintaining a place within the corporate limits of the city, and were there selling intoxicating liquors contrary to law; that the place was known as the Billings Hotel, but, in fact, was a mere rooming house; that the same was a nuisance as defined by an ordinance of the city; and prayed for a temporary injunction restraining petitioners from operating the same, and that the sheriff of Garfield county take possession and lock it up. All of which the court did, without notice or bond to petitioners, on October —, 1915, and in said order set November 10, 1915, at Cherokee, as the time and place when and where said temporary injunction would come on for final hearing. On November 4, 1915, came petitioners and moved the court to dissolve the temporary injunction, for certain reasons stated in the motion, and when the court in chambers heard the same and refused so to do, and overruled the motion, this proceeding was commenced.

Assuming the things were done as charged in the city's petition, and that the place where done was a public nuisance within the contemplation of § 13, chap. 70, Sess. Laws 1911, yet, as the act further provides: "The attorney general, county attorney, or any officer charged with the enforcement of any of the provisions of this act, of the county where such nuisance exists, or is kept, or is maintained, may maintain an action in the name of the state to abate and perpetually enjoin the same."

It is contended that the court was without jurisdiction to entertain the city's suit, for the reason that the same was not brought in the name of the state on relation of the attorney general, as required by the act, but was brought by the city on relation of its city attorney. On the other hand, the city attorney disclaims any intention of proceeding under said act. Instead he says the city relies on its right to maintain the action, "as a body politic, under the authority conferred by law upon the municipal corporation through the charter granted to the city of Enid by the state of Oklahoma." Quoting his entire contention, it is:

"That the city of Enid has the power under the authority delegated to the city by the state to proceed in equity, by way of injunction, to abate a public nuisance. It will be contended that this authority is to be found in the city charter, wherein authority is delegated to the city, by § 28 of article 3 of the Enid city charter, 'to define what shall be nuisances in the city, and within 3,000 feet of the corporation lines, outside of the city limits, and to abate such nuisances by summary proceedings, and to punish the authors thereof by penalties, fines, and imprisonment,' together with the further grant of power in § 3. of article 3 of said charter 'to prohibit dramshops, drinking saloons, and other places where intoxicating liquors are sold.'

"That, pursuant to this authority, the city of Enid has, by § 4 of ordinance 677, art. 84, re-enacted a transcript of the state law relative to nuisances resulting from the wrongful acts of any person who may engage in the manufacture, sale, barter, giving away, or otherwise furnishing of intoxicating liquors contrary to law in a given place. There is no method provided in the city ordinance for the summary abatement of any such nuisances existing within the city of Enid, and neither is there any state law authorizing the summary abatement of this class of nuisances by any state officer. By the laws of Oklahoma (§ 4257, Harris-Day Code) the remedies against a public nuisance are: (1) Indictment or information; (2) a civil action; (3) abatement. And by § 4260, Harris-Day Code, a public nuisance may be abated by any public body or officer authorized thereby by law. Therefore it must appear that the city of Enid, being a body politic, and having the authority conferred upon it by the state of Oklahoma, through its charter, to abate, by summary proceedings, any nuisance within the city of Enid, would have the right to appeal to the courts of equity in its corporate name to abate, by injunction (a summary proceeding) any nuisance wholly within the city and particularly offensive to the citizens thereof, and this authority seems clear without any discussion of any state laws relative to the liquor question."

In other words, if we catch the point, it is the contention of the city attorney that the city, pursuant to § 28, art. 3, of its charter, by § 4 of ordinance 677, re-enacted the state law defining a nuisance as contained in § 13, supra, that the place in question falls within its terms, and that, having so declared it to be, the city has the right to abate it by injunction, pursuant to its grant of power contained in said § 28, authorizing the city, " . . . to define what shall be nuisances in the city, . . . and to abate such nuisances by summary proceedings, and to punish the authors thereof by penalties, fines, and imprisonment." Not so. A grant of power to abate a nuisance by summary proceedings confers no power on the city to proceed to abate it by injunction in a court of equity. This for the reason that a suit in equity is not a summary proceeding.

A summary proceeding is defined by Bouvier to be: "A form of trial in which the ancient established course of legal proceedings is disregarded, especially in the matter of trial by jury, and, in the case of the heavier crimes, presentment by a grand jury. In no case can a party be tried summarily, unless when such proceedings are authorized by legislative authority, except, perhaps, in cases of contempts; for the common law is a stranger to such a mode of trial."

27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. at page 375, says: "A common use of summary proceedings is in the enforcement of city ordinances. Both in England and the United States statutes have been enacted conferring the power upon municipal tribunals sitting within the bounds of the municipal corporation of enforcing the ordinances or by-laws of the corporation in summary proceedings. These proceedings for the punishment of offenders against the ordinances, which are made in virtue of the implied or incidental power of the corporation, or in the exercise of its legitimate police authority, for the preservation of peace, good order, safety, and health, and which relate to minor acts and matters, are not usually or properly regarded as criminal, and hence are not in contravention of the constitutional guaranty of trial by jury in criminal cases."

From all of which we learn that the city, under its charter, can abate the alleged nuisance within its borders by proceeding against its authors in its municipal courts in a summary way, and, when convicted for a violation of its ordinance defining a nuisance, may impose on them the penalty prescribed thereby. By authorizing the city thus to proceed, such grant of power excludes the idea that the city is empowered to proceed in any other manner, to wit, by a suit in equity, to restrain a nuisance, as is here attempted. Besides, the grant of power contained in § 3, art. 3, of the charter, "to prohibit dramshops, drinking saloons, and other places wherein other intoxicating liquors are sold, and to close variety theaters when necessary, expedient, or advisable," containing, as it does, a grant of power to close variety theaters, would seem to exclude the idea of a grant of power to the city to close a nuisance such as this is alleged to be, or to deal with it at all except in the manner stated. And, when we note that Rev. Laws 1910, § 4260, declares that "a public nuisance may be abated by any public body or officer authorized thereto by law," and Rev. Laws 1910, § 4881, says: "An injunction may be granted in the name of the state to enjoin and suppress the keeping and maintaining of a common nuisance. The petition therefor shall be verified by the county attorney of the proper county, or by the attorney general, upon information and belief, and no bond shall be required, but the county shall, in all other respects, be liable as other plaintiffs,"—we are more than ever satisfied that the idea that the city may maintain this suit is excluded. In State ex rel. Haskell v. Huston, 21 Okla. 782, 97 Pac. 982, we said: "When one person or class of persons is named in a power of attorney, or in act of the lawmaking power, as being authorized to do a certain thing therein named, all other persons are thereby excluded from doing the same thing as affectually as if they were positively forbidden."

Ottumwa v. Chinn, 75 Iowa, 405, 39 N. W. 670, was a suit in equity by the city to enjoin a public nuisance. The suit was based upon Iowa Code, § 456, which authorized cities and towns "to prevent injury or annoyance from anything dangerous, offensive, or unhealthy, and to cause any nuisance to be abated;" and § 482, which authorized them to pass ordinances for carrying into effect the powers conferred by § 456 and other sections, and in which it was held that a civil action in equity could not be maintained under the powers granted in those sections in the name of the city for the abatement of a nuisance; "the method contemplated by the statute being by ordinance and criminal prosecution." In the opinion it is said: "It is insisted by appellant that § 456 of the Code confers the right to maintain this action. That section gives to cities and towns organized under the general law of the state 'power to prevent injury or annoyance from anything dangerous, offensive, or unhealthy, and to cause any nuisance to be abated.' It is claimed by appellant that this power may be exercised in any manner which the corporation may think best, and that, since it may sue and be sued, it can accomplish the purpose of the statute by means of an action in court. . . . It is a general proposition of law that municipal corporations have and can exercise only those powers granted in express words; those necessarily implied or incident to the powers expressly granted; and those essential to the purposes of the corporation. Clark v. Davenport, 14 Iowa, 500; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 55; Hanger v. Des Moines, 52 Iowa, 194, 35 Am. Rep. 266, 2 N. W. 1105. Section 482 of the Code authorizes cities and towns to make and publish ordinances not inconsistent with the laws of the state, for carrying into effect or discharging the powers conferred by § 456 and other sections of the same chapter. The ordinary method of abating a public nuisance and punishing its author is by criminal proceedings. Georgetown v. Alexandria Canal Co. 12 Pet. 99, 9 L. ed. 1015. 'Though the jurisdiction of equity in restraint of public nuisances is well established, it will not be exercised where the object sought can be as well attained in the ordinary tribunals, unless upon the application of one who suffers a personal injury aside from the injury to the public.' 1 High, Inj. § 761. The petition in this case charges a nuisance within the meaning of § 4089 of the Code. The remainder of the chapter in which that section appears provides for the abatement of the nuisance and the punishment of the one who caused it. So far as the petition shows, the rights of the general public may be fully protected by ordinary criminal proceedings. The plaintiff does not appear to be especially affected by the nuisance, but bases its demand for relief upon the alleged fact that it is injurious to its citizens. These, however, constitute a part of the general public. Plaintiff is not authorized to bring an action for the benefit of the public, and has failed to bring itself within the provision of § 3331 of the Code. In view of the general provisions of the statute, relating to public nuisances, we conclude that the abatement contemplated by § 456 of the Code was to be effected by the direct action of the corporation itself, as through the medium of an ordinance, rather than by equitable proceedings in court."

None of the cases cited by the city are in conflict with the Iowa case and what we have said. Pine City v. Munch, 42 Minn. 342, 6 L.R.A. 763, 44 N. W. 197, cited by the city in support of its contention, was a suit in equity brought by the village to restrain defendants from draining off a pond within the village limits in the hot months of summer, thereby converting the overflowed land into a marshy swamp, and causing the decayed vegetable matter on the bottom of the pond to create sickness. The village secured the relief, and the case was affirmed by the supreme court of Minnesota, for the reason that the charter of the village expressly conferred the power to bring the suit. Stating the general rule, the court said: "It is undoubted law that, except in the case of a private person sustaining injury special in kind, a bill to restrain an existing or threatening public nuisance by injunction will only lie at the suit of the state, or of some proper officer or body, as the authorized representative of the state. It must also be conceded that a municipal corporation has no control over nuisances within its corporate limits, except such as is conferred upon it by its charter or general laws."

After which the court proceeded to draw from the charter a grant of power sufficient to maintain the suit, thus: "But these propositions are not, in our judgment, decisive of this case. The plaintiff is a village incorporated under Special Laws 1881, chap. 38. Chapter 4 of this act, which de-finer the general powers of the common council of the village, provides that they shall have authority, by ordinances, resolutions, or by laws: '(25) To remove and abate any nuisance injurious to the public health;' '(27) To do all acts and make all regulations which may be necessary and expedient for the preservation of health or the suppression of disease.' And § 5 of chapter 4 of the act provides that 'the powers conferred upon the common council to provide for the abatement of any nuisance shall not bar or hinder suits, prosecutions or proceedings in court according to law.' Under these grants of power undoubtedly the common council could pass an ordinance prohibiting or abating the nuisance complained of, and provide for its enforcement by appropriate penalties. In fact, they did pass an ordinance prohibiting drawing off the water in the pond below a certain depth, which, however, the defendants have disobeyed. Is the plaintiff, in the matter of remedies for the abatement of a nuisance in such cases, limited to the enforcement of the penalties prescribed by ordinance, or may it resort to a court of equity to restrain or abate it?"

Whereupon the court held that a resort to a court of equity was granted to the city in the charter, and affirmed the case. It is clear that, had the charter in that case failed to contain a sufficient grant of power to enable the village to bring the suit, such relief would have been denied.

Neither is Huron v. Bank of Volga, 8 S. D. 449, 59 Am. St. Rep. 769, 66 N. W. 815, cited by the city, in conflict with what we have said, but rather in line. That was a suit by the city in a court of equity, against a private corporation, to abate a public nuisance within the confines of the city. It consisted of a large wooden structure owned by the defendant, situated conspicuously upon a public business street, and which had been partially destroyed by fire. The city prevailed, but did so in virtue of a grant of power contained in its charter. After stating the general rule to be: "While a private person is not authorized to maintain the action unless specially injured, a city council, being the governmental agency to whom the inhabitants of a municipality have a right to look in a proper case for protection from the evil effects of a public nuisance, may, when authorized so to do, resort to an indictment, a civil action, or abatement, according to the exigencies of the particular case,"—the court went on to say: "But, in our opinion, § 4688 of the Compiled Laws, when considered with respondent's city charter, reasonably construed, authorizes the corporate authorities to apply, in cases like the present, to a court of equity for aid in the enforcement of its granted power 'to restrain, prohibit, and suppress nuisances at common law.'" For how could the court hold otherwise when the grant of power to restrain implied the power to invoke the power of a court of equity so to do?

We are therefore of the opinion that, as the city's charter contains no grant of power authorizing the city to restrain a nuisance within its borders, the city may not invoke the powers of a court of equity so to do, and that the writ should run.

It is so ordered.

All the Justices concur.

Annotation—Right of municipality to maintain suit to enjoin or abate a public nuisance.

This note is supplementary to note to Coast Co. v. Spring Lake, 51 L.R.A. 657.

The state as a proper party to maintain a bill to abate or enjoin a public nuisance in a city street is the subject of a note to Alabama Western R. Co. v. State, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1173.

Upon the question of municipal power over nuisances affecting public morals, decency, peace, and good order, see note to State v. Karstendiek, 39 L.R.A. 520, where reference is made to analogous notes.

As to injunction by municipal corporations against nuisances affecting public morals, peace, good order, health, and safety, see note to Red Wing v. Guptil, 41 L.R.A. 321.

This note, like the earlier note, which L.R.A.1916D.

it supplements, is confined strictly to the capacity of the municipality to maintain the suit, assuming that the condition complained of amounts to a nuisance. It is not concerned with cases dealing merely with the merits, even though the suit was in fact brought by the municipality, nor with cases which merely deal with the question whether injunction is the proper remedy, unless, as in BILLINGS HOTEL CO. v. ENID, ante, 1016, that question was affected by the existence of another remedy, peculiar to municipalities, and not available to other suitors.

As shown in the earlier note, if a municipality owns property which is specially damaged, there can be no question as to its right to maintain the suit, upon the same principles that an individual suffering similar damage might maintain it; at least, in the absence of any other special remedies available to the municipality that would not be available to the private owner. In such a situation the suit might be maintained as one to enjoin or abate a private nuisance. Again, as shown in the earlier note, a municipality, in some cases by reason of the liability for injuries to which it might be subjected in consequence of the nuisance, may maintain the bill. Here again, the bill may be regarded as one to enjoin or abate a private nuisance; and it is not necessary in such cases to refer the result to the principle that a municipality may, as the representative pro hac vice of the public, maintain a bill to enjoin or abate a public nuisance.

Although there is some conflict among the cases, the weight of authority disclosed by the earlier note and the present note is to the effect that the municipality may, at least, in the absence of any other special remedy available to it, maintain a suit to enjoin or abate a nuisance which affects matters that have been confided to it as a governmental agency, even though it suffers no such special damage as is necessary to sustain a suit on the theory of a private nuisance. If this principle had to rest for its support on cases involving nuisances in respect of highways, it might be difficult to sustain it, for the reason that when the control of the highway is confided to the municipality, it is generally subject to liability for injuries which may be caused thereby, and hence, the conditions exist which make the nuisance a special injury to the municipality. In many of the highway cases, however, the power of the municipality to maintain the suit seems to be placed upon the broad principle just stated, and not upon the narrower ground of a special injury. With respect to nuisances which do not affect matters confided to the municipality, the weight of authority is to the effect that the right of the municipality to maintain the bill depends upon the same conditions as the right of an individual or a private corporation; that is, it must, as a separate entity, have sustained some special damage. The vindication of the rights of the public in respect of such matters by a resort to equity seems to be the exclusive province of the attorney general or other law officer of the state, though doubtless he may act upon the relation of the municipality.
L.R.A.1916D.

Other remedies; summary process.

It is held in American Furniture Co. v. Batesville (1894) 139 Ind. 77, 38 N. E. 408, that the summary method conferred by statute upon a town for the abatement of a nuisance, being the same as that possessed at common law, does not preclude a resort to the courts. It is insisted in this case that the summary remedy possessed by the town is exclusive of the remedy adopted, and precludes a resort to the courts. In support of this point, counsel cites Storms v. Stevens (1885) 104 Ind. 46, 3 N. E. 401, where it is held that a statute creating a new right, and prescribing the mode of its enforcement, excludes all other remedies. The court stated, however, that the summary abatement of a nuisance was a right which existed at common law in favor of the individual sustaining special injury from such nuisance, and the statute in question but confers that right upon the municipal corporation. It is not a new right. It should be remembered, also, that it is by proceedings ad rem, and not in personam, for herein lies a distinction in the proceeding here in review. "The power extended to towns does not permit proceedings in personam and in the nature of civil actions, which affect particular persons, but, like other corporate powers, must be exercised by and through ordinances general in their character, and affecting alike all the property or all the business of all the citizens under like conditions, occupying like situations, and conducted in like manner. Plymouth v. Schultheis (1893) 135 Ind. 339, 35 N. E. 12."

In Cheek v. Aurora (1883) 92 Ind. 107, the city threatened to abate an obstruction of a street as a nuisance, and the owner of the obstruction instituted suit to enjoin the city from its threatened action; the city, by cross complaint, sought to declare the obstruction a nuisance, and prayed that as such it be abated and the owner enjoined. Upon such cross complaint the city succeeded, and objection was made that the remedy afforded by the statute enabled the city to abate the nuisance, and excluded any remedy by the court. The court stated that where, by its charter or constituent act, a municipality has the usual control and supervision of the streets and public places, it may, in its corporate name, institute judicial proceedings to prevent or remove obstructions thereon. And it is further said that the city might have resorted in the first instance to an independent action, seeking the relief obtained in this suit; and the facts which, in such independent action, would have entitled the city to such relief, constituted proper ground of counterclaim in this action. See BILLINGS HOTEL Co. v. ENID, ante, 1016.

A city may, in behalf of the public, maintain a suit in equity to compel the removal of structures, namely, steps, coping, and area constructed on a public street in violation of an ordinance, and constituting a public nuisance, although the ordinance provides for a penalty for its violation. New York v. Knickerbocker Trust Co. (1905) 104 App. Div. 223, 93 N. Y. Supp. 937, 16 N. Y. Anno. Cas. 347, the question not being discussed in later hearings. (1906) 52 Misc. 222, 102 N. Y. Supp. 900, and (1907) 121 App. Div. 740, 106 N. Y. Supp. 506.

So, a municipality may maintain an action in equity to abate a public nuisance consisting of an open areaway extending into a public street, although the municipal ordinances provide a penalty for such encroachment, and the city may have an action at law for the penalty, the rule being that where there is an obstruction or encroachment of a permanent nature upon a public highway, and particularly where it is of long standing and a right to maintain it is asserted, a court of equity will entertain jurisdiction, and that is the more orderly way for the municipality to proceed. New York v. De Peyster (1907) 120 App. Div. 762, 105 N. Y. Supp. 612, affirmed without opinion in (1907) 190 N. Y. 547, 83 N. E. 1123.

So it is held in Elkins v. Donohoe (1914) 74 W. Va. 335, 81 S. E. 1130, that although a city has by charter plenary power to control its streets and alleys, to keep them clean and free from obstruction, to declare and abate nuisances thereon, and for this purpose to pass and enforce all necessary ordinances and resolutions, it may maintain a suit in equity to enjoin and abate as a nuisance a fence inclosing a portion of its principal streets, and the projection of an outhouse beyond the street line.

Highways.

As intimated at the beginning of the note, it is not always possible to determine whether the cases which uphold the right of the municipality to maintain a suit to enjoin or abate a nuisance affecting a street or highway rest upon the broad ground that the municipality is the representative pro hac vice of the public with respect to matters confided to it, or upon the narrower ground that the municipality may be held liable for the injuries caused by the nuisance, and so suffers a special damage which enables it to maintain the bill on principles applicable to a private nuisance. For cases adopting the first theory, see note in 51 L.R.A. 657-661; also the following cases.

Thus, a municipality, under a statute which empowers any municipality to enforce within its limits, "local, police, sanitary, and other regulations," may maintain a suit to require the owner of a ditch constituting a public nuisance in a street to change its construction so as not to endanger the public safety, or to interfere with the free and unobstructed use of the street, the easement for the ditch being subordinate to the public easement. Santa Ana v. Santa Ana Valley Irrig. Co. (1912) 163 Cal. 211, 124 Pac. 847.

So it is held in Sierra County v. Butler (1902) 136 Cal. 547, 69 Pac. 418, that a county may maintain a suit in equity to enjoin as a public nuisance the running of water from a mine over a highway, the obstruction which the statute provides the road overseer shall bring an action to abate being an obstruction by some physical object such as a building, fence, or the like. The court said: "The county is a body politic whose powers are exercised by the board of supervisors, and among the duties of the board is that of laying out, maintaining, controlling and managing public highways, and an injury to a public highway is an injury to the county in its corporate capacity. The county has a special interest in the preservation of county roads, which authorizes it to resort to such remedial measures as will preserve these highways to the free and unobstructed use of the public."

It is stated in Pana v. Central Washed Coal Co. (1913) 260 Ill. 111, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 244, 102 N. E. 992, that a municipal corporation, in the exercise of power granted to it by the state to abate nuisances, may, under proper circumstances, call upon a court of equity for assistance. In this case, however, an injunction was denied on the merits.

The decision in Kansas City v. Burke (1914) 92 Kan. 531, 141 Pac. 562, rehearing denied in (1914) 93 Kan. 236, 144 Pac. 193, is to the effect that a city may maintain an action to permanently enjoin the obstruction of a public street. As to the contention that injunction was not the proper remedy, because the sole issue involved was the legality of the road, the court said that the defendants were attempting to erect a building in a traveled street, and injunction has repeatedly been held a proper remedy to prevent such an obstruction. The city rests under statutory obligations to keep its streets unobstructed.

It is stated in Pickrell v. Carlisle (1909) 135 Ky. 126, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 193, 121 S. W. 1029, that it is old and familiar law that the streets, including the pavements of a town, belong to the municipality for the use of the public traveling upon them, for their whole length and width; likewise, that any permanent structure built upon any part of the public streets so as to interfere with their use by the public for travel may be per se a nuisance, and may be abated by the municipality or by the court, at the instance of the town. This was a case, however, restraining by injunction a town from interfering with steps placed upon the sidewalk by a particular individual to afford necessary access to his abutting building.

A township, under the police power given over public highways, may, independent of any charter provision, enjoin a plank road company from using, in the construction of its roadbed, material which will make the roadbed dangerous, unsafe, and impassable with loaded teams. Detroit & E. Pl. Road Co. v. Macomb Circuit Judge (1896) 109 Mich. 371, 67 N. W. 531. The above decision seems to rest upon the theory that the township and its authorities, upon whom is charged the duty of seeing that the road is kept safe for the traveling public, have such an interest in the matter as makes them proper complainants to the bill, and that the remedy provided by statute is not at all adequate.

A village whose streets and public grounds have been by law placed under the control of its authorities, who are given power to prevent the encumbering or obstructing of the same, may maintain an action to enjoin the erection of a building for private use on public ground. Buffalo v. Harling (1892) 50 Minn. 551, 52 N. W. 931. In the above case the court observed that if the village had no authority save such as is to be implied from the fact of its incorporation as a village, it is probable that it would have no right to maintain an action of this kind. But if the village was organized under the general village law, or under a special charter, which, as does the Law of 1885, places the street and public grounds under the control of the village authorities, and authorizes them to prevent the encumbering or obstructing of the same, such an action would be maintainable to prevent the public nuisance. Citing Pine City v. Munch (1890) 42 Minn. 342, 6 L.R.A. 763, 44 N. W. 197, cited in earlier note in 51 L.R.A. 660.

So, a municipality whose public streets and grounds have been placed under the control of its common council or other officers may maintain an action to abate a nuisance therein and to enjoin its maintenance (inclosure of portion of public street and highway by fence). Jordan v. Leonard (1912) 119 Minn. 162, 137 N. W. 740.

The mayor and common council of a city, being charged with the duty of keeping the streets of a city in a condition fit for safe and convenient use, are the proper persons to file a bill to prevent either the obstruction or destruction of a street. Newark v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1886) 42 N. J. Eq. 196, 7 Atl. 123 (application for injunction to restrain railroad company from using four railroad tracks in a certain city street).

It is held in Oxford v. Willoughby (1905) 181 N. Y. 155, 73 N. E. 677, affirming (1903) 87 App. Div. 609, 83 N. Y. Supp. 1118, that a village may maintain an action to enjoin an encroachment on a public street, under a statute conferring on highway commissioners the right to maintain such an action in the name of the town. In this case an addition to a building encroached on a public street and constituted a public nuisance.

It is held in Hempstead v. Ball Electric Light Co. (1896) 9 App. Div. 48, 75 N. Y. S. R. 582, 41 N. Y. Supp. 124, that the highway and village laws, taken together, authorize the trustees of a village in its name to maintain an action to compel the removal of electric light lamps, poles, and wires constituting an unlawful obstruction in a highway, and amounting to a public nuisance.

Lamoure v. Lasell (1914) 26 N. D. 638, 145 N. W. 577, holds that a municipality is regarded as the representative of the public for the purpose of maintaining suits in equity or at law for the vindication of public rights; hence, the city is a proper party plaintiff in an action to cancel an attempted vacation of a part of the plat of an addition to the city, and to enjoin the fencing and obstruction of streets therein by the party so attempting to vacate by declaration of vacation.

A municipal corporation may maintain a bill to restrain a purpresture without joinder of the commonwealth. Philadelphia v. Crump (1866) 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 320 (wall of building encroaching upon street). In the above case the court quotes the words of Woodward, Ch. J. in Philadelphia v. Lombard & S. Streets Pass. R. Co. (1863) 3 Grant. Cas. (Pa.) 404, as follows: "One of the most obvious purposes for which the city was chartered was the police of the streets. To maintain and preserve them as public highways, the power of taxation was conferred upon the municipality, and it has been largely exercised. Every property holder has a direct and vested interest in the maintenance of this municipal authority over the streets."

In Cheraw v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (1911) 88 S. C. 480, 71 S. E. 40, an action by a town to enjoin a railway company from obstructing a certain street by a sidetrack across the same, the court says that the obstruction of a public street is a public nuisance, and the remedy is by indictment unless the person instituting proceedings on the civil side of the court can show special or peculiar damages, differing in kind from those to which all others in common with him are exposed. But a municipality, because of its peculiar duties and liabilities in reference to the maintenance of its streets for public use, may bring a civil action to prevent or remove a threatened or continued obstruction constituting a nuisance.

So, while a municipality does not own the highways within its limits, the duties and liabilities imposed upon it in respect to highways are such as to make it a proper party to maintain an action in equity to restrain the obstruction of a street by the construction of a piazza. Montpelier v. McMahon (1911) 85 Vt. 275, 81 Atl. 977.

A village may maintain an action to enjoin the unlawful excavation of trenches and laying of water pipes in its streets. Waukesha Hygeia Mineral Spring Co. v. Waukesha (1892) 83 Wis. 475, 53 N. W. 675. In the above case the court states that the reason is that such unlawful interference with the streets puts them out of repair and almost necessarily increases for the time being the liability of injury to persons and property of travelers thereon because of such defective condition. The village, being responsible for injuries caused by defects in the streets, and being charged by law with the duty of keeping them in repair, has such an interest in the streets that it may maintain actions to prevent any unlawful injury to them.

So; a town may bring an action in equity for an injunction restraining the obstruction of a public highway, with logs, timbers, trees, etc. Neshkoro v. Nest (1893) 85 Wis. 126, 55 N. W. 176.

So, a city may maintain an action in equity to obtain a mandatory injunction compelling a lot owner to remove certain buildings which encroach upon a public street and obstruct a public alley. Eau Claire v. Matzke (1893) 86 Wis. 291, 39 Am. St. Rep. 900, 56 N. W. 874.

It is held, in Selkirk v. Selkirk Electric Light Co. (1910) 20 Manitoba, L. R. 461, that a town is entitled to maintain a suit in equity for the removal of poles and wires without making the attorney general a party thereto, the court saying that, taking into consideration the duties of the municipalities with respect to their streets and highways, and the responsibilities cast upon them, it is within their power, without the intervention of the attorney general, to protect their streets, and guard against the liabilities which they might incur through improper and irregular use of them. Citing Saugeen v. Church Soc. (1858) 6 Grant, Ch. (N. C.) 538; Vespra Twp. v. Cook (1876) 26 U. C. C. P. 189; Fenelon Falls v. Victoria R. Co. (1881) 29 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 4.

In British Columbia however, a municipality is not entitled to bring an action to redress the public wrong done by obstructing a highway; such an action can be brought only by the attorney general. Delta v. Vancouver, V. & E. R. & Nav. Co. (1908) 14 B. C. 83; Hope v. Surrey (1914) 29 West. L. R. (Can.) 525, 20 D. L. R. 540, 7 W. W. R. 175.

So, in Delta v. Vancouver, V. & E. R. & Nav. Co. (B. C.) supra, an action for injunction to restrain a railway company from closing up or interfering with a road, the trial judge, in denying the right of the municipality to maintain the action, said: "I do not overlook the line of authority of which Atty. Gen. v. Logan [1891] 2 Q. B. (Eng.) 100, 65 L. T. N. S. 162, 55 J. P. 615, and Wednesbury v. Lodge Hole Colliery Co. [1907] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 78, 76 L. J. K. B. N. S. 68, 71 J. P. 73, 95 L. T. N. S. 815, 23 Times, L. R. 880, 5 L. G. R. 43, may be noted, that for an injury done to a proprietary right vested in a municipality or local board, the municipality or local board may seek redress in its own name; nor the argument of counsel for the plaintiff municipality that the 'possession' of the highway in question here, which, by § 242 of the municipal clauses act (B. C. Stat. 1906 chap. 32), is 'vested in the municipality,' is a proprietary right within the meaning of the cases, for an invasion of which right the plaintiff municipality can sue. One short answer to this argument is that this action is avowedly for a public wrong, and not for an invasion of the plaintiff municipality's possession. It is, perhaps, unnecessary for the determination of this case to attempt to define what is covered by the word 'possession' in the section in question. Does it mean more than the expression 'control and management,' found in other similar acts? Suffice it to say that, in my opinion, it is a 'possession' subject to the public right to pass and repass (see Hickman v. Maissey [1900] 1 Q. B. (Eng.) 752, 69 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 511, 48 Week. Rep. 385, 82 L. T. N. S. 321, 16 Times, L. R. 274; and it is for an obstruction to this public right that this action is, as I have said, avowedly brought. I take it to be settled law that, for an obstruction to a public highway, the only remedy open to the public is by indictment or information at the suit of the attorney general, the recognized embodiment, in that behalf, of the public. To radically change this law so as to substitute another person or body for the attorney general in such cases would, I think, require clearer language than is to be found in § 242, above mentioned. If, indeed, the obstruction works to some particular person a special, peculiar injury, different in kind, and not merely in degree, from that suffered by the general public, such particular person may seek redress in his own name, alleging and proving the special, peculiar injury. See Harvey v. British Columbia Boat & Engine Co. (1908) 14 B. C. 121. No such exceptional case is put forward here."

Waters.

It is stated in Yolo County v. Sacramento (1868) 36 Cal. 193, that if a dam is an obstruction to navigation, it is so far a public nuisance, for which a county cannot have a private action; it is otherwise, however, where it obstructs the reclamation of swamp lands, since it then becomes a private nuisance, doing special damage to the county. See also cases in note in 51 L.R.A. 658 and 659.

So it is held in Yuba County v. Kate Hayes Min. Co. (1903) 141 Cal. 360, 74 Pac. 1049, that a county may enjoin the deposit of mining debris into a river and its tributary, the public nuisance becoming to the county, as a property owner, a private nuisance. The county is not suing to protect the rights of others, but purely in its proprietary capacity, as the owner of certain real property.

It was held in Sioux City v. Simmons Hardware Co. (1911) 151 Iowa, 334, 129 N. W. 978 (rehearing denied and judgment modified in (1911) 151 Iowa, 344, 131 N. W. 17), that a city is the proper party plaintiff to complain of the improper obstruction of a stream by a building; the court observing that the city has the right, not merely as a private property owner, but in behalf of the public, to cause the abatement of the obstruction in a stream, the consequence of which is to damage or reasonably threaten injury to neighboring property. See also Waterloo v. Waterloo, C. F. & N. R. Co. (1910) 149 Iowa, 129, 125 N. W. 819, where an obstruction of a division of a river, constituting a public nuisance, is held abatable at the suit of the city.

It is held in Madison v. Mayers (1897) 97 Wis. 399, 40 L.R.A. 635, 65 Am. St. Rep. 127, 73 N. W. 43, that the charter power to make general police regulations for the benefit of trade and commerce, and to provide for the abatement and removal of nuisances, will not authorize the city to maintain a suit to enjoin the filling up of a lake shore along, but outside, the limits of a public street. We are clearly of the opinion, observes the court, that the city has no such interest or right in the lake or the waters thereof outside of the limits of the street as to enjoin the defendant from the act complained of. In such a case the right of the city to remove such a purpresture or public nuisance is no greater than that of an individual, and this court has expressly held that an individual could not remove the same.

In Exeter v. Devon (1870) L. R. 10 Eq. (Eng.) 232, 23 L. T. N. S. 382, 18 Week. Rep. 878, involving the right of a city to file a bill in equity to restrain the erection of a pier in a river, it is stated that when a public nuisance is made, it may be abated by a suit, but it must be by the attorney general as informant, either ex officio or at the relation of some person; the court observing, however, that the pier was not complained of as a public nuisance, but solely as being a private injury to the corporation.

Nuisance affecting health.

A municipal corporation, through its proper officers, is a proper party and has the right, in a court of chancery, to seek the abatement of that which is a public nuisance. Lonoke v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1909) 92 Ark. 546, 135 Am. St. Rep. 200, 123 S. W. 395 (freight depot, platform, and other structures found not to be a public nuisance, as being injurious to health, as increasing the hazard by fire, and as making a crossing dangerous to people using it). See also cases in note in 51 L.R.A. 662.

So, under the corporate and general powers conferred by statute upon cities of the second class and villages, it is held in Kenesaw v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1912) 91 Neb. 619, 136 N. W. 990, that a village has a right to maintain an action in equity to enjoin the maintenance and continuance of a public nuisance (maintenance of stock yards). It is contended in this case that the village is given express authority to deal with the subject of nuisances by ordinances, and is not given any right to sue, and the case of Ottumwa v. Chinn, set out in the earlier note on page 658, is cited as upholding this argument. The court, however, observed that it was not impressed with the doctrine announced in that case, and was of the opinion that, under the corporate and general powers conferred by statute, it was entirely proper to obtain the judgment of a court of equity as to whether or not a public nuisance existed, and its aid to abate the same if one existed. The court went on to say that the supreme court of Minnesota, in holding, in the case of Red Wing v. Guptil, also set out in the earlier note, that "a city authorized by its charter to abate or compel the abatement of public nuisances has power to compel the abatement of a nuisance affecting the comfort or convenience of the public, . . . and therefore it may maintain an equitable action to aid in compelling an abatement of such nuisance," announces a sounder and better rule.

It has been held, however, that a town cannot enjoin an establishment as a public nuisance without showing that it, in its corporate capacity, has suffered damage of a special nature. Winthrop v. New England Chocolate Co. (1902) 180 Mass. 464, 62 N. E. 969 (offensive trade). See also cases in note in 51 L.R.A. 658 and 659.

So, it is held in Belleville Twp. v. Orange (1905) 70 N. J. Eq. 244, 62 Atl. 331, affirmed without opinion in (1907) 71 N. J. Eq. 775, 65 Atl. 1117, that a township not charged with duties relating to public health, and not suffering any injury to its property rights, cannot enjoin a public nuisance on the ground of a breach of contract, unless the legislature has authorized the township to make a contract for that purpose, such power to protect public rights being vested in the attorney general; that where a township contracted with a city, without legislative authority, that the city, as a part of the construction of a sewer to tide water, through the streets of the township, should maintain in another municipality a tidal collection chamber to be operated in a certain manner, the township did not thereby acquire the right to compel specific performance of that portion of the contract regulating the use of such chamber, for the sole purpose of the protection of the common public rights against public nuisances.

Moving picture show.

Under statute conferring express power upon the commissioner of public safety of cities of the second class to maintain actions to restrain nuisances, it was held in Hamlin v. Bender (1915) 92 Misc. 16, 155 N. Y. Supp. 963, that the commissioner could bring an action to enjoin as a public nuisance the operation of a moving picture theater on Sunday, near a church, the court stating that the commissioner represents the people for the purpose of such an action, and may bring and prosecute any action that could otherwise be maintained in their name.

Liquor nuisance.

A city, acting for the welfare of the people, may bring an action in equity to restrain the carrying on of a liquor business, which is a public nuisance under the statute. Kirkland v. Ferry (1907) 45 Wash. 663, 88 Pac. 1123.

So, it is held in American Falls v. West (1914) 26 Idaho, 301, 142 Pac. 42, that a village may bring suit in the district court to secure the removal and abatement of a public nuisance causing special injury to the rights, morals, or interest of such village, although such nuisance, namely, the running of a saloon, is outside of the village limits. A village, observed the court, is a corporate entity, with a right to sue in a proper court, if necessary, to protect or secure its rights. Such a village is a municipal corporation created to assist in the civil government of its people and the territory within its limits. It has the power and duty of preserving the health and protecting the personal rights, morals, and property of its inhabitants, and, as an effective means of doing so, such village may bring an action in the district court in order to secure the removal and abatement of a public nuisance causing special injury to the rights, morals, or interests to such village. If the people within a village, in their aggregate capacity, are specially injured by a public nuisance, such village is directly interested in having such nuisance abated. And while a village itself might abate a nuisance within its limits, in order to abate a public nuisance outside its boundaries it is probably necessary and undoubtedly proper for it to apply to a court of equity for aid in protecting it from such harmful influence.

BILLINGS HOTEL CO. v. ENID, ante, 1016, is distinguishable from these cases because of the provisions for abatement of such nuisance by summary process.

Fires.

The court in Houlton v. Titcomb

(1906) 102 Me. 272, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 580, 120 Am. St. Rep. 492, 66 Atl. 733, holds that since the prevention of fire is a matter which the state has confided to towns, a town may maintain a bill in equity to enjoin the violation of an ordinance forbidding the construction of wooden buildings within the fire limits. See also 51 L.R.A. 663.

In holding, however, that an injunction would not lie to restrain the building of a wooden house within the fire limits of a village, in violation of a village ordinance, the court, in New Rochelle v. Lang (1894) 75 Hun, 608, 27 N. Y. Supp. 600, said that even if the act were a nuisance, the remedy would be by indictment or in equity only at the suit of the people, or of some private person who alleged special damages.

J. D. C.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, NINTH CIRCUIT.

ÆTNA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.,

v.

PORTLAND GAS & COKE COMPANY.

(229 Fed. 552.)

Insurance — indemnity — injury from typhoid fever.

Damages which an employer is compelled to pay because of typhoid fever contracted by his employees from water furnished them to drink arise out of bodily injuries accidentally inflicted, within the meaning of a policy insuring the employer against liability for such damages.

For other cases, see Insurance, VIII. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 7, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the District of Oregon, Robert S. Bean, Judge, to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on an employers' indemnity policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Gilbert and Ross, Circuit Judges, and Rudkin, District Judge.

Messrs. Senn, Ekwall, & Recken, for plaintiff in error:

Note.—For injuries covered by employers' indemnity policy, see notes to H. P. Hood & Sons v. Maryland Casualty Co. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1192, and May Creek Logging Co. v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co. L.R.A. 1915C, 155. L.R.A.1916D.

Typhoid fever contracted from drinking water is not a bodily injury accidentally suffered.

1 Bradbury, Workmen's Compensation, pp. 339, 358; Adams v. Acme White Lead & Color Works, 182 Mich. 157, L.R.A.1916A, 283, 148 N. W. 485, 6 N. C. C. A. 482; McCoy v. Michigan Screw Co. 180 Mich 454, L.R.A.1916A, 323, 147 N. W. 572, 5 N. C. C. A. 455; Lickleider v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Asso. — Iowa, —, 151 N. W. 479; Wright v. Order of United Commercial Travelers, 188 Mo. App. 457, 174 S. W. 833; Lehman v. Great Western Acci. Asso. 155 Iowa, 737, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 562, 133 N. W. 752; Shanberg v. Fidelity & C. Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1206, 85 C. C. A. 343, 158 Fed. 1; Bacon v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. (Stedman v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso.) 123 N. Y. 304, 9 L.R.A. 617, 20 Am. St. Rep. 748, 25 N. E. 399; Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. McNulty, 85 C. C. A. 22, 157 Fed. 224; Dozier v. Fidelity & C. Co. 13 L.R.A. 114, 46 Fed. 446; Smith v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 219 Mass. 147, L.R.A.1915B, 872, 106 N. E. 607; Appel v. Ætina L. Ins. Co. 86 App. Div. 83, 83 N. Y. Supp. 238.

Messrs. John A. Laing and H. W. Strong, for defendant in error:

The expenses incurred by plaintiff were within the scope of its indemnity policy with defendant, and the judgment of the district court should be affirmed.

Fuller, Acci. & Employers' Liability Ins. 1913, 445; Brintons v. Turvey [1905] A. C. 230, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 474, 53 Week. Rep. 641, 92 L. T. N. S. 578, 21 Times L. R. 444, 2 Ann. Cas. 137; Western Commercial Travelers' Asso. v. Smith, 40 L.R.A.

653, 29 C. C. A. 223, 56 U. S. App. 393, 85 Fed. 401; United States Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 755; Columbia Paper Stock Co. v. Fidelity & C. Co. 104 Mo. App. 157, 78 S. W. 320; H. B. Hood & Sons v. Maryland Casualty Co. 206 Mass. 223, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1192, 138 Am. St. Rep. 379, 92 N. E. 329; Fenton v. Fidelity & C. Co. 36 Or. 283, 48 L.R.A. 770, 56 Pac. 1096; Tillamook Lumbering Co. v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 175 Fed. 508, affirmed in 101 C. C. A. 481, 178 Fed. 161, 21 Ann. Cas. 844; Railway Mail Asso. v. Dent, L.R.A. 1915A, 314, 130 C.C.A. 387, 213 Fed. 981.

Ross, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error, gas & coke company, being engaged in the construction of a gas plant on its property adjoining the government moorings in Multnomah county, Oregon, and having employed in the work a large number of men, secured from the plaintiff in error, insurance company, a policy entitled by the latter "Contractor's Employers' Liability Policy," by which, in consideration of certain premiums which the case shows the defendant in error paid, it agreed to indemnify the assured (within certain amounts within which the present case falls) against loss and expense arising or resulting from claims upon the assured for damages on account of bodily injuries or death accidentally suffered, or alleged to have been suffered, by an employee or employees of the assured by reason of the business as described and conducted at the locations named in the policy, with certain exceptions not applicable here. In the course of the work certain of the employees of the gas & coke company contracted typhoid fever from the water furnished them by the latter, on account of which that company was compelled to pay damages to such injured employees, to recover the aggregate amount of which from the insurance company the present action was brought. And the sole point here presented is whether the harm so done to the workmen constituted a bodily injury accidentally received or suffered by them, within the meaning of the policy in question.

Of course it is not and cannot be doubted that the workmen were bodily injured by the drinking of the water in the course of the work, for it contained typhoid germs which gave them typhoid fever; but it is insisted on the part of the plaintiff in error that in drinking the water they were but satisfying a natural want, and that in doing so there was no accident about it. It is readily conceded, of course, that there could be no accident in merely drinking water; but it is just as certain that the men would not have drunk it, had they known that the water contained typhoid germs. The accident consists in that unexpected happening. Among the definitions of the word "accidental," in most, if not in all, of the dictionaries, is the happening of "something unexpectedly, unintentionally." Suppose, instead of containing typhoid germs, as in the present case, the water that the employees of the assured consumed had contained some of the most virulent poisons, would anyone contend that the injuries resulting therefrom could not be properly held to have been accidentally inflicted? We think not, and yet, in our opinion, there is no substantial distinction between the case supposed and the case at bar.

The policy involved in the case of H. P. Hood & Sons v. Maryland Casualty Co. 206 Mass. 223, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1192, 138 Am. St. Rep. 379, 92 N. E. 329, was similar to that involved in the present case. There one Barry, who was employed by the plaintiff in that action as a hostler in its stables, had the care of horses which were afterwards found to have been suffering from glanders, and Barry was directed to assist in clearing up the stalls; no notice being given him that the horses had suffered from glanders. Subsequently he was attacked by that disease, and recovered judgment against the assured in that case for damages, which the assured paid, and sued the insurance company to recover the amount so paid, with costs and expenses of suit. In the course of its opinion the court said, among other things: "The policy is entitled 'Manufacturer's Employers' Liability Policy.' The contract which it contains is one of indemnity, in which the defendant engages to make good to the plaintiff any loss or damage which it may sustain by reason of its liability to its employees for bodily injuries accidentally suffered by them while engaged in doing the work which they were employed to do. It is a kind of insurance that has grown out of modern industrial and business conditions, and it is intended to afford full protection to employers in all cases where their employees have accidentally received bodily injuries for which they are liable. It also accomplishes the economic result, with which, however, we have nothing to do, of distributing more or less widely some of the loss or damage which falls on those engaged in industrial occupations. It is to be noted that the policy does not contain the words 'violent and external,' in addition to the word 'accidental,' as is the case in many, if not most, accident policies. The insurance is liability insurance, so called, and not insurance against accidents. The liability insured against is that 'imposed by law upon the assured for damages on account of bodily injuries or death accidentally suffered . . . by any employee.' Although the policy contains many conditions, there is no limitation or exception in regard to the kind or nature or cause of the accidents out of which the liability insured against may arise. The fact that the accident may have been occasioned through negligence on the part of the insured is therefore immaterial."

After alluding to the fact that Barry suffered bodily injury in consequence of becoming infected with glanders, as much so as if he had had a leg or an arm broken by a kick from a vicious horse, the court further said: "Was the injury brought about accidentally, within the fair scope and meaning of the policy, or was it the result of disease contracted while in the employ of the plaintiff, but for which the defendant is not liable? It is clear, we think, that the infection which caused the disease from which Barry suffered was due to accident. It was in the nature of an accident that he was set to work upon or cleaning up after horses that had glanders, and it was in the nature of an accident that he became infected with the disease. The language used by Mathew, L. J., in Higgins v. Campbell & Harrison and Turvey v. Brintons [1904] 1 K. B. 328, 337, where the judgment of the court of appeal was sustained by the House of Lords (Brintons v. Turvey [1905] A. C. 230, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 474, 53 Week. Rep. 641, 92 L. T. N. S. 578, 21 Times L. R. 444, 2 Ann. Cas. 137), though there was a vigorous dissent by Lord Robertson, is appropriate here: 'It was an accident that the workman, in dealing with the wool, was brought in contact with that which might infect him with this disease of anthrax, and it was a further accident that the disease attacked him.' If the disease was the result of an accident, then we do not see why it does not follow that the bodily injury which Barry suffered as the result of the disease was not accidentally suffered, nor why the case does not come within the terms of the policy. The language is 'bodily injuries accidentally suffered.' It hardly could be broader. The intention is, as has been said, to afford full protection and indemnity to the assured. Any accident that causes bodily injury in any way is included. Bodily injury is more commonly associated, perhaps, with physical force of some sort, but in the absence of anything in the policy limiting it to that we do not see how or why it can or should be so restricted. A liability growing out of an accident which results in infecting the workman with a loathsome and dangerous disease, and thereby causes him great and perhaps lasting physical injury, would seem to be as much within the spirit and intent of the contract as if the injury had been caused by a blow or some other equally obvious manifestation of force."

Numerous other cases will be found cited by the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts in the case referred to, in support of its ruling, which we think, as did that court, rest upon sound principles.

The judgment is affirmed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

JOEL S. NICHOLSON, Appt.,
v.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FÉ HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION.

(97 Kan. 480, 155 Pac. 920.)

Charity — negligence — liability.

1. Charitable associations conducting hospitals are not liable for the negligence of their physicians and attendants resulting in injury to patients, unless it is shown that the association maintaining the hospital has not exercised reasonable care in the employment of its physicians and attendants.

For other cases, see Charities, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — hospital — absence of care.

2. The foregoing rule is applied in an action by the father of a deceased employee of a railroad company against a hospital association for the neglect of its physicians and attendants in failing to give the son suitable care and attention, where it appears that the defendant is an association maintained by the railroad company for the treatment of its employees while sick, and is supported by the monthly contributions of all its employees, who, so long as they

Headnotes by PORTER, J.

Note. — The liability for negligence of attendants furnished by relief department toward which employees contribute is discussed in the notes to Phillips v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1167; Texas C. R. Co. v. Zumwalt, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1207; and Nations v. Ludington, W. & V. S. Lumber Co. 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 531.

Generally, as to duty and liability of one other than a physician or surgeon, who contracts to provide medical or surgical attention to another, see note to Youngstown Park & F. Street R. Co. v. Kessler, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 50.

As to liability of master for negligence of physician or surgeon furnished at the master's expense to attend servant, see note in 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 66 et seq., and supplemental remain in the service of the railroad company and contribute to the fund, are entitled to the benefits of the hospital free of charge.

For other cases, see Charities, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Pleading — absence of allegation.

3. In such an action, a petition which fails to allege that the defendant did not exercise reasonable care in the selection of its physicians and attendants is subject to demurrer.

For other cases, see Pleading, II. j; VII. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 11, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Shawnee County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent failure of the physicians and attendants of the defendant association to give plaintiff's son proper medical care and attention. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. B. Forrest and Edwin L. O'Neill, for appellant:

Institutions and corporations conducted for profit are liable for negligence and torts under the principles and rules of law generally applicable to such conditions.

Babb v. Reed, 5 Rawle, 151, 28 Am. Dec. 650; Donnelly v. Boston Catholic Cemetery Asso. 146 Mass. 163, 15 N. E. 505; Chapin v. Holyoke Y. M. C. A. 165 Mass. 280, 42 N. E. 1130; Coe v. Washington Mills, 149 Mass. 543, 21 N. E. 966; Brown v. La Societe Francaise, 138 Cal. 475, 71 Pac. 516, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 251.

Messrs. William R. Smith, Owen J. Wood, and Alfred A. Scott, for appellee:

There being no allegation in the petition that the defendant was negligent in the employment of the physicians or nurses who attended the deceased, there can be no recovery.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Zeiler, 54 Kan. 340, 38 Pac. 282; Duncan v. Nebraska Sanitarium & Benev. Asso. 92 Neb. 162, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 973, 137 N. W. 1120, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1127; Laubheim v. De Koninglyke Nederlandsche S. B. Maatschappij, 107 N. Y. 228, 1 Am. St. Rep. 815, 13 N. E. 781; Quinn v. Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. 94 Tenn. 713, 28 L.R.A. 552, 45 Am. St. Rep. 767, 30 S. W. 1036.

note to Jones v. Tri-State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 486.

Generally, as to the liability of charitable institutions, including hospitals, for personal injuries, see notes to Farrigan v. Pevear, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481; Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 74; Thornton v. Franklin Square House, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) L.R.A.1916D.

Porter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this case the father of a deceased employee of a railroad company is suing a hospital association for neglect of its physicians and attendants in not giving to the son suitable care and attention. The defendant is an association maintained by the railroad company for the treatment of its employees while sick, and is supported by the monthly contributions of all its employees; and, so long as they continue in the employ of the railroad company, contributors to the fund are entitled to medical aid, surgical attendance, and medicines free of charge. The petition alleges that plaintiff's son became ill at his boarding house in Topeka while in the employ of the railroad company, and was being cared for and treated there by competent physicians; that while in that condition he was removed, against his protest, to the hospital by the agent of the company; that they carried him from a warm, comfortable room into the outer air, and failed to protect his person from the cold; that he became chilled and suffered an attack of pneumonia from the effects of which he died. It is further alleged that after his removal to the hospital the defendant wholly failed to give him medical treatment and professional care during his illness; that he was taken to what is known as the convalescent ward of the hospital, where the windows were kept open, subjecting him to drafts of cold air without sufficient bed covering; that no stethoscope was used to discover the condition of his lungs, and no effort was made by any of the physicians, servants, or attendants of defendant to determine his condition until a few hours before his death. It is alleged that his death was the result of these acts of negligence on the part of the association by its physicians and attendants. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the petition. Plaintiff elected to stand upon his petition, and appeals.

All contributors to the fund by which the association is maintained are entitled, so long as they remain in the employ of the railroad company, to the benefits of the hospital. They may, in case of accident, sickness, or disease of any kind, be taken to the hospital, where they are given, free of all expense, such medical or surgical care and attention as may be necessary. The institution is maintained for the mutual benefit of the contributors to the fund, and in no sense is it maintained for profit. Its liability to a patient for injuries resulting from negligent failure of the physicians and attendants in its employ properly to care for the patient must be determined upon the same principles of law which govern similar actions against eleemosynary or charitable associations conducting hospitals. The rule seems fairly well established that charitable associations conducting hospitals are not liable for the negligence of their physicians and attendants resulting in injury to patients unless it is shown that the association maintaining the hospital has not exercised reasonable care in the employment of its servants and physicians. This rule has been applied to a case where the patient who claimed to have been injured occupied a room in a building maintained in part by donations, notwithstanding she paid full compensation for her own care and treatment. Duncan v. Nebraska Sanitarium & Benev. Asso. 92 Neb. 162, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 973, 137 N. W. 1120, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1127.

486; Hordern v. Salvation Army, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 62; Basabo v. Salvation Army, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1144; and Schloendorff v. Society of New York Hospital, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 505; and see also later case, Tucker v. Mobile Infirmary Asso. L.R.A.1915D, 1167.

On the other hand it was held that where a railroad company maintained a hospital under the same plan as in the present case, but made each year a profit of several thousand dollars, which went to the credit of the railroad company, it was liable for the negligence of its hospital employees. Texas & P. Coal Co. v. Connaughten, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 642, 50 S. W. 173.

A case more directly in point is Union P. R. Co. v. Artist, 23 L.R.A. 581, 9 C. C. A. 14, 19 U. S. App. 612, 60 Fed. 365. The action there was sought to be maintained against the railroad company. It was held that if the company had used reasonable care in the selection of its physicians and attendants, that was all the law required of it. This court in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Zeiler, 54 Kan. 340, 38 Pac. 282, approved the doctrine of the Artist Case, supra, so far as it applies to the duties and liabilities of a railroad company in calling a physician or surgeon to care for an injured employee or passenger. In the opinion the court said: "The law is well settled that a railroad company, having used reasonable care in his selection, is not chargeable with the want of skill in a physician or surgeon whom it calls for a passenger or injured employee, and this is so even where the law requires a steamship company transporting immigrant passengers to carry a physician. O'Brien v. Cunard S. S. Co. 154 Mass. 272, 13 L.R.A. 329, 28 N. E. 266; Laubheim v. De Koninglyke Nederlandsche S. B. Maatschappij, 107 L.R.A. 1916D.

N. Y. 228, 1 Am. St. Rep. 815, 13 N. E. 781; Secord v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (C. C.) 5 McCrary, 515, 18 Fed. 221; Union P. R. Co. v. Artist, supra." (p. 350)

In the present case the petition does not state that the hospital association failed to use reasonable care in this respect. Plaintiff attempts to avoid the necessity of such an allegation by insisting that it makes no difference how skilled or efficient the servants and physicians of defendant may have been, for the reason that he seeks only to recover for the failure of the physicians and servants to give his son treatment of any kind. But this is a narrow contention, in view of all that is said in the petition. The names of several physicians in the employ of the association are given in the petition. It is said that plaintiff's son was taken there while sick, that the physicians and attendants in the employ of the defendant neglected him, and that from the neglect his death resulted. There is a complaint that a stethoscope was not used to determine the nature of the disease or the condition of the patient's lungs. The whole petition, taken together, shows that plaintiff is attempting to recover damages for the negligence of the physicians and attendants who are said to be employees of the defendant, in their failure to give to his son proper medical care and attention. Of course it is not claimed that the physicians neglected the patient intentionally or maliciously; all that is claimed is that the physicians and attendants at the hospital neglected to give him proper medical attention in time to prevent his death.

Under the authorities cited, as well as by the weight of reason, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover on the facts stated. Suits of this nature against associations not established for profit, but for the purpose of mutual benefit, ought not, for reasons of sound public policy, to be encouraged. Employers of large numbers of workmen should be encouraged to establish institutions of this kind for the mutual benefit of their employees. It is well known that the employees of the railroad company are entitled to medical and surgical care in the hospital, regardless of the nature of their employment or the cause or occasion of their sickness. Doubtless in many instances employees are enabled to avail themselves of these benefits when otherwise, because of their financial condition, they would be unable to obtain necessary medical care and attention.

The judgment, sustaining the demurrer to the petition, is affirmed.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

U. S. TUBBS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

JAMES H. SHEARS.

(— Okla. —, 155 Pac. 549.)

Animals — right to keep vicious dog.

1. The law recognizes a right in the owner of a vicious dog to keep it for the necessary protection of life and property, but one exercising this right does so at his own risk, and is held strictly accountable for any harm resulting to another.

For other cases, see Animals, I. c, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — owner's knowledge — necessity.

2. While the owner of a dog is not liable, in the absence of statutory provision, for any injury it may inflict upon another, unless he has notice of its inclination to commit such injury, the modern and more reasonable doctrine is that he need not have actual notice thereof in order to make him liable.

For other cases, see Animals, I. c, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — notice.

3. Such notice may be either actual or constructive. Knowledge of one attack by a dog is sufficient to charge the owner with liability for all its subsequent acts.

For other cases, see Animals, I. c, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — negligence.

4. Negligence in the ordinary sense is not the ground for liability in an action for damages by a ferocious dog, but the keeping of the dog, with either actual or constructive knowledge of its vicious disposition, fixes liability for injuries which it may inflict.

For other cases, see Animals, I. c, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 15, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court for Cleveland County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injuries inflicted on plaintiff by defendant's dog. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Williams & Luttrell, for plaintiff in error:

It was error to admit incompetent evidence in behalf of plaintiff, over the objection of defendant.

Abbott v. Dingus, 44 Okla. 567, 145 Pac. 365; 6 Enc. Ev. 927; 29 Cyc. 1116; 2 Jones, Headnotes by GALBRAITH, C.

Note. — As to scienter necessary to charge owner with liability for injuries inflicted by dog upon person or property of another, see note to Warrick v. Farley, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 45. L.R.A.1916D.

Ev. § 297 (a); Larzelere v. Starkweather, 38 Mich. 96; Maul v. Rider, 59 Pa. 167; Welch v. Norton, 73 Iowa, 721, 36 N. W. 758.

The owner and keeper of a dog is not charged with the knowledge of the dangerous character of the dog if he, the owner, had knowledge that said dog had bitten or attempted to bite one or more persons.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 584; Cooley, Torts, p. 344; State, Evans, Prosecutor, v. McDermott, 49 N. J. L. 163, 60 Am. Rep. 602, 6 Atl. 653, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 164; Fake v. Addicks, 45 Minn. 37, 22 Am. St. Rep. 716, 47 N. W. 450, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 150; Warner v. Chamberlain, 7 Houst. (Del.) 18, 30 Atl. 638; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilson, 32 Okla. 752, 124 Pac. 326.

In a suit to recover for injuries caused by the bite of a dog, the owner's liability depends upon his knowledge of the animal's vicious propensities, and his negligence in failing to take proper care to prevent it from doing mischief.

Norris v. Warner, 59 Ill. App. 300; Partlow v. Haggarty, 35 Ind. 178.

Messrs. J. B. Dudley, N. E. Sharp, and H. E. Cunningham, for defendant in error:

Defendant had knowledge of the dangerous character of the dog.

Ayers v. Macoughtry, 29 Okla. 399, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 865, 117 Pac. 1088; Emmons v. Stevane, 77 N. J. L. 570, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 458, 73 Atl. 544, 18 Ann. Cas. 812; Grissom v. Hofius, 39 Wash. 51, 80 Pac. 1002, 4 Ann. Cas. 125; Robinson v. Marino, 3 Wash. 434, 28 Am. St. Rep. 50, 28 Pac. 752, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 253; King v. Muldoon, 131 App. Div. 847, 116 N. Y. Supp. 308; Warner v. Chamberlain, 7 Houst. (Del.) 18, 30 Atl. 638; Brice v. Bauer, 108 N. Y. 428, 2 Am. St. Rep. 454, 15 N. E. 695, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 184; Smith v. Pelah, 2 Strange, 1264; Partlow v. Haggarty, 35 Ind. 178; Robinson v. Marino, 3 Wash. 434, 28 Am. St. Rep. 50, 28 Pac. 752, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 253; Wilkinson v. Parrott, 32 Cal. 102, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 58.

A person who allows his animals to be at large where they have no right to be, or who permits them to run in a highway, in violation of a statute prohibiting them from running at large therein, is liable in damages for injuries committed by them while so running at large, without reference to the question of the animals' viciousness.

3 C. J. p. 94; Healey v. P. Ballantine & Sons, 66 N. J. L. 339, 49 Atl. 511, 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 155; Grinnell v. Taylor, 85 Hun, 85, 32 N. Y. Supp. 684; Goodman v. Gay, 15 Pa. 188, 53 Am. Dec. 589, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 341; Decker v. McSorley, 111 Wis. 91, 86 N. W. 554; Maraland v. Murray, 148 Mass. 91, 12 Am. St. Rep. 520, 18 N. E. 680; Meier v. Shrunk, 79 Iowa, 17, 44 N. W. 209, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 13.

Galbraith, C., filed the following opinion:

This action was commenced by James H. Shears against U. S. Tubbs, to recover damages for personal injuries charged to have been sustained by the plaintiff on the 9th day of April, 1912, on account of being bitten by the defendant's dog. The petition alleged that the defendant, Tubbs, was the owner and keeper of a vicious dog, that was accustomed to attack and bite mankind, and that he carelessly and wilfully permitted this dog to run at large in the streets of the city of Norman a considerable portion of the time, with knowledge of the vicious and savage disposition and habit of the dog; that on the 9th day of April, 1912, on the public streets of the city of Norman, this dog attacked the plaintiff and bit him, and that the dog, at that time, was affected with rabies or hydrophobia, and that this fact was well known to the defendant; that the plaintiff, by reason of the bite of the dog, suffered great bodily pain and mental anguish, and, on the advice of his physician, traveled to Oklahoma City and took the Pasteur treatment to prevent rabies or hydrophobia, and incurred an expense of $2 railroad fare, $33 for lodging, and $50 for physician fees, and $5 additional for his physician at Norman, making a total of $90; and that he suffered great pain in body and mind, and was thereby damaged in the sum of $1,000. The answer of the defendant admitted the ownership of the dog, but denied that he was of a ferocious and savage disposition, and accustomed to attack and bite mankind, and that if the dog had such disposition, the defendant had no knowledge of it, and that the dog was of kind and peaceful disposition, and of a good character. He also denied that he permitted the dog to run at large on the public streets of the city of Norman, and if the dog did appear on the public streets at any time, it was without the knowledge of the defendant. It is also denied that the dog was affected with rabies or hydrophobia, or any other disease, so far as the defendant had knowledge thereof, and further denied that the plaintiff was damaged as he claimed, and further alleged that "defendant, further answering, alleges that on the 9th day of April, 1912, the date of plaintiff's alleged injury, plaintiff wantonly and maliciously attacked and kicked said dog; and that by reason of said assault upon said dog, the said dog snapped the plaintiff; and, L.R.A. 1916D.

if the said plaintiff sustained any injury it was because of his wilful and wanton attack on said dog, and by reason thereof plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this action."

Upon the issues thus formed the cause was submitted to the court and jury for trial, and a verdict rendered for the plaintiff, assessing his damages at $190, as follows: "Hospital fees, $50; board and lodging, $33; railroad fare, $2; damages, $100."

From the judgment rendered upon this verdict an appeal has been prosecuted to this court.

Errors are assigned: First, in the admission of incompetent evidence; second, in the court's instructions to the jury; third, in the refusal of the court to give defendant's instruction No. 3; fourth, that the verdict of the jury is not sustained by sufficient evidence; fifth, error in denying the motion for a new trial.

It will be observed that under the issues raised by the pleadings the plaintiff's claim for damages was based upon two grounds: First, that he was bitten by a vicious dog; second, that this dog was a mad dog; and that defendant owned and harbored the dog with knowledge of his vicious character, and of his affliction.

During the trial evidence was admitted on behalf of the plaintiff, over the objection of the defendant: First, of a conversation of the witness with the defendant in October, 1911, which tended to charge him with knowledge that his dog was afflicted with rabies; and, again, the expert who made the examination of the brain of a dog which it was contended was the defendant's dog, and the one that injured the plaintiff, was permitted to testify as to the examination of the brain of a dog, and this dog had been afflicted with rabies or hydrophobia. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff in error that it was error to admit the evidence of the conversation, inasmuch as it occurred several months prior to April, 1912, and that if the dog was afflicted, as contended, in October, 1911, it would not be proof that he was so afflicted in April, 1912. And, again, it is contended that the testimony of the doctor who made the examination of the dog's brain was incompetent for the reason that the brain of the dog which was examined by the doctor was not sufficiently identified as that of the brain of the defendant's dog. Evidence was introduced to the effect that immediately after the dog bit the plaintiff it was killed, and that soon thereafter its body was hauled to the office of the doctor, and there the head was severed from the body, and the head was taken into the doctor's office, and that the doctor found the dog's head in his office when he returned, and made the analysis of the brain and found that it "was positive for rabies." The doctor further testified that he only examined one dog's head on that day. It is contended on behalf of the defendant that the identity of the dog's head examined by the doctor was not sufficient to show that it was the head of the defendant's dog, and therefore the testimony was incompetent, and its admission prejudicial error, inasmuch as one of the controverted issues in the case was as to whether or not the defendant's dog was affected with rabies. It seems to us that the testimony of the witness as to the conversation with the defendant relative to his dog "acting queer" was relevant and competent to go to the jury on the question of the defendant's knowledge of the affliction of his dog, and the time between the conversation and the plaintiff's injury was not so remote as to render the testimony incompetent on that ground. It likewise appears that the testimony of the doctor as to the result of his examination of the dog's brain was competent and relevant. It is true that the evidence to this point might have been more explicit, but it was sufficient to justify the conclusion that the dog's head examined by the doctor was the head of the dog that bit the complainant. The jury evidently had no doubt that the head examined by the doctor, about which he testified, was the head of the defendant's dog. We are impelled to the conclusion that the admission of this testimony was not prejudicial error.

Again, it is complained that the court erred in instruction No. 10, which reads as follows: "You are instructed that if the defendant was the owner of and kept the dog in controversy and had knowledge brought to him that said dog had bitten, or attempted to bite one or more persons prior to the attack upon the plaintiff, then that the defendant had knowledge of the dangerous character of the dog."

This instruction may be too brief a statement of the facts that are usually considered sufficient to charge the owner of a dog with knowledge of its vicious character. The rule is stated as follows: "While the owner of a dog is not liable, in the absence of statutory provision, for any injury it may inflict on others, unless he has notice of its inclination to commit such an injury, the modern and more reasonable doctrine is that he need not have had actual notice thereof to make him chargeable. According to this doctrine notice that the disposition of the animal is such that it would be likely to commit an injury similar to the one complained of is sufficient; but knowledge that a dog is ferociously disposed toward cattle is ordinarily not notice that it will attack persons. Knowledge of one attack by a dog is generally held sufficient to charge the owner with all its subsequent acts, but there need be no notice of injury actually committed, and therefore it is unnecessary to prove that a dog had ever before bitten any person, if the owner had seen or heard enough to convince a man of ordinary prudence of the animal's inclination to commit injuries of the class complained of." 1 R. C. L. ¶ 60.

It is said in the brief of the plaintiff in error: "It was admitted that the defendant knew that the dog in controversy had bitten the witness Hunt prior to the alleged injury of the plaintiff, but it was a disputed question as to whether the dog was justified in its attack upon the said Hunt; and it was further contended by the defendant that the circumstances surrounding the biting of the witness Hunt by defendant's dog were not sufficient, even though known to the defendant, to put a prudent man on his guard. Under the instruction the question of the dog's right to bite the witness Hunt was taken away from the jury, as was also the question whether the circumstances of the dog's biting the witness Hunt, admitted to be known by the defendant, was sufficient to put a prudent man on his guard as to the vicious character of the dog."

Under the law it was not a question for the jury to determine as to whether the dog was justified in biting Hunt, since self-defense is not justification for a dog bite, but the fact that the defendant knew that this dog had bitten Hunt was sufficient to charge him with notice of the vicious character of the dog, and to render him liable to anyone suffering harm on account of the dog. The rule is announced as follows: "The law clearly recognizes a right in the owner of a vicious dog to keep it for the necessary protection of life and property. But as such a creature is inherently dangerous, one assuming to exercise the right to keep it does so at his own risk, and is held strictly liable for any harm resulting to another." 1 R. C. L. ¶ 59.

Complaint is also made of instruction No. 11, given by the court to the jury, wherein the jury was advised that if they found that the defendant kept the dog tied, or otherwise confined, they might infer from such fact that the defendant had knowledge of the dangerous character of the dog. This instruction may be open to the criticism urged against it, that it invades the province of the jury, and directs them as to the weight of the evidence, and is faulty under the doctrine of the case of St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilson, 32 Okla. 752, 124

Pac. 326; but still this instruction, in the light of the verdict and the evidence, cannot be said to be prejudicial error, and under § 6006, Rev. Laws 1910, is not ground for a reversal of the judgment.

The plaintiff in error also complains of the refusal of the court to give requested instruction No. 3, which reads as follows: "You are further instructed that if defendant restrained his dog and tied it up and that by accident it got loose without the knowledge or consent of defendant, then in that case, defendant has been guilty of no negligence, and plaintiff cannot recover."

The refusal to give this instruction was not prejudicial error, for the reason that the same is not a correct statement of the law. "As negligence, in the ordinary sense, is not the ground for liability in an action for injuries occasioned by a ferocious dog, so contributory negligence, in its ordinary meaning, is not a defense. Therefore these terms, when employed in this class of actions, may be deemed to be used, not in a strictly legal sense, but for convenience. Thus, slight negligence, or the want of ordinary care, as the unintentional treading on the toes of a vicious dog, will not relieve its owner from injuries thereby occasioned; and, even where warnings to beware of the dog are posted about the owner's premises, it seems that he will not be exempted from liability to one who is rightfully there, or to one who is unable to read." 1 R. C. L. ¶ 65.

It is said by this court in Ayers v. Macoughtry, 29 Okla. 409, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 866, 117 Pac. 1088: "It is the keeping of the animal, with knowledge, either actual or constructive, of its dangerous or vicious propensities, which creates the liability. . . . Nor is it necessary that the dog's disposition or peculiarity be such as to render it liable to or inclined to bite all with whom it comes in contact; it being held in a number of cases that, if the dog had bitten one person prior to the injuries sued for, knowledge thereof is sufficient notice of his character to bind the owner. . . . In the old case of Smith v. Pelah, 2 Strange, 1264, which has never been departed from, Lee, Ch. J., 'ruled that if a dog has once bit a man, and the owner having notice thereof keeps the dog, and lets him go about or lie at his door, an action will lie against him at the suit of a person who is bit, though it happened by such person's treading on the dog's toes; for it was owing to his not hanging the dog on the first notice. And the safety of the King's subjects ought not afterwards to be endangered.'"

See also Humphrey v. Morgan, 30 Okla. 343, 120 Pac. 577.

It appears from the verdict of the jury that the defendant only recovered $100 damages and for his necessary traveling expenses and for medical attendance. Under the evidence there can be no doubt that the plaintiff in error had knowledge of the vicious character of the dog, and under the law he was liable for the injury sustained by the complainant. The evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict on account of keeping a vicious dog alone, even if the other elements of damages were eliminated from the case entirely.

We therefore recommend that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

FRANK ST. MARTIN

v.

NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN, & HARTFORD RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.

(89 Conn. 405, 94 Atl. 279.)

Damages — physical injury — mental anguish — inability to attend sick wife.

1. Damages for injury to a passenger cannot include an allowance for mental anguish because he was prevented from being with his wife in her last illness, was distressed about her condition and that of their children, and worried because he did not know where she was buried.

Note. — For mental anguish over collateral consequences of injury as element of damages for personal injury, see annotation following this case, post, 1038. L.R.A.1916D.

For other cases, see Damages, III. o, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. 8.

Appeal — reversible error — erroneous evidence.

2. The admission of evidence in an action to recover damages for personal injury, of mental distress because of plaintiff's inability to attend his wife in her last illness because of the injury, is reversible error.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 3, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. 8.

(June 10, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Windham County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William L. Barnett for appellant.
Mr. Charles A. Capen for appellee.

Roraback, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint stated this case: The defendant company owns and operates a steam railroad extending from Willimantic to New Haven. While in the exercise of due care the plaintiff was injured when riding as a passenger on one of the defendant's trains from Willimantic to New Haven. His injuries were caused by a collision between the train on which he was riding and an engine standing on the defendant's tracks. This collision occurred by reason of the negligence of the employees of the defendant. In describing the nature of his injuries the plaintiff alleges that he "has suffered great physical and mental pain and anguish; been to great expense for medicine and medical care; was confined a long time in the Saint Joseph's Hospital in the said city of Willimantic; has been unable since the time of said accident to do any labor or attend to his usual vocation and duties of life, and is permanently disabled from ever again performing the same."

Upon the trial of the case to the jury all the allegations of the plaintiff were admitted except the one relating to the plaintiff's injuries. This was denied.

The errors of which the defendant complains are based upon evidence received and the instructions of the court relative to mental pain and suffering.

Against the objections and exceptions of counsel for the defendant the following questions and answers are found in the record, touching the plaintiff's mental condition after he was injured:

Q. You go ahead, Mr. St. Martin, and tell what you worried about in the hospital.

A. Well, when I was there I worried about myself, that is about my pain, that I couldn't get out; and of course I was thinking all the time about my wife being sick in Liberty Hill, and here I was laid up in Willimantic, and because I knowed when I left her she was very sick. . . .

A. Well, I knowed that she was very sick; she couldn't never get better; she had to die. She was sick with consumption, and I had two young ones there, which was young, and I was the only support for them. So that left my wife and two young ones with my folks. My old mother took care of them. Otherwise I didn't have my mother, I didn't know who would take care of them. And I worried about them more than I did about myself, because it is natural for anybody to worry about his L.R.A.1916D.

own family. And the only way that I can speak with her, my father was coming to see me at the time, and she used to send messages to me, and I would send back a message.

The Court: Send what?

A. Send a message to me, a few words. And when she was so bad that she thought that she was going to die, she sent through my father if I wanted to forgive her whatever we shall happen to have during the ten years that we were married; and the only way that I could answer to her was the same way, to tell my father to ask her for me. But I had a secret that I wanted to tell my wife, and I couldn't tell. I couldn't tell nobody of it, and I daresn't tell even my father. I wanted to tell her that secret. I never had a chance to tell, and I have got it in my mind yet. I should like to tell it then. I was expecting to tell her that same night when I was hurt. I was intending to tell her that night.

Q. Tell the circumstances when you saw her.

A. Well, when I came out of the hospital my first thing was to find out where my wife was.

Q. Excuse me, you knew she was dead?

A. I knowed she was dead, for they came and told me the next day after she was dead—my father came and told me she was dead.

Q. What you did?

A. Well, after I got the number of the grave I went to the cemetery. That was about a month or so after I was out of the hospital, for when I first come out I couldn't get—I wasn't so that I could go, and I wanted to find the grave. So I went to Mr. Arnold, here, the stone cutter, and I ordered a headstone for her, which I had my name and her name and her age, and I had it set on the grave where it was designed; and two of my family, my father-in-law in particular, kept telling me that he knows where she was buried. Of course, I couldn't go and see where she was buried, only go by what people tell me, that's all. My father told me that he knows where she was buried.

In addition, against the objection of the defendant, the plaintiff was also allowed to testify:

Q. Never mind. What are you worrying about?

A. Well, my worry most is about I don't know but I shall be, or when I shall be, put in some—well, I might be termed a pauper and my young ones be parted from me. Any father will think of it. Anybody that raises a family will think that it is very hard to be parted from his young ones. I used to support my young ones once.

The doctrine allowing damages for mental anguish is subject to certain well-settled rules which to some extent restrict its operation. The rule which is most important is that no recovery can be had for consequences which are not the natural and proximate result of the act complained of.

While the precise question now presented has never been directly passed upon by this court, yet we find it stated in the case of Gibney v. Lewis, 68 Conn. 392, 36 Atl. 799: "It is true, as a general rule, that mental suffering . . . may be an element of damages when it is a natural and proximate consequence of some recognized cause of action."

In describing what damages are recoverable for mental anguish, Sedgwick, in his work on Damages, 9th ed. vol. 1, § 43g, says: "One cannot recover for mental anguish caused by thought of the extraneous suffering or inconvenience which might be entailed on members of his family."

Another statement of the rule appears in Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, 6th ed. vol. 3, § 761: "The mental suffering which may be allowed for includes such as arises from the plaintiff's reflections upon what he personally has to endure or anxiety for his escape. But his distress, in view of the consequences which his disability may bring upon others, even of his own family, is too remote a consequence of the injury to be compensated for in damages."

In Maynard v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 46 Or. 15, 68 L.R.A. 477, 78 Pac. 983, it was held that mental anguish or distress resulting from the realization of physical inability, because of the injury, to properly care for those dependent on the plaintiff for support and education, is not an element of consequential damages to be recovered in an action for personal injuries.

It is stated in Linn v. Duquesne, 204 Pa. 551, 93 Am. St. Rep. 800, 54 Atl. 341: "Mental suffering has not generally been recognized as an element of damages for which compensation can be allowed, unless it is directly connected with a physical injury, or is the direct and natural result of a wanton and intentional wrong."

In Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Chance, 57 Kan. 40, 45 Pac. 60, the court said: "The court erred in refusing to strike out the testimony to the effect that Finnegan was troubled by the sickness and confinement of his wife, and the fear that he would leave her and the child in a dependent and helpless condition. Under the decisions of this court, a recovery may be had for mental suffering or anguish of mind resulting from physical pain and suffering endured by the injured party; but it is L.R.A.1916D.

improper to admit evidence as to mental suffering on account of the circumstances or condition of others."

In Bahr v. Northern P. R. Co. 101 Minn. 314, 112 N. W. 267, the court held that in an action for personal injuries, "the mental anguish or suffering which can be proved is such only as is endured by the plaintiff as the direct consequence of injury to himself."

The case of Sullivan v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 197 Mass. 512, 125 Am. St. Rep. 378, 83 N. E. 1091, was an action by a married woman for personal injuries resulting in an extremely nervous condition on her part which might cause the premature birth of a child. It was held in this case that the plaintiff could not recover damages for her mental suffering on account of the death of a child who was conceived by her seven months after her injuries and was born prematurely seven months later. In this case this doctrine was enunciated (p. 515): "The connection between the tortious act of a person sought to be charged for the consequences of an injury, as the cause, and the injury sustained, as the effect, must be established by a fair preponderance of the evidence before a plaintiff can be permitted to recover. Such causal connection cannot be left to conjecture, surmise, or speculation, but must rest upon a firm foundation of proof."

It was also stated (p. 516): "The mental suffering for which damages can be recovered, therefore, is limited to that which results to the person injured as the necessary or natural consequence of the physical injury. But sentiments of grief, sorrow, and mourning, which are aroused by extraneous causes, thoughts, or reflections, are excluded. The contemplation of the suffering and death of a child begotten long after the event complained of is too remote from the original physical injury to the parent, and too intangible and ethereal, to be connected with the original wrong of the defendant as a result to be reasonably apprehended from such a cause. The law cannot enter the realm of pure sentiment in this class of cases, and award pecuniary compensation for those injured feelings which spring from sympathy and the severance of ties of love and affection."

It follows, therefore, that a portion of the evidence relating to the plaintiff's mental distress was improperly admitted. This evidence should have been confined to such sorrow and anguish as were the legal and natural consequences of the act complained of. The features of this class of testimony which consist of the plaintiff's distress about the condition of his wife and children, his inability to be with his wife when she was sick and dying, and further as to his feelings and experiences about a month after he came out of the hospital when he was in the cemetery where his wife was buried, should not have been admitted as testimony. These statements of his meditations were wholly aside from and independent of any suffering caused by the accident, and were too remote, speculative, and uncertain to form any proper basis upon which to estimate damages.

It cannot be said that this testimony was harmless and that the jury were not misled by it. Any improper evidence that may have a tendency to excite the passions, awaken the sympathy, or influence the judgment of the jury cannot be considered as harmless. In the present case the sole question for the determination of the jury was as to the amount of damages. It is quite obvious from the amount of the verdict ($4,000) and the character of this testimony that it may in some degree have improperly prejudiced the defendant upon the only issue in the case.

The instructions of the court as to the elements of damage that the jury might consider because of the plaintiff's mental pain and suffering were inadequate and inaccurate. Upon this subject they were told that "continual mental worry as a result of not being able to work and earn a living for self and family is continual mental pain and suffering. Now that would be correct, and I say it to you as correct, but of course I should also say that the mental worry . . . must be as a result of course,—the worry as a result of the injuries, the injury that is complained of and that he received. If he had the mental worry and anxiety lest he couldn't earn a living, or any other mental worry that the plaintiff had as a result of the injury that he received and complained of that would be proper for you to consider as an element of damage."

This portion of the charge would naturally have led the jury to believe that the evidence upon this phase of the case, which we have already held to be inadmissible, might properly be taken into consideration by them in estimating damages. If this evidence were inadmissible, certainly the remarks of the court upon this same subject cannot be sustained.

There is error, and a new trial is ordered.

The other Judges concur.

Annotation—Mental anguish over collateral consequences of injury as element of damages for personal injury.

The present note is concerned with cases like ST. MARTIN v. NEW YORK, N. H. & H. R. Co. ante, 1035, where the mental anguish upon account of which damages are claimed arises from the collateral consequences of the injury complained of, and is not intended to include cases of mental suffering arising from contemplation of disfigurement or mutilation, or from apprehension of injury to health, which are treated respectively in notes to Diamond Rubber Co. v. Harryman, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, and St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Buckner, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 458. Other important notes in this series dealing with various phases of the question of mental anguish as an element of damages are:

Recovery of damages for mental anguish in telegraph cases, note to Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Chouteau, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 206;

Parent's mental anguish as element of damages, at common law, for personal tort to minor child, note to Sperier v. Ott, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 518;

Mental anguish, etc., from injury by dog, note to Ayers v. Macoughtry, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 866;

Mental suffering as element of damages in action against physician or surgeon, note to Adams v. Brosius, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 36;
L.R.A.1916D.

Mental anguish as an element of damages for personal injuries to pregnant woman, note to Prescott v. Robinson, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 594; Tunnieliffe v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co. 32 L.R.A. 142; and Right to recover for mental suffering on account of another's mental or physical suffering, note to Gulf, C & S. F. Co. v. Overton, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 500.

While only a few cases regarded as within the scope of this note have been found, these are of one accord in holding that mental anguish arising from collateral consequences of the injury, like probable dependency of the injured person's family, is too remote to constitute an element of damages in personal injury actions.

It is undoubtedly true, it has been said, that one suffering from injuries to his person, due to the negligence of another, may recover for mental distress and anguish resulting from the same cause. Such mental distress or anguish, however, as is not the natural result of the accident, but is produced by the operation of the mind in the contemplation of the physical condition to which the injured party is reduced, or in contemplation of any extraneous suffering or inconvenience that such condition might entail, whether it respects the person himself or others dependent upon him, is not regarded as matter proper to form the basis of consequential damages. Maynard v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (1904) 46 Or. 15, 68 L.R.A. 477, 78 Pac. 983.

So, mental anguish because of inability to work and properly to support his child is not a proper element of damages to be allowed one injured in a railroad accident. (Or.) Ibid. The fact, the court said, that plaintiff was rendered incapable of pursuing his labors was a condition entirely legitimate for swelling the damages, but his meditation upon that fact, and the mental distress and anguish produced from such meditation, were wholly aside from and independent of any suffering caused by the accident or the physical infliction received, and were too remote, speculative, and uncertain upon which to base an estimate of damages.

And, likewise, the allowance of damages for personal injury cannot include mental suffering which the injured person endures because, on account of his accident, his family has no means of support and his children no way of procuring an education. Ferebee v. Norfolk Southern R. Co. (1913) 163 N. C. 351, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1114, 79 S. E. 685.

In Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Douglass (1888) 69 Tex. 694, 7 S. W. 77, holding that damages could not be recovered for mental suffering resulting from apprehension that the injured person would not be able to support his wife and children, the court said: "We think the mental suffering arising from apprehension as to the future of one's family is not a natural result of the injury, but depends upon the pecuniary condition and social relations of the sufferer, and would require the submission of elements of damage to the jury in cases where the complainant was a married man and had a family dependent on his exertions for a support, that could not arise where there was no family, or where the injured party was possessed of sufficient means for the maintenance of his family; so that a person with a large and dependent family would be entitled to larger damages than a person not so situated. Aside from the irregularity of the rule, nothing is better calculated to excite the sympathy of a jury than the idea of a poor and dependent family caused by the wrongful act or omission L.R.A.1918D.

of another, and we are of opinion that there was error in admitting the testimony."

And mental anguish resulting from apprehension as to the lack of support of one's family as the probable result of his injuries, and the fact that rent would soon be due, cannot properly be considered in estimating damages. It is not the natural result of the injury. Planters' Oil Co. v. Mansell (1897) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 43 S. W. 913.

In Atchison, T. & S. F. Co. v. Chance (1896) 57 Kan. 40, 45 Pac. 60, the admission of testimony to the effect that the injured person was troubled by the sickness and confinement of his wife, and the fear that he would leave her and the child in a dependent and helpless condition, was held to be a prejudicial error. The court said: "Under the decisions of this court, a recovery may be had for mental suffering or anguish of mind resulting from physical pain and suffering endured by the injured party; but it is improper to admit evidence as to mental suffering on account of the circumstances or condition of others."

One injured through the negligence of another is not entitled to compensation for mental pain and anguish from worry over her financial condition and inability to pay her expenses. Boatright v. Portland R. Light & P. Co. (1913) 68 Or. 26, 135 Pac. 771.

In Keyes v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1886) 36 Minn. 290, 30 N. W. 888, it was decided that anxiety on the part of an injured person for the safety of members of his family who may be in danger of injury from the same cause cannot be considered as a basis for damages. But the admission of evidence of such anxiety was not considered prejudicial in that case. W. W. A.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

EDGAR ALEXANDER, Plff. in Err.,
v.

MRS. C. M. COYNE.

(143 Ga. 696, 85 S. E. 831.)

Money received — action — officer of corporation.

An action for money had and received is Headnote by EVANS, P. J.

Note. — As to right of third person to recover from agent money paid him for his principal, see annotation following this case, post, 1041.

maintainable against one who, as a president and general manager of a corporation, received money to which the plaintiff was entitled, and to which the corporation had no right, where the officer knew of the plaintiff's right to the money.

For other cases, see Assumpsit, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(July 13, 1915.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment overruling a demurrer to a petition filed to recover the amount of a loan as money had and received by defendant for plaintiff's use. Affirmed. .

Statement by Evans, P. J.:

Mrs. C. M. Coyne brought a petition against Edgar Alexander to recover the sum of $606 as money had and received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use. As amended, the petition alleged that on May 2, 1911, petitioner loaned to the Electric Construction Company, a corporation, $606, and to secure the loan the Electric Construction Company in writing assigned to her an open account for $861.95 due that company by the S. H. Kress Company, another corporation. That transfer was signed, "Electric Construction Company, by Edgar Alexander, President." At the time of making the assignment, the construction company was insolvent, and this fact was known by the defendant. After the assignment the defendant, who was the president and general manager of the construction company, continued to act as such until about May 20, 1911, and was interested in receiving a salary therefor, when a check was received from the Kress company for the amount of the open account. The check was delivered in the mail box to the Electric Construction Company, and was received and cashed by the defendant. Petitioner has never seen the check, but is informed that the same was payable to the Electric Construction Company, was signed by the Kress company, and was for the full amount of the open account; that the check was "cashed by the act and deed of the defendant, and by that of no other person; he then signed himself, Electric Construction Company, by Edgar Alexander, Its President." At that time Alexander had the exclusive control and management of the Electric Construction Company; and in order to further the interests of that corporation, and of himself, he thereafter passed the amount of the account to the credit of the corporation, of which he was president and general manager. At the time the defendant knew that the chose in action was the property of the plaintiff, and that the check he received in payment of the same, and the money he received in cashing the check, and the money he gave to the Electric Construction Company, was also the property of the plaintiff; and at the time the defendant gave the money to the Electric Construction Company he knew it was insolvent, and knew that by his act he was depriving the plaintiff of her right to the account. The act of the defendant in depriving the plaintiff of her property was a conversion on his part, which she has never ratified or approved. The construction company has been adjudicated a bankrupt, and she is unable to obtain her money from it. "Petitioner waives the tort, and sues for money had and received in the sum of $606 principal and interest from May 21, 1911." The defendant's general demurrer was overruled, and he excepted.

Messrs. Little, Powell, Smith, & Goldstein, for plaintiff in error:

Plaintiff, resorting to the action of money had and received, can maintain it only against that one of the wrongdoers to whose own use and benefit the money was had and received.

Cowart v. Fender, 137 Ga. 586, 73 S. E. 822, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 932.

Plaintiff cannot maintain this action unless the defendant himself received the use and benefit of the money.

Lary v. Hart, 12 Ga. 422.

There is no basis for the action, unless there is both loss to plaintiff and enrichment of the defendant with plaintiff's money.

Limited Invest. Asso. v. Glendale Invest. Asso. 99 Wis. 54, 74 N. W. 633; Osborn v. Bell, 5 Denio, 370, 49 Am. Dec. 276.

Messrs. Dillon & Burress, for defendant in error, relied on the following cases:

Jones v. Kimbrough, B. & Co. 137 Ga. 638, 74 S. E. 59; Miller v. Wilson, 98 Ga. 569, 58 Am. St. Rep. 319, 25 S. E. 578; Flannery v. Harley, 117 Ga. 485, 43 S. E. 765; Sweet v. Montpelier Sav. Bank & T. Co. 60 Kan. 649, 77 Pac. 538; 27 Cyc. 869; Garland v. Salem Bank, 9 Mass. 408, 6 Am. Dec. 88; Houston v. Frasier, 8 Ala. 84; Haines v. Chappell, 1 Ga. App. 483, 58 S. E. 220; Porter v. Thomas, 23 Ga. 471; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Bennett, 120 Ga. 1014, 48 S. E. 398; Hawley v. Screven, 62 Ga. 347, 35 Am. Rep. 126; Cragg v. Arendale, 113 Ga. 181, 38 S. E. 399; Rushin v. Tharpe, 88 Ga. 781, 15 S. E. 830; Civil Code, §§ 3784, 4407; Tribble v. Laird, 92 Ga. 686, 19 S. E. 26; Messer-Moore Ins. & Real Estate Co. v. Trotwood Park Land Co. 170 Ala. 473, 54 So. 228, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 719.

L.R.A.1916D.

Evans, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The difficulty in the question presented by this record arises out of the form of action which the plaintiff has elected to pursue. It is well settled that whoever meddles with another's property, whether as principal or agent, does so at his peril. If an agent takes the property of another without his consent, and delivers it to his principal, it is a conversion, and both the principal and the agent will be liable in damages. Miller v. Wilson, 98 Ga. 567, 58 Am. St. Rep. 319, 25 S. E. 578. The plaintiff could have prosecuted her action for damages for the unlawful conversion of her property, both against the Electric Construction Company and its president, who aided in the diversion of her funds. An owner of money which has been tortiously converted by a person acting for his own benefit may waive the tort and bring assumpsit for the money received. This is upon the equitable principle that an action for money received lies when money received by one person equitably belongs to another. In order that the doctrine of waiver of tort may apply, the defendant must have unjustly enriched himself thereby. Keener, Quasi Contr. 160. If the action be in tort, everyone who participated in the tort is liable as a joint tortfeasor, on the principle that the act of one is the act of all. But where the plaintiff waives the tort, and does not sue for damages, but sues in assumpsit to recover the money, such action can only be maintained against the person who has actually received the money. Cowart v. Fender, 137 Ga. 586, 73 S. E. 822, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 932. The action of assumpsit for money had and received will not lie, unless the money was actually received by the defendant or his agent. Lary v. Hart, 12 Ga. 422. Where one receives money to which a third person, whose agent he professes to be, has no right, and he has notice not to pay it over to him, an action for money had and received lies against such agent. Garland v. Salem Bank, 9 Mass. 408, 6 Am. Dec. 86; Houston v. Frazier, 8 Ala. 81; Hearsey v. Pruyn, 7 Johns. 179. In the latter case Spencer, J., observes that "the law is, I believe, well settled that an action may be sustained against an agent who has received money to which the principal had no right, if the agent has had notice not to pay it over."

In the case at bar the chose in action of the Kress company was assigned to the plaintiff by the Electric Construction Company. The written assignment was made by the defendant as the president of that corporation, and hence he knew, when the check from the Kress company came into his possession, that it belonged to the plaintiff. If, instead of receiving a check, the defendant, as agent or an officer of the construction company, had collected the money from the Kress company, and not accounted to the plaintiff for her interest in the same, clearly he would have been liable to her, at her election, in an action for money had and received to her use. Do the pleaded facts present a case equivalent to that supposed? It is alleged that the defendant cashed the draft and received the money and gave it to the construction company. This is a distinct averment that the defendant had the physical possession of money belonging to the plaintiff. Having the plaintiff's money in his possession, he was under a duty to account to her for it, and, under the cited authorities, the law implies a debt, and gives to the plaintiff an action in assumpsit to recover so much as would be sufficient to discharge her debt.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

Annotation—Right of third person to recover from agent money paid him for his principal.

This note supplements a note on the same subject appended to Simmonds v. Long, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 553.

As to the liability of an agent to the true owner for selling or disposing of property intrusted to him by his principal, see note appended to J. T. Fargason Co. v. Ball, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 51. And upon the question as to liability of a servant or agent for conversion, trespass, or other positive act of wrongdoing against third parties under orders of his employer, see note in 50 L.R.A. 644; and as to the right of a bailee to assert against his bailor the hostile, adverse, paramount title of a third person, see note in 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 681.

As pointed out in the earlier note, the rule is well settled that an agent receiving money for his principal, to which the latter is not entitled, is liable to the true owner in an action for money had and received if he still retains the money, or where he has paid it over to the principal after notice or knowledge of a paramount right in a third person. ALEXANDER v. COYNE, ante, 1040.

And this is also the doctrine of Gray

v. Ellis (1913) 164 Cal. 481, 129 Pac. 791, holding that an agent receiving money for stock in a designated corporation who used it to buy stock in another corporation is liable to the original subscriber for the money received, and may be held in an action for money had and received, the action being based upon the implication of law raised by his receipt and diversion of money.

And the doctrine was applied in Tillman v. Bungenstock (1914) 185 Mo. App. 66, 171 S. W. 938, holding that where a subagent paid to the principal agent money collected by him for the principal, with notice that the money belonged to a third person, he was liable to the latter for the money thus received and paid.

And see also Newburyport v. Spear (1910) 204 Mass. 146, 131 Am. St. Rep. 652, 90 N. E. 522, holding that where brokers receive money from the treasurer of a municipality which he had embezzled from it, and the money was paid under such circumstances as to charge them with knowledge of the title of the municipality thereto, they are liable to it for the money thus received in an action for money had and received, although they had paid the amount less their commission over to the principal.

Applying the same doctrine in Blizard v. Brown (1913) 152 Wis. 160, 139 N. W. 737, it is held that where an attorney at law collected a judgment and turned it over to his client, with knowledge that the latter was not entitled to it, the judgment having been reversed on appeal, he was liable to the true owner for the amount collected. It does not appear in the foregoing case that the action was for money had and received. In an action of this character in Marine Co. v. Milwaukee (1912) 151 Wis. 239, 138 N. W. 640, it was held that where a city treasurer had paid over to the person entitled thereto money collected on a special assessment, an action for money had and received could not be maintained by the taxpayer against the city to recover the money. This holding was based on the ground that the common-law action for money had and received was based on a loss occasioned the plaintiff on account of payment of the money and also the consequent enrichment of the defendant, and it cannot be maintained where the defendant derived no benefit therefrom.

It has been held that the liability of an agent receiving for his principal money paid through mistake depends upon whether or not he had possession of the money at the time he was notified of the mistake. If he turned the money over to his principal or disbursed it under the latter's direction without knowledge of the mistake, he cannot be held. Rogers v. Durrence (1913) 10 Ga. App. 657, 73 S. E. 1083. And an action for money had and received cannot be maintained against an agent to recover money paid him for his principal which he in good faith duly turned over to the latter. Crafts v. Trafford (1913) — B. L. —, 85 Atl. 673. Nor is an agent liable to answer for money voluntarily paid to him as agent for his principal, to whom he paid the money without notice of any claim thereto by the party from whom he received it. Lang v. Friedman (1912) 166 Mo. App. 354, 148 S. W. 992.

Where a purchaser dealt with an agent and paid him as agent for the principal a portion of the purchase price of the subject-matter of the sale, although the contract of sale provides for the return under certain conditions of the money thus paid, and the purchaser becomes entitled to a return of the money under these conditions, he cannot hold the agent therefor where the latter turned the money over to his principal before the conditions existed entitling the purchaser to its return. Levine v. Field (1909) 114 N. Y. Supp. 819. But an agent is liable in an action for money had and received to the person from whom he received money for his principal under a contract to be performed by the latter, where the principal fails to perform and the agent retains possession of the money. Pancoast v. Dinsmore (1909) 105 Me. 471, 134 Am. St. Rep. 582, 75 Atl. 43. A. G. S.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

HARVEY G. KARNS

v.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE
RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(87 Kan. 154, 123 Pac. 758.)

Master — inspection — rule — interpretation.

1. A rule of a railway company, requiring all brakemen to inspect carefully at Headnotes by PORTER, J.

Note. — As to servant's assumption of risk of dangers created by the master's negligence which might have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of every stop the coupling apparatus and other appliances, and to report to the conductor anything found out of order, is subject to a reasonable interpretation, measured in degree by the opportunity to examine and the character of the existing defect.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. c, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trial — jury — negligence — injury.

2. Where such a rule is in force, and a brakeman is injured by a defect in an appliance of which he is ignorant, but which he might have discovered by inspection, the question of his contributory negligence is generally for the jury to determine, taking into consideration the rule and the circumstances shown by the evidence.

For other cases, see Trial, II. c, 8, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Master — rule — measure of duty.

3. Under the facts in this case, the defendant could not, by adopting such a rule, thereby relieve itself from liability for a failure to furnish plaintiff with reasonably safe appliances; the jury having found, upon sufficient evidence, that it was not practicable for plaintiff, by inspection, to discover the defect.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — sufficiency.

4. The evidence is held sufficient to warrant a finding that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

For other cases, see Evidence, XII. d. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Master — assumption of risk — injury.

5. The plaintiff is held not to have assumed the risk of injury from a defect in a coupling and drawbar of which he was ignorant, and which he had no reasonable opportunity to discover by inspection.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(May 11, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Harvey County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injury to plaintiff's hand while in defendant's employ as a brakeman. Affirmed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William R. Smith, Owen J. Wood, and Alfred A. Scott, for appellant:

The plaintiff failed to prove any negligence on the part of the defendant. On the contrary the evidence and findings of the jury conclusively show that the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury was his own negligence.

the servant, see note to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Birch, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1250; and generally as to assumption of risk of dangers created by the master's negligence, see note to Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1207.
L.R.A.1916D.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Roth, 80 Kan. 752, 104 Pac. 849; Brown v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 59 Kan. 70, 52 Pac. 65; Yeaton v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 135 Mass. 418; Southern R. Co. v. Lyons, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 95 C. O. A. 55, 169 Fed. 567; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Mayo, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 253, 37 S. W. 659; Watson v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 58 Tex. 434; Arnold v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 125 N. Y. 15, 25 N. E. 1064; Kelley v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 35 Minn. 490, 29 N. W. 173; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Ward, 61 Ill. 130; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Hennessey, 38 C. C. A. 307, 96 Fed. 713; Marshall v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 78 Ark. 213, 115 Am. St. Rep. 27, 94 S. W. 56, 8 Ann. Cas. 420; Norman v. Southern R. Co. 119 Tenn. 401, 104 S. W. 88; Flanagan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 45 Wis. 98, 50 Wis. 462, 7 N. W. 337; Brooks v. Northern P. R. Co. 47 Fed. 687; Olyde v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 18 C. C. A. 467, 25 U. S. App. 642, 72 Fed. 121; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearson, 97 Ala. 211, 12 So. 176; Ft. Wayne, C. & L. R. Co. v. Gruff, 132 Ind. 13, 31 N. E. 460; Alexander v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 83 Ky. 589; Shields v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 133 N. Y. 557, 30 N. E. 596, reversing 60 Hun, 586, 39 N. Y. S. R. 750, 15 N. Y. Supp. 613; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Dudley, 90 Va. 304, 18 S. E. 274; Beall v. Pittsburgh, O. & St. L. R. Co. 38 W. Va. 525, 18 S. E. 729; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Emmert, 83 Va. 640, 3 S. E. 145; Scott v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 14 Or. 211, 13 Pac. 98; Matchett v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co. 132 Ind. 334, 31 N. E. 792; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Bragonier, 119 Ill. 51, 7 N. E. 686; La Croy v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 132 N. Y. 570, 30 N. E. 391; Bennett v. Northern P. R. Co. 2 N. D. 112, 13 L.R.A. 465, 49 N. W. 408; Karrer v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 76 Mich. 400, 43 N. W. 370; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Orr, 91 Ala. 548, 8 So. 360; Union P. R. Co. v. Fray, 31 Kan. 739, 3 Pac. 550.

Messrs. J. D. Houston and Bowman also for appellant.

Messrs. R. R. Vermillion, Earle W. Evans, and Joseph G. Carey, with Messrs. Ezra Branine and Harry W. Hart, for appellee:

If plaintiff was required by defendant to use dangerous and defective appliances and instrumentalities, before requiring him to so do, it was in duty bound to notify plaintiff of their defective condition and thereby warn him of the extra hazards incident to their use, to the end that plaintiff might be on his guard to use a degree of care commensurate with the extra hazards attending the use of such dangerous and defective appliances and instrumentalities.

Missouri, R. & T. R. Co. v. Quinlan, 77 Kan. 136, 93 Pac. 632; Linker v. Union P. R. Co. 82 Kan. 580, 109 Pac. 678; Sargent Co. v. Baublia, 215 Ill. 428, 74 N. E. 455; Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Barker, 169 Ind. 670, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 542, 83 N. E. 369, 14 Ann. Cas. 375; Illinois Steel Co. v. Ostrowski, 194 Ill. 376, 62 N. E. 822; Taylor v. Felsing, 161 Ill. 331, 45 N. E. 161; Adams Exp. Co. v. Aldridge, 20 Colo. App. 74, 77 Pac. 6; East v. Amburn, 47 Ind. App. 530, 94 N. E. 895; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Penfold, 57 Kan. 148, 45 Pac. 574; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Holt, 29 Kan. 150; Solomon R. Co. v. Jones, 30 Kan. 601, 2 Pac. 657; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Napole, 55 Kan. 401, 42 Pac. 669; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Morris, 76 Kan. 836, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1100, 93 Pac. 153; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 203; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 117.

The defendant failed in the performance of its personal and unassignable duty to the plaintiff, and negligently required him to handle dangerous and defective cars.

Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Quinlan, 77 Kan. 126, 93 Pac. 632; Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Loosley, 76 Kan. 103, 90 Pac. 990.

Porter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment recovered by the plaintiff for $1,000 damages for an injury to his hand, incurred while in defendant's employ as a brakeman. At the time of the injury, he was head brakeman, twenty-four years old, with eight months' experience in the service. The accident happened about 10 o'clock in the forenoon. An engine and three cars were detached from a train, for the purpose of picking up four cars on a spur track. The last two of these four were foreign cars, and the rear one was in bad order; the drawbar and timbers of the coupling having been pulled out, and the car fastened to the next car by a chain. After the conductor had coupled the string of four cars to the others, the engine started towards the switch. The conductor directed the plaintiff to get upon top of the cars and release the brake on the rear car. Plaintiff climbed up the side ladder on the third or fourth car from the engine, walked on top of the train to the rear car, and released the brake. He then walked forward to the end of that car, and climbed down the ladder between that and the next car. These were the foreign cars. When he was at the bottom of the ladder, the engine stopped, the slack ran up, the two cars came together, and, because of the absence on the rear car of the drawbar and timbers, his hand was caught and crushed.

The defense was contributory negligence and assumed risk. The plaintiff testified that when the cars were coupled to the others he was about three car lengths from them, and did not know until he was injured that there was a defective coupling.

The jury returned answers to a number of special questions, including the following:

Q. 3. Had plaintiff paused a moment and made use of his eyesight and looked down in front of him, between the cars in question, before he descended, would he have observed a dangerous and defective condition in and about the coupling apparatus between said cars?

A. 3. Possible, yes; but not practicable.

Q. 4. What, if anything, would have prevented plaintiff from seeing the character and condition of the coupling apparatus between the cars in question, if he had looked at them before he descended from the top of the cars?

A. 4. Not anything.

Q. 5. To one observing the condition of the coupling apparatus between the cars in question, would it appear obviously dangerous for one to go in between said cars and climb up or down the ladder while the cars were in motion, and liable to stop at any moment?

A. 5. Yes.

Q. 6. In the book of rules furnished to and in use by plaintiff and other employees of defendant at and prior to the time in question, was it provided by rule 417 that "brakemen should inspect carefully at every stop, the condition of journals, hand holds, stirrups, ladders, and coupling apparatus, and if anything in connection therewith is out of order it must be immediately reported to the conductor. This rule will apply to cars in their train as well as those handled at stations in switching?"

A. 6. Yes.

The evidence justified the finding that plaintiff was in the exercise of reasonable care. It seems unreasonable to say that he should have discovered the defective condition of the drawbar and coupling by looking down between the cars, as he walked over them on his way to the rear, or that, before passing down the ladder, he should have stepped to the edge of the roof of the car and looked down. The jury evidently meant by their answers that it was possible, but impracticable, for him to have discovered the dangerous conditions in either manner. His testimony was that he went down the ladder with his face to the rear of the train, and that he was obliged to turn around in order to use the ladder; and common observation shows that this was the natural and the only practicable manner of getting down the ladder.

Under the facts shown in this case, the defendant could not, by adopting a rule requiring all brakemen to inspect couplings and drawbars, thereby relieve itself from the responsibility for a failure to furnish its employee with reasonably safe appliances. The evidence shows that the employee had no reasonable opportunity to make the inspection required by the rule. Cases cited, therefore, holding that employees whose duties require them to inspect cars cannot recover for injuries caused by their failure to inspect, are not applicable. A similar rule was said to be "subject to a reasonable interpretation, measured in degree by the opportunity to examine and the character of the existing defect." Myers v. Erie R. Co. 44 App. Div. 11, 60 N. Y. Supp. 422, 423. In that case, notwithstanding the rule, a brakeman was allowed to recover for an injury caused by a defective appliance of which he was ignorant, where he had no opportunity to examine the appliance before he used it. In McKnight v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 23 Misc. 527, 51 N. Y. Supp. 738, it was held that the examination contemplated by a similar rule was not a thorough inspection, but such a general one as the time given for the purpose allowed; and that the question of contributory negligence was for the jury to determine, taking into consideration the rule and all the circumstances in evidence. In Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Fry, 131 Ind. 319, 28 N. E. 989, the Indiana court used this language: "We are of the opinion that the duties put upon the brakeman by the rule in question adds very little to the duties placed upon him by the rules of law. Something more than the mere making of a rule requiring brakemen to make inspection of the implements and machinery used by them is necessary, in order to shield the master from the consequences of a failure to perform the duties of furnishing safe implements and machinery imposed by law upon him. He must have the appliances and opportunity for making such inspection. The duty imposed by law upon railway companies of furnishing reasonably safe cars and appliances for the use of brakemen in its employ is for the protection of life and limb, both of which are sacred in the eye of the law; and public policy forbids that the master should be, in any manner, relieved of that duty, without providing for the performance of the same by some other agency as fully as required of the master." p. 329.

In reference to a rule of the same kind, it L.R.A.1916D.

was said by the supreme court of California: "If the rule was utterly impracticable, or rendered so by the mode and the conditions under which service was required, and the servant is injured because not following an impracticable rule, and cannot therefore maintain an action for damages, then the rule is plainly not for the protection of the servant, but of the employer. It is a provision relieving the employer from the obligations imposed upon him by law to use ordinary diligence in furnishing safe appliances with which to work and safe conditions for the performance of the service. So far as the rule has that effect, it is against public policy and void." Holmes v. Southern P. Co. 120 Cal. 357, 362, 363, 52 Pac. 652, 654, 4 Am. Neg. Cas. 120. See also Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Foley, 94 Ky. 220, 227, 21 S. W. 866.

A rule or special order of which the servant has notice may put upon him the duty of inspection, provided he is given reasonable opportunity to comply with it, but only to the extent to which such investigation is within the reasonable capacity. Chicago & A. R. R. Co. v. Merriman, 95 Ill. App. 628; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 217; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 104. The only opportunity the plaintiff had for inspecting the drawbar was when the string of cars passed him three or four car lengths away, or while he walked over the cars to get to the rear, or when he passed down the ladder. The jury have said that, while it was possible, it was not practicable, for him to have made the discovery at these times; and the evidence seems to justify the finding. Applying the principle stated in the cases cited, there was no error in the instruction respecting plaintiff's duty under rule 417.

In 1 Labatt, Master v. Servant, § 417, the author says that "such rules should receive a reasonable interpretation, and that the obligations of the servants should be determined with reference both to the character of the defect and to his ability to make an examination." The Alabama court has declared that such rules are inoperative, so far as they contravene the principle which requires an employer to furnish and maintain suitable appliances, and the right of the employee to presume that this has been done. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearson, 97 Ala. 211, 12 So. 176. We approve this doctrine, and think it may be stated, as a general rule, that whether the failure of the servant to make the examination in compliance with the rules was negligence is for the jury to determine. Myers v. Erie R. Co. 44 App. Div. 11, 60 N. Y. Supp. 422; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Nicholson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 57 S. W. 693.

It is claimed that the court enlarged the issues by an instruction that, if defective cars were required to be handled, it was defendant's duty to warn its employees thereof; that the petition contained no averment of negligence in failing to notify plaintiff of the defective condition of the car; and that there is no finding that it was the company's duty to give such notice. We think the law imposed the duty, and no finding of such fact was necessary, in view of the other findings; and that, since the duty was cast upon the defendant by the relation of master and servant, it was not necessary to allege in the petition that such was its duty. Negligence always springs from some neglect of duty. To allege that defendant was negligent in failing to furnish plaintiff reasonably safe appliances, and that by reason of his ignorance of the defect he was injured, assumes that the defendant was also negligent in failing to warn plaintiff of the defect. There is no claim that plaintiff was warned of the danger; and we fail to discover how the defendant could have been prejudiced by the instruction, stating the duty of the defendant to warn its employees, in case they were required to handle cars found, upon inspection, to be defective.

The findings and evidence, to the effect that it was not practicable for plaintiff, in the situation in which he was at the time, to discover the defect which occasioned the injury, dispose of the defense of assumed risk, as well as that of contributory negligence. Smith v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 82 Kan. 136, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1255, 107 Pac. 635; Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Michaels, 57 Kan. 474, 46 Pac. 938; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Bancord, 66 Kan. 81, 71 Pac. 253.

Finding 23 was as follows:

Q. 23. If you find for plaintiff, then state in what the negligence of defendant on which you base your verdict consisted.

A. 23. On a bad order car.

There was no request to have this answer made more definite; and, in view of the evidence and the other findings, it is apparent that the answer means that defendant was negligent in failing to furnish the plaintiff reasonably safe appliances with which to work.

Finding 27 was as follows:

Q. 27. Was it obviously safer for plaintiff to go down on the side ladders of one of the cars in his train, than to go down on the ladders on the end of the cars where the defective appliances were?

A. 27. Yes; in this case.

The general verdict and the other special findings preclude the idea that the jury intended by this answer to find that it was obviously safer to the plaintiff for him to go down the side ladder, instead of using the end ladder on the defective car. It is the duty of the court to harmonize the special findings, if that can be done, with the purpose of upholding the general verdict. The other special findings and the general verdict clearly show that the jury found that plaintiff did not know of the defective condition of the car. If this were true, he could not be negligent in using the first ladder he came to, or any other which appeared to be convenient. The defendant's motion for judgment upon the findings was properly overruled.

Considering the entire charge, the instruction respecting the proof of contributory negligence is free from the error which required a reversal in the Merrill Case. Missouri, R. & T. R. Co. v. Merrill, 61 Kan. 671, 60 Pac. 819. The first instruction given required the plaintiff to prove his case by a preponderance of the evidence, and expressly charged that "he must do this without it appearing that he was guilty of negligence which contributed directly or materially to his injuries." No error appears in the admission of evidence or in the instructions.

The judgment is affirmed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

D. D. RAY et al.

v.

MISSOURI, KANSAS, & TEXAS RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(96 Kan. 8, 149 Pac. 397.)

Carrier — time for action — reasonableness.

1. A contract for an interstate shipment

Headnotes by JOHNSTON, Ch. J.
L.R.A.1916D.

of cattle contained, among other things, a stipulation that an action by the shipper to recover damages because of injuries and delays occurring during the transportation must be commenced within ninety-one days after the happening of the injuries and delays. Held, that the provision is not unreasonable nor invalid.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. g. 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — As to waiver or extension of time stipulated in carrier's contract for claim or suit against carrier, see annotation following this case, post, 1049.

Same — negotiations for settlement — effect.

2. Mere negotiations between the parties as to settlement or compromise of the claim did not waive the contract limitations, nor estop the carrier from insisting that the right to sue had been lost by the lapse of time.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. g, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(June 12, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Labette County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to and delays in transportation of stock, because of defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. W. Brown and James W. Reid, for appellant:

The period of limitation provided in the contracts had expired.

Watt v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 90 Kan. 466, 135 Pac. 600; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman, 227 U. S. 657, 57 L. ed. 690, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397.

The defendant could not under the law waive the stipulations of the shipping contract if it so desired.

Re Bills of Lading, 29 Inters. Com. Rep. 417.

The burden was upon the plaintiff to show a compliance with the terms of the contract.

Scandinavian Coal & Min. Co. v. Whitaker, 40 Kan. 124, 19 Pac. 330; Felix v. Walker, 60 Kan. 467, 57 Pac. 128; Meeh v. Missouri P. R. Co. 61 Kan. 631, 60 Pac. 319, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 629.

Mr. Archie D. Neale, for appellees:

Provisions as to time in which to institute action may be waived.

Watt v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 90 Kan. 466, 135 Pac. 600.

As against its own negligence the defendant cannot contract.

Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Frogley, 75 Kan. 440, 89 Pac. 903.

There were no written contracts in law, and plaintiffs have the right to avoid the written contracts.

St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gorman, 79 Kan. 643, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 637, 100 Pac. 647.

No defense can be based upon the written contracts offered in evidence by defendant, for the reason that they were obtained by compulsion.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Cotton, 87 Ark. 339, 112 S. W. 742; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hollowell, 172 Ind. 466, 88 N. E. 680.
L.R.A.1916D.

Johnston, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was before this court on a previous appeal. Ray v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 90 Kan. 244, 133 Pac. 847. Two actions were originally brought in justice court by plaintiffs to recover damages on two shipments of live stock from Electra, Texas, to St. Louis, Missouri. The actions were consolidated in an appeal to the district court, where the plaintiffs were successful, and on an appeal to this court the judgment of that court was reversed, and a new trial ordered. On the second trial the plaintiffs again prevailed, and the railway company appeals.

It appears that on or about October 22, 1910, plaintiff shipped seven cars of cattle from Electra, Texas, to National Stock Yards at East St. Louis, Illinois, or St. Louis, Missouri, as the destination is spoken of. Four of the cars, containing 102 head of cattle, were consigned to one commission firm, and the other three cars, containing 74 head of cattle, were consigned to another firm. Contracts covering the shipment provided for the filing of a verified claim for any damages caused by injury or delay within thirty days after the happening, and that any suit for damages should be begun within ninety-one days after the happening. It appears that with ordinary handling the cattle should have arrived at destination in time to have been marketed on October 25, 1910, but for some reason did not arrive until about 7 P. M. of that day, causing them to be marketed on October 26, 1910, when, it is claimed, the market price had fallen 10 cents a hundred, and the cattle had shrunken. Claims were presented to the railway company by the commission firms in behalf of plaintiffs on October 31 and October 26, 1910, respectively, for the loss on the shipments: On the four-car shipment, $226.63, comprising $123.67 for "25 lbs. per head excessive shrink on 102 steers, 2,560 lbs., at $4.85 per cwt.," $98.71 for "10¢ per cwt. decline on 98,710 lbs.," and $4.25 for extra feed rendered necessary; on the three-car shipment, $163.13, comprising $87.87 for "25 lbs. shrink on 74 steers, 1,850 lbs., at $4.75," $71.01 for "10¢ depreciation in value of cattle account appearance," and $4.25 for additional feed. The railway company, after investigating the claims for some time, offered to pay in settlement of the former $76.92, and of the latter $92.47. This was not acceptable, it appears, to plaintiffs, and this action was begun. Defendant's demurrer to plaintiffs' reply was overruled, and on the trial the jury returned a verdict for plaintiffs in the sum of $305.51. Defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled, and it now appeals from the judgment rendered against it.

The principal complaint of the defendant is that a recovery was permitted, although the shipping contracts expressly provided that any action for damages would be waived unless it was begun within ninety-one days after the injury was sustained; that the alleged damage was sustained on October 26, 1910; but that the action was not commenced until September 11, 1911. The cattle were loaded at Electra, Texas, where there is no railroad agent, and when they reached Wichita Falls, Texas, which has the necessary facilities, the contracts were signed in behalf of the plaintiffs by the parties in charge of the cattle and who accompanied them to St. Louis. While a witness stated that someone at Wichita Falls told the representatives of plaintiffs to sign the contracts, and that they must be signed before the train went out, there is nothing in the record showing duress in the execution of the contracts, and it is expressly stated that fraud is not charged or relied on by the plaintiffs. The parties used the contracts as transportation on the trip to St. Louis, and nothing is found in the testimony inconsistent with their validity. The contracts being valid, and the shipment being interstate, the Federal law controls, and under numerous decisions limitations in shipping contracts like those in question are held to be reasonable and valid. Watt v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 90 Kan. 466, 135 Pac. 600; Ray v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 90 Kan. 244, 133 Pac. 847; Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman, 227 U. S. 657, 57 L. ed. 690, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 57 L. ed. 314, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 57 L. ed. 683, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Vreeland, 227 U. S. 59, 57 L. ed. 417, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 176. The action, as we have seen, was not brought within ninety-one days after the loss was sustained, nor until 320 days after that time.

It is insisted by plaintiffs that compliance with the condition limiting the time for bringing the action was waived by the defendant. No attempt was made to prove an agreement to waive the limitation nor of any intention of the defendant to relinquish any right it had under the shipping contract. Waiver is largely a question of intention. There is no waiver unless so intended by one party and so accepted by the other. 40 Cyc. 261. It is claimed, however, that defendant's statements and acts are such as to estop it to insist on the application of the limitation. A number of letters were exchanged between the parties, and the contention is that the statements therein contained were such as to lead the plaintiffs to the belief that the requirement that an action upon the claims must be brought, if at all, within ninety-one days, had been abandoned, and that a strict compliance with it would not be insisted on. It may be assumed that the condition can be waived, and also that one party may so act as to mislead another, and so as to be estopped to say that noncompliance with the condition is a bar to the maintenance of the action. Here, however, the letters on which estoppel is rested were not written until long after the stipulated period of limitation had expired. The time began to run on October 26, 1910, and the first letter of the defendant touching the subject and upon which a claim of estoppel is rested was written near the end of the following April, and at that time the bar was complete, and the right to bring the action had long since been lost. The subsequent correspondence disclosed a disposition on the part of the defendant to investigate the merits of the claims, and to settle and compromise so much of them as were deemed to be just, but nothing indicating an intentional relinquishment of any of the rights and advantages stipulated under the contract. The first communication from defendant was a letter written on November 5, 1910, to one of the commission firms who had transmitted a claim to it, but it is no more than an acknowledgment of the receipt of a claim which was made in behalf of the plaintiffs. The purport of subsequent letters will be stated. On April 29, 1911, a letter was written by the auditor of the company in response to one by the representative of the plaintiffs, stating that the defendant had taken up the claims with the legal department, and would be in a position in a few days to advise as to settlement. On May 20th, in response to another inquiry in which it was stated that the claims had been turned over to an attorney, the auditor wrote that they were receiving attention, and would not be unnecessarily delayed, and that the matter had been referred to their attorney in Kansas, and as soon as his report was made they would advise plaintiffs of what disposition would be made of the claims. On June 23, 1911, the plaintiffs' attorney wrote to the auditor of the defendant that the claims were in his hands for adjustment, and that unless adjustment was soon made suit would be brought thereon. It was further stated that he would only wait a few days to know the purpose of the defendant. On June 29, 1911, the attorney for the plaintiffs again wrote with respect to the claims, stating that the defendant had had them under consideration since the 26th day of last October, long enough to have ascertained the facts and determined what they proposed to do. He also added that he expected to leave his office about the 7th day of July for a time, and that he must know about the claims, and, if settlement was not made before that time, he expected to institute suits on them. In July the auditor of the defendant wrote the attorney for plaintiffs in respect to the claim for $163.13, saying that their investigation showed the claim to be excessive, both as to the shrinkage of the cattle and also as to depreciation in value, and he added: "We are willing in order to dispose of this claim and avoid any further controversy to allow $92.47 in full settlement. Kindly advise if we shall issue voucher in favor for that amount."

On July 3, 1911, the defendant answered the attorney with respect to the claim for $226.63, stating that investigation had not been completed as to that shipment, but that they were handling the matter by wire, and would advise something definite as to the disposition of the claim in the near future. On July 18th the auditor of the defendant wrote in respect to the claim for $226.63, saying that the bill submitted was not justified, that the company was willing, in order to dispose of the claim, to allow a reasonable shrink, together with extra feed, and stating: "We are willing to allow $76.92 in full settlement of this claim."

The statements of defendant in its correspondence with the plaintiffs indicate a desire to compromise and settle the claims even after the right to sue on them had been lost, but the statements and negotiations about settlement at that time cannot be regarded as the surrender of any right by the defendant or the waiver of a bar which had already fallen. In a case of contract limitation as to the time in which an action may be brought and where the time had not yet expired, it has been held that negotiations for a settlement will not have the effect to waive the time limit nor estop a party from asserting that the right to maintain an action has been lost. Gooden v. Amoskeag F. Ins. Co. 20 N. H. 73; Blanks v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 36 La. Ann. 599; McFarland v. Peabody Ins. Co. 6 W. Va. 425; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Lebcher, 20 Ill. App. 450; Metropolitan Acci. Asso. v. Clifton, 63 Ill. App. 152.

There is no basis for a claim that the plaintiffs were induced to postpone the commencement of an action within the stipulated time by anything said or done by the defendant, as none of the letters touching the subject were written until long after the limitation had expired. The last letter of defendant relating to the compromise and settlement was written on July 18, 1911, and the suit was not brought until fifty-four days after that time. If the letters had been written before the time limit had expired, and had been such as to have induced plaintiffs to delay bringing suit until after the stipulated time, and because of that the plaintiffs had become entitled to a reasonable time after the final offer made by defendant to begin an action, it could hardly be contended that the action was brought in a reasonable time after July 18, 1911. However, the limitation, as we have seen, was not waived, and the right to sue was lost to the plaintiffs in ninety-one days after the damages were sustained.

Because the right to sue had been lost long before the action was brought, the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment in favor of defendant.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Waiver or extension of time stipulated in carrier's contract for claim or suit against carrier.

This note has for its purpose the investigation of the question of the waiver or extension of the time prescribed by a shipping contract for the giving of notice of claim for loss or damage, and for the bringing of suit on such claim. It is not intended, therefore, to include cases other than those involving the carriage of freight, so that cases considering similar stipulations in communication contracts are not in point here.

Stipulations as to the time within which notice of claims for loss or damage must be given, and suit thereon commenced, are not unfrequent in shipping contracts, and since the validity of such requirements, especially those as to notice, is generally sustained if reasonable, the questions whether the carrier can waive these contract rights, and, if so, what amounts to a waiver or extension of the time stipulation, are of considerable importance to the shipping public.

Stipulations as to notice of claim.

Stipulations in shipping contracts requiring notice of claims for loss or damage to be given within a prescribed time are for the protection and benefit of the carrier. They are intended to prevent fraud by giving the carrier an opportunity to investigate the claim while the best evidence thereof is still easily obtainable. Being thus for the benefit of the carrier, such stipulations—apart from the effect of statutory provisions designed to prevent discrimination among shippers—may, according to the rule sustained by substantially all the cases passing on this question, be either expressly or impliedly waived by the carrier.

Implied waiver by conduct, however, is the one most frequently relied on in the cases. Among the many authorities that might be cited here in support of these views are St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Shepherd (1914) 113 Ark. 248, 168 S. W. 137; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Grayson (1909) 89 Ark. 154, 115 S. W. 933; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Jacobs (1902) 70 Ark. 401, 68 S. W. 248; Klair v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (1910) 2 Boyce (Del.) 274, 78 Atl. 1085; Post v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1912) 138 Ga. 763, 76 S. E. 45; Arnold v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1908) 4 Ga. App. 519, 61 S. E. 1050; Banks v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1910) 111 Minn. 48, 126 N. W. 410; Frankfurt v. Weir (1903) 40 Misc. 683, 83 N. Y. Supp. 112; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. James (1912) 36 Okla. 196, 128 Pac. 279; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Ladd (1912) 33 Okla. 160, 124 Pac. 461; Eckert v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1905) 211 Pa. 267, 107 Am. St. Rep. 571, 60 Atl. 781, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 594; Crawford v. Southern R. Co. (1915) 101 S. C. 522, 86 S. E. 19.

It should be observed, however, that the foregoing cases were decided upon principles applicable as between the carrier and the particular shipper whose claim was involved, and apparently did not consider the effect of statutory provisions, like those in the interstate commerce act and in many of the state statutes, against discrimination as between shippers. In this connection attention is called to the case of A. J. Phillips Co. v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. (1914) 236 U. S. 663, 59 L. ed. 774, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 444, though it is not strictly within the scope of this note. In holding in that case that the failure to file a complaint for reparation of an overcharge within the two years allowed by the Hepburn amendment (34 Stat. at L. 590, chap. 3591, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8584) not only barred the remedy, but destroyed the liability, and that any rule of state practice which precluded defendant from taking advantage of the statute of limitations by general demurrer was inap-plicable, the court said: "The obligation of the carrier to adhere to the legal rate, to refund only what is permitted by law, and to treat all shippers alike, would have made it illegal for the carriers, either by silence or by express waiver, to preserve to the Phillips Company a right of action which the statute required should be asserted within a fixed period. To have one period of limitation where the complaint is filed before the Commission, and the varying periods of limitation of the different states where a suit was brought in a court of competent jurisdiction; or to permit a railroad company to plead the statute of limitations as against some, and to waive it as against others, would be to prefer some and discriminate against others, in violation of the terms of the commerce act, which forbids all devices by which such results may be accomplished. The prohibitions of the statute against unjust discrimination relate not only to inequality of charges and inequality of facilities, but also to the giving of preferences by means of consent judgments, or the waiver of defenses open to the carrier. The railroad company, therefore, was bound to claim the benefit of the statute here, and could do so here by general demurrer."

The phraseology of the statutory provision, "All complaints shall be filed . . . within two years from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after," sustained the view that the lapse of time not only barred the remedy, but destroyed the liability; and the question before the court might perhaps be distinguished from that now under consideration as to waiver of a contractual stipulation limiting the time for the presentation of claims; but the language above quoted seems to be applicable to the latter as well as to the former question. Upon the strength of that language the Railroad Commission of California has decided (James Mills Sacramento Valley Orchard & Citrus Fruit Co. v. Southern P. Co. P.U.R. 1916B, 734), that the Commission cannot permit the carrier to waive in one case and hold up in another the provision of § 71 of public utility act that all complaints concerning excessive or discriminatory charges shall be filed with the Commission within two years from the time the cause of action accrues.

This view is also sustained by the decision in Olivit Bros. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1916) — N. J. —, 96 Atl. 582, where it is stated that to permit the waiver of the time limited for making claims would open the door to preferences. No act of the carrier prior to the expiration of the time limited is relied upon as a waiver, which was sought to be predicated upon the fact that the carrier rejected the claim for other reasons that that it was presented out of time. The Phillips Case, supra, is cited as authority, the court stating that although the Phillips Case dealt with the waiver of a limitation provided for by statute, and in the case at bar the limitation arose out of contract, in either case the liability was at an end. The court expressly refrains from passing upon the question whether by conduct misleading the shipper prior to the expiration of the time limit for filing claims, the carrier might estop itself from such defense.

This view is further supported by the case of Georgia, F. & A. R. Co. v. Blish Mill. Co. (1916) 241 U. S. 190, 60 L. ed. —, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 541, where, in an action in trover by an interstate shipper for a misdelivery of flour, on the theory that the carrier in making the misdelivery converted the flour and thus abandoned the contract, it is stated that the effect of a stipulation in the bill of lading requiring claims for damages or misdelivery to be presented in four months after a reasonable time for delivery had elapsed could not be escaped by the mere form of the action; that the parties could not waive the terms of the contract under which the shipment was made pursuant to the act of Feb. 4, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 379, chap. 104), as amended by the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 593, chap. 3591, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8592), commonly known as the Carmack amendment of the Hepburn bill. The court further states that the carrier could not by its conduct give the shipper the right to ignore these terms which were applicable to that conduct, and hold the carrier to a different responsibility from that fixed by the agreement made under the published tariffs and regulations. A different view would antagonize the plain policy of the act and open the door to the very abuses at which the act was aimed.

On the contrary it has been held that to permit the carrier to waive a stipulation that written notice shall be given before stock is removed from the place of destination, and before it is mingled with other animals, does not have the effect of granting a preference contrary to the interstate commerce act and the amendments thereto. Mewborn v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1915) — N. C. —, 87 S. E. 37. L.R.A.1916D.

And in Clingan v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (1913) 184 Ill. App. 202, it is held that the power of the carrier to extend the time for presenting claims for loss or damage by making an indorsement on a receipted freight bill delivered to the shipper is not a violation of the rules and regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In A. C. Cheney Piano Action Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1915) 166 App. Div. 706, 152 N. Y. Supp. 285, a waiver of the stipulation as to the time for presenting claims contained in a uniform bill of lading adopted by a number of carriers under authority from the Interstate Commerce Commission was sustained under subsequent authority from the Commission to waive the stipulation for a certain period, and deal with all claims on their merits without discrimination with respect to this rule.

In view of the decisions above referred to, and of the obvious impossibility of preserving the policy of the interstate commerce act and similar state statutes to prevent discrimination among shippers if the carriers may waive or enforce these stipulations as they see fit, the matter would seem to deserve more attention than it has received. The extent to which the courts have made the principles of contract as between the parties yield to the policy of these statutes is illustrated by Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Maxwell (1914) 237 U. S. 94, 59 L. ed. 853, L.R.A. 1915E, 665, P.U.R. 1915C, 300, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 494, holding that a carrier that has exacted less than the published rate for an interstate round-trip passenger ticket may recover from the purchaser the difference between the amount paid and the amount that should have been charged, although he could have taken the trip over other routes at the rate which he paid.

Apart from the considerations just adverted to,—which, it will be observed, rest upon the interests of shippers as a class, and not upon principles governing the rights of parties to a contract inter se,—an express waiver of the stipulation in question does not appear to offer much room for litigation, and no cases involving such waivers have been found. An implied waiver, on the other hand, however, depends for the most part upon the circumstances of the particular case, and the question whether the carrier by his conduct, as evidenced by such circumstances, has waived its right to rely upon the time stipulation of the carriage contract as a defense, has been before the courts quite frequently.

Concerning the matter of waiver of a stipulation of the kind under consideration here, the court in Hamble-Robinson Commission Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. (1912) 119 Minn. 40, 137 N. W. 19, said: "In determining what acts or conduct on the part of a person entitled to notice of claim, under a contract stipulation like that here in question, will constitute a waiver of the notice, a distinction is to be observed between those cases where the alleged waiver occurred before the expiration of the time fixed by the contract for the service of the notice, and those cases where the acts and conduct relied upon occurred after that date. Acts and conduct occurring at a time when the notice could properly be served, having a tendency to lead to the belief that formal notice will not be insisted upon, or which are inconsistent with an intention to rely upon a compliance with the contract in that respect, constitute a waiver which, on the theory of equitable estoppel, the party will not be permitted to repudiate. But where, as in the case at bar, the conduct relied upon as a waiver occurs after the expiration of the time limited for the notice, the situation is entirely different. The failure to give the required notice vests in the party entitled to it a complete defense to an action upon the asserted claim, and the conduct relied upon as a waiver of the defense should with reasonable certainty justify the conclusion that it was intentionally waived, or be so inconsistent with an intention to insist upon the defense that the conclusion of waiver would follow as a matter of law. A waiver might arise as a matter of implication, depending upon the facts in a particular case, where the party entitled to notice, subsequently to the time when it should have been given, voluntarily enters into negotiations for the settlement of the claim, makes an offer of compromise, or from other conduct clearly recognizing the existence of the claim on its merits."

So, a waiver of notice of claim for injury or damage within the stipulated time cannot be predicated upon a mere denial of liability when the claim is presented after the lapse of the time specified. (Minn.) Ibid.

And in Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Bryan (1909) 109 Va. 523, 65 S. E. 30, it is decided that an attempt by a carrier to find a lost shipment after its exemption from liability has attached and become a vested right by reason of the failure of the shipper to present a claim therefor within the time and at the place stipulated for in the shipping contract does not constitute a waiver of its right to claim such exemption, if the goods should not be located. And in the same case it was also held that a letter from the carrier's agent, after exemption from liability has attached, requesting "the affidavit of the packer of the case, also invoice showing the original cost of the articles," and stating that promptly upon the receipt of these documents, the matter will receive attention, did not constitute a waiver of the carrier's exemption from liability, nor estop it from relying on its exemption as a defense." The court said: "A waiver, to operate as such, must arise in one of two ways,—either by contract or by estoppel. If by contract, it must be supported by a valuable consideration; that is, such consideration as will support any other contract. . . . In order for there to be an estoppel by conduct, the party sought to be estopped must have caused the other party to occupy a more disadvantageous position than that which he would have occupied except for that conduct. . . . No one can be bound by a waiver of his rights, unless it be distinctly made with full knowledge of the rights he intends to waive, and the fact that he intends to waive them must be made to plainly appear."

Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Flanary (1911) 111 Va. 816, 69 S. E. 1107, is to the same effect, as is also Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Southern Exp. Co. (1910) 110 Va. 666, 66 S. E. 838.

But, on the other hand, it has also been held that a carrier by undertaking, at the shipper's suggestion after the expiration of the prescribed time, to trace lost goods, and by inviting the presentation of a claim for loss, waives a stipulation in the shipping contract for notice within that time. A. C. Cheney Piano Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1914) 85 Misc. 157, 148 N. Y. Supp. 108, affirmed in (1915) 166 App. Div. 706, 152 N. Y. Supp. 285. The court said: "It [the carrier] claims that there was no waiver in its action in sending out the tracers and in inviting the plaintiff to file its claim. It relies on Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Bryan (Va.) supra, which says: 'A waiver, to operate as such, must arise . . . either by contract or estoppel; if by contract, it must be supported, like any other contract, by a valuable consideration. . . . If estoppel by conduct is relied on, the party sought to be estopped must have caused the other party to occupy a more disadvantageous position than he would have occupied but for that conduct. . . . And that an attempt by a carrier to find a lost shipment after its exemption from liability has attached and become a vested right by reason of the failure to present a claim therefor within the time and at the place stipulated for in the bill of lading does not constitute a waiver of its right to claim such exemption, if the goods should not be located.' The facts, as far as the court has found them, are that the four months had expired before July 11, 1910. Then the defendant had the right to say: You have not presented your claim in time. You have forfeited your right to make a claim against us for the actions. If it had taken that position there might have been an end to its trouble depending upon what should be held a reasonable time 'for delivery.' But a more prudent way suggested itself to the company. It sought to find the goods, in recognition of its obligation to the shipper, by sending out several tracers and by inviting the filing of a claim. If it had traced the goods to discovery or delivery, it would have freed itself from claim and loss. It is inconsistent with the claim of immunity from liability that it should recognize any obligation to the plaintiff after the expiration of the four months. From the conduct of the defendant we think the intention to waive the four months' provision of the bill of lading is fairly inferable. The lapse of time does not pay the debt, perform the contract, nor deliver the goods. The moral obligation survives the limitation. The courts of our state seem to be at variance with the authorities relied upon by the defendant. Waiver may rest in a donative purpose and be without consideration. It need not be based upon a new agreement or estoppel. Waiver may be claimed after knowledge of the forfeiture if in any negotiations or transactions between parties the claimant recognizes the continued validity of the contract, does any act based thereon, or requires the other party to do some act or incur some trouble or expense."

A provision in the shipping contract of the kind in question is generally deemed to have been waived by the carrier's entertaining and proceeding to consider and negotiate with reference to the claim after the expiration of the stipulated time, without objecting to the delay in the filing thereof. Thus, such L.R.A.1916D.

a stipulation was held to have been waived—

—where the carrier turned the claim over to its claim department, put the shipper to the trouble and expense of making proof of damages, and led him to believe that the claim would be settled on the merits, St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Grayson (1909) 89 Ark. 154, 115 S. W. 933;

—where the carrier referred the claim to its claim department and subsequently requested that a bill of the alleged damages be made out, and, after it was made out, offered to pay certain items thereof, Hudson v. Northern P. R. Co. (1894) 92 Iowa, 231, 54 Am. St. Rep. 550, 60 N. W. 608. The court in substance said: Such forfeitures are not favored in law, and courts are always prompt to seize hold of any circumstances that indicate an election to waive a forfeiture, or an agreement to do so, on which the party has relied and acted. Any agreement, declaration, or course of action on the part of him who is to be benefited by the contract, which leads the other party to believe that, by conforming thereto, the forfeiture will not be incurred, will and ought to estop the promisee from insisting on the forfeiture. Waiver is where one in possession of any right, whether conferred by law or contract, and of full knowledge of all the material facts, does, or forbears the doing of, something inconsistent with the existence of the right, and of his intention to rely upon it; and thereupon he is said to have waived it, and he is precluded from claiming anything by reason of it afterward. The provision in the contract in question was for the benefit of the carrier, and it might elect to rely on it or not, as it saw fit. If it so conducted itself as to evince an intention not to rely thereon, and induced the shipper to go to the trouble and expense of making out his claim for damage, in accordance with the suggestion of its general freight agent, it is now estopped from insisting on the forfeiture. The fact that the waiver was not made until after the time had expired for giving notice is not controlling, for the carrier's general agent treated the liability of the company as still existing, and directed the shipper to go to the trouble and expense of filing his statement and claim for damages. The claim agent, in refusing the claim, did not put it on the ground that no notice had been given, but denied liability for the loss;

—where, after the lapse of the prescribed time for so doing, the shipper made a written claim upon the agent at the point of delivery, on account of the property shipped, and the agent informed him that the proper procedure was for him to substantiate the claim and allow the carrier to make the necessary investigation to ascertain whether there was liability; and after the receipt of the papers in connection with the claim the carrier conducted an investigation and corresponded with the attorney of the shipper, finally declining payment on the ground that the carrier was not liable because the injury to the property did not result from its conduct, but from the bad condition in which the property was received for transportation, and at no time raising any question as to the failure to present a claim in the time provided in the bill of lading, Post v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1912) 138 Ga. 763, 76 S. E. 45;

—where the carrier's general agent, upon receiving written notice from the shipper of the demand, answered that the claim was being investigated and would be settled upon the merits, Harned v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1892) 51 Mo. App. 482;

—where the carrier, upon receiving the delayed notice, deliberated upon a claim for three months and placed its refusal to pay on the merits, and not upon the failure to give the notice in season, Isham v. Erie R. Co. (1906) 112 App. Div. 612, 98 N. Y. Supp. 609, affirmed without opinion in (1908) 191 N. Y. 547, 85 N. E. 1111;

—where the required notice was started to the general agent of the carrier within the prescribed time, but was not received by him until after the expiration of such time, and he, without objecting to the delay, proceeded to investigate the claim, and denied liability on other grounds than the delay in giving notice, Ingwersen v. St. Louis & H. R. Co. (1906) 116 Mo. App. 139, 92 S. W. 357;

—where the carrier, having accepted informal notice within the prescribed time, did not place its refusal to pay on the ground that the formal notice was filed too late, but on the contrary offered to pay a certain sum before suit was brought, Frankfurt v. Weir (1903) 40 Misc. 683, 83 N. Y. Supp. 112;

—where the carrier, with full knowledge, did not raise objection to the time of presentation, but rejected the claim on the ground of proper delivery of the goods, Peninsula Produce Exch. v. New York, P. & N. R. Co. (1914) 122 Md. 231, 89 Atl. 437, following Merchants' L.R.A.1916D.

& M. Transp. Co. v. Eichberg (1909) 109 Md. 211, 130 Am. St. Rep. 524, 71 Atl. 993, which is to the same effect;

—where the carrier refused payment of the claim because it was not responsible for the damage caused to the property by the temperature, and not because the claim was not filed within the proper time, Banks v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1910) 111 Minn. 48, 126 N. W. 410;

—where the carrier returned the claim to the shipper to have the freight bill attached, which was done, whereupon the carrier, after examination and further correspondence, declined payment, but not upon the ground that the claim had been filed too late, Wallace v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1903) 133 Mich. 633, 95 N. W. 750;

—where the carrier was negligent in sending goods to the wrong destination, and failed until five months after the date of shipment to notify the shipper, and contended in none of its correspondence that the shipper could make a claim only within sixty days from the date of shipment, Magnus v. Platt (1909) 62 Misc. 499, 115 N. Y. Supp. 824;

—where, upon the giving of notice, an answer was sent from the carrier's general freight agent's office acknowledging receipt of the notice, expressing the sorrow of the agent for the detention of the shipment, and denying liability therefor not because of the delayed notice, but on the ground that such detention arose through causes over which the carrier had no control, namely, the strike of railway employees in Chicago, Jennings v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1889) 52 Hun, 227, 5 N. Y. Supp. 140. But this case was affirmed on the theory that the stipulation was unreasonable and therefore failure to give the notice was no bar to the remedy. 127 N. Y. 438, 28 N. E. 394;

—where the carrier's agent had notice of the loss within the prescribed time, and the carrier, replying to the claim for loss filed after the expiration of such time, stated that if the claimant would reduce his claim to invoice cost he would be paid, and the record showed that the amount claimed corresponded with the invoice cost, Sauls-Baker Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1914) 98 S. C. 300, 82 S. E. 418;

—where the carrier had actual notice of the loss and attendant facts within the stipulated time, and did not raise any question as to want of notice until the time of the trial, a year and a half after the loss, Eckert v. Pennsylvania

R. Co. (1905) 211 Pa. 287, 107 Am. St. Rep. 571, 60 Atl. 781, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 594. And see L. A. Watkins Merchandise Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1910) 82 Kan. 308, 108 Pac. 116, holding that "the failure to instruct the jury as to a stipulation in a bill of lading providing that a shipper shall present any claim for loss or damages to the . . . [carrier] within thirty days after it has been sustained is not a ground for reversal where it appears that the . . . [carrier] had acquired full knowledge of the loss within a few minutes after it occurred, and upon learning of the cause of the loss had instituted negotiations to provide for the payment of the same, and where it denied liability for the loss upon other grounds than a lack of demand;"

—where it did not appear that the claim for damage to live stock was not fully investigated, or that, prior to the institution of suit on the claim, the carrier refused payment of the claim because notice was not given within the specified time, or made any objection to the form or contents of the notice given to a connecting carrier, Chicago, R. I. & G. R. Co. v. Linger (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 156 S. W. 298;

—where the correspondence between the shipper's attorney and the general freight agent of the carrier, which is not disclosed in the report of the case, clearly justified the jury in finding that the provision in the contract of shipment requiring the shipper to file his claim within ten days after the horses were removed from the train had been waived by the carrier, Wabash R. Co. v. Foster (1906) 127 Ill. App. 201;

—where the belated notice was accepted as one given in time, and the claim was held for investigation until after the expiration of the time also stipulated in the contract for the commencement of the shipper's suit, Sims v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1914) 177 Mo. App. 18, 163 S. W. 275. And see infra, "Stipulations as to commencement of suit," Pacific Coast Co. v. Yukon Independent Transp. Co. (1907) 83 C. C. A. 625, 155 Fed. 29;

—where the shipper mailed a notice of claim for damages to the carrier within the time prescribed for such notice, and a letter from the carrier's general freight agent acknowledged receipt of the notice, but did not mention the fact that it had not been received within the prescribed time, Vencill v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. (1908) 132 Mo. App. 722, 112 S. W. 1030.
L.R.A.1916D.

Where there is evidence tending to show that the freight claim agent of a common carrier receives a claim for damages to a shipment of live stock after the time limited by a provision of the shipping contract requiring notice has expired, and treats it as a pending claim; and rejects it on other grounds, the question of whether it is the intention of the carrier to waive the notice clause as a defense is one of fact to be submitted to the jury. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. James (1912) 36 Okla. 196, 128 S. W. 279; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Ladd (1912) 33 Okla. 160, 124 Pac. 461.

But the mere fact that the carrier's veterinary surgeon examined the stock after the expiration of the prescribed time, and reported the result of his examination to one of the carrier's officers, was not enough to warrant a reasonable inference of a waiver of the stipulation. Crawford v. Southern R. Co. (1915) 101 S. C. 522, 86 S. E. 19.

And that the carrier agreed to pay for loss on account of a decline in market, to which the requirement of notice did not apply, and refused to pay for loss on account of shrinkage, because no notice was given within the time required by contract, was no evidence by waiver. Riddler v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1914) 184 Mo. App. 709, 171 S. W. 632.

The conduct of the carrier, or of its duly authorized agents, prior to the expiration of the prescribed time for notice, may be such as to constitute a waiver of the notice within that time. Thus, a carrier sued for the misdelivery of goods is estopped to plead a time stipulation in the bill of lading by the false representation of the carrier just prior to the expiration of the time limit that the goods were still in its possession and would be returned at once. Where a party who may require the performance of certain conditions precedent to a right of recovery has by his own acts rendered performance impossible, the other party is relieved from the consequence of nonperformance. So here the defendant, retracting, only after the lapse of the time limit, the representation that the goods were in its possession and that therefore there was neither loss nor damage, is estopped from insisting on a compliance with the time condition. Marrus v. New Haven S. B. Co. (1900) 30 Misc. 421, 62 N. Y. Supp. 474.

And where the carrier's agent, after examination and ascertainment of the injury, directs the disposition of the goods, or promises to adjust the claim, a stipulation in the carriage contract for notice of loss or damage within a prescribed time is waiver. Kelly v. Southern R. Co. (1909) 84 S. O. 249, 137 Am. St. Rep. 842, 66 S. E. 198.

And a carrier, by entering into an agreement with the shipper that damaged property is to be sold to reduce the amount of the loss, consents to the suspension of, or waives, a condition in the shipping contract for notice within a prescribed time until such sale is completed. Peoria Packing Co. v. Nashville C. & St. L. R. Co. (1911) 164 Ill. App. 646.

And a stipulation for written notice within one day of the delivery of the property at destination was waived where the shipper within one day gave verbal notice, and was told by the agent of the carrier to sell the property and put in a claim for damages, and on the second day the shipper gave the written notice. Clubb v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1909) 136 Mo. App. 1, 117 S. W. 110.

And a stipulation in a shipping contract that the carrier should not be liable for loss or damage unless demand for payment therefor in writing was made within thirty days from the date of the contract was waived by the carrier stating, in answer to the shipper's demand for the return of the goods, that the company was searching for them, and, when found, by the carrier accepting the shipper's instruction to sell them. United States Watch Case Co. v. Southern Exp. Co. (1897) 120 N. O. 351, 27 S. E. 74.

In Rice v. Kansas P. R. Co. (1876) 63 Mo. 314, the contract of carriage of live stock required notice of claim of loss or damage to be made in writing before or at the time the stock was unloaded. The owner, before receiving the damaged stock, orally notified the company's yard master and agent that he would receive the stock only under protest. It was late at night and the agent assured him that it was unnecessary to proceed to the company's office that night, and, as the stock pens were in bad repair, he permitted him to remove the cattle to the owner's farm 16 miles distant, where their examination by the carrier was not difficult. Three days later the owner gave written notice of his claim to an officer of the company, who refused to pay the same because the stock was not damaged, and made no objection to the delay in the notice. It was decided that the conduct of the company amounted to L.R.A.1916D.

a waiver of the delay in giving the notice.

And in Robinson v. Great Northern R. Co. (1913) 123 Minn. 495, 144 N. W. 220, the court said: "The shipping contract provided that notice of loss should be given within fifteen days and that suit must be brought within three months. On November 15, 1911, the plaintiffs wrote the defendant more in the way of complaint than of claim. Correspondence continued to March 23, 1912, when the plaintiffs wrote to the defendant, pursuant to its request of February 26 and March 20, inclosing an itemized statement of loss. The defendant asked this under a promise to give the loss further attention. Eight or ten letters passed from first to last. The last letter sent by the plaintiffs and the last letter sent by the defendant were in aid of an investigation of the claim. We think the court properly held that the defendant waived the delay."

Where the shipping contract, providing for notice of loss within a prescribed time after removal of the stock from the car, was signed by the mark of the shipper's agent, who could neither read nor write, and the shipper had no knowledge of the limitation as to notice until after he had received the property and paid the freight bill, an extension of the time within which to file the claim was effected by an indorsement by the carrier's agent on the receipted freight bill delivered to the shipper granting four months within which to file claim. Clingan v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (1913) 184 Ill. App. 202. And see The Nicet (1905) 134 Fed. 655, where the contract required notice within forty-eight hours after the landing of, or failure to deliver, the goods, and the carrier put the goods in storage at the landing and took receipts therefor, and the notice was given by the consignee as soon as the shortage came to his attention.

Where verbal notice was given an express company a few days after the discovery of the loss, and the express agent sent a tracer after the goods, and after about ninety days reported that he could not find them, and then a written demand was made upon the company for their value, this was held to be all the notice necessary, although the receipt for the goods stipulated that the company would not be liable for loss or damage unless the claim therefor was made in writing within thirty days. Southern Exp. Co. v. Stevenson (1906) 89 Miss. 233, 42 So. 670.

And in Ghormley v. Dinsmore (1885) 19 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 196, as soon as the shipper was apprised of the loss of the goods, he called upon the defendant for an explanation. Time was taken by defendant in searching and tracing the package. It supposed that it had been delivered, but in the end stated that it could not be found. When informed of this the shipper presented his claim. It was decided that time taken by the defendant in searching for the goods under these circumstances, in the expectation of finding them, excused the earlier presentation of plaintiff's demands. And see Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Gatewood (1890) 79 Tex. 89, 10 L.R.A. 419, 14 S. W. 913; Smith v. Dinsmore (1880) 9 Daly (N. Y.) 188.

But deviation by the carrier from the contract of shipment, by transporting live stock by freight instead of by passenger service, does not relieve the shipper from notifying the company of his claim for damages within the time stipulated in the contract for notice of claims for damages. Pavitt v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. (1893) 153 Pa. 302, 25 Atl. 1107.

And that the carrier has failed to insist upon the stipulation in the shipping contract requiring notice of claim within a prescribed time in other cases does not constitute a waiver in favor of another shipper, where it is not shown that he knew the fact and was misled by it. The Westminster (1904) 62 C. C. A. 406, 127 Fed. 680.

And mere knowledge on the part of a claim agent of the carrier, who is not shown to be a proper person to receive notice, that the shipper claims damages for injury to his shipment, unaccompanied by any act upon the part of such agent looking to an adjustment of the loss, is not sufficient to constitute a waiver of a stipulation requiring the claim to be made in writing within a prescribed time. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Shepherd (1914) 113 Ark. 248, 168 S. W. 137.

It is a question for the determination of the jury whether the carrier, by refusing to allow the shipper to accompany his shipment of stock, and by unloading the same into his agent's pens before he had time to inspect them, did not waive, or render unreasonable in the particular case, a clause of the shipping contract requiring notice in writing of the claim before the animals were removed from the place of destination and mingled with other animals. Arnold v. L.R.A. 1916D.

Louisville & N. R. Co. (1908) 4 Ga. App. 519, 61 S. E. 1050.

And in determining the question whether the acts and conduct of the carrier, or its duly authorized agents, constitute a waiver of the stipulation in question, the jury may take into consideration alleged complaints made by the shipper's agent to the several local freight agents of the carrier, and all that was said and done by and between these persons at the time the shipments were delivered at the different points of destination, as well as the subsequent letters written by the shippers to the division freight agent or other officer of the carrier, and also any reply made thereto. Klair v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (1910) 2 Boyce (Del.) 274, 78 Atl. 1085.

An agent has no authority to waive a stipulation in a live stock shipper's contract, that notice in writing of any claim shall be given before such stock is mingled with other stock, such written notification to be served within one day after the delivering of the stock at the point of destination, where the contract contains a stipulation against waiver by an agent of any provision of the contract. Clegg v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1913) 122 C. C. A. 273, 203 Fed. 971 (general freight claim agent); McElvain v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1915) — Mo. App. —, 180 S. W. 1018 (station agent). Consequently, the action of the general freight claim agent of the carrier in simply negotiating with the shipper is not a waiver. Clegg v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co.

Stipulations as to commencement of suit.

The carrier may waive the provisions of a contract limiting the time within which an action may be brought for damages on account of delay in transportation or loss or injury to live stock. Naumen v. Great Northern R. Co. (1915) — Minn. —, 154 N. W. 1076.

A carrier waives a provision in a carriage contract limiting the time in which suit may be brought for its breach (or is estopped) by consuming more than the specified time in investigating the claim, and promising, before the expiration of such period, that it would not take advantage of the limitation if the claim was rejected. Adams v. Colorado & S. R. Co. (1911) 49 Colo. 475, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 412, 113 Pac. 1010. This, however, is not in conflict with the decision in RAY v. MISSOURI, K. & T. R. Co., that mere negotiations as to settlement or compromise of the claim do not waive the contract limitations, nor estop the carrier from insisting that the right to sue has been lost by the lapse of time.

If the carrier's agent by his declarations that the claim will be paid causes the shipper to postpone the institution of suit on the claim until after the expiration of the time stipulated in the shipping contract, this will constitute a waiver of the stipulation. The rule in such cases is that if the course of conduct pursued by the carrier was such as to induce the shipper that his claim would be paid without suit, and for this reason suit was not brought within the time prescribed, then the action can be maintained after the expiration of the time. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Kelley (1894) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 26 S. W. 470; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Trawick (1891) 80 Tex. 270, 15 S. W. 568, 18 S. W. 948, and Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Silegman (1893) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 23 S. W. 298, are to the same effect.

But statements made by an agent who has no authority in the matter, and expressly warns the shipper to that effect, are insufficient to operate as an estoppel. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Trawick (1891) 80 Tex. 270, 15 S. W. 568, 18 S. W. 948.

And a station agent at the destination of a shipment of stock, who is not shown to have any authority to adjust and settle claims for damages, and who does not represent that he has such authority, has no power to waive a provision of the shipping contract requiring suit to be brought within ninety days after the happening of the injuries, by advising the shipper not to sue, as the company always prefers to settle that class of claims, where the contract further provides that no agent of the carrier shall have any authority to modify or waive any provision thereof. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Davis (1909) 24 Okl. 677, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 866, 104 Pac. 34.

And where the undisputed evidence showed that the carrier's agent, having received and sent the shipper's claim in to the general office for investigation, told the shipper before the stipulated time for bringing suit expired that he (the agent) had word from headquarters requesting the shipper not to sue, but to be patient, and the claim would be settled, it was not error to refuse a special charge that "if the evidence shows that the defendant's agent received the plaintiffs' claim, to be forwarded to the general office for investigation, this would not be sufficient evidence to constitute a waiver or estoppel on defendant's L.R.A.1916D.

part. You must find from the evidence that plaintiffs were deprived of their right to sue and their position changed by the wilful acts and promises of defendant." Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Silegman (1893) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 23 S. W. 298.

By accepting a belated notice as one given in time, and holding the claim for investigation until after the expiration of the agreed time for the shipper to sue, the carrier waives the benefit of stipulations in the shipping contract requiring notice of loss to be given and suit to be brought within a specified time. Sims v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1914) 177 Mo. App. 18, 163 S. W. 275.

And, likewise, the carrier waives a provision in the shipping contract requiring suits for injuries to the shipment or the person accompanying the same to be brought within a prescribed time, by attempting to settle a suit for such injuries brought after the expiration of such time. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Dysart (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 130 S. W. 1047.

And a stipulation in the shipping contract requiring suit to be brought within a specified time after the accrual of the cause of action is waived by the carrier, where, after receiving the shipper's demand from the delivering carrier, it remained silent for more than four months before advising the delivering carrier that it rejected the demand, and thereafter neglected for six days to own receipt of a letter from the shipper's attorney concerning the claim, and then answered only that the demand had been returned to the delivering carrier. Howze v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. (1907) 91 Miss. 695, 45 So. 837.

In Pacific Coast Co. v. Yukon Independent Transp. Co. (1907) 83 C. C. A. 625, 155 Fed. 29, goods were received by the carrier at Seattle to be delivered at an Alaskan port on the first trip of the vessel in the spring, or as soon as the ice was out of the harbor. Upon finding the harbor still closed by the ice, the vessel, after tendering delivery at another Alaskan port, proceeded back to Seattle with the cargo, and delivered it on the next voyage. The shipping contract required all claims for damages to be presented to the carrier within ten days from notice thereof, and that no action should be brought after sixty days. When the vessel decided to return to Seattle with the property aboard, the claimant's agent gave notice that a claim would be made for such damages as might result, and when the goods were finally delivered at their destination, he served as specific a claim for damages as could then be made; and later a more specific claim was presented in Seattle and taken under consideration by the carrier, after which negotiations for settlement continued for about a year before suit was brought, the carrier objecting only that the amount of the claim was unreasonable. It was decided that the requirement as to the presentation of the claim and the institution of the suit within the prescribed time had been waived.

A shipper who has sent affidavits and proofs of claims for injury and damage to live stock, and has been assured by the carrier that the claim is under active investigation, and that he will be informed of the carrier's decision, is justified in waiting until the carrier's active investigation is completed and the result thereof communicated to him. Naumen v. Great Northern R. Co. (1915) — Minn. —, 154 N. W. 1077.

W. W. A.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

MARY LIMBACH et al., Appts.,

v.

ALTA BOLIN et al.

(— Ky. —, 183 S. W. 495.)

Will — attestation before signature — effect.

An unsubscribed will is not properly acknowledged by requesting a witness to attest it with his signature, which is done, so as to make it valid when subsequently signed by the testator out of the presence of the witness, if the signature is never acknowledged to the witness, under a statute providing that the subscription shall be made or the will acknowledged by the testator in the presence of the witness.

For other cases, see Wills, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 15, 1916.)

APPEAL by contestants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Daviess County approving the judgment of the County Court admitting to probate a paper as the last will and testament of Louis A. Miller, deceased. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Louis I. Igleheart and Leo H. Fisher, for appellants:

A testator must acknowledge his signature as well as his will to the subscribing witnesses.

Swift v. Wiley, 1 B. Mon. 114; Sechrest v. Edwards, 4 Met. (Ky.) 163; Upchurch v. Upchurch, 16 B. Mon. 113; Shanks v. Christopher, 3 A. K. Marsh. 144; Denton v. Franklin, 9 B. Mon. 28; Garnett v. Foston, 122 Ky. 195, 121 Am. St. Rep. 456, 91 S. W. 668; Baldwin v. Barber, 151 Ky. 168, 151 S. W. 686, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 14, modifying opinion on rehearing in 148 Ky. 370, 146 S. W. 1124.

Note. — As to signature of witness to will before testator signs it, see annotation following this case, post, 1063. L.R.A.1916D.

The signature of the testator must be affixed to the will before he can acknowledge it. If it is not signed, there is no will to attest or acknowledge.

Re Dougherty, 168 Mich. 281, 134 N. W. 24, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1300, reported and annotated in 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 161; Griffith v. Griffith, 5 B. Mon. 511; Chisholm v. Ben, 7 B. Mon. 408; Reed v. Watson, 27 Ind. 443; Turner v. Cook, 36 Ind. 129; Tobin v. Haack, 79 Minn. 101, 81 N. W. 758; Ludlow v. Ludlow, 35 N. J. Eq. 480; Re Coles, — N. J. —, 47 Atl. 385; Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409, reversing 7 Hun, 290; Re Mackay, 110 N. Y. 611, 1 L.R.A. 491, 6 Am. St. Rep. 409, 18 N. E. 433; Vogel v. Lehritter, 139 N. Y. 223, 34 N. E. 914; Re Laudy, 148 N. Y. 403, 42 N. E. 1061, modifying 78 Hun, 479, 29 N. Y. Supp. 136, affirmed in 147 N. Y. 699, 42 N. E. 724, reargument granted in 147 N. Y. 721, 42 N. E. 724; Re Eakins, 13 Misc. 557, 35 N. Y. Supp. 489; Re Rogers, 52 Misc. 412, 103 N. Y. Supp. 423; Re Abercrombie, 24 App. Div. 407, 48 N. Y. Supp. 414; Re Hitchler, 25 Misc. 365, 55 N. Y. Supp. 642; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 16 Hun, 97, affirmed in 77 N. Y. 596; Rutherford v. Rutherford, 1 Denio, 33, 43 Am. Dec. 644; Re Baldwin, 146 N. C. 25, 125 Am. St. Rep. 466, 59 S. E. 163; Haynes v. Haynes, 33 Ohio St. 598, 31 Am. Rep. 579; Keyl v. Feuchter, 56 Ohio St. 424, 47 N. E. 140; Richardson v. Orth, 40 Or. 252, 66 Pac. 925, rehearing denied in 40 Or. 267, 69 Pac. 455; Luper v. Werts, 19 Or. 122, 23 Pac. 850; Irvine's Estate, 206 Pa. 1, 55 Atl. 795; Tucker v. Oxner, 12 Rich. L. 141; Simmons v. Leonard, 91 Tenn. 183, 30 Am. St. Rep. 875, 18 S. W. 280; Roberts v. Welch, 46 Vt. 165; Gould v. Chicago Theological Seminary, 189 Ill. 282, 59 N. E. 536; Harp v. Parr, 168 Ill. 459, 48 N. E. 113; Re Barry, 219 Ill. 391, 76 N. E. 577; Dewey v. Dewey, 1 Met. 349, 35 Am. Dec. 367; Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray, 91; Chase v. Kittredge, 11 Allen, 49, 87 Am. Dec. 687.

Thomas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Louis A. Miller died on July 4, 1913, being at the time a resident of and domiciled in Daviess county. On February 26, 1912, he attempted to execute his will. After his death, and on August 18, 1913, the devisees therein (appellees here) presented the paper to the county court of Daviess county for probate, and their motion for that purpose was sustained and the paper probated as the last will and testament of Louis A. Miller. From that judgment an appeal was prosecuted to the circuit court, and it, after hearing, approved the judgment of the county court in probating the paper as such will. From the judgment of the circuit court, appellants, who are the collateral heirs and next of kin to L. A. Miller, prosecute this appeal.

The contentions of appellants which were presented for the first time in the circuit court are: That the paper was not executed in substantial compliance with our statute regulating the making of wills, and that the testator was unduly influenced to execute it. On the trial in the circuit court, the second one was abandoned, and there was an agreed stipulation of facts filed by the parties as to how the paper was executed; it constituting all the evidence heard by the circuit court. Upon this point the stipulation shows that the testator went to the Daviess County Planing Mills, carrying with him the paper claimed to be his will, it not being in the handwriting of Miller, and he there requested W. R. Jagoe to witness it as his will, whereupon Jagoe signed his name to the paper. Miller did not subscribe his name to it in the presence of this witness, nor was his name subscribed to it at the time the witness attested it with his signature. The testator took the paper in this condition, without his name being subscribed to it, to another place in Owensboro, where H. N. Robertson was requested by him to witness or attest the paper as his will, which was done by Robertson, and in the presence of this witness the testator subscribed his name to the paper. After this subscription by the testator, no acknowledgment of it was ever made to the witness Jagoe, and he at no time saw the paper with the name of the testator subscribed to it. The question is, Do these acts constitute a substantial compliance with our statute upon the subject, it being § 4828, Ky. Stat. and in language as follows: "No will shall be valid unless it is in writing with the name of the testator subscribed thereto by himself, or by some other person in his presence and by his direction; and, moreover, if not wholly written by the testator, the subscription shall be made or the will acknowledged by him in the presence of at least two credible witnesses, who shall subscribe the will with their names in the presence of the testator."

This supposed will is not holographic, and, if vitalized at all, it must be by that portion of the section saying, "moreover, if not wholly written by the testator, the subscription shall be made or the will acknowledged by him in the presence of at least two credible witnesses," etc. As the testator did not subscribe the paper in the presence of two witnesses, it becomes necessary to still further narrow the inquiry to the meaning of the clause, "or the will acknowledged by him in the presence of at least two credible witnesses."

When the will is not a holographic one, it may receive legal vitality under the statute in one of two ways: One by the testator subscribing it in the presence of the two witnesses, and they attesting it by subscribing their names in his presence; and the other by the testator acknowledging the will in the presence of the two witnesses, who shall attest it by their signatures in his presence. The first one was not followed in this case, and the inquiry is whether the second one was. It will be observed that the paper which the statute requires shall be acknowledged by the testator before the witnesses is "the will."

Great assistance in the solution of the question before us will be rendered by ascertaining the true meaning of the word "will" (the thing to be acknowledged) as used in the statute. Blackstone, in his Commentaries (vol. 2, p. 499), defines it as "the legal declaration of a man's intentions which he wills to be performed after his death." The definition is adopted with approval by the author of 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 550, and also by the court in the following cases: Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. 68, 8 L. ed. 322; Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 309, 32 L. ed. 142, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1164; Hardenbergh v. Ray, 151 U. S. 112, 38 L. ed. 93, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305; Jackson v. Culpepper, 3 Ga. 569; Robinson v. King, 6 Ga. 547; Langdon v. Astor, 16 N. Y. 49; Clayton v. Liverman, 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 553; Price v. Johnson, 90 N. C. 592; Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. 178. And by this court in the precise words of Blackstone in the case of Ward v. Ward, 104 Ky. 857, 48 S. W. 411. The definition given by Swinburne is, "A last will is a lawful disposing of that which anyone would have done after death." Swinb. Wills, pt. 1, §§ 3 and 4. These definitions meet with our approval, as well as having been adopted by this court in the Ward Case, supra.

It will be noticed that a paper, in order to be brought to the full development of a will, must, according to Blackstone, "be a legal declaration," and by Swinburne's definition, "a lawful disposing," etc., and any paper not possessing the requisites to make it a legal declaration or a lawful disposition would fall short of the definition of a will. All statutes upon the subject of wills, both English and American, require them to be either signed or subscribed by the testator in order to render them valid and effectual for the purpose of disposing of property after death. Under all of them, a paper which is not signed or not subscribed by the testator is wholly ineffectual for any purpose and would not be probated as a will by any court, because it would not be a will.

How, then, may we ask, could it be a will when not subscribed or signed by the maker for the purpose of attestation or acknowledgment before the witnesses, and yet not be a will unless signed or subscribed by him for the purpose of probate? If the paper constituting the will is a legal declaration or a lawful disposition by the testator, it must be an executed one, which, according to some of the statutes, must be a subscribed one, and, according to others, a signed one. The acknowledgment required by the statute is the recognition by the testator before the attesting witnesses of his subscribed or executed will. Without this execution of the will by the testator's subsequent consent, the paper which the witnesses attest contains only the testator's consent or wish that what is written therein shall control the disposition of his property after his death, and without such consent or wish having the verity required by law, which would not be legal declaration of such consent. It is the legalized consent verified by subscribing his will which the testator acknowledges before the witnesses and which they attest by subscribing their names. In other words, the paper which the testator must acknowledge to the attesting witnesses must, at the time of such acknowledgment, be a completed or finished will so far as the requirement which the statute imposes upon the testator is concerned. This is not done, under our present statutes, until he has subscribed it. The direct question involved here, although determined as herein held by courts from other jurisdictions (Lane v. Lane, 125 Ga. 386, 54 S. E. 90, 114 Am. St. Rep. 207, and notes on page 213, 5 Ann. Cas. 462; Simmons v. Leonard, 91 Tenn. 183, 30 Am. St. Rep. 875, 18 S. W. 280; Chase v. Kittredge, 11 Allen, 49, 87 Am. Dec. 687; Reed v. Watson, 27 Ind. 448; Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Jauncey v. Thorne, 2 Barb. Ch. 40, 45 Am. Dec. 432; Tilden v. Tilden, 13 L.R.A.1916D.

Gray, 110), has not been directly passed on by this court. It has, however, been inferentially upheld in the following cases: Shanks v. Christopher, 3 A. K. Marsh. 144; Miles's Will, 4 Dana, 1; Swift v. Wiley, 1 B. Mon. 114; Chisholm v. Ben, 7 B. Mon. 408; Griffith v. Griffith, 5 B. Mon. 511; Sechrest v. Edwards, 4 Met. (Ky.) 163; Allen v. Everett, 12 B. Mon. 371; Soward v. Soward, 1 Duv. 126; Grubbs v. Marshall, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 870, 13 S. W. 447; Savage v. Bulger, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 763, 76 S. W. 361; McKee v. McKee, 155 Ky. 738, 160 S. W. 261.

The requirements of the statute in force at the time of the execution of the wills under consideration by this court in these cases were not in each instance the same. In some of them the law required the will to be signed by the testator, and, as this requirement was the same as that required by the earlier English statutes on the subject, the construction of the English courts as to what constituted a signing of the will was followed by this court when similar statutes were under consideration. This construction was to the effect that the will need not be signed by the testator at the bottom thereof, but the requirement would be fulfilled if the name of the testator appeared anywhere in the body of the will. This was held to be a sufficient signing, and accordingly it was held in the Miles's Will Case, 4 Dana, 1, that the attesting witnesses need not see the testator sign his name at the foot of the will, or see the name already signed at that place, when the body of the will contained the name of the testator at the time the witnesses attested it, inferentially holding that if there was no name of the testator signed at the end of the will, and his name did not appear in the body of the will when the witness attested it, it would be invalid; the language used being: "Mrs. Miles, the testatrix, fell a victim to the cholera, in July, 1838. Before she had been attacked with the fatal disease, she requested an intelligent neighbor to write her will, and instructed him how to write it. He wrote it accordingly, and commencing with, 'In the name of God, amen, I, Sarah Miles,' etc., ended with, 'in ratification of which, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal,' etc., adding a seal without the name. Thus prepared, it was read to her and approved by her, but was not then either subscribed by her, or attested. However, when afterwards published, being unable to subscribe her name, she acknowledged the paper as her will, in the presence of two witnesses, who attested it in her presence and at her request. From these facts, we infer that her acknowledgment was full, unconditional, and final, without any intention to subscribe her name then or afterwards; but with the wish that the document thus acknowledged should, as acknowledged, be established as her last will; and therefore, according to a long and unbroken series of adjudged cases, although we may presume that, when the will was written, her name in the beginning was not intended to be her signature, nevertheless, as it was so designed and understood at the time of publication, we feel bound to decide that it is a sufficient signing of the will within the constructive operation of the statute, and is as effectual as it would have been had it been subscribed by a stranger and acknowledged by her."

Appellees rely on the case of Allen v. Everett, 12 B. Mon. 371. The law governing the execution of wills when the testator's will involved in that case was executed was the same as to the signing by the testator as the one governing the execution of wills in the Miles's Case, i. e., the testator should only sign the will, and this requirement under the adjudged cases was fulfilled when his name appeared anywhere in the will. Consequently, this court, in the Everett Case, said: "The name of the testatrix is inserted in the body of this will, and her signature is also affixed to the bottom thereof; and if acknowledged by her to be her will to Chilton Duff before she signed it, but with the intention at the time of publication to give complete effect to it as her last will and testament without her signature, it is valid, notwithstanding she may have afterward, at a different time, signed the will, and then acknowledged it before another subscribing witness."

It will be noticed that, in the cases referred to, the thing which the statute required the testator to do (sign the will) was done either before or at the time the witness attested it, although the testator may have subsequently, in the absence of the witness, performed the nonrequired or nonessential act of signing his name at the bottom of the will. So that these cases and others of their class do not conflict with, but rather uphold, the views which we have hereinbefore expressed. It will furthermore be seen that the facts in the Sechrest Case, 4 Met. (Ky.) 163, show that, at the time the witnesses were called upon to and did attest the will, all of the acts which the then law required the testator to do, including the attaching of his name to the will, had been done. In holding that the will therein involved was legally executed and entitled to probate, this court said: "It may be assumed that the name of Sechrest had been written to the paper before Henderson ever saw it, and certainly L.R.A.1916D.

before he attested it; his name is written out in full upon the paper as copied in this record, and the mark is placed between the Christian and surname. Henderson proves the mark was made after he subscribed it as a witness, but does not prove the name was written afterwards; he only proves that his name and Carter's were written after he saw it. So that Sechrest's name must have been subscribed to the paper before he saw it; and, after his name had thus been subscribed to the paper, he acknowledged it to be his will, in the presence of the two witnesses, who subscribed it as such,—which was a compliance with the requisitions of the statute,—and the placing of the mark to it, whether by Sechrest or Carter, was wholly unnecessary."

This court, in the case of Grubbs v. Marshall, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 870, 13 S. W. 447, upon the question under consideration, said: "However, it does not seem to us material whether he did actually make his mark in presence of the first witness or not, for it is shown his name was then subscribed by another in his presence and by his direction, which the statute makes equivalent to an actual subscription by the testator himself. And, although the second witness could not, nor did, testify he saw the name subscribed by such other person, he stated the testator made or retraced his mark. And as both of them testified the testator acknowledged the will, respectively, in their presence, we think the law was substantially complied with as to the manner of its execution, for it is not required nor do we see why it should be treated indispensable for subscribing witnesses to be present at the same time and place when the will is acknowledged, if it be, in fact, done in the presence of each of them. Maupin v. Woods, 1 Duv. 223."

And the case of Savage v. Bulger, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 763, 76 S. W. 361, quoted with approval from the Sechrest Case as follows: "It is not even material whether the names of the attesting witnesses, or that of the testator, be first subscribed, if the witnesses were present when the testator either wrote his name or acknowledged it as his signature."

In the very recent case of McKee v. McKee, 155 Ky. 738, 160 S. W. 261, this court said: "Clearly it was the purpose of the statute to so provide for the execution and attestation as to eliminate all possible danger of fraud or deception; in other words, to so require the execution and attestation as that the testator might certainly know that the paper which he signed was the selfsame paper which was attested, and to enable the attesting witnesses to know that the paper they attested was the same paper signed by the testator."

And to the same effect is this court's opinion in the case of Garnett v. Foston, 122 Ky. 195, 121 Am. St. Rep. 456, 91 S. W. 668, wherein this language is used: "Its [the statute] requisitions being similar in import and substance, if not so in phraseology, there is not much difficulty in determining that the acknowledgment of a will by the testator in the presence of the witnesses, though written and his name subscribed by another at another time, was a sufficient publication."

This language is taken from the case of Upchurch v. Upchurch, 16 B. Mon. 102.

It must not be forgotten that the requirement of the statute that the will, when not holographic, shall be attested by the required number of witnesses, and in the manner specified, is no part of the legal execution of the will by the testator. It is only for probative purposes; the statute confining the means of proving the will after testator's death to this method only, as our statute on conveyances requires a deed to be proven either by an acknowledgment before an officer authorized to take it, or before two subscribing witnesses. Ky. Stat. § 501. These formalities may appear upon the deed, still it will convey no title from the grantor, nor will it be admitted to record unless it bears the signature of the grantor. This is the holding of this court in the case of Helton v. Asher, 103 Ky. 730, 82 Am. St. Rep. 601, 46 S. W. 22, wherein it is said: "The instrument in question was invalid. The certificate of the clerk could not impart any validity to it. It was essential to its validity that it should have been signed by Helton. Had it been signed by him and acknowledged before the clerk, then it would have been a recordable instrument."

This section of the statute as to the acknowledge of deeds is no more specific as to what shall be embraced in the acknowledgment by the maker than is the statute with reference to the execution of wills. The rule as to what constitutes the act of acknowledgment by the makers, in each, is analogous. If, then, the signature of the maker must be attached to the deed and it shall constitute a part of the deed to be acknowledged, we fail to see why the signature of the testator should not also constitute a part of the paper to be acknowledged as his will.

We conclude, then, that while the direct question involved here was not presented in any of the cases to which we have referred from this court, yet the language employed in the opinions at least inferentially holds that the paper which the witness must attest, and which the testator must acknowledge, shall have been executed by the testator as prescribed by the statute in existence at the time. We are aware of the rule in this state to the effect that a substantial compliance with the statute is all that is required (Flood v. Pragoff, 79 Ky. 607, and cases herein cited), but this rule cannot be extended so as to dispense with an essential requirement of the statute made for the purpose of preventing fraud either upon the testator or those upon whom the law casts his property after his death. The paper in contest herein not having been executed before two witnesses in accordance with the statute as herein interpreted, it should not be admitted to probate as the will of Louis A. Miller.

It results, therefore, that the judgment of the Circuit Court manifesting a different view should be, and it is, reversed, with directions to refuse the probate of the paper as the last will and testament of Louis A. Miller, and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Annotation—Signature of witness to will before testator signs it.

The earlier cases on this question are discussed in the note to Brooks v. Woodson, 14 L.R.A. 160, and that to Re Horn, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1126.

The rule followed in LIMBACH v. BOLIN, that a signing by the witnesses before the signing by the testator is not good, has been followed in Barnes v. Chase (1911) 208 Mass. 490, 94 N. E. 694; Bioren v. Nesler (1910) 77 N. J. Eq. 560, 78 Atl. 201 (obiter); Re Manion, (1915) — N. J. —, 95 Atl. 988 (obiter).

In Re Kunkler (1914) 147 N. Y. Supp. 1094, it is stated that a testator must L.R.A.1916D.

sign his name to the will before the witnesses are requested to sign, as otherwise they have no signature or will to attest. The New York cases discussed in the earlier notes are cited to the proposition that the signing by the witnesses before the testator is not a compliance with the statute or a due execution of the will.

The will must be complete by signature at the time of attestation. Chisholm v. Ben, (1847) 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 408.

It is the theory of Simmons v. Leonard (1891) 91 Tenn. 183, 30 Am. Rep.

875, 18 S. W. 280, that it is the signature of the testator that must be attested. A signing by the witnesses prior to the signing by the testator is therefore insufficient.

It has been held that if the testator and witnesses sign their names as part of the same transaction, it is immaterial whether the testator signs his name before or after the witnesses sign. Re Silva, (1915) 169 Cal. 116, 145 Pac. 1015.

A subsequent acknowledgment or adoption by an attesting witness of his signature cannot be held sufficient or equivalent to attestation at that time where his signature was before that of the testator. Note in 14 L.R.A. 160.

This is especially true if the witnesses did not sign in testator's presence. Note in 14 L.R.A. 160.

As to whether it is necessary that witnesses see testator sign, or that they see his signature, see note to Dougherty v. Crandall, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 161, and supplemental note to Nunn v. Ehler, L.R.A.1915B, 87. W. A. E.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

PAUL BORELL

v.

CUMBERLAND TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH COMPANY et al.

(133 La. 630, 63 So. 247.)

Master and servant — electricity — trouble man — assumption of risk.

1. Where, neither by reason of the duty nor the place to which a person is assigned, is there any danger to him, save such as may arise from a particular act of his own, against which the knowledge that he possesses and the instructions which he has received should be sufficient to warn him, his commission of the act must be regarded as the sole, approximate cause of the injury which results therefrom. Thus where, by reason of a storm, the high voltage wires of an electric light company are brought into contact with the wires of a telephone company, and a well-informed trouble man, employed by the telephone company, is sent, with instructions, to locate the trouble and to report thereon, but not to attempt to clear the wires, his knowledge and instructions should be sufficient to warn him against touching the wires; and his taking hold of a telephone wire to find out whether it was in contact with an electric light wire is held to have been the sole, proximate cause of the injury that he sustained by reason of the fact that the telephone wire was in contact, direct or indirect, with the electric light wire and was carrying its voltage; and he has no action in damages against the corporation operating the electric light plant, any more than against the telephone company.

For other cases, see Proximate Cause, V.; also II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — wires blown down — negligence.

2. In order to hold a corporation operating an electric light plant liable in damages for injuries inflicted by its high voltage wires blown down at night in a storm and brought in contact with telephone wires, it should be shown either that the poles were rotten, or the installation otherwise defective, or that the company was guilty of laches in the matter of finding out that the wires were down or in the matter of shutting off the electricity after obtaining that information.

For other cases, see Electricity, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Negligence — contribution — effect.

3. Whether a person's own negligence is the sole proximate cause of an injury that he receives or is a cause contributing directly thereto, the result is the same. He has no action for the recovery of damages in either case.

For other cases, see Negligence, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Provosty, J., dissents.)

(March 31, 1913.)

CROSS APPEALS from the judgment of the Judicial District Court for the Parish of Acadia in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries; defendant telephone company appealing from a judgment in favor of plaintiff against it; and plaintiff appealing from a judgment rejecting his claim against the defendant

Headnotes by MONROE, J.

Note. — As to the duty of the master in respect to defective appliances which a servant is employed to repair, see note to Reed v. Moore, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 331; and as to the applicability of the rule as to safe place, where servants are engaged in the work of removing dangerous conditions, see note to Neagle v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 321.

As to injury to lineman through defect in L.R.A.1916D.

a pole or its appurtenances, see notes to Lynch v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co. 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 774, and Consolidated Gas, E. L. & P. Co. v. Chambers, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 509.

Upon the general question of a duty to prevent contact of wires carrying electric current, see note to Paducah Light & P. Co. v. Parkman, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 587.

city. Reversed on defendant's appeal. Affirmed on plaintiff's appeal.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Mr. J. O. Henriques for appellant Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Company.

Messrs. Mitchell & Bailey and Story & Pugh, for appellant Borell:

An employer must furnish his servant the means and appliances which the service requires for its efficient and safe performance, and if he fail in that respect, and an injury results, he is liable to the servant.

Clairain v. Western U. Tele. Co. 40 La. Ann. 178, 3 So. 625; Moses v. Giant Lumber Co. 114 La. 938, 38 So. 684; Foreman v. Eagle Rice Mill Co. 117 La. 227, 41 So. 555; Wilkinson, Personal Injuries, p. 32.

That a servant fully appreciates a danger incident to his employment does not relieve the master from every reasonable care and precaution to guard against every possible danger to him.

Lynch v. American Linseed Co. 194 N. Y. 574, 88 N. E. 1124.

In all occupations attended with great and unusual danger, there must be used all appliances readily attainable known to science, for the prevention of accidents, and the neglect to provide such readily attainable appliances is proof of culpable negligence.

Mather v. Rillston, 156 U. S. 391, 39 L. ed. 464, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464, 18 Mor. Min. Rep. 165.

A warning which only consists of the instruction by the master to his servant, "Be careful," constitutes no warning at all in contemplation of law, as such a warning enables no one to foresee danger; nor does such warning enlighten one how to avoid danger.

Powers v. Calcasieu Sugar Co. 48 La. Ann. 483, 19 So. 455.

The situation should be explained, the danger pointed out and unequivocally warned against.

Daly v. Kiel, 106 La. 174, 30 So. 254, 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 281.

It is actionable negligence not to warn an inexperienced servant of the dangers of the employment, and instruct him how to avoid them.

Parker v. Crowell & S. Lumber Co. 115 La. 464, 39 So. 445.

The employer is presumed to know the danger to which the employee will be subjected in the discharge of the duty to which he is assigned, and, if the latter be inexperienced, is bound to warn him of such danger.

Carter v. Fred W. Dubach Lumber Co. 113 La. 240, 36 So. 952; Burns v. Ruddock-Orleans Cypress Co. 114 La. 247, 38 So. 157.

L.R.A.1916D.

Where the employee is young and inexperienced, or the risk is latent or unusual and there is more than ordinary danger of getting hurt, the employee should be especially warned.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Blake, 11 C. C. A. 93, 27 U. S. App. 190, 63 Fed. 45; Berry v. Louisiana Saw Mill Co. 129 La. 688, 56 So. 639.

A servant is relieved of the imputation of contributory negligence from obeying an order of his master which exposes him to danger, unless the risk is so great, or the danger so obvious, that no prudent person would undertake it, even though ordered to do so by his master.

Lee v. Powell Bros. & S. Co. 126 La. 51, 52 So. 214.

Plea of contributory negligence will not avail if, by ordinary care on the part of defendant, the accident could have been avoided.

Inland & S. Coasting Co. v. Tolson, 139 U. S. 551-560; 35 L. ed. 270-273, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408-434, 36 L. ed. 485-494, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679, 12 Am. Neg. Cas. 659; McGuire v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 46 La. Ann. 1543, 16 So. 457; Stucke v. Orleans R. Co. 50 La. Ann. 172, 23 So. 342; Lampkin v. McCormick, 105 La. 418, 83 Am. St. Rep. 245, 29 So. 952.

It would be both unjust and impolitic to allow the master to avoid the penalty for his misconduct in neglecting to provide properly for the securing of his servants from injury.

Hunn v. Michigan C. R. Co. 78 Mich. 513, 7 L.R.A. 506, 44 N. W. 502; Troxler v. Southern R. Co. 124 N. C. 189, 44 L.R.A. 313, 70 Am. St. Rep. 580, 32 S. E. 550; Lutz v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 16 L.R.A. 819, and note, 6 N. M. 496, 30 Pac. 912; Faren v. Sellers, 39 La. Ann. 1011, 4 Am. St. Rep. 256, 3 So. 363.

The servant is only bound to see patent, not latent, defects.

Faren v. Sellers, supra; Myhan v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 41 La. Ann. 964, 7 L.R.A. 172, 17 Am. St. Rep. 436, 6 So. 799; McGinn v. McCormick, 109 La. 396, 33 So. 382.

The servant has a right to assume superior knowledge in his employer, to rely on his judgment, and to believe that he will not unnecessarily jeopardize his person and life by avoidable risks. And the employer is presumed to know the danger to which the employee will be subjected in the discharge of the duty to which he is assigned.

Myhan v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co.; Carter v. Fred W. Dubach Lumber Co.; and Burns v. Ruddock-Orleans Cypress Co., supra; Stucke v. Orleans R. Co. 50 La. Ann. 172, 30 So. 342.

Failure to have in operation a ground detector is gross and culpable negligence on the part of the city, and it will be held responsible for all damages resulting from injuries received by the plaintiff on account of the accident.

Kremer v. New York Edison Co. 186 N. Y. 557, 79 N. E. 1109.

Where injury results from the combined fault or negligence of two persons or corporations, both will be held liable in solido for the full amount of the damages sustained by the injured party.

Simmons v. Shreveport Gas, E. L. & P. Co. 116 La. 1034, 41 So. 248.

Mr. Percy T. Ogden, with Mr. Harry W. Gueno, for appellee City:

Even though the city of Crowley may be charged with a legal knowledge of the situation, the gross contributory negligence upon the part of the plaintiff Borell was certainly a concurring cause or the proximate and efficient cause of his own injury, and the city is not liable.

Ryan v. Louisville N. O. & T. R. Co. 44 La. Ann. 806, 11 So. 30; Dixon v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 47 La. Ann. 1147, 17 So. 696; 2 Thomp. Neg. pp. 946 et seq; McCarthy v. Whitney Iron Works Co. 48 La. Ann. 978, 20 So. 171; 1 Thomp. Neg. p. 216; Pennebaker v. San Joaquin Light & P. Co. 158 Cal. 579, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1099, 139 Am. St. Rep. 202, 112 Pac. 459, 1 N. C. C. A. 349; Consolidated Gas, E. L. & P. Co. v. Chambers, 112 Md. 324, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 509, 75 Atl. 241; Fickeisen v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 67 W. Va. 335, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 893, 67 S. E. 788; Bergin v. Southern New England Teleph. Co. 70 Conn. 54, 39 L.R.A. 192, 38 Atl. 888.

Provosty, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Pizzini Hotel and the Mitchell store in the town of Crowley stand within about 6 feet of each other. The roof of the front porch of the Mitchell store and the floor of the second-story gallery of the Pizzini Hotel are on the same level, and both extend over the sidewalk. The roof is flat and extends laterally across the narrow space between the two buildings, so that one may step upon it from the adjoining gallery. And anyone doing so finds himself opposite the space between the two buildings and near the telephone and electric light wires of the Mitchell building, which are attached to the side of the Pizzini building at and near the front corner of it.

During a wind and rain storm in the night two or more of the cable or lead wires of the electric light plant had broken in front of the Pizzini Hotel. One of the ends had fallen to the street pavement and lay there "spitting fire." Two others had dropped upon the roof of the front porch of the Mitchell store, and, this roof being of metal, had communicated to it the heavy electric current they carried.

Early in the morning complaints began coming to the office of the defendant company of telephones out of order. The trouble consisted of a buzzing sound upon the lines. The persons in the office knew that this was caused by the telephone and electric light wires being in close proximity to each other, though not in actual contact. Some twenty different complaints of this kind had already been registered at the defendant company's office by a quarter past 7 in the morning, when plaintiff, who was a trouble and line man of the defendant company, reached there for his day's work. The Pizzini Hotel and the Mitchell store were among the complainants, and plaintiff was sent at once to ascertain at what point the lines serving these two buildings were in proximity. When he came to the end of cable on the street pavement "spitting fire," he prudently picked it up and put it in the gutter. He then went into the Pizzini Hotel and up to the second-story front gallery, and stepped upon the iron roof of the Mitchell store opposite the space between the buildings. By simply looking at the wires he could then have ascertained whether they were in too close proximity or not. There was no necessity of his touching them. In fact, on being sent on this mission, he had been warned not to touch any wires. Thoughtlessly, for some reason he cannot explain, if for any, he took hold of the telephone wire. The telephone wire was grounded, so that by thus taking hold of it he completed the circuit between it and the electrically charged iron roof upon which he stood, and the result was that he received a shock that at once made him unconscious and caused him to topple over upon the iron roof. Fortunately just at that moment the power was shut off at the plant; information having reached there of the cables having been broken. He would else inevitably have been killed. As it was, his right hand and the back of his head were badly burnt.

For these injuries and for his sufferings he sues the defendant company and the town of Crowley in damages. The town of Crowley owns and operates the electric light plant.

The negligence alleged against the telephone company is that it did not furnish him with rubber boots and gloves with which to do his work, and that it sent him to this dangerous place without having sufficiently warned him of the danger.

The evidence shows that linemen and trouble men of telephone companies do not need and do not use rubber boots and gloves in doing their work; and it shows that plaintiff was not sent to do any dangerous work nor into any dangerous place, but simply to ascertain by ocular inspection at what point the wires had come in too close proximity to each other; and it shows, furthermore, that plaintiff was an experienced lineman whom the defendant company could not have had any reason to suspect of being as ignorant of the dangers from electricity as he now pretends that he was.

We fail to discover any negligence whatever on the part of the defendant company.

But the case stands differently with the town of Crowley.

"A municipal corporation has a dual character,—the one public and the other private. . . . In the former case its functions are political and governmental. . . . In its second character . . . that is, in the exercise of its purely municipal functions or the doing of those things which relate to special or private corporate purposes, the corporation stands upon the same footing with a private corporation, and will be held to the same responsibility with a private corporation for injuries resulting from its negligence." 28 Cyc. 1257.

See Pontchartrain R. Co. v. New Orleans, 27 La. Ann. 162; Stewart v. New Orleans, 9 La. Ann. 461, 61 Am. Dec. 218; Bennett v. New Orleans, 14 La. Ann. 120; New Orleans v. Kerr, 50 La. Ann. 413, 69 Am. St. Rep. 442, 23 So. 384; 28 Cyc. 1263; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1196.

"It is held, as a rule, that a city in supplying water or light to its inhabitants acts as a private corporation and is subject to the same duties and liabilities." 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1197.

Now plaintiff alleges that the defendant town was negligent in that it well knew the dangerous condition in which its electric wires were and yet took no steps to rectify the situation until after he had been injured.

There can be no question that to have left these broken ends of highly charged wire in the position in which plaintiff found them, would have been the grossest kind of negligence, making the defendant town responsible for all consequences, if the agents of the defendant town knew of this dangerous condition of things. The sole question must therefore be as to whether the agents of the town had such knowledge. The evidence shows that they had no knowledge of it; but if this condition of things had existed so long that it was their legal duty to have had knowledge of it, or if by the use of means which it was the legal duty of the defendant town to have provided, but which were not provided, they would have had knowledge of it, then the legal situation is as if they had such actual knowledge; or, in other words, the failure to have had such knowledge would then in itself constitute actionable negligence. Mitchell v. Charleston Light & P. Co. 45 S. C. 158, 31 L.R.A. 577, 22 S. E. 767; District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 463, 34 L. ed. 477, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990.

The evidence shows that there had been a storm during the night which might well have, as it actually did, caused the wires to fall, and that at so late an hour as that at which plaintiff was injured, when the telephone company was already sending its repair men on their ground, no steps had yet been taken by the agents of the defendant town to ascertain whether the storm had not disturbed the electric light wires and brought about a dangerous condition of things; the evidence also shows that, by means of an instrument known as a "ground detector," the person in charge of an electric light plant is enabled to know when a break has occurred in the wire of any circuit, and that the plant of the defendant was provided with such an instrument, but that it was out of order.

Premitting the point of whether enough time had not elapsed since the breaking of these wires for the defendant town to have been charged with legal knowledge of their condition, even apart from the facility afforded by such an instrument as the "ground detector" above mentioned (that is to say, even on the assumption of the agents of the town having had no other means than ordinary inspection for discovering such a break in the wires), we think that the clear legal duty rested upon the defendant town to have had this instrument at its plant, and to have kept it in good order, and to have shut off the current from any circuit the wires of which were shown by this instrument to be broken.

"Persons using dangerous agencies are required to use the utmost care to prevent injuries, and to adopt every known safeguard." 29 Cyc. 460; Potts v. Shreveport Belt R. Co. 110 La. 1, 98 Am. St. Rep. 452, 34 So. 103, and cases there cited.

Electrical companies are required to "have due regard to the existing state of science and of the art in question." 15 Cyc. 472. Had this instrument been in good order, the fact of these wires being broken would have been known, and the persons in charge of the plant would have cut off the circuit to which these wires belonged long before the accident to plaintiff.

Three of the fingers of plaintiff's right hand (the middle and the little finger and that between) were so badly burnt that they have become rigid and bent in, so as to be of no use; in fact, worse than if amputated. After about a year the skin had grown back over the burnt place on plaintiff's scalp; and the disfigurement resulting therefrom is now but slight, if any. Plaintiff's sufferings in the healing process were great and long protracted. The judge dismissed the suit as against the town, and gave judgment against the telephone company for $5,000. We have taken a different view in regard to which one of the defendants is liable, but are not disposed to disagree with the view thus taken by the judge as to the proper amount of damages to be allowed in the case. In the case of Smullins v. Shreveport Gas, E. L. & P. Co. 116 La. 1034, 41 So. 248, where the injuries were very similar, a verdict of $8,000 was approved.

The judgment appealed from is set aside, and it is now ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the suit of plaintiff be dismissed as against the Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Company, and that as against the town of Crowley the plaintiff Paul Borell have judgment in the sum of $5,000, with legal interest from this date, and the costs of suit.

A rehearing having been granted, Monroe, J., on October 20, 1913, handed down the following supplementary opinion:

This court predicated its judgment rejecting plaintiff's demand against the telephone company upon certain findings of fact, and plaintiff has not complained of that judgment. Those findings were in substance as follows, to wit: That, by reason of a storm during the night, certain heavily charged wires of the electric company had been thrown down, thereby interfering with the operation of the wires of the telephone company; that plaintiff, an experienced lineman, whom the telephone company "could not have had any reason to suspect of being as ignorant of the dangers from electricity as he now pretends," was sent at 7:30 o'clock on the morning of February 11th simply to ascertain by ocular inspection at what point the wires had come in too close proximity to each other, and was warned not to touch the wires; that for the purposes of his mission, and in view of his experience and of the special warning so given, neither the work nor the place to which he was thus assigned was dangerous, but that "thoughtlessly, and for L.R.A.1916D.

some reason he cannot explain, if for any, he took hold of the telephone wire," though two of the wires of the electric company were lying across the metal roof on which he was standing, and another, the broken end of which was "spitting fire," had been "prudently" picked up by him from the sidewalk and thrown into the gutter. Our reconsideration of the case strengthens the conviction that, though plaintiff, perhaps, lacked that realizing sense of the action and effect of electricity which one can imagine would be derived from witnessing a tragedy or being the victim of a near tragedy caused by it, he nevertheless knew, from precept and example, that, in the situation in which he was placed, all wires were to be dealt with as "hot" wires and left untouched, besides which he had been instructed that he was merely to locate the trouble, which, he admits, is done, and could have been done on that occasion, by ocular inspection, and was not to attempt to clear the wires. Under such circumstances, there being no danger to him, either in the duty or the place to which he was assigned, save such as might arise from a particular act of his own, against which the knowledge that he possessed and the instruction which he had received should have been sufficient to warn him, his commission of the act was as surely the sole, proximate cause of the injury that he received as the picking up of a newly made horseshoe, which the visitor in a blacksmith's shop knows is likely to be hot, is the cause of a burned hand. The poles, wires, and attachments, etc., of the defendant were in good order, and the temporary derangement of the wires had been caused by a wind and rain storm of some violence. The witnesses speak of it as having occurred during the preceding night, and those who testify at all as to the time express the opinion that the storm was probably most violent towards morning. W. C. Rose, city electrician, in charge of the lighting plant, says: "The wind was blowing very high and there was quite a bit of electricity, and in the early hours of the morning there was quite a heavy rainfall; . . . it was after midnight that the hardest part came up."

John McIlhinney, superintendent of the plant, says: "There was a storm some time early in the morning. . . . To the best of my knowledge, it was just before daylight."

Neither of the witnesses speaks more definitely or from positive knowledge as to the time (though it is conceded that the derangement of the wires was attributable to the storm), and we are not just now advised of the time at which day breaks in the parish of Acadia upon the 11th of February. We imagine, however, that it is not very long before 7 o'clock, and it was about that time that Mr. Rose, being informed that some of the electric light wires had been blown down near the Pizzini Hotel and the Mitchell store, directed a messenger to hurry to the plant and tell the engineer to "shut down," which was done immediately and just in time to save the life of the defendant, who was then lying senseless on the roof of Mitchell's gallery with the telephone wire grasped in his hands, 1,100 volts of electricity passing through his body, and the metal of the roof burning the scalp from the back of his head. Although, therefore, we do not know whether the interval between the blowing down of the wires and the accident was one of minutes or hours, we do know that, after learning that the wires were down, the officers of the plant lost no time in cutting off the electricity from them, and, we may add, lost no time in replacing the wires in position. Upon the former hearing of the case, the view was adopted that the city of Crowley should be held liable because it has and should have in its plant an instrument called a "ground indicator," by means of which the person in charge should have been enabled to know of the grounding of the wires, but that the instrument was not then in good order, and that the city was to blame for its condition. The conclusion thus reached leaves out the factor of the plaintiff's negligence; and, moreover, it appears that the "ground detector" does not, like a clock or a steam gauge, impart its information automatically, but does so only when specially called on. In other words, the instrument is one whereby certain tests may be applied, at the will of the operator, and certain results obtained; and, as it is hardly to be expected that it will be kept in operation continuously, the question to be here considered is: Assuming that it had been in good order, and that tests had been made at reasonable intervals, or that a test had been made without unreasonable delay after the storm whereby defendant's electric light wires were blown down, would the derangement of the wires have been ascertained any sooner than it was ascertained? To answer that question it would be necessary for us to know at what time, with reference to that at which the officers of the plant were informed of it, the wires were blown down, and the transcript does not furnish that information; hence the alleged negligence of the city of Crowley, so far as it might affect this case, is not established. Finally, if negligence on the part of the city were established, and we should hold that the negligence of the plaintiff were not the sole, proximate cause of the accident, there can be no doubt that he was negligent, and no doubt that his negligence, directly and immediately, contributed to the accident, and he could not recover for that reason. The judgment heretofore handed down having become final in so far as plaintiff's demand against the telephone company is concerned, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said judgment, in so far as it condemns the city of Crowley, be set aside, and that the judgment appealed from be now in that respect annulled, avoided, and reversed, the demand of the plaintiff against said city rejected, and this suit dismissed, at plaintiff's cost in both courts.

Provosty, J., dissents, adhering to the original opinion.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

B. F. STURTEVANT COMPANY, Resp't.,

v.

FIREPROOF FILM COMPANY, Appt.

(216 N. Y. 199, 110 N. E. 440.)

Contract — effect of statement on margin of paper.

The mere fact that a proposal for contract on behalf of a corporation by one having authority to bind the corporation is written upon stationery containing a statement on the margin in small type that all proposals are subject to approval of the executive office, which is not referred to in or made part of the proposal, does not make approval by the executive office and notification of the other contracting party necessary to bind him to his written acceptance of the proposal.

For other cases, see Contracts, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Willard Bartlett, Ch. J., and Chase, J., dissent.)

(November 16, 1915.)

Note. — For matter in letterhead, bill-head, or on margin of paper on which contract is written as part of contract or as notice affecting the rights of the parties, see annotation following this case, post, 1072. L.R.A. 1916D.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for Monroe County in plaintiff's favor, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, in an action brought to recover damages for breach of an alleged executory contract. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Adolph J. Rodenbeck and Charles F. Lauer, for appellant:

The alleged transaction did not create a contract between the parties.

Moulton v. Kershaw, 59 Wis. 316, 48 Am. Rep. 516, 18 N. W. 172; Booth v. Milliken, 127 App. Div. 522, 111 N. Y. Supp. 791, affirmed in 194 N. Y. 553, 87 N. E. 1115; Quick v. Wheeler, 78 N. Y. 300; Chicago & G. E. R. Co. v. Dane, 43 N. Y. 240; Commercial Wood & Cement Co. v. Northampton Portland Cement Co. 115 App. Div. 388, 100 N. Y. Supp. 960, affirmed in 190 N. Y. 1, 123 Am. St. Rep. 529, 82 N. E. 730; Jackson v. Alpha Portland Cement Co. 122 App. Div. 345, 106 N. Y. Supp. 1052; Automatic Vending Co. v. Heins, 39 Misc. 788, 81 N. Y. Supp. 301; Rafolovitz v. American Tobacco Co. 73 Hun, 87, 25 N. Y. Supp. 1036; White v. Allen Kingston Motor Car Co. 69 Misc. 627, 126 N. Y. Supp. 150; Velie Motor Car Co. v. Kopmeier Motor Car Co. 114 C. C. A. 284, 194 Fed. 324; McFarlane v. York, 90 Ark. 89, 117 S. W. 775; 9 Cyc. 248; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 139; Smyth v. Greacen, 100 App. Div. 276, 91 N. Y. Supp. 450; Blum v. Daly, 22 Misc. 342, 49 N. Y. Supp. 136; Page, Contr. § 17; Wilenshik v. Messler, 48 Misc. 362, 95 N. Y. Supp. 500; Durkee v. Schultz, 122 Iowa, 410, 98 N. W. 149; Howell v. Maine, 127 Ga. 574, 56 S. E. 771; Reid v. Northwestern Implement & Wagon Co. 79 Minn. 369, 82 N. W. 672; Robinson & Co. v. Ralph, 74 Neb. 55, 103 N. W. 1044; Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Evans, 139 Fed. 860; Harvey v. Duffey, 99 Cal. 401, 33 Pac. 897; Bauman v. McManus, 75 Kan. 106, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1138, 89 Pac. 15; Cable Co. v. Hancock, 2 Ga. App. 73, 58 S. E. 319; Cary v. Appo, 84 N. Y. Supp. 569; Challenge Wind & Feed Mill Co. v. Kerr, 93 Mich. 328, 53 N. W. 555; Peck v. Freese, 101 Mich. 321, 59 N. W. 600; Toledo Computing Scale Co. v. Stephens, 96 Ark. 606, 132 S. W. 926; Cedar Rapids Nat. Bank v. McCord, 98 Ark. 81, 135 S. W. 365; L. A. Becker Co. v. Alvey, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 832, 86 S. W. 974; Atlanta Buggy Co. v. Hess Spring & Axle Co. 124 Ga. 338, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 431, 52 S. E. 613; Martin v. Wilms, 61 Ill. App. 108.

Kuhn had no authority to act for defendant in the acceptance of the proposal.

Wilson v. Kings County Elev. R. Co. 114 N. Y. 491, 21 N. E. 1015; Coney Islands Automobile Race Co. v. Boyton, 87 App. Div. 251, 84 N. Y. Supp. 347; Commercial Wood & Cement Co. v. Northampton Portland Cement Co. 190 N. Y. 1, 123 Am. St. Rep. 529, 82 N. E. 730; First Nat. Bank v. L.R.A.1916D.

Council Bluffs City Waterworks Co. 56 Hun, 412, 9 N. Y. Supp. 859; Schuykil. & D. Improv. Co. v. Munson, 14 Wall. 442, 20 L. ed. 867; Linkauf v. Lombard, 137 N. Y. 417, 20 L.R.A. 48, 33 Am. St. Rep. 743, 33 N. E. 472; Fealey v. Bull, 163 N. Y. 397, 57 N. E. 631; Alexander v. Cauldwell, 83 N. Y. 480, 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 650; Risley v. Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. 1 Hun, 202; Jemison v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 122 N. Y. 135, 9 L.R.A. 708, 19 Am. St. Rep. 482, 25 N. E. 264; First Nat. Bank v. Ocean Nat. Bank, 60 N. Y. 278, 19 Am. Rep. 181; Mathias v. White Sulphur Springs Asso. 19 Mont. 359, 48 Pac. 624.

Mr. Harry Otis Poole, for respondent:

There was no error of law as to the power of Kuhn to bind the defendant.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 852, 854; Cone v. Empire Plaid Mills, 12 App. Div. 314, 42 N. Y. Supp. 160; Phillips v. Campbell, 43 N. Y. 271; Olcott v. Tioga R. Co. 27 N. Y. 559, 84 Am. Dec. 298; Pratt v. Hudson River R. Co. 21 N. Y. 305; Rathbun v. Snow, 123 N. Y. 343, 10 L.R.A. 355, 25 N. E. 379; De Groff v. American Linen Thread Co. 21 N. Y. 124; Cook, Corp. 6th ed. 2353, 2356; Martin v. Niagara Falls Paper Mfg. Co. 122 N. Y. 165, 25 N. E. 303; Hastings v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 138 N. Y. 479, 34 N. E. 289; Oakes v. Cattaraugus Water Co. 143 N. Y. 436, 26 L.R.A. 544, 38 N. E. 461.

The rule of damages laid down by the trial court was proper.

Masterton v. Brooklyn, 7 Hill, 61, 42 Am. Dec. 38; United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 338, 344, 28 L. ed. 168, 170, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 81; Long Island Contracting & Supply Co. v. New York, 204 N. Y. 73, 97 N. E. 483; Wakeman v. Wheeler & W. Mfg. Co. 101 N. Y. 205, 54 Am. Rep. 676, 4 N. E. 264; Taylor v. Bradley, 39 N. Y. 129, 100 Am. Dec. 415; Thomas Gordon Malting Co. v. Bartels Brewing Co. 206 N. Y. 529, 100 N. E. 457, 461; Todd v. Gamble, 148 N. Y. 382, 52 L.R.A. 225, 42 N. E. 982; Dillon v. Anderson, 43 N. Y. 231.

The points made by defendant that the contract was only a quotation, and not binding because not approved by plaintiff's executive office, are not well taken.

French v. Carhart, 1 N. Y. 96; Nicoll v. Sands, 131 N. Y. 24, 29 N. E. 818; Woolsey v. Funke, 121 N. Y. 87, 24 N. E. 191; Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. v. Dutcher, 95 U. S. 269, 273, 24 L. ed. 410, 411; Seymour v. Warren, 179 N. Y. 6, 71 N. E. 260; Tracy v. Albany Exch. Co. 7 N. Y. 474, 57 Am. Dec. 583.

Seabury, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is brought to recover damages for the breach of an alleged contract. The plaintiff and defendant are foreign corporations. The plaintiff is a designer and builder of heating and ventilating and drying apparatus. The defendant was engaged in building a factory for the manufacture and sale of motion picture films. On December 29, 1911, the plaintiff submitted to the defendant an elaborate "proposal and specifications," which had been prepared after consultation with a representative of the defendant for the performance by the plaintiff of the work therein specified. The "proposal and specifications" was in the form of a letter addressed to the defendant, and stated that: "Supplementing our quotation of December 6th, we beg to quote you upon the following apparatus," etc.

The letter was typewritten, and describes in detail the apparatus, and specifies the terms, price, and time of delivery. The specifications that are attached to the letter are printed, although the "dimensions and data" relating to the apparatus are supplemented by typewritten statements. The letter is signed, "B. F. Sturtevant Company, by J. L. Williamson." Upon the letter is indorsed the following:

"Accepted: The Fireproof Film Company. H. Kuhn, Vice President and Treasurer. Date, December 30, 1911."

The plaintiff actually commenced work under this alleged contract on January 1, 1912. On January 5, 1912, the defendant sent a letter to the plaintiff, which was received several days later, stating that "the contract for fans that was signed by me was to be submitted to the board of directors for their approval. This is what I omitted to tell you. So please hold off with same until I send it on to St. Louis to our president and board of directors. I have no doubt that they will accept the same, but, if not, I shall have to cancel the contract. "Yours very truly, Fireproof Film Company, H. Kuhn, Treasurer."

Several letters passed between the parties, and on February 10, 1912, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff:

"We notify you herewith that we will have to cancel the contract for fans for the Fireproof Film Company."

In its answer interposed in this action the defendant denied that it entered into any contract with the plaintiff, and alleged "that on December 30, 1911, plaintiff and defendant's vice president and treasurer executed a paper purporting to be a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, which paper and alleged contract was executed by the vice president and treasurer of the defendant without the express or implied authority of defendant, its board of directors, or its building committee, and L.R.A.1916D.

said paper and alleged contract was subject to approval by defendant, and plaintiff was so notified January 5, 1912, and said paper, purporting to be an alleged contract between the plaintiff and defendant, was finally disapproved and canceled on February 10, 1912, by defendant, and never was in force and binding upon the defendant, and never constituted a contract between the plaintiff and defendant."

Upon the trial the defendant sought to defend upon the ground that Kuhn, its vice president and treasurer, was without authority to sign the contract. Satisfactory proof of Kuhn's authority to act for the defendant was presented, and the court submitted to the jury the question as to whether Kuhn was authorized to act for the defendant. It appears from the letters quoted above and the allegations of the defendant's answer that the defendant disputed its liability upon the ground that Kuhn was not its authorized agent. Upon this appeal it still adheres to this contention, but the principal ground urged for the reversal of the judgment is that there was no contract between the parties, because at the bottom of the first page of the plaintiff's office stationery, upon which the proposal was written, appear the words: "All agreements are contingent upon strikes, fire, accidents, or delays beyond our control. All prices are subject to change without notice, and all contracts and orders taken are subject to the approval of the executive office at Hyde Park, Massachusetts."

These sentences are printed in very small type, and the first typewritten numeral that indicates the page number is typewritten over this printed matter. The appellant claims that the proposal was given "subject to the approval of the executive office at Hyde Park, Massachusetts," and that, as there was no proof that this approval was given and communicated to it, there was no contract. It appears clearly that Williamson had authority to make the contract, and that his action in so doing was ratified by the executive office of the plaintiff at Hyde Park, Massachusetts. The plaintiff actually commenced to perform the work, and continued working under the contract until it received the notice of the defendant that it had canceled the contract. The point now earnestly insisted upon was not litigated upon the trial, and seems to be an afterthought that occurred to the defendant when it failed to defeat the plaintiff's claim on the ground that its vice president and treasurer, Kuhn, was not authorized to make the contract in its behalf. The claim that is now urged rests entirely upon the contention that the clause,

"all contracts or orders taken are subject to the approval of the executive office at Hyde Park, Massachusetts," is to be deemed a part of the proposal. If this provision was a part of the proposal, there could be no proof of a contract in the absence of evidence that the order was approved, and that the defendant had been notified of that fact. In view of the manner in which this provision is printed upon the stationery of the plaintiff, it cannot be held, as a matter of law, that it was incorporated in and a part of the proposal. The language of the proposal is clear and explicit, and this provision, which is printed in small type, cannot be allowed to change, alter, or modify it, unless it was a part of the proposal. It was not incorporated in the body of the proposal or referred to in it. No suggestion was made, either in the pleadings or the proof, that it was a part of the proposal. If an issue had been raised upon the trial whether it was a part of the proposal, that issue would have presented a question of fact to be determined by the jury. As no such question was raised upon the trial, and as it does not appear from an inspection of the proposal that this provision was a part of it, the defendant is not now in a position to secure the reversal of this judgment upon this ground. When an offer, proposal, or contract is expressed in clear and explicit terms, matter printed in small type at the top or bottom of the office stationery of the writer, where it is not easily seen, which is not in the body of the instrument or referred to therein, is not necessarily to be considered as a part of such offer, proposal, or contract. In Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 327, 37 L. ed. 1093, 1099, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 99, 103, it was said that "the contract being clearly expressed in writing, the printed billhead of the invoice can, upon no well-settled rule, control, modify, or alter it."

In Summers v. Hibbard, 153 Ill. 102, 109, 46 Am. St. Rep. 872, 38 N. E. 899, the court said: "The printed words were not in the body of the letter or referred to therein. The fact that they were printed at the head of their letterheads would not have the effect of preventing appellants from entering into an unconditional contract of sale."

In R. J. Menz Lumber Co. v. E. J. Mc-Neeley & Co. 58 Wash. 223, 229, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1007, 108 Pac. 621, it was said that "the printed matter on the letterheads was not referred to in either the order or the acceptance, and is not a part of the contract. . . . The construction contended for by the respondent would make that which is an absolute, unqualified acceptance upon its face a conditional one by reference to a letterhead which was not referred to by either parties."

The other grounds upon which the appellant asks a reversal of the judgment are not such as to warrant discussion.

I advise that the judgment be affirmed, with costs.

Cuddeback, Cardozo, and Pound, JJ., concur. Collin, J., concurs in result.

Willard Bartlett, Ch. J., and Chase, J., dissent.

Annotation—Matter in letterhead, billhead, or on margin of paper on which contract is written as part of contract or as notice affecting the rights of the parties.

This note is, of course, not concerned with the comparative weight and effect of written or printed matter which appears as a formal part of the contract; but is concerned only with cases where the matter in question is not a formal part of the contract.

It is a well-settled rule of law that where part of a contract is written and part is printed, and the written and printed parts are apparently inconsistent or there is reasonable doubt as to the sense and meaning of the whole, the words in writing will control the construction of the contract. The reason why greater effect is given to the written than to the printed part of a contract if they are inconsistent is that the written words are the immediate L.R.A.1916D.

language and terms selected by the parties themselves for the expression of their meaning, while the printed form is intended for general use without reference to particular objects and aims. It would seem that there is more reason and occasion for applying this rule in a case where the words in print are separate and apart from the writing that appears upon the paper, and in a place where one would not be likely to look for limitations upon that which is written. Accordingly, a printed billhead or letterhead can have little or no influence in changing the clear and explicit language of a contract written on such form. 6 R. C. L. p. 847, § 237.

The following cases support B. F. STURTEVANT CO. v. FIREPROOF FILM CO.

ante, 1069, in holding that the marginal statement there involved is not a part of the contract:

Thus, as stated in Sturm v. Boker (1893) 150 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 1093, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 99: "The words, 'Mr. H. Sturm in joint account with Hermann Boker & Co.,' or 'bought of Hermann Boker & Co. in joint account' in the bill-head, cannot be allowed to control the express written terms contained in the contract as set forth in the letters. A printed billhead can have little or no influence in changing the clear and explicit language of the letters, and it in no way controls, modifies, or alters the terms of the contract. The purpose and object of the bill was to give a description and valuation of the articles to which the contract as embraced in the letters had reference, their description being important if the articles had to be returned, and their price or valuation necessary if they were sold and profits were made for division. The contract being clearly expressed in writing, the printed billhead of the invoice can, upon no well-settled rule, control, modify, or alter it."

So, the words, "quotations not binding until orders are accepted, and are then subject to all contingencies beyond our control, advances in mining or rates of transportation; invoice weights at point of shipment to govern settlements,"—printed upon a letter have been held not competent to vary the explicit terms contained in the letter itself. Olson v. Wabash Coal Co. (1906) 126 Ill. App. 253.

So, it was held in Summers v. Hibbard (1894) 153 Ill. 102, 46 Am. St. Rep. 872, 38 N. E. 899, affirming (1893) 50 Ill. App. 381, that the words, "all sales subject to strikes and accidents," printed on the caption of the paper on which was written the unqualified acceptance of a contract of purchase, did not have the effect of reading them into the agreement thereby consummated. The court said: "The mere fact that appellants wrote their acceptance on a blank form for letters at the top of which were printed the words, 'all sales subject to strikes and accidents,' no more made those words a part of the contract than they made the other words there printed, 'Summers Bros. & Co. Manufacturers of box-annealed common and refined sheet-iron,' a part of the contract. The offer was absolute. The written acceptance which they themselves wrote was just as absolute. The printed words were not in the body of the letter or referred to therein. The fact that they were printed at the head of their letterheads would not have the effect of preventing appellants from entering into an unconditional contract of sale."

So, in R. J. Menz Lumber Co. v. E. J. McNeeley & Co. (1910) 58 Wash. 223, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1007, 108 Pac. 621, it is held that printed matter in the heads of letters upon which a contract is written, which is not referred to in the writing, is not a part of the contract.

So, it is held in Amherst Invest. Co. v. Meacham (1912) 69 Wash. 284, 124 Pac. 682, that the marginal words "listed by Tilton," being a memorandum of the subject-matter of the contract for the convenience of one of the parties thereto, was inadmissible to aid in the construction of the contract, where the contract was complete in itself, did not refer to the memorandum or any other writing, and the two writings were obviously independent of each other.

Where it was urged that because certain of the terms of the original contract were notified to the subcontractor by printing them on the back of his contract, the latter was deemed to have assumed them, the court in Lawton v. Waite (Lawton v. Chilton) (1899) 103 Wis. 244, 45 L.R.A. 616, 79 N. W. 321, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 403, stated that this position was not tenable, observing that the terms were not printed as a part of the subcontract, but merely as information of the terms of the original; and they were assumed by the subcontractor only to the extent specified over his signature, and that was only so far as they regulated his undertaking to carry the mails.

In Patch v. Smith (1905) 105 App. Div. 208, 94 N. Y. Supp. 692, it was held that a memorandum of sale of lumber written on the face of a printed blank, used by the seller when customers ordered lumber from him, but which was not appropriate for use when he ordered lumber from another, was complete in itself; and the matter, "this order is subject to acceptance at the main office," printed at the bottom of the blank over the seller's name constituted no part of the contract of sale evidenced by the memorandum.

In Yorston v. Brown (1901) 178 Mass. 103, 59 N. E. 654, it was held competent for the defendant to refer to the heading on the blank furnished by the plaintiff, used in giving an order for an engraving and for its publication in the "Portrait Gallery and Biographical History volume of the above-named work," in order to show that the order was given to plaintiff as the publisher of "Gould's History of Free Masonry," the engraving having in fact been published in a volume which plaintiff claimed was the Portrait Gallery and Biographical History volume of that work, but the title of which made no reference to that work. It was also held that the heading, in connection with other evidence in the case, established the defendant's contention in this respect. The case was distinguished from Schenck v. Saunders, 13 Gray (Mass.) 37, and Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 320, 37 L. ed. 1098, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 99, upon the ground that in those cases one of the parties sought to add to the terms of a contract, which was clearly set forth in writing by a statement in his own billhead under which he had made out an invoice of the goods covered by the contract.

It will be observed that the matter in B. F. STURTEVANT CO. v. FIREPROOF FILM CO. ante, 1069, deemed not to have been a part of the contract, is printed on the margin in very small type.

But in Poel v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. (1915) 216 N. Y. 310, 110 N. E. 619, where certain conditional clauses printed on an order for goods were held to form a part of the contract, the matter being in clear type and plainly visible, the court said: "In the present case the printed clauses are to the left of the signature of the defendant. They are printed in clear type under a caption printed in type larger than the other type, which caption plainly reads: 'Conditions on which the above order is given.' The printed clauses are at least as plain and as prominently displayed upon the face of the order as the written matter contained therein. They are not in conflict with that which is written. Under these circumstances they must be deemed to be a part of the order, and cannot be eliminated therefrom by the court upon an inference as to the intention of the parties which is not reflected in the order or in any evidence that was received upon the trial. The clause requiring a prompt acknowledgment by the plaintiffs of the defendant's offer as a condition to its acceptance was not in conflict with any of the provisions expressed in that offer, either written or printed, and must, therefore, be given effect." The court citing B. F. STURTEVANT CO. v. FIREPROOF FILM CO.; Sturm v. Boker (U. S.) supra; Summers v. Hibbard (1894) 153 Ill. 102, 46 Am. St. L.R.A.1916D.

Rep. 872, 38 N. E. 899, affirming (1893) 50 Ill. App. 381; and R. J. Menz Lumber Co. v. E. J. McNeely & Co. (1910) 58 Wash. 223, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1007, 108 Pac. 621,—recognizes that printed matter has been accorded little influence in changing the clear and explicit language of a contract, where it was obscure in type, or placed where it would not be likely to be seen, or where it was evidently not intended to be incorporated in the contract.

Where the words, "guarantee as per cat." were penciled on the margin of a written contract, it was held in Craig v. Chicago Coach & Carriage Co. (1912) 172 Ill. App. 564,—an action for breach of warranty of an automobile,—that, in explanation of the word "guarantee," evidence tending to prove that the words, "as per cat.," referred to the catalogue, and were added without plaintiff's knowledge after the contract was signed, was admissible. The court said: "If it be true, as the evidence of plaintiff's witnesses tended to prove, that the words, 'as per cat.,' were inserted in the contract after the sale, and that at the time of the sale the only statement of warranty or guarantee thereon was merely the word 'guarantee,' then it was competent for the plaintiff to show, if he could, the terms of such guarantee."

This note is not concerned with such cases as Dickson v. Conde (1897) 148 Ind. 279, 46 N. E. 998, wherein it is stated to be well settled that the parties to a written agreement may make a writing on another paper, or on the same paper, a part of the agreement, by so providing in the agreement signed. In this case an unsigned provision following the signatures of the parties to a written contract was held to be a part of the contract, where the words, "this agreement is further continued below," appeared in the body of the contract above the signatures. J. D. C.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

J. A. BENNETT et al.

v.

WINSTON-SALEM SOUTH-BOUND RAILWAY COMPANY, Impleaded, etc., Appt.

(170 N. C. 389, 87 S. E. 133.)

Eminent domain — raising grade of street — liability of railroad.

1. A railroad company which, for its own purposes, raises the grade of a street to carry it over its tracks, is, although it acts under authority of the municipality, liable in damages for the interference thereby caused to the abutting owner's access to the street.

For other cases, see Eminent Domain, III. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Witness — cross-examination — testing value of opinion.

2. A witness who has placed the value of a lot alleged to have been injured by an exercise of the right of eminent domain very low may, on cross-examination, be asked what he realized from the sale of his own property, for the purpose of testing the value of his opinion, if there is evidence of similarity in the conditions, surroundings, and value of the two lots.

For other cases, see Witnesses, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 8, 1915.)

APPEAL by the defendant railway company from a judgment of the Superior Court for Forsyth County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages for injury to their property, caused by the alleged negligent construction of a bridge and its approaches. Affirmed.

Statement by Walker, J.:

This action was brought by the plaintiffs against the appealing defendant and the city of Winston-Salem to recover damages for injury to their lot in said city, caused by the construction of a bridge or a viaduct, and the approaches thereto, along Bank street, in said city, and between Liberty and Elm streets. It appears in the case that the defendant railroad company had laid a part of its track across Elm street at grade, and desiring to raise the grade of the street, and for that purpose to build the bridge in question and construct the approaches thereto, it obtained permission from the city to do so, upon giving a bond to indemnify it against the damages. The railroad company then proceeded with the work, constructed the bridge, and raised the level of the street in such a way that ingress and egress to the plaintiffs' lot was so obstructed as to greatly impair the value of the property. This was the allegation of the plaintiffs, and there was proof to sustain it, though it was denied by the defendant, which alleged that the work was done by the permission of the city and under its authority, and was also carefully performed according to a correct plan. The case was submitted to the jury

Note. — For liability of railroad company to abutting owner for damages from change of grade of highway, necessary to carry it across tracks, see annotation following this case, post, 1078.
L.R.A.1916D.

upon the following issue: "Has the plaintiffs' property been damaged by the erection of the bridge along Bank street as alleged, and, if so, in what amount? A. Yes; $2,250."

Judgment was rendered upon the verdict and the defendant railway company appealed, and reserved several exceptions to the rulings and judgment of the court.

Messrs. Watson, Buxton, & Watson for appellant.

Mr. Louis M. Swink for appellees:

Anyone injured by means of the construction of the bridge would have the right to sue on this contract, as a contract made for his benefit.

Gastonia v. McEntee-Peterson Engineering Co. 131 N. C. 363, 42 S. E. 858; Gorrell v. Greensboro Water Supply Co. 124 N. C. 328, 46 L.R.A. 513, 70 Am. St. Rep. 598, 32 S. E. 720; Shoaf v. Palatine Ins. Co. 127 N. C. 308, 80 Am. St. Rep. 804, 37 S. E. 461.

Defendant was liable for the damages caused to plaintiff.

Reining v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 128 N. Y. 168, 14 L.R.A. 133, 28 N. E. 640; Brown v. Asheville Electric Co. 138 N. C. 536, 69 L.R.A. 631, 107 Am. St. Rep. 554, 51 S. E. 62; Walters v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 120 Md. 644, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1128, 88 Atl. 47; Egerer v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 14 L.R.A. 381, and note, 130 N. Y. 108, 29 N. E. 95; Muhlker v. New York & H. R. Co. 197 U. S. 565, 567, 49 L. ed. 876, 877, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 522; Vanderlip v. Grand Rapids, 16 Am. St. Rep. 607, and note, 73 Mich. 522, 3 L.R.A. 247, 41 N. W. 677; White v. Northwestern North Carolina R. Co. 113 N. C. 611, 22 L.R.A. 627, 37 Am. St. Rep. 639, 18 S. E. 330; Royster Guano Co. v. Lumber Co. 168 N. C. 337, 84 S. E. 346; Butler v. Penn Tobacco Co. 152 N. C. 416, 136 Am. St. Rep. 831, 68 S. E. 12; Hester v. Durham Traction Co. 138 N. C. 293, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 981, 50 S. E. 711; Stratford v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 133, 32 S. E. 394; Merrick v. Intramontaine R. Co. 118 N. C. 1081, 24 S. E. 667.

The question asked the witness on cross-examination for the purpose of testing his knowledge, or the truth of the statements about which he was testifying, was within the rule laid down in Lloyd v. Venable, 168 N. C. 531, 84 S. E. 855, and Raleigh, C. & S. R. Co. v. Mecklenburg Mfg. Co. 169 N. C. 156, 85 S. E. 395.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is apparent, from the entire record in this case, that the railway company, in constructing the bridge and its approaches, was acting in its own behalf and for its own use and benefit, although it had obtained the permission of the city to do the work, and the same was done with its consent, but the work was not done by the city in the exercise of its governmental function, through the defendant, so as to protect the latter from liability except for negligence. It is well settled with us, and it is very generally held in other jurisdictions, that, unless otherwise provided by the Constitution or statute, the owner of property abutting on a street cannot recover for any damage to his property caused by a change in the grade of the street under proper municipal authority, where there is no negligence in the method or manner of doing the work. Meares v. Wilmington, 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 73, 49 Am. Dec. 412; Wolfe v. Pearson, 114 N. C. 621, 19 S. E. 264; Jones v. Henderson, 147 N. C. 120, 60 S. E. 894; Dorsey v. Henderson, 148 N. C. 423, 62 S. E. 547; Harper v. Lenoir, 152 N. C. 723, 68 S. E. 228; Stratford v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 127, 32 S. E. 394; Jeffress v. Greenville, 154 N. C. 500, 70 S. E. 919; Hoyle v. Hickory, 164 N. C. 82, 80 S. E. 254; Hoyle v. Hickory, 167 N. C. 621, 83 S. E. 738; McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 1975; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 1040. In Hoyle v. Hickory, 167 N. C. 620, 83 S. E. 738, this court said: "It was decided in the former appeal that, while plaintiffs could not recover for any detriment to their property which was the result merely of the proper grading of the street, which had been done in the due exercise of the discretionary power of the city to make needed improvements, it being damnum absque injuria, yet they could recover for any damage done thereto which was caused by a negligent grading of the street, following the principle as adopted in numerous decisions of this court"—citing many authorities.

This principle, we state in the same case, has been recognized and enforced since the days of Chief Justice Kenyon and Justice Buller. British Cast Plate Mfrs. v. Meredith, 4 T. R. 794, 796; Sutton v. Clark, 6 Taunt. 28, 1 Marsh. 429, 16 Revised Rep. 563; Bolton v. Crowther, 2 Barn. & C. 703, 4 Dowl. & R. 195, 2 L. J. K. B. 139. The doctrine is almost universally accepted by the state courts of this country. Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 542, and notes. It was affirmed in Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336; Smith v. Washington, 20 How. 135, 15 L. ed. 858; and Mead v. Portland, 200 U. S. 148, 50 L. ed. 413, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 171. As stated by the court in the case last cited, it may be thus summarized: The doctrine, however it may at times appear to be at variance with natural justice, rests upon the soundest legal reason. The state holds its highways in trust for the public. Improvements made by its direction or by its authority are its acts, and the ultimate responsibility, of course, should rest upon it. But it is the prerogative of the state to be exempt from coercion by suit, except by its own consent. This prerogative would amount to nothing if it did not protect the agents for improving highways, which the state is compelled to employ. This principle of the law is usually made to rest upon the theory that any and all changes of this character in the streets of the town are supposed to have been contemplated, and therefore provided for in advance of the improvement and at the time of the original dedication of the street, and any abutting owner acquires and improves his property with full notice that such changes may be made from time to time. Nichols, Em. Dom. §§ 81, 82 and 83; Lewis, Em. Dom. 3d ed. § 134. Nichols, Em. Dom. supra, says: "When a highway is raised or lowered in grade, so that it may be made safer or more convenient for travel, the abutting owner is not entitled to compensation. . . . The true reason for the rule . . . is that, when a highway is laid out, the easement taken includes the right to grade and construct . . . then or at any future time, in such a manner as the public authorities may deem conducive to safe and convenient traveling."

And Lewis, Em. Dom. supra, says that "when a street or highway is laid out, compensation is given once for all, not only for the land taken, but for damages which may, at any time, be occasioned by adapting the surface of the street to the public needs."

This power to further grade and improve the streets of the town is a continuing one, and may be exercised, in the legal discretion of the municipal government, whenever the public may require it, as will appear from the above-cited authorities, and also 1 Elliott on Streets & Roads, 3d ed. § 551. This discretion, although it may be a legal one, cannot be interfered with by the courts, except in case of manifest and gross abuse, or when it would be arbitrary and oppressive. Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244; Small v. Edenton, 146 N. C. 527, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 145, 60 S. E. 413; Luther v. Buncombe County, 164 N. C. 241, 80 S. E. 386; and other cases above cited. This power of the municipal corporation may, of course, be exercised by it through its own agents, who are commissioned or appointed to do the work which may be required in order to make the improvement in the street. And when the work is done carefully, either by the corporation itself or by it when acting through its agents, the abutting owner has no legal right to redress, and any damage to his property or loss to him by reason of the improvement is considered by the law as damnum absque injuria,—a loss without injury; the last word being used in the sense of an actionable wrong. These principles have been very recently discussed by us in the case of Wood v. Duke Land & Improv. Co. 165 N. C. 367, 81 S. E. 422, where the authorities are collected.

But the defendant in this case, the railway company, can take no advantage of them upon the facts as they appear in this record. The city of Winston-Salem was not acting in its corporate capacity, and in the exercise of its municipal authority, in raising the grade of Bank street, solely for the public's use and convenience. On the contrary, the defendant was acting for itself and in furtherance of its own interests, and the mere fact that it had obtained the permission of the city to do the work does not vary the case or take it out of the principle, so well settled, that private property should not be taken except for a public use, and then only upon just compensation. We presume the railroad company had the right to condemn the plaintiffs' property under its charter, and, for the sake of the argument, we will assume this to be true, it being a public service corporation; but if it has, in a legal sense, taken or appropriated the plaintiffs' property, it is liable to them to the extent that the value of the property has been diminished thereby, and if it has done the work unskillfully and negligently it would be liable to the plaintiffs also for any damage resulting therefrom. The city could not transfer to an individual, or to the quasi public corporation, for its own service and profit, this superior and sovereign right which is allowed to be used only for the public benefit. Brown v. Asheville Electric Co. 138 N. C. 533, 69 L.R.A. 631, 107 Am. St. Rep. 554, 51 S. E. 62; Stratford v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 127, 32 S. E. 394. The legislature has no power itself to authorize corporations to take or use private property without compensation, and of course could not confer such a power upon the city. Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. McKenzie, 74 Md. 36, 28 Am. St. Rep. 219, 21 Atl. 690; Walters v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 120 Md. 644, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1126, 88 Atl. 47; Egerer v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 14 L.R.A. 381, and note (130 N. Y. 108, 29 N. E. 95); Muhler v. New York & H. R. Co. 197 U. S. 544, 49 L. ed. 872, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 522; Vanderlip v. Grand Rapids, 73 Mich. 522, L.R.A.1916D.

41 N. W. 677, 3 L.R.A. 247, 16 Am. St. Rep. 607, and note; White v. Northwestern North Carolina R. Co. 113 N. C. 611, 22 L.R.A. 627, 37 Am. St. Rep. 639, 18 S. E. 330; Royster Guano Co. v. Lumber Co. 168 N. C. 337, 84 S. E. 346; Hester v. Durham Traction Co. 138 N. C. 293, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 981, 50 S. E. 711. The principle is well expressed in Reining v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 128 N. Y. 168, 14 L.R.A. 133, 28 N. E. 640, where it is said: "We think it cannot, under the guise of exercising this power, appropriate a part of a street to the exclusive, or practically to the exclusive, use of a railroad company, or so as to cut off abutting owners from the use of any part of the street, . . . without making compensation for the injury sustained."

In this particular case, as is shown in the record, the object of making this improvement was to subserve the railroad use, so that it might better control its track and appurtenances, and facilitate the movement of its trains over it. The street, therefore, was subjected to a new burden in favor of this defendant, and this may be done in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, which belongs not only to the sovereign, but may be imparted to a public service corporation by legislative enactment, provided adequate provision is made for the compensation of any private owner of property which will be damaged by the exercise of the power. It would be useless to pursue this subject any further, as this power has been so fully considered heretofore by the court, and its scope and extent clearly defined. We will call special attention, though, to the cases of Brown v. Asheville Electric Co. and Stratford v. Greensboro, supra; and Moore v. Carolina Power & Light Co. 163 N. C. 300, 79 S. E. 596, where a full discussion of the matter will be found, as well as in several of the other cases cited.

It will be observed that in this case there was but one issue submitted to the jury, and that related only to the question of damages and the amount which plaintiffs were entitled to recover. There was no issue involving the question as to the authority of the railroad company to do this work and be immune from liability for damages, unless it was done negligently; but even if such an issue had been submitted, it is so very clear that it possessed no such right as to practically eliminate that question from the case, and upon the issue as to damages the charge of the court was entirely free from error. The plaintiffs were entitled to recover the diminution in value of property which was caused by the defendant's wrongful act, or by the appropriation of their property to its use, and in respect to works of this kind, which are of a lasting nature, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover permanent damages. Lloyd v. Venable, 168 N. C. 531, 84 S. E. 855; South Atlantic Waste Co. v. Raleigh, C. & S. R. Co. 167 N. C. 340, 83 S. E. 618, and Raleigh, C. & S. R. Co. v. Mecklenburg Mfg. Co. 169 N. C. 160, 85 S. E. 390.

There is a question of evidence in the case, but we think his Honor ruled correctly in regard to it. The plaintiffs did not attempt to show substantively by the cross-examination of the witness what was the value of their lot as compared with his, but the question was asked as to what he had realized from the sale of his property, for the purpose of testing the value of his opinion, which had been before elicited by the defendant as to the value of the plaintiffs' lot, which he had estimated at a very low figure; there being "in our opinion" some evidence as to the similarity of the two lots, and their condition, surroundings, and value, and at least enough to permit a cross-examination of the witness upon the subject. We do not think that the ruling of the court violated the principle as stated in Warren v. Makely, 85 N. C. 12; Bruner v. Threadgill, 88 N. C. 361; and State Bd. of Edu. v. Makely, 139 N. C. 31, 51 S. E. 784.

The other exceptions are sufficiently covered by our discussion of those which we deem the important and controlling ones in the case. Before closing this opinion we will call attention to the case of State Atlantic Waste Co. v. Raleigh, C. & S. R. Co. 167 N. C. 340, 83 S. E. 618, as containing a very full discussion of the leading questions in this case, as applied to a state of facts very similar to those which are presented in this record.

After a careful analysis of the case, and a thorough consideration of the points presented by the learned counsel for the defendant, we are convinced that there has been no error committed during the trial.

Annotation—Liability of railroad company to abutting owner for damages from change of grade of highway, necessary to carry it across tracks.

This annotation is supplementary to the note to Shrader v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 226.

Generally as to an abutter's right to compensation for railroad in street, see note to Rasch v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 673, and specifically as to right to compensation where railroad changes grade of street, see pages 796 et seq., of that note.

As to the right of an abutting owner to damages for special injuries where a street railway is not considered an additional burden, see note to Slaughter v. Meridian Light & R. Co. 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1265.

As to the right of a landowner to damages for the obstruction of a street or highway by a railroad not adjacent to his property, see notes to Scrutchfield v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co. 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 496, and Powell v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 615.

Generally, as to liability of municipality for damages to abutting property from change of grade of street, see notes in 23 L.R.A. 658; 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 108; 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1194, and L.R.A.1915A, 382.

Among the more recent decisions, it has been held, in accord with the better reasoned cases cited in the earlier note, that the construction of a bridge approach in a public street for the purpose of abolishing a grade crossing of railroad tracks, in such a manner as to cut off the access of an abutting owner from the lower portion of his building to the street, and to shut off the light and air therefrom, is a taking within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring compensation to be made for property taken for public use; and a municipality and a railroad company which jointly effect such taking are both liable. Walters v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1913) 120 Md. 644, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1128, 88 Atl. 47.

And a railroad company which, in raising the grade of its roadbed to improve the road or increase its efficiency, goes outside of its right of way and builds approaches upon a highway crossed thereby, which are rendered necessary by reason of the raising of the roadbed at the crossing, is liable for the damages resulting to an owner of property abutting on the highway, notwithstanding it acts under and by virtue of an ordinance establishing the grade of the portion of the highway which is crossed by its right of way, and on which the approaches to the crossing are built, which ordinance was adopted to accommodate the railroad company rather than the public. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Atkinson (1912) 51 Ind. App. 315, 97 N. E. 353.

So, a railroad company which voluntarily accepts municipal authority to change the grade of a highway to abolish a grade crossing of its tracks, and does the work necessary to effect such change, for its own interest, is liable for injury inflicted upon an abutting property owner by the obstruction of the access to his property from the street, although the interest of the public is also subserved by the improvement. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Kane (1914) 124 Md. 231, L.R.A.1916C, 433, 92 Atl. 532; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Kahl (1914) 124 Md. 299, 92 Atl. 770.

And a railroad company which, having constructed its roadbed across a highway on an embankment, builds approaches thereto in the highway, is liable to an abutting owner whose access to his property over the highway is thereby interfered with, although the company had received authority from the county court to locate and build its track across the highway, with the requirement that it also construct the necessary approaches at crossings; the unrestricted use of the highway being a property right which was taken from the abutting owner by the construction of the approach in front of his property. Robinson v. Springfield Southwestern R. Co. (1910) 143 Mo. App. 270, 126 S. W. 994.

And see also BENNETT v. WINSTON-SALEM SOUTH-BOUND R. Co. ante, 1074.

But a railroad company cannot be held liable for injury to the access of an abutting owner by the change of the grade of a street to abolish a grade crossing of its tracks, although it is greatly benefited by the improvement, if the work was done by the municipality. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Kane (Md.) supra.

And a railroad company which, in rebuilding and enlarging a bridge carrying a street over its tracks, changes the grade of the street, acting for the municipality, and not for its own benefit, is not liable, at common law, for the damages resulting to an abutting owner. Rigney v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1916) 217 N. Y. 31, 111 N. E. 226.

And a railroad company which, in constructing its railroad through a portion of a city, in a cut, was required by the city to erect an overhead crossing at the intersection of two streets with its right of way, and to grade the approaches thereto in accordance with original grades then established by the city for the streets, is not liable to an abutting owner for damages resulting from the grading of the streets as thus required. Muller v. Great Northern R. Co. (1913) 75 Wash. 631, 135 Pac. 631.

But, under a provision of a contract between a city and a railroad company, for the reconstruction and enlargement by the latter of a bridge carrying a street over its tracks, that it will pay any damage resulting from the work, including damage resulting from change of grade of the street for approaches to the bridge, the railroad company is liable for damages resulting to an abutting owner from its changing the grade of the street, although, in making the change, it was acting for the common council of the city, and not for its own benefit. Rigney v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1916) 217 N. Y. 31, 111 N. E. 226, affirming (1914) 161 App. Div. 187, 146 N. Y. Supp. 395.

And where a city sought to open a public street across a railroad right of way, and the railroad company, by agreement with the city, and mainly for its own convenience, erected a bridge and approaches thereto for the purpose of carrying the street over its tracks, and the city changed the grade of the street for that purpose, but failed to apply to the Public Service Commission, as required by statute, to determine how the street should be carried over the tracks, the structure is an illegal obstruction, and the railroad company is liable to an owner of property on the street, opposite the approach, for the damages sustained by reason thereof. Brush v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1914) 162 App. Div. 731, 148 N. Y. Supp. 195. A. C. W.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

P. P. PERSONS, Appt.,

v.

CITY OF VALLEY CITY, Resp't.

(26 N. D. 342, 144 N. W. 675.)

Municipal corporation — presentation of claims — trespass to real property.
1. Sections 2703 and 2704, Rev. Codes L.R.A.1916D.

1905, requiring verified claims for damages resulting from certain injuries to person or property to be presented to the city council

Headnotes by FISK, J.

Note. — As to liability of municipal corporation for trespass on private property where committed in connection with streets, see annotation following this case, post, 1086.

as a prerequisite to the institution and maintenance of a suit against a city, are construed, and held not to apply to a claim based upon a trespass to plaintiff's real property.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, III. g, 5, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — erroneous destruction of building.

2. Where a city council, acting in its official capacity, authorizes the city's agents and officers to construct a sidewalk adjacent to plaintiff's property, and, through a mistaken belief that a portion of plaintiff's building extends into the street, and is an unlawful obstruction thereon, authorizes such agents or officers to remove the same by going upon such private property and cutting off the portion of the building claimed to thus form an obstruction, and committing other acts of trespass thereon, the municipality is liable, and must respond in damages for such wrongful trespass.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, III. g, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 6, 1913.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Barnes County sustaining a demurrer to a complaint filed to recover damages for an alleged trespass upon and injury to plaintiff's property. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Herman Winterer and David S. Ritchie, for appellant:

The acts complained of were such as rendered the defendant liable therefor.

Naumburg v. Milwaukee, 77 C. C. A. 67, 146 Fed. 641; Durkee v. Kenosha, 59 Wis. 123, 48 Am. Rep. 480, 17 N. W. 677; Alberts v. Muskegon, 146 Mich. 210, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1094, 117 Am. St. Rep. 633, 109 N. W. 262; Sheldon v. Kalamazoo, 24 Mich. 383; Bunker v. Hudson, 122 Wis. 43, 99 N. W. 448; Adams v. Milwaukee, 144 Wis. 371, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1066, 129 N. W. 518; Potter v. Spokane, 63 Wash. 267, 115 Pac. 176; Hughes v. Fond du Lac, 73 Wis. 380, 41 N. W. 407; Johnson v. Somerville, 195 Mass. 370, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 715, 81 N. E. 268; East Rome v. Lloyd, 124 Ga. 852, 53 S. E. 103; Gerst v. St. Louis, 185 Mo. 191, 105 Am. St. Rep. 580, 84 S. W. 34; Hathaway v. Osborne, 25 R. I. 249, 55 Atl. 700; Hunt v. Boston, 183 Mass. 303, 67 N. E. 244; Chicago v. Selz, S. & Co. 202 Ill. 545, 67 N. E. 386, 14 Am. Neg. Rep. 23; Tegeler v. Kansas City, 95 Mo. App. 162, 68 S. W. 953; Chicago v. Spoor, 190 Ill. 340, 60 N. E. 540; Butman v. Newton, 179 Mass. 1, 88 Am. St. Rep. 349, 60 N. E. 401; Brown v. Webster City, 115 Iowa, 511, 88 N. W. 1070; Millard v. Webster City, 113 Iowa, 220, 84 N. W. 1044; O'Donnell v. White, 23 R. I. 318, 50 Atl. 333; Larrabee v. Cloverdale, 131 Cal. 96, 63 Pac. 143; Ludlow v. MacKintosh, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 924, 53 S. W. 524; Norman v. Ince, 8 Okla. 412, 58 Pac. 632, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 681; Kane v. Indianapolis, 82 Fed. 779; Powell v. Wytheville, 95 Va. 73, 27 S. E. 805; Scott v. New York, 27 App. Div. 240, 50 N. Y. Supp. 191, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 534; Donahoe v. Kansas City, 130 Mo. 657, 38 S. W. 571, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 105; Oklahoma City v. Hill, 6 Okla. 114, 50 Pac. 242; D'Amico v. Boston, 176 Mass. 599, 58 N. E. 158; Larson v. Grand Forks, 3 Dak. 307, 19 N. W. 414.

The acts and resulting injury complained of are not within the provisions of §§ 2703 and 2704 of the Revised Codes, which have reference to personal injuries resulting from the use of said streets, etc., for the purpose of travel, and do not include injuries to adjacent property, caused by trespass.

28 Cyc. 1447, 1450; Giuricevic v. Tacoma, 57 Wash. 329, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 533, 106 Pac. 908; Tattan v. Detroit, 128 Mich. 650, 87 N. W. 894; MacDonald v. New York, 42 App. Div. 263, 29 N. Y. Supp. 16; Warren v. Davis, 43 Ohio St. 447, 3 N. E. 301; Sommers v. Marshfield, 90 Wis. 59, 62 N. W. 937; Bradley v. Eau Claire, 56 Wis. 168, 14 N. W. 10; Jung v. Stevens Point, 74 Wis. 547, 43 N. W. 513; Dawes v. Great Falls, 31 Mont. 9, 77 Pac. 309; Gallamore v. Olympia, 34 Wash. 379, 75 Pac. 978; Hughes v. Fond du Lac, 73 Wis. 380, 41 N. W. 407; Moran v. St. Paul, 54 Minn. 279, 56 N. W. 80; Pye v. Mankato, 38 Minn. 536, 38 N. W. 621; Dovey v. Plattsmouth, 52 Neb. 642, 73 N. W. 11; Fugere v. Cook, 27 R. I. 134, 60 Atl. 1067; Megins v. Duluth, 97 Minn. 23, 106 N. W. 89; McIntee v. Middletown, 80 App. Div. 434, 81 N. Y. Supp. 124; Kelly v. Faribault, 95 Minn. 293, 104 N. W. 231; Postel v. Seattle, 41 Wash. 432, 83 Pac. 1025.

Messrs. Lee Combs, L. S. B. Ritchie, and M. J. Englert, for respondent:

When the statute requires the making and filing of a claim or the giving of a notice before action is brought, failure to comply with the mandate of its provision is fatal to the plaintiff's cause of action.

3 Abbott, Mun. Corp. pp. 2369 et seq.; 28 Cyc. 1470; Sharp v. Mauston, 92 Wis. 629, 66 N. W. 803; Flieth v. Wausau, 93 Wis. 446, 67 N. W. 731; Daniels v. Racine, 98 Wis. 649, 74 N. W. 553; Ziegler v. West Bend, 102 Wis. 17, 78 N. W. 164; Sterling v. Bedford, 94 Iowa, 194, 62 N. W. 674; O'Donnell v. New London, 113 Wis. 292, 89 N. W. 511; McCue v. Waupun, 96 Wis. 625, 71 N. W. 1054; Adams v. Modesto, 6 Cal. Unrep. 486, 61 Pac. 957; Van Frachen v. Ft. Howard, 88 Wis. 570, 60 N. W. 1062; Pollard v. Cadillac, 133 Mich. 503, 95 N. W.

536; Trost v. Casselton, 8 N. D. 534, 79 N. W. 1071; Coleman v. Fargo, 8 N. D. 69, 76 N. W. 1051; Barrett v. Mobile, 129 Ala. 179, 87 Am. St. Rep. 54, 30 So. 36; Bancroft v. San Diego, 120 Cal. 432, 52 Pac. 712.

Fisk, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order of the district court of Barnes county sustaining a demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint. The plaintiff seeks to recover damages from the defendant city for the alleged trespass by it, through its authorized agents and servants, upon his property, and committing injuries thereto.

It will not be necessary to set out the complaint in full, and we merely state the substance thereof, except as to the important paragraphs which we copy in full. Plaintiff first alleges his ownership and possession of lots 6 to 12, inclusive, of block 16 of the original plat of the city of Valley City; also, the fact that defendant is and was a municipal corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of this state. It is next alleged that at all times herein mentioned there was situated upon lots 10, 11, and 12, aforesaid, a grain elevator owned and used by the plaintiff and his tenants for the purpose of buying and storing grain. Then follow paragraphs 4 to 6, inclusive, which we quote in full, as follows: "(4) That on the 11th day of May, A. D. 1908, at a meeting of the city council of the said defendant city, held at its council rooms in said city, the said city council of said city of Valley City, for and on behalf of said defendant, did authorize its agents and officers to construct a sidewalk along the south line of the above-described premises, and thereafter and on the 2d day of August, A. D. 1909, the said council did authorize its agents and officers to remove a part of the premises of said plaintiff herein, claiming and setting forth that the same was an obstruction and was constructed upon the street of said defendant. (5) That on or about the 15th day of October, A. D. 1909, defendant, through its duly appointed agent, unlawfully and wrongfully entered upon the premises of the said plaintiff and did then and there destroy the property of the said plaintiff, to wit, the said grain elevator, in this, that the defendant then and there caused to have torn down, cut off, detached, and removed from the said building a part thereof, and did cut off, remove, detach, and take away from the said building a part thereof; that said action on the part of the said defendant was without due authority of law, and to this L.R.A.1916D.

plaintiff's damage, in this, that it destroyed the said building situated upon the said premises for all uses and purposes, and destroyed the same as a structure, to his damage in the sum of $1,000. (6) Plaintiff further alleges that said defendant entered upon his said premises and committed the said damage to his said building solely upon the premises of this plaintiff, and that the building of the said plaintiff was built, constructed, erected, and maintained solely upon the premises of the plaintiff, but that, notwithstanding this, the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully entered upon his said premises and committed the damage hereinbefore set forth." Paragraphs 7, 8, and 9 relate to special damages alleged to have been suffered on account of such alleged unlawful acts, and need not be set out herein. Paragraph 10 is as follows: "Plaintiff further alleges that all of said acts have been committed by the defendant through its authorized agents and officials by reason of the express authority given to the said agents and officials by the city council of the said city, and that the said agents and officials did act in full conformity to, and not in excess of, the said instructions given; and alleges that, by reason of the said acts so authorized, that this plaintiff has been damaged as hereinbefore set forth; and in this behalf the plaintiff further alleges that all of the acts and steps were so taken by the said city without notice to said plaintiff." In his prayer for judgment plaintiff demands the sum of $5,790 and costs.

The ground of the demurrer is that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in the following particulars: "(a) Because it appears upon the face of said complaint that the acts complained of were and are ultra vires and beyond and without the authority and power of said defendant city, a municipal corporation, to do or commit. (b) Because it appears upon the face of said complaint that the acts complained of, if they were within the corporate power, and might have been lawfully accomplished by the said city, through its municipal authorities, were nevertheless committed by the alleged agents of said city without proceedings according to law, and that no ratification of such unauthorized acts was had or made by said city, and because it appears from the face of said complaint that the acts and omissions complained of were done and suffered by said alleged agents and servants without the scope of their employment, and not on behalf of said city. (c) Because said complaint failed to show or allege that the claim or claims set forth in plaintiff's complaint for injury and damages alleged to have arisen by reason of the acts and omissions set forth in said complaint on the part of the city authorities and servants, and in respect to its said streets, referred to in said complaint, were filed in the office of the city auditor and signed by the plaintiff as claimant, or by someone on his behalf, duly verified by him, within thirty days from the happening of such injury or damage, or that said claim or claims, upon which said plaintiff's action is brought, as shown by his complaint, were in no manner or at any time filed in the office of the city auditor of said city, or considered or acted upon by said city's mayor or council, as provided and required by §§ 2703 and 2704 of the Revised Codes of the state of North Dakota for the year 1905, §§ 3627, 3628, Comp. Laws 1913. (d) Because there is another action pending between the same parties, for the same cause."

We are clear that none of the grounds of the demurrer are tenable, and that the order sustaining such demurrer was therefore erroneous.

Respondent's counsel rely chiefly upon the ground stated under subdivision "c" of the demurrer. They state in their brief that they do not waive the other grounds, but their entire printed brief and argument is directed to the ground stated in subdivision "c" and, in view of this, we will first dispose of this ground.

The action being one to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's real property, is it necessary, in order to state a cause of action, that the complaint should allege the presentation by him to the city council, prior to the commencement of his action, of a verified claim for such damages, pursuant to §§ 2703 and 2704 of the Revised Codes of 1905? Respondent's counsel earnestly contend for an affirmative answer to the above question. These sections are as follows:

"Section 2703. All claims against cities for damages or injuries alleged to have arisen from the defective, unsafe, dangerous or obstructed condition of any street, crosswalk, sidewalk, culvert or bridge of any city, or from the negligence of the city authorities in respect to any such street, crosswalk, sidewalk, culvert or bridge shall, within thirty days from the happening of such injury, be filed in the office of the city auditor, signed and properly verified by the claimant, describing the time, place, cause and extent of the damages or injury, and the amount of damages claimed therefor, and upon the trial of an action for the recovery of damages by reason of such injury, the claimant shall not be permitted to prove any different time, place, cause or manner or extent of the injury complained of, or any greater amount of damages. In case it appears by the affidavit of a reputable physician which shall be prima facie evidence of the fact that the person injured was, by the injury complained of, rendered mentally incapable of making such statement during the time herein provided, such statement may be made within thirty days after such complainant becomes competent to make the same, but such affidavit may be controverted on the trial of an action for such damages, and in case of the death of the person injured prior to his becoming competent to make such statement, the same may be made within thirty days after his death, by any person having knowledge of the facts, and the person making such statement shall set forth therein specifically the facts relating to such injury as aforesaid, of which he has personal knowledge, and shall positively verify such statement and shall verify the facts therein stated of which he has no personal knowledge, to the best of his knowledge, information and belief.

"Section 2704. No action shall be maintained against any city as aforesaid for injury to person or property, unless it appears that the claim for which the action was brought was filed in the office of the city auditor as aforesaid, with an abstract of the facts out of which the cause of action arose, duly verified by the claimant, and that the city council did not, within sixty days thereafter audit and allow the same, and such abstract of facts must be signed and verified as provided in the preceding section, and all provisions of such section with reference to such verification shall be applicable to such abstract of facts, and no action shall be maintained unless the plaintiff therein shall plead and prove the filing of such claim and abstract as hereinbefore provided."

In commenting upon these sections, respondent's counsel say: "To our minds this language is clear and unmistakable. No one can doubt that when the legislature adopted the words 'for injury to person or property' it meant just what it said, and that such language includes property injured, or alleged to have been injured, which abuts a city street, when the injury was the result of an act or omission, with respect to such street, which, as we have seen, is exactly the claim of the plaintiff in the case at bar." Counsel then devote considerable space in an attempt to differentiate certain authorities cited and relied upon by appellant's counsel, upon the ground that they were decided under statutes differing radically from those of this state, above quoted.

We find it unnecessary to examine these authorities, for the question is set at rest in this state by the recent decision of this court in the case of Gaustad v. Enderlin, 23 N. D. 526, 137 N. W. 613. While respondent's counsel challenge the correctness of such decision and urge a reversal of the construction there placed upon said statutes, we are entirely satisfied with the correctness of the holding there made, as well as with the reasoning contained in the opinion. The language employed in §§ 2703 and 2704 is so clear in limiting the operation thereof to claims for damages or injuries founded upon alleged defective, unsafe, dangerous, or obstructed condition of a street, sidewalk, crosswalk, culvert, or bridge, or from the negligence of the city authorities in respect thereto, as to leave no room for doubt as to the legislative intent; such intention clearly being to require only those claims to be presented which are based upon injuries to person or property arising from the actual or implied negligence of the city in constructing or maintaining its streets, sidewalks, crosswalks, culverts, or bridges. The damages sought to be recovered in the case at bar are clearly not founded upon claims thus arising, and the authorities cited and relied upon by respondent's counsel may, we think, be easily differentiated from the case at bar on account of a difference in the statutes. It would serve no useful purpose, however, to review these cases in this opinion, and we shall not take the time nor the space necessary to do so.

The other grounds of the demurrer will now be considered. As we understand the contention of respondent's counsel, made in oral argument before this court, they assert that the defendant, being a municipal corporation, cannot be held liable to respond in damages for the alleged wrongful acts charged against it for the reason that such acts, if authorized by it, were and are ultra vires, and that plaintiff's sole redress for such acts is a proceeding against the individuals who were instrumental in behalf of the city in doing or causing to be done the acts aforesaid. In other words, that the city, under the law, could not and did not in any way authorize or ratify the said acts of its officers and servants.

Does the doctrine of respondeat superior apply to a municipal corporation under the facts alleged in the complaint? We are compelled to answer in the affirmative, for reasons hereinafter stated.

There can be no doubt regarding the full authority and control of a municipality over its streets, and its power to remove any obstructions or encroachments thereon, for it is expressly so provided by statute. L.R.A.1916D.

See § 2678, Rev. Codes 1905, subdiv. 7—10, inclusive, § 3599, Comp. Laws 1913. The defendant city, through its officers, no doubt in good faith, but mistakenly, believed that a portion of plaintiff's elevator extended over the property line, into the street, thereby constituting an unlawful encroachment thereon, and the acts complained of were no doubt done for the purpose of removing what was deemed such an unlawful encroachment upon the street. In thus attempting to exercise a lawful power expressly conferred by statute, can the city escape liability when it happens that its officers in fact were mistaken as to the existence of the encroachment? We think not. The acts complained of were expressly authorized by the city council, and to hold the city exempt from all liability under the facts pleaded in the complaint would, we think, be manifestly unjust. Such a rule might, in many cases, work a rank injustice to persons whose property rights have been flagrantly invaded. The doctrine contended for by respondent's counsel is, under the facts pleaded, clearly untenable on principle, and, as we shall show, is opposed to the adjudicated cases.

The leading case on this subject is Thayer v. Boston, 19 Pick. 511, 31 Am. Dec. 157. The facts there were that the officers of the defendant city had obstructed plaintiff's access to the street by the erection therein of stalls along the front of his premises. He brought his action on the case against the city, and in behalf of the defendant it was argued that if the officers of the corporation, within their respective spheres, act lawfully and within the scope of their authority, their acts are justifiable and nobody is liable for damages, and if an individual sustains loss by the exercise of such lawful authority it is damnum absque injuria. But if they do not act within the scope of their authority, they act in a manner which the corporation has not authorized, and in such case the officers are personally liable for such unauthorized acts. In replying to such argument, Chief Justice Shaw said: "But the court are of opinion that this argument, if pressed to all its consequences and made the foundation of an inflexible practical rule, would often lead to very unjust results. There is a large class of cases, in which the rights of both the public and of individuals may be deeply involved, in which it cannot be known, at the time the act is done, whether it is lawful or not. The event of a legal inquiry, in a court of justice, may show that it was unlawful. Still, if it was not known and understood to be unlawful at the time, if it was an act done by the officers having competent authority, either by express vote of the city government, or by the nature of the duties and functions with which they are charged, by their officers, to act upon the general subject-matter, and especially if the act was done with an honest view to obtain for the public some lawful benefit or advantage, reason and justice obviously require that the city, in its corporate capacity, should be liable to make good the damage sustained by an individual, in consequence of the acts thus done. It would be equally injurious to the individual sustaining damage, and to the agents and persons employed by the city government, to leave the party injured no means of redress, except against agents employed, and, by what at the time appeared to be competent authority, to do the acts complained of, but which are proved to be unauthorized by law. And it may be added that it would be injurious to the city itself, in its corporate capacity, by paralyzing the energies of those charged with the duty of taking care of its most important rights, inasmuch as all agents, officers, and subordinate persons might well refuse to act under the direction of its government in all cases where the act should be merely complained of and resisted by any individual as unlawful, on whatever weak pretense; and, conformably to the principle relied on, no obligation of indemnity could avail them. The court are therefore of opinion that the city of Boston may be liable in an action of the case, where acts are done by its authority which would warrant a like action against an individual, provided such act is done by the authority and order of the city government, or of those branches of the city government invested with jurisdiction to act for the corporation upon the subject to which the particular act relates, or, where, after the act has been done, it has been ratified, by the corporation, by any similar act of its officers."

Another leading case-holding to the same effect is Lee v. Sandy Hill, 40 N. Y. 442. There the municipality was sued for trespass to land in unlawfully, wrongfully, and forcibly entering upon plaintiff's premises and removing fences, and digging up soil, etc., preparatory to the making of a highway over plaintiff's premises. It will thus be seen that the case is directly in point in the case at bar. The court, among other things, there said: "The doctrine is too well settled in this court to admit of discussion that municipal corporations, like the defendant, are liable in trespass for the illegal acts of its officers,"—citing numerous authorities, and among them the case of Thayer v. Boston, supra. The distinction is there clearly drawn between acts performed in a governmental capacity, for which the municipality is not liable, and acts performed for the municipality as such.

Another case directly in point is that of Weed v. Greenwich, 45 Conn. 170. In the opinion which was written by Pardee, J., we find the following language: "The court of warden and burgesses constitutes the borough legislature. To this court the accepted charter granted power to take action for the corporation upon the general subject of encroachments, to which the particular act complained of relates. They exercised all the powers of the borough in this behalf, and in respect to all external relations must be considered as identical with the corporation. Although the grant is in form to the warden and burgesses, it is in reality to the borough, to be exercised for its benefit. Acting at their pleasure, presumably they acted only when the special interests of the borough were to be promoted. They were not elected by the corporation in obedience to any statute, for the purpose of performing a governmental duty. Thus representing and acting for the borough, they ordered the removal of the fence, and the borough should redress the wrong occasioned by the performance of an act in its particular interest, for municipal immunity does not reach beyond governmental duty. It is contrary to all principles of natural justice that the residents within certain territorial limits should seek for and obtain corporate powers for the more ready accomplishment of undertakings specially advantageous to themselves, but not at all necessary for the public, and in such powers find relief for responsibility for wrongs upon private rights. In the case before us, the warden and burgesses believed that the fence stood upon the highway and that they had the right to remove it. Apparently the warden came to the execution of their mandate clothed with official authority and power, not intending any injury. In all like cases it is best for those concerned that the individual should respect that authority and submit to the exercise of it, having knowledge that if he can prove that he has suffered any wrong, he can look to a responsible corporation rather than to an irresponsible individual for damages." Numerous authorities are therein cited and quoted from with approval, including Hildreth v. Lowell, 11 Gray, 349; Hawks v. Charlemont, 107 Mass. 414; Buffalo & H. Turnp. Co. v. Buffalo, 58 N. Y. 639; Sheldon v. Kalamazoo, 24 Mich. 383; Crossett v. Janesville, 28 Wis. 421; Soulard v. St. Louis, 36 Mo. 546; Allen v. Decatur, 23 Ill. 332, 76 Am. Dec. 692; Woodcock v. Calais, 66 Me. 234; Inman v.

Tripp, 11 R. I. 520, 23 Am. Rep. 520; Ashley v. Port Huron, 35 Mich. 296, 24 Am. Rep. 552; Chicago v. McGraw, 75 Ill. 566. All of these cases appear to be directly in point, announcing a rule contrary to that contended for by respondent's counsel in the case at bar. To quote from each of these authorities would extend this opinion to an unwarranted length, and we shall content ourselves by brief quotations from a few of them.

In Sheldon v. Kalamazoo, the marshal removed a fence which it was claimed encroached upon the highway. The lower court refused to hear evidence offered by plaintiff to show that the fence was not an encroachment, giving as his reason that the president and trustees acted in the capacity of public officers, and not municipal agents, and that the corporation was therefore not liable for their acts; but the supreme court of Michigan, in granting a new trial, said: "The doctrine is entirely untenable that there can be no municipal liability for unlawful acts done by municipal authorities to the prejudice of private parties. In this respect, public corporations are as distinctly legal persons as private corporations. There are officers who are corporation agents, and there are municipal officers whose duties are independent of agency, and with distinct liabilities. But when the act done is in law a corporate act, there is no ground upon reason or authority for holding that, if there is any legal liability at all arising out of it, the corporation may not be answerable. There is no conflict whatever in the authorities on this head. . . . There is no authority that we can find which holds such an invasion of private lands not to be an act of the corporation, and none which would exempt the corporation from liability to an action for the wrong."

In Allen v. Decatur, the supreme court of Illinois, many years ago, said: "We shall, in this opinion, devote our attention to the principal question which has been argued in the case, which is whether a municipal corporation can be sued, in an action of trespass, for acts done in obedience to an order of the corporation. The law is now so well settled that it is nowhere controverted that such corporations may be sued, in case, for tortious acts done under the instructions of such corporations."

In Woodcock v. Calais, the city government passed an order "that the street commissioner be directed to cause all fences now on the public streets to be removed." Pursuant thereto, such commissioner employed a surveyor to run a line between the plaintiff's land and the street. The line as run proved to be outside of the street limits and L.R.A.1916D.

upon the plaintiff's land. Believing the line to be correctly run, the commissioner moved the plaintiff's fence to conform to such new line, and removed from plaintiff's land earth and rocks, and built a sidewalk thereon. In holding that the principles of respondeat superior applied, and that the city was liable to the plaintiff for trespass in damages, the supreme court of Michigan held that the fact that the street commissioner "was expressly 'directed' by the city government to cause all fences on the street to be removed, and that while attempting to follow these directions he committed the trespass which is the foundation of this action, withdraws this case from the application of the principle applicable to cases of public officers. For while he was a public officer, and had lawful authority to act in the premises without any directions from the city, still the city was responsible for the safe condition of the streets, and chose by positive, formal vote to direct the commissioner. Whether he was obliged to follow the direction or not is immaterial. He did act; and in his action he became quoad hoc the city's agent; and we are of the opinion that the superior must respond."

In Ashley v. Port Huron, Cooley, Ch. J., in speaking for the court, said: "It is very manifest, from this reference to authorities, that they recognize in municipal corporations no exemption from responsibility where the injury an individual has received is a direct injury accomplished by a corporate act which is in the nature of a trespass upon him. The right of an individual to the occupation and enjoyment of his premises is exclusive, and the public authorities have no more liberty to trespass upon it than has a private individual. If the corporation send people with picks and spades to cut a street through it without first acquiring the right of way, it is liable for a tort."

The Minnesota court, in speaking through Mitchell, J., in Boye v. Albert Lea, 74 Minn. 230, 76 N. W. 1131, held the city liable for causing a dam to be constructed in an unnavigable stream, resulting in forcing water to overflow plaintiff's land. In reversing the trial court's order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, Judge Mitchell said: "The contention of its counsel is that the tort alleged is not one which the city as a municipality could commit under any circumstances; in other words, that it was wholly ultra vires, and hence that the city was not liable. Municipal corporations, in the execution of their corporate powers, fall within the rule of respondeat superior when the requisite elements of liability coexist. To create such a liability it is fundamentally necessary that the act done which is injurious to others must be within the scope of the corporate powers as prescribed by the charter; in other words, it must not be ultra vires in the sense that it is not within the power or authority of the corporation to act in reference to it under any circumstances. If the act complained of lies wholly outside of the general or special powers of the corporation as conferred by its charter, the corporation can, in no event, be liable for the acts of its officers, for a corporation cannot be impliedly liable to a greater extent than it could make itself liable by express corporate vote or action. But if the wrongful act be not, in this sense, ultra vires, but is within the general scope of the powers of the municipality, and was so done in the execution of corporate powers of a ministerial nature, but in an improper and unlawful manner, as to injure others, it may be the foundation of an action in tort against the corporation. Dill. Mun. Corp. § 968. In this case it not only does not appear that the act complained of was ultra vires, in the sense above stated, but, on the contrary, it affirmatively appears from the complaint, read in connection with the city charter, that the act was done by the city in the execution of its corporate powers, to wit, the control and regulation of the flowage of the waters of Fountain lake, but in such a negligent or unlawful way as to injure the plaintiff by overflowing his land. We use the term 'corporate powers' to distinguish them from those public services not peculiarly local or corporate, imposed by statute on municipal officers, but in which the corporation, as such, has no interest except as a part of the general public. Our conclusion is that the complaint states a cause of action."

To cite further authorities seems wholly unnecessary, but we call attention to the interesting opinions in Naumberg v. Milwaukee, 77 C. C. A. 67, 146 Fed. 641; and to the numerous authorities therein cited. Also, the recent case of Bunker v. Hudson, 122 Wis. 43, 99 N. W. 448. In the latter case we quote from the opinion as follows: "In grading the street the city was doing one of the things which, as a municipal corporation, it was authorized to do. That work was done in an improper or negligent manner, so as to invade the rights of the plaintiffs, not as members of the public, but as adjoining proprietors. Toward them the city's act was not governmental, but proprietary. For proximate damage thus caused liability results according to principle, and without conflict of authority,"—citing numerous cases.

In concluding this opinion we cannot refrain from quoting from Judge Dillon's valuable works on Municipal Corporations 5th ed. vol. 4, § 1651: "Cases such as those just mentioned are to be distinguished from others which resemble them in the circumstance of relating to wrongful acts, but which arise out of matters or transactions within the general powers of the corporation, and in respect of which there may be a corporate liability. Thus, if in exercising its power to open or improve streets, or to make drains and sewers, the agents or officers of a municipal corporation, under its authority or direction, commit a trespass upon, or take possession of, private property, without complying with the charter or statute, the corporation is liable in damages therefor. In such cases, also, an action will lie against a city corporation by the owner of land through which its agents have unlawfully made a sewer, or for trees destroyed and injuries done by them. A case in Louisiana, which was several times before the courts in that state, was decided upon the same principle. The mayor of a city tortiously, and in defiance of an injunction, proceeded at the head of a force of laborers and demolished a portion of the plaintiff's house, for the supposed reason that it was on public ground. The city corporation ratified the act by defending it. On the first appeal the court doubted whether the corporation could be made liable for the wrongful acts charged against its officers, especially as these were alleged to have been done by them wilfully and maliciously. On the second appeal it was held that, although the acts of the mayor were done without the previous order of the city council, yet the corporation, by reason of its subsequent ratification, was liable, and the plaintiff recovered."

It follows from what we have above said that the order appealed from was erroneous, and the same is, accordingly, reversed.

Burke, J., being disqualified, did not participate.

Annotation—Liability of municipal corporation for trespass on private property where committed in connection with streets.

It is the purpose of this note to include only cases of actual trespass by municipal officers on private property in connection with streets of a municipal L.R.A.1916D.

corporation, and to exclude cases arising from the acts of municipal officers amounting to a constructive trespass, including their acts in interfering with or changing the natural flow of water. This latter question is in part covered in notes in 65 L.R.A. 250 and 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 126, as to the liability of municipal corporation for damming back surface water by grading streets; and its liability for damming up water courses in changing the grades is treated in a note in 59 L.R.A. 854. Another question excluded is that with reference to the liability of a municipal corporation in grading or changing the grade of streets where the officers confine their actions within the limits of the street itself. Generally as to liability of municipality for damage to abutting property from changing the grade of streets, see the notes in 23 L.R.A. 658; 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 108; 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1194; L.R.A. 1915A, 382. And on the general question as to the liability of a municipality in tort for acts beyond the scope of its powers, see note appended to Scott v. Tampa, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 908.

General rule.

It is the general rule that a municipality is liable for an unlawful act done by its officers with reference to its streets and highways, if the act is not known and understood to be unlawful at the time, and the officers had competent authority from the municipality to do the thing complained of, or their act was ratified by it, especially where they acted with an honest intention to obtain for the public some lawful benefit or advantage, unless the act complained of is entirely beyond the general scope of the powers of the corporation. Thayer v. Boston (1837) 19 Pick. (Mass.) 511, 31 Am. Dec. 157. But a municipality is not liable for the unauthorized acts of its officers. (Mass.) Ibid.

A municipality is not liable for the unauthorized and unlawful acts of its officers although done colore officii. To render a municipality liable, it must further appear that the act is authorized by it, or was done bona fide, in pursuance of general authority to act for it on the subject to which the act relates, or that the act was ratified and adopted by it. Sherman v. Grenada (1875) 51 Miss. 186. And this showing will render a municipal corporation liable for a trespass committed by persons claiming to act for it or by its authority. Chicago v. McGraw (1874) 75 Ill. 566. Whether authority was in fact given officers of a municipality to do the thing complained of, or whether or not it actually existed, is generally a question of fact for the jury. Thayer v. Boston (Mass.) supra. L.R.A.1916D.

It is impossible by the statement of any general rules relative thereto accurately to point out the extent and limits of the liability of a municipal corporation for trespasses by its officers on private property while they were acting with reference to its streets. It is only by reference to the actual decisions that it is possible to at all visualize the question of liability in this regard. Hence the cases have been arranged with reference to particular trespasses on private land by officers of public corporations.

Causing earth, gravel, etc., to fall upon private property.

A city has no right to invade private property, either intentionally or negligently, while engaged in changing the grade of the public street, and if, while making such a change, earth and gravel are caused to fall upon adjoining land, it constitutes a trespass for which it is liable. Hendershott v. Ottumwa (1877) 46 Iowa, 658, 26 Am. Rep. 182; Tegeler v. Kansas City (1902) 95 Mo. App. 162, 68 S.W. 953; O'Donnell v. White (1901) 23 B. L. 318, 50 Atl. 333; Bunker v. Hudson (1904) 122 Wis. 43, 99 N. W. 448, holding that in grading a street a city acts within its corporate powers, and it, through negligence, it causes earth to fall upon adjoining property, this constitutes an invasion of the rights of the owner for which it is accountable, its act in this regard as to the owner being not governmental, but proprietary. And a municipality has been held liable for the acts of a contractor in repairing a public street where he recklessly and wantonly caused earth to fall on adjoining premises, destroying the walls of a dwelling house. Broadwell v. Kansas (1881) 75 Mo. 213, 42 Am. Rep. 406.

It has been held, however, that where, in paving a street, a contractor deposited earth upon adjoining land, and the act was unnecessary, and not the actual result of making the improvement, the trespass was one for which the contractor, and not the municipality, was liable. Fuller v. Grand Rapids (1895) 105 Mich. 529, 63 N. W. 530.

The fact that, in making a street improvement, municipal officers encroached upon land of the abutting owner, causing the destruction of a line wall, furnishes no ground for equitable relief in behalf of such owner to enjoin the collection of a special assessment for the improvement; the court said the remedy was by an action at law for the trespass.

Davis v. Silverton (1905) 47 Or. 171, 82 Pac. 16.

Removing earth, stone, and other material from private property for street use.

Where officers of a borough, acting in pursuance of an ordinance duly passed and entered upon the public records, constructed a sidewalk on the public street, and, in doing so, entered upon adjoining land, tore down a fence, dug up the earth, and removed trees, the municipality is liable for their action. Brink v. Dunmore (1896) 174 Pa. 395, 34 Atl. 598. And a town has been held liable for the acts of its officers in entering upon adjoining lands and taking away stone lying on the bank of a river, near the water's edge, for use in repairing a bridge on the highway. Hawks v. Charlemont (1871) 107 Mass. 414. So, where a municipality purchased for street purposes and removed a quantity of stone from land, but it did not purchase the same from the true owner, it is liable to the latter for the trespass committed. Hunt v. Boonville (1877) 65 Mo. 620, 27 Am. Rep. 299.

And upon this point see Crossett v. Janesville (1871) 28 Wis. 421, which is not strictly within the scope of the note. It is there held that a municipality is liable to an abutting property owner for injury to property caused by the removal of earth from the street in changing the grade, where its act was unlawful by reason of its failure to comply with the statutory requirement that the consent of the property owner shall be first obtained before any change is made in the grade of a street.

It has been held that the act of a municipal officer authorized to repair the streets of a city, in going upon adjoining land and removing dirt therefrom to use in making such repairs, is not in line with the duty of such officers, and the municipality is not liable therefor unless, with knowledge of the facts, his act was ratified. Sherman v. Grenada (1875) 51 Miss. 186. Where there is no charter authority for the officers of a city, in pursuance of an ordinance or otherwise, to enter upon private land and remove earth or material therefrom, although for highway or street purposes, the city is not liable for the trespass. Rowland v. Gallatin (1881) 75 Mo. 134, 42 Am. Rep. 395. So, where the grading of a street was without lawful municipal authority, it has been held that a contractor, and not the municipality, is liable for the act of the former in trespassing upon private adjoining property and taking dirt therefrom, to be used for street purposes. Stuebner v. St. Joseph (1899) 81 Mo. App. 273. And see Calvert v. St. Joseph (1906) 118 Mo. App. 503, 95 S. W. 308, holding that a municipality is not liable for the acts of its officers in going outside the limits of an ordinance and taking dirt from private property, and using same in the construction of the street.

Destruction of private property erroneously believed to obstruct public way.

Where the officers of the municipality, while acting within the general scope of their duties, encroach upon private property under a mistake as to the right thereto, they believing it to be the property of the corporation, the municipality is liable for the trespass thus committed by them. Lee v. Sandy Hill (1869) 40 N. Y. 442; PERSONS v. VALLEY CITY, ante, 1079. Thus, the act of municipal officers in removing a fence erroneously believed to encroach on a highway has been held to be within the corporate powers, and hence to render the municipality liable to the injured property owner. Weed v. Greenwich (1877) 45 Conn. 170; Woodcock v. Calais (1877) 66 Me. 234; Sheldon v. Kalamazoo (1872) 24 Mich. 383; Gordon v. Taunton (1879) 126 Mass. 349, holding that the question should have been submitted to the jury as to whether or not the municipality had obtained an easement by prescription in the land upon which the fence stood that was removed.

It has been held, where municipal officers, in performing their duty of removing obstructions from the public ways under the general laws of the state, enter upon private land under the mistaken belief that it is a public way, the municipality is not liable for the trespass. Manners v. Haverhill (1883) 135 Mass. 165. And this case also holds that the mayor and aldermen cannot authorize street officers to enter upon private land and destroy property thereon, although they act upon the belief that the land belongs to the public. To render the municipality liable in such a case the authority must be based upon action by the common council, and be with reference to property the city claims to own, or in the performance of work which the city was authorized to do, or in which the city had a corporate interest distinct from that of the inhabitants of the commonwealth generally. And it has been held that a municipality is not liable for the acts of its officers in going beyond the limits of an alley, and removing buildings from private property, where they acted under an ordinance authorizing them to remove obstructions from this alley. This decision is based upon the ground that authority to remove obstructions from an alley did not render the municipality liable for the acts of its officers in removing obstructions on land adjoining the alley, although the officers erroneously believed it to be a part of the alley. Hanvey v. Rochester (1861) 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 177. And also that a township is not liable for the unauthorized act of its supervisor in entering upon private property under the belief that it was a public street, and cutting down trees and removing them, and also removing earth for use on a public highway elsewhere. In this connection emphasis was laid upon the fact that, in order for the supervisor to represent the township, he must have had authority in that regard from the township board, and he did not have such authority. Moore v. Coal Twp. (1914) 56 Pa. Super. Ct. 55.

It has been held that a street commissioner, acting under a resolution of the city council, and removing a building which encroached on a public street, which such resolution declared to be a nuisance, is not acting as the agent or representative of the municipality in its corporate capacity, but is acting in the interest of the public generally, and for a public purpose in the enforcement of police regulations; hence his act in destroying the building as a nuisance is governmental in character, and since no liability is declared by statute for such an act, the municipality is immune from liability therefor. As indicated, this decision is based on a distinction made between the liability of a municipal corporation for the acts of its officers in the exercise of the powers which it possesses for public purposes, and which it holds as agent of the state, and the powers which embrace private or corporate duties, and are exercised for the advantage of the municipality and its inhabitants. Cummings v. Lobsitz (1914) 42 Okla. 704, L.R.A. 1915B, 415, 142 Pac. 993.

Miscellaneous.

Where a municipality by resolution required a turnpike road company to construct a draw in its bridge connecting its road with a public street, and, L.R.A.1916D, on its failure to do so, took possession of the bridge and destroyed it in attempting to use it for highway purposes, it was held liable for the trespass, although it had no legislative authority to make use of the bridge. It was, however, authorized to require its removal. Buffalo & H. Turnp. Co. v. Buffalo (1874) 58 N. Y. 639.

And see Peters v. New York (1876) 8 Hun (N. Y.) 405, holding a municipality liable for the act of its officers in selling buildings upon land condemned for street purposes, where the buildings belonged to the original owner, who failed to remove them upon notice.

And see Lexington v. Parker (1899) 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1536, 49 S. W. 765, holding a municipality liable for appropriating to its own use for street purposes a strip of land adjoining the highway, together with property thereon. And also Ludlow v. Mackintosh (1899) 21 Ky. L. Rep. 924, 53 S. W. 524, holding a city liable for taking property of an abutting owner, and for injury to trees, shrubs, plants, and fencing, caused while improving a street.

While not strictly within the scope of the note, attention is called to a line of cases holding a municipality liable for the acts of its officers in unlawfully opening a street through private land. Allen v. Decatur (1860) 23 Ill. 332, 76 Am. Dec. 692; Ft. Wayne v. Hamilton (1892) 132 Ind. 487, 32 Am. St. Rep. 263, 32 N. E. 324; Ashley v. Port Huron (1877) 35 Mich. 296, 24 Am. Rep. 552; Soulard v. St. Louis (1865) 36 Mo. 546; Lee v. Sandy Hill (1869) 40 N. Y. 442; Hathaway v. Osborne (1903) 25 R. I. 249, 55 Atl. 700; Squiers v. Neenah (1869) 24 Wis. 588.

In Hathaway v. Osborne (1903) 25 R. I. 249, 55 Atl. 700, the liability of the town is based upon the ground that, in laying out and constructing highways, the corporation acts within its general powers; and hence, if the council, without right, directs its officers to enter upon private land and lay out a highway, and they do so, the town is responsible for the trespass thus committed.

Of course, the rule holding a municipality liable for the acts of its officers acting under authority in laying out a public street on private property, where based upon the fact that the municipality had general powers to lay out streets, does not apply where a municipality, in laying out a street, acted in violation of an express statutory prohibition. In such case it has been held not to be liable to the owner of the property appropriated for street purposes. Cuyler

v. Rochester (1834) 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 165.
A. G. S.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF TENNESSEE EX REL. O. J. TIMOTHY et al.

v.

H. E. HOWSE et al.

(134 Tenn. 67, 183 S. W. 510.)

Office — provision for removal — conflict of statutes.

1. A statutory provision for ouster of officers generally is not affected by a subsequent statute providing for the recall of those in a particular city so as to prevent proceedings for their ouster, if the latter statute provides that the method of removal provided by it shall be cumulative.

For other cases, see Officers, I. e, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Judge — disqualification — passing on preliminary motion.

2. Acting upon a preliminary motion to suspend an officer for malfeasance in office does not disqualify the judge from sitting upon trial of the merits of a proceeding to oust him from his office.

For other cases, see Judges, III. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — discretionary matters — severance.

3. Whether or not a severance shall be granted in a proceeding to oust several incumbents from office rests in the discretion of the trial judge.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. 4, 6, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statute — ouster of officer — retroactive effect.

4. A statute providing for ouster of officials from office will apply to acts done prior to its passage if the acts were illegal at that time and the statute only provides a remedy.

For other cases, see Statutes, II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Office — removal — prior term.

5. One may be removed from public office for offenses committed during a prior term.

For other cases, see Officers, I. e, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Jury — right — ouster from office.

6. A constitutional preservation of the right to trial by jury does not apply to summary proceedings to oust one from public office.

For other cases, see Jury, I. b, 1, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — character — oral — summary proceeding.

7. Oral evidence is admissible in sum-

Note. — As to the recall, see annotation following State ex rel. Brown v. Howell, post, 1102.
L.R.A.1916D.

mary proceedings to oust one from public office, although the statute provides that the proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with procedure in chancery in which the testimony is taken in writing.

For other cases, see Officers, I. e, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Officer — removal — obeying will of constituent.

8. The mayor of a city is subject to removal from office for refusal to execute a state prohibitory liquor law, although the persons who elected him to office desire that it shall not be enforced.

For other cases, see Officers, I. e, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — suspension — direction as to election of successor.

9. The court may not, in a proceeding to oust from office the mayor of a city, determine as to the right to elect his successor, where the office is being filled by one elected in accordance with law to carry on the duties of the mayor during his suspension pending trial.

For other cases, see Officers, I. e, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 15, 1916.)

CROSS APPEALS from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Davidson County in a proceeding for the removal of defendants from office; relators appealing from the decree reinstating defendant Elliott, and defendant Howse appealing from the decree of ouster. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. C. Cherry, Harry S. Stokes, and J. G. Stephenson, for relators:

Incompetency and ignorance are grounds for ouster.

State use of Fentress County v. Reed, 116 Tenn. 110, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1084, 95 S. W. 809.

The refusal to enforce any ordinance, even though to enforce it would violate the conscience of the municipal official, is ground for ouster.

Riggins v. Waco, 100 Tex. 32, 93 S. W. 426.

Where a contract is forbidden by charter or ordinance, it is not material that no financial harm was suffered by the city.

Re Smith, 48 App. Div. 634, 63 N. Y. Supp. 1018.

The delegation by a mayor to a subordinate to sign his name is a delegation of a legislative power, which is ground for ouster.

Lyth v. Buffalo, 48 Hun, 175.

The incompetency or neglect of a municipal officer to exercise supervisory powers under the charter constitutes a wilful neglect, which is ground for ouster.

Heaney v. Chicago, 117 Ill. App. 412.

The suspension of Mayor Howse did not deprive him of his de jure status of officer, and the selection of Mr. Ewing only constituted him a de facto officer. Therefore, when Mr. Howse was ousted, Mr. Ewing's right to perform the duties of the office of mayor was ipso facto determined.

29 Cyc. 1373, 1393; State ex rel. Childs v. O'Leary, 64 Minn. 207, 66 N. W. 264; State ex rel. Whitney v. Van Buskirk, 40 N. J. L. 463; Atty.-Gen. ex rel. Haight v. Love, 39 N. J. L. 476, 23 Am. Rep. 234; Smith v. Dyer, 1 Call (Va.) 562; People v. Blanding, 63 Cal. 333; People ex rel. Eldred v. Palmer, 154 N. Y. 133, 47 N. E. 1084; Wright v. Adams, 45 Tex. 134; Smith v. Bryan, 100 Va. 199, 40 S. E. 652.

Mr. Ewing having been selected by a board composed of only three commissioners, instead of four, as required by chapter 22 of the Acts of 1913, was never validly selected to perform the duties of the office of mayor.

Webb v. Carter, 129 Tenn. 182, 165 S. W. 426.

The proceedings for the removal of public officers "are of a character which is peculiar to themselves, and the remedy is one in which the legislature has seen fit to provide a special practice, which governs in such proceedings only."

State v. Borstad, 27 N. D. 533, 147 N. W. 380; Myrick v. McCabe, 5 N. D. 422, 67 N. W. 143; Yoder v. Com. 107 Va. 823, 57 S. E. 581; Rankin v. Jauman, 4 Idaho, 53, 36 Pac. 502; State ex rel. Jackson v. Wilcox, 78 Kan. 597, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 224, 130 Am. St. Rep. 385, 97 Pac. 372; State ex rel. Kirby v. Henderson, 145 Iowa, 657, 124 N. W. 767, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1286; State ex rel. Cosson v. Baughn, 162 Iowa, 308, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 912, 143 N. W. 1100; Fuller v. Ellis, 98 Mich. 96, 57 N. W. 33; Govan v. Jackson, 32 Ark. 553; Davis v. State, 37 Tex. 227; People ex rel. Akin v. Kipley, 171 Ill. 44, 41 L.R.A. 784, 49 N. E. 229; Fields v. State, Mart. & Y. 168.

Summary proceedings for the removal of officers are not unconstitutional because no jury trial is provided for.

24 Cyc. 128, 135; Bank of State v. Cooper, 2 Yerg. 599, 24 Am. Dec. 517; Davis v. State, 92 Tenn. 642, 23 S. W. 59; Fields v. State, Mart. & Y. 171; Kennard v. Louisiana, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. ed. 478; Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 27 L. ed. 552, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; Foster v. Kansas, 112 U. S. 201, 205, 206, 28 L. ed. 629, 630, 697, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 897; Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 594, 596, 42 L. ed. L.R.A. 1916D.

865, 870, 871, 18 Sup. Ct. Ct. Rep. 435; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Eilenbecker v. District Ct. 134 U. S. 31, 33 L. ed. 801, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424; Marvin v. Trout, 199 U. S. 212, 226, 50 L. ed. 157, 162, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 31; Luria v. United States, 231 U. S. 928, 58 L. ed. 101, 107, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Yoder v. Com. 107 Va. 823, 57 S. E. 581; Brown v. Epps, 91 Va. 726, 27 L.R.A. 676, 21 S. E. 119; Munk v. Frink, 81 Neb. 631, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 439, 116 N. W. 525; Kennard v. Louisiana, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. ed. 478; State ex rel. Burke v. Jenkins, 148 N. C. 25, 61 S. E. 608; Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 865, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435; Sevier v. Justices of Washington County, Peck (Tenn.) 339; Tipton v. Harris, Peck (Tenn.) 414; State ex rel. Kirby v. Henderson, 145 Iowa, 657, 124 N. W. 767, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1286.

Where it is practically the same or identical office, and there is a continuous, wilful neglect, or acts of misfeasance in office, those acts are competent to be proven to show the scienter and even grounds of removal.

State v. Welsh, 109 Iowa, 19, 79 N. W. 369; State ex rel. Billon v. Bourgeois, 45 La. Ann. 1350, 14 So. 28; Territory v. Sanches, 14 N. M. 493, 94 Pac. 954, 20 Ann. Cas. 109; State ex rel. Douglas v. Megaarden, 85 Minn. 41, 89 Am. St. Rep. 534, 88 N. W. 412; State ex rel. Atty.-Gen. v. Lazarus, 39 La. Ann. 142, 1 So. 361; People ex rel. Burby v. Auburn, 85 Hun. 601, 67 N. Y. S. R. 3, 33 N. Y. Supp. 165; State ex rel. Perez v. Whitaker, 116 La. 947, 41 So. 218; State v. Hill, 37 Neb. 80, 20 L.R.A. 573, 55 N. W. 794; Re Barnard, 4 Lincoln, Const. History, 605.

Messrs. John T. Lellyett and E. F. Langford for defendants.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A petition of accusation on relation of ten or more citizens was filed July 20, 1915, under the provisions of Pub. Acts 1915, chap. 11, commonly known as the ouster act, seeking the removal from their respective offices of H. E. Howse, mayor of the city of Nashville, and Robert Elliott, commissioner of waterworks, street cleaning, and workhouse of that city. The defendants filed answers, and proof was heard on an application made to the circuit judge to suspend both of the defendants from office, and he passed an interlocutory decree to that effect.

Later amended petitions of accusation were filed to which the defendants replied by answers.

The grounds of ouster set forth in the pleadings of the relators may be concisely stated as follows:

(1) Substitution by defendants of administrative regulation of saloons, bawdy-houses, etc., for the charter requirement of legislative regulations by ordinance, and a wilful failure to enforce the laws and ordinances in relation thereto.

(2) The delegation to subordinates of the duty to approve vouchers, which unlawful delegation made possible the thefts shown throughout the record.

(3) The approval of vouchers without consideration, if signed by the head of a particular department, as an unlawful delegation of duty.

(4) Increase of offices, salaries, and various expenditures for other departments, while depriving the waterworks department of its own profits necessary for the acquisition and repair of machinery to protect life and property of the inhabitants.

(5) Padding the budget with railway park funds and other funds which were not receipts.

(6) Failure to require affidavits to contracts, showing the contractor not a person forbidden by law to contract with the city.

(7) Failure to keep separate bank accounts of trust funds as required by the charter.

(8) Failure to keep separate deposits of the school funds as required by § 1007 of the city digest.

(9) Encroachment on trust funds.

(10) Dealing with persons prohibited by the charter.

(11) Wanton waste of the city's money.

Nearly all of these charges were denied by defendants in the answers filed.

A large volume of proof was taken orally before the circuit judge, and it shows that the city had been brought to a financial condition that bordered on practical bankruptcy at the date of the filing of the petition.

The trial judge on the final hearing decreed that Howse should be ousted from the office of mayor, but he reinstated Elliott. The relators have appealed, complaining of the ruling last mentioned, and Howse has appealed from the decree of ouster, and the case is before this court on the two appeals.

Pub. Acts 1915, chap. 11, is entitled, "An Act to Provide for the Removal of Unfaithful Public Officers, and Providing a Procedure Therefor," and it makes provision for removal of such officers of certain classes who "shall knowingly or wilfully misconduct [themselves] in office, or who shall knowingly or wilfully neglect to perform any duty enjoined upon such officer by any of the laws of the state of Tennessee." L.R.A.1916D.

see." It is provided thereby that petitions of accusation may be filed on relation of the attorney general or other public officials or of ten or more citizens and freeholders of the state, county, or city, as the case may be.

Section 6 provides: "The proceedings under this act, whether in the circuit, chancery, or criminal courts, shall be conducted in accordance with the procedure of courts of chancery where not otherwise expressly provided herein; and all of said courts having cognizance of such proceedings are hereby given the full jurisdiction and powers of courts of equity with respect to such proceedings.

"Section 7. That said proceedings in ouster shall be summary and triable as an equitable action, and shall have precedence over civil and criminal actions, and shall be tried at the first term after the filing of the complaint or petition herein named: Provided the answer herein named shall have been on file at least ten days before the day of trial. A continuance may be granted either side for good cause shown, but no continuance shall be granted by an agreement of the parties."

Other provisions of the act are for the expedition suitable to a summary proceeding, such as those that the petition and answer shall constitute the only pleadings allowed, thus obviating the delay incident to demurrers, and that amendments shall not delay the trial. Answers are required to be upon oath or affirmation of the defendants.

The first assignment of error to be noticed in logical order is: That the lower court "erred in not holding the ouster act (chap. 11 of Acts of 1915) unconstitutional." This assignment of error does not point out the ground of unconstitutionality relied on, and is too indefinite for consideration under the rules of this court governing such assignments.

It is urged that the charter of the city of Nashville provided for the removal of officers of that corporation by recall, and that the remedy of recall is exclusive, and that therefore the ouster act does not apply to or affect appellant.

We held in this case when it was before us last year (State ex rel. Timothy v. Howse, 132 Tenn. 452, 178 S. W. 1112) that the ouster act was remedial in nature, and only provided a new or additional remedy. The charter provision in respect to recall plainly sets forth that it is also a cumulative remedy, thus: "This method of removal shall be cumulative and additional to the methods that are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law for the malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance of public officers." Priv. Acts 1913, chap. 22, § 32.

The contention is manifestly untenable.

The appellant next contends that the court erred in refusing to sustain his motion that the trial judge order a transfer of the case to be tried before another judge on interchange on the ground that the circuit judge had prejudged the case when the case was before him on the motion to suspend appellant from office.

The fact that Judge Matthews, of the circuit court, heard the application, and suspended Howse, in no sense disqualified him to sit in the trial on the merits. The trial on the application to suspend was in this case (132 Tenn. 452, 178 S. W. 1112) likened to interlocutory orders passed by a chancellor in an ordinary equity proceeding, and the circuit judge is no more disqualified by hearing such an application than is a chancellor who, when an application for extraordinary process, such as an injunction, is heard by him at chambers, grants the same, and the case comes on later to be heard on the merits.

A motion was made by Howse in the court below for a severance and separate trial. It is assigned for error that this was denied. Whether a severance shall be granted in a civil case, such as this is, is in the discretion of the trial court. Tyson v. Netherton, 6 Heisk. 19; 38 Cyc. 1268. There is nothing in the ouster act that provides to the contrary.

The appellant renews on the hearing of this appeal the insistence he urged on the former hearing in this court, to the effect that the trial judge erred in admitting in the trial on the merits testimony as to acts of malfeasance done during his pending term, but prior to the passage of the ouster act, January 19, 1915. We then held that the circuit judge in the trial of the application to suspend Howse properly considered such testimony, since "the act undertook to make nothing illegal that was not illegal before the act's passage, but that the act is merely remedial in its nature, and it only provides a new remedy." This holding was after full consideration, and it is upon reconsideration affirmed. A judgment of ouster under the act may therefore be predicated upon official acts transpiring prior to the passage of the act.

But the counsel of appellant point out that the circuit judge, over objections made, admitted evidence offered by the relators of certain acts of Howse while serving as mayor in the previous term of office. It is insisted that the better doctrine is that an officer cannot be removed from office for violation of his duties in such preceding term.

L.R.A.1916D.

This is a question upon which the authorities are divided, and so much so that it is difficult to say on which side of the exact point is the weight of authority, though perhaps it is with appellant's contention. Those cases proceed upon the fundamental notion that the re-election of the official operates to condone his past offenses.

In our view, however, the opposing cases announce the better doctrine, and the one more nearly in accord with our cases and with the precedent rulings in relation to our ouster act.

The reasoning and rulings in Day v. Sharp, 128 Tenn. 340, 345, 161 S. W. 994, 995, are leveled against this underlying notion: "The protection of the public is involved in the proceeding and judgment. Nothing in the statute suggests that electors, even, can condone the misfeasance."

The reference was to another disqualifying statute of this state.

In Territory v. Sanches, 14 N. M. 493, 94 Pac. 954, 20 Ann. Cas. 109 (cited in 132 Tenn. at page 459, 178 S. W. 1112), it was said: "It is essential to determine at the outset and to bear in mind throughout the true nature and purpose of the proceeding brought here for review. They could hardly be better expressed than in the words of Kent, J., in State v. Leach, 60 Me. 58, 11 Am. Rep. 172, in which the state was represented by its attorney general, Honorable Thomas B. Reed: 'The object of the removal of a public officer for official misconduct is not to punish the officer, but to improve the public service, and to free the public from an unfit officer.' To the same effect is Rankin v. Jauman, 4 Idaho, 53, 36 Pac. 502. With this clear statement, which cannot be gainsaid, as a guide, we shall be prepared to deal with the first claim of error for the defendant, discussed in the brief in his behalf, namely, that the trial court erred in holding that the defendant could be removed from office for acts done by him while holding the same office in the term immediately preceding the one in which his trial took place. The weight of authority, in numbers, is probably with the defendant on that point. But is a public officer less unfit to hold his office, or are the people less injuriously affected by his holding it, because the act demonstrating his unfitness was committed on the last day of one term of office rather than on the first day of the next succeeding term? There can be but one answer to that question."

In State v. Welsh, 109 Iowa, 19, 79 N. W. 369, the court said: "The defendant was re-elected sheriff of Johnson county at the general election of 1898, and during his second term, commencing January 1st of the year following, this action for his removal was begun. On motion the particular averments of official misconduct and neglect of duty during the first term were stricken from the petition on the ground that removals are only allowable for acts during the term being served. The statute contains no such limitation. The very object of removal is to rid the community of a corrupt, incapable, or unworthy official. His acts during his previous term quite as effectually stamp him as such as those of that he may be serving. Re-election does not condone the offense. Misconduct may not have been discovered prior to election, and in any event had not been established in the manner contemplated by the statute. . . . The commission of any of the prohibited acts the day before quite as particularly stamps him as an improper person to be intrusted with the performance of the duties of the particular office, as though done the day after."

See also State ex rel. Billon v. Bourgeois, 45 La. Ann. 1350, 14 So. 28; State ex rel. Douglas v. Megard, 85 Minn. 41, 89 Am. St. Rep. 534, 88 N. W. 412, and other cases in accord cited in note in 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 553, where also the cases holding to the contrary are collected.

Let us assume that a candidate for the mayoralty of a city is elected on pledges personally given to the electorate to enforce the laws; that he is elected, and that in consequence he gains control of the police department and the machinery for law enforcement; that near the close of his term, in order to a re-election, he uses all the machinery intrusted to him to nullify the laws' effectiveness for the purpose of bringing to his support those interested in nonenforcement; that by use of other means known to the modern politician and shown in this record he is elected. May it be said that the arm of the law is too short to reach and remedy this wrong; that a majority of the votes so secured operates to render immune the culprit? If so, the law itself holds out a reward, under the guise of condonation, for him who subverts the law, and a temptation to perpetuate himself in office by a repetition of the acts of subversion, whether they be acts of bribery, or the use of funds gathered from law violators as the price of their protection. We hold that the law is not to be thus made the instrument of its own undoing. Any doctrine that tends in that direction does not commend itself, and should be rejected.

The appellant, as defendant below, demanded a jury to try the questions of fact, L.R.A.1916D.

and, that demand having been denied, the ruling is assigned as error. It is argued that thereby a right guaranteed by the Constitution was withheld.

Our Constitution of 1870 in the embodied Declaration of Rights provides: "The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate." Article 1, § 6.

The same language was used to express the guaranty in the Constitutions of 1834 and 1796, and its meaning as to the nature of the "right" is to be gathered from that language used in the earliest Constitution. In relation to another constitutional guaranty of trial by jury, this court said in Eason v. State, 6 Baxt. 466, 474: "When the Constitution of 1870 was adopted, the same language which had thus been judicially interpreted was again readopted, and, we have a right to presume, with full knowledge of its uniform interpretation in the Constitutions of 1791 and 1834. This being so, this interpretation of the language becomes incorporated with the Constitution of 1870 as part of the fundamental law of the state."

At an early date it was held that the provision in the Constitution of 1796 did not guarantee a jury trial in every sort of case. In Goddard v. State (1825) 2 Yerg. 96, a bastardy case, it was held that a trial by jury was not a right of the putative father, the court saying: "The English Magna Charta has the same provision, from which the framers of our Constitution borrowed it, the construction of which has been settled as early as the time of Sir Edward Coke, who in his reading upon this statute tells us that the cases in which courts act without a trial by jury, or 'peers,' are innumerable and undefined, being done 'by the law of the land.'"

The court in that case instanced by way of example that a sustention of the defendant's contention would prevent a court of chancery decreeing upon property rights without the intervention of a jury, on demand being made for one.

If the proceeding for ouster prescribed by the act is one summary in nature, it is, we think, manifest that a trial by jury was not demandable as a matter of constitutional right. From very early times it has been held that the meaning of the term "summary proceedings" is such proceedings as are not according to the course of the common law (4 Bl. Com. 280); therefore not such proceedings as fell within the provision of Magna Charta above referred to.

A "summary proceeding" is defined in Bouvier's Law Dict. to be "a form of trial in which the established course of legal proceeding is disregarded, especially in the matter of trial by jury." See also 7 Words & Phrases, 6786; 4 Words & Phrases, 2d Series, 786; 24 Cyc. 128, 135; 37 Cyc. 528.

The Constitution containing no express prohibition, it was competent for the legislature to provide a summary procedure for the removal of public officers for misconduct in office, without violating the right to trial by jury. Fields v. State, Mart. & Y. 168; Sevier v. Justices of Washington County, Peck (Tenn.) 334; 24 Cyc. 134; People ex rel. Akin v. Kipley, 171 Ill. 44, 41 L.R.A. 775, 49 N. E. 229; Moore v. Strickling, 46 W. Va. 515, 50 L.R.A. 279, 33 S. E. 274; State ex rel. Burke v. Jenkins, 148 N. C. 25, 61 S. E. 608.

Modern ouster statutes which in terms deny the right to trial by jury (such as the one involved in State ex rel. Kirby v. Henderson, 145 Iowa, 657, 124 N. W. 767, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1286) are not on that account unconstitutional; nor are officers proceeded against entitled to a jury where the proceedings are made summary in nature and no trial by jury is expressly provided for. Woods v. Varnum, 85 Cal. 639, 24 Pac. 843; Rankin v. Jauman, 4 Idaho, 53, 36 Pac. 502.

In the last-cited case it was said: "The right of the legislature to provide for the summary removal of incompetent or unfaithful officers is no new doctrine. . . . It arises from the exigencies of government, and, if its enforcement is to be obstructed by all the delays and embarrassments incident to a jury trial, the aim and purpose of the law would be entirely defeated."

We are of the opinion that it was the intention of the legislature in the act under review to make the proceeding a summary proceeding. The language, "said proceedings in ouster shall be summary," clearly manifests that purpose.

It is argued by appellant that this is not the proper construction; that its popular meaning, rather than its legal, should be given to the word "summary," and the provision of the act construed to mean only that proceedings under it shall be speedy and expeditious. We had occasion to comment in the opinion on the former hearing that the act evidences the use of legal terminology. It was the work of a draftsman skilled in the law, and, when a summary proceeding was provided for, the legislature had in mind the nature of such a proceeding as contradistinguished from a regular one.

This being settled, it follows that, when a summary proceeding was provided, that, without more, meant that the trial should be one without the intervention of a jury. This, as we have seen, is a part of the very definition of the phrase "summary proceeding." When the phrase is used in a statute without more, a trial by jury is, in terms as if express, excluded. Woods v. Varnum, supra; Govan v. Jackson, 32 Ark. 557, cited in Taylor v. Carr, 125 Tenn. 249, 141 S. W. 745, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 155, with approval; Yoder v. Com. 107 Va. 823, 57 S. E. 583. And the same principle is recognized in Territory v. Sanches, 14 N. M. 493, 94 Pac. 954, 20 Ann. Cas. 109.

An extended argument is made that, because the act provides that ouster suits shall be "triable as equitable actions," and "shall be conducted in accordance with the procedure of courts of chancery where not otherwise expressly provided herein," and because in the ordinary or regular chancery cause material issues of fact may, it is claimed, be submitted to a jury as a matter of right, the constitutional guaranty applies to this proceeding. The right to a jury in the proceeding, however, is to be deemed excluded, not because it is an equitable action, but because, while it is such, it is also a peculiar action, irregular and summary in character, in respect to which a court of equity, of whatever character, does not proceed according to the course of the common law.

We need not, therefore, follow able counsel into their elaborate argument as to when, if ever, trial by jury of issues of fact in ordinary equity causes was guaranteed by a constitutional provision; as to which, however, see Gibson's Suits in Ch. 2d. ed. § 547, note, and cases cited.

In this connection it may be observed that this court has held that in the legal action of mandamus there is no constitutional right of trial by jury, such not having been demandable at common law (24 Cyc. 129), though such a trial may be granted in the discretion of the court (Marler v. Wear, 117 Tenn. 244, 96 S. W. 447); that election contests are not jury cases (Shields v. McMahan, 112 Tenn. 4, 81 S. W. 597; Taylor v. Carr, 125 Tenn. 235, 249, 141 S. W. 745, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 155); that a proceeding to disbar an attorney and deprive him of his status as an officer of the court is to be tried summarily by the court without a jury (Davis v. State, 92 Tenn. 634, 642, 23 S. W. 59).

The circuit judge properly ruled against appellant on his demand for a jury.

The appellant in the lower court at a timely stage objected to the introduction of oral evidence, on the ground that the proceeding is provided to be conducted "in accordance with the procedure of courts of chancery, where not otherwise expressly provided herein," and that the Code, Shannon, § 6272, stipulates that in chancery cases testimony shall be taken in writing. We are of opinion, in view of the fact that the proceeding is summary, that oral proof was properly admitted. To have taken the proof in the form of depositions under the rules of chancery procedure, allowing four months for proof in chief and two months for proof in rebuttal, would have frustrated the purpose of the act which looked to expedition.

The purpose of the act was to advance the remedy, and in such case the construction to be given it should be liberal to the same end. Cannon v. Wood, 2 Sneed, 177; Rose v. Wortham, 95 Tenn. 505, 30 L.R.A. 609, 32 S. W. 458.

Council of Howse advance the proposition that he, as mayor, was a "civil officer" within the meaning of article 5, § 5, of the Constitution, and that this section provides the causes for which and the exclusive procedure under which he may be removed from office. This argument is not well based, for reasons set forth in full in the opinion this day handed down in the case of State ex rel. Thompson v. Crump, — Tenn. —, 183 S. W. 505; the two cases having been heard, considered, and decided at the same time as companion cases.

We come, then, to a consideration of the assignment of errors which relate to the facts and seek to impeach the judgment rendered on the merits in the court below.

Howse was first elected to the office of mayor in the fall of 1909. In the previous spring a city ordinance had been passed prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors. In the platform on which Howse ran was the statement: "There can be no two opinions among good citizens and law-abiding people about the expediency of enforcing any law that has been regularly passed by the constituted authority."

In an address to the voters (which was published), after commenting upon the then recent passage of the state prohibition law, Howse said: "I want to be understood as saying in this connection that if I am placed at the head of the Nashville government I will vigorously and literally see to the enforcement of this law. I will not confine my efforts in this direction to isolated spasms of activity, or to widely separated and showy contortions of zeal. The mayor of Nashville has the power, if he has the will, to see that every lawful statute and ordinance is consistently enforced."

The address contains another significant passage: "It should not be said that any law which, in the opinion of the lawmaking body, was proper to be enacted for the purpose of protecting the morals of our people, can, with impunity, be violated, or that it can, with official countenance, become a void letter in the city which is the educational center of the South."

L.R.A.1916D.

Howse was elected to the mayoralty, and he was again elected in 1911, and then became ineligible under the terms of the existing charter of the city. A new charter was passed by the legislature which permitted of Howse's election to the mayoralty a third time in the fall of 1913. At that time open saloons were running in violation of the law in the business section of the city. As mayor, Howse had control and supervision of the police department.

The record makes manifest that funds were raised from the saloonists that went into the 1913 campaign fund of Howse, and that in return for the monthly levies made upon them they secured protection in the violation of law. One of these, Morsee, who was a close friend of Howse, a co-director in the same bank, and whose place of business was near that of Howse, testifies that he was treasurer of this fund and contributed $15 per month himself; others more. Continuing:

Q. You were running, and you were not being raided by the police of Nashville?

A. No, sir.

Q. And you were receiving protection in violation of law?

A. Well, you might call it that.

Q. I am asking you.

A. Yes; you might call it that.

Q. And you were paying $15 a month to get that protection, weren't you?

A. That is true.

Q. Didn't you consider protection cheap at $15 a month?

A. Well, yes; that is pretty reasonable.

The funds were deposited in the bank referred to, and the treasurer can give no satisfactory account of the expenditure of the fund or of those to whom it was checked out.

Contrasted with the above pledges is the following excerpt from the answer of Howse to the charges contained in the petition of accusation:

"Answering further, the defendant Hilary E. Howse says that from the time he was elected mayor in October, 1909, up to January 15, or thereabouts, 1915, that liquors were sold in Nashville with his knowledge, and that he was elected to office when the public sentiment of the city was such that it demanded the sale of liquors. Defendant knew of their sale, and did not order or direct the suppression thereof, because he had announced in his candidacy for the office in 1911 that he was opposed to prohibition, but favored local option, and he lived up to the statements he had made to the people who elected him after election as to the practice in the enforcement of the liquor laws."

He further says in his answer that "in deference to the changed sentiment of his party and the people, and in conformity to the policy adopted by the state officials, he ordered the suppression of the liquor traffic by the police force."

The facts just recited, without more, constitute ample cause for ouster. State ex rel. Martin v. Ryan, 92 Neb. 636, 139 N. W. 235, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 224; State ex rel. Jackson v. Wilcox, 78 Kan. 597, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 224, 130 Am. St. Rep. 385, 97 Pac. 372. The attempted justification of himself on the ground that the local public sentiment was opposed to law enforcement is no sort of justification or palliation. An official is elected and sworn to enforce the law, not public sentiment; and any suggestion that a municipality, a creature of the state, or its officers may set at naught or defy the laws of a sovereign state cannot be too severely rebuked. That way leads to anarchy. The officer who treads it brands himself as unworthy.

We shall not undertake to discuss and specifically pass on each of the other grounds of accusation against Howse as mayor. Several, though not all, of them are sustained by the proof.

We shall, however, refer to two of these.

One relates to the building of a market house on Haymarket square at a total cost above $17,500. In order to avoid the charter provision requiring that in case any estimated expenditure amounted to more than $500 the work should be advertised and let to the lowest responsible bidder, the work was done without compliance with these requirements. One firm did most of the work, and was paid by means of vouchers of $500 or under, signed by Howse, as if separate smaller contracts were let, thus, in substance, defeating the charter's check on collusion and extravagance. Color is given to this transaction by the facts that this market house was erected within a short distance of Howse's business establishment, without any real need of it at that place; that in order to induce its construction a number of those owning property near by subscribed to a fund to be donated to the city in part payment; that Howse's firm was one of the subscribers; and that on the completion of the building this fund was returned to the subscribers. It is fairly indicated on the record that the market house was from the outset a failure, entailing a heavy loss on the city.

In respect of a distinct charge of the illegal delegation to subordinates of the duty of approving vouchers, it appears that the mayor, in violation of § 3 of the city charter, frequently permitted his subordinates to sign his name to vouchers in approval, L.R.A.1916D.

and that in instances the practice led to the commission of gross frauds on the city treasury.

Without prolonging the discussion under this head, we hold that the circuit judge did not err in ousting Howse from his office.

The relators assign error in the judgment below in that Commissioner Robert Elliott was reinstated in his office, from which he had been suspended by interlocutory decree.

We have carefully read the record on this point, and have reached the conclusion that the circuit judge correctly ruled in favor of appellee Elliott. The solution of the dispute depends on questions of fact which we shall not undertake to discuss.

A second error assigned by the relators is that the trial judge did not decree that the board of commissioners of the city as then constituted "may proceed to the election of a successor to defendant Hilary E. Howse as mayor." The circuit judge was of opinion that there was no issue in the pleadings to support such an adjudication, and that all parties necessary for its determination were not before the court, and that it was not proper to adjudge in respect of the tenure of the person who had been chosen to carry on the duties of the mayor at the time of Howse's suspension. We think that the circuit judge held and enforced the correct view. The right of Howse only was in issue. The status of his successor under the act was not to be determined without the latter having a day in court. He did not hold by reason of any court appointment, but under an election held in pursuance of the charter of the city.

Finding no error in the rulings of the Circuit Judge which could affect the result, the judgment entered below is affirmed. The cost of the appeal will be paid three fourths by appellant Howse, and one fourth by appellees.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF TENNESSEE EX REL. LAURENT BROWN et al., Pliffs. in Certiorari,
v.

H. B. C. HOWELL et al., Election Commissioners of Davidson County.

(134 Tenn. 93, 183 S. W. 517.)

Election — recall — joint petition — partial invalidity — effect.

No action can be taken under a recall petition against several officers jointly; at least, if some are not elected by the constituency originating the petition and others have already vacated their offices. For other cases, see Initiative, Referendum, and Recall, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — As to the recall, see annotation following this case, post, 1102.

(February 26, 1916.)

CERTIORARI to the Court of Civil Appeals to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Circuit Court for Davidson County sustaining a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel defendants to certify a list of voters and to order an election to recall or remove certain officers from office. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Laurent Brown, William B. Marr, Richard P. Dews, Robert L. Sadler, Charles Gilbert, and R. A. Goodman, for plaintiffs in certiorari:

Irregularities do not avoid an election unless they affect the result of the election.

10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 766, 767; 15 Cyc. 318, 319; McCraw v. Harralson, 4 Coldw. 34; Puckett v. Springfield, 97 Tenn. 264, 37 S. W. 2; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. County Ct. 1 Sneed, 638, 62 Am. Dec. 424; Hord v. Rogersville & J. R. Co. 3 Head, 208; Red River Furnace Co. v. Tennessee C. R. Co. 113 Tenn. 697, 87 S. W. 1016; Richardson v. Young, 122 Tenn. 471, 125 S. W. 664; Butler v. Mills, 61 Ark. 477, 33 S. W. 632.

Either act charged in the recall (regarded as crime, tort, or breach of contract) would support a joint action.

Fowler v. State, 3 Heisk. 154.

The recall "should receive a liberal construction with a view to promoting the purpose for which it was enacted," which is "that the people may have an effective and speedy remedy to remove an officer who is not giving satisfaction," "without form or ceremony."

Dunham v. Ardery, 43 Okla. 619, L.R.A. 1915B, 232, 143 Pac. 331, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1148; Conn v. Richmond, 17 Cal. App. 705, 121 Pac. 714, 719; Robinson v. Anderson, 26 Cal. App. 644, 147 Pac. 1182; State ex rel. Clark v. Harris, 74 Or. 573, 144 Pac. 109, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1156; State ex rel. Smith v. Barbur, 73 Or. 10, 144 Pac. 126; Mills v. Nickes, 81 Wash. 409, 142 Pac. 1145; Bonner v. Belsterling, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 137 S. W. 1154, 104 Tex. 432, 138 S. W. 571; Hilzinger v. Gillman, 56 Wash. 228, 105 Pac. 471, 21 Ann. Cas. 305; Good v. San Diego, 5 Cal. App. 265, 90 Pac. 44; State ex rel. Topping v. Houston, 94 Neb. 445, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 227, 143 N. W. 796.

There was express authority for removal. Hayden v. Memphis, 100 Tenn. 582, 47 S. W. 182.

Where the mayor has authority to remove any officer appointed upon his nomination, L.R.A.1916D.

he may remove the appointee of his predecessor.

Williams v. Gloucester, 148 Mass. 256, 19 N. E. 348; MacLellan v. Marine, 98 Md. 53, 56 Atl. 359.

The election of a successor is the primary object of the recall, and the removal is only incidental.

Poole v. Lawrence, 86 N. J. L. 90, 90 Atl. 668.

The action of the election board, holding the recall petition sufficient in form, is conclusive until set aside.

15 Cyc. 320.

No discretion as to the form of the recall petition is vested in the election board.

Poole v. Lawrence, supra; Robinson v. Anderson, 26 Cal. App. 644, 147 Pac. 1182; Hay v. Dorn, 93 Kan. 392, 144 Pac. 235; Conn v. Richmond, 17 Cal. App. 705, 121 Pac. 714, 719; Good v. San Diego, 5 Cal. App. 265, 90 Pac. 44; Dunham v. Ardery, 43 Okla. 619, L.R.A.1915B, 232, 143 Pac. 331, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1148.

Nonjoinder is matter in abatement, and, in a common-law case, must be set up by demurrer or plea in abatement.

1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 14 et seq.

If the answer below be treated as a valid plea in abatement, and in bar, under the statute, the matter in abatement has been waived, because no separate action was invoked on it in the circuit court.

Cincinnati, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. McCollum, 105 Tenn. 623, 59 S. W. 136; McCampbell v. State, 116 Tenn. 98, 93 S. W. 100.

Messrs. John W. Gaines, Jr., and Pitts & McConnico, for defendants in certiorari:

If recall petition or proposition to be submitted to voters at referendum election is so irregular that an election based thereon would be invalid, mandamus will not lie to compel the submission of such matter to the electors.

State ex rel. Davies v. White, 36 Nev. 334, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 195, 136 Pac. 110; 13 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 493, 494.

The filing of a separate recall petition against each officer sought to be removed is the proper practice.

Conn v. Richmond, 17 Cal. App. 705, 121 Pac. 714, 719; Robinson v. Anderson, 26 Cal. App. 644, 147 Pac. 1182; Bennett v. Drullard, 27 Cal. App. 180, 149 Pac. 368.

An officer subject to recall cannot be regarded as "recalled" until after the recall election is over and its result ascertained and declared. The mere filing of a recall petition does not amount to a "recall" of the incumbent officer.

Bonner v. Belsterling, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 137 S. W. 1154.

When the terms under which the power of removal or amotion is to be exercised are prescribed, they must be pursued with strictness.

State ex rel. Miller v. Berg, 97 Neb. 63, 149 N. W. 61; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 468.

Constitutionality of recall provisions is sustained upon the ground that they are applicable only to officers elected after the passage of the recall statute.

State ex rel. Topping v. Houston, 94 Neb. 445, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 227, 143 N. W. 796; Hilzinger v. Gillman, 56 Wash. 228, 105 Pac. 471, 21 Ann. Cas. 305; Bonner v. Belsterling, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 137 S. W. 1164, 104 Tex. 432, 138 S. W. 571.

The unlawful inclusion of three officers not subject to recall, in the recall petition, operates to make the same illegal.

Bennett v. Drullard, 27 Cal. App. 180, 149 Pac. 368; Hay v. Dorn, 93 Kan. 392, 144 Pac. 235; Leavenworth v. Wilson, 69 Kan. 74, 76 Pac. 400, 2 Ann. Cas. 367.

Fancher, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The charter of the city of Nashville (Priv. Acts 1913, chap. 22) provides for a commission form of government. It also provides that the mayor or any commissioner elected by the people under this act may be removed from office by the qualified voters of the city.

The suit now before us on writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the court of civil appeals was instituted in the circuit court of Davidson county by a petition of Laurent Brown and others, asking for a writ of mandamus to compel Howell, Turner, and Carr, commissioners of election, to certify a list of voters, and to order an election to recall or remove Hilary E. Howse, mayor, and J. M. Wilkerson and R. B. Elliott, commissioners, from office.

The petition avers that there had been signed by upwards of 2,500 voters, as required by the city charter, a joint and several petition asking for the removal of these three officials and others, that the petition had been filed with the board of election commissioners for more than thirty days, but that Howell and Carr had refused to join their co-commissioner, Turner, in providing for said election.

Turner answered and showed a willingness to comply, and averred that he had tried to get his associates to do so, but they refused.

Howell and Carr answered, and pointed out a number of alleged irregularities in the recall petition which they averred justified their refusal to act. These defects were, among others, that Lyle Andrews, commissioner of finance, whose removal was sought, had been removed previously, and his successor selected in a legitimate way; that the petition sought the removal of Wilkerson and Alexander, who were not subject to recall under the charter of the city. They also pointed out that the petition was not joint and several, but jointly against a number of officials, whereas there should have been circulated and presented separate petitions against each separate officer whose removal was sought.

The case was heard on petition and answers.

It appeared that Wilkerson had resigned subsequent to the filing of the petition, and that Howse and Elliott had been temporarily suspended from office under what is known as the ouster law (Pub. Acts 1915, chap. 11), a statute of the state providing for the removal of officials from office upon a judicial hearing. The temporary suspension of Howse and Elliott was shortly after the recall petition had begun to circulate among the voters. Since the case has been pending Howse has been permanently removed in the ouster case, and Commissioner Elliott has been restored to office by judgment of this court.

The circuit court judge ordered the commissioners of election to attach their certificate and to order a recall election as to Howse, Elliott, and Wilkerson. The court of civil appeals by a divided court reversed the circuit judge and dismissed the petition.

The city charter provides for the recall by a petition signed by duly qualified and registered voters equal in number to 25 per cent of the entire vote cast for the office of mayor at the last preceding general city election, and demanding the election of a successor of the person sought to be removed, which shall be filed with the chairman of the county board of election commissioners. The petition shall state the grounds on which the removal is sought. The signatures need not be all appended to one paper, but each signer shall add to his signature his place of residence, giving street and number. Five of the signers to each such petition shall make oath before some competent officer that the statements made therein are true, as he believes, and that each signature appended is the genuine signature of the person whose name it purports to be. When filed with the board of election commissioners, they shall determine whether it is signed by a sufficient number of voters, to be ascertained from the registered voters, and it shall remain on file at the office of said board, and any citizen may procure a copy. Within thirty days from the date of filing any citizen may appear before the board of election commissioners and show by competent evidence that the names of parties signing the petition should be stricken therefrom on the ground that they are not duly qualified and registered voters. After the lapse of thirty days from the filing of the petition the board of election commissioners shall attach their certificate showing the result of said examination. In the event the petition shall be deemed sufficient by said board of election commissioners it shall be its duty to fix a date for holding said election, not less than thirty days nor more than ninety days from the date of said certificate that a sufficient petition has been filed.

If, by certificate of the county board of election commissioners, the petition is shown to be insufficient, it may be amended within ten days from the date of said certificate, and the said board shall then make like examination of the amended petition within ten days after the amendment.

There are other provisions unnecessary to set out. An election is provided for. Any person sought to be removed may be a candidate to succeed himself, and his name shall be placed on the ballot without nomination unless he in writing requests otherwise. If some other person than the incumbent shall receive the highest number of votes, the incumbent shall thereupon be deemed removed from office upon the qualification of his successor, who shall hold for the unexpired term.

It will be seen that the board of election commissioners pass upon the sufficiency of the petition for removal.

It appears that one official whose name was included in this recall petition was not then in office, and two of these officials were not subject to recall, because they were not elected by the people under the terms of this act of 1913. The election, had it been called, would have been void as to these officials. The learned circuit judge saw the incongruity in this petition to remove men not subject to the recall along with those who might be, and he ordered the mandamus to apply only to Howse, Elliott, and Wilkerson. It is urged that this was proper.

We are of opinion the action of the court of civil appeals lays down the proper construction of this statute and the practice. The petition signed by the voters was for the removal of all the officials jointly. By what means can we determine that the people would sign a recall as to one or a few, less than all of the officials? The petition was joint and proceeded against all.

After a judicial inquiry by the courts under the ouster bill, Mayor Howse has been ousted from office, and Commissioner Elliott has been restored to office. Wilkerson has resigned. So, if we were to order the L.R.A.1916D.

writ of mandamus, and the election should be held, it could only apply now to Elliott, the only remaining officer subject to removal. How may we know that these 2,500 voters who signed the joint petition for removal would now desire the removal of Elliott alone?

This illustrates how improper it is to include a number of officials in one petition or proceeding for removal.

The petition signed by the voters constitutes, so to speak, the pleading or indictment initiatory to remove an official. It should be directed against a single individual for the reason, first, as we think, that it is so contemplated by the act of the legislature granting this remedy in the city charter. The act starts out with the provision that the mayor or any commissioner elected by the people under the terms and provisions of this act may be removed from such office by the qualified voters of the city. All the way through it grants authority to proceed against an officer sought to be removed, and nowhere indicates that the method may be proceeded with against a number of officials jointly. See Priv. Acts 1913, chap. 22, § 32.

The impropriety and injustice of proceeding against a number of persons in one petition are manifest. It is subject to objection on the ground that a voter, when presented with the petition, must judge as to the question of whether he shall ask for a removal of a number of men or else submit to the retention in office of all. He is not given the clear-cut right to pass on each individual and exercise his own individual judgment as to that particular person. The fact that the petition stated the same cause of removal against all does not cure it of this objection. The voter ought to have the right to judge singly against each officer if he so desire. The legislature evidently so intended.

The same right to exercise independent judgment on each separate official must exist in the initiatory step of removal, as effectively as that the voter may so exercise at the ballot box his right and duty to elect a new official or recall an old one. As well might it be said that the voter shall be compelled to vote for a number of men jointly and be denied the right to vote as to each one singly, as to say he may not judge of the propriety of holding in office each individual official who had been previously elected. The initial step in the removal is quite as important as the final vote in the recall.

The official also should have the right to be judged alone by his fellow citizens as to his own merits or demerits. That the law-making body so intended in providing the recall we have no doubt. To construe it otherwise would be to attribute to the legislature the enactment of an unwise and intolerable law.

We have been furnished with no citation showing that any state has permitted the practice of including in the petition for recall a number of officials to be considered jointly. We take it for granted that none can be found, for counsel have prepared the case with great care. This indicates that the practice is the contrary wherever the remedy has been applied.

Two California cases have been found and cited where the removal of several officials occupying similar positions was sought by separate petitions against each official, circulated and signed by the voters. These are Conn v. Richmond, 17 Cal. App. 706, 121 Pac. 714, 719, and Robinson v. Anderson, 26 Cal. App. 644, 147 Pac. 1182. These cases afford a construction of the proper practice under similar proceedings to that now before the court by a state which was a pioneer in this remedy of recall of public officials.

Those authorities cited by the petitioners holding that the recall is an efficient means of removal and should be given a liberal construction do not touch the question here, which is fundamental and goes to the personal right of the citizen. It is not a mere question of nicety of pleading. It is a question of construction of a statute of the state, and we construe it in accord with the spirit of our institutions.

This law is intended as a simple, direct, and just method of declaring a public official unfit to hold a given office, and gives 25 per cent of the voters the power to stamp him with disapproval. When so disapproved, he is by that act presented to all the voters for recall. How important it is, then, to the official himself, as well as to the public, that such power be so administered as to prevent political combinations, those who object to one official combining with those who object to another.

This is not a mere matter of pleading, requiring a demurrer or plea in abatement. In their initiatory petition there was a failure to comply with the statute providing for the recall. The petition being improperly directed at a number of officials jointly, which is not permitted or provided for in the statute, it was a void proceeding.

In Bennett v. Drullard (1915) 27 Cal. App. 180, 149 Pac. 368-370, the subject of municipal legislation by an initiative petition directed to the passage of ordinances by the people was before the court. The initiative petition contained matters embracing two so-called alternative propositions or sections along with the main ordinance.

The conclusion of the court was that the statute authorizing such legislation did not provide for the two alternative propositions to be submitted under one petition. The court declared the whole petition void for that reason. In that case a general rule applying as well here as there was stated as follows: "The answer to all of these questions depends almost entirely upon the provisions of the city charter. It is agreed by the parties to this proceeding that the charter is a grant of the powers, and not a limitation, so that no act can be legally exercised thereunder unless such act finds express authority in the charter itself, or is implied from some of its express terms."

That court cited for the proposition McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, vol. 1, p. 783. And this is in accord with the previous holdings of our court.

The California court impliedly held that to authorize the submission of more than one ordinance in one petition it should have been provided for by the charter of the city. The court used the following language: "On the first point, that is, the claim that an initiative petition may contain more than one ordinance, no provision of the city charter to that effect has been shown to the court, and after a somewhat exhaustive search the court has been unable to find any. On the contrary, in every section throughout the article of the charter dealing with the initiative, the singular, 'ordinance,' is used, and there is nothing contained in said sections which gives the slightest encouragement to the claim of petitioner."

Then going further to the policy as well as the legality of submitting more than one ordinance to be voted on, and that to be the one the voter had petitioned for, the court further said: "Here is a power granted unto the people to propose their own laws for adoption, provided certain legal procedure be allowed to properly place said laws before the voters. Assume, if you please, that certain features are included in such proposed laws, or in connection therewith, which appealed to the voter, and in fact served as the controlling influence inducing him to sign the petition. Has he not the right to assume, and should not the law protect him in the assumption, that he will have the opportunity and right to vote for the matters which he has petitioned for?"

The application of the reasoning in the California court above quoted is apparent. The learned circuit judge eliminated some of these officials from the petition in order to make it apply to those whom he conceived might be legally removed from office.

But how may the court know that the required number of voters would have signed the petition if some of the names had been left out of the petition?

In the opinion of the California court in the case last cited, it was held that the alternative features included in the initiatory petition rendered it void; that, embracing matters not permissible, it could not be cured by a revision by cutting out the illegal features.

There is no more reason for reading into the charter of Nashville an implied power to include more than one official in a petition for removal, than there was for the California court to find an implied authority in the charter provisions there considered to include in the initiative petition more than one ordinance to be voted on. The principles there decided have full application here.

The inclusion of the three officers in the petition who were not subject to the recall was illegal, therefore, because neither the election board nor the court by mandamus had the right to split up the recall petition and segregate objectionable features, and submit to the voters only those portions of the recall petition deemed proper or legal.

The inclusion of unauthorized and improper matter in the petition, namely, the three officers not subject to the recall, rendered the petition dual, and for that reason illegal. This proposition in principle was held in two Kansas cases. In one case the questions of purchase of an existing water plant for the city, and the construction of a new one, were attempted to be included together, submitting to the voters a proposition to issue bonds "to purchase, procure, provide, or contract for the construction of waterworks," and included in one ballot. This was held to be dual, and for that reason illegal, and an election carried by the use of such ballots was void. Leavenworth

v. Wilson, 69 Kan. 74, 76 Pac. 400, 2 Ann. Cas. 367.

The other Kansas case is Hay v. Dorn (1914) 93 Kan. 392, 397, 144 Pac. 235-237. This was a mandamus suit to require the holding of a recall election. The writ was denied because the petition included not only a demand to elect a successor to the officer sought to be removed for the reasons stated in the petition, but included without statutory authority for it another person therein to be nominated or elected as a successor to the officer sought to be recalled. The supreme court said: "The statute does not authorize the naming in a recall petition of another person to be nominated or elected as a successor to the incumbent upon his removal. Some electors might desire the recall of the incumbent, provided the successor named in the petition was to be elected, but otherwise would be opposed to the recall. Such a petition presents to the electors a dual question, and is illegal. Leavenworth v. Wilson, supra. The petition in such cases must present the single question, viz., Shall the city officer, naming him, be recalled?"

In the note in 2 Ann. Cas. 369, the illegality of thus submitting dual matters to the voters to be acted upon jointly, and showing the necessity of submitting such questions single and separate from any other question that might influence the voter, is illustrated by citation of a large number of authorities.

For these and other reasons unnecessary to be mentioned we conclude that the petition for removal was absolutely void, and the election commissioners properly refused to certify it or provide for an election under it. The writ was granted in favor of petitioners, but, for reasons herein stated, the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals is affirmed.

Annotation—The recall.

- I. Constitutionality, 1103.*
- II. Exclusiveness of remedy, 1103.*
- III. Necessity of legislation to carry constitutional provisions into effect, 1103.*
- IV. Enforcement:*
  - a. Mandamus:*
    - 1. In general, 1104.*
    - 2. Who is entitled to writ, 1104.*
  - b. Injunction, 1104.*
- V. Operation:*
  - a. Petition:*
    - 1. Contents, 1105.*
    - 2. Signing, 1105.*
    - 3. Verification, 1107.*

L.R.A.1916D.

V. a—continued.

- 4. Withdrawal of names, 1107.*
- 5. Filing, 1107.*
- b. Conclusiveness of officer's certificate, 1107.*
- c. Sufficiency of certificate, 1107.*
- d. Duties of officer, 1108.*
- e. When recall may be had, 1108.*
- f. Miscellaneous, 1108.*

The earlier cases on the recall are discussed in the note to State ex rel. Topping v. Houston, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 227.

I Constitutionality.

For earlier cases on the constitutionality of the recall, see note in 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 227.

In the absence of an express inhibition in the Constitution, cities given a constitutional power to frame their own charter are not impliedly prohibited from putting into practice the power to recall their officers. Such a provision is not in conflict with a constitutional provision that the governor and other elective state officers shall be subject to impeachment for certain offenses, and that all elective officers not liable to impeachment shall be subject to removal from office in such a manner and for such causes as may be provided by law, and that the legislature shall pass such laws as are necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of such article. Dunham v. Ardery (1914) 43 Okla. 619, L.R.A. 1915B, 232, 143 Pac. 331, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1148. Nor is such a provision in conflict with the constitutional provision that all laws in force in the territory of Oklahoma at the time of the admission of the state into the Union which are not repugnant to the Constitution, and which are not locally inapplicable, shall be extended to and remain in force in the state until they expire by their own limitations, or are altered or repealed by law. (Okla.) Ibid.

II. Exclusiveness of remedy.

For discussion of this question, see note in 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 229.

See also STATE ex rel. TIMOTHY v. HOWSE, ante, 1090.

III. Necessity of legislation to carry constitutional provisions into effect.

In the absence of legislation carrying into effect recall provisions contained in a Constitution, the question arises whether the recall is operative; in other words, whether the constitutional provision is self-executing. Some Constitutions expressly provide that the provisions as to recall shall be self-executing. In the absence of such an express provision this question is one of construction. A constitutional provision is self-executing if it enacts a sufficient rule by means of which the rights given may be enjoyed and protected, or the duty imposed may be enforced. Note on the initiative and referendum in 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 198. In another form it is stated that constitutional provisions are self-executing where it is the manifest intention that they should go into immediate effect, L.R.A. 1916D.

and no ancillary legislation is necessary to the enjoyment of a right given or the enforcement of a duty or a liability imposed. State ex rel. Clark v. Harris (1914) 74 Or. 573, 144 Pac. 109, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1156.

The constitutional provision for the recall of public officers which was held self-executing in State ex rel. Clark v. Harris (Or.) supra, fixed the maximum percentage of electors required to file a petition, provided that the petition should set forth the reasons for the recall, and went at length into the details of the recall. It provided also that additional legislation such as may aid the operation of the constitutional provision shall be provided by the legislative assembly, including provision for payment by the public treasury of the reasonable special election campaign expenses of the officer; but the words "the legislative assembly shall provide," or any similar or equivalent words in the constitutional provision or any amendment thereto, are stated not to be construed to grant to the legislative assembly any exclusive power of lawmaking, or in any way to limit the "initiative and referendum" powers reserved by the people. With reference to this specific provision the court states that the legislative assembly is required to pass such legislation as may "aid" the operation of the constitutional provision; that this does not mean legislation to put the section in operation, but such as will aid its operation; and it seems to imply that the section will be in operation before such legislation shall be enacted. The first paragraph of the constitutional provision was to the effect that every public officer in the state is subject, as therein provided, to recall by the legal voters of the state, or of the electoral district from which he is elected. With reference to this the court states that every officer is made by this section subject to recall as provided therein, and not as the lawmaking department may provide. With reference to the provision by the legislative assembly for payment of the election expenses of an officer, the court states that the right to have an officer recalled in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution is not made dependent on the passage of such an act; that it is the duty of the legislative assembly to pass such an act, but the right to recall an officer cannot be suspended or defeated by the failure of the legislature to do its duty in the premises.

The fact that the constitutional provision was to the effect that there may be required 25 per cent, but not more, of the number of electors, to institute a petition for the recall of an officer, instead of providing definitely what per cent shall be required, was held not to prevent the constitutional provision from being self-executing; that until the legislative assembly or the people enact the contrary, every petition for a recall must be signed by not less than 25 per cent of the electors. (Or.) Ibid.

IV. Enforcement.

a. Mandamus.

1. In general.

The earlier cases on this question are discussed in note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 229.

Where the duties of the officer examining the petition require the exercise of discretion and judgment, his action cannot be controlled by mandamus. Dunham v. Ardery (1914) 43 Okla. 619, L.R.A. 1915B, 232, 143 Pac. 331, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1148. It is stated in this case that the writ of mandamus was denied in Chesney v. Jones (1912) 31 Okla. 363, 128 Pac. 715, on the ground that the duties of the official were discretionary or quasi judicial. There is nothing appearing in the opinion in the Chesney Case, however, to support this construction, but that case turned upon other matters discussed below.

When a statute vests in the official making the examination a quasi judicial power is a question of the construction of particular statutes. In Dunham v. Ardery (Okla.) supra, the statute required the petition to be signed by electors entitled to vote for a successor to the officer sought to be removed, after providing for some details with reference to the petition. It contained the provision that within ten days from the date of filing the petition, the city clerk shall examine and from the voters' register ascertain whether or not said petition is signed by the requisite number of qualified electors, and that he should attach to the petition his certificate showing the result of his examination. Provision is then made for an amendment in case the petition is shown to be insufficient, and for another examination after the amendment. The language of this statute was held to clearly indicate that the clerk is vested with a discretionary and quasi judicial power to determine whether the petition is sufficient; he is stated not to be required to count a name, although it appears on L.R.A.1916D.

the voters' register, if it should appear from the face of the petition and the voters' register that such party was not a legal voter under the law,—the petitioner whose name appears upon the petition and upon the voters' register having become ineligible to vote since registering by reason of removal from the city or the precinct in which he registered, or for other reasons. In conclusion the court states that the duties of the clerk are, first, to decide whether the petition in form is sufficient and whether the grounds alleged come within the charter; second, to ascertain the total number of votes cast for mayor at the last preceding election; third, from an examination of the petition, together with the voters' register, to ascertain whether the required per cent of petitioners have signed the petition; fourth, to pass on the question whether the signatures are bona fide or forgeries. He must ascertain by comparison with the voters' register whether the signers are legally qualified electors, and, this fact having been ascertained, whether they are legal electors at the time this question must be determined by looking to the law prescribing the qualifications of the voter.

Mandamus will not issue to compel a canvassing board to canvass the returns of an election in which invalid ballots were used. Wilson v. Blake (1915) 169 Cal. 449, 147 Pac. 129. As to ground of invalidity, see infra, V. f.

The rule that in mandamus the right of a relator to relief must be clear and exist at the time the relief is sought, or his action cannot be maintained, is not applicable in an action in mandamus to compel the clerk to call an election for the recall of a public official, the petitions for which were not verified as required by law, but is applicable where the relator was complaining about the refusal of the clerk to permit him to attach the proper verifications after the papers had been filed as he had a right to do. State ex rel. Miller v. Berg (1914) 97 Neb. 63, 149 N. W. 61.

2. Who is entitled to writ.

For discussion of this question, see the note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 230.

b. Injunction.

The earlier cases on this question are discussed in the note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 230.

Certiorari proceedings from a judgment refusing to grant injunctive relief to restrain the city clerk from calling a special election were dismissed in Mills v. Niekens (1914) 81 Wash. 409, 142 Pac. 1145, where the cause was brought before the supreme court both by writ of certiorari and appeal, and the counsel by stipulation submitted the cause for final determination, and it was determined upon the appeal, the court stating that such determination manifestly furnished a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

See State ex rel. McCauley v. Gilliam (1914) 81 Wash. 186, 142 Pac. 470.

V. Operation.

a. Petition.

1. Contents.

The naming in a recall petition of another person to be elected as successor to the officer sought to be recalled invalidates the petition, in the absence of a statute authorizing such naming. Hay v. Dorn (1914) 93 Kan. 392, 144 Pac. 235. Such a petition is stated to present a dual question to the electors, and for this reason to be illegal.

But under a constitutional provision authorizing the recall and providing that other candidates for the office may be nominated to be voted for at said special election and that the candidate who shall receive the highest number of votes shall be deemed elected, whether he be the person against whom the recall petition was filed or another, it is held not error to submit at the election the question whether the officer shall be recalled from his office, and besides this to have appear upon the ballot the candidates for the office including the officer sought to be recalled. State ex rel. Smith v. Barbur (1914) 73 Or. 10, 144 Pac. 126. The argument in this case was that it was error to submit the question of recall alone, and that the only legal way the Constitution could be complied with was found in the expression of the electors of their preference among the candidates for the possible vacancy in office. The answer to this given by the court is that the people are entitled to vote directly upon the question of recalling an incumbent of a public position; that it does not necessarily follow that there will be candidates in such an election, but that the right of the people to exercise this prerogative cannot be made to depend upon the presence of possible candidates for the office.

As shown in the subdivision of the note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232, relating to the statement of cause, the grounds upon which the recall is sought need not be stated with technical accuracy. A statement of the grounds in a petition for the recall of a supervisor, that he voted for the allowance of a claim which the district attorney had advised the board of supervisors was an illegal and invalid claim, that he commercialized his office, and in the employment of labor on the highways gave preference to electors who favored his own political convictions, and that he had little or no knowledge of practical engineering or the construction of public highways, and by reason of this lack of knowledge was extravagant and wasteful of the highway funds, was sustained as a sufficient statement of cause, under a statute requiring the petition to contain a statement of the grounds on which the removal or recall is sought, but providing that the statement is intended solely for the information of the electors. Laam v. McLaren (1915) — Cal. App. —, 153 Pac. 985.

The sufficiency of the grounds is a question for the electors under this statute. The court cannot pass upon this question. It is also immaterial whether the grounds alleged are true or false. (Cal.) Ibid.

But under constitutional and statutory provisions authorizing a recall for malfeasance in office, it was assumed that the sufficiency of the grounds is for the court, in Pybus v. Smith (1914) 80 Wash. 65, L.R.A. 1915A, 285, 141 Pac. 203, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1145. The voting by a municipal councilman for a proposition coming before the council, in consideration of an agreement by another councilman to vote for a proposition in which he was interested, was there held to be within the operation of the constitutional and statutory provisions referred to, and to form sufficient legal cause for submitting to the voters of the city the question of his recall and discharge from public office.

2. Signing.

For earlier cases on sufficiency of signing, see note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 230.

The number of signers required is usually fixed at a certain per cent of the electors. It is sometimes fixed at a percentage "of the highest vote cast" at a preceding election. "The highest vote cast," within the meaning of such a provision, was interpreted to mean the highest number of votes cast both for and against any proposition or candidate for office, not simply the highest vote cast for or against any proposition or candidate for office, in State ex rel. Miller v.

Berg (1914) 97 Neb. 63, 149 N. W. 61. One of the judges, in dissenting from this proposition, construed the expression "highest vote cast" to mean all the votes cast at the election.

Where the number of signers is fixed at a percentage "of the entire vote cast . . . for all candidates for the office which the incumbent sought to be removed occupied," and more than one officer of the same kind is elected at the same election (as in the case of municipal trustees), the electors voting for a candidate for one or all of such offices, as they see fit, the percentage should be based upon the total number of ballots cast at the election. Robinson v. Anderson (1915) 26 Cal. App. 644, 147 Pac. 182.

As to the number of signers, see State ex rel. Clark v. Harris (1914) 74 Or. 573, 144 Pac. 109, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1156.

A question arose in Mills v. Niekens (1914) 81 Wash. 409, 142 Pac. 1145, a case of the recall of a member of a council, the members of which were elected at different elections, as to the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring the percentage to be computed from the total number of votes cast for all candidates "for his said office, to which he was elected at the preceding election." An election for councilmen had intervened between that at which the councilman sought to be recalled had been elected and the filing of the recall petition. It was held that the percentage must be computed on the number of votes cast at the election for councilmen next preceding the filing of the recall petition, although that was not the election at which the councilman sought to be recalled was elected. It is stated that the manifest purpose of this constitutional provision is to measure the number of required signatures upon a recall petition by the required percentage of the number of votes cast at the nearest preceding election, and to have the question whether there shall be a recall election or not decided by the required percentage of present qualified voters as near as that can be ascertained. This is true although the recall movement had its inception prior to the holding of the later election, the petition for the recall having been filed with the clerk as registration officer after that election.

A contrary decision was rendered by a California district court of appeal in Robinson v. Anderson (Cal.) supra. The statute involved in the California case required 25 per cent of the entire vote cast "for all candidates for the office L.R.A.1916D.

which the incumbent sought to be removed occupies, at the last preceding regular municipal election at which such officer was voted for." This in the case of a recall movement against a municipal trustee was held to mean the election at which the trustee sought to be recalled was voted for, and not an intervening election for other trustee offices, not including that which the officer in question occupied.

The officer whose duty it is to examine the petition for recall is by some statutes required to determine whether it is signed by a sufficient number of qualified electors by comparison with the voters' register. Under such a statute names not on the voters' register cannot be counted notwithstanding the signers may be qualified voters at the time of the filing of the petition. State ex rel. Miller v. Berg (Neb.) supra. Such a statute is not dealing with the question of election, but is simply providing a method for determining who shall have the right, after an election has been held and an official who was elected has taken his office, to petition for the removal of such official before the expiration of his term of office. The right to petition for the removal from office of a public official is not a right guaranteed by the Constitution, but simply a privilege granted by the legislature, and the legislature in granting the privilege may impose such conditions on the exercise of it as it sees fit.

A like decision appears under a statute requiring a petition for the recall of an officer to be examined, and the fact whether the petition is signed by the requisite number of electors to be determined by inspection of the petition and of the registration books and election returns. In order that one may be a signer upon a recall petition, it was held necessary that his name be upon the registration books. Chesney v. Jones (1912) 31 Okla. 363, 126 Pac. 715.

In discussing the discretion which is vested in the officer in making the examination, it is stated in Dunham v. Ardery (1914) 43 Okla. 619, L.R.A. 1915B, 232, 143 Pac. 331, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1148, that although the name of a signer to the petition appears upon the voters' register, if it should appear upon the face of the petition and the voters' register that such party was not a legal voter under the law, he is not compelled to consider and count him as such, under a statute requiring the petition to be signed by electors entitled to vote for a successor to the incumbent sought to be removed.

See further discussion of this case supra.

The term "voters' register" as used in city charter providing that when a petition for a recall election is filed with the city clerk, he shall examine it and, from the voters' register, ascertain whether the petition is signed by the requisite number of qualified electors, has reference to the precinct books required by state laws to be furnished by the state election board to the county election board, wherein the inspectors of election are required to transcribe the names of all electors registered in the precinct, arranged in alphabetical order, and to fill the blanks after such names with the age, the street number, the post-office address, the politics, and the color of each elector as stated in his registration certificate. (Okla.) Ibid.

3. Verification.

Where through oversight the oath of verification is not attached to each paper signed as part of the petition for a recall, this omission may be supplied after the petitions have been filed. State ex rel. Miller v. Berg (1914) 97 Neb. 63, 149 N. W. 61.

4. Withdrawal of names.

The signers to a recall petition may withdraw their names at any time before final action has been taken thereon. Thus, after the petition has been filed, but before it has been acted upon by the official performing that duty, there may be a withdrawal of names. In case the official finds the petition insufficient, whereupon time is allowed for an amendment thereto, a withdrawal may be had any time before the expiration of the time limited for the amendment, but not after the expiration of such time. Hay v. Dorn (1914) 93 Kan. 392, 144 Pac. 235.

After the clerk to whom the duty of examining the petition is committed has acted thereon and certified to its sufficiency, the withdrawal of names has no effect to prevent the election. Laam v. McLaren (1915) — Cal. App. —, 153 Pac. 985.

5. Filing.

The constitutional provision that a recall petition shall be filed with the officer with whom a petition for nomination to the office, the incumbent of which is sought to be recalled, should be filed, is express and mandatory, and a failure to comply with this provision invalidates L.R.A.1916D.

the recall proceeding. Consequently, where a recall of a district attorney is sought and the petition filed with the county clerk, the recall proceeding is a nullity where petitions for nominations for district attorney are required to be filed with the secretary of state. State ex rel. Mitsker v. Dillard (1914) 73 Or. 13, 144 Pac. 127.

A statute authorizing certificates of nomination for county officers and district or precinct officers to be filed with the county clerk, which does not attempt to amend the section providing for the filing of petitions for nomination with the secretary of state, does not change this rule, since petitions for nominations and certificates of nominations are different instruments and their functions are different. (Or.) Ibid.

For an example of matters required to be filed with the petition, see State ex rel. McCauley v. Gilliam (Wash.) infra, V. f.

b. Conclusiveness of officer's certificate.

The cases of Good v. San Diego and Conn v. Richmond, discussed in the note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 231, are cited on the conclusiveness of the officer's certificate, in Laam v. McLaren (1915) — Cal. App. —, 153 Pac. 985. And in the Laam Case it is stated that, in the absence of alleged fraud or mistake or other sufficient ground for challenging the correctness of the clerk's certificate, such certificate must be held conclusive. The point of attack in the Laam Case was that after the clerk had examined the petition and certified to its sufficiency, a number of signers had withdrawn their names or attempted to do so.

Where the officer making the examination of the petition is vested with a quasi judicial authority, his decision, in the absence of fraud or an arbitrary action, is conclusive on the courts in a proceeding for mandamus to compel him to call the election. Dunham v. Ardery (1914) 43 Okla. 619, L.R.A. 1915B, 232, 143 Pac. 331, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1148.

The fact that no provision is made for a review of the clerk's decision by appeal does not authorize the giving of relief by mandamus in the absence of fraud or an arbitrary action by the officer making the examination of the petition. (Okla.) Ibid.

c. Sufficiency of certificate.

As to the sufficiency of the officers' certificate, see note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 231.

d. Duties of officer.

The officer whose duty it is to examine and ascertain whether a petition for recall is signed by the requisite number of qualified electors, and attach to said petition his certificate showing the result of his examination, is not empowered to determine the further question whether the officer has held office a year, although the statute prohibits a recall against any officer until he has actually held his office for that time. Poole v. Lawrence (1914) 86 N. J. L. 90, 90 Atl. 668.

e. When recall may be had.

For earlier cases on this question, see note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232.

Under a statute prohibiting a recall against any officer until he has actually held his office for one year, the resignation of an officer who has held office more than the year, upon the initiation of a movement for his recall, and his immediate re-election, do not relieve him from the operation of the recall statute, since it is clear that his action was an attempt to evade the law. Poole v. Lawrence (1914) 86 N. J. L. 90, 90 Atl. 668.

As to what constitutes sufficient ground for a recall, see supra, V. a, 1, particularly Pybus v. Smith, discussed in that subdivision.

As to the right to take action under a joint recall petition, see STATE ex rel. BROWN v. HOWELL, ante, 1097.

f. Miscellaneous.

A statute requiring the filing by the petitioner or petitioners for a recall, at the time of filing the recall petition, of a statement giving the names and post-office addresses of all persons, corporations, and organizations who have contributed or aided in the preparation of the charge, and in the preparation, circulation, and filing of the petition, with the amount contributed by each and a detailed statement of expenditures, is not complied with by an itemized statement of the receipts and expenditures, with postoffice addresses of the contributors and of those to whom the money was distributed, without any statement of the persons, corporations, and organizations, with postoffice addresses, who have aided in the preparation, circulation, and filing of the petition. State ex rel. McCauley v. Gilliam (1914) 81 Wash. 186, 142 Pac. 470. It seems to have been assumed in this case that, in the absence of a compliance with the statutes, the recall election could not be held, and the auditor was accordingly L.R.A.1916D.

enjoined from taking any action on the recall petition until the proper statement was filed.

Where it is sought to recall two commissioners having different terms to serve, ballots which fail to designate the terms for which the candidates are to be elected invalidate the election, under a statute requiring the term to be printed on the ballot as a part of the title of the office, where two or more officers are to be elected for the same office for different terms. Wilson v. Blake (1915) 169 Cal. 449, 147 Pac. 129.

A general statute giving to any elector of a city the right to contest the right of any person declared elected to an office to be exercised therein, for certain causes, does not authorize a contest by one recalled from office on the ground that illegal votes were cast and counted in favor of his recall. Waite v. Brendlin (1914) 26 Cal. App. 31, 145 Pac. 739. No right to contest a recall election exists by implication from the absence of a statutory provision for contest. The ground specified in the statutes for contest upon which reliance was placed in this case were: First, malconduct on the part of the board of judges or any member thereof; second, illegal votes. These specified grounds were held limited by other provisions of the statute and its general purpose. The statute relating to the contest of elections was enacted long prior to that relating to the recall.

An action to enjoin the holding of a recall election was held to be a cause cognizable in equity, so that jurisdiction of an appeal from the granting of a temporary restraining order and an order to show cause why this should not be made perpetual was in the supreme court instead of the district court of appeal, under the California Constitution. Laam v. McLaren (1915) — Cal. App. —, 151 Pac. 290.

But in Laam v. McLaren (1915) — Cal. App. —, 153 Pac. 985, the district court of appeal assumed jurisdiction to pass upon an appeal, and held that a temporary order restraining the calling of a special election for the recall of an officer is appealable. No question seems to have been raised in the latter case as to the jurisdiction of the court of appeal, nor is any distinction attempted between this and the earlier case. As pointed out above, the earlier case was an appeal from an order granting a temporary restraining order and an order to show cause why this should not be made perpetual, while the latter was simply an appeal from a temporary restraining order.

See Stirtan v. Blethen, 51 L.R.A.

(N.S.) 623, as to the validity of a contract to promote a recall movement.

W. A. E.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

LOUISE CONWAY, Resp't.,
v.

SALT LAKE & OGDEN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(—Utah, —, 155 Pac. 339.)

Carrier — negligence — space between platforms.

1. The maintenance by an electric inter-urban railway company of a space of 7 to 10 inches between the platforms of cars in its trains, between which passengers are permitted to pass while the trains are in motion, does not constitute prima facie negligence in case a passenger falls between them to his injury, in attempting to pass from one car to another.

For other cases, see Evidence, II. h, 1, b, (1), in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — necessity of light.

2. A railway company which permits a space between platforms of cars in its train over which passengers are permitted to pass must furnish sufficient light after dark to enable persons attempting to use the passageway to discover the danger.

For other cases, see Carriers, II. g, c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — burden of proof — contributory negligence.

3. The burden of showing contributory negligence by a preponderance of evidence is upon defendant in an action to hold a carrier liable for injury to a passenger, regardless of whether the evidence upon the question comes from plaintiff's or defendant's witnesses.

For other cases, see Evidence, II. h, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 7, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Weber County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Boyd, De Vine, & Eccles, for appellant:

There was no evidence of negligence upon the part of defendant.

Ellinger v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 153 Pa. 213, 34 Am. St. Rep. 697, 25 Atl. 1132, 6 Am. Neg. Cas. 361; Hawes v. Bos- ton Elev. R. Co. 192 Mass. 324, 78 N. E. 480; Welch v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 187 Mass. 118, 72 N. E. 500; Falkins v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 188 Mass. 153, 74 N. E. 338; Rothchild v. Central R. Co. 163 Pa. 49, 29 Atl. 702, 6 Am. Neg. Cas. 382; Furgason v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 16 Ind. App. 171, 44 N. E. 936.

Messrs. George McCormick, Joseph E. Evans, and John G. Wills for respondent.

Frick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries which she alleged she sustained through the defendant's negligence while a passenger on one of its trains. She, in substance, alleges in her complaint that the defendant was negligent in the following particulars:

(1) That, owing to the large number of persons who were about to enter the cars of the defendant at the time and place the accident occurred, defendant was negligent "in failing to provide servants for the proper direction and management of said persons," etc.; (2) for failure to "provide its passengers then and there being with sufficient transportation accommodation, facilities, and equipment," etc.; (3) for failure to "provide any reasonable means for passage from one of its said cars to the other;" and that it did "negligently construct, maintain, and operate its said cars so as to leave an open space between the ends of the platforms thereof of about 17 inches distant in width, and so as to leave said platforms inadequately and insufficiently lighted and illuminated." The plaintiff further alleged that, in entering upon defendant's train, consisting of four cars, at about 11 o'clock at night at Lagoon station, and while said train was standing still for the purpose of receiving passengers, she passed up the steps of one car, and, on reaching the platform thereof, noticed that the seats in said car were all occupied by passengers, and, in order to obtain a seat, she, in attempting to pass through the opening or doorway at the end of the vestibule of the car she was on to the vestibule of the adjoining car, stepped into the space between the two cars existing as aforesaid, and fell, by reason of which fall she sustained severe bodily injuries. The evidence on the part of the plaintiff, in brief, is to the effect that Lagoon station is a pleasure resort between Salt Lake City and Ogden, on the line of defendant's electrically equipped interurban railway; that on the night of July 17, 1913, there were a large number of people at said Lagoon station from Ogden city, among whom were the plaintiff and some of her friends or family; that the defendant provided a train of four cars, one of which the plaintiff boarded with a view of getting a seat. In describing what then happened, the plaintiff testified: "No, I didn't get a seat. I was on the platform, and the platform was pretty well crowded, and I asked Mrs. Stevens to step aside to allow me to pass, so she tried to move aside, and I went to go from one car to the other, and that is the last I remember. I fell and don't know anything more about it. I became unconscious and remained so from Thursday until Saturday evening."

Note.—For permitting space between platforms of cars as negligence, see annotation following this case, post, 1113, L.R.A.1916D.

On cross-examination she further testified:

The platform was crowded. I just stepped up and then turned. Mrs. Stevens was standing there, and I asked her to step aside and allow me to pass from one car to the other. That would be the one south of the one I was on. I don't know, but I suppose I just took one step and supposed it was all inclosed like an ordinary train.

Q. And you just started to walk right through, looking over into the other car?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were looking into the other car to see if you could get a seat while you were walking through?

A. To see if there was any chance. Both platforms were crowded.

Q. When you started to walk between these cars, you were looking right ahead of you, into the car?

A. There was no way of looking down; there was too much of a crowd there.

Q. Was there a crowd between the cars?

A. Standing just like they were as crowded as they could be.

Q. Was there a crowd of people standing between the two cars?

A. I suppose there was.

Q. You suppose there was? Well, was there?

A. Well, no. How could they be between?

Q. That is what I am asking you. There were no people between the cars?

A. No.

Q. So that the crowd of people didn't prevent you from looking down between the cars?

A. It wasn't light enough to see, if I had looked down.

Q. How do you know? You didn't look down?

A. My gracious! The lights weren't good that night anyway.

L.R.A.1916D.

Q. But you didn't look down?

A. I naturally wouldn't look down.

Q. And you didn't look down?

A. I didn't look down, no.

Mrs. Stevens, who was a witness for the plaintiff, testified: "The platform was packed. In the car it was packed all through. I was backed right up against the brake, and, when Mrs. Conway asked me, I was talking to her, and then I turned to my husband, and the next I remember is her speaking to me and asking me if I would move so that she could pass through to the car on the south. The next I remember is turning and seeing her step right into the chain. There was a chain that linked the cars together, and her foot caught right in there, and she fell toward the west, and her head struck the ground, or the track; I don't know which. I could not say what the space was between the cars, but I think it was the ordinary space, somewhere about a foot, I should judge."

Apart from the evidence that there was much crowding in getting onto the cars and on the platforms thereof, and the evidence respecting plaintiff's injuries, the foregoing is practically all the evidence in respect of how the plaintiff was injured and the condition of the platforms of the cars, and the lighting thereof.

Upon substantially the foregoing evidence, the defendant moved for a nonsuit upon two grounds: (1) That the plaintiff had failed to establish any negligence on the part of the defendant; and (2) that the evidence "affirmatively shows that the direct cause of the accident is due to the negligence of the plaintiff herself." The motion was denied, and the defendant then produced evidence to the effect that its cars were of the standard type and make used by interurban and city railways; that it was impractical to build platforms on cars used for city and interurban travel which would come in close contact like those on standard Pullman cars used on ordinary steam railways; that the reason why such platforms were not in general use and could not be successfully operated on city and interurban railways was on account of the short curves on such lines. It was, however, conceded by defendant's expert witnesses testifying upon that question that there were no very short or sharp curves on defendant's line; that the cars in use by defendant could be operated on a 50-degree curve, while the shortest curve on its line is about 60 degrees; that, while said line of railway is constructed and operated into the cities of Salt Lake and Ogden, yet there are no curves shorter than 60 degrees in either city or on the main line. Defendant also proved that the car platforms were necessarily required to be rounded at the ends thereof so that the space between the platforms would be wider at the sides than it would be at the center where the cars were coupled together and where the passengers pass from one car to the other; that the space between the cars in the center of the platform was about 7 inches wide, while farther out towards the sides of the cars the space would be about 10 inches. It will be remembered that Mrs. Stevens testified that she judged the space between the cars in question on the night in question was about a foot.

The defendant's evidence was not controverted. After all of the evidence was in, the defendant moved the court for a directed verdict in its favor, which motion the court denied, and submitted the case to the jury upon the evidence and instructions, some of which were excepted to by the defendant, and which will be noticed hereinafter. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, upon which the court entered judgment, from which the defendant appeals.

Among other instructions, the court gave the following: "While the mere fact that an accident has happened is not sufficient proof to charge the defendant with negligence, yet in this case the court instructs you that if you find from the evidence that while the plaintiff was a passenger on defendant's car, and while she was attempting to pass from one car to another, she was injured by reason of there being an open space between the vestibule platforms of said cars, then the court charges you that she has proved such facts as constitute prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, and that the burden is cast upon the defendant to show that it was not negligent with respect to said passageway within the meaning of the instructions heretofore given you."

The defendant excepted to that portion of the instruction we have copied, and now insists that the giving thereof constituted prejudicial error.

It will be observed that the court charged the jury that, if they found that there was "an open space between the vestibule platforms of said cars," such fact, standing alone, was sufficient to "constitute prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant." In other words, the charge was to the effect that the plaintiff had made out a prima facie case if she proved that there was any space between the vestibule platforms of the cars from one of which she was in the act of passing to the other when she fell. The question of whether to permit such space to exist between cars operated on elevated street railways constituted negligence has been passed on by the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts in the following cases: Welch v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 187 Mass. 118, 72 N. E. 500; Falkins v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 188 Mass. 153, 74 N. E. 338; Hawes v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 192 Mass. 324, 78 N. E. 480. In the Falkins Case the space between the platforms of the cars was shown to be 7½ inches. The gist of the decision is reflected in the headnote, which reads as follows: "It was not negligence for an elevated railroad company to permit an open space in the passageway between the platforms of its cars, made necessary by sharp curves in its line, and to impliedly invite passengers to use such passageway at stations in going between the cars without informing them in words of the existence of such open space."

In Hawes v. Boston Elev. R. Co. supra, the evidence showed that the space between the platforms was 7 inches at the nearest point, and 11 inches at the widest point, and the court held that merely to show that there was such a space was not evidence of negligence. In the course of the opinion, the court says: "We see no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant. There is nothing to show that the space between the cars could have been made any less, or that the ends of the platforms could have been made any different. The defendant was not bound to warn the plaintiff of the space between the cars, or to assist her in crossing from one to the other."

The foregoing cases are referred to in 1 Nellis on Street Railways, 2d ed. § 290, and no other cases are by the author referred to contrary to the rule laid down by the Massachusetts court.

In Furgason v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 16 Ind. App. 171, 44 N. E. 936, it is held that the company is not liable for injuries resulting to one passenger from the crowding or pushing of other passengers. Rothchild v. Central R. Co. 163 Pa. 49, 29 Atl. 702, 6 Am. Neg. Cas. 382, is in principle the same as the cases cited from Massachusetts. While plaintiff's counsel, in their brief, question the soundness of the cases from Massachusetts, yet they have failed to refer to any case which holds to the contrary, and, after a somewhat extended search, we have not been able to find any. We cannot see how it can be said that the mere fact that there is an open space to the extent shown by the evidence between the platforms of two connecting cars constitutes negligence.

The burden of showing negligence was upon the plaintiff. In view of the foregoing statement of the law, defendant's counsel insist that the court erred in not granting their motion for a nonsuit, and also erred in refusing to direct a verdict in favor of their client. We cannot go to that extent. While it is true, as we have seen, that by merely showing that there was a space between the cars the plaintiff failed to prove negligence, yet she also alleged that the defendant was negligent in not sufficiently lighting or illuminating the space between the car platforms so that such space could be seen, and that passengers could thus avoid stepping into the same. True, plaintiff testified that she did not look down in attempting to pass between the cars, but she also stated the reason why she did not, and the court correctly charged the jury with respect to her duty in that regard, and further charged under what circumstances she would be prevented from recovering. The jury found the facts in favor of the plaintiff in that respect. There was at least some substantial evidence respecting the insufficiency of light, and that the space between the car platforms was not properly or sufficiently illuminated. There was evidence both ways upon that subject, but the ultimate fact was, nevertheless, for the jury. While, as we have pointed out, merely to permit a space to exist between the car platforms did not constitute negligence, yet we are clearly of the opinion that where any considerable space was permitted between the car platforms so that passengers could or might step into the same, and where, as here, the defendant impliedly invited the passengers to pass from one car to the other over the space aforesaid, it was its duty in the nighttime to furnish sufficient light to permit the passengers to see such space, so that they could avoid stepping into it in passing from one car platform to the other. While, as has been pointed out by the Massachusetts court, no duty rested upon the defendant to warn the passengers of the existing space in the daytime, for the reason that it was open and visible to all, yet, in the darkness of the night, we think it was the duty of the defendant, either to warn the passengers of the space, or to have sufficient light between the car platforms that one passing from one to the other could see and avoid stepping into the space. To hold otherwise would permit the defendant to maintain a dangerous trap with impunity. Such is not the law. There was therefore sufficient evidence upon the charge with respect to insufficient light to take the case to the jury. The court therefore committed no error in denying the motions to which we have referred.

Complaint is also made of instruction No. 3, given by the court on its own motion. It L.R.A.1916D.

is contended that the instruction is erroneous because it places the burden of proof upon the defendant to show that it was not practical to operate its cars without leaving some space between the ends of the platforms. The instruction was framed upon the theory that the mere fact that there was a space between the car platforms was prima facie evidence of negligence. We have already shown that such a theory cannot be maintained. Hence the instruction was faulty in that regard.

Instruction No. 4 is also complained of. That instruction is subject to criticism only because it confirms other instructions which, for the reasons already stated, were in themselves faulty.

What has been said also covers defendant's assignments respecting the court's refusal to charge the jury as requested by it.

In view of what has already been said herein, it could subserve no useful or practical purpose to point out wherein the offered requests were faulty, or whether they stated correct principles of law. The trial court, in following the law as herein indicated, will not commit the error complained of again. In this connection, we desire to add, however, that request No. 4, offered by the defendant, does not correctly state the rule with respect to the burden of proof upon the question of contributory negligence. The true rule in this jurisdiction is that when the evidence is conflicting, or when different inferences may be drawn therefrom, the burden of establishing contributory negligence is upon the defendant, regardless of whether the evidence with regard thereto comes from the plaintiff's or the defendant's witnesses, and in either event contributory negligence must be established by a preponderance of the evidence given upon that subject. Request No. 4 was faulty in not placing the burden of proof upon the defendant, although contributory negligence may have been inferable from the testimony produced by the plaintiff.

For the reasons hereinbefore stated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the District Court of Weber County, with directions to grant a new trial. Appellant to recover costs.

McCarty, J., concurs.

Straup, C. J.:

I concur. Under the evidence I think the question of the negligence was wholly one of fact, which, to establish, the plaintiff had the burden, and that where the court told the jury certain things constituted a prima facie case of negligence, he invaded the province of the jury.

Annotation—Carriers: permitting space between platforms of cars as negligence.

CONWAY v. SALT LAKE & O. R. Co. ante, 1109, finds substantial support for its decision that a railroad company is not negligent in permitting an open space between cars in order that trains may safely take the curves in the tracks.

Thus, that a railroad company using a subway containing many sharp curves is not negligent in so operating its trains that when the cars are standing on or going around a curve a space between the platforms of two cars is left sufficient to permit the foot and leg of one to enter was held in Welch v. Boston Elev. R. Co. (1905) 187 Mass. 118, 72 N. E. 500; Falkins v. Boston Elev. R. Co. (1905) 188 Mass. 153, 74 N. E. 338; Hawes v. Boston Elev. R. Co. (1906) 192 Mass. 324, 78 N. E. 480.

Nor was it negligence for the railway company to permit passengers to pass from one car to another without warning them of the danger of stepping into the open space. (Mass.) Ibid.

It was pointed out in the Falkins Case that "the uncontradicted evidence tended to show that it was necessary to have this space between the cars because the grades of the defendant's road were heavier and the curves sharper in portions of the subway than on any other elevated system." And the court added that "the defendant had no responsibility for the mode of construction of its subway, which was built under legislative authority as a great public work by the city of Boston, and afterward leased to the defendant," and stated that no evidence was offered tending to show that there was any other practical mode of construction of the cars which would have been safer and better. In the Hawes Case, the court stated that "the defendant introduced evidence which was uncontradicted that the curves of the platforms of the cars were determined by the shortest curve which it was necessary for cars coupled together to pass, and were no greater than was required, and that experiments had been made with the Gould Buffer coupling, which was best device known for covering the space between the ends of cars, and 'the couplers went to pieces.'" While the court considered the question of negligence in the construction of the cars, the real question was considered to be as to whether it was the duty of the railway company to have a man who should warn every passenger who was L.R.A.1916D.

about to step from one car to another of the danger of stepping into the opening; which question was decided in the negative.

In Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Stout (1896) 66 Ill. App. 298, where a passenger about to enter the coach, the platform of which was vestibuled, stepped aside to allow a lady to enter first, and his foot and leg went between the two coaches, the space between the coaches being caused by the cars going around a curve, it was held that negligence could not be imputed to the railroad company because it did not have a mat covering the opening throughout the entire width of the platform, of sufficient width to cover any space caused by the swinging and the swaying of a train in making a curve. The court stated that a mat upon the floors of the platforms and upon and across the ends of the platforms where they come together would have no connection with the vestibuling of a train, nor does a mat enter into the construction or operation of the vestibule or of the train itself; and added, that while it might conceive that a narrow mat might extend with reasonable safety from one platform to another in the center line or on the axis of the platform, it would call attention to the fact that it was not between the platform at the center that the injured party stepped, and stated that it thought that a wide mat that would cover the opening throughout the entire width of the platform would be a source of danger in the swaying and swinging of a train when making a curve, instead of an appliance of safety. The court said further that there was no proof that such a mat was a proper equipment of the train in question, or of any like train; and there was no sufficient proof that such a mat was customary or in such general use among railways as a measure of safety to their passengers as would require the railroad company to supply its cars with them.

In Merwin v. Manhattan R. Co. (1888) 48 Hun, 608, 1 N. Y. Supp. 267, 5 Am. Neg. Cas. 441, where one standing on the crowded platform of a coach, in consequence of the pressure made by outgoing passengers, stepped back and fell between the platforms, it was held that the railway company was negligent in not providing suitable safeguards to prevent such an accident. It would seem that the space through which the passenger fell was toward the outside of the platforms, due to the curving of the platforms so as to permit the cars to go around curves. The duty to cover the space was not raised or considered, but the negligence attributed to the railroad company was the failure to have chain guards hooked from the stanchions of one platform across to the stanchions on the other car, which would have tended to lessen the danger of falling into the open space.

There have been a few cases, easily distinguishable from the preceding cases, which have held that for a railroad company to permit an open space between its cars constituted negligence, or at least presented a question for the jury.

Thus, in St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Keitt (1903) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 76 S. W. 311, the railroad company, in changing the drawheads of its coaches, used a chain coupling which left a space between the coaches of 18 inches, which space was covered by planks which were nailed at one end and left loose at the other, and it was held that the use of such coupling and such "walk way" was negligence as to one who, in passing from one car to another, lost his balance and was thrown from the car as a result of a moving of the planks.

A railroad company which negligently uses as a passenger car a baggage car without a platform cannot defeat recovery for the death of one who, not knowing of the absence of a platform, fell between the cars in passing from the baggage car to a passenger coach, because of the fact that he voluntarily left his seat in the passenger car, the act of such person not being negligence per se, so as to overcome the negligence of the railroad company in using such defective car. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Berg (1896) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1105, 32 S. W. 616.

Negligence on the part of a railroad company was held, in Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Storrs (1910) 169 Ala. 361, 53 So. 746, to be a question for the jury where there was evidence to support the allegation that the injuries of one who got his foot caught between the bumpers of two cars while crossing from one car to another were caused either by the improper action of the air brake, or because the space between the two cars was not covered.

And in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Snell (1907) 82 Ark. 61, 100 S. W. 67, where one, after boarding a train, stood for a moment in the vestibule on the iron covering over the bumpers between two cars, and was thrown down by the violent backing of an engine in the coaches, and, because of the fact that the iron covering was not properly in place, her feet were caught between the bumpers, it was held that the question as to the negligence of the railroad company in failing to keep such covers in place was properly submitted to the jury.

But, in Snowden v. Boston & M. R. Co. (1890) 151 Mass. 220, 24 N. E. 40, 3 Am. Neg. Cas. 865, where a passenger in passing from one platform to another, the distance between which was 6 inches, without looking, placed her foot upon the buffers just as the train started, and, owing to the buffers' opening by the starting of the train, her foot slipped between the buffers and was injured, it was held that contributory negligence barred recovery, there being no discussion whatever as to whether the railroad company was negligent in permitting the space between the coaches. J. H. B.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

ALBERT F. TIMME, Appt.,
v.

JOHN H. KOPMEIER, Respnt.

(162 Wis. 571, 156 N. W. 961.)

Corporation — contract of director to repurchase stock from manager — validity.

A contract by a director of a corporation,

Note. — As to validity of contract or option by director for purchase of stock of employee of corporation upon discontinuance of employment, see annotation following this case, post, 1117.
L.R.A.1916D.

without the knowledge of the stockholders, to repurchase stock sold to the manager of the corporation, upon discontinuance of his employment from any cause, is contrary to public policy and void.

For other cases, see Contracts, III. c, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 14, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the value of certain shares of stock on a contract of repurchase of the stock bought by plaintiff from the Kopmeier Motor Car Company. Affirmed.

Statement by Siebecker, J.:

This is an action brought to recover the value of 100 shares of stock, on a contract of repurchase of the stock, brought by plaintiff from the Kopmeier Motor Car Company.

The Kopmeier Motor Car Company was incorporated under the laws of the state of Wisconsin in January, 1909, with an authorized capitalization of $50,000. On October 15, 1909, the articles of incorporation were amended, and, as amended, authorized an increase of the capital stock from $50,000 to $100,000. Certificates of stock were issued to John H. Kopmeier, Norman J. Kopmeier, Waldemar S. J. Kopmeier, and Meta Kopmeier, wife of Waldemar. Norman J. Kopmeier surrendered a portion of his stock in November, 1910. There were three directors of the corporation at this time, John H., Waldemar S. J., and Norman J. Kopmeier. The plaintiff entered the employ of the Kopmeier Motor Car Company about October 1, 1909, as manager, and very shortly after this date he expressed a desire to purchase some stock in the corporation. At a meeting of the directors and Mr. Timme in November, 1910, it was agreed that the corporation should sell plaintiff 100 shares of stock at the par value thereof, namely, $10,000. He was also made a director. At the same time, and as a part of the transaction, plaintiff and defendant entered into the following contract:

This agreement, made and entered into this 5th day of December, 1910, between A. F. Timme, of the city of Milwaukee, Milwaukee county, Wisconsin, party of the first part, and John H. Kopmeier, of the same place, party of the second part, witnesseth:

Whereas, the party of the first part is now in that employ, as manager, from month to month, of Kopmeier Motor Car Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Wisconsin, and has, on or about the 1st day of November, 1910, purchased from said company one hundred (100) shares of the capital stock thereof, for the price of one hundred dollars ($100) per share, for the purpose of increasing the capital of said company; and,

Whereas, the party of the second part is a stockholder of said company and desirous of increasing the capital of said company to the amount of stock purchased by the party of the first part:

Now, therefore, the parties hereto agree as follows:

First. In consideration of the purchase and sale by said company to the party of the first part of said stock, and in consideration of tion of $1 and other good and valuable considerations, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, party of the first part does hereby agree to and with the party of the second part that if, at any time while said party of the first part shall remain in the employ of said company, he should desire to sell said stock, option is hereby given to the party of the second part to purchase the same and to pay to the party of the first part therefor the full face or par value of said stock, plus pro rata share of accumulated profits.

Second. The party of the first part hereby agrees to and with the party of the second part that if his employment with said company is discontinued, either by mutual agreement of the said company and the party of the first part, or by the death of the party of the first part, or by the act of either said party of the first part or said company, or by operation of law, or for any reason whatsoever, the party of the first part shall sell to, and the party of the second part shall purchase, all of said stock and pay therefor the full face or par value thereof plus pro rata share of accumulated profits of said company.

Third. It is mutually agreed, by and between the parties hereto, that all of the terms, covenants, and conditions of this contract shall inure and bind the respective heirs, executors, and administrators of the respective parties.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their respective hands and seals in duplicate at the city of Milwaukee, Milwaukee county, Wisconsin, the day and year first above written.

A. F. Timme.

John H. Kopmeier.

Witnessed by John T. Zilisch, W. J. Kopmeier.

At the time this contract was made and executed, the defendant was a director of the company, and continued to hold this office up to the time this action was commenced. In August, 1912, plaintiff resigned from his position with the Kopmeier Motor Car Company and demanded of defendant that he repurchase the stock in accordance with the above agreement. Defendant has refused to repurchase the stock as provided in the contract.

The trial court found that Meta Kopmeier, wife of Waldemar Kopmeier and a stockholder, knew nothing of this transaction, and that she did not ratify it, and declared the agreement void. Judgment was entered dismissing plaintiff's complaint, and from such judgment this appeal is taken.

Mr. Lynn S. Pease. for appellant:

The court erred in its conclusion of law that the agreement made between the plaintiff and defendant under date of December 5, 1910, is void as against public policy.

Bonta v. Gridley, 77 App. Div. 33, 78 N. Y. Supp. 961; Strait v. Northwestern Steel & I. Works, 148 Wis. 254, 134 N. W. 387; Porter v. Plymouth Gold Min. Co. 29 Mont. 347, 101 Am. St. Rep. 569, 74 Pac. 938; Fremont Carriage Mfg. Co. v. Thomsen, 65 Neb. 370, 91 N. W. 376; Hesse Envelop Co. v. Addison, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 166 S. W. 898; Dickinson v. Zubiate Min. Co. 11 Cal. App. 656, 106 Pac. 123; Strodl v. Farish-Stafford Co. 145 App. Div. 406, 130 N. Y. Supp. 35; Johnston v. Frederick Stearns & Co. 160 Mich. 247, 125 N. W. 29; Seymour v. Detroit Copper & B. Rolling Mills, 56 Mich. 117, 22 N. W. 317, 23 N. W. 186; Morgan v. Struthers, 131 U. S. 246, 33 L. ed. 132, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726; Phillips v. Riser, 8 Ga. App. 634, 70 S. E. 79; Schulte v. Boulevard Gardens Land Co. 164 Cal. 464, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 156, 129 Pac. 582, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1013; Malcomson v. Monaton Realty Investing Co. 154 App. Div. 694, 139 N. Y. Supp. 405; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Dumas, 104 C. C. A. 641, 181 Fed. 781.

Mr. Henry J. Killilea, for respondent:

A director of a private corporation owes a duty to all the stockholders to vote in the selection of a general manager and other officers as the interest of the stockholders may require, unimpeded by any contract imposing a personal liability which would interfere with the free exercise of his judgment.

Wilbur v. Stoepel, 82 Mich. 344, 21 Am. St. Rep. 568, 46 N. W. 724; West v. Camden, 135 U. S. 507, 34 L. ed. 254, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 838; Guernsey v. Cook, 120 Mass. 501; Woodruff v. Wentworth, 133 Mass. 309; Noyes v. Marsh, 123 Mass. 286; Noel v. Drake, 28 Kan. 265, 42 Am. Rep. 162; Withers v. Edmonds, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 189, 62 S. W. 795; Fennessy v. Ross, 5 App. Div. 342, 39 N. Y. Supp. 323; Morse v. Ryan, 26 Wis. 356; Figge v. Bergenthal, 130 Wis. 594, 109 N. W. 581, 110 N. W. 798; Sauerhering v. Rueping, 137 Wis. 407, 119 N. W. 184.

Siebecker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The trial court found that Meta Kopmeier had no notice or knowledge of the making of the contract between plaintiff and defendant for the repurchase of the stock by defendant from plaintiff, and that she at no time consented thereto or ratified it. We have examined the evidence and find that plaintiff's evidence and that of Meta Kopmeier is in sharp conflict on the point as to whether or not she had knowledge of the contract between plaintiff and defendant. It is contended that the facts and circumstances show that Mrs. Kopmeier tacitly consented and acquiesced in having her husband represent her interests as a stockholder at corporate meetings and in the transaction of its business. If such consent and acquiescence were not positively refuted by other evidence in the case, we would be disposed to accede to this claim. But Meta Kopmeier testifies positively that she had no information of the transaction and this contract; that, although she made diligent effort to ascertain about the affairs of the company from her husband and others, she wholly failed to get the requested information; that she had never assented to the contract; and that none of the stockholders and officers were authorized to represent and act for her in the matter. Although the facts and circumstances might permit of the inference in conflict with these positive declarations of Mrs. Kopmeier, we cannot say that the trial court's finding on this point is against the clear preponderance of the evidence. We are of the opinion that this finding of fact cannot be disturbed by the court. This state of facts on this point distinguishes this case from the case of Jones v. Williams, 139 Mo. 1, 37 L.R.A. 682, 61 Am. St. Rep. 436, 39 S. W. 486, 40 S. W. 353, relied on by appellant. In that case the court found that a contract of repurchase of stock executed by one who was a stockholder and director was not the personal contract of such director, but the contract of the corporation.

The principal controversy in this case arises on the question of the validity of the contract. The trial court filed an opinion in writing giving a full review of the cases before him and a full statement of the grounds for his decision. The court held that the provision of the contract, whereby plaintiff and defendant agreed that in the event that plaintiff's "employment with said company is discontinued" either by mutual agreement, or by plaintiff's death, "or by the act of either said party of the first part or said company," or by law or any other purpose, then plaintiff shall sell and defendant shall purchase "all of (plaintiff's) said stock and pay therefor the full face or par value thereof plus pro rata share of accumulated profits of said company," is contrary to public policy, and renders the agreement illegal and unenforceable, unless made with the knowledge and consent of all the stockholders of the corporation." The court declares this result must follow, though it appears as fact in the case that the contract between plaintiff and defendant was made in good faith, and that neither party had any intent of securing any secret or special benefit therefrom to the prejudice or disadvantage of the other stockholders.

Directors of a corporation occupy a position of trust and confidence, and are considered in the law as standing in a fiduciary relation toward the stockholders, and as trustees for them. The directors of a corporation are not permitted to use their position of trust and confidence to further their private interests nor to become parties to contracts concerning corporate affairs intrusted to their management which conflict with a free and impartial discharge of their duties toward the stockholders. Any participation by them in contracts dealing with matters of corporate interest, which is antagonistic to their free and impartial discharge of official duties, is denounced by the law, unless all of the stockholders with full knowledge assent thereto. This doctrine is declared in West v. Camden, 135 U. S. 507, 34 L. ed. 254, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 838, to be applicable "to the directors of a private corporation, charged with duties of a fiduciary character to private parties, on the view that it is public policy to secure fidelity in the discharge of such duties [citing]. We think this principle is equally applicable on the ground of public policy, although there was not to be any direct private gain to the defendant; for, . . . it was the right of the other stockholders . . . 'to have the defendant's judgment, as an officer of the company, exercised with a sole regard to the interests of the company.'"

These principles are recognized and applied in Sauerhering v. Rueping, 137 Wis. 407, 119 N. W. 184.

Under the facts of the instant case the defendant became interested to purchase plaintiff's stock whenever any of the contingencies specified in the contract happened. The defendant as director had a voice in determining whether or not plaintiff was to continue in the management of the corporate business, whether or not plaintiff's management was for the general interest of the corporation and its stockholders. Obviously his duties as director and his private interest under the contract to repurchase plaintiff's stock upon the conditions stated were antagonistic, and his private interests might oblige him to act contrary to his duties toward the other stockholders. Under such circumstances such contracts are held void on the grounds of public policy, unless all of the stockholders assent thereto. The transactions showing how plaintiff came to be employed and put into office by the corporation, and his purchase of the stock and the making of the contract for resale thereof to defendant, are closely interwoven and show that the plaintiff, the corporation, and the defendant were thereby mutually induced to make these arrangements by which plaintiff became interested as stockholder and officer. The case of Wilbur v. Stoepel, 82 Mich. 344, 21 Am. St. Rep. 568, 46 N. W. 724, involved a contract like the one here, with two directors on the one part, without the assent of all the stockholders. The court, in speaking of the antagonistic relation of such directors as contractors and corporate officers, declares: "Their natural desire and inclination would be to continue the plaintiff as manager, although it were against the interest of the other stockholders, . . . but for the agreement which might render them liable for the payment of a large sum if they failed to retain him. Nor is such contract made valid by the good faith of the parties to it. Its effect upon stockholders who are not parties to it, or do not consent to it, is the same in the one case as in the other. The law, therefore, wisely condemns and prohibits all such contracts."

Of other cases cited to our attention the following recognize the same doctrine, and apply it to contracts of this character under varying circumstances: Guernsey v. Cook, 120 Mass. 501; Withers v. Edmonds, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 189, 62 S. W. 795; Noel v. Drake, 28 Kan. 265, 42 Am. Rep. 162; Sims v. Petaluma Gas Light Co. 131 Cal. 656, 63 Pac. 1011; Singers-Bigger v. Young, 91 C. C. A. 510, 166 Fed. 82. Whether or not a contract between the parties to this action, which provided only for an option on the part of Timme to demand a repurchase of the stock by defendant in the event of his discontinuance in the service of the corporation, would be condemned by this rule of public policy, is not necessarily involved here, and we express no opinion on that point. The case of Bonta v. Gridley, 77 App. Div. 33, 78 N. Y. Supp. 961, is in conflict with the foregoing authorities, as are some arguendo observations in other cases, but we are persuaded that the better rule is as held in the Wilbur and other cases above cited.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Annotation—Validity of contract or option by director for purchase of stock of employee of corporation upon discontinuance of employment.

A careful search has disclosed a paucity of authority upon this question; but the few cases which have been found are substantially in accord with the L.R.A.1916D.

holding in TIMME v. KOPMEIER, ante, 1114, to the effect that such a contract or option is void as against public policy unless ratified by the stockholders.

Thus, an agreement between two of the three stockholders and directors of a corporation, that a purchaser of stock shall be employed as a business manager for a term of years, and for the repurchase of his stock at a stated price if he desires to retire at the end of the term, is inseverable, and void as against public policy unless assented to by all the stockholders. Wilbur v. Stoepel (1890) 82 Mich. 344, 21 Am. St. Rep. 568, 46 N. W. 724. The court said: "This alleged agreement between the defendants, who owned a majority of the stock, and the plaintiff, is contrary to public policy, and void as against those not consenting to it. The defendants were directors, and in the management of the corporate affairs cannot but be unduly influenced by such an agreement. Their natural desire and inclination would be to continue the plaintiff as manager, although it were against the interest of the other stockholders, and would be against their own as stockholders but for the agreement which might render them liable for the payment of a large sum if they failed to retain him. Nor is such contract made valid by the good faith of the parties to it. Its effect upon stockholders who are not parties to it, or do not consent to it, is the same in the one case as in the other. The law, therefore, wisely condemns and prohibits all such contracts."

And a contract by one of the two majority stockholders in a corporation, agreeing, in consideration of the purchase of a part of his stock at a price named, to secure to the purchaser the office of treasurer of the corporation, with a fixed salary, and in case of his removal to repurchase the stock at par, is void as against public policy, and as a fraud on the other members of the corporation, in the absence of evidence that the transaction was not for the private benefit of the shareholder, or that it was consented to by the other members of the corporation. Guernsey v. Cook (1876) 120 Mass. 501.

And in Noyes v. Marsh (1877) 123 Mass. 286, it was said of a similar contract that, even if valid, a bill in equity for its specific performance would not lie, it not appearing that there was no adequate remedy at law. Generally as to specific performance of contract for sale of corporate stock, see notes in 50 L.R.A. 501; 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 491; and L.R.A. 1915D, 300.

But a contract giving the right to manage a newspaper and control its policy for five years, to a person employed as editor and manager, is not contrary to public policy when it is part of an agreement by which he purchases a large quantity of stock from the controlling stockholder, who is given an option to repurchase upon the termination of the employment within three years, and the agreement is approved and ratified by all the stockholders. Jones v. Williams (1897) 139 Mo. 1, 37 L.R.A. 682, 61 Am. St. Rep. 436, 39 S. W. 486, 40 S. W. 353.

W. W. A.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIFTH CIRCUIT.

GEORGE B. LATHAM et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

UNITED STATES.

(141 C. C. A. 250, 226 Fed. 420.)

Grand jury — unauthorized person in room — effect.

1. An indictment is vitiated by the presence in the grand-jury room to preserve the evidence on which it is founded, of a stenographer not authorized by statute, although he was a clerk in the office of the district attorney and subscribed an oath to keep secret the proceedings before the grand jury.

Note. — For presence of unauthorized person in grand jury as affecting indictment, see annotation following this case, post, 1128.

As to reversal of conviction because of unfair or irrelevant argument or statements by prosecuting attorney, see note in 46 L.R.A. 641.
L.R.A.1916D.

For other cases, see Grand Jury, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trial — statement by prosecuting attorney of facts not in evidence.

2. The district attorney should not, in a prosecution for devising a fraudulent scheme for obtaining money by means of the postoffice in which the government's case is for the most part founded on the testimony of postoffice inspectors giving the results of decoy letters, state to the jury that persons had been defrauded, of which fact no evidence is placed before the jury.

For other cases, see Trial, I. d. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 4, 1915.)

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Texas to review a judgment convict-ing defendants of devising a fraudulent scheme for obtaining money by means of the postoffice. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Pardee and Walker, Circuit Judges, and Call, District Judge.

Mr. William H. Atwell, for plaintiffs in error:

An unauthorized person having been in the grand-jury room when testimony was being taken by that body with reference to this indictment, the court should have sustained the motion to abate, and, in not doing so it erred.

State v. Bowman, 90 Me. 363, 60 Am. St. Rep. 286, 38 Atl. 331; Stuart v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 440, 34 S. W. 118; Rothschild v. State, 7 Tex. App. 519; United States v. Wells, 163 Fed. 321.

A scheme which requires the production of a mental condition in the party whom the schemers intend to defraud is not susceptible of legal proof; nor is it such a scheme as the statute denounces.

American School v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S. 104, 47 L. ed. 94, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33; Bruce v. United States, 120 C. C. A. 370, 202 Fed. 104; United States v. Fay, 83 Fed. 839.

The indictment is fatally and vitally defective and duplicitous and uncertain, and the court erred in not sustaining the defendants' demurrer and exceptions thereto, and the defendants' motion in arrest of judgment, each of which specifically alleged such duplicity, insufficiency, and uncertainty.

United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 558, 23 L. ed. 593; Moore v. United States, 160 U. S. 270, 40 L. ed. 424, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 294, 10 Am. Crim. Rep. 283; United States v. MacDonald, 65 Fed. 488; Territory v. Carland, 6 Mont. 18, 9 Pac. 580; United States v. Carll, 105 U. S. 613, 26 L. ed. 1135, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 246; United States v. Crafton, 4 Dill. 147, Fed. Cas. No. 14,881; United States v. Ford, 34 Fed. 28; United States v. Lehman, 39 Fed. 771; United States v. Hess, 124 U. S. 483, 31 L. ed. 516, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 577; Stewart v. United States, 55 C. C. A. 641, 119 Fed. 89; 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. § 325, ¶¶ 2-5.

The district attorney having made an improper argument not supported by the testimony, to the great prejudice of the defendants' rights, the court erred in not arresting the judgment and granting the defendants a new trial.

Williams v. United States, 168 U. S. 382, 42 L. ed. 509, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92; Hall v. United States, 150 U. S. 76, 37 L. ed. 1003, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 22; People v. Mull, 167 N. Y. 247, 60 N. E. 629; Stewart v. United States, 127 C. C. A. 477, 211 Fed. 41; *Low-L.R.A.*1916D.

don v. United States, 79 C. C. A. 361, 149 Fed. 677; Allen v. United States, 52 C. C. A. 597, 115 Fed. 4; McKnight v. United States, 38 C. C. A. 115, 97 Fed. 208; Attaway v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 398, 55 S. W. 45; Miller v. State, 45 Tex. Crim. Rep. 517, 78 S. W. 511; Coleman v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 86, 90 S. W. 490; Jenkins v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 461, 122 Am. St. Rep. 812, 93 S. W. 726; Robbins v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 317, 122 Am. St. Rep. 694, 83 S. W. 690; Bearden v. State, 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 148, 79 S. W. 37; Grimes v. State, 64 Tex. Crim. Rep. 70, 141 S. W. 261.

The court should never, by cross-examination or expression, indicate to the jury his opinion of the guilt of the accused.

Sandals v. United States, 130 C. C. A. 149, 213 Fed. 571; Adler v. United States, 104 C. C. A. 608, 182 Fed. 464; Foster v. United States, 110 C. C. A. 283, 188 Fed. 305; Rudd v. United States, 97 C. C. A. 462, 173 Fed. 914; Starr v. United States, 153 U. S. 614, 38 L. ed. 841, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 919; Hickory v. United States, 160 U. S. 408, 40 L. ed. 474, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327; Mullen v. United States, 46 C. C. A. 22, 106 Fed. 892.

Messrs. James O. Wilson and William E. Allen for defendant in error.

Call, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

On January 24, 1914, George B. Latham, Frank Flood, and J. H. Terrill were, in the district court for the northern district of Texas, indicted in four counts, charged with devising a fraudulent scheme for obtaining money, etc., by means of the postoffice establishment of the United States, acting under the names of the Terrill Medical Institute and the New Method Treatment Company.

On January 30, 1914, a motion to abate the indictment was made. This motion was denied, and subsequently a motion for continuance was granted Terrill, and Latham and Flood put on trial and convicted. These latter sue out writ of error, and assign as error the action of the court in denying the motion to abate, and is contained in the twenty-second assignment of error, as follows: "The court erred in overruling defendant's motion to abate, because, from the said motion and by the testimony taken thereunder, it was clearly shown to the court that an unauthorized person was present in the grand-jury room during the taking of testimony by that body relating to this indictment."

This assignment must be disposed of at the threshold of the case. If it is well taken, it disposes of this writ of error, and any decision on the other assignments would be obiter.

The testimony contained in the bill of exceptions shows that one Lantz, who was a clerk in the office of the district attorney, and an adept stenographer, after having subscribed an oath before the clerk of the court to keep secret the proceedings of the grand jury, at the instance of the district attorney, was present in the grand-jury room and taking stenographic notes of the testimony of witnesses examined by the grand jury in investigating this case, and upon which testimony the indictment in this case was found. The question of whether the presence of this unauthorized person in the grand-jury room during the investigation by them of this case is good ground to abate and quash the indictment found is squarely presented to this court.

The decisions of the courts on this question are not uniform. Different courts have taken different views on this question. From very early times the proceedings before the grand jury, in taking testimony and in deliberating thereon, are required to be held in secret. It is a rule of universal application wherever the system of grand juries are in effect. Wigmore, Ev. §§ 2360 et seq.; Greenl. Ev. §§ 252 et seq. This rule rests upon public policy and in furtherance of justice. It is intended for the protection of the government and the citizen. The rights thus secured cannot be invaded without detriment to each. The cases where this rule may be waived by the courts are well defined, and are based upon sound principle.

Mr. Greenleaf and Mr. Wigmore discuss the reasons for the rule, and in Wigmore will be found an instructive and interesting discussion of the reasons for, and the history of, the rule, as well as the circumstances under which courts may waive its requirements and permit those proceedings to be disclosed. The statutes of the several states recognize it, both by prescribing the oath to be taken, and by providing what persons, other than the grand jurors and the witness being examined, may be present during such examination.

We may start, then, with this rule firmly embedded in our jurisprudence. And it must be maintained until the legislative branch of the government sees fit to change it. Judge Bellinger, in the Edgerton Case, says: "It is beyond question that no person, other than a witness undergoing examination and the attorney for the government, can be present during the sessions of the grand jury."

And, further, he says: "There must not only be no improper influence or suggestion in the grand-jury room, but, as suggested L.R.A.1916D.

in Lewis v. Wake County, 74 N. C. 194, there must be no opportunity therefor. If the presence of an unauthorized person in the grand-jury room may be excused, who will set bounds to the abuse to follow such a breach of the safeguards which surround the grand jury." United States v. Edgerton (D. C.) 80 Fed. 375.

In that case the unauthorized person was an expert, but on principle the difference in occupation could scarcely be material. Judge Thomas, in the Rosenthal Case, refers with approval to the Edgerton Case, and, after an exhaustive and learned discussion of the rule, has this to say: "The inconvenience of resubmitting the matter to the grand jury is temporary; the injustice of denying the defendants investigation pursuant to the law of the land would be perpetual." United States v. Rosenthal (C. C.) 121 Fed. 862.

In this case the person before the grand jury was a lawyer acting under instructions from the Attorney General. No improper conduct charged and no claim of improper evidence produced before the grand jury. It was prior to the act of 1906, empowering the Attorney General and certain persons at his request to appear before the grand jury. His presence and participation in the proceedings before the grand jury was held to invade the rights of the defendant, and the indictments were quashed. In United States v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. (C. C.) 163 Fed. 66, the Rosenthal Case was followed, and the indictment quashed.

United States v. Heinze (C. C.) 177 Fed. 770, was another case of an expert before the grand jury, under a special appointment by the Attorney General, to aid the district attorney. The indictment was quashed. Judge Hough in that case says: "If there be a settled method of conducting the deliberations of grand jurors, established by generations of procedure, based on the experience of many courts in many communities, and evidenced by the decisions of authoritative tribunals, such method must be followed until the legislature sees fit to overturn the old rule."

In the cases of United States v. Rubin (D. C.) 218 Fed. 245, and United States v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (D. C.) 221 Fed. 683, the courts quashed the indictments because of the presence of stenographers in the grand-jury room. The case of United States v. Rockefeller (D. C.) 221 Fed. 463, was commented upon by Judge Thompson in the Philadelphia & R. R. Co. Case, and the reasoning of Judge Sessions in the Rockefeller Case to some extent criticized. Judge Sessions says: "It seems to me that, if the testimony given before the grand jury may not, under any circumstances or conditions, be made a matter of record and reference, we are opening the door very wide, and inviting, not only perjured and incompetent testimony, but even gossip and conjecture, before the grand jury. . . . And, if no safeguards are provided, many witnesses may be influenced or persuaded or induced to indulge in statements and accusations which ought not to be permitted or tolerated."

Judge Thompson pertinently remarks: "If a record is to be kept of the proceedings before the grand jury upon those grounds, it should be equally open to the defendant and to the government."

And Judge Hough's language in the Heinze Case, above referred to, is equally pertinent: "If there be a settled method of conducting the deliberations of grand jurors, established, . . . such method must be followed until the legislature sees fit to overturn the old rule."

In 1906 Congress had this whole matter before it, when the act allowing certain persons to participate in proceedings before grand juries was passed, and the discussions on that act will show that the rule, as established by the decisions in several cases referred to, was recognized. Had Congress so desired, a record of the proceedings before grand juries could and would have been authorized under proper precautions.

It seems to me that the reasoning of Judge Sessions is faulty in many respects. How would the presence of a stenographer, and the fact that he was taking down the testimony of the witnesses, discourage perjury? How would it prevent incompetent testimony, or even gossip and conjecture, or how would it prevent witnesses from being influenced or persuaded or induced to indulge in statements or accusations? The only possible office such a stenographic report of the testimony could serve would be that of refreshing the memory of a witness as to those statements, in the event of a prosecution for perjury committed before the grand jury, or in case of impeachment at a subsequent trial. It seems to me that the learned judge overlooked the fact that the district attorney, or his assistant, has a right to be, and usually is, in important cases, almost certainly, present at examination of witnesses; and certainly a court would not be justified in the assumption that this government official would prostitute his office to influence or persuade or induce witnesses to indulge in statements or accusations. If he was so inclined, the mere presence of a stenographer, of his own selection, would deter him but little.

It would, no doubt, be very convenient and of the utmost assistance to the prosecuting officer in the preparation of his case for trial, to have the stenographic report of the testimony of the witnesses given before the grand jury, and such an argument might with propriety be addressed to the Congress to induce it to pass such a law, but comes with no force to a court to authorize an invasion of the right of a defendant. Under the act of Congress there are at least sixteen members of the grand jury, each of whom may be called in a proper case to testify what a witness has said before them; certainly, then, the presence of a stenographer is not necessary to prove the witness's testimony.

In 1906, Congress passed an act (34 Stat. at L. 816, chap. 3935, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 534), before referred to, empowering certain persons to participate in grand jury proceedings. This act can have no application to this case, except to show a recognition of the rule theretofore existing and announced in the Edgerton Case. Most of the cases taking a contrary view are based upon the argument of convenience, as in the Rockefeller Case; but the answer to that whole argument is that Congress has authorized certain persons to be present at grand jury sessions and take part therein, but stenographers and clerks to district attorneys are not in that class.

Contention is made that there is no allegation or proof that these defendants were prejudiced by the presence of the stenographer. Section 1025, Rev. Stat. Comp. Stat. 1913, § 1691, and the rule and decisions on pleas in abatement, are appealed to to validate the indictment in this case. Of course, if this were merely an irregularity or informality, and no prejudice alleged and proven, then the indictment ought not to have been quashed. In none of the cases I have referred to was there any prejudice shown, save probably two cases. In all of them participation in those proceedings, some more, some less, was shown. Will the amount of participation be the criterion for decision as to whether it is a substantial right or an informality? Or is it sufficient to show participation by an unauthorized person?

The right of the citizen to an investigation by a grand jury pursuant to the law of the land is invaded by the participation of an unauthorized person in such proceedings, be that participation great or small. It is not necessary that participation should be corrupt, or that unfair means were used. If the person participating was unauthorized, it was unlawful. And this would be an unlawful invasion of the right of the citizen, and unless this unlawful invasion is rectified by a proper tribunal at the instance of the citizen, it becomes a justified illegality; and in the words of Judge Hough: "A justified illegality, however trivial of itself, is of the highest importance."

We cannot, therefore, assent to the doctrine that the presence in the grand-jury room of the stenographer, and his participation in such proceedings to the extent of taking testimony of witnesses before the grand jury, is an informality; and, unless prejudice is alleged and shown, the motion should be denied. It is in my judgment a matter of substance. The statute relied upon to save this indictment has been on the statute books for many years, and was no doubt considered by the courts in the decisions referred to. We are therefore of opinion that the assignment is sustained, and the motion should have been granted, and the indictment quashed.

While the foregoing disposes of this case, and while, as I have said before, it is obiter to discuss and make any ruling on the other assignments, yet we think it timely and proper to notice the twenty-seventh assignment of error, that on a new indictment and retrial of this case the same fault shall not again occur.

There could have been no doubt upon the minds of the jury and the court of the fact that the mails were used and intended to be used to carry out the plans of the defendants, and thus the only live question in the case was whether the scheme was devised with a fraudulent intent. After the defendants had closed their testimony, the government in rebuttal introduced a witness, Faulkner, whose testimony tended to prove that he had paid $75, without the benefit from the treatment received. In argument the defendants' counsel commented on the fact that only one witness had been produced to show that any money had been received, etc., a proper comment on his part. The district attorney, in closing the case for the government, made the statement that, had the train not been three hours late, he would have had another witness, who would have testified that he also had been defrauded. The defendants' counsel immediately objected, and the objection was sustained by the court, and the jury properly cautioned not to consider said statement of counsel.

The defendants' counsel assign these remarks as error in his twenty-seventh assignment. The almost unbroken line of authorities hold that it is to the action of the court upon the objection to which error may be assigned; that, if the court stops counsel and cautions the jury, this cures the violation of the defendants' right to a trial and verdict on the testimony of witnesses, and not statements of counsel not based on testimony. And in ordinary cases this is the correct rule. Yet in each of the cases ex-L.R.A.1916D.

pressions will be found which militate against this view in exceptional cases.

Everyone must realize that there are exceptional cases where, although the court does stop counsel, and does caution the jury, the impression has been made by the remarks of counsel, and although the jury honestly try to ignore that impression, it still enters into and forms a part of the verdict. In such cases the trial court should set aside the verdict on motion for a new trial. The language of Justice Fowler, in Tucker v. Henninger, 41 N. H. 325, is pertinent, and applies with great force to criminal prosecutions: "Yet the necessary effect is to bring the statements of counsel to bear upon the verdict with more or less force, according to circumstances; and if they in the slightest degree influence the finding, the law is violated, and the purity and impartiality of the trial tarnished and weakened. . . . It is unreasonable to believe the jury will entirely disregard them. They may struggle to disregard them. They may think they have done so, and still be led involuntarily to shape their verdict under their influence. That influence will be greater or less, according to the character of the counsel, his skill and adroitness in argument, and the force and naturalness with which he is able to connect the facts he states with the evidence and circumstances of the case. To an extent not definable, yet to a dangerous extent, they unavoidably operate as evidence which must more or less influence the minds of the jury, not given under oath, without cross-examination, and irrespective of all those precautionary rules by which competency and pertinency are tested."

The prosecuting officer is usually a person of considerable influence in the community, and the fact that he represents the government of the United States lends weight and importance to his utterances. He does not occupy the position of a defendant's counsel, but appears before the jury clothed in official raiment, discharging an official duty. The realization of these considerations should lead the officer to the exercise of the utmost care and caution in making statements before the jury, and should induce him to confine his arguments and statements to the testimony of the witnesses, in order that no right of the defendant is violated.

It will be borne in mind in this case that the great volume of testimony was given by postoffice inspectors, writing decoy letters and giving simulated symptoms, and that the only witness who had in reality consulted the defendants was Faulkner. While the fact that anyone was actually defrauded may not have been material, yet the fact that people had been defrauded by the scheme would, necessarily, have had great weight with the jury in arriving at their conclusion that a scheme had been formed with intent to defraud. It seems to me impossible to say that the remarks of the district attorney were not prejudicial to the defendants' right to a verdict on the testimony of witnesses. State v. Underwood, 77 N. C. 502; Jenkins v. North Carolina Ore Dressing Co. 65 N. C. 563.

For the reasons hereinbefore given, the judgment of the District Court is reversed, and the cause remanded to the trial court, with instructions to grant the motion to quash the indictment.

Annotation—Presence of unauthorized person in grand jury as affecting indictment.

This note does not include cases involving the appearance of special attorneys or private counsel before a grand jury. For such cases, see Hartgraves v. State, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 568, and note, and the later case of Collier v. State, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 599.

Cases involving the effect of the presence on the grand jury of a juror who was not qualified to act are also excluded from the present note.

In general.

The cases agree that no person other than jurors should be present when the grand jury is deliberating or voting upon the advisability of returning an indictment; but there is a decided difference of opinion as to the effect of the presence of an unauthorized person in the grand-jury room at other times, the majority taking the view that it will not be sufficient ground for quashing or abating the indictment unless prejudice is shown, or at least probable.

Stenographers.

In Richards v. State (1913) 108 Ark. 87, 157 S. W. 141, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 231, involving a motion to quash an indictment because of the presence of a stranger in the grand-jury room during the examination of the charge against defendant, the stranger being a stenographer employed by the prosecuting attorney to take down the testimony of the witnesses and report it to him, the court sustained the indictment; it appearing that the stenographer was not present when the grand jury were deliberating or voting on the charge; if not appearing that anything was said or done by him calculated to in any way influence the grand jury; although the statutes provided that no person excepting the prosecuting attorney and the witnesses under examination should be permitted to be present while the grand jury were examining a charge, and no person whatever should be present while the grand jury were deliberating or voting upon a charge. The court said: L.R.A.1916D.

"If it is desirable that the testimony of witnesses before the grand jury be taken in shorthand and reported in full to the prosecuting attorney in order to further the ends of justice, it would be better done by a stenographer authorized by law to take such testimony, and acting under the sanctity of an oath not to disclose any of the secrets thereof; still we do not think, under the circumstances of this case, that the court erred in overruling the motion to quash the indictment because of his presence in the grand-jury room during the examination of witnesses in the capacity in which he was acting; it not appearing that he was present while the grand jury was deliberating or voting on the charge."

In the absence of any statute authorizing or prohibiting a person not a member of the grand jury to remain in the grand-jury room and take evidence in shorthand for the use of the prosecution, the presence in the grand-jury room, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, of a stenographer who took down in shorthand all the evidence, and afterwards wrote it out in longhand, for the use of such persons as were employed to prosecute the defendants upon the indictment, will not invalidate the indictment, where it does not appear that the reporter said or did anything in the presence of the grand jury that influenced their action in returning the indictment, and there is no allegation of fraud or improper motives on the part of either the prosecuting attorney or the shorthand reporter. State v. Bates (1897) 148 Ind. 610, 48 N. E. 2.

And this was held to be true although the statute provided that "the grand jury must select one of their number as clerk who must take minutes of their proceedings (except the votes of the individual members on a presentment or indictment), and also of the evidence given before them, which shall be preserved for the use of the prosecuting attorney to subserve the purposes of justice." The court said that such a departure from the mode indicated by the statute should not result in the abatement of a particular indictment, without some showing that the accused was injuriously affected, or that something unauthorized was said or done which probably injured him; the presence of a stenographer before the grand jury not being necessarily inconsistent with a due administration of justice in criminal cases. Courtney v. State (1892) 5 Ind. App. 356, 32 N. E. 335.

In State v. Sullivan (1904) 110 Mo. App. 75, 84 S. W. 105, the court said that the presence in the grand-jury room of a stenographer who was not a member of the jury was improper, but refused to quash the indictment where it was admitted by defendant's demurrer that no prejudice resulted to him.

Where a stenographer is employed by a district attorney by express statutory authority as an assistant in his office, the presence of such stenographer in the grand-jury room for the purpose of taking down the testimony in shorthand for the use of the district attorney will not invalidate the indictment, in the absence of anything tending to show that the stenographer was present when the grand jury deliberated or voted upon the bill, or that he participated in the proceedings in any way than by taking notes of the testimony, or that the accused was injuriously affected thereby. Com. v. Hedgedus (1910) 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 157.

So the fact that the county attorney had with him in the grand-jury room, at the time the grand jury was interrogating the witnesses, a regularly sworn bailiff for the grand jury, to act as his stenographer, taking down the testimony of the witnesses, he not being present while the grand jury was discussing the propriety of finding a bill of indictment, nor while they were voting on that question, was no ground for quashing the indictment. Porter v. State (1913) 72 Tex. Crim. Rep. 71, 160 S. W. 1194.

The presence of the stenographer of the state's attorney in the grand-jury room during the taking of the testimony of witnesses, and the taking and transcribing of such testimony in full, will not abate the indictment in the absence of statutory requirements or prejudice to the accused. State v. Brewster (1898) 70 Vt. 341, 42 L.R.A. 444, 40 Atl. 1037.

Where it is a settled practice for assistants of the district attorney to attend the grand jury, the presence of a stenographer employed by authority of the government, to assist the district attorney in the discharge of his official duties, for the purpose of taking stenographic notes of the testimony of a witness, was held to be insufficient to require the quashing of the indictment, the decision being based upon the ground that the stenographer came within the designation of an assistant to the district attorney. United States v. Simmons (1891) 46 Fed. 65.

Where an assistant district attorney is authorized to be present before the grand jury, the fact that he is also a stenographer and takes minutes of the testimony, which he reports to the district attorney and to another person aiding the district attorney, is not error in the absence of any law forbidding it. United States v. American Tobacco Co. (1910) 177 Fed. 774.

The presence of a clerk or assistant to the district attorney with the grand jury, for the purpose of taking down the testimony, although he was not an attorney at law nor an assistant district attorney, was not error, as the prohibition against the presence of outsiders in the grand-jury room during the taking of testimony arises by reason of the requirement of secrecy concerning the proceedings, and not from legislative enactment; and the stenographer in this case had taken the required oath of office so that the secrecy of the proceedings of the grand jury was preserved. United States v. Rockefeller (1914) 221 Fed. 462.

In Wilson v. United States (1916) — C. C. A. —, 229 Fed. 344, the court stated that in that circuit—the second—it has for upwards of thirty years been uniformly held that the presence of a proper shorthand reporter who merely recorded the testimony as it was given, and did not attend at the deliberations of the grand jury, did not invalidate the indictment, and, after referring to the fact that in some other circuits a different conclusion has been reached, said: "Nevertheless we are not persuaded to abandon the well-settled and long-continued practice in our own circuit. To do so would seem like a reverter to strict technicalities, overattention to which sometimes tends to defeat, rather than to advance, the ends of justice. There seems no reason why criminal law and procedure should not, like other law and procedure, progress with the progress of the age. . . . We are satisfied that the preservation of an accurate record of the testimony submitted to a grand jury tends to advance the ends of justice. The knowledge that there is being taken a record of such sort that in any future prosecution for perjury it will probably be taken by a trial jury as a correct one is a wholesome check on the witnesses who are testifying before a grand jury. There are very many causes which come before a grand jury which involve complicated questions and call for voluminous testimony from many witnesses. It cannot all be put in at once; not infrequently the statement of one witness will indicate where another witness may be found, and days or weeks may elapse before he can be produced. The recollection of the sixteen jurors may not always be harmonious as to what some prior witness testified to; it is important, and advances the ends of justice, always to have before the grand jurors themselves when they deliberate on their future action, an accurate record of all the testimony which a stenographic report alone can give; it is as important for the person charged as it is for the government; it may save him from indictment through misrecollection." And it was held that the action of the trial judge in refusing to quash or abate the indictment was proper, especially in view of the fact that the stenographer was no chance man, called in by a district attorney for that case merely, but a regular clerk and assistant to the district attorney, appointed by the Attorney General of the United States, and had taken the oath required from all government officials.

A statute providing that "no person except the attorney for the commonwealth and the witness under examination shall be present while the grand jury are examining a charge; and no person whatever while they are deliberating or voting on a charge," is peremptory, and it is error for the court to direct the stenographer to take down the testimony heard before the grand jury. Com. v. Berry (1906) 29 Ky. L. Rep. 234, 92 S. W. 936.

In State v. Watson (1882) 34 La. Ann. 669, a judgment of conviction was reversed and the indictment and all proceedings under it quashed because the judge appointed an outsider to act as clerk of the grand jury.

The attendance of a stenographer at the proceedings of a grand jury, upon order of the presiding judge, for the purpose of taking down the testimony of witnesses, although he took an oath not to disclose any testimony taken down or heard by him, such oath not being authorized by law, and although he was L.R.A.1916D.

not present during the deliberations of the jury, was error of which the person indicted may take advantage. State v. Bowman (1897) 90 Me. 363, 60 Am. St. Rep. 266, 38 Atl. 331.

Where a stenographer who was a witness before the grand jury against the defendant remained in the grand-jury room and took notes of the testimony of all the witnesses testifying before that body, and at the close of the testimony read the notes so taken to the members of the jury, who had to pass upon the question of finding a true bill, the stenographer not even acting under the sanction of an oath to correct by report the testimony according to her best ability, the indictment should have been abated. State v. Salmon (1908) 216 Mo. 466, 115 S. W. 1106.

An act of Congress permitting any attorney or counselor specially appointed by the Attorney General to go before the grand jury in the same manner as a regular assistant district attorney does not authorize the appointment of attorneys to go before the grand jury for the sole purpose of taking the testimony as the grand jury under such circumstances is ground for quashing the indictment. United States v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (1915) 221 Fed. 683; United States v. Rubin (1914) 218 Fed. 245.

Officers.

The mere presence of the bailiff of the court in the grand-jury room while witnesses were being examined, he not being present when the question was taken upon the finding of the indictment, and it not being shown that he was not there in the discharge of his official duties, will not invalidate the indictment. State v. Kimball (1870) 29 Iowa, 267.

So, the fact that the bailiff was in the grand-jury room part of the time, passing in and out, was not ground for quashing the indictments, the proof clearly showing that he exerted no influence on the grand jury. State v. Bacon (1899) 77 Miss. 366, 27 So. 563.

And while it is improper for a court officer to unnecessarily enter or remain in the grand-jury room, and such conduct on his part should be rebuked and punished by the trial judge, yet the casual presence of a court officer in the grand-jury room during the examination of witnesses will not have the effect of vitiating an indictment or presentment unless there is some showing that the officer attempted to interfere with or influence the grand jury in its action.

Sadler v. State (1910) 124 Tenn. 50, 136 S. W. 430, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 976.

But it is improper for any outsider to take any part in the deliberations of the grand jury, and where the sheriff came into the jury room and assisted in examining a witness, eliciting evidence upon which the indictment was based and which would not otherwise have been obtained, the judgment was reversed and the indictment quashed. Herrington v. State (1911) 98 Miss. 410, 53 So. 783.

Judge.

Where one of the statutory grounds of a motion to set aside an indictment is that any person other than the grand jurors was present before the grand jury when the question was taken upon the finding of the indictment, or when any person other than the grand jurors was present before the grand jury during the investigation of the charge, except as required or permitted by law, the fact that the presiding judge went into the room of the grand jury while they were in session, and personally urged the indictment of parties for violating the liquor laws, is sufficient ground for quashing the indictment. State v. Will (1896) 97 Iowa, 58, 65 N. W. 1010.

And where the presiding judge required a grand jury to come into open court and have the witnesses for the state examined publicly the indictment should be quashed. State v. Branch (1873) 68 N. C. 186, 12 Am. Rep. 633.

Witnesses.

The fact that one witness before the grand jury was present in the grand-jury room while another witness was testifying is no ground for quashing the indictment. Brown v. State (1904) 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 572, 81 S. W. 718.

So, under a statute which provides that it is a ground for setting aside an indictment that any person other than the grand jurors was present before the grand jury during the investigation of a charge, except as required or permitted by law, the fact that a father and daughter were both summoned to appear as witnesses before the grand jury, and, the daughter being very nervous and fearful about appearing before that tribunal, her father was permitted, upon his request, to be present during the time that she gave her testimony, and there was no showing that he did or said anything to influence the witness, or that defendant was in any manner prejudiced, was held not to be ground for setting aside the indictment; the decision being apparently on the ground that L.R.A.1916D.

where one was required to go before the grand jury as a witness, his presence there while another witness was giving testimony was not sufficient ground for setting aside the indictment, where no showing of prejudice to defendant was made. State v. Wood (1900) 112 Iowa, 484, 84 N. W. 503.

While the action of a grand jury must be free from malice, prejudice, or passion, its solemn findings are not to be set aside for light or trivial causes, for anything short of a sufficient substantial showing; so, where an intruder applied for admission to the jury room several times and was finally admitted by order of the foreman, was sworn, and answered the routine of questions propounded to him, and made some reference to, but knew nothing of his own knowledge about the case, several witnesses testifying that the intruder stated while in the grand-jury room that defendant ought to be indicted, his conduct fell far short of showing an exertion of improper influence such as would require quashing the indictment. State v. Bacon (1899) 77 Miss. 366, 27 So. 563.

But in United States v. Edgerton (1897) 80 Fed. 374, it is held that the rule is inherent in the grand-jury system with all the force of a statutory enactment, that no person other than a witness undergoing examination and the attorney for the government can be present during the sessions of the grand jury; so, where one who had testified before the grand jury as an expert was permitted to remain in the grand-jury room while other witnesses were being examined in connection with the charge against defendant, and propounded questions to such witnesses, the indictment should be quashed.

Miscellaneous.

The fact that, while a grand jury was investigating an election fraud case, the president of the board of police commissioners and a member of the board of election supervisors were present in the grand-jury room by order of the court, one to produce the ballot box and the other to produce the keys, returns, and tally sheets, was not error where they did not participate in the count of the ballots, and the grand jury did not deliberate upon any questions before it during their presence in the room. Cochran v. State (1913) 119 Md. 539, 87 Atl. 400.

In State v. Justus (1883) 11 Or. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 470, 8 Pac. 337, 6 Am. Crim.

Rep. 511, an appeal from a conviction of murder on the ground that a person not authorized by law was present before the grand jury at the request of the district attorney for the purpose of assisting in the examination of witnesses and in framing the indictment, it not appearing from the report of the case whether such person was an attorney or not, it was held that while, under the statute providing that no person other than the district attorney can be allowed to be present during the sittings of the grand jury, the presence of such person was improper, it was at most an irregularity; and it not being claimed that any injustice or wrong was done to the prisoner by reason of this error, it could not be taken advantage of after trial and verdict upon a motion for a new trial.

Under a statute providing for the secrecy of the deliberations of the grand jury, and providing that "the district attorney may go before the grand jury at any time except when they are discussing the propriety of finding a bill of indictment or voting upon the same," and making it a ground for setting aside the indictment that "some person not authorized by law was present when the grand jury were deliberating upon the accusation against the defendant, or were voting upon the same,"—it was error for the court to refuse to receive evidence in open court upon an allegation that a certain person not authorized by law was present when the grand jury were deliberating upon the accusation and while they were voting upon the bill, even though the person named was the district attorney. Rothschild v. State (1880) 7 Tex. App. 519.

Under the statute mentioned in the preceding case, where the person who was alleged to be present before the grand jury without authorization was not present while the jury were discussing and deliberating about finding the bill, the indictment should be sustained. Sims v. State (1898) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 45 S. W. 705.

The discussion of the evidence before the grand jury relating to an alleged crime, by persons not sworn to testify as witnesses, will vitiate an indictment whether the jurors were actually influenced by such discussion or not. State v. Wetzel (1914) — W. Va. —, 83 S. E. 68.

Under statutes authorizing the appointment of special assistant district attorneys to assist the district attorney before the grand jury, the appointment of an expert accountant who was not a qualified practitioner in any court was not authorized, and his presence before the grand jury, assisting in the examination of witnesses, is error for which an indictment will be quashed. United States v. Heinze (1910) 177 Fed. 770.

And the presence in the grand jury of an examiner from the department of justice who remained in the room during the examination of many witnesses, assisting the jury in the investigation by explaining accounts while the witnesses were on examination, and asking some questions, was sufficient ground for quashing the indictment. United States v. Kilpatrick (1883) 16 Fed. 765.

R. L. S.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

RE ESTATE OF ALEXANDER MOYNIHAN, Deceased.

STATE OF IOWA, Appt.

(— Iowa, —, 151 N. W. 504.)

Appeal — failure to serve abstract — dismissal.

1. Failure to serve an abstract and argument on one of the appellees or the only attorney who represented him, as shown by the record and affidavits in support of the motion to dismiss, requires affirmance as to him.

Note.—The validity of discrimination against aliens by inheritance tax law as affected by treaty with foreign government is treated in the note to Re Stixrud, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 632, and Re Peterson, 1916A, 474. L.R.A.1916D.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, IV. r and m, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Succession tax — effect of treaty.

2. Alien heirs can be subjected to no higher inheritance tax than domestic ones, under a treaty providing that citizens or subjects of each of the contracting parties shall have full power to dispose of their personal property; and their heirs, being subjects of the other contracting party, shall succeed to the same and take possession thereof, paying such duties only as the citizens or subjects of the country where the property lies shall be liable to pay.

For other cases, see Taxes, V. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 16, 1915.)

APPPEAL by the state from an order of the District Court for Polk County releasing certain real estate appraised for collateral inheritance tax as a part of the property of Alexander Moynihan, deceased, from liability for such tax, in a suit for the recovery of the real estate. Affirmed.

Statement by Evans, J.:

Appeal by the state from certain orders entered in the above-entitled probate case relating to the collateral inheritance tax. The orders appealed from will be indicated in the opinion.

Messrs. George Cosson, Attorney General, and C. A. Robbins, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

Only parties to the action or persons in privity with them are bound by a judgment or decree of court.

23 Cyc. 1237, 1280; Jasper County v. Sparham, 125 Iowa, 465, 101 N. W. 134; Guedert v. Emmet County, 116 Iowa, 40, 89 N. W. 85.

If claimants inherited the property of Alexander F. Moynihan, then the treaty between this country and Great Britain has no application, for as to real estate the treaty applies only in cases where, under the law, they would be disqualified from inheriting, and in case of personal property the treaty applies only when a citizen or subject of one of the powers dies owning property within the territory of the other power.

Sala's Succession, 50 La. Ann. 1009, 24 So. 674; Frederickson v. Louisiana, 23 How. 445, 448, 16 L. ed. 577, 579; Re Anderson, 166 Iowa, 617, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 686, 147 N. W. 1098; Rixner's Succession, 48 La. Ann. 552, 32 L.R.A. 189, 19 So. 597.

The act of the legislature of Iowa was never more than the exercise of the power which every state or sovereignty possesses of regulating the manner and terms upon which property, real and personal, within its dominion may be transmitted by last will and testament or by inheritance, and prescribes who shall and who shall not be capable of taking it.

Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1168; Frederickson v. Louisiana, 23 How. 445, 16 L. ed. 577.

The tax is not a tax upon property, but is a charge upon the right or privilege of receiving it.

United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; State v. Dalrymple, 70 Md. 294, 3 L.R.A. 372, 17 Atl. 82; Re Anderson, 166 Iowa, 617, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 686, 147 N. W. 1098.

Mr. E. J. Kelly also for the State.

Messrs. Parsons & Mills and Dudley & Coffin for appellees.
L.R.A.1916D.

Evans, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Alexander Moynihan died intestate leaving a number of collateral heirs all of whom are parties hereto. He left an estate consisting of personal property amounting to something more than $3,000. Whether he left any real estate is one of the points in controversy. The administrator listed 160 acres of land as property of the decedent, located in Iowa county. This land, however, was in the actual possession of Michael Moynihan, the brother, and had been in his actual possession for thirty-five years, and he claimed to be the owner of the same. Suit was begun in Iowa county against Michael by some of the collateral heirs for the recovery of such real estate. Michael appeared to such suit with a cross bill claiming title and asking that his title be quieted. A decree was entered in his favor on the cross bill. Later he filed an application in this probate case pending in Polk county, asking a formal order eliminating this real property from the list of assets of the decedent. This involved its elimination from the consideration of the appraisers for collateral inheritance tax purposes. Such application was granted. From this order the state appealed.

The appeal has been submitted to us with a motion on behalf of Michael for an affirmance of the case or a dismissal of the appeal because the appellant has failed to serve upon Michael or upon his attorney any abstract or argument. This motion is resisted on the alleged ground that Michael was represented in the trial below by more than one attorney and that service was made upon one of such attorneys. The record and showing furnish no fair support for the ground of alleged resistance. Michael appeared below by Mr. Kirby as his sole attorney. This fact appears both by appropriate affidavits in support of the motion and in the record itself. There were other attorneys who appeared for other collateral heirs. As to these their clients were specifically named in the record. The same record shows Mr. Kirby as appearing for Michael. No other attorney was authorized to appear for him or purported to appear for him. Nor did Mr. Kirby appear for any other party. The notice of appeal expressly recognized Mr. Kirby as sole attorney for Michael. The appellant, therefore, was clearly in default in failing to serve abstract and argument upon Mr. Kirby or upon his client. No excuse is offered for such default, other than the resistance above indicated. The motion to affirm as to Michael must therefore be sustained.

II. There is a second branch of the appeal which involves the interests of certain alien collateral heirs. Such alien heirs are subjects of Great Britain. As collateral heirs, they are entitled to a share of the personal property above referred to. Because they are alien, the state contends that their succession is subject to a tax of 20 per cent under our statute. Because of the terms of our treaty with Great Britain, it is contended for these alien heirs that they cannot be subjected to any greater tax than the resident heirs. This was the view adopted by the trial court, and the rate of tax against each succession was fixed at 5 per cent.

We had occasion in McKeown v. Brown, 167 Iowa, 489, 149 N. W. 593, to consider the effect of the terms of our treaty with Great Britain as bearing upon the rate of collateral inheritance tax chargeable against subjects of Great Britain. The cited case, however, dealt with real property only. We have now to consider the effect of the same upon the succession to personal property. It is contended by the appellant that the terms of the treaty do not forbid discrimination in succession taxes when the inheritance consists of personal property. Article 2 of such treaty is as follows:

"Article 2. The citizens or subjects of each of the contracting parties shall have full power to dispose of their personal property within the territories of the other, by testament, donation, or otherwise; and their heirs, legatees, and donees, being citizens or subjects of the other contracting party, whether resident or nonresident, shall succeed to their said personal property, and may take possession thereof either by themselves or by others acting for them, and dispose of the same at their pleasure, paying such duties only as the citizens or subjects of the country where the property lies shall be liable to pay in like cases." [31 Stat. at L. 1939.]

Alexander Moynihan, the decedent, was a resident of this country. Whether he was a citizen hereof does not directly appear. It is so assumed, however, in appellate's argument, and we will assume it likewise. One of the contentions in argument is that article 2 is applicable only to the inherited estate of an alien who dies in this state, and that it is therefore not applicable to the case at bar because Alexander Moynihan was not an alien. The article will not bear such construction. Alexander Moynihan being a citizen of this country, his "heirs, legatees, and donees being citizens or subjects of the other contracting party, . . . shall succeed to their said personal property and may take possession thereof . . . and dispose of the same . . . paying such duties only as the citizens and subjects of the country where the property lies shall be liable in like cases."

It will be noted, therefore, that this article covers succession, possession, and disposal of personal property, all to be subject to such duties only as the citizens of the country where the property lies will be liable to pay in-like cases. No reason appears, therefore, why any different effect should be given to the terms of the treaty as applied to personal property than was given in the McKeown Case, supra, as applied to real property.

The order entered below is therefore affirmed.

Deemer, Ch. J., and Weaver and Preston, JJ., concur.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Evans, J., on November 24, 1915, handed down the following additional opinion (— Iowa, —, 154 N. W. 904):

A petition for rehearing has been submitted in this case, the same having been argued somewhat in conjunction with the original submission in the case of Brown v. Daley, wherein opinion has been handed down at the present term, — Iowa, —, 154 N. W. 602. The discussion in the cited case is applicable to the facts of the present case, and is controlling of the result. The result is that our affirmance of the judgment of the lower court is adhered to. We prefer, however, to rest our opinion upon the grounds indicated in the cited case.

Deemer, Ch. J., and Weaver and Preston, JJ., concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

JOHN G. WHITE et al.

v.

M. L. HARBESON, Judge.

(— Ky. —, 183 S. W. 475.)

Venue — action by receiver to enforce stockholder's liability.

An action by a receiver of an insolvent insurance company to enforce the statutory L.R.A.1916D.

liability of stock and policy holders is ancillary to the suit in which the receiver is appointed, within the meaning of a statute permitting such ancillary matters to be settled in the court of such appointment, although the stockholders reside in different

Note. — As to when local venue may be disregarded upon the ground that the action or proceeding is ancillary or incidental, see annotation following this case, post, 1134.

counties of the state, and actions at law might have been brought in the counties of their residence, to enforce their respective obligations.

For other cases, see Venue, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 17, 1916.)

PETITION for a writ of prohibition to prevent the defendant judge from proceeding in the matter of the settlement of the affairs of the Kentucky Fire Insurance Company, particularly in the matter of the enforcement of the assessment made by the court upon the various policy holders in said company. Writ denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. G. W. Gourley, W. P. Sandidge, Walter D. Murphy, Field McLeod, L. A. Faurest, Webb & Webb, Jesse F. Nichols, N. Powell Taylor, Applegate & Manson, R. C. Simmons, W. H. Mackoy, Frank Chinn, and R. H. Winn for petitioners.

Messrs. S. D. Rouse and Myers & Howard, for respondent:

The Kenton circuit court has jurisdiction to wind up the affairs of the Kentucky Fire Insurance Company, and, as an incident thereto, jurisdiction over the persons and of the subject-matter on an assessment made upon the policy holders living in counties other than Kenton in sums less than $50.

Hamilton v. Riney, 140 Ky. 478, 131 S. W. 287; Phalan v. Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. 88 Ky. 24, 10 S. W. 10; Fishback v. Green, 87 Ky. 110, 7 S. W. 881; De Haven v. De Haven, 104 Ky. 41, 46 S. W. 215; Dawkins v. Hough, 112 Ky. 859, 66 S. W. 1047; Smith v. Engle, 44 Iowa, 265; Royston v. Royston, 21 Ga. 161; Ewing v. Patterson, 35 Ind. 326; Jenkins v. Simms, 45 Md. 532; Goodrich v. Staples, 2 Cush. 258; State ex rel. Macklin v. Rombauer, 104 Mo. 619, 15 S. W. 850, 16 S. W. 502; Norton Iron Works v. Moreland, — Ky. —, 113 S. W. 481.

Settle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By their petition filed in this court, plaintiffs, John G. White and others, ask that the defendant, M. L. Harbeson, judge of the Kenton circuit court, law and equity division, be prevented by writ of prohibition to be issued by this court, from proceeding further in the hearing or determination of the matters in controversy between the plaintiffs and W. N. Hind, receiver of the Kentucky Fire Insurance Company, growing out of the latter's insolvency and the settlement of its business and affairs, involved in the action pending in the Kenton circuit court, wherein W. E. Skillman and C. O. Martin, partners under the style Skillman-Martin Printing Company, are plaintiffs and the Kentucky Fire Insurance Company and others are defendants, particularly, in so far as the receiver is seeking by his cross petition in that action to make the plaintiffs herein liable as policy holders of the Kentucky Fire Insurance Company for certain assessments made against and attempted to be collected of them in the action. Plaintiffs' right to the writ of prohibition prayed for is based on the alleged ground that the Kenton circuit court, of which the defendant M. L. Harbeson is presiding judge, is without jurisdiction to hear or determine the matters in controversy referred to.

A brief statement of the facts leading to the bringing of the action in which the receiver was appointed, and the connection of the plaintiffs herein with that action, will give a better understanding of the plaintiffs' object in applying for the writ of prohibition. The Kentucky Fire Insurance Company, a co-operative or assessment fire insurance company, incorporated under the laws of this state, maintaining its chief office in the city of Covington, conducted a fire insurance business in the state from its incorporation down to the beginning of the year 1915. It then had on its books outstanding insurance amounting to about $1,500,000 and owed unpaid losses, resulting from fires, amounting in the aggregate to more than $40,000, saying nothing of other indebtedness nearly as great, incurred by way of attorneys' fees and court costs in litigation in various courts of the state. Being without money or assets to meet this indebtedness, the Kentucky Fire Insurance Company, April 1, 1915, through its board of directors, attempted to provide for its payment by levying, as permitted by its charter and the laws of the state, assessments upon its policy holders of an amount equaling two annual premiums upon their respective policies, practically none of which was collected. This situation led to the institution in the Kenton circuit court, law and equity division, of the action against the Kentucky Fire Insurance Company by the Skillman-Martin Printing Company, a creditor thereof. The petition, after setting out the facts to which we have referred, alleged the insolvency of the defendant insurance company, the necessity for a settlement of its business and affairs, and asked that it be placed in the hands of a receiver for that purpose; that a reference be had to ascertain the names of its policy holders, the dates, respectively, upon which such policies were issued, and such of them as had been canceled; also to ascertain the outstanding losses, when sustained, and to whom payable; and that the court make such an assessment upon its policy holders as might be found necessary to pay the losses and the costs of the action. The defendant insurance company, by answer and cross petition, alleged substantially the same facts, and prayed for the same relief. A reference was accordingly had to the receiver, and from the report of the latter it appears that the policy holders numbered about 1,500, some of whom reside in nearly every county of the state; that the outstanding, unpaid losses amounted to about $68,000, with less than $5,000 of it reinsured; that there were other debts owing by the insurance company, amounting in the aggregate to nearly as great a sum; that the assets of the company were of insignificant value; and that an assessment against the policy holders of $3 on each $100 of insurance in force, which was the maximum assessment allowed by § 709a, Kentucky Statutes, would be insufficient to pay the losses. He asked that the court make such assessment, and, if the assessments were not voluntarily paid, that he be authorized to sue the delinquents. The report of the receiver was confirmed, the assessment was made as requested therein, and the receiver authorized to bring suit against the delinquent policy holders. Thereafter, by cross petition in the action, all the policy holders who were delinquent in paying the assessments were made defendants, and judgment was prayed therein against them, respectively, for the assessment of 3 per cent, made by the court. Summons was issued to the various counties of their residence, and served upon them there. A few of the defendants failed to appear, but a majority of them appeared, for the sole purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the court, and to this end they demurred to the petition on that ground and moved to quash the returns on the summons. The demurrers and motions were overruled, which rulings caused the filing by the policy holders of the petition for the writ of prohibition asked in the instant case.

In urging their right to the writ of prohibition, the petitioners contend: (1) That the cause of action set up in the cross petition of the receiver is a separate and distinct action against each policy holder assessed, and that, as the sum assessed against each of them and for which the receiver sues is less than $50, the Kenton circuit court has no jurisdiction; (2) that the action is a separable and distinct action against each of them, for which reason the Kenton circuit court, even if the amount involved as to each were as much or more than $50, could only acquire jurisdiction by the service of summons in the county in which the suit is pending. On the other hand, in support of his assumption of jurisdiction, it is contended by the judge of the Kenton circuit court that the cross action against the policy holders upon the assessment made is merely ancillary or incidental to the action to wind up the business and affairs of the insolvent corporation, and the granting in that action of the relief sought by the receiver is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of actions and do complete justice, for which reasons the venue of the action is in the county in which the action was brought, and the jurisdiction to entertain and determine the liability of the policy holders for the assessments in question is in the court of that county in which the action is pending and the receiver was appointed and qualified; such venue being fixed and jurisdiction conferred by § 65, Civil Code.

Cases are not wanting in which it has been held that matters not ordinarily connected with the subject of an action in equity may, nevertheless, be so incident thereto as to make their determination in such action necessary to the granting of the main relief sought therein, even though the venue of an independent action as to such incidental matter be fixed by another provision of the Code. This was true in De Haven v. De Haven, 104 Ky. 41, 46 S. W. 215, 47 S. W. 597, which was an action to settle the estate of a decedent. It was held that the court had jurisdiction to award the administrator possession of a tract of land owned by the decedent, situated in another county, upon a summons served in such other county upon the occupant of the land. Obviously the venue of an action for the possession of land is fixed by a provision of the Code in the county in which the land lies, and such would necessarily have been the holding of the court, except for the fact that the awarding to the administrator of the possession of the land was held to be a matter incident to the action for the settlement of the decedent's estate, the venue of which, as fixed by the Code, was in the county where the administrator qualified and the action was pending. In Hamilton v. Riney, 140 Ky. 478, 131 S. W. 287, which was an action to settle the decedent's estate, that also involved the settlement of the accounts of the decedent as guardian of her children; and, although she had qualified as such guardian in a county other than that in which the suit to settle her estate was brought, it was held that the settlement of her accounts as guardian was so connected with and incident to the settlement of her estate that the court in which the suit to settle her estate was pending had jurisdiction to settle her accounts as guardian, notwithstanding another provision of the Code fixed the venue of an action to settle her accounts as guardian in the county in which she qualified. To the same effect are the cases of Phalan v. Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. 88 Ky. 24, 10 S. W. 10, and Dawkins v. Hough, 112 Ky. 855, 66 S. W. 1047. These cases establish the rule that where the determination of a matter is incident to the action, the court has jurisdiction in that action to determine it notwithstanding the venue of an action as to such matter would, under other circumstances, be fixed by a different provision of the Code in another county.

It would serve no good purpose to consider and discuss seriatim the many authorities cited by counsel in this case, as to do so would stretch the opinion to an unreasonable length, and so burden it with points of differentiation and refinements of distinction as to becloud, rather than make clear, the grounds upon which we rest the conclusions we have reached. Some of the cases relied on by counsel for the plaintiffs are undoubtedly in conflict with our conclusions, but it will be found that they emanate from other jurisdictions. Others, decided in this jurisdiction, relied on by the same counsel, which apparently conflict with our views, when compared with the authorities cited and considered in the opinion, will be found not to do so. We concede that a case will not be found in any jurisdiction which holds that an assignee or receiver of an insolvent estate can maintain a single action in equity against all the debtors of the insolvent estate, to recover of them debts due such estate. But while this is true, we have not been referred to a case in any jurisdiction in which it has been held that a receiver, or even a creditor, may not, under such circumstances as obtain in this case, maintain a single action in equity, against all the policy holders of an insolvent insurance corporation, who are likewise stockholders thereof, to enforce their liability as such policy holders or stockholders.

This right seems to have been recognized in the early case of Castleman v. Holmes, 4 J. J. Marsh. 1, under the law then existing with respect to corporations like that involved. It appears that the stockholders were liable for the debts of the corporation incurred during their ownership of stock in proportion to the amount of stock held by each. Suit was brought in equity by a judgment creditor of the corporation against the stockholders, seeking a discovery as to who the stockholders were and the amount of the stock owned by each, and to enforce the payment of his debt by apportioning it among them and compelling each to pay his proportion thereof. The question of jurisdiction was raised in the circuit court, but it was held, on appeal, that the circuit court, irrespective of the equitable remedy of discovery which the petition sought, had jurisdiction as a court of equity upon the ground that it was necessary, in order to avoid a multiplicity of suits and to do complete justice at once, and, further, that payment by such of the stockholders as were before the court could be coerced by a judgment in that court. It appears that some of the stockholders were not before the court, and there was no accounting or reimbursement sought or obtained against them by the stockholders who were before the court, because it was held that the liability was several. In Cook on Corporations, 7th ed. § 220, it is said:

"Perhaps the most difficult, unsettled, and unsatisfactory question concerning the statutory liability of stockholders is the question whether that liability must be enforced at law, or must be in equity, or may be in either a court of law or of equity. After determining this point there arises the further difficulty of ascertaining who shall be parties plaintiff and parties defendant,—whether one corporate creditor may sue, . . . or all the stockholders must be brought in. . . .

"Section 222. The remedy in equity is the favorite remedy of the courts. It is just, certain, impartial, and clear. It enforces once for all the liability of the stockholders, and at the same time provides for contribution. It distributes the assets equally and equitably among all the corporate creditors. It prevents a multiplicity of suits, and avoids the difficult question as to whether a suit at law will lie. The only and great objection to the remedy in equity is that it is protracted . . . and expensive. Frequently the courts have held that an action at law to enforce a statutory liability is not a proper proceeding, but that the rights of all parties can be properly adjudged in a court of equity, and that the latter remedy is exclusive of all others. Such are the latest decisions in New York. The New York court of appeals holds, however, that a suit in equity does not lie to enforce a statutory liability where the liability is unlimited, and there is no fund to be protected and distributed. . . . In some jurisdictions the rule prevails that creditors in these cases have a concurrent remedy, either at law or in equity. The action at law will lie upon the debt, while, on the other hand, the equitable jurisdiction arises from the power of a court of chancery to compel contribution among the stockholders and to effect an equitable distribution among the creditors. The tendency is to hold that a suit in equity is always a proper remedy, even though it may not be the exclusive remedy. The Supreme Court of the United States has recently held, however, that the jurisdiction of a court of equity on the ground of preventing a multiplicity of suits exists only where such is the actual situation.

"Where creditors seek to subject unpaid subscriptions to the payment of their claims, after exhausting their remedies at law, it is the rule in many jurisdictions that equity is the proper forum. That this right on the part of creditors now exists is almost universally conceded by the courts, and many of them hold that equity is the exclusive forum, where the remedy has not been changed . . . by statute. The meaning and application of this rule is that where creditors have exhausted their legal remedies against the corporation, and where the assets of the corporation are insufficient to pay its debts, they may have relief in equity to compel the delinquent stockholders to pay any unpaid balance." [4 Thomp. Corp. § 5075.]

Again, in § 5076, the same author says: "In some states courts of equity take exclusive jurisdiction in the enforcement of the statutory liability imposed upon stockholders, for the purpose of adjusting equities and for the preventing of a multiplicity of suits. Equity jurisdiction is also preferred on the ground that the doing of full justice involves complex contributions among stockholders, which cannot be worked out by a court of law. Equity is the proper forum in such cases, unless the statute imposing the liability intends to give a remedy to any creditor against any stockholder distributively; and even then equity may have jurisdiction though there is a concurrent remedy at law."

It is apparent, therefore, that while a creditor of an insolvent corporation may sue a stockholder at law upon his statutory liability, as allowed in Williams v. Chamberlain, 123 Ky. 150, 94 S. W. 29, that fact does not militate against the right of the creditor to sue in equity an insolvent corporation and its stockholders to enforce the statutory liability of the stockholders. The right to bring such equitable action has been recognized and allowed, not only in the case of Castleman v. Holmes, supra, but also in the more recent case of Game-well Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. v. Fire & Police Teleg. Co. 116 Ky. 759, 76 S. W. 862. The action last mentioned was instituted by the creditor in the chancery court, by judgment L.R.A.1916D.

of which the statutory liability of a non-resident, a stockholder, was enforced. In the opinion it is said: "The purpose of this action, as stated by appellant in the prayer of its petition, was to have the affairs of the insolvent resident corporations placed in the hands of a receiver of the court, and their assets collected, and the same paid to the creditors of the two corporations. The assets of the two corporations consisted, in addition to visible personal property, in debts due them by contract, as well as sums due from stockholders under their liability created by the statutes. It was certainly connected with the subject of this action and the settlement of these insolvent corporations for the appellees to ask the court to require the appellant, a nonresident corporation, to pay and settle the amount it owed under its statutory liability. This would not have been improper even if it had been a resident corporation." Cook v. Carpenter, 212 Pa. 165, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 900, 108 Am. St. Rep. 854, 61 Atl. 799, 4 Ann. Cas. 723.

It is our conclusion that, in an action brought to settle the affairs of an insolvent corporation in the hands of a receiver, and wherein the latter is seeking to enforce the statutory liability of the stockholders, a court of equity has jurisdiction to grant the relief here sought against the several stockholders, though they reside and were summoned in a county or counties other than that in which the action was brought; and, further, that such jurisdiction exists notwithstanding the fact that the receiver had a concurrent remedy at law by instituting actions at law against each stockholder, to enforce his liability, in the county of his residence. In other words, such jurisdiction is possessed and may be exercised by the court because the right of the receiver to recover of each stockholder is incident to the settlement of the corporation's affairs, and for the further reasons that to do so will prevent a multiplicity of suits and enable the court to do complete justice in the action before it.

If right in the conclusion that the Kenton circuit court, law and equity division, has the jurisdiction claimed and attempted to be exercised by it, it follows that the venue of the action is fixed by § 65, Civil Code. Moreover, the expenses incident to the enforcement of the equitable remedy invoked by the receiver will be insignificant as compared with what such expense would be if he were compelled to resort to suits at law against the several stockholders sought to be held liable. Manifestly, if a suit at law against each stockholder, in the county of his residence, were required, the costs resulting in each of such actions would amount to nearly as much, and, in some instances, more, than the amount of the assessment owing, and, in any event, such costs, together with those in the main action, when paid, would leave nothing of consequence to be distributed to the creditors of the corporation.

For the reasons indicated, the demurrer filed by the defendant judge to the petition for the writ of prohibition is sustained and the writ refused.

Annotation—When may local venue be disregarded upon the ground that the action or proceeding is ancillary or incidental.

As to the right to maintain a single suit in equity to enforce the separate liability of members of an insolvent insurance association, see Burke v. Scheer, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1057, and note thereto.

As to the jurisdiction of equity to enforce the liability of a mutual insurance company, see note to McCall v. Bowen, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 781.

Action by receiver or trustee to enforce liability of stockholders or members of company.

In accord with WHITE v. HARBESON, ante, 1129, and its companion case of Brandenburg v. Harbeson (1916) — Ky. —, 183 S. W. 479, are McCall v. Bowen (1912) 91 Neb. 241, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 781, 135 N. W. 1014, and Randall v. McClain (1913) 94 Neb. 487, 143 N. W. 478, holding that an action by the receiver of a mutual insurance company against the members, to recover an assessment made by the court, in order to pay the liabilities of the company, may be maintained in a court of equity in the county in which the receiver was appointed and the assessment made, and summons may issue out of that court to any county in the state wherein one of the defendants resides or may be summoned, and proper service therein will give the court jurisdiction.

And a suit by a trustee in bankruptcy to enforce a call for unpaid stock subscriptions should be brought in the United States court where the bankrupt estate is being administered. Re Crystal Spring Bottling Co. (1899) 96 Fed. 945.

But it has been held that the receiver of an insolvent mutual hail insurance company organized under a statute limiting the liability of the members to the amount of the obligations expressed in their applications, providing that members cannot be compelled to pay more, and also that suits at law may be brought against any members who shall neglect or refuse to pay any obligations, etc., cannot join in one action to recover individual unpaid assessments, all policy holders or members of the company who are severally liable for such assessments, —those who reside in counties other L.R.A.1916D.

than that in which the action is brought, as well as those who reside within that county,—on the ground that the suit is ancillary or auxiliary to the main insolvency proceeding. Burke v. Scheer (1911) 89 Neb. 80, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1057, 130 N. W. 962.

Summary proceeding by trustee in bankruptcy to recover personal property.

A summary proceeding by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover personal property belonging to the estate, which is in the possession of a stranger, who resides outside of the territorial limits of the court in which the original adjudication in bankruptcy was made, while ancillary in character, nevertheless presents a completely distinct and separable controversy, and cannot be maintained in the court of the original adjudication, but must be brought in the bankruptcy court within the territorial limits of which the respondent resides and the property is located. Re Waukesha Water Co. (1902) 116 Fed. 1009, followed in Re Alphin & L. Cotton Co. (1904) 131 Fed. 824; Staunton v. Wooden (1910) 102 C. C. A. 355, 179 Fed. 61; Re Rathfon Bros. (1912) 200 Fed. 108; Re Farrell (1912) 119 C. C. A. 576, 201 Fed. 338, Re Geller (1914) 216 Fed. 558.

As stated in Staunton v. Wooden (1910) 102 C. C. A. 355, 179 Fed. 61: "It may be conceded that the court in which the petition in bankruptcy is filed has plenary jurisdiction in bankruptcy, coextensive with the United States, to order and control the disposition of the bankrupt's estate, and is vested with jurisdiction to determine all liens thereon and all interests affecting it. . . . But this is not to say that the court of bankruptcy may issue its process to run into another district. It is one thing to issue citation to persons in another jurisdiction to appear before the court of bankruptcy in a proceeding which, in its exclusive jurisdiction, it is authorized to institute with a view to determining liens or rights of property, wherever situate; but it is quite another thing to issue process to be enforced in another jurisdiction."

Suit against assignee for benefit of creditors, joined with suit against debtor.

A cause of action against the assignee for the benefit of creditors of the maker of a note, and the assignee's sureties and others, who are entitled by statute to be sued in the county of their residence, though it may properly be joined with a cause of action against the maker, on the note, cannot be maintained in another county, in which the note was made payable, although the cause of action against the maker, on the note, may be maintained in the latter county. First Nat. Bank v. East (1897) 17 Tex. Civ. App. 176, 43 S. W. 558.

Cross bill seeking affirmative relief.

A statute requiring suits for the possession of real estate, or whereby the title thereto may be affected, to be brought in the county wherein such real estate lies, does not apply to an equitable cross bill for relief from a fraudulent sale of real property under a deed of trust given to secure a promissory note, which cross bill is filed in an action brought in a county other than that in which the land lies, to recover the balance due upon such note, after the sale; the question of title being merely incidental to the main controversy. Hewitt v. Price (1907) 204 Mo. 31, 120 Am. St. Rep. 681, 102 S. W. 647.

And where a plaintiff instituted a suit in the court of a county other than that of his residence, to enjoin the defendant from exercising a power of sale in a deed given by him to secure the payment of certain notes, the defendant may maintain, in that court, even after the plaintiff's dismissal of his petition, a cross bill asking for a general judgment on the note, and a judgment setting up a special lien on the land, as "this was not a new and distinct matter, entirely independent of that set out in the original petition. The subject-matter of the petition and the answer in the nature of a cross bill was one and the same. The issues raised in each involved the same debt, the same deed, the same land, and the same controversy. The petition sought to enjoin the defendant from collecting the debt by pursuing a remedy given in the deed. The effect of the answer was to abandon the remedy sought to be enjoined, and rely upon a remedy to be given by the court into which the defendant had been drawn by the petition of the plaintiff. L.R.A.1916D.

. . . The plaintiff's plea to the jurisdiction could not avail him. He came voluntarily into the superior court of Fulton county, seeking its aid in his behalf, and thus submitted himself to its jurisdiction in relation to all matters directly connected with the case that he had originated. One who goes into the court of a county other than that of his residence, to assert a claim or set up an equity, must be content to allow that court to determine any counterclaim growing out of the original suit which the defendant sees fit to set up by a cross action." Ray v. Home & F. Invest. & Agency Co. (1898) 106 Ga. 492, 32 S. E. 603.

But a cross action to recover land situated in another county cannot be maintained against nonresident parties, in connection with an action to try title to other land, which was properly brought in the county in which the latter land is situated. Hanner v. Caudle (1899) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 49 S. W. 411.

Scire facias against bail, etc.

Scire facias against bail is not such an original suit as is contemplated by a constitutional provision that one is liable to be sued only in the county in which he resides, but the original suit in which bail was required gives the court jurisdiction to proceed against the bail, as a part of the proceedings appertaining to the original suit, though the bail resides in another county. Garvin v. Gallagher (1846) 1 Ga. 315.

And a scire facias against an indorser of an original writ, to recover the costs of the original suit, is not a transitory action within the meaning of a statute requiring such action, where both parties are inhabitants of the state, to be commenced in the county where one of them is an inhabitant, but "it is founded upon a record, is in its nature local, and must be brought not only in the court, but in the county, where the record remains." Parsons v. Pearson (1818) 1 N. H. 336.

Suit for injunction, etc., as ancillary to another suit or proceeding.

Although a suit for an injunction must, by statute, be brought in the county of the domicile of the defendant, an application for an injunction against a railroad company, which is merely ancillary to a suit for a specific performance of a contract, which may, by statute, be brought in any county through or into which the company operates its railroad, is not within the statute, and the suit may be maintained, and the injunction granted, in any county through which the company operates its railroad, although not that of its domicil. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Anderson County (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 150 S. W. 239.

And an application for a temporary injunction restraining the defendant from transferring or suing upon any of certain notes given by the plaintiff to the defendant for a part of the purchase price of certain property, which injunction is merely ancillary to a suit for the cancelation of the notes and annulment of the contract of sale, and for damages, need not be brought in the county of the defendant's domicil, but the suit and application for injunction may be maintained in another county in which the main action may properly be brought. Royal Amusement Co. v. Columbia Piano Co. (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 170 S. W. 278.

Likewise, a constitutional provision that equity cases shall be tried in the county where a defendant resides, against whom substantial relief is prayed, does not apply to an ancillary bill which seeks only to enjoin a common-law suit, and asks no relief independently of that, and such a bill may be brought in the county in which the suit is pending, although the party sought to be enjoined resides in another county. Carswell v. Macon Mfg. Co. (1868) 38 Ga. 403; Clark v. Beall (1869) 39 Ga. 533.

And a bill in equity for injunction and relief, filed as ancillary to a suit at law, is maintainable against a nonresident plaintiff in the suit at law, and will be retained to grant relief as to all matters involved in a proper settlement of the litigation pending at law. Beall v. Rust (1882) 68 Ga. 777.

"In some senses, perhaps, these ancillary proceedings may be called equity causes; but, in a striking sense, they are not. They depend upon, and are merely in aid of, a common-law issue. They are necessary proceedings to get at the true rights of the parties in the matter pending in the common-law tribunal. . . . If they seek other relief, become aggressive, instead of simply defensive, they are, so far, demurrable." Carswell v. Macon Mfg. Co. (Ga.) supra.

A bill to enjoin the enforcement of a default judgment against the complainant, and to obtain a new trial and the right to defend, is not, however, aggressive, but is strictly defensive, and may be maintained in the county in which the original suit was brought, and the judgment obtained, although the defendant in the bill resides in another county. Dew v. Hamilton (1857) 23 Ga. 414.

And a bill to enjoin an action at law pending against the complainant, and also to obtain other and independent relief against the defendant, who resides in another county, may be maintained for the injunction, but not for the other relief, in the county where the action at law is pending. Key v. Robison (1859) 29 Ga. 34.

A bill in equity, to aid in the prosecution of, and purporting to be ancillary to, a claim for land upon which an execution has been levied, may be filed in the county in which the claim is pending, although the defendants in the bill reside in another county. Merchants' Bank v. Davis (1847) 3 Ga. 112.

And the constitutional requirement that cases in equity must be brought in the county where one of the defendants against whom substantial relief is prayed resides does not apply to an equitable proceeding for an injunction and the appointment of a receiver, in aid of a levy which has been met by a fraudulent and frivolous claim of an insolvent person, as such proceeding is not an independent one, but is ancillary and in aid of the plaintiff's rights involved in the claim case, and may be brought in the county in which that case is pending, although the claimant resides in another county. Dawson v. Equitable Mortg. Co. (1899) 109 Ga. 389, 34 S. E. 668.

But a suit in the nature of an ancillary bill cannot be maintained against one not a party to the original suit, and having no interest therein, and not having waived jurisdiction, in the courts of a county other than that of his residence. Bishop v. Brown (1912) 138 Ga. 771, 76 S. E. 89.

And the mere fact that an execution in favor of a plaintiff residing in one county has been levied on personal property of the defendant, who resides in a different county, does not give the court jurisdiction of the person of the execution plaintiff in the latter county, so that the execution defendant can maintain a bill in equity in that county to protect his rights as against the execution and the judgment upon which it was issued. Mays v. Taylor (1849) 7 Ga. 238.

Under a statute providing that all petitions for equitable relief shall be filed in the county of the residence of one of the defendants against whom substantial relief is prayed, except in cases of injunction to stay pending proceedings, when the petition may be filed in the county where the proceedings are pending, the following have been held not to be "pending proceedings," to stay which a petition for an injunction may be filed in a county other than that of the residence of a defendant against whom substantial relief is sought:

—issue and levy of an execution, Dade Coal Co. v. Anderson (1898) 103 Ga. 809, 30 S. E. 640, Malsby & Co. v. Studstill (1907) 127 Ga. 726, 56 S. E. 988;

—levy of an execution and other ministerial acts to effect a sale, Rounsaville v. McGinnis (1894) 93 Ga. 579, 21 S. E. 123;

—levy of an execution issued upon an affidavit to foreclose a lien on personalty, or the fact that the sheriff is about to put the purchaser in possession, after disregarding a counter affidavit filed by the defendant in execution, and selling the property levied on, Macon Nav. Co. v. Stallings (1900) 110 Ga. 352, 35 S. E. 647;

—mere issuance and levy of a distress warrant, Townsend v. Brinson (1903) 117 Ga. 375, 43 S. E. 748;

—"dispossessory" warrant in the hands of a sheriff for execution, Woolley v. Georgia Loan & T. Co. (1897) 102 Ga. 591, 29 S. E. 119; —advertisement and preparation for the sale of property under authority given by a security deed, Meeks v. Roan (1903) 117 Ga. 865, 45 S. E. 252.

So, a bill against the grantee, to set aside a sheriff's deed, "is not ancillary to or defensive of any action or suit at law or in equity which has been instituted by . . . [the grantee] against the complainants in the bill, but it is an original bill seeking relief against" him, and must be brought in the county in which he resides, and cannot be maintained in the county of the sheriff who made the deed, if the grantee resides elsewhere. Caswell v. Bunch (1886) 77 Ga. 504.

And under a statute declaring that equity cases shall be tried in the county where a defendant resides against whom substantial relief is prayed, except that a petition for an injunction to stay pending proceedings may be filed in the county where the proceedings are pending,—a petition for an injunction to stay an execution pending a motion to set aside the judgment upon which the execution was issued is not ancillary to the motion to set aside the judgment, so that the pendency of that motion in a court of a certain county gives that court jurisdiction of the equitable suit, where the only defendant against whom substantial relief is prayed resides in another county, but the suit must be brought in the latter county. Malsby & Co. v. Studstill (Ga.) supra. The court said: "The principle which authorizes equitable proceedings ancillary to suits already pending, for purposes of injunction, to be brought in the county where the suit is pending, rests on the idea that the plaintiff, by voluntarily instituting his suit, gives the superior court of the county where it is so instituted jurisdiction of his person sufficient to answer the ends of justice respecting the suit originally instituted.

. . . The suit of Malsby & Co. v. Studstill [in which the judgment in question was rendered] was not pending at the time the petition for injunction was filed. It had eventuated in a judgment and had ceased to pend. The motion to set aside the judgment is no part of the original trover suit, but an aftermath of it. The motion to set aside the judgment is a separate and distinct proceeding. The statute requires it to be filed in the court where the judgment sought to be set aside was rendered, but that does not give equitable jurisdiction to the court to stay the proceedings until the motion to set aside the judgment is decided."

Matters incidental to an action.

Although, generally, it is the privilege of a defendant to be sued in the county of his residence, yet, to avoid a multiplicity of suits, a cause of action arising against a nonresident of the county upon an open account (Ball v. Southern Rock Island Plow Co. (1899) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 50 S. W. 158), or upon a note not payable in the county (Middlebrook v. David Bradley Mfg. Co. (1894) 86 Tex. 706, 26 S. W. 935), may be embraced in a suit against him upon notes payable in the county, and by their terms fixing the venue of the suit there.

And although the venue of an independent action for the recovery of real property is the county in which some part thereof is situated, real property situated wholly in another county may be recovered from a resident thereof, upon a summons served in that county, as an incident in a suit by an administrator for the settlement, distribution, and partition of his decedent's estate, brought in the county in which he qualified (De Haven v. De Haven (1898) 104 Ky. 41, 46 S. W. 215, rehearing denied in (1898) 104 Ky. 45, 47 S. W. 597), or a suit to surcharge a settlement made by the plaintiff's former guardian, brought in the county in which the guardian qualified (Dawkins v. Hough (1902) 112 Ky. 855, 60 S. W. 1047).

And although an independent action for the sale of land must be brought in the county where the land is situated, a court of one county, having jurisdiction of the parties to an action and the original controversy, has jurisdiction to decree a sale of land in another county as incidental to the relief originally sought. Webb v. Wright (1867) 2 Bush (Ky.) 126; Fishback v. Green (1888) 87 Ky. 107, 7 S. W. 881; Doty v. Deposit Bldg. & L. Asso. (1898) 103 Ky. 710, 43 L.R.A. 551, 46 S. W. 219, rehearing denied in (1898) 103 Ky. 721, 43 L.R.A. 554, 47 S. W. 433.

So, in an action for the settlement and partition of an estate, the accounts of the decedent as guardian of her children may be settled as incident to the settlement of her estate, although she qualified as guardian in another county than that in which the action is pending, and it is provided by statute that a suit for the settlement of a guardian's accounts must be brought in the county in which he qualified. Hamilton v. Riney (1910) 140 Ky. 476, 131 S. W. 287.

And in an action by the administrator of an estate and the guardian of an infant for whom the intestate was guardian at the time of his decease, to obtain a settlement of the decedent's estate and recover the amount of the infant's estate, with which the deceased guardian was chargeable at the time of his death, which action was properly brought in the county in which the administrator qualified, and in which the decedent qualified as guardian, a bank which holds property belonging to the estate of the infant, which it wrongfully obtained from the deceased guardian, may, although its corporate domicile and place of business is in another county, be summoned there and required to account for such property. Taylor v. Harris (1915) 164 Ky. 654, 176 S. W. 168. A. C. W.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

LEOPOLD WOLFF

v.

SHREVEPORT GAS, ELECTRIC LIGHT,
& POWER COMPANY et al., Appts.

(138 La. 743, 70 So. 789.)

Municipal corporation — purpose of ordinance.

1. The purposes of the ordinance of the city of Shreveport of October 20, 1908, regulating the "inspection and testing of gas meters, gas piping, and installation of all kinds of gas apparatus," are to provide for the safety of the public and afford some protection to the consumer against insufficient service and overcharges; and the assumption

Headnotes by MONROE, Ch. J.

Note. — As to liability of gas company for negligence in escape or explosion of gas, see notes to Ohio Gas Fuel Co. v. Andrews, 29 L.R.A. 337; Consolidated Gas Co. v. Connor, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 809; and Manning v. St. Paul Gaslight Co. L.R.A.1915E, 1022; and see later case, McWilliams v. Kentucky Heating Co. L.R.A.1916A, 1224.

As to effect of consolidation, merger, or absorption of corporation (including the purchase by one corporation of the assets and business of another) upon the unsecured liabilities of the original corporation, see notes to Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Johnson, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1119; Luedicke v. Des Moines Cabinet Co. 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 616; and Jennings, N. & Co. v. Crystal Ice Co. 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1058. L.R.A.1916D.

tion that the city council, in passing the ordinance, attempted to divest the gas company of any of its property, or deny the right to inspect, or relieve it of liability for negligent handling of, the same, is unwarranted.

For other cases, see Gas, IV. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Gas — leakage — injury — liability.

2. The company owns the service pipe from its main pipe to the meter through which it is measured and delivered to the consumer, and is responsible for its capacity to retain the gas conveyed through it; and the consumer is responsible for the condition of the pipes which supply the house, from the meter; and, when both service and supply, or house, pipes are allowed to deteriorate, and the gas, leaking from them, ignites and explodes, inflicting injury upon a passer-by in the street, the company is liable, in solido with the consumer, in damages.

For other cases, see Gas, IV. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Corporation — transfer to new one — liability.

3. Where a gas, electric light, and power company, after an explosion inflicting injuries for which it is liable in damages, makes a conveyance, omnium bonorum, to a new corporation, under circumstances which warrant the conclusion that the new company is merely a continuation or reorganization of the old company, the person injured may recover against either corporation, or both.

For other cases, see Corporations, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — burden of showing character of transfer of corporate property.

4. Where one corporation conveys all of its property, corporeal and incorporeal, including its business, to another, under circumstances which disclose the earmarks of a transaction between persons dealing with themselves, and the two corporations are sued, in tort, upon a claim which arose prior to such conveyance, the burden is thrown upon them (since they possess the information and the plaintiff can only obtain it from them) of showing that the conveyance was bona fide, for an adequate consideration, and not, in effect, a mere reorganization or merger of the old company into the new; and particularly is that true where the old corporation is created under the laws of this state, and the new, under the laws of another state.

For other cases, see Evidence, II. c, 7, in Dig. 1-62 N. S.

(January 10, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Judicial District Court for the Parish of Caddo in plaintiff's favor, in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant Shreveport company. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Alexander & Wilkinson, E. W. Browne, and P. N. Browne, for appellants:

A claim for damages is not a "debt" in the proper sense of the term.

Thayer v. Southwick, 8 Gray, 229; Crouch v. Gridley, 6 Hill, 250; Edmond v. Bullard, 16 Hun, 65; Day v. Bennett, 18 N. J. L. 287; Holcomb v. Winchester, 52 Conn. 447, 52 Am. Rep. 609; Finlay v. Bryson, 84 Mo. 664; Sunday Mirror Co. v. Galvin, 55 Mo. App. 412; El Paso Nat. Bank v. Fuchs, 89 Tex. 197, 34 S. W. 206; Fox v. Hills, 1 Conn. 294; Hill v. Bowman, 35 Mich. 191; Zimmer v. Schleehauf, 115 Mass. 52; Parker v. Savage, 6 Lea, 406; Doolittle v. Marsh, 11 Neb. 243, 9 N. W. 54; Cable v. McCune, 26 Mo. 371, 72 Am. Dec. 214; Cable v. Gaty, 34 Mo. 573, 86 Am. Dec. 126; Manion v. Ohio Valley R. Co. 99 Ky. 504, 36 S. W. 530; Bolden v. Jensen, 69 Fed. 745; Leathers v. Janney, 41 La. Ann. 1120, 6 L.R.A. 661, 6 So. 884; Rownd v. Davidson, 113 La. 1050, 37 So. 965; Goothye v. Delatour, 111 La. 766, 35 So. 896.

A corporation purchasing the assets of another corporation is not liable for the torts of the latter committed before the sale.

Edgar Lumber Co. v. Cornie Stave Co. 95 Ark. 449, 130 S. W. 452; Abilene Cotton Oil Co. v. Anderson, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 342, 91 S. W. 607; Castle v. Aerogen Coal Co. 145 Ky. 591, 140 S. W. 1034; Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. v. Griest, 85 Ky. 619, 4 L.R.A.1916D.

S. W. 323; White v. Atlanta, B. & A. R. Co. 5 Ga. App. 308, 63 S. E. 234; Chase v. Michigan Teleph. Co. 121 Mich. 631, 80 N. W. 717; Ewing v. Composite Brake Shoe Co. 169 Mass. 72, 47 N. E. 241; Port Gibson v. Moore, 13 Smedes & M. 157; Shaw v. Norfolk County R. Co. 16 Gray, 407; Smith v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 18 Wis. 17; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Shirley, 54 Tex. 125; Menasha v. Milwaukee & N. R. Co. 52 Wis. 414, 9 N. W. 396; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Griffin, 92 Ind. 487; Sappington v. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. 37 Ark. 23; Cook v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 43 Mich. 349, 5 N. W. 390; Hageman v. Southern Electric R. Co. 202 Mo. 249, 100 S. W. 1081; Colorado Springs Rapid Transit R. Co. v. Albrecht, 22 Colo. App. 201, 123 Pac. 957.

Messrs. Blanchard & Smith and Lyle Saxon, for appellee:

Where the negligence of two persons or corporations concurs to produce an injury, both may be liable in solido.

Standard Chemical Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 130 La. 155, 57 So. 782; Cunningham v. Penn Bridge Co. 131 La. 196, 59 So. 119; Bigelow v. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. 225 U. S. 111, 56 L. ed. 1009, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 641, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 875; 38 Cyc. 488-490; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hilligoss, 171 Ind. 417, 131 Am. St. Rep. 258, 86 N. E. 485; Day v. Louisville Coal & Coke Co. 60 W. Va. 27, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 167, 53 S. E. 776; Elkhart Paper Co. v. Fulkerson, 36 Ind. App. 219, 75 N. E. 283; South Bend Mfg. Co. v. Liphart, 12 Ind. App. 185, 39 N. E. 908; Pine Bluff Water & Light Co. v. McCain, 62 Ark. 118, 34 S. W. 549; City Electric Street R. Co. v. Conery, 61 Ark. 381, 31 L.R.A. 570, 54 Am. St. Rep. 262, 33 S. W. 426; Atkinson v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 60 Wis. 141, 50 Am. Rep. 352, 18 N. W. 764; Huntington Light & Fuel Co. v. Beaver, 37 Ind. App. 4, 73 N. E. 1002.

The pretended sale of all of the assets of the Shreveport company to the Southwestern company, for a nominal consideration, and without the assumption by the latter of any of the liabilities of the "old company," was in its legal effect a mere continuation of the "old company," or selling corporation, subjecting the "new company" or "buying company" to all of the liabilities of the "old company."

Charity Hospital v. New Orleans Gaslight Co. 40 La. Ann. 388, 4 So. 433; Hancock v. Holbrook, 40 La. Ann. 61, 3 So. 351; Hibernia Ins. Co. v. St. Louis & N. O. Transp. Co. 4 McCrary, 432, 13 Fed. 516; W. F. Taylor Co. v. Gulf Land & Lumber Co. 119 La. 434, 44 So. 187; Luedecke v. Des Moines Cabinet Co. 140 Iowa, 223, 32

L.R.A.(N.S.) 617, 118 N. W. 456; 7 R. C. L. § 157, p. 184; Cook, Corp. § 673, and note; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Third Nat. Bank, 134 U. S. 276, 33 L. ed. 900, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 784, p. 754; Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Johnson, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1127, note; Thompson v. Abbott, 61 Mo. 176; Couse v. Columbia Powder Mfg. Co. — N. J. Eq. —, 33 Atl. 297; McWilliams v. New York, 134 Fed. 1015; Slattery v. St. Louis & N. O. Transp. Co. 91 Mo. 217, 60 Am. Rep. 245, 4 S. W. 79; McIver v. Young Hardware Co. 144 N. C. 478, 119 Am. St. Rep. 970, 57 S. E. 169; Schaake v. Eagle Automatic Can Co. 135 Cal. 472, 63 Pac. 1025; Swing v. American Glucose Co. 123 Ill. App. 156; Vicksburg & Y. City Teleph. Co. v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. 79 Miss. 341, 89 Am. St. Rep. 656, 30 So. 725; Camden Interstate R. Co. v. Lea, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 75, 84 S. W. 332; Austin v. Tecumseh Nat. Bank, 59 Am. St. Rep. 549, note; Morrison v. American Snuff Co. 89 Am. St. Rep. 638, note; Note to Tanner v. Lindell R. Co. 103 Am. St. Rep. 558; People v. Bullard, 134 N. Y. 269, 17 L.R.A. 737, 32 N. E. 54.

The following is the diagram referred to in the opinion:

L.R.A.1916D.

Monroe, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Shreveport Gas, Electric Light. & Power Company, a corporation established under the laws of this state (hereafter designated as "Shreveport company"), and the Southwestern Gas & Electric Company, a corporation established under the laws of the state of Delaware (hereafter designated as "Southwestern company"), are appellants from a verdict and judgment condemning them, in solido, to pay to plaintiff the sum of $2,427 as damages resulting from personal injuries sustained by him in consequence of an explosion of gas, attributed to the negligence of the company first above named.

Plaintiff's original petition contains the following, among other, allegations, to wit:

"That the explosion was directly caused by an accumulation of natural gas that had leaked from the gas company's main pipe, . . . in Texas street, or from the said company's supply pipe that conveys the gas from the main pipe, to the meters in the Chamberlain Café, . . . and that said gas accumulated under the floor of said building and had become ignited. . . . That the said leakage . . . and explosion . . . were due to the fault . . . of the Shreveport . . . company, in this, to wit:

"That the said company had not made any inspection of its main pipe, nor its supply pipes that connect the buildings on Texas street, since the same had been laid, which was about 1875. That the said company has not made any provisions by which it might make a test or inspection of the said main pipe or supply pipes, without tearing up the street; i. e., that it had no appurtenances, such as shut-off valves, shut-off cocks, or other similar conveniences, by which it could get at said pipes in order to inspect them or to detect the leaks in them. That said company had no regular or efficient system of inspection of its main and appurtenant pipes by which it could ascertain and detect the rust, decay, and breaks in said iron pipes. . . . That said company should have installed heavier and stronger pipes at the time that it contracted to convey natural gas. . . . That the pipes then in use were corroded and leaky. That the said pipes were intended to convey manufactured gas, and not natural gas, and therefore the joints were not threaded and fitted, as they should have been to hold natural gas. That the main pipe in Texas street and the supply lead to the Chamberlain Café had been in the earth since about the year 1875, and the same were rusty, decayed, and leaky, and the said pipes did break and leak and are the direct and proximate cause of the gas accumulation under Chamberlain's Café, and that such gas . . . was the proximate cause of the explosion. That said company failed to install shut-off cocks at that establishment, as required by law. . . . That, since the explosion, . . . other explosions, at other establishments in the same vicinity, have occurred, . . . and that said explosions were also due to the leaks in the main and supply pipes of said company. . . . Petitioner shows that on October 28, 1912, the Shreveport . . . company purported to sell all of its assets, of every nature, to the Southwestern . . . company, incorporated under the laws of the state of Delaware, for . . . $1,000. . . . That the said Southwestern . . . Company is composed of practically the same parties who owned and composed the Shreveport . . . company, and that, in reality, the alleged sale was a mere consolidation or reorganization, or . . . the Southwestern . . . company is merely the reincarnation of the Shreveport . . . company; or, in the event it should be held that the said Southwestern . . . company was not a consolidation or reorganization of the old company, along with others, then, and in that event, petitioner alleges that the Shreveport . . . company is in fact merged into the Southwestern . . . company, and that said company has acquired all of the old company's assets and business, and has left the Shreveport . . . company merely a corporate shell, and that the said Southwestern . . . company did not assume any liabilities of the Shreveport . . . company, but bought subject to the mortgage or bonded indebtedness against the Shreveport . . . company. That the alleged sale or transaction was without any real consideration, and was a mere division (diversion) of the corporate property of the Shreveport . . . company to the said Southwestern . . . company. That the said Southwestern . . . company, having taken over all the assets of the Shreveport . . . company, without any consideration or any transaction in which any real consideration was paid, is liable for all debts and liabilities of the Shreveport . . . company."

He prays for judgment against the two companies, in solido, or, in the alternative, should the court hold that the said "Southwestern . . . company is not indebted in solido with the Shreveport . . . company, then, and in that event, for a judgment against said Southwestern . . . L.R.A.1916D.

company . . . and for all further and necessary orders and for general relief."

By supplemental petition plaintiff further prayed for citation of, and judgment (in solido with the other defendants) against, the owners, and J. W. Chamberlain, lessee of the Chamberlain Café property, alleging: "That the said owners had the said building piped and fitted for the use of gas, and that the said J. W. Chamberlain also equipped the said place of business with gas fixtures, pipes, etc., necessary for cooking and heating in said building. . . . That the said pipes and fixtures were not properly installed, . . . and that they were permitted to deteriorate and become defective, in that natural gas was permitted to escape, and that the said natural gas, . . . added to that escaping from the pipes of the Shreveport . . . company, caused an explosion on January 2d, that demolished the building, . . . injuring your petitioner, as fully set forth in his original petition. . . . That proper inspection of the said gas pipes and fixtures would have disclosed the defects . . . of the same, whereby natural gas was permitted to escape. . . . That the said owners . . . and the said Chamberlain were . . . each and every one of them guilty of negligence in permitting natural gas to escape . . . and in failing to have the said pipes and fixtures inspected."

The owners and lessee filed pleas of misjoinder and estoppel (based upon the allegations of the original petition), which pleas were sustained, and, as no appeal was taken from that judgment, those parties are eliminated from the case.

The Southwestern Company filed an exception of no cause of action, which was overruled, after which the two companies joined in a general denial, followed by the allegations that the pipes of the Shreveport company were suitable for the conveyance of gas, were in good condition at the time of the accident, and were properly inspected; that the company had no control of, or responsibility for, the pipes leading into the building in question; and that, if any gas leaked into the basement of said building, it must have come from pipes belonging to, and controlled by, other persons.

We find the following facts established by the testimony, to wit:

Plaintiff was walking on the south side of Texas street, at about 9:30 o'clock on the morning of January 2, 1912, when, suddenly in front of "Chamberlain's Café, he became unconscious, and, shortly afterwards, found himself, lying, bleeding profusely about the head, upon a bolt of cloth, in a near-by store, whence he was removed to a sanitarium, where his wounds, which had been inflicted by flying glass, were cleansed, sewed, where sewing was required, and dressed, after which he was taken home, where he was confined to his bed, or apartment, for about three weeks, and then, though able to go out, continued, for three weeks more, to have his wounds dressed and bandaged every few days, and, for another six weeks, was hardly in a condition properly to attend to his business." He appears, however, to have sustained no permanent injury or disfigurement. Chamberlain's Café was situated in a much frequented locality, and in a building which had a frontage of 20 feet on Texas street, by a depth not shown. The front, and main, room, in which the patrons were served, appears to have been about 40 feet deep by the width of the building. It had a show window in the eastern side of the front, a counter, set out some 3 or 4 feet from the wall and extending nearly the depth of the room, on the same side, and a door in the front in the western side. The floor was elevated from 18 inches to 2 feet above the ground, and the ground underneath was, and had always been, in bad condition, by reason of water and sewerage which stands there. In the sidewalk, immediately in front of the show window, there was an excavation, say 20x14 inches and 12 inches deep, with a grating over it, which was intended to afford ventilation under the floor. Gas was introduced into the establishment from a cast-iron main pipe laid in the street, through a wrought-iron service pipe which passed underneath the ventilator and the window, and, after entering the premises, was supplied with a "Y" or "T" joint and thus extended in two directions; the one, to a meter which stood behind the counter at a distance, as we take it, of 6 or 7 feet from the front; and the other, to a meter which stood in the back room (or kitchen, as we shall call it), near the western wall. Our understanding of the situation is expressed by the subjoined diagram, which is made, in part, from a similar diagram, filed in evidence on behalf of plaintiff, and, in part from what we conceive to be the preponderance of the evidence and the surrounding conditions. The diagram which we have prepared differs from that filed by plaintiff in the one particular (save as to minor matters), that it shows but one service pipe entering the premises from the main pipe, whereas the other shows two such pipes. We have made this difference because Chamberlain, who had occupied the premises for years and had had some of the pipes installed, testified positively that there was but one service pipe entering from the main, and we are satisfied that he was in a better position to know than either Gill or Wessell; the first named of whom appears to have visited the premises on the day after the explosion, when all the pipes had been removed, and is not shown to have been there before; and the last named of whom visited the premises some three weeks, or a month, later, and had not been there previously, since an occasion, about eighteen months before the explosion, when, he says, that, though not employed by Chamberlain to fix gas pipes, or for any other purposes, as we understand him, he nevertheless went under the floor to mend a sewer, the ground being covered with water and sewage, being only 18 inches or 2 feet below the floor, lighted only by the ventilator in front, and the place being altogether the most terrible that he was ever in, and there made the observations from which he testified. If, however, there were two pipes, that circumstance would militate to the advantage of plaintiff as increasing the probability that the escaping gas came from a pipe installed by the company, and not by the owner or tenant. We may add, in this connection, that, in preparing the diagram hereto attached, we have given the defendants the benefit of the showing of the other, to the effect that the service pipe extending to the meter in the kitchen was brought through the floor at the point "A," though we can see no reason why it should not have continued under the floor until it reached the meter. Mr. Seip, a witness called by defendants, testified that he examined the pipe leading from the meter, in front, along the east wall, a few minutes after the explosion; that it was upon, and not under, the floor; that it was very thin and covered with rust, which, by the jarring of the floor, might have been shaken off, leaving pits or holes through which the gas could escape. He did not testify that he saw any such pits or holes. He also testified that he saw other pipes, which had been under the floor (the floor at that time having been blown to pieces), and that they, like the pipe that he examined, were in bad condition. He further testified that the explosion was, apparently, "from the front, back, about half way the building;" that the floor was about 18 inches above the ground; that the ground was covered with water; that the condition was favorable to the deterioration of the pipes; and that the presence of sewerage was likely to hasten such deterioration.

L.R.A.1916D.

It is beyond question that the explosion occurred beneath the floor, and we find no reason to believe that the pipe which Mr. Seip examined, whatever may have been its condition, contributed thereto, since the tendency of gas, escaping from it, would have been upwards, and not downwards through a plank floor.

Mr. Seip, in giving his opinion of the pipes, other than the one examined by him, makes no discrimination in favor of the service pipes; and, as they were subjected to the same deteriorating influences as the house pipes, it is to be presumed that their condition was no better. Moreover, there was a circumstance which creates an unfavorable presumption against the defendants on that point, to wit, while the fire was in progress, the gas company, having no other means of stopping the escape and burning of the gas than to dig down to the pipe beneath the sidewalk, assigned a gang of men to that job under George Moore as foreman, and they not only removed the pipe from under the sidewalk but from the entire premises. After the institution of this suit, Moore was examined, out of court, by consent, as a witness for the defense; but defendants' counsel did not offer the testimony so taken, on the trial, and, when it was offered by counsel for plaintiff, they objected on the ground that the witness had not been sworn, and the objection was sustained. Plaintiff's counsel then proposed that the testimony be again taken, by consent or by order of the court, at the residence of the witness, who was ill; but defendants' counsel declined to give their consent, and the proposition could not be sustained. Defendants' counsel did not offer any of the removed pipe in evidence, on the trial, nor do they appear to have tendered it to plaintiff; but it is shown that counsel whom Chamberlain had employed to bring a suit in his behalf, and who recovered $3,500 paid by way of compromise, had made a demand for it, and that certain pipe had been returned, concerning which, Chamberlain testified, in effect, that he did not know whether it was the same that had been taken away; that the part which was returned, as service pipe, was rusty and had holes in it which may have been made in digging it up, that it was about 4 feet long, and that he threw it away. We conclude, taking the evidence and presumptions together, that the holes were caused by rust, that the service pipes had deteriorated, and were in a leaky condition, and, as plaintiff alleges in his supplemental petition that the house pipes leaked, it follows that the escape of the gas which caused the explosion must be attributed to the bad condition of both service and house pipes.

Upon the question of the ownership of, and responsibility for, the service pipes, and the gas contained in them, some testimony offered by plaintiff was admitted, and some excluded (as we think, improperly).

W. E. Hamilton testified that he and others bought the "Old Shreveport Gas Company," and, after liquidating it, sold the property to the Shreveport company (present defendant), of which he was practically manager, from the beginning, and later, president, and, further, as follows:

Q. Mr. Hamilton, in selling your stock to the present company—you sold your stock to the present company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe that the Daweses controlled that company and bought you out?

A. Rufus Dawes bought, individually; then, of course, he and his associates acquired the property.

Q. Mr. Hamilton, who owned the service pipe, in your time; that is, the pipe from the main to the meter?

A. The company owned the pipe from the main to the meter.

Joshua Gill, at one time manager (under Hamilton) of the Shreveport company, and afterwards plumbing inspector and gas inspector of the city of Shreveport, and practical plumber, gave the following, with other testimony:

Q. When is the consumer charged with gas?

A. As measured by the meter.

Q. So, after it passes the meter, it is owned by whom? (Objection that the question, who pays for gas and who owns it, is a matter of personal contract, and that the witness was not a party to such contract, he was incompetent to testify on the subject; which objection was sustained.)

Q. Mr. Gill, if gas escapes from a service pipe, that is, from the main to the meter, whose loss is that? (Objected to as irrelevant, and objection sustained.)

Q. I will ask you whose duty it was to inspect the service pipe?

A. The gas company's.

In the act of conveyance from the Shreveport company to the Southwestern company, "service pipes" are especially mentioned as among the things conveyed.

Mr. Curtis, manager of the Shreveport division of the Southwestern company, was called (as for cross-examination) by plaintiff, and testified at some length. He did not undertake to repudiate the title to the service pipes thus vested in his company.

In the answer filed by the two defendant companies, it is alleged:

"That the mains and pipes of the Shreveport . . . company, used to convey natural gas, were suitable and proper for that purpose; that said pipes and mains were in good condition at the time of the alleged accident; that a proper inspection of such pipes and mains was maintained by said company; that said company had no control over, or responsibility for, pipes leading into the building No. 313 Texas street, further than the sidewalk."

The defense thus set up may be otherwise stated as follows: That the Shreveport company has no control over, or responsibility for, pipes which it had bought and paid for, which constituted an essential part of its plant which it used for the conveyance and delivery of the gas sold by it; of which it alleges that they were suitable and proper for the conveyance of gas; that "a proper inspection was maintained by said company" (meaning itself), and that they were in good condition at the time of the accident. And, as thus stated, the defense is unintelligible, since the law vests in the owner the control of that which belongs to him, and holds him responsible for the manner of its use, and the allegation "that a proper inspection of said pipes and mains was maintained by said company" (said company being the owner of "said pipes and mains") is a recognition of "said company's" control of the pipes and mains, at least for the purposes of inspection, and of its obligation and responsibility with respect to such inspection.

The answer, itself, contains no other interpretation of the excerpt above given than that which its language imports; but we find in the record an objection interposed by defendants' counsel to certain testimony offered on behalf of plaintiff, which seems to throw some light upon the subject, reading as follows:

"Objected to by counsel for defendants, for the reason that it is not shown that the company has anything to do with the service line inside of the curb of this building.

"Objected to on the further ground that, . . . when they installed natural gas in the city, the city council passed an ordinance, . . . dated October 20, 1908, entitled 'An Ordinance Governing Installation, Extension, and Repair or Alteration, of Gas Piping in Buildings,' etc. This ordinance distinctly makes the dividing line of responsibility and control between the gas company and the consumer at the curb, or 1 foot inside of the curb. The duty to inspect and look after the piping, inside of the dividing line, or 1 foot inside of the curb, is fixed upon the consumer; and the ordinance requires that the consumer, on its passage, must, before the piping is installed, and also as to existing piping, make application to the plumbing inspector and have him inspect the pipes, from the curb L.R.A.1916D.

in, and must pay him for the inspection. The ordinance provides that the gas company is authorized (does not say required) . . . to prevent their own loss, by leaking gas, . . . to put in stop cocks. This ordinance takes the control, from the curb line in, out of the gas company, and places it in the consumer, and makes it the duty of the plumbing inspector to make the inspections, and we have no control over them, and cannot be held responsible for any leakage that occurs between the curb and the building, and therefore any evidence, as to previous explosions which were caused by leakings inside of the line, . . . is irrelevant. . . ."

From our reading of the ordinance in question (which is in evidence), we understand its purposes to be to protect the public from the dangers resulting from the use of gas, by imposing certain obligations upon those who deal in, provide means for the distribution of, or use, that dangerous commodity, and, at the same time, to afford the consumer some means of protection against inefficient service and overcharges by the purveyor. The assumption by defendants that, in passing the ordinance, the city council has attempted to divest the gas company of its property in the manner set forth in the above objection, to deny it even the right of inspection, and to relieve it of all liability for its negligent handling, is unfounded; and, if such an attempt had been made, it could, by no possibility, be sustained. The ordinance reads, in part:

"Be it ordained . . . that all inspection and testing of gas meters, gas piping, and installation of all kinds of gas apparatus, shall be under the supervision of the plumbing inspector or his deputy, and that the following rules and regulations shall govern the same, the violation of which rules and regulations shall be unlawful:

"Section 1. Before any work of any kind which is governed by these regulations is commenced, a permit shall be applied for by the person having the work done, and an inspection fee of 50 cents shall be paid by the person to whom the permit is issued, which fee of 50 cents shall cover the cost of all inspection of the work for which the permit is issued, unless hereafter otherwise provided.

"Section 2. A shut-off cock, of the same size as service pipe from curb to house, shall be placed not more than 1 foot inside of the curb line, provided with the most approved box to insure immediate control of supply of gas by the fire department, in case of fire, and such box shall have on its cover the word 'gas.'

"Section 3. Within twelve months from the passage of this ordinance, all existing service pipes, not having shut-off cocks and boxes, shall be so equipped. Except that, where located on paved streets or alleys, a shut-off cock may be placed at the most convenient place on the premises."

There are many other provisions, intended to carry into effect the main purposes of the ordinance, and, to that end, to impose certain obligations upon all persons undertaking to install gas or deal with its distribution, and, on the other hand, to confer certain rights upon the consumer; but there are none which deny to the purveyor the right to control the delivery of its gas to the purchaser, subject to the rules thus provided in the interest of the public and of the public safety. When the gas company undertakes to install a service pipe, it is required to obtain a permit, "to have the work done under the supervision of the plumbing inspector or his deputy," and to place a shut-off cock "not more than 1 foot inside of the curb line, . . . in order to insure the immediate control of supply of gas by the fire department;" but that provision does not deprive it of its control of the service pipe, between the curb and the meter, any more than between the curb and the main. If it did, and could legally be done, the consumer would be at liberty to take the gas from the pipe before it is measured and delivered to him, through the meter, which we know the gas company, and perhaps the law, would regard as in the nature of a theft.

According to the testimony of Mr. Gill, who, as plumbing inspector, drew up the original ordinance, the proviso, beginning with the word "except," in § 3, was inserted, over his protest, at the instance of the gas company; and when Mr. Curtis, the manager of the company, was asked, when on the stand, whether the company had placed a shut-off cock in the pipe in front of Chamberlain's, his reply was: "No, sir; that was in before the passage of the ordinance"—meaning, as we assume, that the street, being paved, was within the exception, and that the shut-off cock at the meter met the requirements of the exception. But he admitted that the company puts in the shut-off cocks, and we have no hesitation in finding that the obligation to put them in, whether at the curb or the meter, rested upon the company, both as a duty and as a matter of interest, and that it had full control of the service pipes, and of the gas conveyed by them, not only for that purpose, but for all the purposes of this case, and is responsible for its negligent exercise of that control, by reason of which the pipes were allowed to become leaky and the gas to escape. We find in L.R.A.1916D.

the record the following, which concerns the relations between the defendant companies and the liability of the Southwestern company for the claim here sued on, to wit:

Mr. Hamilton testified that, when he sold the Shreveport company, "Rufus Dawes bought individually; then, of course, he and his associates acquired the property." The act of conveyance whereby the Shreveport company sold to the Southwestern company reads, in part:

"This indenture . . . entered into this 28th day of October, 1912, by and between the Shreveport Gas, Electric, Light, & Power Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Louisiana (hereinafter, for convenience, termed the 'old company') and the Southwestern Gas & Electric Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Delaware (hereinafter, for convenience, termed the 'new company'), witnesseth:

"That, for and in consideration of the sum of $1,000 and other good and valuable consideration, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the old company has granted, bargained, sold . . . and set over . . . unto the new company . . . all of the following described real, personal, and mixed property, rights, privileges, and franchises; to wit,"

And then follows an exhaustive enumeration of property, rights, privileges, concessions, etc., and a general clause, reading:

"Each, all, and every of the old company's assets, rights, privileges, franchises, and things of value, of any and every kind, name and nature, real, personal, and mixed, legal and equitable, tangible and intangible, corporeal and incorporeal, wheresoever situated and in whatsoever form, together with all of the good will acquired by the old company in the conduct of its business, it being the intention hereof that the old company shall transfer to the new company each and every species and item of property, rights, franchises, privilege, or thing of value belonging to the old company, and that the new company shall take over and acquire the entire property and business of the old company as a going concern."

The instrument was acknowledged on behalf of the Shreveport company before a notary public of Cook county, Illinois, by Rufus C. Dawes, as president, and H. B. Hurd, as assistant secretary, and, in addition to those above quoted, contains a recital to the effect that the property "is conveyed subject to the lien of three mortgages," the dates of which are given but the amounts of which are not given.

Mr. Curtis testifies that he was the manager of the "old company" and has continued as manager of the Shreveport division of the new company;" that practically no changes have been made in the office force; that Henry M. Dawes, a brother of Rufus C. Dawes, is president of the Southwestern, or new, company; that he believes that the Dawes family are largely interested in the Southwestern company, and knows that they are largely identified with the "old company," at Texarkana, which has passed to the Southwestern company; that they occupy positions with the Southwestern company, but he does not know whether they are in control of it; that "we do not have the stock books here."

It has been said that transactions whereby the interests of two or more corporations become identified are susceptible of arrangement into four general groups, and that "the first of such groups comprehends consolidations proper, where all the constituent companies cease to exist, and a new one comes into being; the second, cases of merger proper, in which one of the corporate parties ceases to exist, while the other continues. The third group comprehends cases where a new corporation is, either in law or in point of fact, the reincarnation of an old one. To the fourth group belong those transactions whereby a corporation, although continuing to exist de jure, is in fact merged in another which, by acquiring its assets and business, has left of the other only its corporate shell." Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Johnson, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1119, note.

According to the consensus of judicial opinion in this country, a newly organized corporation is liable for the debts of an old one, to the business and property of which it has succeeded, where it is shown that the succession was the result of a transaction entered into in fraud of the creditors of the old corporation, or that the circumstances attending the creation of the new, and its succession to the business and property of the old, were of such a character as to warrant the finding that the new is merely a continuation of the old corporation. The courts are also agreed that there can be no consolidation of corporations, and no merger of one into another, and particularly of a domestic into a foreign corporation, without legislative authority, general or specific, and the consent of all of the shareholders; that the properties of a corporation constitute a trust fund for the payment of its debts, and that, where there has been a misappropriation of such funds, or (according to the better opinion, as we think) the corporation has been divested thereof by consolidation, merger, reorganization, or "reincarnation," not only may the fund be followed, by the aid of equity, for the benefit of the creditor, but he may recover, in an action at law, against the corporation which has taken over such fund, with the business of his debtor.

There is not the same concurrence of opinion upon the question whether, or under what circumstance, the mere absorption by one corporation of the property and business of another operates as a merger of such other corporation, or subjects the property so absorbed to the claims of its creditors, or the absorbing corporation to liability for such claims. In the case of a sale, in good faith, of the property and business of a strictly private corporation, duly authorized by its shareholders, to a third person, for an adequate consideration, the property would no doubt pass free of encumbrance, and the creditors would be relegated to the proceeds in the hands of the debtor corporation; but, where the purchaser is a new corporation, composed of the same shareholders as the old, the transaction in no manner affects the rights of the creditors of the old corporation, who may proceed for the recovery of the amounts due them against either corporation, or both; and that, whether the claims be founded in contract or tort, since the real debtor, though represented by two corporations instead of one, remains the same, in contemplation of law. 10 Cyc. 286, 287, 288, 302, 303, 314; Stockton v. Central R. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 17 L.R.A. 97, 24 Atl. 964; People v. Ballard, 134 N. Y. 269, 17 L.R.A. 737, 32 N. E. 54; Sharples Co. v. Harding Creamery Co. 78 Neb. 795, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 863, 111 N. W. 783; Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Johnson, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1119, and note, 127 Ga. 392, 56 S. E. 482; Luedicke v. Des Moines Cabinet Co. 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 616, and note (140 Iowa, 223, 118 N. W. 456); Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Third Nat. Bank, 134 U. S. 276, 33 L. ed. 900, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550; Hancock v. Holbrook, 40 La. Ann. 61, 3 So. 351; W. F. Taylor Co. v. Gulf Land & Lumber Co. 119 La. 434, 44 So. 187; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Biddell, 112 Ky. 494, 66 S. W. 34.

The evidence to which we have referred, in the foregoing statement of the case, discloses the earmarks of a transaction between persons dealing with themselves, and threw upon them the burden of proving that it was, in fact, a sale, for adequate consideration, between different persons, and not merely part of an arrangement whereby the same persons, owning the stock of several corporations, created under the laws of as many states, have established another corporation, under the laws of still another state, in order to take over and concentrate the control of the entire property. No doubt, the burden usually rests upon the plaintiff to make out his case; but, where a court is called upon to investigate a transaction which is out of the usual course of business, which, upon its face, operates to the prejudice of the creditors of the parties thereto, and all the information concerning which is in the possession of such parties, who are beyond the jurisdiction of the court, a somewhat different rule is applied. And the case here presented is of that character. A corporation created under, and governed by, the laws of Louisiana, and charged with a duty to the public, acquires, in virtue of that status, many rights and privileges and much property, and incurs many obligations, and it suddenly, by an instrument executed in Illinois, makes a conveyance, omnium bonorum (including not only all of its rights, privileges, and property, but its going business), to a Delaware corporation, which assumes none of its obligations, not even the obligation to continue the business and discharge the duty which it owes to the public; and the recited consideration for the conveyance is "$1,000 and other good and valuable consideration in hand paid." The $1,000 is insufficient to satisfy the judgment in this case, and, if actually paid, amounts to no consideration, and the words, "other good and valuable consideration," while no doubt satisfactory, as between the parties to the instrument, require explanation in order to give them value to the creditors, to whom they represent all that is left of property, corporeal and incorporeal, which constituted a "trust fund" a "common pledge," for the payment of their claims; and that explanation should have been given, we think, by the defendants, who alone possess the necessary information; and, as they have failed to give it, they have no reason to complain that we adopt the explanation suggested by the allegations of plaintiff's petition and by such facts as have been disclosed by the evidence.

"Where an act of sale is attacked by a creditor of the vendor, as simulated, on the ground that no price was paid" (this court has held), "proof of payment of the price is on the party interested to maintain the sale. The creditor cannot be required to prove a negative." Fisher v. Moore, 12 Rob. (La.) 95; King v. Atkins, 33 La. Ann. 1057; State v. Jahraus, 117 La. 286, 118 Am. St. Rep. 208, 41 So. 575; Hollins v. New Orleans & N. W. R. Co. 119 La. 418, 44 So. 159.

"If the corporation receiving the transfer" (says a writer on corporation law) "was controlled by the same persons as the company executing it, or if the real parties in interest were substantially the same, the burden of showing that the transfer was made in good faith, for value, would fall upon those asserting its validity against unpaid creditors." Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. p. 761.

It is evident that where the question at issue is whether the corporation executing, and the corporation receiving, the transfer, are controlled by the same persons, the same reasons exist for putting the burden of proof on them, as against an unpaid creditor, as where, the identity of the control being admitted, the question is as to the verity and good faith of the transfer.

Plaintiff claimed $2,000 for loss of business, $2,500 for suffering, $118 for expenses, and $59 in reimbursement of an amount paid by way of damages which he was obliged to pay. The amount for which he obtained judgment was, as we have stated, $2,427. We do not find it excessive, nor are we persuaded that it should be increased. The verdict and judgment appealed from are therefore affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied February 7, 1916.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

GULF REFINING COMPANY OF LOUISIANA, Appt.,
v.

W. P. HAYNE et al.

(138 La. 555, 70 So. 509.)

Oil and gas lease — character.

1. Gas and oil leases and contracts are apart by themselves. They partake of the Headnotes by SOMMERVILLE, J.

Note. — For right to partition mineral oil or gas lands, see annotation following this case, post, 1154.
L.R.A.1916D.

nature of both "sale" and "lease," and they have features which may not be applied to either. The law referring to sales and leases, found in the Code, cannot be unreservedly applied to them.

For other cases, see Mines, II. b, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — statute — effect.

2. But the law in the Code will be applied to them by the courts in cases wherein it can be applied.

For other cases, see Mines, II. b, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Landlord and tenant — contesting title.

3. A lessee under a mineral contract may not contest the title of his lessor as an owner in indivision with others, and compel him and his co-owners to make a judicial partition in kind of the property leased.

For other cases, see Estoppel, III. 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Partition — oil land.

4. Known oil lands, like mines, cannot be judicially partitioned in kind, at the suit of one of the co-owners, or by a creditor of a co-owner.

For other cases, see Partition, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Provosty and O'Niell, JJ., dissent.)

(November 29, 1915.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Judicial District Court for the Parish of Red River, dismissing a suit for the partition of certain real estate. Affirmed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. D. Edward Greer, Thomas W. Nettles, Thigpen & Herold, and F. C. Proctor, for appellant:

All actions of a debtor, except those strictly personal in their nature, may be exercised by his creditor.

Belcher v. Johnson, 114 La. 643, 38 So. 481; New Orleans v. Gaines (New Orleans v. Christmas) 131 U. S. 191, 33 L. ed. 99, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 745; Klotz v. Macready, 44 La. App. 169, 10 So. 706; Jack v. Harrison, 34 La. Ann. 740; Forstall v. Consolidated Asso. 34 La. Ann. 775; Spencer v. Goodman, 33 La. Ann. 906; New Orleans v. Gaines (New Orleans v. Whitney) 138 U. S. 595, 34 L. ed. 1102, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428.

While joint owners, or those holding under them, are entitled to possession of the property owned in indivision, yet the court cannot put such an owner, or his grantee, in the actual corporeal possession of such undivided property. All the court can do is to recognize the right, and let plaintiffs make it good by the remedies which the law places at their disposal.

Martel v. Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate, 114 La. 903, 38 So. 612.

Under our system of jurisprudence there can be no legal right without an adequate legal remedy. If there be no special provision therefor, the court will supply the remedy ex necessitate rei.

Citizens' Bank v. Marr, 111 La. 602, 35 So. 780; Morris v. Cain, 35 La. Ann. 760.

Under an oil and gas lease the lessee, or grantee, acquires a real right.

Rives v. Gulf Ref. Co. 133 La. 179, 62 So. 623.

Each co-owner of land has the right to occupy, use, and enjoy the common property without thereby incurring any obligation to his co-owners for the ordinary use thereof; provided he so occupies it as not to interfere with their use and enjoyment L.R.A.1916D.

of the same; each having the right to enjoy the same according to his proportionate interest.

Timberlake v. Sorrell, 125 La. 557, 51 So. 586; Toler v. Bunch, 34 La. Ann. 997; Becnal v. Becnal, 23 La. Ann. 150; Balfour v. Balfour, 33 La. Ann. 297.

But the co-owner or his lessee, in using the property by drilling for oil thereon, must account to his co-owners for their proportionate share of the net profits, assuming, however, all risks of loss.

Elder v. Ellerbe, 135 La. 990, 66 So. 337; Thornton, Oil & Gas, § 278.

Where the lessor or grantor of an oil and gas lease has utterly repudiated his contract, and actively prevented his lessee from taking possession of the property, it would be vain and useless to call upon him to maintain the action in partition, and therefore no demand is necessary.

Southern Sawmill Co. v. Ducote, 120 La. 1052, 46 So. 20; Johnson v. Levy, 122 La. 124, 47 So. 422, 16 Ann. Cas. 978; Beck v. Fleitas, 37 La. Ann. 495; Dwyer Bros. v. Tulane Educational Fund, 47 La. Ann. 1232, 17 So. 796; Abels v. Glover, 15 La. Ann. 247; Hivert v. Lacaze, 3 Rob. (La.) 357; New Orleans & N. R. Co. v. Ganahl, 18 La. 510.

Messrs. Alexander & Wilkinson, for appellees:

The lessee under a mineral lease on an undivided interest in certain real estate is not the owner of the oil or gas underground, but only of such part as he may find and extract therefrom, and owns nothing except the right to explore for the same under the terms of the contract.

Rives v. Gulf Ref. Co. 133 La. 178, 62 So. 623; Cooke v. Gulf Ref. Co. 135 La. 609, 65 So. 758.

The holder of such lease from one of the three co-owners of real estate has no right to institute an action of partition of the real estate in kind, in order to have set aside the undivided interest of his grantor.

Smith v. Cooley, 65 Cal. 46, 2 Pac. 880; Hall v. Vernon, 47 W. Va. 295, 49 L.R.A. 464, 81 Am. St. Rep. 791, 34 S. E. 764; Dangerfield v. Caldwell, 81 C. C. A. 400, 151 Fed. 554; Thornton, Oil & Gas, §§ 276, 277; Mootry v. Grayson, 44 O. C. A. 83, 104 Fed. 613; Brown v. Challis, 23 Colo. 145, 46 Pac. 679; Aspen Min. & Smelting Co. v. Rucker, 28 Fed. 220; Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405, 24 Am. Rep. 263, 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 67; Kemble v. Kemble, 44 N. J. Eq. 454, 11 Atl. 733; Watford Oil & Gas Co. v. Shipman, 233 Ill. 9, 122 Am. St. Rep. 144, 84 N. E. 53; J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Jeff Chaison Townsite Co. 48 Tex. Civ. App. 555, 107 S. W. 609.

There can be no partition in kind of mineral land, and such a partition, if ordered by the court, would be void.

Thornton, Oil & Gas, §§ 276, 277.

Sommerville, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff and defendant W. P. Hayne entered into a contract of lease, or mineral contract, the terms of which plaintiff alleges were not complied with by defendant. That defendant represented himself and his mother, Mrs. Aurora Hayne, to be the owners of the property leased, when, in fact he was the owner of only one third in division with the other persons here made codefendants, and Mrs. Hayne was not the owner of any portion of the property.

That a partition in kind of the property is necessary and is demanded of Hayne and his co-owners, so that the lease held by plaintiff may bear upon the one third of the land falling to the lot of W. P. Hayne; and a money judgment is asked for in the alternative against Hayne.

W. P. Hayne and Mrs. Aurora Hayne excepted to the jurisdiction of the court, alleging themselves to be residents of Rapides parish, and the exception was sustained in so far as the demand was for damages. Certain co-owners answered to the merits, while others filed an exception of no cause of action to the petition. The exception was sustained, and plaintiff has appealed.

The only question in the case is whether a tenant under an oil lease, or mineral contract, may sue his lessor and the co-owners with the lessor for a partition in kind of the oil land leased, and have the lease declared to cover the lot or portion of ground falling to the lessor.

Article 1310 of the Civil Code provides that a tenant cannot bring a partition suit. It says: "But the possession, necessary to support this action, must be in the names of the persons enjoying it, and for themselves; it cannot be instituted by those who possess in the name of another, as tenants and depositaries."

But plaintiff argues that it is not the tenant referred to in the article quoted. It claims that an oil lease, or mineral contract, is different from the ordinary lease, and that the court has so decided. It cites the cases of Cooke v. Gulf Ref. Co. 127 La. 592, 53 So. 874; Rives v. Gulf Ref. Co. 133 La. 178, 62 So. 623; Cooke v. Gulf Ref. Co. 135 La. 609, 65 So. 758; Natalie Oil Co. v. Louisiana R. & Nav. Co. 137 La. 706, 69 So. 146; Spence v. Lucas, — La. —, 70 So. 796 (not yet officially reported), in which the court has so held. It also refers to act 232 of 1910, p. 393, which provides that mining contracts may be mortgaged.

In the Rives Case, 133 La. 178, 62 So. L.R.A.1916D.

623, it is said: "In determining the scope and legal effect of an instrument giving rights and privileges to mine or take minerals, oil, or gas, it is immaterial by what name it is called, whether a lease, license, sale, contract, grant, deed of conveyance, a real right, an incorporeal hereditament, a chattel interest, a chattel real, a right in land, or other name; the court will look to the language used in the instrument, aside from these terms so used, and determine its legal effect."

In that case, the lease was termed a "real right," a right to part ownership in the oil and gas when it would have been taken from the ground, and confined in pipes and reservoirs.

Plaintiff is the holder of the ordinary gas lease; and it argues that, as the holder of a real right in and upon the undivided one third interest of W. P. Hayne in the oil land leased to it, it is a creditor of Hayne, and that it may exercise, in the place of Hayne, its debtor, the real right of partition against Hayne and his co-owners.

The right of plaintiff is clearly not that of owner, and only an owner can sue his co-owner for a partition. Plaintiff is the owner of the right to explore and extract oil from an undivided one third interest in the property, but it is not the owner of any portion of the landed estate.

In the decided cases just referred to by plaintiff, the court also said that it would apply the law on letting and hiring to oil leases, as it was set forth in the Code and statutes, where it was possible to apply it. And article 1310 says that partition suits may not be brought by tenants and depositaries.

Plaintiff is a tenant of Hayne under the oil lease executed by them, although by its terms he may have acquired greater rights than an ordinary tenant on a predial estate would have acquired. It has a particular estate in and to the oil and gas when these minerals will have come into its possession. It has the right to go upon the land and explore for oil and gas. Nevertheless, the contract is one of lease, or letting or hiring, in which Hayne is the lessor and plaintiff is the lessee or tenant. It is a valid, existing contract between them, under which both have rights. Plaintiff may have thought that it had leased the whole tract of land, when in truth the lease only extended to the undivided one-third interest in the land owned by Hayne, its lessor. It cannot be put into possession as lessee or tenant of the undivided one third interest owned by Hayne (Martel v. Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate, 114 La. 903, 38 So. 612); and, as tenant of Hayne, it cannot ask for a partition in kind of the property owned by Hayne and his co-owners so that its lease may cover the land falling to the lot of Hayne.

The court might recognize the rights of plaintiff under the lease, but it cannot put it in the actual corporeal possession of an undivided interest in the land leased. Such right is a mere abstract right; while, if plaintiff's lease bore upon specific property, it might be put into possession of it.

Again, a lessee in possession cannot contest or force a change in the ownership of his lessor of the thing leased. Civil Code, art. 3441; Hanson v. Allen, 37 La. Ann. 732. Plaintiff cannot contest in any manner the ownership of Hayne to an undivided interest in an oil field, and compel him to accept ownership of a defined area thereof which might not contain any oil whatever. Nor can it or Mr. Hayne compel the co-owners of Hayne to accept such an unequal division. Partition implies equality; and, where equality cannot be had by a partition in kind, the partition must be by licitation.

Many courts have held that mines could not be partitioned in kind.

Thornton, on Oil & Gas, says in § 276: "In a case of an attempted partition of a mine, Justice Brewer used the following language: 'The mere fact of joint ownership in a mine does not give an equitable right to a partition. Seldom can a division of a mine be made. Generally partition must result in a sale. To such property there is an unknown value; and a chancellor may well require full information as to all the relations of the parties to the property before decreeing any partition which will practically result in dispossessing one of the parties entirely.' And in a dictum in an Illinois case it was said: 'The mines, when opened, in their nature were indivisible. Neither partition could be made at law, nor dower assigned by metes and bounds.'"

In § 277, after discussing the question of the right to partition of supposable oil or gas land, Mr. Thornton further says: "But after gas or oil has been discovered on the land, an entirely different question is presented. If the entire tract has been developed, and the wells are so distributed, and their production is well known so that their respective values can be determined, then a division might possibly be decreed; but it would be almost impossible to find an instance of this kind. And then, too, other powerful wells, in spite of the supposition that the land had been fully developed, might be sunk upon one part of the divided tract, and all attempts to find other productive wells on the other tract might be failures. In such an event the L.R.A.1916D.

partition proceedings would result in an unequal division in value,—a thing studiously avoided in partition proceedings. . . . Especially can there be no partition of the right to take oil or gas from beneath a tract of land, the surface being owned by a third person; and an attempt of the court to make partition of such a right is void."

In line with Mr. Thornton the law is thus stated in 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1161: "A partition of oil and gas owned by co-owners separate from the surface cannot be decreed except by sale and division of the proceeds. A judicial partition thereof by assignment of the oil and gas under sections of the surface is void."

In the case of Hall v. Vernon, 47 W. Va. 295, 49 L.R.A. 464, 81 Am. St. Rep. 791, 34 S. E. 764, the court holds: "Partition of oil and gas owned by co-owners separate from the surface cannot be decreed, except by sale and division of the proceeds. A judicial partition thereof by assignment of the oil and gas under sections of the surface is void."

In the case of Dangerfield v. Caldwell, 81 C. C. A. 400, 151 Fed. 554, the circuit court of appeals says in the syllabus: "A tract of land known to have oil or gas or both under its surface is not property susceptible of partition in kind."

There are other decisions to the same effect. And the law set forth in the Civil Code is the same. Article 1303 is as follows: "There can be no partition, when the use of the thing held in common is indispensable to the coheirs, to enable them to enjoy, or to derive an advantage from the portion of the effects of the succession falling to them, such as an entry which serves as a passage to several houses, or a way common to several estates, and other things of the same kind."

And articles 1336, 1339, and 1340, which follow, forbid the partition in kind of property where it cannot be conveniently made.

"Art. 1336. The judge who decides on a suit for a partition and on the mode of effecting it, has a right to regulate this mode as may appear to him most convenient and most advantageous for the general interest of the coheirs, in conformity, nevertheless, with the following provisions."

"Art. 1339. When the property is indivisible by its nature, or when it cannot be conveniently divided, the judge shall order, at the instance of any one of the heirs, on proof of either of these facts, that it be sold at public auction, after the time of notice and advertisements prescribed by law, and in the manner hereinafter prescribed.

"Art. 1340. It is said that a thing cannot be conveniently divided, when a diminution of its value, or loss or inconvenience of one of the owners, would be the consequence of dividing it."

It might be a most serious loss to one or more of the co-owners to divide a piece of oil land into three parts, and award one part to each owner. A lot without oil under the surface, falling to one co-owner, would work incalculable damage to him to whom it was awarded, due entirely to the consequence of dividing the land. The courts cannot compel such a division or partition.

In case of known oil land or a mine, the suit must be for a partition by licitation.

The law of France is similar to our law. It says in the Napoleon Code:

"Art. 827. If the immovables cannot be commodiously divided, a sale by auction must be proceeded in before the court. Nevertheless the parties, if all of age, may consent that the auction should be made before a notary, on the choice of whom they can agree."

"Art. 832. In the formation and arrangements of the lots, parties must avoid as much as possible disjoining estates and dividing works; and it is expedient, if it can be, to dispose in each lot the same quantity of movables and immovables, of rights or credits of the same nature and value."

"Art. 1686. If one thing common to several persons cannot be commodiously divided and without loss; or if in a partition made with mutual consent of common property, there be found some goods which none of the coparceners can or will take. The sale thereof is made by auction, and the price thereof is distributed between the joint proprietors."

But plaintiff does not seek a partition by licitation. Under such sale his lease would not follow the land, or the proceeds of the sale thereof. Civil Code, art. 1338; Spence v. Lucas, — La. —, 70 So. 796 (not yet officially reported). It asks for a judicial partition in kind.

The petition does not disclose a cause of action.

Judgment affirmed.

Provosty, J.:

Holds that a lessee out of possession may, in the exercise of the right of his lessor, maintain a suit for the partition in kind of the thing leased, and that so long as minerals have not actually been discovered under the soil, or the probability of their presence in one part of the property, and not in another, has not become so great as to afford a basis for judicial action, the property is divisible in kind.
L.R.A.1916D.

O'Neill, J., dissenting:

This is not a suit for a division or partition of a mine or of an oil or gas well, nor for a division or partition of the right to take oil or gas from beneath the surface of the land. It is an ordinary suit for a partition or division of a tract of land on which no oil, gas, or other mineral has ever been discovered, nor mining operations or explorations ever made, as far as the record discloses. Therefore the doctrine quoted from Mr. Thornton's work on Oil and Gas, and from other authorities, has no application whatever, viz., that a mine is not susceptible of division in kind; that, after gas or oil has been discovered on a tract of land, it is not probable that the wells would be so equally distributed and their production be so nearly equal that a fair division in kind might be made; that the right to extract oil or gas from the land cannot be divided in kind; and that a tract of land known to have oil or gas under its surface is not susceptible of partition in kind.

The plaintiff has alleged that the land of which he desires a partition can be divided in kind without diminution of its value. If the land is not susceptible of division in kind, because it is supposed to have oil or gas beneath its surface, or for any other reason, that is a matter of defense on the merits of the case. On this appeal from the judgment dismissing the suit on an exception of no cause or right of action, we must assume that the allegations of the petition are true.

The plaintiff's grantor, W. P. Hayne, could have maintained this action of partition under the allegations of the plaintiff's petition. The right of an owner of an undivided interest in real estate to maintain an action of partition against the co-owners is absolute. Rev. Civ. Code 1289. The other co-owners cannot be injured by, and have not a substantial interest in complaining of, the suit being brought by W. P. Hayne's grantee, instead of by him; and he did not file an exception of no cause or right of action.

As a general rule, a creditor or obligee may maintain any action of which his creditor or obligor has a right, except those which are purely personal to the creditor or obligor. See Spencer v. Goodman, 33 La. Ann. 906; Forstall v. Consolidated Asso. 34 La. Ann. 773; Jack v. Harrison, 34 La. Ann. 736; Klotz v. Macready, 44 La. Ann. 169, 10 So. 706; Belcher v. Johnson, 114 La. 643, 38 So. 481; New Orleans v. Gaines (New Orleans v. Christmas) 131 U. S. 191, 33 L. ed. 99, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 745; and New Orleans v. Gaines (New Orleans v. Whitney) 138 U. S. 595, 34 L. ed. 1102, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428. The right of an owner of an undivided interest in a tract of land to sue the co-owners for a partition is not more personal to him than was any one of the rights of action which the creditors were permitted to maintain in the decisions cited above. In one of them, New Orleans v. Gaines (New Orleans v. Christmas) 131 U. S. 191, 33 L. ed. 99, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 745, it was said: "The right thus claimed for the creditor (the word 'creditor' being used in its large sense, as in the civil law) may very properly be pursued in a suit in equity, since it could not be pursued in an action at law in the courts of the United States, and all existing rights in any state of the Union ought to be suable in some form in those courts."

The word "creditor" was used in its broad sense of obligor, in the foregoing opinion, as defined in the Civil Code, art. 3556, §§ 20 and 21.

The obligation of W. P. Hayne to put his grantee, the plaintiff, into possession of whatever share of the property the grantor owned is expressed in art. 1903 of the Civil Code, viz.: "The obligation of contracts extends not only to what is expressly stipulated, but also to everything that, by law, equity or custom, is considered as incidental to the particular contract, or necessary to carry it into effect."

By the express terms of the grant to the plaintiff, he was given the exclusive right to drill into this land for oil and gas, and all other rights that might be reasonably necessary to carry on the mining operations. Possession of the land, or of the share belonging to the grantor, was indeed necessary for the grantee to drill for oil or gas and to carry out the mining operations. The grantor, W. P. Hayne, knew, or is presumed to have known, that he could not deliver possession of his share in the land to his grantee if the co-owners of the land objected, except by a partition of the land. In the case of Martel v. Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate, decided more than ten years ago, reported in 114 La. 903, 38 So. 612, it was said that a judgment recognizing a joint owner's undivided interest in a tract of land could not be enforced by a writ of possession, and that all the court could do was to recognize the right of the plaintiff as a co-proprietor, and let him make it good by the remedies which the law gave him. The remedies thus referred to were to provoke a partition, and be put into possession of a proportionate share of the land, if it could be divided in kind without loss to its owners, or the proportionate share of the proceeds of a partition sale, if it could not be divided in kind without loss to its owners. Hence the right to provoke a partition of this land was one L.R.A.1916D.

of the incidents of the grant made by W. P. Hayne to the plaintiff. Rev. Civ. Code 1903. Even if this grant be regarded as an ordinary contract of lease, in the precise language of our Civil Code (art. 2692), "the lessor is bound from the very nature of the contract, and without any clause to that effect, to deliver the thing leased to the lessee."

I concur, however, in the view expressed in the recent case of Rives v. Gulf Ref. Co. 133 La. 178, 62 So. 623, that there is scarcely any comparison between a mineral lease and the ordinary lease of a house or farm. I also concur in the opinion there expressed, that the framers of our Civil Code had no thought of mineral leases, granting the right to drill for and extract oil or gas or other minerals from the leased premises, when these compilers of the Code adopted the articles referring to the ordinary lease of a house or farm. The rule of interpretation of an oil and gas lease was expressed, at page 182 of the opinion referred to, thus: "In determining the scope and legal effect of an instrument giving rights and privileges to mine or take minerals, oil or gas, it is immaterial by what name it is called; whether a lease, license, sale, contract, grant, deed of conveyance, a real right, an incorporeal hereditament, a chattel interest, a chattel real, a right in land, or other name; the court will look to the language used in the instrument, aside from these terms so used, and determine its legal effect."

In the decision last quoted, it was said, quoting Heller v. Dailey, 28 Ind. App. 555, 63 N. E. 490, that a mineral lease, like the one before us, is to be regarded not as a grant of the land nor as a lease, properly so called, but as a grant of a right in the nature of an incorporeal hereditament, and that is the common-law definition of what is called a real right in our Civil Code. Attention was called, in the case last cited, to the fact that our Civil Code does not expressly define nor refer to a mineral lease. This was repeated in Cooke v. Gulf Ref. Co. 135 La. 609, 65 So. 758, where it said that the legislature also had been silent on the subject of mineral rights and contracts. And, in the case of the Natalie Oil Co. v. Louisiana R. & Nav. Co. 137 La. 706, 69 So. 146, it was said that our Code of Practice was also framed and adopted at a time when there was no thought that oil existed under our soil, and that the laws were not framed to meet such conditions. In the session of 1910, however, the legislature adopted act No. 232, authorizing the owner of an oil or gas lease or other mineral lease to mortgage such real right, because, as said in the preamble of the statute, such mineral leases had become so numerous in this state that the mining industry ought to be encouraged and promoted by facilitating the securing of the capital required.

The principles underlying the provisions in our Civil Code on the real right called servitudes are, in my opinion, applicable to such a mineral lease as we have now to deal with, which is in the nature of a servitude. It is not a real or predial servitude, imposed upon one estate for the benefit of another, but is like a personal servitude in favor of the grantee (Rev. Civ. Code, art. 646), in the nature of a usufruct, which is defined as the right to enjoy the property of another and draw therefrom the profit, utility, and advantages thereof (Rev. Civ. Code, art. 533), which right may be conferred in a divided or limited portion (Rev. Civ. Code, art. 539), and may be limited as to the time of its beginning and end (Rev. Civ. Code, art. 608). It is, of course, not a perfect usufruct, because it confers upon the grantee "the right of accession," which the grantor had, to "construct below the soil all manner of works, digging as deep as he deems convenient, and draw from them all the benefits which may accrue." Rev. Civ. Code, art. 505. In other words, the grant confers upon the grantee the mineral rights which the law does not, itself, confer upon an ordinary usufructuary. Rev. Civ. Code, art. 553.

There is no reason why the principles of the following articles of the Civil Code should not be applied to the case before us, viz.:

"Article 739. The coproprietor who has consented to the establishment of a servitude on property held in common, cannot prevent the exercise of the servitude by objecting that the consent of his coproprietor has not been given.

"If he becomes the owner of the whole estate, he is bound to permit the exercise of the servitude to which he has before consented."

"Article 740. If the coproprietor has established the servitude for his part of the estate only, the consent of the other owners is not necessary, but the exercise of the servitude must be suspended, until his part be ascertained by a partition. In this case, he to whom the servitude has been granted, may compel the coproprietor from whom he received it, to sue for a partition, or may sue for it himself."

There was no express provision in the French Code, that he to whom a servitude was granted on an undivided interest in a tract of land could sue for a partition so that the servitude might be exercised on the part allotted to the grantor, or on the whole property, if the grantor of the servitude acquired the whole estate at the partition sale, as provided in articles 739 and 740 of our Code. The jurisprudence of France, however, recognizes this right of the grantee of a servitude from the owner of an undivided interest in a tract of land to sue for a partition of the land, under the general provision of article 1166 of the Code Napoleon, giving a creditor or obligee all of the rights of action possessed by his debtor or obligor, except strictly personal rights. See Carpentier & Du Saint, vol. 34, vo. "Servitude," No. 766.

Article 1309 of our Civil Code expressly provides that it is not indispensable to be an owner in common of the land itself to be entitled to an action of partition; that a coproprietor of a real right, and especially of a usufruct, may maintain an action of partition; and a usufruct is a servitude on land in favor of a person. Rev. Civ. Code, art. 646.

There are several reasons why article 1310 of the Civil Code, denying one who possesses as a tenant the right of action for a partition, has no application to this case. In the first place, an ordinary tenant or lessee in possession has no reason to institute an action of partition. In the second place, it is settled by the decisions of this court, cited above, that the words "tenant," meaning an ordinary lessee of a house or farm, as used in the Code, has no reference to a grantee under a so-called mineral lease. In the French text of article 1233 of the Civil Code of 1825, the English text of which is reproduced verbatim as article 1310 in the Revision of 1870, the French word translated as "tenant" is "fermier," indicating that it referred to a tenant under a predial lease, or lease of a farm. And, for the precise meaning of the words which were translated from the French into our present Code, as was said in the cases of Breedlove v. Turner, 9 Mart. (La.) 353, and Lafourche v. Terrebonne, 34 La. Ann. 1230, reference should be had to the French text. But beyond these reasons, if the ordinary tenant in possession were not expressly denied the right of action for a partition, he would have no right to institute it or any other real action. Code of Practice, arts. 26, 28, 29, 43, 48. The right of the grantee under such a mineral lease as we have before us, on the contrary, is a real right, jus in re, as is settled by the decisions quoted above. And our Code of Practice, in articles 5, 6, and 7, provides that a real action, such as a petitory or possessory action, may be maintained not only by the owner of an estate, but by anyone "who has a right upon or growing out of it." It cannot be doubted that a grantee in pos-sion of a tract of land under a mineral lease could maintain a possessory action, or that such grantee out of possession could maintain a petitory action.
 73

Article 1310 of the Civil Code does not, nor does any other article, expressly deny a lessee out of possession the right of action for a partition, as the obligee or creditor of the coproprietor, if such action be necessary for the exercise of his right of possession of the share in the property belonging to his landlord. Article 1310 merely provides that the action of partition shall not be brought by a tenant in possession; and the reason is that such action on his part would be an unnecessary interference with the title of his landlord. To apply this article of the Code to a grantee of a real right, out of possession, compels not only the overlooking of all reason for the law, but also the inversion of its very terms.

It is not and cannot be disputed that the plaintiff has a real right in this land. Hence he must have a remedy, though it be not expressly provided in our Code of Practice or Civil Code. Fortier v. Slidell, 7 Rob. (La.) 398; Morris v. Cain, 35 La. Ann. 759; and Citizens' Bank v. Marr, 111 La. 602, 35 So. 780. And, in the absence of any express law, either granting or denying a remedy, where there is a legal right, we are bound to proceed and decide according to equity, by applying natural law and reason. Rev. Civ. Code, art. 21.

The plaintiff does not allege that he made a formal demand upon his grantor to file the partition suit before filing it himself. It was not necessary to allege a formal putting in default, in view of the allegation that the grantor actively violated his obligation to deliver possession, by repudiating the contract and forcibly preventing the plaintiff from taking possession. See New Orleans & N. R. Co. v. Ganah, 18 La. 510; Hivert v. Lacaze, 3 Rob. (La.) 357; Abels v. Glover, 15 La. Ann. 247; Beck v. Fleitas, 37 La. Ann. 492; Dwyer Bros. v. Tulane Educational Fund, 47 La. Ann. 1232, 17 So. 796; Southern Sawmill Co. v. Ducote, 120 La. 1052, 46 So. 20; and Johnson v. Levy, 122 La. 118, 16 Ann. Cas. 978, 47 So. 422.

Being of the opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to the remedy invoked, and that his petition discloses a cause of action, I respectfully dissent from the opinion and decree to the contrary, rendered in this case.

Petition for rehearing denied January 10, 1916.

Annotation—Right to partition mineral or oil or gas lands.

For other notes concerning the question of partition, generally, see "Partition," Index to L.R.A. Notes, p. 1060.

Partition is accomplished either by the act of the parties, as where the cotenants in person or by their agents agree upon the property to be awarded to each, or select persons to make partition for them, or by the courts, on their interposition being sought by one or more of the cotenants. 30 Cyc. 153.

Partition by the act of the parties.

The right of partition by the act of the parties, of mining property held in common, like the right of alienation, is an incident of that kind of ownership, and is limited only by such restraints as the law has thrown around it in regard to personal capacity and mode of conveyance. Byers v. Byers (1898) 183 Pa. 509, 39 L.R.A. 537, 63 Am. St. Rep. 765, 38 Atl. 1027; Robbins v. Penn Gas Coal Co. (1903) 28 Pa. Co. Ct. 49. The statute of frauds does not apply to executed partitions between tenants in common, and as such divisions rest solely on the agreements and intentions of the owners, there is no room for distinctions in regard to the methods of partition, L.R.A.1910D.

whether by vertical or horizontal lines. Thus, in Byers v. Byers (Pa.) supra, the court said: "There is no difference in the right nor in any other respect except in facility of proof of the intent, inasmuch as the ordinary mode is by vertical lines; and therefore such partition is more readily presumed, and acts done in pursuance of it on the surface are more easily shown. Horizontal divisions of land, as such, are comparatively rare, but they are well established, and may be made in the same way, and subject to the same rules, as any other mode, if the parties so agree."

Partition by act of the parties may be had by parol or by deed, either of the entire tract of mining property or of a parcel thereof. Robbins v. Penn Gas Coal Co. (Pa.) supra. The cotenants may mutually agree to make partition of a part only of their land, retaining the rest in common; or they may except out of the partition mines, ore banks, or plaster beds in the lands, and agree to hold them in common. (Pa.) Ibid. And see Davell v. Roper (1854) 24 L. J. Ch. N. S. 779, 3 Eq. Rep. 1004, 3 Drew. 294, 3 Week. Rep. 467, 10 Mor. Min. Rep. 406;

Coleman v. Coleman (1852) 19 Pa. 100, 57 Am. Dec. 641, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 183.

A parol partition of land may be limited to the surface, and does not, as matter of law, extend to coal in the ground, if the intent was to retain this in common. Byers v. Byers (Pa.) supra. The parties may make partition of all their land, or of any part of it, and in any manner they choose to agree upon. (Pa.) Ibid.

So, it is within the power of tenants in common to make a partial partition of their common holdings by conveying to one of their number all their undivided interest except that in a stratum of coal, as to which the common tenancy is continued. Robbins v. Penn Gas Coal Co. (Pa.) supra. And subsequently such cotenants may have compulsory partition of the coal stratum so reserved. (Pa.) Ibid.

But the presumption from the fact of the partition of the surface of land by parol is that it includes the coal beneath as well as the surface; and one who denies it has the burden of proof. Byers v. Byers (Pa.) supra.

A parol partition of a mining claim, followed by actual exclusive possession of the parts assigned, acquiesced in by the parties in accordance with the terms of the partition, is valid. 420 Min. Co. v. Bullion Min. Co. (1876) 3 Sawy. 634, Fed. Cas. No. 4,989; Kinney v. Consolidated Virginia Min. Co. (1877) 4 Sawy. 382, Fed. Cas. No. 7,827. And upon such a partition the parties cease to be tenants in common. 420 Min. Co. v. Bullion Min. Co. (Fed.) supra. But a naked parol agreement to make partition of such property, it seems, would be inoperative (Fed.) Ibid. Kinney v. Consolidated Virginia Min. Co. (Fed.) supra.

Where, prior to the location of a quartz mining claim, the several persons occupying the surface agreed that one should locate for all, and that, after the issue of the patent, conveyances should be made, vesting in each full title to the surface occupied by him, but the conveyances were never in fact made, the agreement and continued occupation after the patent issued did not constitute an oral partition, but merely created an equitable right to hold the locator as trustee. Mullins v. Butte Hardware Co. (1901) 25 Mont. 525, 87 Am. St. Rep. 430, 65 Pac. 1004.

The purchaser of an undivided half interest in a lot containing minerals is not charged with constructive notice of an oral partition of the lot by her vendor and his cotenant by the fact the latter has, for years, paid taxes on a particular half of the lot. Hurley v. O'Neill (1902) 26 Mont. 269, 67 Pac. 626. Neither is she charged with actual notice of such partition by the fact that, after taking her deed, she paid taxes on the part which her vendor had occupied, and, when forbidden by the cotenant to sweep her dirt onto the part occupied by him, said that his deed was not fixed right, and that she could do what she felt like until there was a division. Under such circumstances the burden of proving actual notice of such partition rests upon the party alleging such notice. (Mont.) Ibid. And see Mullins v. Butte Hardware Co. (Mont.) supra.

A conveyance by a parcener who has made a verbal partition of the land, and is in the exclusive possession of part thereof, conveying a portion of the oil and gas therein, and describing the land wherein the oil and gas so conveyed is, as land "owned and controlled" by him, and also in a general, indefinite, and incomplete manner as bounded by adjacent land of other persons, passes title to the oil and gas in that portion assigned to him by the verbal partition. Stevenson v. Yoho (1907) 63 W. Va. 144, 59 S. E. 954.

Partition by judicial proceedings—generally.

The general rule is that all property capable of being held in cotenancy is subject to partition by judicial proceedings; and if there is a cotenancy in mineral land, the presumption should be that the law has provided a means for its severance. Robbins v. Penn Gas Coal Co. (Pa.) supra.

Partition by such proceedings may generally be accomplished in one of two ways: (1) by a division in kind, by metes and bounds, or (2) by a sale of the property and a division of the proceeds. Sale is only a method of partition when division in kind cannot be had. Preston v. White (1905) 57 W. Va. 284, 50 S. E. 236.

Personalty connected with mining claims is the subject of partition in an action to partition such claims, only in so far as it constitutes a part of the realty. Manley v. Boone (1908) 87 C. C. A. 197, 159 Fed. 633, reversing (1905) 2 Alaska, 552.

In Christy's Appeal (1885) 110 Pa. 538, 5 Atl. 205, it was decided that the orphans' court, by an inquest of partition, had no power to order a separate appraisement of coal beneath the surface and the surface.

In Paul v. Cragnas (1900) 25 Nev.

293, 47 L.R.A. 540, 59 Pac. 857, 60 Pac. 983, it was decided that a person excluded by a cotenant from a mine in which he has an undivided interest can maintain an action for damages, and his remedy is not limited to an action for partition, or an accounting of rents and profits.

The participation of a lessee of oil land in the partition of the property, and his recognition of the several ownership of the parties of their respective tracts, changes the character of his holding from that of lessee from the joint owners of the whole tract to lessee from each owner of the respective tracts. J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Jeff Chaison Townsite Co. (1908) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 555, 107 S. W. 609.

A deed by a parcener, who has made a verbal partition of the land and is in the exclusive possession of part thereof, conveying a portion of the oil and gas therein, and describing the land wherein the oil and gas so conveyed is, as land "owned and controlled" by him, and also in a general indefinite and incomplete manner as bounded by adjacent land of other persons, passes title to the oil and gas in that portion assigned to him by the verbal partition. And in a suit by the grantee in such deed for a partition of the oil produced by a well located on a portion of the land other than that which was assigned to the grantor by the verbal partition, under a claim of title thereto by virtue of such deed, the grantor may, by reason of the implied warranty obtaining between coparceners, defend and resist the demand for partition of the oil from such well. Stevenson v. Yoho (1907) 63 W. Va. 144, 59 S. E. 954.

Division of land held in common by a decree in partition providing that the mineral rights in the whole of the land shall remain undivided is a reservation, not of an easement, but of the entire ownership of ore in place under the land divided. Barksdale v. Parker (1890) 87 Va. 141, 12 S. E. 344.

Compensation cannot be allowed in a suit to partition a mining claim for the cost of improvements on adjoining mining property, which incidentally enhance the value of the common property. Dall v. Confidence Silver Min. Co. (1868) 3 Nev. 531, 93 Am. Dec. 419, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 214.

In partition of coal between owners who do not own the surface, mining privileges pass as appurtenant or incident to the coal, without express words, and include the use of a pit mouth which is not within the lines of either purpart, but which is close to one of them, where it was the manifest intention to divide all the good, merchantable coal. Ran-kin's Appeal (1888) 1 Monaghan (Pa.) 308, 2 L.R.A. 429, 16 Atl. 82.

Pending a suit for the partition of mining property, the court has ample power, upon a proper showing, to appoint a receiver to protect the interests of all the parties. Ames v. Ames (1894) 148 Ill. 321, 36 N. E. 115; Heinze v. Butte & B. Consol. Min. Co. (1903) 61 C. C. A. 63, 126 Fed. 1. But the appointment of a receiver in a partition proceeding is not of frequent occurrence. And a decree appointing a receiver on the application of adult cotenants, and authorizing him to lease the property to the adults during the minority of infant cotenants, and to pay the adults for operating the mine and other business, including a store run in connection with the mine, all without the consent of the infants or their guardian, was held to be erroneous, as the appointment did not seem to have been made to preserve the property pending the litigation between the cotenants. Ames v. Ames (Ill.) supra.

And in Heinze v. Butte & B. Consol. Min. Co. (Fed.) supra, it was decided that the appellate court could not say, in view of the evidence, that the trial court exceeded or abused its discretion in extending its receivership for the interest of one of the owners of mining property to the entire property, or in directing the receiver to operate the mines.

And a court of equity which has assumed jurisdiction to partition land, the substantial value of which is in unopened coal, has power, pending its partition, to preserve the property by enjoining one tenant in common, on complaint of his cotenant, from mining coal through an entry from an adjoining tract owned by the latter. Rainey v. H. C. Frick Coke Co. (1896) 73 Fed. 389.

A suit to partition a mining claim, the alleged common ownership of which is only sought to be defeated by alleging a forfeiture for the plaintiff's failure to contribute to the performance of assessment work, is properly triable in equity, under Code Civ. Proc. (Alaska) chap. 43, §§ 397, 398, 403, providing for the partition of lands; and for the court to dismiss the suit and remit the plaintiff to his action in ejectment is error. Forderer v. Schmidt (1906) 77 C. C. A. 36, 146 Fed. 480.

The right to have mining property partioned by judicial proceedings may be waived by agreement of the owners. Coleman v. Coleman (1852) 19 Pa. 100, 57 Am. Dec. 641, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 183; Robbins v. Penn Gas Coal Co. (1903) 28 Pa. Co. Ct. 49. And see Coleman v. Grubb (1854) 23 Pa. 393; Coleman v. Blewett (1862) 43 Pa. 176. So, an agreement to exempt certain ore banks or mine hills from a partition made by cotenants because the property could not be divided without injustice to some of the parties has been held valid, and sufficient to preclude a subsequent compulsory partition. Coleman v. Coleman (Pa.) supra.

But in Hausaler v. Missouri Iron Co. (1892) 110 Mo. 188, 16 L.R.A. 220, 33 Am. St. Rep. 431, 19 S. W. 75, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 458, it was held that a stipulation against the institution of partition proceedings, made by cotenants, who undertake to bind themselves, their heirs and assigns forever, not to institute such proceedings without the written consent of all the parties, is void as an unreasonable restraint upon the enjoyment and use of the property. Generally as to the validity of agreements against the right of partition, see note to the above case in 16 L.R.A. 220.

—in kind.

As a general rule, mining property, from its very nature, is not susceptible of a division by metes and bounds. The veins or bodies of ore are most frequently of uneven distribution, while the values are purely conjectural until proved by extended developments and careful tests, obtained only as the result of a vast expenditure of money and time; so that it is known in advance of bringing suit for partition that the only feasible relief that can be awarded is a decree for the sale of the property. Brown v. Challis (1896) 23 Colo. 145, 46 Pac. 679; Aspen Min. & Smelting Co. v. Rucker (1886) 28 Fed. 220; Ryan v. Egan (1903) 26 Utah, 241, 72 Pac. 933, and see cases cited, infra, "Partition by Sale."

There is dictum in Lenfers v. Henke (1874) 73 Ill. 405, 24 Am. Rep. 263, 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 67, to the effect that mines, when opened, in their very nature are indivisible, and that partition cannot be made at law by metes and bounds, but only by a sale and division of the proceeds. And see Wilson v. Bogle (1895) 95 Tenn. 290, 49 Am. St. Rep. 929, 32 S. W. 386, where the court, citing this case, commits itself to the proposition that a mine must necessarily be partitioned through the instrumentality of a sale.

But, whenever it is possible to readily divide the property without great prejudice to any of the owners, such a partition will be decreed (Royston v. Miller (1896) 76 Fed. 50, 18 Mor. Min. Rep. 418; Manley v. Boone (1907) 87 C. C. A. 197, 159 Fed. 633, reversing (1905) 2 Alaska, 552 on other grounds; Mitchell v. Cline (1890) 84 Cal. 409, 24 Pac. 164; Ryan v. Egan (1903) 26 Utah, 241, 72 Pac. 933) for, as between a sale and partition, the courts will favor the latter as not disturbing the existing form of the inheritance. Royston v. Miller (1896) 76 Fed. 50, 18 Mor. Min. Rep. 418.

And a chancellor may well require full information as to all the relations of the parties to the property before decreeing any partition which will practically result in dispossessing one of the parties entirely. Aspen Min. & Smelting Co. v. Rucker (Fed.) supra.

In Boone v. Manley (1905) 2 Alaska, 552, reversed on other grounds in (1908) 87 C. C. A. 197, 159 Fed. 633, where the placer mining claims, the pay streak of which ran through their center and was of approximately equal value through its whole length, were owned one fourth by the plaintiffs and three fourths by the defendants, and could not be sold except on partial payments and at a loss of three fourths their actual value, it was decided that partition by metes and bounds was more equitable than by a sale and division of the proceeds. The court said: "While our statute gives to the partition by shares the preference, yet a mining claim is a property whose value lies hidden beneath the ground to such an extent that generally it cannot be divided on the surface, but must be sold. But where its hidden wealth is explored and so ascertained as to be capable of location and fair partition by shares, the rule permits it to be done that way, and the statute requires it."

And in Manley v. Boone (1908) 87 C. C. A. 197, 159 Fed. 633, reversing (1905) 2 Alaska, 552, because, under the statute, the court could not itself make the division of the property between the parties, except in the indirect mode of confirming the report of the referees appointed for the purpose of carrying out the order of partition, the court said: "It is quite true that mining property, from its very nature, is not, as a rule, susceptible of division, and consequently that partition of such property must generally result in its sale. . . Still, not only may such property be divided among the owners in proportion to their respective interests, but, according to the terms of the statute under which the present proceedings were taken, must be so divided unless it be made to appear that a partition thereof cannot be made without great prejudice to the owners. That is a question of fact upon which the evidence in the present case is very conflicting, and we think no good reason appears why the conclusion of the trial court upon it should be disturbed."

In Ryan v. Egan (Utah) supra, it was decided that a mining claim containing no known veins or bodies of ore, and having no fixed or market value, the only thing giving it value being its locality and close proximity to other mines, was susceptible of partition by metes and bounds, there being no evidence to show that the ground within the boundaries of the claim was of unequal value, or that a partition by such method would result in great prejudice to any of the co-owners.

And in Heaton v. Dearden (1852) 16 Beav. (Eng.) 147, where one of two tenants in common of an estate agreed to demise the mines and minerals under his undivided moiety, it was decided that the lessee was entitled to a decree for specific performance, and for a partition of the estate to set out by metes and bounds what portion of the property was included in the demise, and in respect of which the plaintiff was entitled to work the minerals.

And see, infra, "Partition by Sale," for cases in which it was decided that partition in kind could not be made; and see also Maffet's Estate (1896) 8 Kulp (Pa.) 184.

A court of equity, in a proceeding for partition, may, with the consent of the parties, separate the ownership of the surface from the underlying mineral, giving the surface to one and the mineral to the other, with distinct titles in fee, in severalty. Brand v. Consolidated Coal Co. (1906) 219 Ill. 543, 76 N. E. 849; Ames v. Ames (1896) 160 Ill. 600, 43 N. E. 592.

And for the purpose of equalizing the shares of the parties in partition to whom the ownership of the surface and the underlying mineral are respectively and separately allotted, the court may order owelty to be paid. Ames v. Ames (Ill.) supra. And see Dall v. Confidence Silver Min. Co. (1868) 3 Nev. 531, 93 Am. Dec. 419, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 214.

In Wamsley v. Mill Creek Coal & Lumber Co. (1904) 56 W. Va. 296, 49 S. E. 141, it was decided that, in partitioning timber and coal lands, commissioners are not required to report the extent of coal deposits and the acreage, quantity, and quality of timber, considered by them in arriving at their conclusion as to the relative value of the several parcels and shares assigned by them to the parties entitled thereto. The court said: "We hardly see the object of reporting the value of the parcels or any of them, nor of the acreage of coal and timber. The commissioners go upon the land and view the same, taking into consideration everything whatever that may be known, that gives value to each and every part of it, whether of coal, minerals, timber, or the surface for agricultural purposes, and these various elements of value are taken into consideration by the commissioners in arriving at their conclusions, and they equalize the value of the shares of the various parties entitled thereto, by increasing the acreage of those shares which contain less of the elements of value, or decreasing the quantity, as the case may be. It is very evident from the report of the commissioners that they observed, or at least tried to observe, these principles in allotting to the appellants their shares, as they increased their acreage from 185 6/13 acres to 250 acres each, making an excess of 64 1/2 acres of the quantity they would be respectively entitled to, if each and every acre of the premises was of the same value."

— by sale.

To avoid the infliction of a great hardship upon any of the owners, it is generally provided by the laws of most states that the property may be sold in the entirety, and the proceeds of the sale distributed between the co-owners whenever a partition in kind will result in great prejudice to any of such owners. And in a suit for the partition of a mining claim, a sale of the property should never be decreed, except when a partition will result in great prejudice to the respective owners. Dall v. Confidence Silver Min. Co. (Nev.) supra; and in addition to the cases cited in this section, see cases cited supra, "Partition in kind." And before a court will be justified in ordering a sale, the party asking for it must show by a preponderance of evidence that a partition of the property in kind will result in great prejudice to one or more of the co-owners, as nothing will be presumed in favor of a sale. Ryan v. Egan (1903) 26 Utah, 241, 72 Pac. 933. The court, quoting from Lindley, Mines, § 792, said: "As an abstract proposition of law, a sale of a mine cannot be ordered in a partition suit, except in cases where partition would be manifestly injurious to the interests of the cotenants. Whether or not a partition can be made without great prejudice to the owners is a question of fact, the decision of which is not aided by judicial notice of any fact or circumstance not proved; and, where a sale is sought, the burden is upon the party urging it to show the facts upon which an order of sale may be made—the presumption being that an actual partition may be had." Mitchell v. Cline (1890) 84 Cal. 409, 24 Pac. 164, is to the same effect.

And if the evidence is substantially conflicting as to whether partition can be made without great prejudice to the owners, the decision of the lower court, ordering a partition, will be sustained on appeal. (Cal.) Ibid.

Partition by sale is a matter of absolute right when the conditions prescribed by the statute to authorize a sale are found to exist. Wilson v. Bogle (1895) 95 Tenn. 290, 49 Am. St. Rep. 929, 32 S. W. 386.

Where land is principally valuable for its minerals and timber, and the minerals and water are almost exclusively on one end of the tract, and the minerals are undetermined in extent and value, and no equitable or advantageous partition thereof can be made, it is manifestly to the advantage of all the parties that the same should be sold. (Tenn.) Ibid.

In Smith v. Frenche (1877) 28 N. J. Eq. 115, where there were indications of minerals in some parts of the property sought to be partitioned, the conclusion of the master as to the indivisibility of the property without great prejudice to the interests of the owners was sustained and a sale ordered.

And in Kemble v. Kemble (1888) 44 N. J. Eq. 454, 11 Atl. 733, a partition of lands containing mineral deposits, the location, extent, and value of which were uncertain, by allotting a portion of the property between the parties, and ordering a sale of the remainder, was refused because it could not be done without great prejudice to the owners.

In Ames v. Ames (1894) 148 Ill. 321, 36 N. E. 110, it was held that mining property consisting of mining lands and machinery for operating the mines, not being susceptible of division between the cotenants, part of whom were infants, without prejudice to the interests of the owners, should be ordered to be sold as an entirety.

Where several persons under several L.R.A.1916D.

leases of different parts of a colliery worked it in partnership, it was decided on a dissolution that one of the co-owners could not insist on a partition, although there were no debts, but that the whole must be sold. Wild v. Milne (1859) 26 Beav. (Eng.) 504, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 207.

In Brown v. Challis (1896) 23 Colo. 145, 46 Pac. 679, it is decided that the right of a tenant in common in a lode mining claim to a sale thereof under Mills's Anno. Stat. § 3346, when it could not be partitioned without great prejudice to the owners, was not extinguished by an amendatory act passed pending the partition proceedings.

In Sheffield Coal & I. Co. v. Alabama Fuel & I. Co. (1913) 185 Ala. 51, 64 So. 67, where only a portion of the land was underlaid with mineral, which rendered it more valuable than it would be for mere agricultural purposes, but the ore deposits were disclosed to be both rich and lean, so that there was a problematic factor in the natural uncertainty as to the quantity and quality of the ore as well as the difference in the probable cost of extracting the same from such rich or lean deposits, a finding that the land could not be partitioned in kind, and that a sale was necessary, was sustained.

In Barnes v. Brogglio (1911) 17 West. L. R. (Can.) 294, upon the application of the owners of the larger part of the undivided interests or shares in a number of mining claims, an order was made under the English partition act of 1868, for a sale of the claims under the direction of the court,—an equitable partition being deemed impossible. It was the right of the plaintiffs to insist upon the sale, the court said, notwithstanding the opposition of the defendant (the holder of the remaining shares, which were much less in amount), based upon the assertion that the possession of the claims by persons who might purchase them and be antagonistic to the defendant, as the independent owner of other property in the vicinity, would prejudice the defendant.

Where, in a suit to partition mining interests, none of the parties had any interest in the surface or soil of the property, but had only title to the coal, gases, salt waters, oil, and minerals of every description in, upon, and under the land, together with the necessary rights of way over and across the land for mining and transporting the coal, gases, etc., with the right to use such timber trees found on the land as might be necessary for mining purposes, it was held that the interests of the parties could not be partitioned in kind, but that such interests could only be partitioned by a sale thereof and a division of the proceeds among the parties entitled thereto. Robertson Consol. Land Co. v. Paull (1907) 63 W. Va. 249, 59 S. E. 1085, 15 Ann. Cas. 775.

In Rickards v. Rickards (1866) 36 L. J. Ch. N. S. (Eng.) 176, 16 L. T. N. S. 562, 15 Week. Rep. 380, the court ordered a sale of the entirety of an estate, a part of which was underlaid with coal and other minerals, because of the difficulty and disadvantage of a partition in kind, resulting from the fact that there were twelve cotenants, some of whom were infants, and that the testator from whom they took was only entitled to two thirds of the coal beds.

In Richardson v. Monson (1854) 23 Conn. 94, under a statute authorizing a court of equity to order a sale of any real estate, and of any rights existing in, or issuing out of, the same, held in joint tenancy, tenancy in common, or coparcenary, and to distribute the proceeds, whenever partition could not conveniently be made in any other way, it was decided that a court of equity on a bill for that purpose might order the sale of an ore bed, and a distribution of the proceeds thereof, among the tenants in common, owning the same, in conformity with such statute, the constitutionality of which the court sustained.

In Curtis v. Coleman (1875) 22 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 561, it was held that where one tenant in common files his bill against his cotenant, for a partition and an account of the profits of the estate in question, the plaintiff is entitled to such account where it is shown that the defendant has received a greater share from the estate than that to which he is entitled, by the sale of that which composes the property, whether it be turf, brick-clay, plaster, or other such material.

In Mootry v. Grayson (1900) 44 C. C. A. 83, 104 Fed. 613, it was sought to set aside the sale of mining property in a suit for partition because of the gross inadequacy of the price for which it was sold, together with circumstances attending the sale which rendered it inequitable for the court to allow the transaction to succeed; but it was decided that higher upset values previously placed upon the property by the court were insufficient to show that the price realized was so inadequate as to render the sale invalid, and subject to collateral impeachment for that reason, in the absence of other evidence showing fraud.

But in Conant v. Smith (1826) 1 Aik. (Vt.) 67, 15 Am. Dec. 669, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 199, the court refused to order either a partition or sale of land, valuable chiefly as an ore-bed, because of the inability to ascertain the value of the different parts, and because the parties could obtain a less hazardous and more adequate remedy in chancery, where the enjoyment of the property could be regulated between the owners by restricting them to the proportion of their respective interests by compelling accounts between them, and by appointing a common receiver for all parties.

Partition of oil and gas contained in land, the co-owners of which do not own the surface of the land, cannot be made by any assignment or allotment of sections of the land below the surface, but can be made only by sale and division of the proceeds. Hall v. Vernon (1899) 47 W. Va. 295, 49 L.R.A. 464, 81 Am. St. Rep. 791, 34 S. E. 764; Preston v. White (1905) 57 W. Va. 284, 50 S. E. 236. GULF REF. CO. v. HAYNE, ante, 1147, is to the same effect, and see Cecil v. Clark (1900) 47 W. Va. 402, 81 Am. St. Rep. 802, 35 S. E. 11.

And, as has been said, while it is undoubtedly true that a court of equity has the power to order the partition in kind of a tract of land known to have oil or gas, or both, under its surface, the question will always arise as to whether, in the interest of all of the parties, such partition can and ought to be made. Dangerfield v. Caldwell (1907) 81 C. C. A. 400, 151 Fed. 554, where the court said: "A division of the land in such fashion as to assign one of these wells to one interest and one to another interest has, as shown by the plot filed by the commissioners, the effect of so butchering the land of all practical purposes as to destroy greatly the value of the several parts for all purposes except the production of gas, and even for that, assuming that gas may be obtained anywhere on the tract, to burden the portion assigned to Rebecca C. Davis with the practical necessity of laying pipe lines over the other portions, and to burden the other portions with rights of way for that and other purposes. Again, it is shown that coal underlies at least a considerable portion of this land, and the division sought to be made unquestionably vastly reduces the value of the land for mining purposes."

In Spence v. Lucas (1916) — La. —, 70 So. 796, it was decided that an oil and gas lease of the whole property, made by a co-owner, duly registered, bears upon the property sold in the hands of a transferee, but that, in a judicial partition of the property by licitation, the lease ceases to exist as to the land, and it cannot be referred to the proceeds of the sale.

An owner of an undivided interest in minerals, gases, etc., underlying a certain tract of land, cannot, in an action against infants who own the remaining undivided interests in such minerals, gases, etc., as well as an undivided like interest in the fee, enforce a sale of all the minerals, gases, etc., on the ground of their indivisibility. Ball v. Clark (1912) 150 Ky. 383, 150 S. W. 359; Scott v. Pond Creek Coal Co. (1913) 152 Ky. 67, 153 S. W. 23.

Under the Nevada statute, providing that if one of the cotenants files an affidavit showing that the sale of an entire mining claim would be injurious to him, the court must divide the claim, as prescribed by the statute, a sworn answer setting up the same matter takes the place of such affidavit, and is sufficient. Dall v. Confidence Silver Min. Co. (1868) 3 Nev. 531, 93 Am. Dec. 419, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 214.

Estate or interest partible.

Mining claims have been recognized as legal estates of freehold, and are subject to partition. McConnell v. Pierce (1904) 210 Ill. 627, 71 N. E. 633; Ames v. Ames (1896) 160 Ill. 600, 43 N. E. 592; Hughes v. Devlin (1863) 23 Cal. 501, 12 Mor. Min. Rep. 241. And see Jones v. Wagner (1870) 66 Pa. 429, 5 Am. Rep. 385, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 690, where the right to partition is collaterally recognized.

Where mining claims upon public lands are claimed and possessed by several, as joint tenants, tenants in common, or as coparceners, or even as partners, such several interests or estates are in the nature of an estate of inheritance, and liable to be partitioned between the several claimants, the same as other real property. Hughes v. Devlin (1863) 23 Cal. 501, 12 Mor. Min. Rep. 241.

The mere fact that a mining claim is owned and worked by several persons as partners is no valid objection to a partition of the same between the owners, where the answer does not set up, and it is not shown, that a suit in equity is necessary to settle the accounts and adjust the business of the partnership. And in such case all the material allegations of the complaint for partition which are not denied by the answer are deemed admitted for the purposes of the trial. (Cal.) Ibid.

And under the statutes of Colorado, partition of a mining claim held by joint owners, under the possessory rights given by acts of Congress, may be had, notwithstanding the legal title has not yet passed from the general government. Aspen Min. & Smelting Co. v. Rucker (1886) 28 Fed. 220. The court said: "It is well to understand definitely what the title of these parties is. The averment of the bill is that they are owners, and in possession. The answer, admitting the ownership, simply pleads that the patent has not issued, and that the fee-simple title remains in the government. The import of these averments is that the equitable title is in the parties; the legal title in the government. The property is called a 'mining claim,' and it is alleged in the bill that it was discovered and located by certain parties in 1880, all of whose interests have become vested in the present litigants. The statutes of the United States provide that, upon performance of certain conditions, the discoverer of a mine becomes entitled to a patent. If all these conditions have been performed, the full equitable title is vested in the discoverer, and all that the government retains is the naked legal title, in trust for the equitable owner. If only partially performed, he has an absolute right of possession, and an inchoate title, which further performance will perfect and complete. Such a right, possessory in its nature, yet coupled, under existing laws, with further rights as to acquisition of title, is declared by the statutes, and the decisions of the supreme court of Colorado, to be a real-estate title. Such a property passes to the heir, is subject to seizure and sale as real estate, must be conveyed by deed, and is subject to partition. Gillett v. Gaffney (1877) 3 Colo. 351; Sears v. Taylor (1877) 4 Colo. 40, 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 318; Filmore v. Reithman (1881) 6 Colo. 124. See also McKeon v. Bisbee (1858) 9 Cal. 142, 70 Am. Dec. 642, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 309; Watts v. White (1859) 13 Cal. 324, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 11; Merritt v. Judd (1859) 14 Cal. 64, 6 Mor. Min. Rep. 62; Lowe v. Alexander (1860) 15 Cal. 302; Hughes v. Devlin (1863) 23 Cal. 502, 12 Mor. Min. Rep. 241; Spencer v. Winselman (1871) 42 Cal. 479, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 334; Dall v. Confidence Silver Min. Co. (1867) 3 Nev. 531, 93 Am. Dec. 419, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 214." Concerning Strettell v. Bal- lou (1881) 3 McCrary, 46, 9 Fed. 256, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 220, the court said: "In that case it appeared that the title to the property in controversy was in the United States, and that the parties had jointly a possessory claim or interest, with the right to take ore therefrom, but had no other title. It was held this court had no jurisdiction because the complainant had no title to the land. If this case established a rule of property, I should be reluctant to depart from it, even if I did not assent to its reasonings and conclusions. The maxim stare decisis would seem applicable. As, however, nothing was involved save a matter of practice and a question of forum, I do not consider myself concluded by it."

However, a bare "mining right," it has been held, is not an estate which can be the subject of an action for partition. Smith v. Cooley (1884) 65 Cal. 46, 2 Pac. 880.

Thus, a grant of an undivided interest in a piece of mining ground, expressly conditioned that no rights are conveyed except a mining right upon the premises, vests in the vendee only the right of taking from the land any minerals or ores contained in it to the extent of the interest granted. It does not constitute him a copartner, joint tenant, or tenant in common with the vendor in the land itself; and his interest is not an estate which can be the subject of an action for partition. (Cal.) Ibid.

An estate in minerals in the soil, created by a severance of the title to the surface and the minerals, is the subject of partition. Ball v. Clark (1912) 150 Ky. 383, 150 S. W. 359; McConnell v. Pierce (1904) 210 Ill. 627, 71 N. E. 622; Brand v. Consolidated Coal Co. (1906) 219 Ill. 543, 76 N. E. 849.

So, in Brand v. Consolidated Coal Co. (Ill.) supra, it was held that tenants in common of coal in place, the title to which had been severed from the title to the surface, were entitled to a partition, but that they had to be tenants in common to have that right.

But a bill to partition coal in place, alleging a conveyance by the complainant to defendant of the right to mine three fourths of the coal under her lands, cannot be maintained where it alleges that the defendant has mined and removed a portion of the coal under the land, the amount and area of which are unknown to the complainant, instead of alleging that defendant had mined and removed a portion of the three fourths of the coal it had the right to mine, since L.R.A.1916D.

there is in such case nothing to show that any part of the three fourths remains in place under the lands to be partitioned. (Ill.) Ibid.

In Canfield v. Ford (1858) 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 336, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 201, affirming (1857) 16 How. Pr. 473, it was decided that a deed to one and his heirs and assigns forever of all the mines, ores, minerals, and metals in or upon certain lands, the same being a conveyance of all the estate, right, title, etc., whatsoever, of the grantor in and to such mines, ores, etc., together with the right of ingress and egress to raise, work, and carry away such minerals, and to put up all buildings and to use all lands necessary for that purpose, conveyed an estate of inheritance and such an interest as came within the intent and meaning of the provisions of the Revised Statutes relative to partition; and that an action was maintainable for the partition of such interest. The Revised Statutes, mentioned here, provided that when several persons should hold and be in possession of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as joint tenants, or as tenants in common, in which one or more of them should have estates of inheritance, or for life or lives, or for years, any one or more of such persons, being of full age, might apply to the court for a division or partition of such premises, according to the rights of the respective parties interested therein, and for sale of such premises, if it should appear that a partition could not be made without great prejudice to the owners. And in conclusion the court said: "This is a certain grant, and no difficulty occurs in making equality of division. But if the provisions of our Revised Statutes are not broad enough to include the power to partition, it has been settled that this court, as now constituted, has common-law jurisdiction to partition real estate (Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 646, 658; Smith v. Smith (1843) 10 Paige (N. Y.) 470); limited, however, to the power to divide estates certain. It is only necessary in a court of equity, to entitle to partition, so far as this point is in question, to show that equality can be obtained, in value, of lands; especially in advantages and profits redounding from each share to the several owners (Allnat, Partition, 10). Whatever is capable of being divided may be the subject of partition in equity."

And under the statutes of Nevada, Gen. Stat. § 3295, providing that, in actions for the partition of real property, "the rights of the several parties, plaintiffs as well as defendants, may be put to issue, tried and determined by such action," the rights of the respective parties in a mine may be determined in the suit for partition, and it is immaterial whether the title of the plaintiff is legal or equitable, as he is entitled to the same relief. Royston v. Miller (1896) 76 Fed. 50, 18 Mor. Min. Rep. 418.

In Beardsley v. Kansas Natural Gas Co. (1908) 78 Kan. 571, 96 Pac. 859, it was decided that an ordinary oil and gas lease does not convey an interest in real estate, or any present title to the oil and gas which may be found in the leased premises, but merely grants the privilege of exploring for oil and gas, and the right to sever the same if found, and that since the provisions of the statute relating to partition apply to real estate only, a petition in an action for the partition of property other than real estate, such as the right of the lessees under an ordinary oil and gas lease, will be deemed insufficient unless it contains averments which show the condition of the property to be such that equitable intervention is necessary to preserve the property or to protect the interests of the owners thereof. The court said: "This court has held in several cases that such a lease grants no estate in the land, or in the oil or gas which it may contain. It merely creates a license to enter and explore for oil and gas, and to sever them if found. Rawlings v. Armel (1905) 70 Kan. 778, 79 Pac. 683; Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Neosho County (1907) 75 Kan. 339, 89 Pac. 750; Phillips v. Springfield Crude Oil Co. (1908) 76 Kan. 783, 92 Pac. 1119. That such property, or indeed any property of a personal character, owned in common, may be partitioned among its several owners, where the nature of the property is such that its division in kind is possible and practical, seems to be generally conceded. If the property is not susceptible of such a division, then a distribution will be made which seems to be most nearly equivalent to possession in severalty. This may be effectuated by a sale and an equitable division of the proceeds among the owners, or by an actual division of the property, or otherwise, as may be equitable. The power to make such partition or division of personal property belongs exclusively to courts of equity, and they have generally exercised such power where no other remedy is provided by statute. . . . No provision for the partition of personal property has been provided by the statutes of this state. The statute L.R.A.1916D.

tory provisions relating to partition apply to real estate only. . . . The petition, in this case, appears to have been drawn upon the theory that a compliance with the statute was sufficient, and it merely states the kind of property owned by the parties, and the interest of each therein. No facts are stated which indicate loss in value of the property, mismanagement, irreconcilable differences as to the disposition or control of the property, or other peculiar circumstances which justify equitable action. For the want of these facts, we think the petition is insufficient, and the demurrer was properly sustained."

An oil and gas lease executed by one tenant in common without the knowledge of his cotenants is valid as to his interest, though void as to theirs, and if afterwards he joins his cotenants in such a lease to another person who has notice, no title to his interest passes to the new lessee; but each lessee has a valid lease as to the interests of his respective lessors, and while neither lessee is entitled to a partition, they may, by agreement with each other, operate for oil and gas while the premises are undivided, or either of the lessors can maintain partition, and in that way give to his lessee the sole right to operate for oil and gas, in the portion of the land which may be set off to such lessor. Zeigler v. Brenne-man (1908) 237 Ill. 15, 86 N. E. 597.

And in Watford Oil & Gas Co. v. Shipman (1908) 233 Ill. 9, 122 Am. St. Rep. 144, 84 N. E. 53, it is held that the lessee under an oil and gas lease has no right to compulsory partition of the oil and gas in place, considered separately from the land, or of the land itself.

And a grantee from one tenant in common of the right to dig ores cannot have a partition of the premises. Boston Franklinite Co. v. Condit (1869) 19 N. J. Eq. 394, 14 Mor. Min. Rep. 301. While the deed in such case will be held to bind the grantor, it is void as to his cotenants. The reason is, that it would prejudice the right of the cotenants to a partition. The court said: "Each tenant in common of an undivided moiety has a right to partition by having one half of the whole premises set off to him; he must not be compelled to partition one part with one cotenant, and another with another cotenant, as he would be if such conveyance were good; but the partition must be made into two shares between him and his cotenant, and then, if the part conveyed by the cotenant shall fall within the share allotted to him, his deed for the same will bind him, and convey it to his grantee. So, if the ores in one undivided half be conveyed as in this case, the cotenant will not be affected by it, but would be entitled to a partition of the whole between him and his original cotenant, without regard to the rights of the grantee. The whole tract must be divided into two shares equal, not in quantity, but in value; the ores and mines on one part would be valued as against the meadows, water power, or buildings, on the other part. And if the part containing the mines or minerals were allotted in partition under the acts requiring partition by lot, or assigned on other proceedings to the cotenant, he would have the right to retain it, although the grantee of the ores should thereby lose all right. His title as against such cotenant is void." Ball v. Clark (1912) 150 Ky. 383, 150 S. W. 359, is to the same effect. And in the same connection see Adam v. Briggs Iron Co. (1851) 7 Cush. (Mass.) 361, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 225, holding that a reservation of his interest in the mines in and upon the land granted by a tenant in common is void.

In Grubb v. Beyard (1851) 2 Wall. Jr. 81, Fed. Cas. No. 5,849, 9 Mor. Min. Rep. 199, it was decided that the right or privilege to dig, take, and carry away ore to be found on certain premises was not divisible or susceptible of apportionment, and that an assignee of the right, unless clothed with the whole of it, had nothing, and could support no suit as against the owner of the soil.

A purchaser of the interests of some of the heirs in coal in place, leased by their paternal ancestor, with the right in the lessee to mine it to exhaustion in consideration of a stipulated royalty, or a fixed sum in lieu thereof if a minimum quantity is not mined annually, the lease to be void upon default in payment of such fixed sum, is not entitled to partition of the said coal, in his suit against other heirs for that purpose, during the life of the lease. McMullen v. Blecker (1908) 64 W. Va. 88, 131 Am. St. Rep. 894, 60 S. E. 1093.

And in Hanna v. Clark (1902) 204 Pa. 149, 53 Atl. 758, it was held that partition of oil in and under certain land was properly refused, such lands being subject to oil leases previously made and still in effect.

But in Haeussler v. Missouri Iron Co. (1892) 110 Mo. 188, 16 L.R.A. 220, 33 Am. St. Rep. 431, 19 S. W. 75, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 458, it was held that possession of land under a mining lease is not adverse to the interests of the owners of the fee, so as to prevent partition between them. And see J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Jeff Chaison Townsite Co. (1908) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 555, 107 S. W. 609.

In a suit between tenants in common for the partition of a mining interest in real estate, which has been carved out of the fee, the owner of the fee, who is the common source of title to all the tenants, is not a necessary party. Canfield v. Ford (1858) 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 336, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 201.

And in an action by the lessees in an oil and gas lease for a partition of their interests thereunder, it was held that the lessors were not necessary parties. Beardsley v. Kansas Natural Gas Co. (1908) 78 Kan. 571, 96 Pac. 859.

W. W. A.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

BERTHA McKNIGHT, Appt.,
v.
MINNEAPOLIS STREET RAILWAY COM-PANY, Respt.

(127 Minn. 207, 149 N. W. 131.)

Judgment — split cause of action.

1. A single and entire cause of action cannot be split up into several suits, and the judgment in a suit brought upon such

Headnotes by TAYLOR, C.

Note. — For judgment in action for personal injury or death as bar to a subsequent action based on a different ground of negligence, see annotation following this case, post, 1167.
L.R.A.1916D.

cause of action is a bar to a second suit thereon, although the complaint in the second suit may set forth grounds for relief which were not set forth in the complaint in the first suit.

For other cases, see Action or Suit, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Negligence — ground of liability.

2. In suits based upon negligence, the cause of action is the violation of the ultimate duty to exercise due care that another may not suffer injury.

For other cases, see Negligence, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Judgment — negligence — other acts.

3. A judgment rendered in a suit brought by a passenger to recover for injuries sustained while alighting from a street car is a bar to a subsequent suit brought by the same passenger against the same defendant to recover for the same injuries, although the particular acts of negligence charged may be different in the two suits, as the cause of action in both suits is the violation of the ultimate duty to afford safe egress from the car.

For other cases, see Action or Suit, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 23, 1914.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Hennepin County in defendant's favor and from an order denying a motion for new trial in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligent construction of defendant's car. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. Francis B. Hart for appellant.

Messrs. N. M. Thygeson and John F. Dahl, for respondent:

Where there are several items of damage arising, the claim cannot be divided and made the subject of several suits.

Pierro v. St. Paul & N. P. R. Co. 39 Minn. 451, 1 Am. St. Rep. 673, 40 N. W. 520; Memmer v. Cary, 30 Minn. 458, 15 N. W. 877; Ziebarth v. Nye, 42 Minn. 541, 44 N. W. 1027; O'Brien v. Manwaring, 79 Minn. 86, 79 Am. St. Rep. 426, 81 N. W. 746; King v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 80 Minn. 83, 50 L.R.A. 161, 81 Am. St. Rep. 238, 82 N. W. 1113; H. W. Wilson Co. v. A. B. Farnham & Co. 97 Minn. 153, 106 N. W. 342; Keene v. Lobdell, 85 Minn. 110, 83 N. W. 251; Bazille v. Murray, 40 Minn. 48, 41 N. W. 238; Thomas v. Joslin, 36 Minn. 1, 1 Am. St. Rep. 624, 29 N. W. 344.

A judgment on the merits rendered in a former suit between the same parties upon the same cause of action, by a court of competent jurisdiction, is conclusive.

Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 351, 24 L. ed. 195; David Bradley Mfg. Co. v. Eagle Mfg. Co. 6 C. C. A. 661, 18 U. S. App. 349, 57 Fed. 980; Lake County v. Platt, 25 C. C. A. 87, 49 U. S. App. 216, 79 Fed. 567; Fayerweather v. Ritch, 34 C. C. A. 61, 63 U. S. App. 112, 91 Fed. 721; 2 Black, Judgm. 2d ed. § 731; Chavent v. Schefer, 59 Fed. 231; Embury v. Conner, 3 N. Y. 511, 53 Am. Dec. 325; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Anderson County, 47 Kan. 766, 29 Pac. 96; Bates v. Spooner, 45 Ind. 489; Pugh v. Williamson, 61 Mo. App. 165; Bailey v. Bailey, 115 Ill. 551, 4 N. E. 394; Rogers v. Higgins, 57 Ill. 244; Newell v. Neal, 50 S. C. 68, 27 N. E. 560; Stark v. Starr, 94 U. S. 477, 485, 24 L. ed. 276, 278; Thompson v. Myrick, 24 Minn. 11; Columb v. Webster Mfg. Co. 43 L.R.A. 195, 28 C. C. A. 225, 50 U. S. App. 264, 84 L.R.A. 1916D.

Fed. 592; McCain v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 97 Ky. 804, 22 S. W. 325; Beauregard v. Webb Granite & Constr. Co. 160 Mass. 201, 35 N. E. 555; Laiimatainen v. St. Louis River Dam & Improv. Co. 119 Minn. 238, 137 N. W. 1099; Armstrong v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 45 Minn. 85, 47 N. W. 459; Gilbert v. Boak Fish Co. 86 Minn. 365, 58 L.R.A. 735, 90 N. W. 767; Jungnitsch v. Michigan Malleable Iron Co. 121 Mich. 460, 80 N. W. 245; West v. Hennessey, 58 Minn. 183, 59 N. W. 984; Taylor v. Castle, 42 Cal. 367, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 484; Rossman v. Tilden, 80 Minn. 160, 81 Am. St. Rep. 247, 83 N. W. 42; Basille v. Murray, 40 Minn. 48, 41 N. W. 238; Thomas v. Joslin, 36 Minn. 1, 1 Am. St. Rep. 624, 29 N. W. 344.

Taylor, C., filed the following opinion:

Plaintiff was a passenger upon one of defendant's street cars, and while alighting therefrom fell and was injured. She brought an action against defendant for damages in which she charged that defendant caused the accident by suddenly and negligently closing the gates and starting the car while she was in the act of alighting. After a trial lasting several days the jury returned a verdict for defendant and thereafter judgment was duly entered thereon in favor of defendant. Subsequently she brought the present action against the defendant for damages for the same injury, and in this action charged that the car was provided with a defective step, and that she caught her foot on the defect in the step, and fell in consequence thereof. The trial court held that the judgment in the first action barred a recovery in the present action, and the only question for decision is whether the trial court was correct in so holding.

In Thompson v. Myrick, 24 Minn. 4, decided in 1877, the court held that a judgment decides "every matter which pertains to the cause of action or defense set up in the action, or which is involved in the measure of relief to which the cause of action or defense entitles the party, even though such matter may not be set forth in the pleadings, so as to admit proof and call for an actual decision upon it;" that "where the cause of action is entire and indivisible the judgment determines all the right of the parties upon it, although it may be but partially presented to the court;" that "all claim for relief, special or general, upon the cause of action or defense, is disposed of and determined by the judgment when the particular circumstances justifying such relief are not pleaded, as effectually as when they are fully set out;" and that such judgment is a bar to a second suit, if such second suit "presents no new cause of action, but only new grounds for relief upon the same cause of action."

The rule announced in that decision, and which, in later cases, has been summarized in the statement that "a single and entire cause of action cannot be split up into several suits," has been consistently followed ever since. Geiser Threshing Mach. Co. v. Farmer, 27 Minn. 428, 8 N. W. 141; Pierro v. St. Paul & N. P. R. Co. 39 Minn. 451, 12 Am. St. Rep. 673, 40 N. W. 520; Bazille v. Murray, 40 Minn. 48, 41 N. W. 238; Northern Trust Co. v. Crystal Lake Cemetery Asso. 67 Minn. 131, 69 N. W. 708; O'Brien v. Manwaring, 79 Minn. 86, 79 Am. St. Rep. 426, 81 N. W. 746; King v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 80 Minn. 83, 50 L.R.A. 161, 81 Am. St. Rep. 238, 82 N. W. 1113; Gilbert v. Boak Fish Co. 86 Minn. 365, 58 L.R.A. 735, 90 N. W. 767; H. W. Wilson Co. v. A. B. Farnham & Co. 97 Minn. 153, 106 N. W. 342; Liimatainen v. St. Louis River Dam & Improv. Co. 119 Minn. 238, 137 N. W. 1099; Kinsel v. Boston & D. Farm Land Co. 124 Minn. 416, 145 N. W. 124.

The decisions cited and relied upon by plaintiff do not establish a different rule. In West v. Hennessey, 58 Minn. 133, 59 N. W. 984 the court held that the cause of action in the first suit was not the same as in the second suit, although both arose out of the same transaction. In the second suit plaintiff sought to recover damages sustained through false representations made by defendant and relied upon by plaintiff. No question of fraud or false representations was involved in the first suit. In Wayzata v. Great Northern R. Co. 87 Minn. 385, 69 N. W. 1073, it was held that a judgment defining the rights of defendant in respect to the use of the streets of the village in connection with a passenger station and boat landing maintained by it in the village was not conclusive as to its rights in such streets in an action brought after it had removed its station and boat landing to a point outside the village. In Swanson v. Great Northern R. Co. 73 Minn. 103, 75 N. W. 1033, a demurrer had been sustained on the ground that the complaint failed to state a cause of action, and it was held that the judgment rendered pursuant thereto did not bar a subsequent suit in which the cause of action alleged was valid and sufficient. In Rossman v. Tillyen, 80 Minn. 160, 81 Am. St. Rep. 247, 83 N. W. 42, plaintiff failed in a suit to recover the contract price for performing certain work, for the reason that he had not completed the work; and the judgment therein was held not to bar a subsequent suit for the reasonable value L.R.A.1916D.

of the services rendered, it appearing that plaintiff had been prevented from completing the contract by the act of defendant. In Kaaterud v. Gilbertson, 96 Minn. 66, 104 N. W. 763, it was held that a judgment in favor of defendant, in a suit to have a deed declared a mortgage and to redeem therefrom, did not bar a subsequent suit to enforce specific performance of an oral contract to convey to plaintiff the same land involved in the former suit. In Stitt v. Rat Portage Lumber Co. 101 Minn. 93, 111 N. W. 948, where plaintiff failed to recover upon a certain express contract, the judgment therein was held not a bar to a subsequent action upon a different contract, although both contracts related to the same transaction. In Marshall v. Gilman, 52 Minn. 88, 53 N. W. 811, it was held that an action for rescission, which failed because plaintiff had waived his right to rescind, did not bar an action for deceit growing out of the same transaction.

In the above cases the court held that the two suits were based upon different causes of action, and therefore that the prosecution of the second was not barred by the judgment in the first. In the discussion as to whether the two causes of action were the same, it is stated in some of the cases, perhaps without making it entirely clear that the designated test should be applied to the ultimate cause of action, and not to the particular facts alleged in the pleadings, that the "test as to whether a former judgment is a bar is to inquire whether the same evidence will sustain both the former and the present action." Plaintiff invokes this rule, and insists that this test shows that the present suit is not barred by the judgment in the former suit. She argues that as she did not allege, and hence could not prove, the defect in the step in the former suit, and has not alleged, and hence cannot prove, the negligent starting of the car in the present suit, the present suit is not based upon the same cause of action as the former. This does not necessarily follow. In arriving at this conclusion plaintiff overlooks the rule stated in Thompson v. Myrick, supra, and repeatedly reiterated in later cases, that the judgment decides "every matter which pertains to the cause of action, . . . even though such matter may not be set forth in the pleadings so as to admit proof" thereof; and that "all claim for relief, special or general, upon the cause of action or defense, is disposed of and determined by the judgment, when the particular circumstances justifying such relief are not pleaded, as effectually as when they are fully set out;" and that such judgment bars a second suit which "presents no new cause of action, but only new grounds for relief upon the same cause of action." The test is not whether the two complaints are so drawn that the same evidence would be admissible under both, but whether the same evidence which will sustain the cause of action upon which a recovery is sought in the second suit would also have sustained the cause of action upon which a recovery was sought in the first suit. Whether the instant case falls within or without the rule depends upon whether the wrong for which redress is sought is the same wrong for which redress was sought in the former suit, and not upon whether the complaint sets forth grounds for relief which were not set forth in the former complaint. The case of Liimatainen v. St. Louis River Dam & Improv. Co. 119 Minn. 238, 137 N. W. 1099, is decisive of the present case. It is there said that "one action only lies to redress a single wrong, or, as frequently expressed, a single tort gives rise to a single cause of action, and a plaintiff cannot be permitted to indulge in unnecessary litigation by splitting up a cause of action and prosecuting more than one suit thereon."

And the decision in Columb v. Webster Mfg. Co. 43 L.R.A. 195, 28 C. C. A. 225, 50 U. S. App. 264, 84 Fed. 592, holding that a judgment for defendant in a suit to recover for personal injuries barred a subsequent suit between the same parties to recover for the same injuries, although additional acts of negligence were alleged in the second suit was approved. It is further stated in the Liimatainen Case that "a cause of action for wrong is predicated upon the violation of an ultimate duty, and though the performance of such duty may require the doing or omission of many separate and distinct acts, the omission or doing of which would constitute a violation of the ultimate duty, it is nevertheless the violation of the latter, and not the specific acts or omissions, which constitutes the actionable wrong."

In suits based upon negligence, the cause of action is the violation of the ultimate duty to exercise due care that another may not suffer injury. In the instant case plaintiff was a passenger upon defendant's street car, and it was the duty of defendant to afford her safe egress therefrom. Her claim for damages is grounded upon the charge that defendant violated such duty. The violation of this duty constitutes her cause of action. In the first suit she charged that defendant violated this duty by suddenly starting the car while she was in the act of alighting. In the present suit she charges that defendant violated such duty by providing a defective step for her to use in descending from the car. Both suits are based upon the violation of the ultimate duty to afford safe egress from the car. The second suit "presents no new cause of action, but only new grounds for relief upon the same cause of action," and under the authorities cited is barred by the judgment in the former suit. It follows that the decision of the trial court was correct, and must be affirmed.

Annotation—Judgment in action for personal injury or death as bar to a subsequent action based on a different ground of negligence.

As to the effect of a pending action under a statute authorizing actions to recover for injuries resulting in death, as a bar or abatement of an action under another statute, see note appended to Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hubble, L.R.A. 1915E, 1132. As to the effect of a judgment rendered in the lifetime of the deceased or subsequently to his death as a bar to any further action to recover for the death, see note appended to St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Goode, L.R.A. 1915E, 1141. As to several actions for death or injury causing death, see note appended to Rowe v. Richards, L.R.A. 1915E, 1095.

As indicated by its title, this note is limited to cases involving the effect of a judgment for the defendant in an action to recover for personal injuries on another action to recover for the same injuries based upon a different ground of negligence. L.R.A.1916D.

It is a rule of law that parties to an action must present all the facts and raise all the issues which may be relied upon for a recovery or as a defense; hence the judgment in an action will operate as an estoppel not only as to questions of fact and law which were raised and decided in the action in which the judgment was rendered, but also as to all grounds of recovery or defense which might have been, but were not, presented or passed upon. This general rule as applied to the question here presented renders the judgment for the defendant in an action for personal injuries received in a certain accident an estoppel or bar to another action to recover for the same injuries by or in behalf of the same parties, although upon a different ground of negligence from that presented in the former action. Columb v. Webster Mfg. Co. (1898) 43 L.R.A. 195, 28 C. C. A. 225, 50 U. S. App.

264, 84 Fed. 592; McCain v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1893) 97 Ky. 804, 22 S. W. 325; McKNIGHT v. MINNEAPOLIS STREET R. Co. ante, 1164.

In Beauregard v. Webb Granite & Constr. Co. (1893) 160 Mass. 201, 35 N. E. 555, in considering the question of election of different grounds of negligence, a question not included herein, the court said that the whole liability of the defendant for the death of an employee ought to be tried in one action, and the judgment in that action ought to be a bar to any subsequent action between the same parties for the same cause of action.

While not within the scope of this note, attention is called to Ogden v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1908) 131 Mo. App. 331, 111 S. W. 516, holding that a judgment for defendant in an action to recover damages for overflowing plaintiff's land, based upon certain alleged negligence, was a bar to another action to enforce the same cause of action based upon a different ground of negligence. A. G. S.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

ETTA GIFFIN, Appt.,
v.

GRAND LODGE OF ANCIENT ORDER OF UNITED WORKMEN and

ELEANOR MASURETTE et al., Impleaders.

(— Neb. —, 157 N. W. 113.)

Insurance — right of divorced wife.

1. A wife named as beneficiary in a fraternal benefit certificate, who thereafter procures an absolute divorce, without accruing alimony, forfeits her rights to such benefits, where the law of the state or the by-laws of the society restrict the payment of its benefits to the families, heirs, blood relations, affianced wife, or persons dependent upon the member.

For other cases, see Insurance, VI. d, 2, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Interpleader — insurance claimants.

2. The act of a fraternal society in filing a bill of interpleader to determine conflicting claims is proper, and cannot prejudice the rights of claimants when the same are fixed by law.

For other cases, see Interpleader, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 18, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Buffalo County in favor of the interpleaded defendants in an action brought to recover the amount of a benefit certificate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Headnotes by MARTIN, C.

Note. — The effect of divorce on rights of beneficiaries under insurance policy or benefit certificate is treated in the notes to Wallace v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 478; Green v. Green, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 370; and Filley v. Illinois L. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915D, 130. L.R.A.1916D.

Messrs. J. M. Easterling and T. F. Hamer for appellant.

Messrs. H. M. Sinclair and W. D. Oldham, for appellees:

Plaintiff was not within the class that could be paid death benefits under the statute of this state.

Warner v. Modern Woodmen, 67 Neb. 233, 61 L.R.A. 603, 108 Am. St. Rep. 634, 93 N. W. 397, 2 Ann. Cas. 660; Fisher v. Donovan, 57 Neb. 361, 44 L.R.A. 383, 77 N. W. 778; Britton v. Supreme Council R. A. 46 N. J. Eq. 102, 19 Am. St. Rep. 376, 18 Atl. 675; National Mut. Aid Asso. v. Gonser, 43 Ohio St. 1, 1 N. E. 11; Alexander v. Parker, 144 Ill. 355, 19 L.R.A. 187, 33 N. E. 183; Schönfeld v. Turner, 75 Tex. 324, 7 L.R.A. 189, 12 S. W. 626; Tyler v. Odd Fellows' Mut. Relief Asso. 145 Mass. 134, 13 N. E. 360; Dahlin v. Knights of Modern Maccabees, 151 Mich. 644, 115 N. W. 975; Green v. Green, 147 Ky. 608, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 370, 144 S. W. 1073, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 683; Kirkpatrick v. Modern Woodmen, 103 Ill. App. 468.

The petition does not state a cause of action.

Warner v. Modern Woodmen, 67 Neb. 233, 61 L.R.A. 603, 108 Am. St. Rep. 634, 93 N. W. 397, 2 Ann. Cas. 660; Fisher v. Donovan, 57 Neb. 361, 44 L.R.A. 383, 77 N. W. 778; Leumann v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 85 Neb. 803, 124 N. W. 475; Skilling v. Massachusetts Ben. Asso. 146 Mass. 217, 15 N. E. 566; Wolf v. District Grand Lodge, No. 6, I. O. B. B. 102 Mich. 23, 60 N. W. 445.

The right to the "death benefit" by operation of law vested in appellees at the death of the member, Thomas Coppinger, their ancestor.

Schmidt v. Northern Life Asso. 112 Iowa, 41, 51 L.R.A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800; Britton v. Supreme Council, R. A. 46 N. J. Eq. 102, 19 Am. St. Rep. 376, 18 Atl. 675; William's Appeal, 92 Pa. 69; Supreme Lodge, K. L. H. v. Menkhaneen, 209 Ill. 277, 65 L.R.A. 308, 101 Am. St. Rep. 239, 70 N. E. 567; Knights of Columbus v. Rowe, 70 Conn. 545, 40 Atl. 451; Lister v. Lister, 73 Mo. App. 99; 29 Cyc. 156.

Martin, C., filed the following opinion:

Thomas Coppinger was a member in good standing of the Grand Lodge of Ancient Order of United Workmen, a fraternal insurance society organized under the laws of this state. On the 25th day of June, 1901, the society, through its subordinate lodge at Gibbon, Nebraska, issued to him a certificate for $1,000, wherein the plaintiff, then his wife, was named as beneficiary. On August 25, 1912, the plaintiff obtained an absolute divorce from said Thomas Coppinger, and on the 4th day of March, 1913, said Coppinger died. No change of beneficiary was made in the benefit certificate after the plaintiff procured her divorce. She brought this action against the society to recover the amount of the benefit certificate. The defendant society paid the amount of this benefit certificate into court on an order of interpleader granted on its own showing and motion. The interpleaded defendants are the sisters and brother of said Thomas Coppinger, deceased. The interpleaded defendants had judgment for the amount of the benefit certificate, less the sum of $130.40, which it was shown that plaintiff had paid as dues upon the said certificate. The plaintiff was allowed an equitable lien upon the benefit certificate fund for the amount expended by her in keeping the benefit certificate in force. From that decision the plaintiff is here on appeal.

Thus it appears that the controversy here is between the divorced wife and the heirs of the insured. The contract of the parties is made up of the benefit certificate, the by-laws and constitution of the society, and the laws of the state under which said society is organized. Authorities need not be cited to the point that all these are elements which constitute the contract as a whole. The insured and the insuring society are alike bound by them. Nor need cases be presented to support the well-established proposition that in benefit societies the beneficiary at the time of the issuance of the certificate acquires no vested interest therein, but that the same is simply an expectancy. Section 96 of the laws of said society is as follows: "Each member shall designate the person or persons to whom the beneficiary fund due at his death shall be paid, who shall in every instance be one or more members of his family, or someone related to him by blood, or his affianced wife."

This section was strictly complied with by the designation of the member's wife as his beneficiary. Under the doctrine laid down by some of the authorities, that a designation of beneficiary valid in its inception remains so, we might be called upon to reverse this case, if it were not for the laws of said society and the statutory law of the state relating to such subject. Section 98 of the laws of said society provides that if the beneficiary named in the certificate shall die during the lifetime of the member and the member shall have made no other direction, the benefit shall be paid to his widow, and in case he leaves no widow surviving him, then said benefit shall be paid to his children or blood relatives, etc. It is argued that the only contingency provided for in this section is the death of the beneficiary during the life of the member, and that divorce is not death. This section fixes the order of payment, and it should be construed in a way to effectuate the intention of the society. When the law severs the bonds of matrimony, the relationship of husband and wife is broken as effectually as if death had removed one of the parties. Section 3298, Rev. Stat. 1913, is as follows: "Payment of death benefits shall only be made to the families, heirs, blood relations, affianced husband or affianced wife of, or to persons dependent upon, the member."

Said sections of the society are clearly a limitation upon the insured, and require him to designate as his beneficiary someone related to him as in the said sections provided, and to whom the beneficiary fund due at his death shall and can be paid. These provisions of the society's laws and the section of the state law referred to are a prohibition against the payment of any certificate by the society to any person who does not belong to those classes or bear such relationship to the insured at the time of his death. A former wife who secured an absolute divorce from the insured without accruing alimony does not come within such classes or bear such relationship; consequently she is not qualified or eligible to receive benefits from this society.

"A person who is not eligible as a beneficiary under the statute is not entitled to the fund even though named as beneficiary, and in such case the heirs of the deceased member are entitled to the fund." Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. Ehlman, 246 Ill. 555, 92 N. E. 962.

It is evident from the laws of this order that its object is to provide benefits for the families or dependent ones of its members. To permit such benefits to be paid to persons who do not sustain the prescribed relationship to the insured at the time of his death would surely thwart the purpose of the organization. Kirkpatrick v. Modern Woodmen, 103 Ill. App. 468; Green v. Green, 147 Ky. 608, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 370, 144 S. W. 1073, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 683; Green v. Knights & Ladies of Security, 147 Ky. 614, 144 S. W. 1076; Knights of Columbus v. Rowe, 70 Conn. 545, 40 Atl. 451; Larkin v. Knights of Columbus, 188 Mass. 22, 73 N. E. 850.

In the case of Dunmore v. Modern Woodmen of America, No. 18598 (decided by commission and findings of fact journalized, but not published), we held that a "wife named as beneficiary in a fraternal benefit certificate who thereafter procures an absolute divorce forfeits her rights to such benefits where the by-laws of the society restrict the payment of its benefits to the wife, surviving child, heir, blood relative, or person dependent upon, or member of the family of the insured, at the time of his death."

In the foregoing case the by-laws of the society restricted payment to persons sustaining certain relationships to the insured, whereas in the instant case the statute makes such restriction.

Under the prohibition of the statute the divorce obtained by the plaintiff from the insured operated to revoke the designation of her as beneficiary in the certificate, and to substitute in her place those next specified under the by-laws of the order and the law of the state, which persons in this case are the interpleaded defendants.

The contention on the part of the plaintiff that objection to the ineligibility of the beneficiary named in the benefit certificate can be raised by the society alone is not in accord with the better reasoned cases as we view them. The society simply pays the money into court on the order of the court, and asks to be relieved from litigating, as between two sets of claimants. The aid of the court is invoked to determine which of the claimants is entitled to the fund. This we understand to be a proper case for interpleader. The statute of this state prohibiting payment to anyone not belonging to the classes therein designated fixes the rights of the parties. This being true, claimants, in good faith under the laws of the state and those of the society, cannot be prejudiced by the act of the society in asking the court to determine their rights.

"The fact that the beneficiary named in a certificate is not eligible is not an objection such as the society alone can raise, as the rights of the parties are fixed by law, and are not affected by the action of the society in filing a bill of interpleader to determine conflicting claims." Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. Ehlman, supra; Supreme Council, R. A. v. McKnight, 238 Ill. 349, 87 N. E. 299.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed.

Per Curiam:

For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the judgment of the District Court is affirmed, and this opinion is adopted by and made the opinion of the court.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

BENJAMIN ROSE INSTITUTE, Plff. in Err.,
v.
MYERS, Treasurer of Cuyahoga County,
et al.

(92 Ohio St. 252, 110 N. E. 924.)

Tax — public charity — exemption.

The real estate belonging to an institution of purely public charity is exempt from taxation only when used exclusively for charitable purposes, and, if such real estate is rented for commercial and residence pur-

Headnote by the COURT.

Note. — As to effect of using property of religious, charitable, or educational institution in secular business or for revenue, upon its right to exemption from taxation, see note to Com. v. Lynchburg Y. M. C. A. 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1197.

Generally, as to exemption of property of Young Men's Christian Association, see note to Y. M. C. A. v. Parish, ante, 272. L.R.A.1916D.

poses, it is not exempt, although the income arising from such use is devoted wholly to the purpose of the charity.

For other cases, see Taxes, I. f, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Wanamaker, J., dissents.)

(June 4, 1915.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Cuyahoga County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas sustaining a demurrer to a petition filed to prohibit the collection of taxes on certain real property in the city of Cleveland. Affirmed.

Statement by Nichols, Ch. J.

In June, 1910, the Benjamin Rose Institute sought the remedy of injunction in the common pleas court of Cuyahoga county against the treasurer and auditor of that county to interdict the collection of taxes on certain real property in the city of Cleveland; it being contended that the property in question was exempt from taxation by favor of the last clause of § 5353, General Code, reading: "Property belonging to institutions of public charity only, shall be exempt from taxation."

The Benjamin Rose Institute, with a board of trustees named in the last will and testament of Benjamin Rose, late of Cuyahoga county, was created by such will, having for its purpose the carrying into effect certain provisions thereof relative to the distribution of the income arising from the property sought to be exempted from taxation, among certain beneficiaries designated in the fourth item of said will, in the language following:

"It is my purpose to provide relief and maintenance so far as I am able for respectable and deserving, needy, aged people, as far as practicable, and mostly of the Anglo-Saxon race, and to supply temporary relief and aid to needy, crippled children or youth."

An elaborate scheme of instituting and managing the trust is set forth in great detail in the will. The property in question was devised to the Citizens' Savings & Trust Company, as trustee, charged with the duty of holding and managing the same and paying over the net income to the institute aforesaid.

That the property so sought to be exempted is of great value is evidenced by the allegation of the petition that the semiannual instalment of taxes payable in June, 1910, amounted to the sum of $14,000. The petition seeking the relief sets forth in detail that no part of said property or the income thereof has been diverted to private use or profit, but that said property and the funds arising therefrom have been used exclusively in maintaining and prosecuting the charities provided for in said will. It is conceded, however, by the Benjamin Rose Institute, that none of the real property sought to be exempted from taxation is either actually or directly occupied or used for charitable purposes of any kind or character; in fact, by stipulation of the parties, it is agreed that all of said real estate, excepting a portion of small value situated in Nottingham, has been rented for residence and commercial purposes, and that the income and rental therefrom only have been used and are being used in maintaining and prosecuting the charities created by said will.

The treasurer and auditor of Cuyahoga county demurred to the petition of the Benjamin Rose Institute, which demurrer was sustained by the common pleas court, and on appeal the same action was had in the circuit court of Cuyahoga county. L.R.A.1916D.

Messrs. N. O. Mather, Squire, Sanders, & Dempsey, W. C. Boyle, and Thomas M. Kirby for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Cyrus Locher, John A. Kline, F. W. Green, G. A. Howells, and Walter D. Meals for defendants in error.

Nichols, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The supreme court has been frequently called upon to interpret the statutes exempting properties from taxation, and quite an array of reported cases on this subject are available. It is substantially conceded by counsel for the institute that, under any and all of these former interpretations, the real property of Benjamin Rose so trusted would not be in the exempted class, but it is their contention that, by virtue of the amendment of May 9, 1908, to § 2732, Revised Statutes, and more especially of the ratification on February 15, 1910, of the report of the codifying commission, by the general assembly of Ohio, all of the property, both real and personal, so devised to the above-mentioned public charity, is wholly exempt from taxation. The adjudications of this court were all had prior to the amendment of May 9, 1908; the cases, chronologically arranged, being Cincinnati College v. State, 19 Ohio, 110; Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 229; Humphries v. Little Sisters of the Poor, 29 Ohio St. 201; Cleveland Library Assn. v. Pelton, 36 Ohio St. 253; Watterson v. Halliday, 77 Ohio St. 150, 82 N. E. 962, 11 Ann. Cas. 1096. It is quite evident that but for the amendments to the statutes of May 9, 1908, and February 15, 1910, respectively, exempting property, this action would not have been instituted. An examination of the several tax exemption statutes is not only necessary for a proper consideration of the case, but is alike interesting and illuminating.

Prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1851 the nature and extent of exemption from tax were wholly a matter of legislative discretion, which was afterwards limited in set terms by the then new Constitution. The original statute, under the new order of things, was adopted in 1852 (see 50 O. L. 135), and provided that "all buildings belonging to institutions of purely public charity, together with the land actually occupied by such institutions, not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit," shall be exempted, etc.

By the revision of 1880 this language was carried into and became a part of § 2732, Revised Statutes of Ohio. In 1894 (see 91 O. L. 216) this particular paragraph was amended and made to read as follows: "All buildings belonging to institutions of purely public charity and all buildings belonging to and used exclusively for armory purposes by lawfully organized military organizations which are and shall continue to be fully armed and equipped at their own expense, by law made and subject to all calls of the governor for troops in case of war, riot, insurrection, or invasion, together with the land actually occupied by such institutions and that owned by and used as sites for such armory buildings of said military organizations, not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit, and all moneys and credits appropriated solely to sustain, and belonging exclusively to, said institutions and military organization."

In May, 1908 (99 O. L. 449), a further change was made, and the paragraph then read: "All property belonging to institutions of purely public charity, and all buildings belonging to and used exclusively for armory purposes by lawfully organized military organizations which are and shall continue to be fully armed and equipped at their own expense and by law made subject to all calls of the governor for troops in case of war, riot, insurrection, or invasion, together with the land actually occupied by such institutions and that owned and used as sites for such armory buildings of said military organizations, not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit, and all moneys and credits appropriated solely to sustain, and belonging exclusively to, said institutions and military organizations."

In February, 1910, the report of the codifying commission was adopted by the legislature of Ohio, and thereafter the exemption of institutions of purely public charity was entirely disassociated from those of armory organizations, with which they had been classified since 1894, and associated instead with county, township, and village infirmaries. General Code, § 5353. And the exemption of armory organizations was provided for in separate § 5354, General Code. An examination of these several enactments will disclose the fact that from 1852 to 1908, the statutes read, "All buildings belonging to institutions of purely public charity," etc., whereas in 1908 the word "buildings" was changed to the word "property." It is around the change of the word "buildings" to "property" that counsel for the institute seek to build their case in the first instance. It must be noted, however, that the language, "together with the land actually occupied by such institutions," remains intact in all of the several statutes, commencing with the original act of 1852, down to and including the act of May 9, L.R.A.1916D.

1908. If we eliminate from § 2722, Revised Statutes, as amended May 9, 1908, all reference to armory organizations, we will find it reading as follows: "All property belonging to institutions of purely public charity, . . . together with the land actually occupied by such institutions, . . . not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit,"—which is precise in terms with the original act of 1852, excepting the change above referred to of "buildings" to "property."

It is contended by the Benjamin Rose Institute that in the act of May 9, 1908, the words, "together with the land actually occupied by such institutions," have no proper place or significance, for the reason that, since the general assembly expressly exempted all property belonging to institutions of purely public charity, this latter phrase was not intended to be, and cannot be construed to be, a limitation upon the express provisions of the statute. With this interpretation the court cannot agree. If these words are to be construed as a limitation upon the express provisions of the statute as originally enacted and as amended from time to time, we can find no possible warrant authorizing a different interpretation simply by reason of the substitution of the word "property" for "buildings." We feel it to be of significance that these express words of limitation were carried into the acts from 1852 to 1908, inclusive, and are a clear and distinct expression of the legislative will to the effect that only such property as might be actually occupied and used by the institution of purely public charity, subject to the still further limitation that even that property should not be leased or otherwise used with a view to profit, was to be released from its share of the public burden of taxation. The legislature, from the beginning to the time the codifying commission did a little legislating on its own account, has been consistent on the subject.

We now approach a consideration of the question from quite a more difficult angle, and go to the main question, involving an interpretation of § 5353, as passed in February, 1910, upon which counsel for the institute chiefly rely in their effort to exempt this property from taxation. Section 5353 is as follows: "Sec. 5353. Lands, houses and other buildings belonging to a county, township, city or village, used exclusively for the accommodation or support of the poor, and property belonging to institutions of public charity only, shall be exempt from taxation."

We are concerned, of course, only in the interpretation of the latter clause of this section. It will be observed that neither the phrase, "together with the land actually occupied by such institutions," nor the clause, "not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit," as employed in § 2732, Revised Statutes, is to be found in § 5353, General Code, it being stripped to the narrow confines of this language: "Property belonging to institutions of public charity only, shall be exempt from taxation."

This language should be interpreted by certain rules, one of which is: "Where all the general statutes of a state are revised and consolidated, there is a strong presumption that the same construction which the statute received before revision should be applied to the enactment of its revised form, although the language may have been changed." State ex rel. Baumgardner v. Stockley, 45 Ohio St. 308, 13 N. E. 279; State ex rel. Clough v. Shelby County, 36 Ohio St. 326; and German-American Ins. Co. v. McBee, 85 Ohio St. 173, 97 N. E. 378.

The plaintiff in error maintains that the case must turn upon the interpretation to be given the words "belonging to," and that the test is no longer one of the actual occupancy or use of the property, but simply one as to whether the institution administering the charity is the owner thereof. If the Constitution of our state was silent on the subject of exemption of property from taxation, and if the general assembly had the power to handle the subject wholly at its discretion, as it did under the Constitution of 1802, we might accede to the views of the counsel for the institute, especially since the charity created by Benjamin Rose is of such a commendable and praiseworthy character. That a beneficent public service can be and no doubt is being rendered by the institute cannot be questioned, and it is entitled to a fair and reasonable interpretation of the statute under which it asks exemption. This institute is not seeking relief from sordid or unworthy motives of any kind or character, and is, we believe, only desirous that its income be not diminished by the amount necessary to pay taxes thereon, in order that it may more effectually and on a larger scale carry on its kindly work. It must be admitted by all interested parties that the charity created by Benjamin Rose does benefit the state, in that it affords relief to the aged and needy and to the crippled young, and affords it in such a manner as to protect the beneficiary from the loss of self-respect. The testator did render a distinct public service in devoting his immense fortune to this purpose, and did possibly render to the state a fair equivalent for the release of his estate from taxation. In view of the peculiar merit of this charity, we are disposed to relax to some extent the rule of construction established in the case of Cincinnati College v. State, supra, the second proposition of which case reads: "All laws exempting any of the property in the state from taxation, being in derogation of equal rights, should be construed strictly."

L.R.A.1916D.

But this court, as well as the general assembly, has certain limitations; i. e., those recited in the Constitution, that gave both bodies their very existence. The provision on the subject is (see § 2, art. 12). " . . . Institutions of purely public charity . . . may, by general laws, be exempted from taxation."

Impressed with the duty of interpreting this language reasonably and even liberally, and giving the fairest and most reasonable construction allowable, we cannot extend to it so broad a meaning as to grant the relief which the institute asks. The all but universal judicial deliverances along the line have had the effect of confining the exemption to such property as is directly used and employed by the institution in the actual carrying on of the business of the charity. Perhaps the most thoughtful and best reasoned of the cases outside of our immediate jurisdiction are to be found in Pennsylvania and Georgia, in both of which states the constitutional limitations on the subject of exemption from taxation are alike with ours, word for word. Reference is made to the cases of American Sunday School Union v. Philadelphia, 161 Pa. 307, 23 L.R.A. 695, 29 Atl. 26; and Academy of Richmond County v. Bohler, 80 Ga. 159, 7 S. E. 633.

In the former of these two cases it is observed by Mr. Justice Dean:

"By no judicial rule of construction can these words be made to mean that a commercial enterprise is exempt because the whole profit of it goes into the treasury of, and it is carried on by, a purely public charity. In so far as the institution is charitable, and its revenues are derived from the contributions of the charitable, it is protected by the Constitution. But, if such institution sees fit to engage in trade for the purpose of increasing its revenue, or making any part of its business 'self-supporting,' the trade part of its business can be taxed, and ought to be."

"Nor does the fact that the profits gathered on the counter of the bookstore are devoted to the primary object of the charity, which is purely public, in any degree affect the character of the trading or commercial enterprise. Every dollar the society expends is some charitable contributor's gains or profits from some business not charitable. If such contributor devoted the whole of his profits from the sale of dry goods, gro-series, or books to promote this particular charity, that fact would not make the source of such profit a purely public charity. And if, as the master has found, the society was compelled to put a part of its operations on a basis that was self-supporting, by starting a bookstore to sell books only of a high moral character and standard publications, that is trade. That the entire profits of this branch of the business are devoted to the purposes of the charity no more changes its business nature than if, instead of a bookstore, the society had established and carried on a shoestore. It might have operated a farm or rolling mill with the same end in view, to put the society, as the master aptly says, on a basis that was self supporting; but the end would not have exempted the business from taxation."

In the Georgia case it is said: "That the word 'institution,' both in legal and colloquial use, admits of application to physical things, cannot be questioned. One of its meanings, as defined in Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, is 'an establishment, especially of a public character, affecting a community.' And one of the meanings of 'establishment,' as defined by the same authority, is 'the place in which one is permanently fixed for residence or business; residence with grounds, furniture, equipage, etc., with which one is fitted out; also, any office or place of business, with its fixtures.' The term "institution" is sometimes used as descriptive of an establishment or place where the business or operations of a society or association are carried on; at other times it is used to designate the organized body.' Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 244. See also Abbott's Law Dict. and Indianapolis v. Sturdevant, 24 Ind. 391. . . . A charitable institution, in the ideal sense, may embody and manifest itself physically and impersonally in a place of business for permanent occupation, with all needful buildings, furniture, outfit, and supplies, for the continuous exertion of its activities. . . .

"In the case of a poorhouse, the realty might embrace, besides the land covered with the necessary buildings, grounds for recreation, exercise, for pasture of the animals, and even a farm for the inmates to cultivate. The establishment, as a whole, might embrace all these, with articles of personalty to any needful extent for supplying the inmates with all the comforts of life, and keeping them in a healthy, virtuous, cheerful, and contented state of existence. We doubt not the entire establishment, however extensive or composite, would be exempt from taxation if used directly and solely for public charity, and not as a source of profit or income. . . . The scheme of exemption as to other than public property seems to be this: To exempt all that is used immediately and directly as a part of the establishment in the conduct of the regular business there carried on, but not such as may be devoted to other uses, such as farming, merchandizing, manufacturing, etc., and from which profit or income is derived. It is the use of the property which renders it exempt or non-exempt not the use of the income derived from it. Cincinnati College v. State, 19 Ohio, 110; Cleveland Library Asso. v. Pelton, 36 Ohio St. 258; New Orleans v. St. Patrick's Hall Asso. 28 La. Ann. 512; Detroit Young Men's Soc. v. Detroit, 3 Mich. 172; State, Elizabeth Library Asso., Prosecutor, v. Leester, 28 N. J. Eq. 103.

"Property used to produce income to be expended in charity is too remote from the ultimate charitable object to be exempt. If property is allowed to be used as taxed property, it also is to be taxed. If it competes, in the common business and occupations of life, with the property of other owners, it must bear the tax which theirs bears. Thus, if even a synagogue or a church were rented out during the week for a storeroom or a shop, though divine service might be performed in it on Saturday or Sunday, and though the rents were all appropriated to religious or charitable uses, its exemption would be lost. . . . When the tax officer goes forth to search for taxable property, all which he finds employed in the ordinary uses of common life, unless it belongs to the public, he is to regard as taxable. When exemption is claimed, he is not to look for persons, natural or artificial, nor for ideal beings, but for real, visible things, for places of religious worship, places of burial, institutions of purely public charity, colleges, academies, and seminaries of learning, public libraries, and the real and personal estate used by or connected therewith, books, apparatus, paintings, and statuary kept in public halls, etc., and, unless they are in present tangible existence, he cannot exempt something else which he is informed will be used to produce them hereafter. In other words, he is not to spare a form of property not enumerated because, for the time being, it represents a part or the whole of one or more of the forms which are enumerated. The exemption is not a release in personam, but a release in rem, and the res to which the release applies must be found and identified by the officer, or no exemption can be recognized."

We gather from these two cases, as well as from the several Ohio cases, these two general and controlling rules of interpretation:

(1) It is the use of the property which renders it exempt or nonexempt, not the use of the income derived from it.

(2) The exemption is not a release in personam, but a release in rem, and the res to which the release applies must be found and identified by the officer, or no exemption can be recognized.

We are bound to apply these settled rules of construction to the case now before us, with the further admonishment that the act of 1910 must be construed together with the constitutional limitation surrounding it. If we gave to the last word of the general assembly on this subject the enlarged scope that is asked, we would so interpret it as to bring it in direct and obvious conflict with the organic law. To enlarge upon a provision of the Constitution beyond the express limitation it permits in the way of privilege and immunities is just as repugnant to the instrument as it would be for the general assembly to attempt to enact into law some measure especially prohibited by the Constitution.

The property belonging to this institution is being commercially used. It is competing with other landlords in the city of Cleveland in securing tenants for its business houses and residences. The trustees of this property would be derelict in duty if they did not secure from the occupants of these several buildings the highest possible return. They must keep these buildings in repair, by the express terms of the trust, and to do this they must draw on the rental income therefor. No pretense is made that the Citizens' Savings & Trust Company, the holding trustee, is managing this property on any other than strictly money-making principles consistent with honesty and fair dealing. The case under consideration presents even stronger and more conclusive reasons why this property should not escape taxation than did the facts and circumstances which developed in the case of Cincinnati College v. State, 19 Ohio, 110, and that case cannot be disregarded as an authority simply because the court at that time was interpreting a statute without constitutional limitations, rather than a statute that had its authority directly from the Constitution. In that case Caldwell, J., says at page 114 of 19 Ohio:

"This property is most of it leased and used with a view to profit. . . . But when any society, no matter of what kind, whether scientific, literary, or religious, enters the common business of life, and uses property for the purpose of accumulating money, the government should, and we think the statute does, treat it in the same way persons are dealt with who are using property in a similar manner, and engaged in the same business. . . .

"The legislature could not, without a flagrant violation of the principles of equality on which our institutions are founded, make a distinction such as is contended for, between the store of the Cincinnati College and that of an individual. . . . As we have before intimated, the law applies to the property as it finds it in use, and not to what may be done with its accumulations in future."

In the case at bar the trustee is frankly and yet properly using the property under its control for the purpose of accumulating money. It is the use of property for purposes other than making money that justifies its exemption from taxation, and all Constitutions and laws on this subject are fairly replete with this spirit, and no other. The end sought is the public good, and not injustice. The small home owner, struggling sometimes amidst adverse surroundings, deserves consideration at our hands. His burden of taxation is made heavier whenever property of any kind is withdrawn from the field of taxation. The competitors of the trustee, engaged in the same line of business in the city of Cleveland, are pursuing the necessary and commendable pursuit of procuring a livelihood. They are self-supporting agents in the community, entitled to consideration and fair dealing. They, together with the small home owner, pay their share of the public burden for fire protection, police protection, the maintenance of courts of justice, and the many other instrumentalities that society employs to make the ownership of private property possible. If the institute were to sell all of the real estate devised to it for the use of the Benjamin Rose Institute, and should assemble the proceeds in one, two, three, or any number of buildings wherein the objects of the charity were to be carried out, the buildings thus being segregated and removed from their present commercial use, then they would present the ideal property subject to exemption from taxation. The trustee is not engaged in any respect in charitable work, nor will it ever be so far as the property of Benjamin Rose is concerned. Nothing more than the income can ever be used by the institute to further the purposes set forth in the instrument creating it. Therefore the income, after it is actually paid over to the institute, is the only property belonging to the body that can be held to be exempt from taxation. In this case the income is the res to which the exemption applies.

We interpret the language employed in § 5353, General Code, to have the effect of exempting from taxation the property belonging to this institution only so far as it is used and employed by the institution for purposes of charity. Any other construction would require the court to hold that the legislature exceeded its power and directly violated the Constitution. Making use of the choice of two possible constructions, we prefer the interpretation that will permit the act to survive, relying in this connection upon the well-established rule of interpretation that, as between two possible interpretations of a provision which is on its face doubtful, that one which will result in sustaining the law as against a constitutional objection will be followed, to the exclusion of another the effect of which would be to render the law unconstitutional.

In the case of Humphries v. Little Sisters of the Poor, 29 Ohio St. 201, the court in the second proposition of the syllabus defines "institution" in the following language: "The word 'institutions,' in the sixth clause of § 3 of the tax law, is used to designate the corporation or other organized body instituted to administer the charity, and the real estate described as belonging to such institutions has reference to property owned by them; and, to entitle such institutions to hold the property exempt from taxation, they must not only own it, but it must be so used as to fulfil the requirements of the statute."

We ascertain, therefore, that the question now before the court is a much broader one than one simply as to whether the institution administering the charity is the owner thereof, as claimed by the trustee and institute; for in the Humphries Case, supra, the court distinctly holds that the institution must not only own the real estate, but it must be so used as to fulfil the requirements of the statute.

In conclusion brief reference to the amendment adopted in September, 1912, to § 2 of article 12 of the Constitution, may with propriety be made here. The language "institutions of purely public charity" has been eliminated, and substituted therefor are the words "institutions used exclusively for charitable purposes."

While the rights of the parties to this action, as to all taxes assessed prior to April, 1913, are to be determined by proper interpretation of the language of the Constitution as it existed at the time the taxes attached as a lien on the real estate of the institution, yet the court might regard this latest expression of the public will as one justifying a strict interpretation of all laws and statutes exempting property from taxation. It could not be contended for one moment that the property in question by any possible constitutional legislation could be exempt under the language of amended § 2 of article 12. Nor can it be maintained, under the provisions of § 2, article 12, in force from 1909 to 1913, that the property of Benjamin Rose should escape taxation, unless the decisions of our own state are to be overruled and those of most of our sister states disregarded.

More might be said, but perhaps more than is necessary has already been said. When one reflects over the many able and exhaustive opinions on this and immediately correlated subjects already to be found in our reports, it might be said that this particular exposition is a work of supererogation, or rather an attempt to gild gold already refined, but the very great importance and ever-living interest in the subject fairly justify the labor devoted to it and the space it will occupy in the archives of the court.

The judgment of Circuit Court is accordingly affirmed.

Newman, Jones, and Matthias, JJ., concur.

Wanamaker, J., dissents.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

AMERICAN FIDELITY COMPANY OF MONTPELIER, VERMONT, Plff. in Err.,
v.

SAMUEL E. ECHOLS.

(— Okla. —, 155 Pac. 1160.)

Insurance — accident on conveyance — double indemnity.

1. In an action upon an accident insurance policy providing a double indemnity for any bodily injury caused solely by external, violent, or accidental means, while the policy is in force, and while the insured is in or on a public conveyance provided by a common carrier for the regular transportation of passengers, it is not necessary for a recovery of the double indemnity that the accident for which recovery is had should have been the result of the operation or construction of the conveyance provided by such common carrier, if all the other conditions involving the double indemnity be properly established.

Note. — For scope and construction of the provision in an accident policy for indemnity in case of injury while riding in or on a public conveyance, see notes to Primrose v. Casualty Co. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 618, and Georgia L. Ins. Co. v. Easter, L.R.A.1915C, 456.

Headnotes by BURFORD, C.
L.R.A.1916D.

For other cases, see Insurance, VI. 3, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — exclusion of evidence — reversal.

2. A cause will not be reversed for the exclusion of evidence, unless it appears that such exclusion might have been prejudicial to the plaintiff in error.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trial — interference with verdict.

3. The jury are the triers of the facts, and where their verdict is reasonably supported by the evidence, this court will not weigh the testimony to determine whether or not it would have reached the same conclusion.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. l, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 7, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court for Greer County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover indemnity for the loss of a hand under the terms of an accident insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. James R. Ross and L. D. Threlkeld for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. A. R. Garrett and S. B. Garrett for defendant in error.

Burford, C., filed the following opinion:

This was an action by Samuel E. Echols against the American Fidelity Company, of Montpelier, Vermont, to recover indemnity for the loss of a hand, under the terms of an accident policy issued by the plaintiff in error in his favor. A trial was had to the jury, and a verdict returned in favor of the defendant in error (plaintiff in the court below), which verdict was approved by the court, and judgment rendered thereon.

It is alleged as error: First, that the plaintiff was allowed to recover a double indemnity, which was not justified under the terms of the policy; second, that competent questions on behalf of the plaintiff in error were excluded by the court; third, that the demurrer of the plaintiff in error to the evidence should have been sustained.

1. The evidence on the part of the defendant in error in the court below tended to show that he was injured by the accidental discharge of a shotgun while he was a passenger upon a regular passenger train operated by the Wichita Falls & Northwestern Railway Company. The policy provided in part as follows: "American Fidelity Company of Montpelier, Vermont, . . . hereby agrees to indemnify the insured against bodily injury caused solely by external, violent, or accidental means while this policy is in force, suicide, sane or insane not included, in the sum specified in § 1 of schedule 6; or if such bodily injury is sustained while the insured is in or on a passenger elevator or public conveyance provided by a common carrier for the regular transportation of passengers, or is in consequence of the burning of a building or its destruction by a tornado or cyclone while the insured is therein, in the sum specified in § 2 of schedule A."

After providing for an indemnity for total or partial disability, the policy then proceeds: "If the injury causing such total or partial disability is sustained while insured is in or on a passenger elevator or public conveyance provided by a common carrier for the regular transportation of passengers, or is in the consequence of the burning of a building, or its destruction by a tornado or cyclone, while the insured is therein, the company will pay for the period of such disability double the weekly indemnity above provided."

It is insisted by plaintiff in error that "it was never contemplated by the insurance company that executed and delivered this policy that the beneficiary would be entitled to receive double indemnity if he accidentally maimed himself while on a train. . . . He did not lose his hand in consequence of being on a train. He did not sustain the loss of his hand in consequence of any extra hazard incident to traveling in this way."

The intention of the parties in a case of this sort must be gathered from the terms of the written contract into which they have entered. There is no limitation therein to the effect that the accident for which the double indemnity is paid shall be the result of the operation or construction of any of the conveyances mentioned therein. The policy, by its terms, affords the double indemnity for "bodily injury caused solely by external, violent, or accidental means," "while the insured is in or on a passenger elevator or public conveyance provided by a common carrier, for the regular transportation of passengers." There can be no question that the loss of the hand was sustained while Echols was a passenger in a public conveyance provided by a common carrier for the regular transportation of passengers. The language of the policy leaves no room for construction. Even if it were doubtful, the settled rules of law would require us to give it the construction most favorable to the insured. In Travelers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 666, 32 L. ed. 308, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1360, Mr. Justice Harlan, speaking for the court, said: "Such being the contract, the court must give effect to its provisions according to the fair meaning of the words used, leaning, however—where the words do not clearly indicate the intention of the parties—to that interpretation which is most favorable to the insured."

In Standard Acci. Ins. Co. v. Hite, 37 Okla. 305, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 986, 132 Pac. 333, this court said: "But even were we to consider that the meaning of the provision in the light of the facts before us was in doubt (which we do not), it would be our duty to give to the policy that construction which would give it effect rather than destroy it; the rule being that where the meaning of a policy of insurance is ambiguous, or if so drawn as to be fairly susceptible of different constructions, it will be construed strictly against the insurer, and that construction adopted which is most favorable to the insured."

Again in Capital F. Ins. Co. v. Carroll, 26 Okla. 286, 109 Pac. 535, this court, after announcing the same rule, says: "This is a just rule, because policies generally, as in this case, are drawn by the insurer, and it is its language that the court is invited to interpret."

Numerous other cases to the same effect are to be found in the decisions of this court. It was not error, therefore, for the court, under the circumstances of this case, to render judgment for the double indemnity provided in the policy.

2. Error is assigned upon the refusal of the court to allow plaintiff in error to ask certain questions upon cross-examination of the plaintiff, Echols. The three questions set out in the brief related to whether or not certain suits had been brought involving the property of the wife of the plaintiff, Echols, and which, it is insisted, tended to show his financial condition. As to each of these questions, if such a suit had been brought, the record evidence thereof was the best. Aside from this, however, the trial court allowed counsel for plaintiff in error to examine the plaintiff, Echols, at length upon his financial condition. Each of the three questions about which complaint is made relate to the purported suit brought against the plaintiff's wife to set aside deeds to property. In this connection the court allowed the following question and answer:

Q. Is it not a fact that for months prior to February 5, 1911, you anticipated the loss of the only property owned by yourself or wife?

A. No, sir; it is not a fact.
L.R.A.1916D.

In our judgment this question and answer fairly cover the material and admissible evidence which might have been properly adduced by the excluded question. Even if the questions were competent, still this court is not able to say that their exclusion worked any harm to the plaintiff in error. It has been held by this court that before it will consider assignments of error relating to the exclusion of evidence, there must be such showing in the record as to what the excluded evidence would have been, that the court can say that there was reversible error in the ruling. See Gault v. Thormond, 39 Okla. 673, 136 Pac. 742; Turner v. Moore, 34 Okla. 1, 127 Pac. 487, and cases cited. Although this rule might not be so strictly enforced with relation to questions upon cross-examination if it could be seen from the question itself that competent and admissible evidence might have been elicited thereby, yet a cause will not be reversed for the rejection of questions upon cross-examination, unless it can be determined, either from the form of the questions itself or from an offer of proof, that competent and admissible evidence might thereby have been excluded.

In the case under consideration, the plaintiff answered the third question of which complaint is made—which question embraced all the elements of the other two—by a denial, before an objection was made, and the objection was sustained after the answer had gone into the record. Although excluded, this answer makes it apparent that the testimony which might have been elicited by the question if permitted would have been of no benefit to the plaintiff in error. We conclude, therefore, that no reversible error was committed by such ruling.

3. The evidence of the plaintiff in the court below, if believed, established all the material allegations of his petition. Under such circumstances it was obviously not error for the trial court to overrule a demurrer to the evidence. The question of the reasonableness or the probability of the plaintiff's testimony was one solely for the jury. This court will not set aside the verdict of the jury upon the weight of the evidence, although the appellate court upon the record might not reach the same conclusion as that found by the jury. The rule is established beyond question in this jurisdiction that the appellate court will not set aside the verdict of a jury where there is any competent evidence reasonably tending to support it, nor weigh the evidence to determine whether or not the appellate court would have reached the same conclusion. The jury heard the witnesses, saw the scene of the alleged accident, and although the plaintiff's testimony appears improbable upon the record, yet the jury found it was true, its verdict was approved by an able and conscientious trial judge, and it will not be disturbed upon appeal.

The judgment should be affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

ALFRED HAWKSLEY

v.

THOMAS PEACE.

(— R. I. —, 96 Atl. 856.)

Weapon — accidental discharge — liability.

1. One is liable for injury to another by the accidental discharge of a firearm in his possession, unless he shows that the injury was unavoidable.

For other cases, see Negligence, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trespass — accidental discharge of firearm — injury.

2. Trespass lies for personal injuries caused by the accidental discharge of a firearm in possession of another.

For other cases, see Trespass, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

New trial — injury by discharge of firearm.

3. The court is not deprived of power to set aside a verdict in defendant's favor in an action to recover damages for accidental discharge of a firearm, and grant a new trial, on the theory that the jury was required to frame a measure of care to be exercised by defendant and determine whether or not he performed his duty, so that its decision cannot be disturbed by the court.

For other cases, see New Trial, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — granting of new trial — error.

4. An order granting a new trial will not be reversed if, upon the evidence, it cannot be said that the court was clearly in error in so doing.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. i, 7, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 22, 1916.)

EXCEPTION by defendant to an order of the Superior Court for Providence and Bristol Counties granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial in an action brought to recover damages for assault and battery. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — As to civil liability for injury by negligent discharge of firearms, see notes to Sieffer v. Paysee, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 119; Rudd v. Byrnes, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 134; and Annear v. Swartz, L.R.A.1915E, 267. L.R.A.1916D.

Messrs. Sullivan & Sullivan and John J. Sullivan for defendant.

Messrs. Irving Champlin and Malcolm D. Champlin for plaintiff.

Baker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of trespass for assault and battery. The declaration contains two counts, the first of which alleges "that the defendant on, to wit, the 7th day of June, A. D. 1914, in Cranston, in said county, . . . was then and there possessed of a gun loaded with gunpowder and leaden bullets, which said gun, so loaded, he, the defendant, then and there held at or towards the plaintiff, and then and there with force and arms, with one of said bullets fired by him from said gun, struck and wounded the plaintiff in his left leg."

The second count charges assault and battery, without specifying the manner.

To this the defendant pleaded not guilty, and, specially, that "the shooting of said plaintiff was an accident unavoidable under the circumstances."

The case was tried before a court and jury in March, 1915, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant. Plaintiff duly filed a motion for new trial, which, after a hearing thereon, was granted. To this decision exception was taken, and the case is before this court on defendant's bill of exceptions, which contains this single exception.

The evidence at the trial showed the shooting to have been accidental. The evidence was conflicting as to how it happened. There was testimony to the effect that the plaintiff with a companion was propelling a boat in a creek or pond, and that the defendant, standing upon the bank about 30 feet away, shot at the boat and accidentally hit the plaintiff. The defendant's own account is that he was sitting on the bank with the loaded rifle at his side, on the ground, with its butt back of him; that he took hold of the barrel near the muzzle, and drew the rifle forward on the ground with the intention of placing it across his knees, and that in so doing it was discharged and the plaintiff was shot.

The initial subject of inquiry is as to the law which determines the civil liability for accidental injuries resulting from the use of firearms. This precise question has not been passed upon by this court. There is an abundance of authority, however, upon the question, all substantially along one line. Passing the case in the Year Book, 21 Hen. VII. 28 a, where one shot an arrow at a mark which glanced from it and struck another and it was held to be trespass, we come to Weaver v. Ward, Hobart, 134, decided in 1607. Weaver brought an action of trespass for assault and battery against Ward. The defendant pleaded that he was, amongst others, by command of the Lords of the Council, in a certain band of soldiers, and so was the plaintiff; and that they were skirmishing with their muskets charged with powder against another band of soldiers, and as they were so skirmishing, the defendant casualiter et per infortunium et contra voluntatem suam in discharging his piece, did hurt and wound the plaintiff. Upon demurrer, judgment was given for the plaintiff, for it was held that "no man shall be excused of a trespass . . . except it may be judged utterly without his fault; as if a man by force take my hand and strike you; or if here the defendant had said that the plaintiff ran across his piece when it was discharging; or had set forth the case with the circumstances so as it had appeared to the court that it had been inevitable and that the defendant had committed no negligence to give occasion to the hurt."

So, in Underwood v. Hewson, 1 Strange, 596 (1724), it appears that "the defendant was uncocking a gun, and, the plaintiff standing to see it, it went off and wounded him, and at the trial it was held that the plaintiff might maintain trespass."

These two cases, particularly Weaver v. Ward, have been cited with approval in numerous American reported cases relative to injuries arising from the accidental discharge of firearms, in which essentially the same rule as to liability has been recognized. For example, in Tally v. Ayres, 3 Sneed, 677, while the defendant was in the act of placing a loaded gun upon his arm or shoulder, from some cause unexplained in the proof, the gun was discharged, killing plaintiff's mare standing near by hitched to a post. In upholding a verdict for the plaintiff the court said: "To constitute an available defense in such cases, it must appear that the injury was unavoidable, or the result of some superior agency, without the imputation of any degree of fault to the defendant."

In Judd v. Ballard, 66 Vt. 668, 30 Atl. 96, plaintiff and defendant were riding at the rear end of a large express wagon, partly lying down, facing each other. While in this position, the defendant drew out his revolver and discharged it over the wheel of the wagon; after which, in some manner, while the revolver was still in his hands, it was discharged, the ball taking effect in the plaintiff's knee. There was a verdict for the plaintiff. The court upheld it saying: "The shooting of the plaintiff was an accident, but in no sense an unavoidable accident. It would not have occurred but for the defendant's carelessness. The test of liability is not whether the injury was accidentally inflicted, but whether the defendant was free from blame."

In Atchison v. Dullam, 16 Ill. App. 42, the defendant had a double-barreled breach-loading shotgun; one barrel had been discharged. While the defendant was attempting to insert a fresh cartridge, the other barrel went off and severely injured the plaintiff. In sustaining the verdict for the plaintiff the court said, citing, among others, three of the above cases: "They determine that if a person is injured by the discharge of a gun in the hands of another who has entire control of it, the burden is cast upon the latter to prove that the gun was not fired at him either intentionally or negligently, but the result was inevitable and without the least fault upon his part."

In Thompson on Negligence, vol. 1, § 787, the author says: "It has been held on very clear reasoning, that the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of a person, whereby damage is inflicted upon another, is of itself presumptive evidence of negligence sufficient to take the question to a jury. When it is considered that, to constitute a valid defense in such cases, it must appear that the injury was unavoidable, or the result of some superior agency without the imputation of any degree of fault upon the person carrying the dangerous weapon; when it is further considered that the injury is one which does not ordinarily happen where reasonable care is taken to avert it,—the propriety of this conclusion must be obvious."

See also Morgan v. Cox, 22 Mo. 373, 66 Am. Dec. 623; Vincent v. Stinehour, 7 Vt. 62, 29 Am. Dec. 145; Wright v. Clark, 50 Vt. 130, 28 Am. Rep. 496; Knott v. Wagner, 16 Lea, 481, 1 S. W. 155; Bullock v. Babcock, 3 Wend. 391; Hankins v. Watkins, 77 Hun, 360, 28 N. Y. Supp. 867; Beach v. Parmeter, 23 Pa. 196; Jennings v. Fundeburg, 4 McCord, L. 161; Morris v. Platt, 32 Conn. 75; Welch v. Durand, 36 Conn. 182, 4 Am. Rep. 55; Babel v. Manning, 112 Mich. 24, 36 L.R.A. 523, 67 Am. St. Rep. 381, 70 N. W. 327, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 458; McCleary v. Frantz, 160 Pa. 535, 28 Atl. 929; Winans v. Randolph, 169 Pa. 606, 32 Atl. 622; Glueck v. Scheld, 125 Cal.

288, 57 Pac. 1003, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 249; Seltzer v. Saxton, 71 Ill. App. 229; Gilmore v. Fuller, 99 Ill. App. 272; Rudd v. Byrnes, 156 Cal. 636, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 134, 105 Pac. 957, 20 Ann. Cas. 124; Manning v. Jones, 95 Ark. 359, 129 S. W. 791; Sutton v. Bonnett, 114 Ind. 243, 16 N. E. 180; Chataigne v. Bergeron, 10 La. Ann. 699; Harper v. Holcomb, 146 Wis. 183, 130 N. W. 1128; State use of Johnston v. Cunningham, 107 Miss. 140, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1179, 65 So. 115; Annear v. Swartz, — Okla. —, L.R.A. 1915E, 267, 148 Pac. 706, 9 N. C. C. A. 518; Addison, Torts, Am. ed. 1878, vol. 1, 568; 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 686; 1 Thomp. Neg. §§ 779, 780; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 519; 40 Cyc. 872.

The question has sometimes arisen as to the appropriate action in cases of this kind, whether it should be trespass or case. The early actions were generally brought in trespass. Examination will show that as to the American cases at present in some of the older states, whose practice may be said to follow the common law, the action of trespass is preferably employed, while in the newer states and in others which have adopted codes, actions for damages for injuries resulting from accident by shooting are now generally in case. Brennan v. Carpenter, 1 R. I. 474, was an action for trespass on the case for an injury to the plaintiff's horse and chaise, hitched in a public street, caused by the defendant negligently driving his team against them. After a verdict for the plaintiff, the defendant moved to set aside the verdict, on the ground of the refusal of the trial court to charge the jury that, if they found the injury was the immediate effect of defendant's act of force, he was not liable in an action of trespass on the case and the jury should bring in a verdict of not guilty. From the authorities the court deduced these rules, namely: "(1) Where the injury complained of is the effect of negligence, though the force be immediate or direct, the plaintiff may maintain his action of trespass on the case, or trespass, at his option. (2) But where the injury is the effect of force direct and intentional, the action must be trespass, and not case."

As the evidence in that case showed that the injury was unintentional, the verdict was upheld. The question of the form of action in a case like the one now under consideration is therefore of no importance in this state.

It is also generally held that the form of action does not affect the rule as to liability. In Atchison v. Dullam, supra, on page 44 of 16 Ill. App., the court says: "But whether the liability of the defendant is sought to be enforced in an action of trespass or in any action on the case can make no particular difference, as the rule of law upon which the defendant's liability is to be established is the same in either form of action."

In Morgan v. Cox, supra, the action was of the nature of case. The court, after commenting on the rule of liability in trespass, on page 377 of 22 Mo. says:

"The change that has been introduced by the new code in the remedy has not changed the rules of law as to the liability of the parties."

The reason of this is that the liability is founded on negligence in both forms of action. This is well stated on page 87 of 32 Conn., in Morris v. Platt, supra (which was a case of shooting), as follows: "We have seen that if the injury had been consequential and the form of action case, the defendant would not have been liable, and the question returns whether he can and should be holden liable because the injury was direct and immediate and the form of action is trespass. I think not, whether the decision of the question be made upon principle or governed by authority. . . . The foundation of that liability in every case of accident, where it is the result of human agency uninfluenced by the operations of nature, and the act is lawful, is really negligence. This is true of collisions between vessels on the water, or horses or vehicles and persons upon the land, which constitute the largest class of cases. . . . So, when a man in firing at a mark unintentionally wounds another, the injury is direct and the form of action is trespass, but the ground of liability is negligence in doing an unnecessary and avoidable though lawful act, without that extraordinary degree of care which the law demands in such circumstances, and which would have prevented the accident. As therefore the foundation of the liability is the same in both cases, irrespective and independent of the question whether the injury was direct or consequential, there is no reason for any distinction in respect to the justification in the two actions."

See also Stanley v. Powell [1891] 1 Q. B. 86, 60 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 52, 63 L. T. N. S. 809, 39 Week. Rep. 76, 55 J. P. 327, where after a careful consideration of the English cases, it is held that in a case of accidental shooting neither case nor trespass could be maintained unless the injury were the result of negligence.

In Weaver v. Ward, Hobart, 134, supra, negligence is clearly recognized as the rule of liability when it is said that no man shall be excused "except it may be judged utterly without his fault." Illustrating how a defendant might successfully excuse his act, it mentions, among other things, that he might set forth the case with circumstances so as it had appeared to the court that it had been "inevitable." This word has been used in some of the reported cases of accidental shooting above cited in stating the degree of care to be exercised. It appears in the citation from Achison v. Dullam, supra. Of course an inevitable accident furnishes a good defense, but we do not think it is true that in order to constitute a defense in a case of accidental shooting it is necessary to show that the act was inevitable, if that word is to be taken in its strictest sense. It is ordinarily a more emphatic and stronger word than its synonym "unavoidable," which we think is the more satisfactory word for use in stating the rule of liability in these cases. See the discussion as to the use of the word "inevitable" in Stanley v. Powell, supra. In concluding this discussion of the law governing the civil liability for accidental injuries resulting from the use of firearms as applicable to the present case, inasmuch as it is admitted that the plaintiff was injured by the discharge of a gun while it was being handled by the defendant, it was incumbent upon the latter, in order to excuse himself from liability for the injury, to show that the discharge was entirely without his fault, and that it happened by accident unavoidable by him.

One other point raised by the defendant remains for consideration. Ordinarily, whether or not the person causing such an injury used the care required of him in the circumstances is a question for a jury. 1 Thomp. Neg. § 780. See McCleary v. Frantz, 160 Pa. 535, 28 Atl. 929, and Moebus v. Becker, 46 N. J. L. 41. These two cases and the one following are cited on defendant's brief. In Winans v. Randolph, 169 Pa. 606, 32 Atl. 622, which was a case of accidental shooting, there was a verdict for the plaintiff. In its opinion, affirming the judgment below, the court said: "Where the standard of duty is not fixed, but varies with the circumstances as developed by the testimony, the question of negligence is for the jury. No fixed standard could be applied to the facts of this case."

There is a similar statement in McCleary v. Frantz, supra, in which a verdict for the plaintiff was upheld, and which was before the court on exceptions of defendant to his request to charge, certain of which asked for the direction of a verdict in his favor on account of plaintiff's contributory negligence.

The defendant in the present case, claiming that it is a case in which the standard of duty is not fixed by law, says in his L.R.A.1916D.

brief: "Being a case in which the jury itself had to frame a measure of care to be exercised by defendant and fix a standard of duty to be regarded by defendant, and then compare the actual conduct of defendant with such measure or standard fixed by itself, the conclusion of the jury is conclusive, and not to be disturbed by the trial justice."

This statement is in effect that in such case on a motion for a new trial, although the trial judge may be of opinion that "the jury . . . failed to respond truly to the real merits of the controversy," and "that the verdict fails to administer substantial justice," he is without power to disturb the verdict. There is, of course, no merit in such a claim.

We think the statement in Winans v. Randolph, that in cases of this kind "the standard of duty is not fixed, but varies with the circumstances," is inapt and misleading. As has already been shown, there is an established standard of duty imposed upon those handling firearms. To excuse an injury caused by one handling them, it must appear that the injury was unavoidable by him. The rule is of necessity a general one. An attempt to fashion rules of conduct for all possible future emergencies, would be futile. Human foresight cannot provide by a specific rule how individuals are to conduct themselves in order to escape liability in the almost infinite variety of conditions and circumstances under which accidents caused by them may occur. Accordingly, in cases of accidental shooting the question of negligence is held to be, primarily at least, for the jury to determine by applying said rule to the facts as found by them in their consideration of the testimony. The same thing is true in most cases of every kind whatsoever brought for the recovery of damages for injuries claimed to result from negligence. It is not clear that McCleary v. Frantz and Winans v. Randolph go beyond this. In Moebus v. Becker, supra, the plaintiff requested the court to charge the jury that if they believed from the evidence that certain facts were established the defendant was guilty of negligence. The court refused to so charge. An exception was taken and there was a verdict for the defendant. The court of review said: "On this writ of error, which presents only the exception taken to the refusal of the court to charge as requested, the case is not in a position to decide the propriety of the verdict which the jury have found. The plaintiff puts himself on the single ground that it was not a proper case for the jury, and that the court erred in submitting it to them."

While it was held to be a proper case to be submitted to a jury, the opinion clearly implies that the propriety of the verdict rendered could have been challenged and therefore that it was not necessarily conclusive.

So far as the power of a trial judge to grant a new trial after verdict in cases like the one at bar is concerned, it must be held to be the same as in the ordinary case where conflicting testimony requires its submission to a jury. He is not concluded by the verdict in either case. His power and duty as to acting on a motion for new trial in a case like the one at bar are the same as is set forth in the opinions in Wilcox v. Rhode Island Co. 29 R. I. 292, 70 Atl.

913; Noland v. Rhode Island Co. 30 R. I. 246, 74 Atl. 914; and McMahon v. Rhode Island Co. 32 R. I. 237, 78 Atl. 1012, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1223.

Was the action of the trial judge in granting a new trial error? The grounds of his decision do not appear in the record. But, upon reading all of the reported testimony we are not prepared to say that he was clearly in error, even if the defendant's account of the accident were accepted as true.

Accordingly, defendant's exception is overruled, and the case is remitted to the Superior Court for a new trial.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

J. W. ADAMS, Resp't.,
v.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(— S. C. —, 87 S. E. 1007.)

Carrier — lost ticket — expulsion of passenger.

1. A carrier may expel from the train a passenger who fails to produce a ticket or pay fare, although by producing a baggage check he shows that he had a ticket, which he claims to have lost.

For other cases, see Carriers, II. h, 2, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — abusive language — liability.

2. A carrier may be liable in damages for using abusive language to a passenger expelled from the train for nonproduction of a ticket.

For other cases, see Carriers, II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 29, 1916.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Greenville County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged abusive language and for unlawful expulsion from defendant's train. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cothram, Dean, & Cothram, for appellant:

The passenger's right to ride depends upon the production of a ticket or the payment of fare; his immunity from ejection is limited to a reasonable time to search for the ticket, and his explanation that he had bought one, but was unable to find it, could not entitle him to ride, but only to a reasonable time for the search before being ejected.

2 Hutchinson, Carr. § 1036; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Willard, 31 Ill. App. 435; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Smith, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 4, 84 S. W. 582; Bolles v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 134 Mo. App. 696, 115 S. W. 459; Rogers v. Atlantic City R. Co. 57 N. J. L. 703, 34 Atl. 11, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 511; Nutter v. Southern R. Co. 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1700, 78 S. W. 470; Harp v. Southern R. Co. 119 Ga. 927, 100 Am. St. Rep. 212, 47 S. E. 206; Price v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 46 W. Va. 538, 33 S. E. 255; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Smith, 81 C. C. A. 598, 152 Fed. 608, 10 Ann. Cas. 939; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mason, 4 Ala. App. 353, 58 So. 963.

The plaintiff had not established his rights as a passenger, and for that reason cannot claim the benefit of the rule which requires extraordinary care toward that class.

Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Barton, 14 Ga. App. 160, 80 S. E. 530, 4 N. O. C. A. 998.

Mr. J. J. McSwain, for respondent:

Plaintiff as a passenger was entitled not only to transportation, but to courteous and proper treatment as a human being with feelings and sensibilities.

Osteen v. Southern R. Co. 101 S. C. 532, L.R.A.1916A, 565, 86 S. E. 30.

The circuit judge properly referred to the jury and left it with them to say whether or not it was the highest degree of care to eject a passenger under the circumstances, who claimed with apparent sincerity that he had misplaced his ticket.

Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 99 S. C. 397, 83 S. E. 604.

Fraser, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff bought a ticket at Green-

Note. — As to ejection of passenger who has lost or mislaid his ticket, see annotation following this case, post, 1184. L.R.A.1916D.

ville, South Carolina, for Gastonia, North Carolina. He checked his baggage and entered the train at Greenville for Gastonia. Just after the train left Greenville, the ticket collector came to him and asked for his ticket. The plaintiff told the ticket collector that he could not find his ticket. The collector went on through the car, and told the plaintiff to look carefully for it, and he would come back for it later. When the ticket collector returned, the plaintiff told him that he had lost his ticket. The collector then took the plaintiff to the conductor, who told the plaintiff he would have to produce the ticket, pay the cash fare, or get off. The plaintiff said he knew he would have to get off, as he had neither ticket nor money. The plaintiff testified that he showed the ticket collector his baggage check, and told him that, if he had not had a ticket, he could not have checked his baggage; that the ticket collector said, "There are enough dead beats now." The defendant's witnesses denied the exhibition of the baggage check and the language concerning "dead beats." After the plaintiff was put off the train, he found his ticket, which was in his pocket, and had been overlooked.

This action was brought for the insulting language and the unlawful expulsion from the cars. At the close of the plaintiff's testimony the defendant moved for a nonsuit on the whole case. There were two questions in this case: (1) Did the defendant have the right to eject the plaintiff? (2) If it had the right to eject him, did it have the right to eject him as a "dead beat?"

I. Did the defendant have the right to eject the plaintiff? It did. The presiding judge charged the jury that the carrier must heed the reasonable explanations of the passenger, and left it to the jury to say whether the explanation given was reasonable. The great weight of authority holds that, when a passenger loses his ticket, he is entitled to a reasonable time to find it, and, failing to find it, he must pay cash fare or get off the train. The reason is that it is in accord with a reasonable rule and a necessary rule. If this were not the rule, one ticket would always do for two. The passenger who bought the ticket could not be put off, because he had paid his fare. The passenger who had the ticket could not be refused transportation, because he had conclusive evidence, and the only evidence available to the passenger, that he had paid his fare. It would not even be necessary to show collusion, or that there should be collusion, because the passenger, after he had bought and paid for his ticket, and checked his baggage on it, might have dropped it and another could have found it.

This is not in conflict with the Smith Case, 88 S. C. 421, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 708, 70 S. E. 1057, nor the Teddars Case, 97 S. C. 153, 81 S. E. 474. In both of those cases the agent of the defendant had made a mistake in giving the wrong ticket. Here there was no mistake or fault of any sort on the part of the agent of the defendant. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff was unnerved by the conduct and words of the ticket collector of the defendant; but the plaintiff said he was unnerved by the loss of his ticket (his own fault), and not by anything said to him by the officials of the train. This is not in conflict with the Williams Case, 99 S. C. 397, 83 S. E. 604. In that case the plaintiff was ejected before she had time to find her ticket. In this case no further time was demanded, and so far as the record shows no further time was desired. The explanation was not, as a matter of law, a reasonable explanation, and that question should not have been submitted to a jury. The bare fact that a ticket is lost is not a reasonable explanation.

II. If it had the right to eject him, did it have the right to eject him as a "dead beat?" That raises the question: Was he so ejected? It was the province of the jury to determine the facts. Did the ticket collector use the language ascribed to him; and, if so, what, under all the circumstances, did the language mean? A passenger may have the right to ride. He must show his right by competent evidence. If he cannot show it, he must pay the cash fare or get off. If he does not get off, he may be put off without abusive language. Was abusive language used to him? If he was put off with unnecessary force, or was subjected to abusive language, the defendant is liable. No unnecessary force is in evidence, but abusive language is. Was it used? Let the jury say.

The judgment is reversed.

Gary, Ch. J., and Hydrick, Watts, and Gage, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Carriers: ejection of passenger who has lost or mislaid his ticket.

The authorities are unanimous in holding that a regulation made by a railroad corporation requiring passengers to exhibit their tickets when requested by the conductor, and directing the ejection from the cars of those who refuse to do so or pay fare, is a reasonable and proper one.

So, by virtue of such a regulation, a carrier may expel from a train a passenger who fails to produce a ticket or pay fare, although he may have had a ticket, which he claims to have lost or mislaid. (As to right of passenger to a reasonable time to find his ticket, see infra.) Louisville & N. E. Co. v. Mason (1912) 4 Ala. App. 353, 58 So. 963; Harp v. Southern R. Co. (1904) 119 Ga. 927, 100 Am. St. Rep. 212, 47 S. E. 206; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Willard (1889) 31 Ill. App. 435; Union Traction Co. v. Vestal (1915) — Ind. —, 110 N. E. 211; Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Joplin (1900) 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1380, 55 S. W. 206; Bolles v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. (1908) 134 Mo. App. 696, 115 S. W. 459; Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming (1884) 14 Lea (Tenn.) 128; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Smith (1905) 38 Tex. Civ. App. 4, 84 S. W. 852; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Beaver (1894) 22 Can. S. C. 498; Duke v. Great Western R. Co. (1857) 14 U. C. Q. B. 377.

So, one who gets on a train knowing that he has lost his ticket may be ejected upon refusal to pay his fare, without rendering the company liable therefor, although the conductor knew that he had bought and paid for a ticket. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McCormick (1907) 45 Tex. Civ. App. 425, 100 S. W. 202.

And an ejection for failure to produce a ticket or pay fare is lawful, although a passenger can prove by another railway employee that he had had a ticket which he had shown to such employee in response to the latter's request as to where he was going, and that as it was handed back to him it had blown away. Harp v. Southern R. Co. (1904) 119 Ga. 927, 100 Am. St. Rep. 212, 47 S. E. 206. The court stated that, had the passenger's money blown out of his hand, it is evident that his misfortune would have to fall upon himself, and not upon the company, and such loss would not have prevented his lawful ejection, and the same result would follow where the ticket itself is lost, for it might come into the hands of another, and the company might thereby be compelled to carry two passengers for one fare. Besides, any rule allowing an excuse to be substituted for a ticket would give rise to so much uncertainty and so many possibilities of fraud that the court has uniformly held that the failure to pay the fare or produce the ticket warrants an ejection.

Also one who gets upon a train without a ticket, it having been mislaid by the baggage master after checking the passenger's baggage, and not found before the train departed, may be expelled upon refusal to pay fare, and the company will not be liable for injuries caused by such ejection, they being the proximate result of the passenger's disregard of the duty which he owed the railroad company to use ordinary care to prevent an aggravation of the injuries resulting from the negligence of the company's agent in losing the ticket. Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Scott (1904) 34 Tex. Civ. App. 501, 79 S. W. 642.

And one may be lawfully ejected upon refusal to pay fare, although she has purchased a ticket, but has given it to a friend to keep for her, who fails to get on the train. Nutter v. Southern R. Co. (1904) 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1700, 78 S. W. 470.

And where a passenger has lost her ticket and is without money, the conductor is not required to accept her offer of jewelry as a pledge of the payment of the fare upon reaching her destination, as such offer is not tantamount to the presentation of a ticket or tender of money. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Smith (1905) 38 Tex. Civ. App. 4, 84 S. W. 852.

One who loses the conductor's check given to him in place of a ticket which the conductor has taken up may be required to pay fare or suffer expulsion. Jerome v. Smith (1876) 48 Vt. 230, 21 Am. Rep. 125.

But in Haines v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1913) 29 Ont. L. Rep. 558, 15 D. L. R. 714, it was held that one who loses the hat check which is given him by the conductor upon taking up his ticket cannot be expelled upon refusal to pay fare, under a railway by-law which provides that "whenever and so often as the conductor in charge of any train requests any passenger to produce and deliver up his or her ticket, such person shall comply with the request, or in default thereof shall be deemed to be a person refusing to pay his fare, within the meaning of § 217 of the railway act of 1903, and may be expelled from and put out of the train as therein provided." The court stated that the provisions of such by-laws should not be extended to the nonproduction of a hat check, and also that no by-law of the company was offered in evidence which contained any provisions as to using hat checks or which authorized or assumed to authorize the conductor to expel from his train a passenger to whom a hat check has been given in exchange for a ticket who does not produce it on demand of the conductor or pay fare.

In Butler v. Manchester, S. & L. R. Co. (1888) L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 207, one who had lost his ticket was held to have been improperly ejected on refusal to pay fare. The basis of the decision was that there was no statute or by-law empowering a conductor to eject a passenger under such circumstances. It was sought to justify the ejection under the following by-law: "No passenger will be allowed to enter any carriage used on the railway . . . unless furnished by the company with a ticket specifying the class of carriage and the stations for conveyance between which such ticket is issued. Every passenger shall show and deliver up his ticket to any duly authorized servant of the company when required to do so for any purpose, and any passenger traveling without a ticket, or failing or refusing to show or deliver up his ticket, as aforesaid, shall be required to pay the fare from the station whence the train originally started to the end of his journey." But it was held that this by-law did not authorize an ejection, as it imposed only an obligation that the passenger pay the fare from the place whence the train originally started to the place of his destination, and that, the court considered to be the only contract the company had with the passenger, and it could not be extended by implication to include the right to eject one who refused to carry out his obligation, the remedy of the company, if any, being to proceed against him for the amount of fare he refused to pay.

In Curtis v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1862) 12 U. C. C. P. 89, a passenger who had mislaid his ticket was, after the conductor waited some time for him to find it, ejected, although as he was being led out he offered to pay the fare. A verdict for plaintiff was affirmed, as it was the second verdict that plaintiff had obtained, although the court considered it excessive and had some misgivings as to defendant's liability.

A conductor exceeds his authority where he ejects a passenger who has mislaid his ticket, without demanding fare and giving him an opportunity to pay the same. Robson v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1880) 21 Hun (N. Y.) 387.

And a conductor has no right to eject a passenger who has mislaid his ticket if, after a reasonable opportunity to find it, he is willing and ready to pay his fare. (N. Y.) Ibid. L.R.A.1916D.

Commutation tickets.

A purchaser of a season ticket which contains the condition that it shall be subject to inspection at any time by the conductor, and if lost or mislaid will not be replaced by the company, may, in case the ticket is lost, be lawfully expelled from the train on refusal to pay the regular fare. Cresson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (1875) 11 Phila. (Pa.) 597. The basis of the decision was that the conditions were lawful, reasonable, and proper regulations, and that the amount saved by purchasing the ticket was ample consideration to support the contract imported by such conditions.

So, a purchaser of a nontransferable commutation ticket who has lost it and refuses, on account of such loss, to pay his fare on the train, may be ejected under a rule of the railroad company requiring a conductor to eject from the train a passenger who refuses to produce a ticket or pay his fare on demand. Crawford v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. (1875) 28 Ohio. St. 580.

The holder of a commutation ticket which contained an agreement that regular fare should be paid whenever the ticket was not produced was ejected upon refusal to pay regular fare, where he failed to produce the ticket because he had by mistake left it at home. Downs v. New York & N. H. R. Co. (1869) 36 Conn. 287, 4 Am. Rep. 77.

And the purchaser of a commutation ticket which stipulates that it shall be shown to the conductors each trip, and whenever required, may, if he loses the same, be refused admission to a train unless he pays the regular fare. Ripley v. New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. (1866) 31 N. J. L. 388.

In Rogers v. Atlantic City R. Co. (1895) 57 N. J. L. 703, 34 Atl. 11, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 511, a holder of a commutation ticket which contained a stipulation that "this ticket is to be surrendered to the conductor on the last trip taken during the period for which it is issued," on such last trip, instead of exhibiting and retaining the ticket when passing through the gate to the train, by mistake dropped it in a box which was there for the reception of tickets, and it was held that, upon failure to pay fare demanded, he was rightfully ejected. The court stated that "it is entirely obvious that any other rule would subject the conductors to the duty of an examination and adjudication of the rights of every passenger who chose to say that he had purchased and lost or mislaid his ticket, or that he had delivered it to some other agent of the company, from whom the conductor would be entirely unable to obtain any verification of the truth of the story of the passenger. Such a rule would be disastrous to the business of the railroad company, and it is just such consequences that the law permits the company and the passenger to contract against; and this, considered as a contract or regulation, must be deemed reasonable in view of the business of a common carrier of passengers."

But the holder of a commutation ticket containing an agreement that it shall be shown to the conductor when required cannot be ejected without being given a reasonable time to find it, if he informs the conductor that he has it upon his person, but is unable to find it at the time. Naples v. New York & N. H. R. Co. (1871) 38 Conn. 557, 9 Am. Rep. 434, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 104. The court stated that "the contract required him to show his ticket to the conductor, but he was not bound to do it immediately when requested. The conductor knew the plaintiff was a commuter, and the only question in his mind was whether the plaintiff would be able to produce his ticket. The plaintiff informed him that he had it, but was unable to find it because it was mislaid. Under such circumstances the plaintiff was entitled to ride so long as there was any reasonable expectation of finding it during the trip. Had a reasonable time been allowed him to find it, undoubtedly it would have been found, for it was upon his person and dropped from his garments when he undressed himself to retire that night." The court distinguished this case from Downs v. New York & N. H. R. Co. (Conn.) supra, stating that "there the plaintiff had left his ticket at home and so informed the conductor. The ticket could not by possibility be produced, and the plaintiff knew it and so did the conductor. Delay in that case would have been of no avail; the fact was certain. The case here is directly the opposite to that in this important respect." And further the court said: "In the Downs Case there was an express stipulation in the contract that he should pay his fare for the trip if the ticket should not be shown to the conductor when requested. Here, there was no such stipulation. It is true the contract required the plaintiff to show his ticket to conductors when requested by them, or when required by the rules of the company, but it may well be questioned whether the breach of such a condition in the contract gave the L.R.A. 1916D.

defendants the right to eject him from the train when they knew through their conductor that he was a commuter, and knew that his inability to produce the ticket arose simply from the fact that his ticket was mislaid. In the case of Downs the trip was virtually excepted from the operation of the ticket by the express stipulation in the contract to pay fare for the trip if the ticket should not be produced. The case was the same as it would have been if the contract had declared in express terms that the ticket should apply only to cases where it was produced, and all other cases should be excepted from its operation. Downs, therefore, was nothing more than a common passenger on the train without a common passenger ticket, and was liable to be dealt with as a common passenger. But here the contract embraced the trip as much as it did any other trip that the plaintiff might make on the road. The plaintiff agreed to show his ticket in like manner with other passengers. This was required in order that the conductor might know that he was a commuter. But the conductor knew the fact. The production of the ticket under such circumstances was the merest formality. Suppose the plaintiff had agreed with the defendants that he would show his ticket to the conductor three times during each passage over the road, and on the trip in question he had shown his ticket twice to the conductor, but when required the third time to produce it the ticket happened to be mislaid. Suppose the conductor should distinctly remember that the ticket had been twice produced, and the production of it the third time would give him no useful information. Would the defendants be justified in ejecting him from the train without an express stipulation in the contract that the plaintiff should pay the fare for the passage unless the ticket should be three times produced? We think not. So we think here. There must be something more than the merest technical breach of the contract in order to justify the defendants in rescinding it so far as it applied to the trip, and treating the plaintiff as a trespasser upon the train."

Sleeping and parlor car tickets.

That there are occasions when there should be exceptions to the general rule that a conductor is entitled to have either a ticket, a pass, or money, was the view taken by the court in Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Reed (1874) 75 Ill. 125, 20 Am. Rep. 232. In this case the passenger had purchased a ticket entitling him to a berth in one of the company's sleeping cars; this ticket he had presented to the porter of the sleeping car who, after he had assigned him to his berth, returned the ticket to him. Before the train started the conductor demanded his ticket, and upon his being unable to find it, and upon refusal to pay an additional fare for the berth, he was expelled from the car despite the assurance of the porter that he had seen it, and also the written statement of the ticket agent to whom the passenger had gone before the train started, that that passenger had purchased a certain berth. The ticket was found in the morning and returned to the passenger, who had been put into a day coach. In reversing the judgment for plaintiff as excessive, the court, being of the opinion that he was entitled to recover only the price paid for his ticket and a reasonable compensation for the trouble and inconvenience he suffered by being deprived of his berth in the sleeping car, said: "There is no dispute that the conductor was entitled to have from appellee either a ticket, a pass, or money before giving him a berth. We think the better rule is to require that, where the proof is clear and satisfactory, as it was in the present case, the applicant for the berth has bought his ticket, but has lost it, and it is limited to a particular berth and trip, and the circumstances are such that it is reasonably certain the company cannot be defrauded by the ticket being in the hands of another, he should have the berth. But this is not so clear that we can say a company should be punished by large exemplary damages merely because the employee failed to recognize in the circumstances an exception to the general rule under which he was required to act, for much may be plausibly and forcibly urged against the exception. While the ticket was, by its terms, limited to a particular berth and date, there was nothing upon it by which to designate who was its lawful holder. Any person having it in possession would, prima facie, be regarded as its owner and entitled to the designated berth. It does not conclusively follow that the purchaser of such a ticket at the company's office, merely because he is the purchaser, will use it himself. He may purchase for another, or, purchasing for himself, may subsequently change his mind and sell to another. A contest might thus arise between one claiming the berth because he had purchased the ticket, and another claiming it because he was the owner of the ticket, leaving the company to act at its peril in deciding between them."

So, also, a purchaser of a seat in a parlor car who, having lost the ticket, procured from the ticket agent the latter's personal card with the statement thereon, "This gentleman holds seat in 'Nocomus' this P. M., mislaid. C. E. Benedict," which he presented to the conductor with an explanation of the circumstances, was held in Buck v. Webb (1890) 58 Hun, 185, 11 N. Y. Supp. 617, to have been improperly ejected in view of the fact that the ticket lost was good only for that day and for that train, and that the diagram in the conductor's possession showed that the seat had been sold, and that no one appeared to claim the same. The court distinguished cases which involved passage or fare tickets which were not restricted to any car or train, or were detached in such a manner as to deprive the passenger of his right to the passage, or whose use had been limited to a time which had previously expired.

But to hold a sleeping car company liable in damages for refusing to permit a passenger to occupy, even on payment of fare, a berth for which he claims to have purchased a ticket which he claims to have lost, the refusal must be shown to be unreasonable, where the conductor's diagram shows all berths of the class claimed are sold, even though the passenger's claims are corroborated by another passenger. Armstrong v. Pullman Co. (1914) — Miss. —, L.R.A. 1915B, 1202, 66 So. 283. The court stated that there is a difference between the right of a passenger purchasing an ordinary railroad ticket and the right which he obtains in buying a sleeping car ticket. The railroad ticket entitles him to ride on a train of the company. A sleeping car ticket secures for him a designated place in a certain car which is reserved for his occupancy. If a railroad ticket should be lost another ticket could be sold in its place or cash fare accepted, and no interference would result with the right of another passenger. This will not be so where a sleeping car ticket is lost. A third person may have rights to be considered. A sleeping car ticket is not simply evidence of the passenger's right to ride on the train or in any car of the train, but it reserves for his use a designated part of the car known as a berth.

Right to reasonable time to find ticket.

A passenger whose ticket has been lost or misplaced has a right to be given a reasonable time within which to find the ticket before he can be ejected. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mason (1912) 4 Ala. App. 353, 58 So. 963, s. c. subsequent appeal (1914) 10 Ala. App. 263, 64 So. 154; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Willard (1889) 31 Ill. App. 435; Anderson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1909) 134 Ky. 343, 120 S. W. 298, 20 Ann. Cas. 920; Bolles v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. (1908) 134 Mo. App. 696, 115 S. W. 459; Hayes v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1884) 30 Alb. L. J. (N. Y.) 469; Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1914) 99 S. O. 397, 83 S. E. 604.

In International & G. N. R. Co. v. Wilkes (1887) 68 Tex. 617, 2 Am. St. Rep. 515, 5 S. W. 491, it was held that the jury were justified in finding that a conductor acted too hastily in ejecting from a car one who claimed to have mislaid his ticket and requested time to search for it, where only about a minute and a half elapsed between the time the conductor called for the ticket and the time the passenger was ejected, especially in view of the fact that the passenger had told the conductor he had shown it to the brakeman when he entered the car, and asked that he call the brakeman to verify such statement, but the conductor refused to do so.

And although an ejection is not accompanied with any insulting language or rough handling of a passenger's person, a jury will be warranted in inflicting punitive damages if they believe from the evidence that a passenger had a ticket and informed the conductor, when he approached him for it, that he had one, but that he had misplaced it, and was then endeavoring to get it and produce it, and that the conductor, in wanton, wilful, and knowing disregard of the passenger's right to be allowed a reasonable time within which to find his ticket, immediately stopped the train and ejected the passenger, giving him no chance to find and produce his ticket. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mason (1914) 10 Ala. App. 263, 64 So. 154.

But the rule that a passenger must be given a reasonable time within which to find a lost or mislaid ticket before he is ejected cannot apply unless the conductor is informed that such passenger has lost or mislaid it. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mason (1912) 4 Ala. App. 353, 58 So. 963. A reasonable time within which to produce a ticket which a passenger has not misplaced, but has ready to hand to a conductor, is one thing, and a reasonable time which should be allowed a passenger who has misplaced his ticket, and in good faith asks for time within which to produce it, is another thing. When a conductor, in the exercise of his duties, calls upon a passenger to produce his ticket, he has a right to presume, in the absence of information to the contrary, that the passenger has the ticket convenient upon his person, and that he needs only that reasonable time which a man of ordinary understanding and intelligence would naturally need to take it from his person and hand it over. If the passenger needs more than this usual time, he should inform the conductor of the circumstances, and, if he fails to do so, and suffers by reason of such neglect, it is his fault, and not that of the conductor.

Whether or not one who has mislaid his ticket has had a reasonable opportunity within which to find it or pay fare is a question of fact for the jury. Hayes v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1884) 30 Alb. L. J. (N. Y.) 469.

And the question of undue haste in ejecting a passenger 1 mile from the place of departure, where she claimed to have had a ticket, but to have mislaid it, was held to have been properly submitted to the jury in Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1914) 99 S. C. 397, 83 S. E. 604, especially in view of testimony that the ticket was found under the seat after the train had proceeded about 1½ miles further.

The time occupied by a passenger train in running from one regular station to another is amply sufficient to enable a passenger using ordinary diligence to produce and exhibit his ticket to the conductor. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Willard (1889) 31 Ill. App. 435.

Effect of baggage check.

A baggage check of itself does not constitute a token of one's right to transportation, who claims to have purchased a ticket, but lost it, and notwithstanding its presentation the conductor may demand the ticket or payment of cash fare, and the refusal or failure to comply with the demand would justify him in requiring such one to leave the train. Bolles v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. (1908) 134 Mo. App. 696, 115 S. W. 459. To hold otherwise, the court said, might result in subjecting the company to fraud and imposition, since it would enable the purchaser of a ticket to sell it after checking his baggage on it, and, by using his baggage check as a token of his right to transportation, to defraud the carrier in the transporting two passengers for one fare.

And a passenger who has lost her ticket and baggage check may be lawfully expelled on refusal to pay fare, although she informs the conductor that her baggage is in the baggage car and offers to go with him and identify it. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Smith (1905) 38 Tex. Civ. App. 4, 84 S. W. 852. The court stated that the fact that the passenger purchased a ticket upon which her trunk was checked furnishes but a weak and certainly unsatisfactory circumstance in corroboration of her verbal statement that she has lost her ticket; that the presence on the train of the trunk checked as she claims was not inconsistent with the idea that her ticket may have been sold.

And see also ADAMS v. SOUTHERN R. Co. ante, 1183.

But although a baggage check may not take the place of a ticket, it tends to corroborate the statement of a passenger that he had misplaced his ticket, and therefore was on the train as a passenger, and so is admissible in an action for wrongful ejection, as tending to show that the conductor acted hastily in the face of evidence that one was acting in good faith in claiming that he had misplaced the ticket and was not on the train as a mere trespasser. Bolles v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. (Mo.) supra.

Place of ejection.

Ejection of a passenger who has lost or mislaid his ticket and refuses to pay fare must be at a regular passenger station. Downs v. New York & N. H. R. Co. (1869) 36 Conn. 287, 4 Am. Rep. 77;

Maples v. New York & N. H. R. Co. (1871) 38 Conn. 557, 9 Am. Rep. 434, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 104.

So, while a conductor has the right to eject passengers from a train who have innocently left their tickets in the station, yet he should not wait until he has proceeded some distance from a station and require women passengers to alight in a cut where there is a deep ditch, so that in alighting they have to expose their lower limbs. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hood (1909) 55 Tex. Civ. App. 334, 118 S. W. 1119; s. c. subsequent appeal (1909) 57 Tex. Civ. App. 497, 122 S. W. 569.

The jury must determine whether or not a conductor exercises due care in expelling a passenger who has lost his ticket, from a train at a flag station at which there is no shelter, after dark, on an unusually cold and stormy night. Tilburg v. Northern C. R. Co. (1907) 217 Pa. 618, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 359, 66 Atl. 846.

Right to demand train fare.

Where one who has lost his ticket offers to pay the ticket fare, but refuses to pay the train fare which is demanded by the conductor, he may be lawfully ejected. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Faulkner (1901) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 63 S. W. 655.

But a passenger who has purchased a ticket and lost it, and offers to pay the regular ticket fare, which is accepted by the conductor without any demand for the excess permitted to be charged when fare is paid on the train, may not upon refusing a subsequent demand for such excess be legally ejected from the train. Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Joplin (1900) 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1380, 55 S. W. 206. J. H. B.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

RE W. S. GLENN, Appt.

(— S. C. —, 88 S. E. 294.)

Contempt — assault on juror.

A witness is not guilty of contempt in assaulting a juror for a statement made by the juror, after the termination of the trial, as to the veracity of the witness.

For other cases, see Contempt, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 8, 1916.)

Note. — For misconduct toward jurors as contempt, see annotation following this case, post, 1193.
L.R.A.1916D.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Spartanburg County adjudging him guilty of contempt of court. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Sanders & De Pass, for appellant:

No act done or word spoken after a case is ended—unless it be in refusing to obey an order of court—can be adjudged to be contempt of court, even though such word or act has reference to the action of the judge himself.

Patterson v. Colorado, 205 U. S. 463, 51 L. ed. 881, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556, 10 Ann. Cas. 689; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Circuit Ct. 97 Wis. 1, 38 L.R.A. 554, 65 Am. St.

Rep. 90, '72 N. W. 193; Percival v. State, 45 Neb. 741, 50 Am. St. Rep. 568, 64 N. W. 221; State v. Sweetland, 3 S. D. 503, 54 N. W. 415; State Law Examiners v. Hart, 104 Minn. 88, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 585, 116 N. W. 212, 15 Ann. Cas. 197; State v. Young, 113 Minn. 96, 129 N. W. 148, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 163; Storey v. People, 79 Ill. 45, 22 Am. Rep. 158; State v. Hailey, 2 Strobb. L. 73.

But, in any event, the rule to show cause should be discharged. The return of Mr. Glenn is duly verified, and no evidence is offered to contradict it or to show that it is false. It therefore should be accepted as true.

State ex rel. Hay v. Farnum, 73 S. O. 193, 53 S. E. 85; Re Corbin, 8 S. C. 300; 9 Cyc. 44; Oster v. People, 192 Ill. 473, 56 L.R.A. 462, 61 N. E. 469, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 276; Re Robinson, 117 N. C. 533, 53 Am. St. Rep. 596, 23 S. E. 453; State ex rel. Battle v. Cape Fear Lumber Co. 72 S. C. 322, 61 S. E. 873.

Mr. A. E. Hill for respondent.

Watts, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the order of Special Judge Ebird, presiding over the court of common pleas for the county of Spartanburg, adjudging the appellant guilty of contempt of court. It arose out of the following facts: There was a case tried on June 1, 1915. T. E. Screven was foreman of the jury that tried the case. W. S. Glenn was a witness for the defense. A verdict was rendered for the plaintiff. On the next day after the case was tried and verdict rendered, Mr. Screven, while coming from his home to his place of business, and while he was off duty as a juror, was riding on the street car and engaged in conversation with a gentleman, made publicly a statement in reference to the case. In this conversation he referred to Mr. Glenn. This conversation was reported to Glenn, and as reported it reflected upon his character and attacked his veracity. Glenn sought an interview with Screven, and told Screven what he had heard, and demanded to know if he had used the language attributed to him. Screven denied this, but during the conversation in reference to the matter they got into a war of words and came to blows. Glenn struck the first blow, and a fight ensued. After this, upon affidavit of Screven, a rule to show cause was issued and served upon Glenn. Glenn made return under oath, stating that the cause of dispute between him and Screven was not in any manner in reference to Screven's act as a juror, and that the act of Screven as a juror, or the action of the jury in rendering the verdict they did, was not in his mind, but he was actuated solely by what he had been informed Screven had publicly said about him on the street car some twenty-four hours after the verdict had been rendered, reflecting upon his character and veracity. On hearing the return and affidavit of Screven, his Honor adjudged him in contempt of court, in that he was interfering with a juror in the discharge of his duty. When the case was heard and return of respondent had been read, the following took place:

The Court: Mr. Sanders, you say Mr. Glenn was a witness in the case?

Mr. Sanders: Yes, sir.

The Court: And Mr. Screven was foreman of the jury?

Mr. Sanders: Yes, sir.

The Court: And he says he didn't know he was on the jury?

Mr. Sanders: No, sir; he says he didn't think of it at the time he went to him. (Argument by Mr. Sanders.)

The Court: I don't agree with you, Mr. Sanders, even if it was five years after the court had adjourned. It is the province of the jury in the trial of a case to disbelieve anybody they see fit, or believe anybody, and whenever that province is trampled upon you might as well shut up the court-houses and put pistols in the pockets of every man, and let might rule. Attorneys and court officers and jurors must be protected in the discharge of their duty.

Mr. Sanders: But, your Honor, jurors have no right, after the case has been tried and verdict rendered, to publicly reflect upon the integrity of a witness. I call your Honor's attention to the fact that a man has a right to trial by jury on a criminal charge.

The Court: I think Mr. Glenn is guilty of contempt in interfering with a juror in the discharge of his duty. Stand up, Mr. Glenn.

The appellant by seven exceptions challenges the jurisdiction of the court as well as the correctness of his Honor's rulings. The fourth, fifth, and sixth exceptions are:

"4. In that his Honor erred, as is respectfully submitted, in ruling and holding that the appellant was guilty of contempt of court when the facts show that the altercation arose from a remark made by Mr. T. E. Screven twenty-four hours after the verdict had been rendered by the jury of which Mr. Screven was foreman; said remark being made outside of and away from the courthouse, and reflecting, as Mr. Glenn thought, upon his character, and not from any action of Mr. Screven as a juror, or from any action of the jury in said cause.

"5. Because his Honor erred in not ruling and holding that the conduct of Mr. Glenn, in seeking Mr. Screven, was not on account of any act or conduct of Mr. Screven as a juror, but was solely on account of the act and conduct of Mr. Screven as a man, made outside of the courthouse and away from court room, at Mr. Screven's place of business, and not while Mr. Screven was acting as juror.

"6. Because, it is respectfully submitted, his Honor erred in holding that the appellant was guilty of contempt of court, in that he interfered with a juror in the discharge of his duty; the error being, as it is respectfully submitted, that Mr. Glenn's altercation with Mr. Screven was not on account of any act or conduct of Mr. Screven as a juror, but was solely and entirely on account of Mr. Screven's words, act, and conduct as a man, made outside of the courthouse and away from the court room."

These exceptions must be sustained. There is no pretense that Glenn was guilty of any direct contempt, he did nothing in the presence of the court, he was not in the court, and nothing was done in the presence of the judge. There was no resistance or defiance of the court's power or authority, and no disobedience of any of the court's orders. He simply had a personal difficulty with Screven in reference to some supposed remark Screven had made about him, reported to him as being derogatory and reflecting on his personal character, some twenty-four hours after the case in which he had been a witness had been tried. The altercation and fight did not occur until long after the case was ended. There is nothing in the record that shows there was complaining about Screven's conduct as juror. After a case is ended, nothing done, unless it is a disobedience of an order of the court, can be adjudged contempt of court. No words spoken either in reference to judge or jury after a case is ended can be construed as being contempt of court.

"When a case is finished, courts are subject to the same criticism as other people, but the propriety and necessity of preventing interference with the course of justice by premature statement, argument, or intimidation hardly can be denied." Patterson v. Colorado, 205 U. S. 454, 51 L. ed. 879, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556, 10 Ann. Cas. 689.

In the case of State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Circuit Ct. 97 Wis. 1, 38 L.R.A. 554, 65 Am. St. Rep. 90, 72 N. W. 193, the court uses the following language: "Important as it L.R.A.1916D.

is that courts should perform their grave public duties unimpeded and unprejudiced by illegitimate influences, there are other rights guaranteed to all citizens by our Constitution and form of government, either expressly or impliedly, which are fully as important, and which must be guarded with an equally jealous care."

The general rule is that, to constitute any publication a contempt, it must have reference to a matter then pending in court, . . . tending to the injury of pending proceedings upon it, and of the subsequent proceeding. Percival v. State, 45 Neb. 741, 50 Am. St. Rep. 568, 64 N. W. 221.

The case of State v. Sweetland, 3 S. D. 503, 54 N. W. 415, was a case where some contemptuous comment was made after the case was ended. The court held: "The object of contempt proceedings is, not to enable a judge, who deems himself aggrieved, to punish the supposed wrongdoer to gratify his own . . . feelings, but to vindicate the dignity and independence of the court, and to protect himself, and those necessarily connected with it, while a matter is pending before it, from insolent and contemptuous abuse calculated to intimidate, influence, embarrass, or impede the court in the exercise of its judicial functions, or prevent a fair and impartial trial. If the judge was unjustly assailed by the article in question, he had the same, and only the same, remedies for the redress of the wrong which belonged to all other citizens."

The record shows it was an unfortunate misunderstanding and difficulty between two citizens. When the case was ended, Screven's duty as a juror ceased; and the fact, even if it were a fact, that he had been a juror, was the inception of the trouble in this case, and would not make Glenn responsible in contempt proceedings, as the case was over, and no action on his part was calculated to intimidate or influence the jury, as the verdict had been returned; neither would it in any manner impede the administration of justice. If Glenn was wrong, he can be punished in the proper way for assault and battery.

We do not think it necessary to consider all of the exceptions. Under our view of the case, Glenn should not have been adjudged guilty of contempt of court, and the judgment is reversed, and rule discharged.

Gary, Ch. J., and Hydrick, Fraser, and Gage, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Misconduct toward jurors as contempt.

This note is supplemental to the note to Poindexter v. State, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 517, where the earlier cases are collected.

For misconduct toward witnesses as contempt of court, see the note to Brannon v. Com. L.R.A. 1915D, 569.

For personal criticism of, or insult to, court because of decision, after determination of cause, as ground for contempt or disbarment, see the note to Re Hart, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 585.

Concerning prospective jurors.

One is guilty of contempt of court who, being in the employ of a traction company, said to a friend who was one of the jurors from which the jury were to be selected in a case in which the company was a party: "If you can do anything for the traction company it will be appreciated." Houser's Case (1914) 57 Pa. Super. Ct. 43. So, when one said to a juror summoned to serve for the week, that he had a particular friend with a case coming up that week, and that if the juror could do anything for him it would be appreciated, "try him like you would yourself." Ex parte Shepherd (1913) 68 Tex. Crim. Rep. 443, 153 S. W. 628, where it was held that, if the juror was disqualified to serve, this would be immaterial if, as a matter of fact, he was serving as a juror when approached.

Concerning jurors selected to try the case.

A friend of one whose land is being taken by a trolley railroad company who, on return from the view of the premises by the jury, denounces the superintendent of the trolley road to a juror, may be punished for contempt. Greason v. Cumberland R. Co. (1913) 54 Pa. Super Ct. 595.

But an attempt to have a third party influence a juror, or get him an interview with a juror, is not a contempt when the attempt came to nothing and the third party did not intend it should. Re Ellison (1914) 256 Mo. 378, 165 S. W. 987.

A lawyer is guilty of contempt who, in conducting his case, insults the foreman of the jury. Ex parte Pater (1864) 5 Best & S. (Eng.) 299, 33 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 142, 10 Jur. N. S. 972, 10 L. T. N. S. 376, 12 Week. Rep. 823, 9 Cox, C. C. 544, 15 Eng. Rul. Cas. 141.

Of particular interest in connection with RE GLENN, ante, 1190, is the decision in Reg. v. Martin (1848) 5 Cox, C. C. (Eng.) 356, where a few moments after the foreman of the jury had reached his house after a trial and conviction, the brother of the person convicted came to the house and challenged him to mortal combat as having bullied the jury in the case of his brother, and it was held that this was a contempt of court.

Concerning grand jurors.

After a grand jury has considered the evidence on a matter, and has reported to the court that no indictments were found, a petition for resubmitment, though containing groundless charges of misconduct on the part of the grand jury, is not a contempt of court, as the petition related to a past transaction, although the grand jury were still in session. State v. Young (1910) 113 Minn. 96, 129 N. W. 148, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 163, where the court said: "It is elementary that publication in newspapers, or impertinent, scandalous, or contemptuous language inserted in pleadings, affidavits, or petitions filed in court, concerning a pending cause, by which it is sought to influence the action of the court therein, and prevent a fair and impartial hearing, thus embarrassing the due administration of justice, constitute a contempt of court, and may be summarily punished. But by the weight of authority the rule does not apply to proceedings which have been fully terminated, and brought to a close by final decision. And however strong and abusive a criticism of a court or any of its officers may be, having reference to past proceedings, the remedy is not by an exercise of the arbitrary power of punishment for contempt, but by an action, civil or criminal, for libel or slander, as the case may be. State Law Examiners v. Hart, 104 Minn. 88, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 585, 116 N. W. 212, 15 Ann. Cas. 197, and cases there cited."

Where a lawyer stated to two of the grand jury that there were certain individuals upon the grand jury unfit and unqualified owing to their want of capacity, and being under the government and control of improper feelings, the court stated: "Though he did not intend to decide that this was not a contempt, yet, in his view, as the attachment against a party for a contempt was a high prerogative proceeding, and as the party was thereby deprived of a trial by jury, he did think that, unless these constructive contempts were of an aggravated nature, and such as were calculated to impede the due administration of justice, the court ought not to proceed with that rigor and severity which the process by attachment required." Re Van Hook (1818) 3 N. Y. City Hall Rec. 64.

In Re Spooner (1820) 5 N. Y. City Hall Rec. 109, the court seemed doubtful whether an attack in print on a grand juror not relative to his duties was a contempt, and said: "The facts charged amount only to a constructive contempt; and, the party having purged himself, on oath, of any intention to commit one, I do not think it requisite to grant an attachment. The issuing attachment is always a matter of discretion in the court; and, under the circumstances of the case, public justice does not, in my opinion, require our interposition, though we may condemn the publication in question."

In Fishback v. State (1892) 131 Ind. 304, 30 N. E. 1088, in holding that one accused of contempt in making a publication alleged to attack the judge and grand jury ought to have been discharged on his answer, the court said:

"If the article is per se libelous, making a direct charge against the court or jury, admitting of but one fair and reasonable construction, . . . then it would be trifling with justice to say that in such a case the publisher could admit the publication, but deny that he intended the plain and unmistakable meaning which the language used conveys, but when the language used in an article is not per se libelous, and only becomes so, and made to apply to the court by the use of innuendoes, and is fairly susceptible of an innocent meaning in so far as any reflection upon the court is concerned, and the defendant answers under oath that he used it in a sense not libelous, and declares he intended no imputation upon the court, either impugning the motives or integrity of the judge, or to embarrass the administration of justice, his answer must be taken as conclusive. If he swear falsely, he is liable to indictment and prosecution for perjury." Followed on similar facts in Allen v. State (1892) 131 Ind. 599, 30 N. E. 1093. B. B. B.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

J. R. MEEK, Appt.,

v.

JOHN D. FOX et al.

(118 Va. 774, 88 S. E. 161.)

Will — estate on condition subsequent.

1. A fee upon condition subsequent is created by a provision in a will that one shall have specified land forever except she should marry, then at her death "I desire it to revert to her heirs."

For other cases, see Wills, III. g, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — restraint of marriage — validity.

2. A condition in a will that in case one given a fee in real estate should marry it should at her death revert to her heirs is void as in restraint of marriage.

For other cases, see Wills, III. g, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 23, 1916.)

Note.—For provision in restraint of marriage in a deed or will as a condition or a limitation, see note to Re Fitzgerald, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 615.

As to validity of provision in a deed or will in restraint of marriage, see note to Sullivan v. Garesche, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 606, and see also footnote to Gard v. Mason, L.R.A. 1916B, 1077. L.R.A. 1916D.

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Tazewell County in favor of complainants in a suit to construe a will. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henson & Bowen and A. S. Higginbotham for appellant.

Messrs. George W. St. Clair and J. W. Chapman, for appellees:

By the language of the will the testator devised to his daughter Julia Anne an estate in fee simple, with a condition subsequent annexed, providing that if she married she should lose her fee-simple estate, which would be that act be cut down to a life estate.

13 Enc. Dig. Va. & W. Va. Rep. p. 818; Sellers v. Reed, 88 Va. 377, 13 S. E. 754; Graves, Real Prop. §§ 253 et seq; Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. v. Jackson, 108 Ga. 634, 34 S. E. 184; Millan v. Kephart, 18 Gratt. 1; 1 Minor, Real Prop. § 540.

In construing a will, the object is to discover the intention, which is to be gathered in every case from the general purpose and scope of the instrument, in the light of the surrounding circumstances.

Lindsey v. Eckles, 99 Va. 668, 40 S. E. 23; Miller v. Potterfield, 86 Va. 376, 19 Am. St. Rep. 919, 11 S. E. 486.

The condition in the will is in general restraint of marriage, for the devisee is not restricted to any time, place, or person, but is wholly and absolutely forbidden to marry anybody at any time or at any place.

2 Minor's Inst. 2d ed. 245 et seq; Maddox v. Maddox, 11 Gratt. 804; Tiedeman, Real Prop. §§ 275, 281; note to Phillips v. Ferguson, 1 L.R.A. 838; Smythe v. Smythe, 90 Va. 638, 19 S. E. 175; Sullivan v. Garesche, 229 Mo. 496, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 605, 129 S. W. 949; Knost v. Knost, 229 Mo. 170, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 627, 129 S. W. 665; 1 Shep. Touch. Hilliard's Am. ed. 132; 2 Redf. Wills, p. 302; Arthur v. Cole, 56 Md. 100, 40 Am. Rep. 409; Watts v. Griffin, 137 N. C. 572, 50 S. E. 218; Burdie v. Burdies, 96 Va. 81, 70 Am. St. Rep. 825, 30 S. E. 462; Randall v. Marble, 69 Me. 310, 31 Am. Rep. 281; Kennedy v. Alexander, 21 App. D. C. 424.

Cardwell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The sole question presented on this appeal is the construction of the will of Peter Spracher as to the devise therein made to his daughter Julia Anne. Testator died in the early part of 1881, and his will was probated in Tazewell county court on May 10, 1881. He devised one third of his lands to his son, W. L. Spracher, in fee simple. To Eliza N. McFarland, his only married daughter, he devised one third of his land during her life, remainder to her heirs, and the provision made for his daughter Julia Anne is as follows:

"Also to my daughter Julia Anne, I desire that she shall have her equal share laid off, also according to quality and quantity, and she shall have it forever, except she should marry, then at her death I desire that it shall revert to her legal heirs."

After the death of the testator, his daughter Julia Anne, on June 20, 1882, intermarried with one Thomas Hall, and after this marriage, and after the death of her husband, Julia Anne Hall, by deed dated September 28, 1912, conveyed the land devised to her by the above clause of her father's will to appellees John D. Fox and Alexander St. Clair. After the marriage of Julia Anne, W. L. Spracher by deed dated December 15, 1885, conveyed his land to one Joseph Meek, and in this conveyance he included what he claimed to be his remainder in the land devised to Julia Anne by the clause of their father's will quoted above; so that in this litigation appellant claims the land in question under Joseph Meek, through the various conveyances and devises appearing in the record, while appellees claim the land under the conveyance to them from Julia Anne Hall, the contention of appellees being that a fee-simple estate vested in Julia Anne Spracher under the will of her father, that the provision in said clause of his will above quoted created a condition subsequent in general restraint of marriage, that such condition is void in law, and that therefore the subsequent marriage of the said Julia Anne did not divest her of this fee-simple estate, but same continued in her, and was passed from her to the appellees by her conveyance above mentioned.

In discussing the intention of the testator, to be ascertained from the language employed in his will and the surrounding circumstances—that is, the situation of the parties, the ties which connected the testator with the objects of his bounty, and the motives which probably influenced him in disposing of his property—appellant takes the position that the purpose was to put his two daughters, Eliza M. and Julia Anne, upon an equal footing, and to provide for them alike; while appellees contend that his purpose was to discourage and prevent the marriage of Julia Anne by placing a penalty upon her marrying.

In looking first to the language employed in the will to determine what estate in the land devised to Julia Anne was vested in her, it is to be borne in mind that it is too well settled to require citation of authority that all devises and bequests are to be construed as vesting at the testator's death, unless the intention to postpone the vesting is clearly indicated in the will.

As it seems to us, it would have been quite difficult, if not impossible, for the testator to have found language that would have served better to transfer a complete estate in fee simple than was used in the clause of his will making provision for his daughter Julia Anne, which clause provides that she was to have one third of the testator's land, "and she shall have it forever, except she marry, then at her death I desire that it shall revert to her legal heirs." The first part of the language used plainly means that the estate devised to Julia Anne was to be hers forever,—that is, an estate in fee simple,—and the latter part of it in effect is, "but if she marries, then she shall have only a life estate." It is equally as clear to us that it would be an unwarranted perversion of said language to make it read, as contended by appellant: "I give a life estate in one third of my lands to my daughter Julia Anne, but if she does not marry, then she is to have a fee-simple estate."

Nor can this provision in the will as to the marriage of the devisee be construed into a condition precedent or a limitation. It is not a condition precedent, for the reason that the estate had already vested in the devisee, Julia Anne, at the time of her marriage, and the effect of the provision respecting her marriage, if valid at all, could only be to divest such estate, and not to prevent its vesting, which would be the result in the case of a condition precedent.

It is not a limitation, because it does not mark the extent of time for which the estate was to last, nor determine the duration of the estate. The testator does not say that Julia Anne shall have the estate until she marries, and thus make the time of her marrying mark the full limit of time for which the estate is given; but he gives to her an estate in fee simple, and then adds a provision, the effect of which is to cut down and destroy this larger estate and vest in her a lesser estate.

"The only general rule, perhaps, in determining whether words are words of condition or of limitation, is that where they circumscribe the continuance of the estate, and mark the period which is to determine it, they are words of limitation; when they render the estate liable to be defeated in case the event expressed should arise before the determination of the estate, they are words of condition." Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. v. Jackson, 108 Ga. 634, 34 S. E. 184, quoting from 2 Washb. Real Prop. 6th ed. p. 27.

Accordingly, in Millan v. Kephart, 18 Gratt. 1, it is said: "While a limitation marks the bounds . . . of an estate, and the utmost time of its continuance, the effect of a condition is to defeat the estate before it reaches the boundary or has completed the full space of time described by the limitation. 1 Preston, Estates, 49."

In Minor on Real Prop. vol. 1, § 540, this learned author says: "Limitations differ from conditions in this: A limitation marks the utmost time of continuance of an estate; a condition marks some event which, if it happens in the course of that time, is to defeat the estate."

And at page 655, § 574, the same author illustrates as follows: "Thus a devise to 'A until she marries, and then the land to pass to Z,' is a limitation, and good; whilst a devise to A for life, on condition that if she marries the land shall pass to Z,' is a condition, and because it absolutely prohibits marriage is void. That is, the condition is void, and, being a condition precedent to Z's estate, Z can take no interest, present or future, in the land conveyed."

The latter part of the illustration quoted, and which the author declares to be a condition subsequent, is wholly parallel with and similar to the case at bar, in that by the terms of the will under consideration there is given an estate to the devisee (Julia Anne) in fee simple, on condition that if she marries the land shall pass to her heirs; her sole heir, as it happens, being her brother, W. L. Spracher, under whose conveyance appellant claims, and who, according to the rule of construction stated by Professor Minor, supra, could take no interest, present or future, in the land devised, and therefore could convey none to the appellant's predecessor in title.
L.R.A.1916D.

Let us, however, revert to the language of the will itself and determine from it, if we can, the intention of the testator, and whether or not he, after giving his daughter Julia Anne an estate in fee simple, and then adding a provision the effect of which is to cut down and destroy this larger estate and vest in her a lesser estate, intended to put a penalty upon the marriage of his said daughter; that is, intended this latter provision as a condition in restraint of her marriage generally.

As a matter of construction, it is impossible to see how the words in the will, "except she marry," can be deemed identical with "until she marry," as contended by appellant. The word "except," as it appears to us, must be construed as a condition, and not a limitation. Indeed, to construe "except" as "until," in the sentence where it is used in the devise, would involve a self-contradiction, in that the sentence would then read that the testator gives the land "to Julia Anne forever until she marries, then after her death (in the event of marriage) to her heirs." The language used can only make good sense by construing "except" as "but if," or its equivalent, which would constitute it a condition subsequent.

It may be conceded that a condition subsequent may usually be distorted into the form of a limitation, or vice versa, and apparently without materially affecting the meaning of the testator or grantor; but in law there is a wide difference between the two. It would doubtless be difficult to convince the ordinary man that he is not saying exactly the same thing in two different ways when he says, "I give this land to you until you marry and then to B," and, "I give this land to you for life, but if you marry then to B." And if he should say either, it would be easy enough to twist it around and say it is the same as if he had said the other. But in law they are by no means the same, since all the legal differences at once arise that are recognized as existing between estates upon condition and estates upon limitation, amongst others the possibility that, in an estate upon condition, the condition may be void, and the estate thus become absolute and free from condition, while, if the estate is upon limitation, the limitation marks the utmost duration of the estate under the devise or the agreement of the parties where created or conferred by deed or contract, which cannot be extended beyond that period without violating the terms of the devise in the one case, and without making a new contract for the parties in the other. Hence, while an estate limited "to A in fee, but if he attempts to alien his estate then to B in fee," would give A an absolute estate and in fee, free from condition, because the condition is an unreasonable restraint of alienation and void, yet a limitation "to A until he attempts to alien, and then to B," would be a perfectly good limitation, and upon A's attempt his estate would cease and go over to B.

Upon reason and authority the foregoing conclusions are correct, and therefore, in the instant case, the devise of the land in question to the testator's daughter Julia Anne, "and she shall have it forever," transferred upon the death of the testator to the daughter a fee-simple estate in the land, and the added provision to the devise, "except she should marry, then at her death I desire that it (the land) shall revert to her legal heirs," both by the simple construction of the language and the intention of the testator, to be gathered from the plain language used, is a condition subsequent and must be in restraint generally of his daughter's marriage; so that the only remaining question is as to the legality of such a condition.

It has, by numerous decisions of this court, been held that any contract or provision in general or total restraint of marriage is against the policy of the laws of this state; and this view, it appears, has been uniformly taken wherever the question has arisen.

In Maddox v. Maddox, 11 Gratt. 804, the will construed bequeathed to the testator's niece certain personal property during her life, and forever if she should remain a member of the Society of Friends, in order for her to do which it was necessary for her to marry one of the members of the society; but, there being only a few male members of the society in that community, the court held that the provision was an unreasonable restraint on marriage, and therefore void, the court saying in its opinion: "Hence, not only should all positive prohibitions of marriage be rendered nugatory, but all unjust and improper restrictions upon it should be removed, and all undue influences in determining the choice of the parties should be carefully suppressed. . . . But where a condition is in restraint of marriage generally, it is deemed to be contrary to public policy, at war with sound morality, and directly violative of the true economy of social and domestic life. Hence such a condition will be held utterly void."

The court again took the same view of the policy of the law in the case of Phillips v. Ferguson, 85 Va. 509, 1 L.R.A. 837, 17 Am. St. Rep. 78, 8 S. E. 241, where it is said: "The law upon this whole subject is well summarized in a valuable treatise as follows [quoting from 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 933]: . . . When a condition [in restraint of marriage] is subsequent and annexed to a gift of land [or of any interest arising out of land] if general, it is void, and, although broken, the estate of the donee continues."

To a report of this case in 1 L.R.A. 838, the following note is appended: "Notwithstanding the confusion and uncertainty which surrounds the subject of contracts in restraint of marriage, the authorities recognize certain propositions which lie at the foundation; namely, that all conditions, annexed to gifts, which prohibit marriage generally and absolutely are void, unless it be a condition precedent annexed to a devise of land; and if not in absolute restraint, but in such form that it will probably operate as a general prohibition, it is void under a like limitation, and this upon the ground of public policy."

In Smythe v. Smythe, 90 Va. 638, 19 S. E. 175, the clause of the will construed is as follows: "I give and bequeath unto my two sisters, Kate A. and Mattie R. Smythe, all my estate of every kind, both real and personal, of which I may die seised, to be by them used and enjoyed during their natural lives. But the benefits of this bequest are to continue to my said two sisters upon the condition that they shall remain sole."

Held, null and void as placing a restraint upon marriage.

The decisions in the cases cited are in harmony with the decisions in other jurisdictions, as well as with the text writers on the subject, which are clear and emphatic on the point that a condition subsequent in general restraint of marriage is void, and cannot have the effect to divest an estate which is already vested. Among the authorities adverted to are Sullivan v. Garesche, 229 Mo. 496, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 605, 129 S. W. 949; Arthur v. Cole, 56 Md. 100, 40 Am. Rep. 409; Watts v. Griffin, 137 N. C. 572, 50 S. E. 218; Randall v. Marble, 69 Me. 310, 31 Am. Rep. 281; Kennedy v. Alexander, 21 App. D. C. 424; 2 Minor's Inst. 2d ed. 245 et seq.; Tiedeman, Real Prop. §§ 275, 281; 1 Shep. Touch. Hilliard's Am. ed. 132; 2 Redf. Wills, p. 302.

Counsel for appellant endeavor to draw a distinction between the effect of a condition subsequent in restraint of marriage when attached to a bequest, and when attached to a devise; but the case of Fifield v. Van Wyck, 94 Va. 557, 64 Am. St. Rep. 745, 27 S. E. 446, cited as authority for the proposition, clearly does not go to the extent that counsel would have it go. On the contrary, it specifically refers to the case of Phillips v. Ferguson, supra, which is authority for the proposition that conditions subsequent in restraint of marriage have the same effect in cases of realty as in cases of personalty, and are both null and void as against public policy.

No authority has been adduced by appellant's counsel to controvert the proposition that, if an intention on the part of the testator to impose a general restraint upon the marriage of a devisee is established, then such restriction is void, and the devisees will take an absolute estate.

The two cases mainly relied on by appellant are Mann v. Jackson, 84 Me. 400, 16 L.R.A. 707, 30 Am. St. Rep. 358, 24 Atl. 886, and Jones v. Jones, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 279. A careful examination of those cases discloses that they are not authority for appellant's contention in this case. The process of reasoning applied in those cases is wholly different from that applied in the cases decided by this and other courts and the text writers cited above. Not only so, but in Mann v. Jackson, supra, the court makes this statement: "It is undoubtedly an established rule of law that, even with respect to devises of real estate, a subsequent condition which is intended to operate in general . . . restraint of marriage, or the natural effect of which is to create undue restraint upon marriage and promote celibacy, must be held illegal and void, as contrary to the principles of sound public policy."

In Jones v. Jones, supra, Lust, J., says: "As I read the words, the testator only meant to provide for her while she was unmarried" (a limitation), though the language of the will is, "Provided, said Mary remains in her present state of single woman; otherwise, if she binds herself in wedlock, she is liable to lose her share," etc.

It might have been possible and proper to distort the form of expression used by the testator (condition) into a different form (limitation) in accordance with his assumed intent, but it does not seem to us proper or even possible to do that in the case under consideration, for the obvious reason that it would involve the contradiction already mentioned of giving to the testator's daughter Julia Anne an estate forever until she marries, which is repugnant and plainly self-contradictory, and if this be true then the testator must be presumed to have intended a condition subsequent, and nothing else.

Appellant relies, also, upon the case of Selden v. Keen, 27 Gratt. 576, and in that case the court did arrive at the conclusion that the provision in the will in regard to the marriage of the legatee was not void, as in restraint of marriage, but that same was a limitation, limiting the estate to the legatee until her marriage, and in the event of her marriage the estate given to her until that time ceased; but we deem it only necessary to say that a very different state of facts existed in that case from those of the case at bar, that the case was decided upon its own peculiar facts, and there is nothing in the court's opinion that disturbs the doctrine laid down in the case of Maddox v. Maddox, supra, and followed in the other cases above cited.

The great weight of authority is to the effect that conditions annexed to a bequest or a devise, the tendency of which is unduly to restrict or restrain marriage, are contrary to public policy and void, and it must be conceded that the intention of the testator in making the condition is immaterial, however praiseworthy that intent may have been. He must carry out his intention in some other way than by impinging upon the policy of freedom of marriage. But even if it could be granted that the prohibition of the law is aimed at the testator's intent to restrict marriage, and not at the restriction itself, it would seem clear that an actual restraint or discouragement of marriage would carry with it the prima facie presumption that such restraint was intended, and the burden would be upon him alleging the contrary to prove the real intention. Upon this theory, there is nothing in the will or the surrounding circumstances of the testator, as disclosed by the evidence in this case, that would satisfactorily establish an intent contrary to that to be gathered from the language of the will itself. Each side has its theory as to what the real purpose or intent of the testator was, and one seems just as plausible and as well supported as the other.

Upon the whole case, therefore, we are of opinion that the decree of the Circuit Court complained of is right, and it is affirmed.

Kelly, J., absent.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

BROWN SHOE COMPANY

v.

SILAS HARDIN, Doing Business as the City Taxicab Company, Plff. in Err.

(— W. Va. —, 87 S. E. 1014.)

Carrier — transfer men as common carriers.

1. A local carrier, such as a cabman, waggoner, or transfer man, carrying passengers and baggage for the public generally, from place to place in and about a city, or from town to town, is a common carrier, and, in his relations with his patrons, he is governed by the general legal principles applicable to carriers doing business on a larger scale.

For other cases, see Carriers, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — inability to deliver — duty.

2. On the performance of his contract of carriage in any case, his high obligation as carrier, making him practically an insurer of the property intrusted to him, ceases; but if, for any reason, the owner thereof does not receive it at the place of destination, the carrier is under the milder duty of exercising ordinary care for its safety until it is called for, redelivered, or disposed of in some legal way. He can neither abandon it nor leave it exposed to known danger of loss, destruction, or injury.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. d, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — warehouseman.

3. A transfer man's duty as carrier ends with delivery of the goods intrusted to him at the place of destination. If, for any reason, he is not there relieved of their actual custody or possession within a reasonable time, he is under a different, further, and less exacting duty to provide for their safety, for another reasonable period of time, the degree of which duty is determined by the principles of law applicable to warehousemen.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. d, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 15, 1916.)

ERROR to the District Court for Kanawha County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the value of property lost after having been placed for transportation in the care and custody of defendant's agent by plaintiff's agent. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Morgan Owen and E. B. Dyer for plaintiff in error.

Headnotes by POFFENBARGER, J.

Note. — As to liability of baggage transfer company, see annotation following this case, post, 1202.
L.R.A.1916D.

Messrs. Burdett & White, for defendant in error:

If plaintiff failed to call for the goods within a reasonable time, and because of such failure the relation of defendant to said goods was changed from common carrier to mere warehouseman or bailee, then it became and was the duty of the latter to exercise at least ordinary care to prevent them from being lost to the owner, and a failure to exercise such care rendered it liable for the loss thereof.

McGraw v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 18 W. Va. 361, 41 Am. Rep. 696; Maslin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 14 W. Va. 189, 35 Am. Rep. 748; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 233.

The carrier is bound to make delivery at a place reasonably suitable and convenient for the consignee to receive it, and this whether the carrier is at the time acting as a carrier or a warehouseman.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 213, 214.

After the carrier becomes a warehouseman or bailee only, with respect to goods in his charge, he is then liable for such loss as results from the want of such care as men of reasonable prudence ordinarily exercise for the safety of their own goods under similar circumstances.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed, 284.

Poffenbarger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The judgment for plaintiff, here complained of, is based upon a finding by the trial court acting in lieu of a jury, by consent of the parties, upon a statement of facts agreed to.

The right of the controversy depends largely upon the law of bailment. The action was brought to recover the value of two traveling trays or telescopes and their contents, which were lost after having been placed in the care and custody of the defendant's agent, by an agent of the plaintiff, for carriage as baggage from some point in the city of Charleston to the station of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company in that city. The defendant, doing business as City Taxicab Company, was there engaged in the transportation of passengers and baggage for hire to and from points in and about the city and to and from the railway stations therein, under a license for the purpose issued to him by the city authorities. On a day in April, 1914, the plaintiff's agent, a traveling salesman, being in the city and intending to leave for the East on that day, by train No. 8 of said railway company, delivered to an agent of the defendant a large trunk containing samples of shoes and the two trays or telescopes for transportation to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway station. A claim check was given for each of the three pieces, reciting that the Taxicab Company was "C. & O. and K. & M. Railway Bonded Transfer Co., with privilege to check baggage from house or hotel to destination." The baggage was carried to the station, and each of the three pieces placed on the platform thereof, before the arrival of train No. 8, and was ready for delivery to the plaintiff when that train arrived. At some time of the afternoon of that day, and before the arrival of train No. 8, Burdett, the plaintiff's agent, altered his plans and decided to go west instead of east, and was not at the station to take the train mentioned. Nor did he advise the defendant of this fact, or give him any direction as to the disposition or custody of the baggage. He relied upon the defendant to hold it until called for by him, and to deliver it to him upon the surrender of the claim checks held by him. Nor did the defendant or his agent remove the baggage from the station platform. It is known to have remained there until 8 o'clock in the evening, when the defendant's agent, who had taken charge of it at the railway station, directed the attention of defendant's night man to the parcels, which then still had the checks attached to them. The next morning Burdett appeared and called for his baggage, and, on the surrender of the check therefor, the trunk was delivered to him by the defendant's agent, and he was informed that the other two pieces had been lost. The platform of the station on which the property was deposited was open and uninclosed. What became of the two lost pieces is not disclosed by the statement of facts.

In the transportation of the baggage from the point at which it was received to its destination, the defendant acted as a common carrier, and his obligation was practically one of insurance.

"It is generally held that truckmen, wagoners, cartmen, and other persons who undertake to carry goods for hire for the public generally and as a common employment in a city, or from one town or place to another, are common carriers." 4 R. C. L. title "Carriers," § 24, p. 557.

As to this legal proposition there is no controversy. The divergence of views of counsel relates to the status of the defendant after he had delivered the baggage on the platform at the railway station. Relying upon Benoleil v. Durocher, Rap. Jud. Quebec 13 C. S. 280, the defendant urges that all duty on his part ceased on such delivery. The case relied upon is the only precedent upon a question of this kind that diligent research on the part of counsel has L.R.A.1916D.

disclosed. No written opinion is reported, but the reasons for the court's conclusion are set forth at some length in the judgment entered and indicated in the syllabus, reading as follows: "Where a local carrier or carter undertakes to transport baggage from one point to another within a city, e. g., from one railway station to another, his responsibility is at an end when he has fulfilled the contract by delivering the luggage at its destination. If it be subsequently lost in consequence of the owner not being at the appointed place to receive it, he has no recourse against the carrier."

On the other hand, it is insisted that, though the high duty imposed upon carriers by law in the fulfilment of the contract of carriage may have ended with the delivery on the platform, all responsibility for the safety of the property did not then cease, and that the defendant was still bound to exercise some degree of care for its protection. In other words, the contention is that he was still liable for its loss or destruction, if occasioned by his negligence.

There was no written contract between the parties. The claim checks did not constitute contracts. They were in the nature of receipts, and constituted evidence of delivery of the articles to which duplicates thereof were attached, and of the ownership and identity of the parcels. There was an express oral contract to carry the baggage from the point of delivery to the place of destination, but it did not in terms define the rights and liabilities of the parties thereto. For these it is necessary to resort to the law founded upon usage and custom, which well and clearly defines them in all other instances of common carriage. No reason is perceived why the general principles of that law do not govern the class of common carriers to which the defendant belongs. After the completion of the contract of carriage the strict rule of liability applicable throughout the performance thereof is relaxed and modified. If the consignee of goods does not within a reasonable time call for them and take them into his own possession, the carrier's responsibility for their safety is the same as that of a warehouseman. Hurley & Son v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 68 W. Va. 471, 69 S. E. 904; Hutchinson v. United States Exp. Co. 63 W. Va. 128, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 393, 59 S. E. 949; Berry v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 44 W. Va. 538, 67 Am. St. Rep. 781, 30 S. E. 143, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 241. His responsibility does not wholly end or terminate with the performance of his contract of carriage. He still remains under duty to exercise some degree of care for the safety of the property. The same principle governs in the ascertainment of the rights of the parties respecting baggage: "If a passenger does not call for his baggage on arrival, the company cannot leave it unclaimed for, or abandon it. Its strict responsibility as a carrier will cease after a reasonable time has elapsed to enable the owner to claim it, and a modified liability, like that of warehouseman, will supervene. . . . The neglect of the owner to call for the baggage within a reasonable time changes the character of the liability, but does not terminate it." Matteson v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 76 N. Y. 381; Burnell v. New York C. R. Co. 45 N. Y. 184, 6 Am. Rep. 61; Fairfax v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 11; Schouler Bailm. & Carr. 3d ed. § 694; Hutchinson Carr. 1291.

In such cases there is a duty to make some provision for the safety of the property, which usually consists of storage, although railroad companies and other common carriers are not engaged in the business of storage. The law recognizes the necessity of limited storage or custody for mere safety, as a necessary incident of the business of carriage. It cannot justly close its eyes to the numerous minor casualties, mishaps, and misadventures which may prevent appearance and demand at the place of destination. Moreover, it assumes that the parties impliedly contemplated some provision for their consequences as part of the contract. Ordinarily the owner is punctual in his appearance, production of his check, and claim of his property, and it does not occur to either party to make express provision for what is not likely to but may occur, but the law does not assume their ignorance of such possibilities nor their intention to make no provision for them. On the contrary, knowledge thereof, and also the intention to make some provision for the safety of the property in such an event, are assumed. Nor does even negligent failure to make a prompt appearance and claim justify abandonment. The carrier's remedy for such delays, whether due to accident or negligence, is a reasonable charge for storage. Here, as in very many other cases, the law, conforming itself to rules of conduct governing the dealings and relations of prudent and fair men, makes allowance for inadvertence, mistakes, and even wilful failures to comply with strict duty, and proportions the penalty to the offense, in the absence of an agreement inflicting a definite forfeiture of right.

U.R.A.1916D.

Though the defendant's business was more limited than that of a railroad company or other carrier over long distances, the same general principle must be applicable to him. On the failure of the owner of baggage to call for it at its destination, his abandonment of it would have been equally as unreasonable and unjustifiable as that of any other carrier. He was bound to take such reasonable precaution for its safety as was practicable and not unduly burdensome. Though not engaged in the storage business, and having no place especially provided for such business, common knowledge would suggest the practicability, without any great hardship, of his custody of the comparatively small articles intrusted to him, for a limited time. For aught that appears in the statement of facts, he could have deposited them in the baggage room of the railway station. It does not appear that he even made a request for such privilege. He could have taken them to his office, garage, or place of business and stored them overnight. In his business such situations are likely not of frequent occurrence, wherefore the discharge of the duty here declared would not require maintenance of a station or building especially designed for storage.

A warehouseman is a bailee for compensation or hire, bound to exercise ordinary care for the safety of the property intrusted to him (Heatherington v. Richter, 31 W. Va. 858, 8 S. E. 609), not a mere gratuitous one, liable only for loss or injury by wilful misconduct or gross negligence. Occasional storage or custody of goods, in consequence of failure of the owner to remove them promptly, is a necessary incident of the business for which the carrier receives compensation, and is within the contract, notwithstanding additional compensation may be charged for the incidental extra service. The decisions in Hurley & Son v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 68 W. Va. 471, 69 S. E. 904; Berry v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 44 W. Va. 538, 67 Am. St. Rep. 781, 30 S. E. 143, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 241, and Hutchinson v. United States Exp. Co. 63 W. Va. 128, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 393, 59 S. E. 949, proceed upon this principle. Consistently applied here, it required such care on the part of the defendant for the safety of the property in question as a prudent man bestows upon his own property, and such a man does not leave apparently valuable and easily portable articles in an exposed and unguarded place at night.

The judgment is clearly right, and will be affirmed.

Annotation—Liability of baggage transfer company.

Earlier cases considering the question under annotation will be found in the note to Anniston Transfer Co. v. Gurley, 34 L.R.A. 137. As to cartman, etc., as common carrier, see the note to Lloyd v. Haugh & K. Storage & Transfer Co. 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 188.

The position taken in BROWN SHOE Co. v. HARDIN, ante, 1199, that a company engaged in the transfer of passengers and baggage between points in a city and to and from railway stations is a common carrier, is supported by cases cited in the earlier note, and the cases cited in the present note for the most part dispose of the question of liability upon principles applicable to common carriers.

When duty commences.

A baggage transfer company which accepts the baggage check of a passenger and agrees to get her trunk and deliver it to her is, in the absence of any legal excuse, liable for the value of the trunk and its contents where it fails to deliver the trunk or to return the check. Atlanta Baggage & Cab Co. v. Mizo (1908) 4 Ga. App. 407, 61 S. E. 848. The court distinguished Aiken v. Westcott (1890) 123 N. Y. 363, 25 N. E. 503, cited in earlier note, and relied upon by the baggage company as supporting its claim of nonliability, stating that in that case the evidence showed that the trunk in question had never been in possession of the baggage company, but on the contrary had been stolen from the railroad company, and added that if, in the instant case, the transfer company had shown as a matter of defense that it never had received the trunk represented by the check, but that the trunk had been taken from the possession of the railroad company, and had so reported to the passenger and returned her check in order that she might thereby hold the railroad company liable, the facts would have been similar to those of the Aiken Case, and there would have been no liability on the part of the transfer company.

So, an express company whose agent solicits a passenger's baggage on the train, and taking her baggage check goes into the baggage car, and according to his custom surrenders the check to the railroad company by placing it upon the strap on the trunk with the duplicate check, and pasters on the trunk the express company's label, the intention being to claim the baggage after it has been delivered to the baggage room at the station, is liable for the subsequent loss of the trunk or its contents, although such loss occurred before he has gone to the baggage room to claim the trunk. Springer v. Westcott (1901) 166 N. Y. 117, 59 N. E. 693. As to the legal effect of the premature surrender of the check under such circumstances, the court said: "Whether the effect upon the liability of the railroad company to the plaintiff was to terminate it as a carrier, convert it into that of a warehouseman, or to end it entirely, we do not determine, but confine our attention to the effect upon the liability of the express company to the plaintiff. As between the two companies the railroad company became the bailee of the trunk for the express company. Thenceforth there was a dual custody, by the latter as bailor and by the former as bailee, the same as always results from a storage of property of a principal by a bailee thereof, whether authorized by the owner or not. The possession of the railroad company thus became the possession of the express company. So far as the rights of the plaintiff are concerned the defendant had assumed control of the trunk and was bound to make safe delivery thereof to her. By its action it ran the risk of receiving the trunk, with the contents unharmed, from the railroad company, its bailee. While it was under no obligation to take any responsibility for the trunk until the actual delivery thereof, upon surrender of the check at the Grand Central Depot, it saw fit, for purposes of its own, to anticipate responsibility by giving up the check while the trunk was in transitu. It cannot now be heard to say that it did not intend this result, for the law holds it to the natural consequences of its own acts. The plaintiff was entitled to her check, unaffected by the unauthorized surrender, as unimpaired evidence of an unperformed contract of the railroad company, or the delivery of her trunk with the contents undisturbed. She cannot be tossed like a ball from one company to the other, each disclaiming liability itself and seeking to place it upon the other. One, at least, was liable, and from their intimate relations they could easily have determined which without subjecting a patron of both to the expense and delay of litigation which has lasted more than ten years."

A baggage transfer company whose agent accepted a check for a valise for the purpose of getting the valise and transporting it to the owner's residence has the burden of proving that the valise was not received by it in good condition, where the owner shows that it was delivered to the railroad company in good condition and that he had not seen the valise during the interval between its delivery to the railway company and its delivery to him by the transfer company. Myerson v. Woolverton (1894) 9 Misc. 186, 29 N. Y. Supp. 737.

But a transfer company which accepts a check for baggage for the purpose of getting it from the railroad company and taking it to the owner's residence will not be liable for the damaged condition of such baggage or for loss of any of its contents, although the owner proves that he gave it to the railroad company in good condition, where the owner testifies that he did not arrive at his residence until about a half an hour after the baggage arrived, and there is no evidence as to who received it or where it was deposited in the meantime. Eckstein v. Woolverton (1908) 111 N. Y. Supp. 535.

Liability of an express company for loss of articles from a trunk is established by uncontradicted proof that the trunk was found unlawfully in the express company's possession and that the articles were taken therefrom during such possession. Hoff v. Frank Parmelee Co. (1908) 140 Ill. App. 458. See also Springer v. Westcott (1896) 2 App. Div. 295, 37 N. Y. Supp. 909; Aikin v. Westcott (1890) 123 N. Y. 363, 25 N. E. 503; Verner v. Sweitzer (1858) 32 Pa. 208; De Ponte v. New Orleans Transfer Co. (1890) 42 La. Ann. 696, 7 So. 608.

What constitutes delivery by transfer company.

A contract to deliver a trunk at a railroad station is entered when the trunk is so delivered, and the carrier is not liable for its subsequent loss. Newby v. Ford (1908) 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 634. The court added that if the agreement had been to deliver at the station to the owner, the law would be otherwise.

But one who accepts hand baggage for the purpose of transferring it to a railway station is liable for its loss where, instead of delivering it to the agent at the station, he deposits it on the platform outside the building and it is stolen, such act being not a delivery, but an abandonment. Alexander v. McNally (1905) 112 Mo. App. 563, 87 S. W. 1.

And see BROWN SHOE CO. v. HARDIN. L.R.A.1916D.

And negligence of a transfer company in leaving baggage on the station platform when the owner thereof failed to come forth and claim it is a question for the jury where the evidence is conflicting as to whether the owner agreed to be there to receive it. Ft. Worth Transfer Co. v. Isaacs (1897) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 40 S. W. 39, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 75. The court in this case stated that the carrier would have no right to abandon the property because the owner had not come forth to receive it, but that he would be required to exercise such a degree of care in keeping and protecting the trunk as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise toward such property under the same circumstances, and that a failure to exercise such care would be negligence for which he would be liable for the value of the trunk and its contents.

See also Southern Exp. Co. v. Armstead (1874) 50 Ala. 350; Manheim v. Carr (1873) 62 Mo. 473; Henshaw v. Rowland (1873) 54 N. Y. 242, cited in the earlier note.

Liability as affected by character of goods.

A baggage transfer company is not liable in an action for breach of contract of carriage, for loss of a trunk which contained merchandise of large value, where, in accepting it for carriage, it rightfully assumed from the manner of its delivery that it contained only ordinary baggage. Nathan v. Woolverton (1910) 69 Misc. 425, 127 N. Y. Supp. 442, affirmed without opinion in (1911) 147 App. Div. 908, 131 N. Y. Supp. 1130. See also Hopkins v. Westcott (1868) 6 Blatchf. 64, Fed. Cas. No. 6692; and Richards v. Westcott (1858) 2 Bosw. 589; Parmelee v. Lowitz (1874) 74 Ill. 116, 24 Am. Rep. 276, cited in the earlier note.

Damages.

In De Leon v. McKernan (1898) 25 Misc. 182, 54 N. Y. Supp. 167, where an expressman failed to get a trunk to the dock until after the steamer had sailed, and the owner on discovering this left the steamer and hired a tug to return to the starting point, in an action to recover for the expense of the tug, also of a cablegram in reference to trunks which had gone on the steamer, and for his living expenses while waiting for the next steamer, and for an extra ticket, it was held that the price of the extra ticket was all that the expressman could be held liable for, the other items not being in the contemplation of the parties when they contracted, in view of the fact that no intimation of the consequences that would follow the failure to perform the contract was given the expressman. Further, the court stated that there was nothing in the evidence to show why the owner of the trunk could not have ascertained whether his trunk had been delivered before he went on the ship, and thus have obviated the necessity of hiring the tug to bring him back. Nor was any reason given to show that he could not either have arranged with the officers of the ship with regard to his other trunks that were already on board, or have taken them off with him, and thus avoided the necessity of the cablegram. Nor was any evidence given by which the court could arrive, with any sort of certainty, at the increased cost of living expenses claimed to result from his enforced stay.

Generally, as to right to recover expenses or damages incidental to loss of, or delay in delivering, baggage, see notes to Turner v. Southern R. Co. 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 188, and Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Fugatt, L.R.A.1916A, 549.

Limitation of liability.

Supplementing note in 34 L.R.A. 138.

One engaged in transferring baggage for hire is not within the protection of a public service law making every common carrier and railroad company liable for loss, damage, and injury to property carried as baggage to the full value thereof, but requiring value over a certain amount to be stated and extra compensation paid for the extra risk, since the word "baggage" refers to property transported as an incident to the transportation of the owner as a passenger. Morgan v. Woolverton (1911) 203 N. Y. 52, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 640, 96 N. E. 354. Although not specifically stating so, this case overrules Meister v. Woolverton (1910) 140 App. Div. 926, 125 N. Y. Supp. 439, as to the point that the term "baggage" in the statute is not limited to property carried as an incident to the transportation of passengers.

Under a statute which provides that every common carrier and railroad corporation shall be liable for all loss, damage, or injury to property carried as baggage up to the full value, and regardless of the character thereof, but that the value in excess of $150 shall be stated upon delivery to the carrier, and a written receipt stating the value shall be issued by the carrier, who may make a reasonable charge for the assumption of such liability in excess of $150, one who delivers baggage to a transfer company to be transferred is not, because of his failure to disclose the value thereof, limited in his recovery to the sum of $150. Meister v. Woolverton (N. Y.) supra. The court stated that "undoubtedly if the carrier had asked the person delivering the check the value of the trunk and such value had been stated to be $150, the plaintiff would be estopped from disputing that $150 was the value of the trunk, and thus precluded from recovering a greater sum. But this provision in relation to a statement of the value of the baggage to be transported was for the benefit of the company to entitle it to charge an additional sum for the assumption of the increased liability. If the defendant accepted the trunk for transportation without any inquiry as to value, or any demand for an additional charge on account of the excess. It cannot claim that either the plaintiff was estopped from claiming the full value of the trunk, or that a penalty should be imposed upon the plaintiff of a loss of the amount exceeding $150 for a failure to state the value. Accepting the trunk for transportation without inquiry as to value, fixing its own charge for transportation without such inquiry, it assumed the obligation imposed upon it by the statute, which was a liability for the full value. If it had been intended to limit its liability to the value of $150 where the value was not stated by the person delivering the trunk for transportation, it seems to me that that intention would have been expressed. The carrier has the option to inquire as to the value, and thus bring itself within the limitations provided for by the section in question. It is not, however, bound to make such inquiry, but could accept the trunk for transportation subject to the full liability clause, and waive the provision which authorized an extra charge if it assumed a liability for a sum above $150, and its failure to make such additional charges was a waiver of this limited liability and an acceptance of the unlimited liability prescribed by the section."

And in Noel v. Westcott Exp. Co. (1916) 158 N. Y. Supp. 702, it was held that the limitation as to recovery was not operative, as the owner of the baggage was not asked to state the value.

In Morgan v. Woolverton (N. Y.) supra, it was contended that the burden rested on the owner of the baggage to disclose the value in excess of $150, rather than upon the carrier to ascertain such value by inquiry, but the court did not discuss the point, as it decided that in any event the defendant was not within the protection of the statute.

But see in Richardson v. Woolverton (1909) 117 N. Y. Supp. 903, an action to recover for loss of two pieces of baggage received for transfer by a transfer company, where judgment for plaintiff was modified by reducing it to the sum of $300, as "by the provisions of § 38 of the Public Service Commissions law (Laws 1907, p. 911, chap. 429) then in effect, and under which this defendant came according to the defined scope of article 2 as expressed in § 25 of that law, no valuation having been stated by the plaintiff, he might not recover more than the amount limited in § 38 of that law, namely, $150 a piece, the sum less than which the defendant, under the provisions of that section, might not, save by express contract, limit its liability."

A limitation of liability contained in a receipt for a baggage check given an owner of baggage by a local carrier was held in Seofield v. May (1909) 62 Misc. 243, 114 N. Y. Supp. 787, not to be binding upon the owner of such baggage so as to preclude a recovery beyond a certain limitation, where it was not called to her attention, nor did she read it. The court stated that in this case the owner of such baggage had no opportunity for negotiation or discussion; that the slip of paper was evidently hurriedly placed in her hands, and the agent immediately passed on engaged in the performance of his duties. The court cited Blossom v. Dodd (1870) 43 N. Y. 264, 3 Am. Rep. 701, and Grossman v. Dodd (1892) 63 Hun, 324, 17 N. Y. Supp. 855, affirmed without opinion in (1893) 137 N. Y. 599, 33 N. E. 642, cited in the early note, to the point that this was one of the numerous cases known as the baggage cases, in which it has been uniformly held that tokens or writings given in exchange for baggage checks are not of such a nature as to put persons on their guard as to the memorandum printed on them, and persons receiving them are not presumed to know their contents or to assent to them.

And so it is reversible error for a trial court to rule that a limitation on a coupon check given by a transfer company for baggage which is to be transferred by it to a depot is binding upon the owner of the baggage, where it does not appear that she knew of such limitation, or as a reasonable person should be presumed to examine the coupon to see exactly what was printed upon it. Smith v. Hughes (1909) 63 Misc. 326, 117 N. Y. Supp. 162.
L.R.A.1916D.

Under a Code provision that "a passenger consignor or consignee, by accepting a ticket, bill of lading, or written contract for carriage with a knowledge of its terms, assents . . . to the limitation stated therein upon the amount of the carrier's liability in case property carried in packages, trunks, or boxes is lost or injured, when the value of such property is not named, . . ." constructive notice of such a limitation is sufficient to legally charge one with knowledge thereof. Merrill v. Pacific Transfer Co. (1901) 131 Cal. 582, 63 Pac. 915.

Whether or not one, in accepting from a transfer company a receipt for a trunk containing a limitation of liability, had actual or constructive notice of such limitation, is a question for the jury. (Cal.) Ibid.

So, also, whether or not a transfer company, in losing a trunk, was guilty of such gross negligence as to overcome a limitation of liability contained in a receipt given for such trunk, is a question for the jury. (Cal.) Ibid.

The effect of a custom.

Supplementing note in 34 L.R.A. 146. Testimony of one who transfers baggage to a railway station, that it was his custom to deposit hand baggage on the platform outside the building, is insufficient to show a custom of the railroad company to receive it there, so as to relieve the transfer man of liability for its loss. Alexander v. McNally (1905) 112 Mo. App. 563, 87 S. W. 1.

The general custom of a transfer company to carry passengers only, and not to hold itself out as carrying such passengers' baggage without extra compensation, is immaterial on the question of transfer company's liability for loss of hand baggage, where it undertook to transport such passenger and his baggage in return for a certain fare demanded and paid. City Transfer Co. v. Draper (1902) 115 Ga. 954, 42 S. E. 221.

A baggage transfer company which takes a passenger's trunk check, giving in return its transfer check, and undertakes to deliver the trunk to her at a certain hotel, is relieved from liability of loss only by a delivery to such passenger in person, or to a party holding her transfer check for her, and so proof that it has delivered it at the hotel is no defense, although such delivery is the usual and customary manner of delivering baggage. Trice v. Miller (1889) 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 532.

J. H. B.

ARIZONA SUPREME COURT.

LUCIA GUANA, Admr., etc., of Manuel Guana, Appt.,
v.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY.

(15 Ariz. 413, 139 Pac. 782.)

Master and servant — change of appliances — assumption of risk.

One employed to assist in caring for and moving engines in a roundhouse in the night, without artificial light, does not as matter of law assume the risk of injury of being caught, in the customary performance of his duties, between a standing post and an engine so much wider than those upon which he had been working as to make the space between it and the post dangerous, of which fact he was not notified.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. b, 3, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(April 3, 1914.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pima County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint filed to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Ross, J.:

The appellant, who was plaintiff below, prosecutes this appeal from a final judgment sustaining a demurrer to her complaint, on the ground that it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It is an action by her as administratrix for damages for the death of her husband, Manuel Guana, who is alleged to have been killed on March 10, 1910, through the negligence of the appellee railroad company, for which deceased was working at the time of his death. The material parts of the complaint are set forth in the following allegations:

"VI. That, at the time of his death, the said Manuel Guana was, and for about two months prior thereto had been, in the employ of the defendant at its said roundhouse at Benson, Arizona, and that the duties of his employment were to clean and care for the engines of defendant, and occasionally to assist in running them in and out of said roundhouse and to and from the main track of the defendant, and to assist generally in all work in and about the roundhouse and yard of the defendant at said Benson, and that, in the performance of such duties, it became and was necessary and proper for the said Manuel Guana to get upon and off the engines of the defendant while the same were being run into and out of said roundhouse.

"VII. That said Manuel Guana was an illiterate Mexican, aged about twenty-six years; that he was inexperienced in the line of work in which he was engaged at the time of his death; that he was not aware of the risks and hazards of said occupation, and did not know or appreciate the dangers incident thereto, as the defendant and its agents and servants well knew.

"VIII. That during the time of his employment, the greater portion of the time of the said Manuel Guana was occupied inside the roundhouse, cleaning and wiping engines, and only occasionally was he required to assist in running them from the roundhouse to the main track of defendant; that, at the time of his death, said Manuel Guana was engaged in assisting the hostler in taking a certain engine from the roundhouse to the main track; that said engine was wider than the other engines which said Manuel Guana was accustomed to work, all of which was unknown to him; that the said roundhouse was constructed with large posts used to support the roof of said roundhouse, between which said posts were the tracks leading into said roundhouse, and which were used for running the engines in and out of said roundhouse; that said posts were so placed that they would clear a man getting on or off an engine of the ordinary size and width, but would not clear a man getting on or off an engine of the size and width of the one upon which said Manuel Guana was working at the time he met his death, all of which was unknown to said Manuel Guana; that said defendant carelessly and negligently maintained said posts too near to said tracks, as aforesaid, and carelessly and negligently failed and neglected to remove the same or to place them at a safe distance from said tracks, and knowingly suffered the said posts to remain in such dangerous position.

"IX. That on the 10th day of March, 1910, the said Manuel Guana was in the employ of said defendant at its roundhouse, as aforesaid, and that about the hour of 4 o'clock A. M., while it was still dark, it then and there became and was the duty of the said Manuel Guana to assist another employee of defendant, known as a hostler, in backing or moving a certain engine of the defendant out of said roundhouse, for the purpose of placing said engine upon the main track of defendant preparatory to attaching said engine to one of defendant's trains to be run over its railroad; that said engine was wider than the ordinary engine, as aforesaid; and that some of the posts supporting the roof of said roundhouse were too close to the tracks, as aforesaid; that while so engaged, as aforesaid, said Manuel Guana was struck by one of the posts so placed close to the track, which, on account of darkness and the fact that no lights were maintained, was not observed by said Manuel Guana; and that he sustained injuries from which he, on the last-named date, died.

Note. — As to assumption of risk by an employee of dangers arising from a change of appliances, see annotation following this case, post, 1210.

L.R.A.1916D.

"X. That at the time said injuries were received by the said Manuel Guana, resulting in his death as aforesaid, the said engine was being backed or run out of said roundhouse by a certain employee of said defendant, known as a hostler, who was then and there engaged in operating said engine and backing or moving the same out of said roundhouse; that said hostler then and there well knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence could and should have known, that said Manuel Guana was then and there at work on said engine and getting on and off thereof, in the performance of the duties of his employment, and that said engine was larger than the ordinary engine, and that said Manuel Guana was in danger of being struck by the said post so maintained in dangerous proximity to said tracks over which said engine was then and there running, and that, in getting off said engine while the same was in motion, said Manuel Guana was in danger of being struck by said post and injured thereby; but nevertheless the said hostler continued to back and move said engine, and, while said engine was so being moved and while in motion, said Manuel Guana was struck by said post, and received injuries from which he died, as aforesaid.

"XI. That said Manuel Guana received the said injuries which resulted in his death, as aforesaid, by reason of the negligence and carelessness of said defendant in maintaining and keeping the said post too close to said track, so that said Manuel Guana could not perform his duties without danger of injury while said engine was being backed out of said roundhouse, and by reason of the carelessness and negligence of said hostler in backing said engine out of said roundhouse and keeping said engine in motion when said Manuel Guana was getting on or off said engine, which said hostler knew or ought to have known that said Manuel Guana was in danger of being struck by said post and of being killed or injured thereby, and because of the negligence and carelessness of the defendant in maintaining the dangerous conditions in and about said roundhouse without providing any lights in the night-time."

Messrs. A. A. Worsley, William M. Lovell, and Benton Dick, for appellant:

Risks resulting from the master's negligence are not assumed by the servant.

1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 2; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Harvey, 228 U. S. 319, 57 L. ed. 862, 33 Sup. Ct. 518.

Whether or not there was an assumption of risk involved in this complaint or cause is a question of fact that should have been submitted to a jury; and the court erred in sustaining the demurrer, if it was sustained, upon the theory that plaintiff assumed the risk.

Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 107 Minn. 260, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 138, 120 N. W. 360; 26 Cyc. 1444-1446; Boucher v. Robeson Mills, 182 Mass. 500, 65 N. E. 819; Swensen v. Bender, 51 C. C. 627, 114 Fed. 1; Hamman v. Central Coal & Coke Co. 156 Mo. 232, 56 S. W. 1091; Carter v. Baldwin, 107 Mo. App. 217, 81 S. W. 204.

Messrs. Frank Cox and Francis M. Hartman, for appellee:

The question of assumption of risk is one of law for the court.

Glenmont Lumber Co. v. Roy, 61 C. C. A. 506, 126 Fed. 524, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 483; Rush v. Missouri P. R. Co. 36 Kan. 120, 12 Pac. 682; Kenney v. Meddaugh, 55 C. C. A. 115, 118 Fed. 209; Goure v. Storey, 17 Idaho, 352, 105 Pac. 794; Riverside Iron Works v. Green, 79 Kan. 588, 100 Pac. 482; Breig v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 98 Mich. 222, 57 N. W. 118, 16 Am. Neg. Cas. 131; Week v. Fremont Mill Co. 3 Wash. 215, 29 Pac. 215; Lee v. Northern P. R. Co. 39 Wash. 398, 81 Pac. 834; 3 Bailey, Personal Injuries, § 2216; Bolden v. Central of Georgia R. Co. 130 Ga. 456, 60 S. E. 1047; Dوزير v. Atlanta, 118 Ga. 354, 45 S. E. 306; Hoover v. Empire Coal Co. 149 Ill. App. 258; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Baxter, 42 Neb. 793, 60 N. W. 1044, 16 Am. Neg. Cas. 555; Walker v. Wehking, 29 Ind. App. 62, 63 N. E. 128; Klutts v. Gibson Bros. 37 Tex. Civ. App. 216, 83 S. W. 404; Smith v. Armour & Co. 37 Tex. Civ. App. 633, 84 S. W. 675; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Shalstrom, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 387, 115 C. O. A. 515, 195 Fed. 725; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Watson, 36 Okla. 1, 127 Pac. 693; Brette v. E. B. & A. L. Stone Co. 162 Cal. 74, 121 Pac. 312; Kiley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 138 Wis. 215, 119 N. W. 309, 120 N. W. 756, 21 Am. Neg. Rep. 394; Callanan v. Judd, 23 Wis. 343; Oatman v. Bond, 15 Wis. 21; Klein v. Valerius, 87 Wis. 54, 22 L.R.A. 609, 57 N. W. 1112; Janesville v. Carpenter, 77 Wis. 288, 8 L.R.A. 808, 20

Am. St. Rep. 123, 46 N. W. 128; Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1003, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 322; Moores v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 111 U. S. 170, 28 L. ed. 390, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345; Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 619, 29 L. ed. 225, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125; Higgins v. McCrea, 116 U. S. 683, 29 L. ed. 768, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557; Marshall v. Hubbard, 117 U. S. 419, 29 L. ed. 920, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 806; Goodlett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 122 U. S. 411, 30 L. ed. 1234, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1254; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Roddy, 65 C. C. A. 470, 131 Fed. 712; Connelley v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 867, 119 C. C. A. 392, 201 Fed. 54; Montgomery v. Southern P. Co. 64 Or. 597, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 13, 131 Pac. 507.

Plaintiff assumed the risk of injury.

Freeman v. Powell, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 144 S. W. 1033; Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Loosley, 76 Kan. 103, 90 Pac. 990; Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. 220 U. S. 590, 55 L. ed. 596, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561; Nivert v. Wabash R. Co. 232 Mo. 626, 135 S. W. 33; Davies v. People's R. Co. 159 Mo. 1, 59 S. W. 982; Indiana & C. Coal Co. v. Batey, 34 Ind. App. 16, 71 N. E. 191; Boyd v. Harris, 176 Pa. 484, 35 Atl. 222; Bethlehem Iron Co. v. Weiss, 40 C. C. A. 270, 100 Fed. 45; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lonergan, 118 Ill. 41, 7 N. E. 55; Young v. Burlington Wire Mattress Co. 79 Iowa, 415, 44 N. W. 693; Frederick Cotton Oil & Mfg. Co. v. Traver, 36 Okla. 717, 129 Pac. 747; 3 Elliott, Railroads, § 1269, p. 658; Rains v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 71 Mo. 164, 36 Am. Rep. 459; Pennsylvania Co. v. Finney, 145 Ind. 551, 42 N. E. 816; Gibson v. Erie R. Co. 63 N. Y. 449, 20 Am. Rep. 552; Tuttle v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 122 U. S. 189, 30 L. ed. 1114, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1166; Southern P. Co. v. Seley, 152 U. S. 145, 155, 38 L. ed. 391, 395, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530; Narramore v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 49 L.R.A. 68, 37 C. C. A. 499, 96 Fed. 301; Freeman v. Wilson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 149 S. W. 413; Vandalia R. Co. v. Parker, 178 Ind. 138, 98 N. E. 706; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Shalstrom, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 387, 115 C. C. A. 515, 195 Fed. 725; Bowers v. Southern R. Co. 10 Ga. App. 367, 73 S. E. 677; Wright v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. 197 Fed. 94; Molt v. Northern P. R. Co. 44 Mont. 471, 120 Pac. 809; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 48 L. ed. 96, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 230; Kath v. East St. Louis & Suburban R. Co. 232 Ill. 126, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1109, 83 N. E. 533; Sisco v. Lehigh & H. River R. Co. 145 N. Y. 296, 39 N. E. 958; Jackson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 102 O. C. A. 159, 178 Fed. 432; Wilson v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 29 R. I. L.R.A.1916D.

146, 69 Atl. 364; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Birch, 89 Ark. 424, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1250, 117 S. W. 243; Southern R. Co. v. Carr, 82 C. C. A. 240, 153 Fed. 106; Southern P. R. Co. v. Allen, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 66, 106 S. W. 441; Mattson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 103 Minn. 239, 114 N. W. 759; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Donovan, 87 C. C. A. 600, 160 Fed. 826; Wabash R. Co. v. Stansberry, 118 C. C. A. 357, 200 Fed. 139; Goure v. Storey, 17 Idaho, 352, 105 Pac. 794; 4 Labatt, Mast. & S. ¶ 1626; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Harvey, 228 U. S. 319, 57 L. ed. 852, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 518.

Ross, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Does the complaint state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action? At the time Manuel Guana was killed, Arizona was a territory, and, in answering the above question, we must be guided by the terms of the Federal employers' liability act of April 22, 1908, chap. 149, 35 Stat. at l. 65, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1909, p. 584, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 8657. The portions of that act having a bearing on this case are as follows:

"Section 2. [Damages for Injuries in Territories, District of Columbia, Canal Zone, etc.] That every common carrier by railroad in the territories, the District of Columbia, the Panama Canal Zone, or other possessions of the United States shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in any of said jurisdictions, or, in case of the death of such employee, to his or her personal representative, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employee; and, if none, then of such employee's parents; and if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee, for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment.

"Section 3. [Contributory Negligence of Employee.] That in all actions hereafter brought against any such common carrier by railroad under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act to recover damages for personal injuries to an employee, or where such injuries have resulted in his death, the fact that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee: Provided, that no such employee who may be injured or killed shall be held to have been guilty of contributory negligence in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee.

"Section 4. [Assumption of Risk of Employment.] That in any action brought against any common carrier under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act to recover damages for injuries to, or the death of, any of its employees, such employee shall not be held to have assumed the risks of his employment in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of the employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee."

It will be seen that by § 2, in the territories, the District of Columbia, the Panama Canal Zone, and other possessions of the United States, the fellow-servant doctrine of the common law is abrogated, and a liability upon the part of common carriers by railroad is created, when injury or death results to an employee from the negligence of any of its officers, agents, or employees, or by reason of any defects or insufficiency, due to negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, road-bed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment. Section 3 abrogates the common-law doctrine of contributory negligence, and substitutes therefor what is known as comparative negligence, and authorizes the jury to gauge the amount of damages in accordance with the degree of negligence of the employee, diminishing it as the employee's negligence increases. Section 4 retains the common-law doctrine of assumed risk, except where the injury or death is occasioned, in whole or in part, by a violation of some law by the employer enacted for the safety of employees.

The complaint does not allege any violation by defendant of any safety law enacted for the protection of employees, and it follows that plaintiff assumed those risks under the common law that have not been abrogated by this act. Freeman v. Powell, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 144 S. W. 1033; Barker v. Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. 88 Kan. 767, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1121, 129 Pac. 1151.

The complaint is based upon three acts of negligence, as we read it: (1) A failure on the part of defendant to furnish a safe place and appliances; (2) a failure to furnish lights; and (3) negligence of a fellow servant.

Our analysis of the complaint, and, upon the demurrer, its allegations must be taken as true, satisfies us that the proximate cause of the accident that resulted in the death of Manuel Guana was the introduction into his work, without his knowledge, of a new element of danger in the wider engine, and that the failure to provide artificial lights lessened his ability or opportunity to discover a danger that, with lights, might have been easily seen and avoided. It seems that the engine was being operated in the usual manner, and that the deceased, at the time of his injury, was performing his ordinary duties in the accustomed way. The accident did not occur because of the negligent movement of the engine, nor because of any negligent omission or commission of deceased, but solely by reason of the wider engine occupying more of the space between the upright posts and leaving too little space for deceased to do his work as he had been doing it on the narrower engines. The deceased might have been prevented, because of the darkness, from discerning that the particular engine was wider than the others upon which he had been working, or the difference in width might not have been so pronounced as to attract his attention, or his visual conception might have been defective. We cannot say, as a question of law, the new element of danger interjected by the wider engine was "so patent as to be readily observed" by deceased. A most cautious person might have been lulled into a feeling of security from having repeatedly made the same trip with apparently the same means without injury.

Under the rule that the employee assumes all the ordinary risks of his employment, it may be said the deceased assumed the risks incident to working without artificial lights, so long as the instruments with which he labored remained the same, or so long as he was fully advised of any alterations or changes that enhanced his danger. A servant does not assume extraordinary or unusual risks of his employment. 26 Cyc. 1177; Labatt Mast. & S. § 1187. The last author says, at § 1180: "Most of the cases in which the servant's nonassumption of extraordinary risks is asserted relate to injuries caused by dangerous conditions which arise from or are incident to the intrinsic quality or the permanent arrangement and relative disposition of the instrumentalities of the business or the materials which the servant is required to handle."

The case of Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 48 L. ed. 96, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 230, in its essential features, bears enough resemblance to this case to make the principles therein announced applicable here. McDade, a brakeman, was struck by an overhanging iron pipe of a water tank and knocked down from the top of a moving train and killed. The court said: "It is the duty of a railroad company to use due care to provide . . . properly constructed roadbed, structures, the track to be used in the operation of the road. Union P. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 451, 40 L. ed. 766, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 618. The spout might readily have been so constructed and hung as to be safe. As it was maintained, it was a constant menace to the lives and limbs of employees whose duties required them, by night and day, to pass the structure. It is a case where the dangerous structure is not justified by the necessity of the situation, and we agree with judgments in the courts below that its maintenance under the circumstances was negligence upon the part of the railroad company. . . . The servant assumes the risk of dangers incident to the business of the master, but not of the latter's negligence. Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612; Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. ed. 605, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932; Northern P. R. Co. v. Herbert 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 755, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590; Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 958, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 978. The question of assumption of risk is quite apart from that of contributory negligence. The servant has the right to assume that the master has used due diligence to provide suitable appliances in the operation of his business, and he does not assume the risk of the employer's negligence in performing such duties. The employee is not obliged to pass judgment upon the employer's methods of transacting his business, but may assume that reasonable care will be used in furnishing the appliances necessary for its operation. This rule is subject to the exception that, where a defect is known to the employee, or is so patent as to be readily observed by him, he cannot continue to use the defective apparatus in the face of knowledge and without objection, without assuming the hazard incident to such a situation. In other words, if he knows of a defect, or it is so plainly observable that he may be presumed to know of it, and continues in the master's employ without objection, he is taken to have made his election to continue in the employ of the master, notwithstanding the defect, and in such case cannot recover."

While there may be cases in which it becomes the duty of the court to decide upon demurrer that the employee assumed the risks as pleaded, we do not think this is that kind of a case.

The judgment is reversed, and case remanded, with directions to overrule demurrer.

Franklin, Ch. J., and Cunningham, J., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Assumption of risk by an employee of dangers arising from a change of appliances.

From one point of view, the foregoing case presents simply an application of the general principle that an employee does not assume the risk of dangers of which he has no knowledge, actual or constructive. From another point of view, however, it presents a distinct phase of the law of assumption of risk. An employee must use ordinary care at all times, and cannot shut his eyes as to obvious dangers even though created by the negligence of the master. When an employee first undertakes dangerous work, there rests upon him the duty of using his senses to protect himself, but it is only natural that an employee should, after a time, become so accustomed to the danger that he unconsciously guards himself from it. If, however, the danger is, without warning, increased by a positive act of the master, the employee is not prepared for the added risk, and it would seem clear that there is a duty resting upon the master in cases of this character, to inform the L.R.A.1916D.

employee of the change; and the omission to give this information is negligence, the risk of which is not assumed by the employee. The court in GUANA v. SOUTHERN P. Co. ante, 1206, well expresses the situation when it says: "A most cautious person might have been lulled into a feeling of security from having repeatedly made the same trip with apparently the same means, without injury."

There are undoubtedly many cases in which the injuries suffered by the employee were caused by a change in the appliances made without his knowledge, but which were disposed of by the court by simply stating that the servant did not assume the risk of dangers of which he was unaware; in the following cases, however, the principle enunciated in GUANA v. SOUTHERN P. Co. was more or less clearly stated and applied:

A brakeman does not assume the risk arising from the dangerous proximity of a switch target to the track placed in position a few weeks prior to the accident, and unknown to the brakeman, and never operated by him in its changed location, or warning given to him regarding it. Boston & M. R. Co. v. Gokey (1906) 79 C. C. A. 64, 149 Fed. 42, 9 Ann. Cas. 384; affirmed in (1908) 210 U. S. 155, 52 L. ed. 1002, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657.

While a lineman for a telephone company assumes the risk of encountering, on a clear day without moisture anywhere, wires carrying a high current with such insulation as might be expected on wires so placed, and which have been in service and exposed to ordinary wear and tear, he does not assume the further risk, of which he is ignorant, that by the act of or with the assent of those in charge of such wires insulation had been intentionally removed and never replaced. Co-Operant Teleph. Co. v. St. Clair (1909) 94 C. C. A. 109, 168 Fed. 645.

The employees in a factory do not assume the risk arising from the negligent conduct of the proprietors of the factory who, in shifting an engine in the engine room, projected an unguarded shaft thereof into the working room of the factory a greater length than was necessary, and failed to cut it off because of the press of business. Fairbank v. Haentzsche (1874) 73 Ill. 236. The shifting in the engine room in the course of which the shaft was projected into the working room of the factory was made at night, but the employees knew of the change. It was because of the fact that it was a temporary peril to which the employees were exposed by the negligent conduct of the proprietors of the factory that they were held not to have assumed the risk incident thereto. It is further stated that under the circumstances of the case the injured employee was under no legal obligation to give notice to the proprietors of the temporary peril to which he was exposed, and demand its removal, before he could maintain an action for injuries; that there may be cases in which such notice must be given, and, if not removed, the employee must quit the employment or assume all the hazards, but this is not such case; for here the danger was created by a positive act of the proprietors of the factory. There is neither reason nor authority for saying in such case that notice is necessary.

The finding of a jury that a yard foreman did not assume the risk incident to the use of an unfilled frog is sustained by evidence showing that he had been taken sick and quit work at a time when the frog was filled, and while he was away the track at this place was raised and repaired, but the frog had not been refilled or blocked. Texarkana & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Toliver (1904) 37 Tex. Civ. App. 437, 84 S. W. 375.

Whether an employee of a hotel company who operated the elevator and ran errands assumed the risk which arose from a custom of the hotel guests known to and approved of by the hotel owners, of moving the elevator in the absence of the person in charge, is for the jury, where this custom was unknown to the employee. Lyons v. Dee (1903) 88 Minn. 490, 93 N. W. 899, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 542.

The general doctrine of assumption of risk by a servant is discussed in vol. 3, chap. L, Labatt on Master & Servant. The application to specific cases of the doctrine of assumption of extraordinary risks is discussed in § 1180 of that chapter. W. A. E.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

HUGH GORDEN MILLER, Trustee of Clarence D. Sire, Bankrupt,
v.

LILLIAN R. SIRE, Appt.
(Two cases.)

(140 C. C. A. 118, 224 Fed. 424.)

Contract — execution of parol promise required to be in writing — right of creditors.

A conveyance by a man to his fiancée, in consideration of which she fulfils her promise to marry him, cannot be set aside by his creditors under a statutory provision making every agreement which is made in consideration of marriage void unless in writing, although his promise to make the conveyance was in parol.
For other cases, see Contracts, I. c, 6, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

ing every agreement which is made in consideration of marriage void unless in writing, although his promise to make the conveyance was in parol.

For other cases, see Contracts, I. c, 6, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(June 22, 1915.)

APPEALS by defendant from a decree of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York (Evans, J.) in plaintiff's favor, and from an order denying a motion to open a so-called default, in a suit to set aside a conveyance by the bankrupt to defendant, alleged to have been made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors. Reversed.

Note. — For right of creditors to avoid debtor's contracts or conveyances upon the ground of the statute of frauds, see annotation following this case, post, 1213.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Lacombe, Coxe, and Ward, Circuit Judges.

Messrs. F. Sidney Williams and Charles B. La Voe, with Messrs. Edward M. Grout and Paul Grout, for appellant.

Messrs. William Hughes and W. H. K. Davey, with Mr. True P. Pierce, for appellee:

The agreement between the parties is void, and a conveyance based upon no other consideration is void as to existing creditors.

Moses v. National Bank, 149 U. S. 298, 37 L. ed. 743, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900; Walker v. Hafer, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 315, 95 C. C. A. 311, 170 Fed. 39; Grafton v. Cummings, 99 U. S. 100, 25 L. ed. 366; Braashear v. West, 7 Pet. 615, 8 L. ed. 804; Reade v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. 481, 8 Am. Dec. 520; Dygert v. Remerschnider, 32 N. Y. 630; Hunt v. Hunt, 171 N. Y. 396, 59 L.R.A. 306, 64 N. E. 159; Whyte v. Denike, 53 App. Div. 320, 65 N. Y. Supp. 577; Clowe v. Seavey, 208 N. Y. 496, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 284, 102 N. E. 521; Re Majot, 199 N. Y. 35, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 780, 92 N. E. 402; Keep v. Keep, 7 Abb. N. C. 240; Browne, Stat. Fr. 5th ed. chap. 11, p. 287.

The order denying the motion to reopen the case is right. Moreover, the motion was addressed to the discretion of the court, and is not reviewable by an appellate court.

Foster, Fed. Pr. 352, p. 1120; Desty, Fed. Proc. § 177, p. 661; Blitz v. United States, 153 U. S. 312, 38 L. ed. 726, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 924; Reagan v. United States, 157 U. S. 301, 39 L. ed. 709, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 610; Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. 433, 7 L. ed. 732; New York O. & H. R. R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 24, 25 L. ed. 531; Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. ed. 605, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932; Addington v. United States, 165 U. S. 184, 41 L. ed. 679, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 288; Prager v. Beardsley, 133 App. Div. 595, 118 N. Y. Supp. 232; Henry Huber Co. v. Soles, 12 Misc. 548, 34 N. Y. Supp. 17.

Lacombe, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The main appeal may be first considered. Miller is the trustee in bankruptcy of Clarence D. Sire. The bill of complaint is not found in the record, which contains only what someone has decided to be the "essential portions of the bill." This is bad practice; it is for this court, when appeal is taken, to determine what parts of the bill are essential. However, there is enough in the record to show that Clarence D. Sire filed a petition in bankruptcy some time in 1913, and was adjudicated a bankrupt on August 7th of that year. Miller was appointed trustee, on what date the record does not disclose. He brought this suit (when, the record does not disclose) to set aside a conveyance by the bankrupt to the codefendant on the ground that it was made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors. The bill further alleges that the codefendant conspired with him and was party to the fraud. This conveyance, the validity of which was challenged, and which the court held void, undertook to convey a certain mortgage which defendant then owned. It was executed on or about December 3, 1910.

The circumstances attending the conveyance are these: Clarence Sire was soliciting Lillian D. Silverberg to marry him. She declined to do so unless he would agree to settle some property upon her. He agreed with her orally that he would assign this mortgage to her, and on December 3, 1910, he did execute the assignment, and on the same day she married him. For aught that appeared, transfer and marriage were substantially simultaneous, although possibly it is the fact that upon receiving the assignment, Miss Silverberg at once married the bankrupt.

The sole reliance of complainant, so far as the record discloses, was on the statute of frauds of the state of New York; certainly it was on that ground that the court decided the cause. The testimony does not show any conspiracy; Miss Silverberg apparently doubted Sire's financial condition, and would not marry him until he turned over to her property to an amount which she thought was sufficient. This circumstance does not establish any participation on her part in a conspiracy to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors.

The New York statute of frauds (§ 31, chap. 45, Laws 1909, Consol. Laws, chap. 41) provides: "Every agreement, promise or undertaking is void, unless it or some note or memorandum thereof be in writing, and subscribed by the party to be charged therewith, or by his lawful agent, if such agreement, promise or undertaking . . . is made in consideration of marriage, except mutual promises to marry."

As we understand this statute and the decisions under it, it provides that, in the specified cases, a party to an alleged contract cannot enforce its execution if it be oral only. When, however, the oral contract has been fully carried out according to its terms, it is an accomplished fact, and the statute of frauds no longer cuts any figure in the transaction. That such is the view of the state courts seems manifest from the many authorities which hold that the statute of frauds is a defense, which, to be availed of, must be pleaded. When the statute says the oral contract is void, it seems void between the parties to it. When the parties carry it out fully, it ceases to be void, just as, under the statute, it ceases to be void when part consideration is paid. We fail to see how this statute, designed merely to protect the parties to the oral contract, affects third parties.

If Sire had sold his mortgage to an innocent third person for a cash sum, not so small as to furnish persuasive evidence that the purchaser was not innocent, the sale would have been good against existing creditors. Marriage is surely a valuable consideration, and when the transfer is made before marriage,—indeed, in this case, on the day of marriage,—in exchange for the consideration then fully paid, we cannot see any difference between such a transaction and a cash sale. We do not find sufficient evidence to show such knowledge on the part of Miss Silverberg as would indicate participation in a fraud on creditors.

Referring to the New York cases cited on the briefs, we have not here a conveyance to a wife, in compliance with some alleged oral agreement made before marriage. We have a conveyance made to an unmarried woman, upon receipt of which she pays the consideration she agreed to give for it; i. e., marries the man who has already transferred the property. If, having received the transfer, she had refused to marry him,—i. e., to pay the consideration,—he could have recovered the property.

Inasmuch as the record is quite imperfect, and the trial was inartificially conducted by reason of the refusal of the gentleman Mrs. Sire asked to represent her to proceed, his other engagements preventing him, we think the ends of justice will be best served by reversing the decree, opening the default, and so insuring a new trial, when additional testimony may possibly alter the situation.

Annotation—Right of creditors to avoid debtor's contracts or conveyances upon the ground of the statute of frauds.

Statutes against fraudulent conveyances are sometimes referred to as statutes of frauds. The ultimate question in case a conveyance is attacked as fraudulent, viz., whether the conveyance is fraudulent, is beyond the scope of the present note, and to this extent the note is not concerned with statutes against fraudulent conveyances. But an element in determining whether or not a conveyance is fraudulent is the consideration therefor. In so far as the conveyance is sought to be sustained against creditors as having been made in pursuance of a previous oral agreement, unenforceable because of the statute of frauds, the note does deal with fraudulent conveyances. But this is confined to determining whether an oral contract will sustain a subsequent transfer of property in pursuance thereof, as against creditors; it does not deal with the ultimate question whether the conveyance is in fact fraudulent.

Neither is the note concerned with the right of creditors to take advantage of the statute of frauds in their debtor's contract, as affected by questions of pleading. A denial of the right on the ground that the statute has not been pleaded has not been considered.

The statute of frauds is not treated generally as making oral contracts void, L.R.A.1916D.

but merely voidable, at the option of a party to the contract, by withholding a right of action thereon. This does not require either party to ignore considerations of moral obligations, equity, and good faith by pleading the statute, but allows them to perform in accordance with their oral agreement. It is a rule of general application that this option rests with the parties, and cannot be exercised by a stranger to the contract. This rule is applied to creditors, and they are held to have no right to plead the statute of frauds to invalidate a contract entered into by their debtor where he does not take advantage of the statute.<sup>1</sup> It is a well-established rule <sup>1</sup> Pasquay v. Pasquay (1908) 235 Ill. 48, 85 N. E. 316, denying to an execution creditor who had become a purchaser of the interest of the debtor in his ancestor's estate, upon a sale under his execution, the right to deny the validity of an oral contract by which the debtor had conveyed his interest in the estate to another heir, in satisfaction of her interest as devisee under the ancestor's will, in an action by the devisee to quiet her title to the land. A conveyance was made after an attachment had been levied.

Wright v. Jones (1886) 105 Ind. 17, 4 N. E. 281, holding that the creditors of a husband cannot object to his performance of his oral agreement to relinquish his that, when an oral contract within the statute of frauds is executed, it is no claim to his interest in the wife's property, in consideration of certain provision made for him in her will, in an action by the creditors to subject the property to the payment of the husband's debts.

Bauer v. Weber Implement Co. (1910) 148 Mo. App. 652, 129 S. W. 59, denying to a chattel mortgagee the right to set up the statute of frauds in a contract of his debtor with a third person for an exchange of the mortgaged property for real estate, which had been fully executed, in an action in replevin by the purchaser to recover the mortgaged property.

Singer v. Carpenter (1888) 125 Ill. 117, 17 N. E. 761, denying to the creditors of a firm the right to interpose the statute of frauds to invalidate a sale of the firm property, in an action by the creditors to subject the interest which an individual member received from the sale to the payment of firm debts, on the theory that the contract being within the statute of frauds, the property was still subject to firm debts.

In an action to enforce payment, it was held in Crawford v. Woods (1869) 6 Bush (Ky.) 200, that a creditor of a vendor whose debt is contracted after an oral contract for the sale of real estate has been made and partially executed by the vendee taking possession cannot interpose the statute of frauds to invalidate the contract, which is adhered to and recognized by the parties.

In Minns v. Morse (1846) 15 Ohio, 568, 45 Am. Dec. 590, a conveyance of land by a debtor after a judgment was obtained against him by a creditor, but in pursuance of a parol contract entered into before the obtaining of the judgment, was sustained, the court stating that since the debtor sought not the aid of the statute of fraud to enable him to perpetrate a fraud, the law would not enable the creditor to do so. See Lefferson v. Dallas (1870) 20 Ohio St. 68, infra, note, as to effect of purchase price remaining unpaid.

The mortgagee of growing crops, under a mortgage given by a tenant in possession of land under a verbal lease, unenforceable because within the statute of frauds, cannot, in an action by the first mortgagee to recover the value of the crops which had been acquired by the second mortgagee, set up the statute of frauds for the purpose of invalidating a prior mortgage on the same crops, given before the tenant had taken possession. Grisham v. Lutric (1898) 76 Miss. 444, 24 So. 169.

In McCormick v. Drummett (1879) 9 Neb. 384, 2 N. W. 729, a purchaser at an execution sale of grain which was raised upon the land of the debtor, under a verbal agreement with another that he should have the use of the land during the lifetime of the debtor, in consideration of support, was denied the right to raise the question of the statute of frauds in such contract, in an action by the person who had thus raised the grain, to recover it. The court states that the agreement, whatever L.R.A.1916D.

it should be considered in law, was acquiesced in by all the parties thereto; and, so far as this case was concerned, the same had been fully executed.

One who has sold goods to a lessee, thinking he was selling to the lessor, cannot, in an action to hold the lessor liable therefor, set up the invalidity of the lease on the ground of the statute of frauds. Acme Cement & Plaster Co. v. Greensboro Wood Fiber Plaster Co. (1911) 156 N. C. 455, 72 S. E. 569.

That a creditor of a tenant in common, who has agreed with the other tenants to a partition of the estate, in pursuance of which possession has been taken of the parts assigned to the various tenants, cannot set up the statute of frauds to defeat the rights of another of the tenants in common in land assigned to her in the parol partition proceedings, is stated in Savage v. Lee (1885) 101 Ind. 514.

Morrison v. Collier (1881) 79 Ind. 417, holding that an execution creditor could not interpose the statute of frauds to prevent the correction of a mistake in the description of a conveyance by his debtor to a purchaser.

A creditor of a merchant who has exchanged his interest in the business for land cannot set up the statute of frauds to invalidate the agreement for the sale of the land, which is not in writing, and thereby show that the sale of the debtor's interest in the mercantile business was without consideration and void. Bell v. Beazley (1898) 18 Tex. Civ. App. 639, 45 S. W. 401.

While the rights of an existing creditor were involved in Gagnon v. Baden Lick Sulphur Springs Co. (1914) 56 Ind. App. 407, 105 N. E. 512, the property transferred by the husband to the wife in that case consisted of bonds belonging to a corporation of which he was president, and the court concludes that it will not hold that the confirmation of an invalid antenuptial agreement between husband and wife will prevent the actual owner from receiving back its property.

Creditors cannot set up the statute of frauds to defeat the application of the doctrine of estoppel against their debtor. Cross v. Wear Commission Co. (1894) 153 Ill. 499, 46 Am. St. Rep. 902, 38 N. E. 1038, holding that a creditor of a partner could not set up the statute of frauds to defeat a mortgage given by the firm which his debtor had not signed, where, at the time the mortgage was taken, the debtor stated to the mortgagee that he had no interest in the property mortgaged, that it was owned by the member of the firm who signed the mortgage. The creditor, in this case, is stated to have been affected by the estoppel as much as the debtor, for he had notice of the equities of the mortgagee before his judgment was rendered.

In passing upon the competency as a witness of the vendor under an oral sale longer affected by the statute.<sup>2</sup> This rule has been invoked to preclude a creditor from taking advantage of the statute in his debtor's contracts which have been executed, on the theory that the statute is not then available to the debtor, and the creditor stands in no better position in this regard than his debtor.<sup>3</sup> The fact that the contract is executed, however, does not preclude the creditor from challenging a conveyance of the debtor's property on the theory that it is fraudulent. This phase of the question is discussed below.

The right of a creditor to avail himself of the statute of frauds in the case of an executory oral contract of his debtor has been denied even in cases in which the other party to the contract is in effect seeking to enforce it. Thus, in an action in replevin by one who entered into a verbal contract with the debtor for the sale of wheat, to recover the wheat from creditors who had seized it on execution against the debtor, the right of such creditors to rely on the statute of frauds to invalidate the contract was denied, notwithstanding the general rule in actions of replevin that the plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of his adversary's.<sup>4</sup> of personal property in an action by the purchaser against an officer who had seized the property under executions while still in the possession of the vendor, it is stated in Sherron v. Humphreys (1834) 14 N. J. L. 217, that the officer cannot raise the objection that parol evidence of the bargain and sale was inadmissible, the contract being within the statute of frauds; that the statute was not made to protect trespassers, and that, if the objection of the officer could be sustained, such would be the operation of it.

The right of the creditors of a husband to question the validity of an executed oral agreement between the husband and wife and the mother of the wife, by which the husband agreed to release his claims in certain property belonging to the wife, which would otherwise come into his possession, was denied in Andrews v. Jones (1846) 10 Ala. 400, but this decision seems to rest upon a ground with which this note is not concerned.

<sup>2</sup> 20 Cyc. 302; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 828; Elliott, Contr. § 1214; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 116.

<sup>3</sup> In Hicks v. Riddick (1877) 28 Gratt. (Va.) 418, where an oral contract for the sale of real estate had been so far executed that the vendor held nothing except the naked legal title, it was held that he had no interest subject to attachment by a creditor.

No question distinctive to the right of a L.R.A.1916D.

And in an action by the heirs of a wife to enforce an oral agreement between the wife and her husband, by which she gave certain money to her husband in consideration of his agreement to deed land to her, an assignee for creditors was denied the right to raise the question of the validity of the contract on the ground of the statute of frauds, it being stated that if the husband is willing to comply with his agreement, it may be insisted that the contract should be executed unless its execution would work an injury to other persons, or amount to constructive fraud as to creditors. It is then stated that an assignee for the benefit of creditors stands in no better position than his assignor, hence does not occupy the position of an innocent purchaser for value.<sup>5</sup>

But it has been held, where an oral contract is executory on the one side, and the action is in effect one to enforce it, that it will not be enforced where creditors of the party against whom it is sought to be enforced object.<sup>6</sup>

And it has been held, where the creditors have secured an injunction restraining the debtor from giving any preferences, that he cannot thereafter file an answer in an action by one of his creditors to enforce an oral agreement creditor to take advantage of the statute of frauds in his debtor's contracts arises where that right is denied on the theory that an executed contract is taken out of the statute, hence no attempt is made in this note to collect all such cases.

<sup>4</sup> In Dixon v. Duke (1882) 85 Ind. 434, it is stated that the creditors are not entitled to succeed upon the ground that the contract is within the statute, because they have no right to interpose that defense against the purchasers from their debtor. If the contract of sale is sufficient to convey title, and its only infirmity is that it is not executed or evidenced as the statute of fraud requires, it will defeat a creditor's claim. This does not mean that the creditor is precluded from recovering; in fact, in this case, the creditor's execution was held to have priority because of the fact that title had not passed at the time his execution became a lien.

<sup>5</sup> Walker v. Walker (1897) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 626, 41 S. W. 315, affirmed on what is apparently a second appeal in (1900) 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1521, 55 S. W. 726.

<sup>6</sup> Gary v. Newton (1903) 201 Ill. 170, 66 N. E. 267. This was an action in partition among heirs, in which it was sought to deprive one of the heirs of his interest in the estate by virtue of an oral agreement entered into between him and the ancestor that, upon certain sums of money being paid him, he would release his interest in the estate. It was held that the petition by which he agreed to transfer property in satisfaction of an antecedent debt, thereby taking the case out of the statute of frauds.<sup>7</sup> And to the extent that the purchase price remains unpaid under a parol contract for the sale of land, a creditor who has obtained a judgment prior to the payment of the remaining part of the purchase price, and the execution of the conveyance, has been held to obtain a lien<sup>8</sup> which the purchaser is not entitled to have set aside and her title quieted without accounting to the creditor for the residue of the purchase money, where the balance of the purchase money was paid by the purchaser with full knowledge of the pendency of the suit against her vendor.<sup>9</sup>

The rule that the statute of frauds

showing these facts was demurrable by creditors. There was no allegation in the bill that the judgment creditors had any notice of the existence of the oral agreement here insisted upon prior to the rendition of their judgments, or prior to the existence of the liens acquired by them under their judgments. The judgment creditors were held to stand in the position of a purchaser against whom the oral agreement could not be enforced.

But in Wright v. Jones (1886) 105 Ind. 17, 4 N. E. 281, judgment creditors are stated not to be bona fide purchasers; their rights are stated to be essentially different; they have no interest or title in their debtor's land, but only a mere lien; the lien is only on the actual interest of the debtor in the land, and is subject to all prior equities. This is the theory of Peck v. Williams (1887) 113 Ind. 256, 15 N. E. 270, and Old Nat. Bank v. Findley (1891) 131 Ind. 225, 31 N. E. 62.

<sup>7</sup> Albert v. Winn (1853) 5 Md. 66. By securing the injunction before the debtor answered in the other action, admitting the oral contract, the creditors were held to secure a right which prevented the debtor from afterwards admitting the oral contract.

<sup>8</sup> In Kendall v. Kennedy (1886) 8 Ky. L. Rep. 532, it is stated that since a verbal contract for the sale of land is not enforceable by either party, the land may still be levied on as that of the vendor, he remaining in possession, and the levy will create a valid lien as against the vendee to the extent of what he was owing the vendor, not exceeding the debt, and subsequent attaching creditors cannot defeat this lien by garnishing in the vendee's hand what he might be owing the vendor, in the event they should consummate their contract. See O'Neal v. First Nat. Bank, infra, note 10.

<sup>9</sup> Lefferson v. Dallas (1870) 20 Ohio St. 68. See Minns v. Morse, supra, note 1.

<sup>10</sup> Waite v. McKelvey (1898) 71 Minn. 167, 73 N. W. 727, where an officer who levied upon grain sold by his debtor under L.R.A.1916D.

cannot be taken advantage of by a creditor is denied application in some cases of sales of personal property on the theory that if the verbal contract is not so far performed as to satisfy the statute, no title passes to the buyer as against an officer levying an attachment or execution.<sup>10</sup> Consequently the attachment or execution obtains priority over the vendee under the oral contract. The theory that the title to goods sold under a contract within the statute of frauds, but which does not comply with its provisions, does not pass, is, according to Browne on the Statute of Frauds, 5th ed. §§ 138d-138j, sustained by the weight of authority. That author, however, states that there is much to be said against the rule. The court in Dixon v.

an oral contract within the statute of frauds was held to acquire a lien by virtue of his levy so that the parties could not thereafter waive the statute. The statute involved in this case made the contract void.

Ely v. Ormsby (1811) 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 570. Apparently the statute made an oral contract such as was involved in this case void.

See Sherron v. Humphreys (1834) 14 N. J. L. 217, supra, note 1. Also Dixon v. Duke, supra, note 4.

Apparently this is the theory of O'Neal v. First Nat. Bank (1911) 9 Ga. App. 496, 71 S. E. 807, which involved real estate also. No full report appears of the case but in the abstract it is stated that where a husband having in his possession certain money belonging to his wife purchased a parcel of land, paying therefor partly with this money of his wife and partly with money which he borrowed in his own name, and, with his wife's consent, took the title to the land in himself, with the understanding, evidenced in parol only, that when the sum so borrowed by him was repaid by her to him, he would convey the land to her, the legal title to the land was in the husband, and the wife acquired neither legal title nor a perfect equity thereto, even upon payment to the husband of the sum so borrowed, until the husband executed a deed. Likewise the title to crops severed from the land before the deed from the husband to the wife was executed was in the husband, and was subject to a common-law judgment rendered against him in behalf of one of his creditors.

Property transferred by a debtor by a transfer void under the statute of frauds was subjected to an attachment by a creditor, in the possession of the transferee, in Sexey v. Adkison (1870) 40 Cal. 408. It seems, however, no question was raised as to this. The creditor, who had advised the transfer, was held not estopped to deny its validity under the statute of frauds where he simply advised a transfer, but not the form or manner thereof, and the parties failed to make it valid and effectual in law.

Duke<sup>11</sup> did not regard the passing of title as dependent upon a compliance with the provisions of the statute of frauds.

There is considerable confusion and uncertainty in dealing with the right of a creditor to take advantage of an invalidity in his debtor's contract under the 17th section of the statute of frauds. This section makes a contract for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise of over a certain value unenforceable (some statutes make the contract void) unless (1) the buyer shall accept part of the goods and actually receive the same, or (2) give something in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part payment, or (3) some note or memorandum in writing of the bargain be made and signed by the parties to be charged or their agents. The difficulty arises from the similarity of the acceptance and receipt of the goods which will take the contract out of the operation of the statute, and the delivery which, in some jurisdictions, is necessary<sup>12</sup> in sales of personal property to complete the sale, so that the property cannot be levied upon by creditors of the vendor, and the continued change of possession, in questions as to fraudulent conveyances.<sup>13</sup> The acceptance and receipt required by this provision of the statute of frauds, and the delivery required under the rule referred to, are particularly difficult to distinguish. It has been stated that the acceptance and receipt required by the statute is not equivalent to delivery in general.<sup>14</sup> The result of these statutes and the rules referred to is, in cases dealing with contracts of a debtor within the 17th section of the statute, that creditors may attack the sale on several grounds which are very similar, and it is often difficult to determine the true basis for the decision.

The rule that the defense of the statute of frauds is personal has been applied to sustain a conveyance of property by the debtor in pursuance of a prior oral agreement, against the objection of creditors that the conveyance is fraudulent.<sup>15</sup> The oral agreement furnishes a sufficient consideration for a

<sup>11</sup> Supra, note 4.

<sup>12</sup> Freeman, Executions, 3d ed. § 157.

<sup>13</sup> A very thorough discussion of the rules applicable to change of possession as bearing upon the question whether the conveyance is fraudulent is found in Freeman on Executions, 3d ed. §§ 148-156.

<sup>14</sup> Williston, Sales, § 74.

<sup>15</sup> Old Nat. Bank v. Findley (1892) 131 Ind. 225, 31 N. E. 62.

Cannon v. Castleman (1904) 164 Ind. 343, 73 N. E. 689, sustaining a conveyance by a husband through a third party to himself and wife as tenants by the entirety of land which had been purchased about two months before the husband became indebted to the judgment creditor, and which had been conveyed by the vendor to the husband at the request of the wife, under an oral agreement that he would recover judgment quieting the title to the land, pay the expense thereof, and then have the same conveyed so as to vest the title in himself and his said wife as tenants by the entirety, against the objection of the judgment creditor that the agreement was void, as being within the statute of frauds.

Scudder v. Morris (1904) 107 Mo. App. 634, 82 S. W. 217, sustaining a conveyance of real estate in pursuance of an agreement to convey against which the debtor might have pleaded the statute of frauds.

One who has taken title to land under a parol agreement with the grantor to support him, and, if the grantor should become dissatisfied, to deed the land back, may, upon the grantor's becoming dissatisfied, deed the land back, in performance of his parol agreement, as against his creditors. Aultman v. Booth (1888) 95 Mo. 383, 8 S. W. 742. The protection of the statute of L.R.A.1916D.

frauds is for the parties to the parol contract; if they do not insist on the statute, the performance of the contract will be enforced.

A creditor of a director in a bank cannot take advantage of the statute of frauds to defeat a trust deed and notes given by the director in settlement of his liability arising from a false and fraudulent statement made by him with reference to the condition of the bank, against which the director might have pleaded the statute of frauds. Kemp v. National Bank (1901) 48 C. C. A. 213, 109 Fed. 48.

The right to interpose the objection of the statute of frauds to an oral agreement made between a husband and wife, whereby he agreed to convey to her certain land as security for money advanced by her, was denied where the conveyance had been executed. Miller v. Wroton (1908) 82 S. C. 97, 63 S. E. 62, 449.

In Cresswell v. McCaig (1881) 11 Neb. 222, 9 N. W. 52, a transfer by a son who had purchased land with his father's money and for his father, but who took title in his own name as a matter of convenience, to his mother and brothers and sisters after the death of his father, was sustained as against creditors.

Peck v. Williams (1887) 113 Ind. 256, 15 N. E. 270, sustaining a transfer by a debtor to a purchaser who had bought and paid for the land some four years before, and who had, on the faith of such purchase, taken exclusive possession and made valuable improvements thereon, although the transfer was not made until after judgment had been taken by the creditor. In a later part of the opinion, however, it is stated that the contract in this case was itself conveyance in pursuance thereof.<sup>16</sup> In another form it is stated that the equitable consideration arising from the agreement is sufficient to sustain the performance.<sup>17</sup>

But in the case of a postnuptial con-taken out of the statute of frauds by the possession and improvements, and that the execution creditor in this case was put upon notice thereof.

See Minns v. Morse, supra, note 1; also Gordon v. Tweedy, infra, note 16.

<sup>16</sup> A conveyance by a husband to his wife of lands in pursuance of a previous oral agreement to convey the land to her in consideration that she would relinquish her inchoate dower interest in certain other of his lands was held to be a conveyance upon a valuable consideration in Brown v. Rawlings (1880) 72 Ind. 505. That a creditor cannot take advantage of the fact that such a contract is not in writing, as required by the statute of frauds, is held also in Gordon v. Tweedy (1881) 71 Ala. 202.

As to the voidability in bankruptcy proceedings of a transfer within the four months' period, pursuant to an executory agreement antedating that period, see note to Godwin v. Murchison Nat. Bank, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 935, and supplemental note to Sex-ton v. Kessler & Co. 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 639.

As to the delivery of property on eve of bankruptcy to one holding an executory contract therefor, made within the four months' period, as a preference, see note to Stokes v. State, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 901.

An oral agreement to convey land which is assigned by the obligee furnishes a sufficient consideration for property transferred to the obligee by a third person, where the obligor conveys the land in pursuance thereof. Bauer v. Weber Implement Co. (1910) 148 Mo. App. 652, 129 S. W. 59.

Goff v. Rogers (1880) 71 Ind. 459, sustaining, as against an assignee for creditors, a mortgage given by a husband, upon land purchased with money belonging to his wife, to her children, as agreed upon by the parties.

First Nat. Bank v. Bertschy (1881) 52 Wis. 438, 9 N. W. 534, sustaining a note given in payment of a prior oral obligation of the maker to pay the debt of another.

A note cannot be said to be without consideration where executed in pursuance of a prior agreement, void under the statute of frauds. Stowell v. Hazlett (1874) 67 N. Y. 637.

The oral assumption of the debt of another is a consideration for a judgment. Keen v. Kleckner (1862) 42 Pa. 529.

A note given by a debtor is not fictitious because the consideration therefor is a prior oral promise to pay the debt of another. Livermore v. Northrup (1870) 44 N. Y. 107.

It is stated not to be obligatory on the debtor to interpose the defense of the statute of frauds, either morally or legally, but it is entirely within his option whether or L.R.A.1916D.

veyance in pursuance of an oral antenuptial contract, a different rule prevails. Marriage is a good consideration for a postnuptial conveyance in pursuance of a written antenuptial contract.<sup>18</sup> But an oral antenuptial contract cannot not he will set up the statute of frauds against the performance of such a promise.

A deed executed by an insolvent debtor pursuant to a parol petition made many years before, and fully carried into execution, each party taking possession of and enjoying the portion allotted to him, is not void as a deed made with intent to injure, delay, or defraud creditors. Bilsborow v. Titus (1857) 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 95.

A conveyance by a debtor of land to his son in pursuance of an oral agreement made with a third person under circumstances constituting the debtor a trustee of the property is valid as against creditors, although the trust could not have been enforced, since the debtor having executed it, the title thus made and supported by the equities in the case is paramount to any equities of general creditors. Norton v. Mallory (1875) 63 N. Y. 434.

An oral agreement by a debtor, upon a sufficient consideration, to thereafter convey land, under circumstances which create a trust in the land, will sustain a conveyance in accordance with the agreement, valid as against creditors. Gottstein v. Wist (1900) 22 Wash. 581, 61 Pac. 715.

A conveyance by a trustee, under an oral trust, of the property, according to the trust agreement, is valid as against creditors of the trustee whose claims accrued before the trust was thus executed. Richmond v. Bloch (1900) 36 Or. 590, 60 Pac. 385; Sackett v. Spencer (1870) 65 Pa. 89; Hyde v. Chapman (1873) 33 Wis. 391.

In Cresswell v. McCaig, supra, note 15, the debtor was treated as holding the land in trust.

The general question, however, of the validity of conveyances by trustees in execution of an oral trust, as against creditors of the trustees, is not considered in this note.

A conveyance by a husband to his wife in pursuance of a parol agreement, of land purchased with property of the wife which had been reduced to possession by the husband, has been held void as to creditors. Martin v. Com. (1911) 141 Ky. 791, 133 S. W. 776. This decision, however, is based more upon the fact that the agreement was without consideration, and therefore not enforceable, the property which had come to the husband by virtue of the marriage being regarded as no consideration for the conveyance. Nothing is said as to the statute of frauds.

<sup>17</sup> Wright v. Jones (1886) 105 Ind. 17, 4 N. E. 281, stating that where there is an equitable consideration a debtor may, notwithstanding the objections of his creditors, perform his contract.

<sup>18</sup> 12 R. C. L. 522, § 50.

be relied upon as furnishing a consideration for a postnuptial transfer of property, as against creditors.<sup>19</sup>

Although the property agreed upon is delivered to the intended wife before marriage, under the oral contract, but not in performance of it, the purpose being not to pass the property until the marriage, and then only by force of the agreement, the transaction is treated as a performance of the agreement by the husband after marriage, and is consequently void.<sup>20</sup>

An oral antenuptial contract to the effect that the husband was to have nothing to do with a business in which the wife was engaged, and receive none of the profits, is not a consideration for a settlement made by the husband after marriage, in accord therewith, as against creditors existing when the earnings of the wife accrued.<sup>21</sup> But creditors who became such after the earnings of the wife accrued and became a part of her separate estate cannot complain of the husband's performance of his agreement.<sup>22</sup> It has been held, where a husband relinquished to the wife all his interest in her property in pursuance of an oral antenuptial agreement, that a <sup>19</sup> Manning v. Riley (1893) 52 N. J. Eq. 39, 27 Atl. 810; Reade v. Livingston (1818) 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 481, 8 Am. Dec. 520; Hosmer v. Tiffany (1907) 54 Misc. 402, 105 N. Y. Supp. 1055, affirmed in (1908) 124 App. Div. 287, 108 N. Y. Supp. 943; Saunders v. Ferrill (1840) 23 N. C. (1 Ired. L.) 97; Flory v. Houck (1898) 186 Pa. 263, 40 Atl. 482; Barnes v. Black (1899) 193 Pa. 447, 74 Am. St. Rep. 694, 44 Atl. 550; Smith v. Greer (1842) 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 118; Lloyd v. Fulton (1875) 91 U. S. 479, 23 L. ed. 363; Warden v. Jones (1857) 2 De G. & J. (Eng.) 76, 23 Beav. 487; L'Estrange v. Robinson (1824) 1 Hogan (Eng.) 202; Whyte v. Denike (1900) 53 App. Div. 320, 65 N. Y. Supp. 577; Hayes v. Jones (1857) 2 Patton & H. (Va.) 583.

Keady v. White (1897) 168 Ill. 76, 48 N. E. 314, holding such an oral antenuptial agreement void in a creditors' bill brought to set aside a conveyance by the husband to the wife after marriage, in pursuance of the oral agreement.

That a conveyance in pursuance of an oral agreement which supplemented a written agreement is fraudulent as to creditors is especially true under a statute requiring a marriage settlement and other marriage contracts to be registered. Saunders v. Ferrill (1840) 23 N. C. (1 Ired. L.) 97.

A postnuptial marriage settlement by a father, in accordance with a parol promise made before the marriage of his daughter, was held invalid as to creditors in Davidson v. Graves (1837) Riley, Eq. (S. C.) 219.

An antenuptial settlement in pursuance of a parol promise made before marriage was held not to make the wife a purchaser, in Caines v. Marley (1831) 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 582.

An oral antenuptial agreement that the husband shall take certain money of the wife and invest it whenever favorable opportunity offers cannot be set up to support an investment after the marriage, and conveyance of property to the wife, as against intervening creditors. Wood v. Savage (1846) 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 316.

In Borst v. Corey (1853) 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 136, affirmed in (1857) 15 N. Y. 505, the wife was denied the right to enforce such an agreement against one who was made L.R.A.1916D.

a trustee in a postnuptial bond and warrant of attorney, given in settlement of the antenuptial agreement, and against the assignee for the benefit of the creditors of her husband.

The contrary obiter opinion expressed by the court in Satterthwaite v. Emley (1845) 4 N. J. Eq. 489, 43 Am. Dec. 618, that if a parol antenuptial agreement were fairly shown, the court would be inclined to give validity to a postnuptial settlement in pursuance of it, is overruled by Manning v. Riley (1893) 52 N. J. Eq. 39, 27 Atl. 810. The antenuptial agreement not being fairly shown, the validity of the settlement was denied in the Satterthwaite Case.

In Neilson v. Williams (1886) 42 N. J. Eq. 291, 11 Atl. 257, a transfer by a husband fourteen years after the marriage took place, and not until after a default by the principal in a bond on which the husband was surety, was held a transfer without consideration, although claimed to have been made in pursuance of an oral antenuptial agreement. It is stated that to accept of such an allegation, sustained only by the verbal testimony of the parties themselves, after such a long lapse of time, would be most dangerous, and wholly contrary to the policy of the law.

<sup>20</sup> Deshon v. Wood (1888) 148 Mass. 132, 1 L.R.A. 518, 19 N. E. 1.

<sup>21</sup> Carter v. Worthington (1886) 82 Ala. 334, 60 Am. Rep. 738, 2 So. 516.

<sup>22</sup> (Ala.) Ibid. It was accordingly held in this case that land purchased with the proceeds of goods sold by the wife after the accrual of the debt to the complaining creditors could not be subjected to their claims where the goods had become a part of the stock of the business in which the wife was engaged prior to the accrual of the claims. The goods were accretions to the wife's separate estate which had already accumulated, resulting from the profits of her business, brought about by her industry, with the permission of the husband. The proceeds of the sale of such goods cannot be treated as earnings made after that date. Lands purchased with the earnings of the wife before the accrual of the complaining creditors' debts were held not subject to the debts, although the conveyance was made thereafter.

horse, raised and used on a farm owned by the wife and carried on by her, is not subject to the claims of the husband's creditors. This was held without reference to the time of the accrual of the creditors' claim.<sup>23</sup>

The fact that the postnuptial settlement contains a recital that it is made in pursuance of an oral antenuptial agreement does not change the rule.<sup>24</sup> But the contrary view of this question has been taken, although it does not clearly appear to have been a holding to that effect.<sup>25</sup> This has been stated to be true as against a trustee in bankruptcy, where, at the time of making the settlement, the husband was not indebted.<sup>26</sup>

If the consideration is not merely the marriage, but an agreement to pay the husband's debts, and the wife performs her agreement before the debt in question is contracted by her husband, and a conveyance is made to the wife before the creditor obtains a judgment, the conveyance is upon a consideration sufficient to uphold it after its execution in good faith.<sup>27</sup> Or if a debt due from the husband to the wife is canceled, the conveyance in accord with the previous oral agreement will be sustained.<sup>28</sup>

<sup>23</sup> Sanford v. Atwood (1876) 44 Conn. 141.

<sup>24</sup> Smith v. Greer (1842) 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 118; Warden v. Jones (1857) 2 De G. & J. (Eng.) 76, 23 Beav. 487 (dictum). The court in Reade v. Livingston expresses an opinion in accord with this rule. Sterling, L. J., in Re Holland [1902] 2 Ch. (Eng.) 360, 71 L. J. Ch. N. S. 518, 60 Week. Rep. 575, 86 L. T. N. S. 542, 18 Times L. R. 563, 9 Manson, 259.

<sup>25</sup> Dundas v. Dutens (1790) 2 Cox, Ch.

Cas. (Eng.) 234, 1 Revised Rep. 112. It does not appear from the report of this case in 1 Ves. Jr. 196, that this point was decided in the case.

<sup>26</sup> Vaughan Williams, L. J., in Re Holland (Eng.) supra; contra, Stirling, L. J., in same case. This case was, by a majority of the judges, decided on another point.

<sup>27</sup> Dyrgert v. Remerschnider (1865) 32 N. Y. 629.

<sup>28</sup> Hussey v. Castle (1871) 41 Cal. 239.
W. A. E.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

MILTON E. BAILEY et al.

v.

JOHN KELLY, Appt.

(93 Kan. 723, 145 Pac. 556.)

Landlord and tenant — defective premises — liability.

1. A landlord leased vacant property upon which there was a cistern covered by a loose lid lying upon a slightly raised platform. The lease was without warranty or covenant to repair on the landlord's part. The covering of the cistern was exposed to plain view, and its character was observed by the tenant when he entered. The tenant used the cistern for nearly two years in this condition when on a laundry day the lid was not carefully replaced after a drawing of water, and a servant of the tenant stepped on a corner of the lid lying over the opening into the cistern, was precipitated into the cistern, and was drowned. The cistern was located in a shed in the rear of the kitchen of a building used by the tenant for a restaurant. When the deceased commenced working for the tenant he pointed out to her the location of the cistern, but in six weeks' service which occasionally brought her in proximity to the cistern the fact that the lid was loose was not brought to her attention. It is held:

The landlord is not liable in damages for the death of the servant upon the theory that the cistern was a nuisance, or upon the theory that he was guilty of actionable

Headnote by BURCH, J.

Note.—The opinion in the above case overruling the decision on an earlier appeal in the same case (Bailey v. Kelly (1912) 86 Kan. 911, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 378, 122 Pac. 1027) is in harmony with the editor's criticism in 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 378, of the earlier decision, and is supported by the weight of authority as shown by the earlier notes, cited in the opinion, dealing with the liability of the landlord to the tenant. Those notes are supplemented in the annotation following this case, post, 1224. They include not only the cases where the injured person was a tenant, but also the cases of injury to a servant or guest of the tenant, or other person in privity with him, in which the court held or assumed that the L.R.A. 1916D.

liability was to be determined upon the same principles that apply as between the landlord and tenant. It is proposed, in subsequent annotation in the series, to deal with the correctness of that assumption with respect to various classes of persons in privity with the tenant. The liability of a landlord for injury to tenant's guests or employees by defects in the premises has been treated specifically in notes to McConnell v. Lemley, 34 L.R.A. 609, and Cristadoro v. Von Behrens, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1161.

The liability of a landlord to persons not in privity with the tenant, for the condition of premises in possession of the tenant, is treated in the note to Knight v. Foster, 60 L.R.A. (N.S.) 286.

negligence, or upon any other theory sustained by existing law.
For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, III. c. 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Johnston, Ch. J., and Mason and Benson, JJ., dissent.)

(January 9, 1915.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Cloud County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiffs' intestate alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Theodore Laing, F. W. Sturges, Fred W. Sturges, Jr., C. L. Kagey, and R. M. Anderson, for appellant:

A landlord or lessor of premises is not liable to a servant or employee of his tenant for the condition of the leased premises even though defective, where there was no concealment or fraud or promise or agreement to repair, and where the tenant knew the condition of the premises.

Perez v. Rabaud, 76 Tex. 191, 7 L.R.A. 620, 13 S. W. 177; Scott v. Simons, 54 N. H. 431; Brewster v. De Fremery, 33 Cal. 341; O'Brien v. Capbell, 59 Barb. 497; Walsh v. Schmidt, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 798 and note, 206 Mass. 405, 92 N. E. 496, 1 N. C. C. A. 906; Moore v. Parker, 63 Kan. 52, 53 L.R.A. 778, 64 Pac. 975, 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 268; Note to Bailey v. Kelly, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 378.

Messrs. Park B. Pulsifer, Charles L. Hunt, A. L. Wilmoth, and A. M. French, for appellees:

The defendant is liable.

Bailey v. Kelly, 86 Kan. 911, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 378, 122 Pac. 1027; Buck Stove & Range Co. v. Vickers, 80 Kan. 29, 101 Pac. 668; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Stone, 80 Kan. 7, 101 Pac. 666; A. J. Harwi Hardware Co. v. Klippert, 73 Kan. 783, 85 Pac. 784; Norton v. Huntoon, 43 Kan. 275, 22 Pac. 565; Headley v. Challiss, 15 Kan. 602; Copley v. Balle, 9 Kan. App. 465, 60 Pac. 656, 7 Am. Neg. Cas. 437; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 239; Kinchlow v. Midland Elevator Co. 57 Kan. 374, 46 Pac. 703; Cristadoro v. Von Behren, 119 La. 1025, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1161, 44 So. 852; Monahan v. National Realty Co. 4 Ga. App. 680, 62 S. E. 127; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Moore, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 289, 27 S. W. 962; Stenberg v. Willcox, 96 Tenn. 163, 34 L.R.A. 615, 33 S. W. 917; Herdt v. Koenig, 137 Mo. App. 589, 119 S. W. 56; Whart. Neg. § 817; Reichenbacher v. Pahmeyer, 8 Ill. App. 217; McLaughlin v. Kelly, 230 Pa. 251, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 305, 79 Atl. 552, 1 N. C. C. A. 81; Ross v. Jackson, 123 Ga. 657, 51 S. E. 578; Bailey v. Dunaway, 8 Ga. App. 713, 70 S. E. 141; Paterson v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. 16 S. D. 33, 91 N. W. 336; Grant v. Tomlinson, 138 Mo. App. 222, 119 S. W. 1079; Curtis v. Kiley, 153 Mass. 123, 26 N. E. 421; Colorado Mortg. & Invest. Co. v. Giacomini, 55 Colo. 540, L.R.A.1915B, 364, 136 Pac. 1039.
 L.R.A.1916D.

Even if deceased had knowledge of the condition of the cistern covering, her parents are not necessarily barred from recovery, as she would still have a right to go upon it, if she exercised ordinary care in so doing.

Maulthy v. Leavenworth, 28 Kan. 745; Emporia v. Schmidling, 33 Kan. 485, 6 Pac. 893; Ottawa v. Green, 72 Kan. 214, 83 Pac. 616; Osage City v. Brown, 27 Kan. 74; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ayers, 56 Kan. 176, 42 Pac. 722.

Burch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was before the court on the occasion of a former appeal. Bailey v. Kelly, 86 Kan. 911, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 378, 122 Pac. 1027. The action was commenced against a landlord to recover damages resulting from the death of his tenant's servant, who fell into a defectively covered cistern on the leased premises. The cistern was in a shed in the rear of the kitchen of a building used as a restaurant. The defect in the covering of the cistern existed at the time the premises were leased, was open to view, and the character of the covering was observed by the tenant when he took possession. The lease was without warranty and without covenant to repair, on the landlord's part. At the first trial the court sustained a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence on the ground that the landlord rested under no liability. This court held otherwise, as indicated in paragraph 1 of the syllabus of the first opinion: "Where a nuisance dangerous to life is created by the owner on his premises, or through his gross negligence is suffered to remain there, he cannot, by leasing the property to another, avoid his own liability to any person who is rightfully upon the premises, and who, without any fault, is injured by reason of such nuisance; and this liability extends to a servant of the tenant, notwithstanding the tenant, by reason of his own fault or neglect or knowledge of the danger, could not have maintained an action against the owner for injury suffered by himself." (Syl. ¶ 1.)

At the second trial the court, after it had overruled a demurrer to the plaintiffs' evidence, instructed the jury in accordance with this decision, and a verdict was returned for the plaintiff. The defendant appeals, and renews his contention that the law does not authorize the recovery of damages from him. A majority of the members of the court are convinced that the former decision was wrong. That the former decision was substantially unsupported by authority and was rendered against the settled law of this country is clear. Notes 34 L.R.A. 824; 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 798; 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 378; 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 917; 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1120; 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 286. The notes cited refer to others, and present a comprehensive view of the case law on the subject.

The court was conscious of the fact that it was extending the liability of the landlord, as that liability had been previously understood, but believed the extension to be justifiable. The distinction between the undefined body known as the public and a group of persons comprising a restaurant keeper, his family, and his employees becomes quite shadowy. That such a group, composed in part of persons drawn from the general public, would be assembled on the premises by the tenant was fairly within the landlord's contemplation. When the landlord takes rent for premises containing a public nuisance, he is liable. In this case the landlord took rent for the use of premises containing a pitfall which a portion of the public selected by the tenant was obliged to encounter. Consequently the court applied the nuisance theory, and held the defendant liable. The difficulty with this decision is that it is not closely discriminative with respect to facts, ignores ideas of legal duty which experience has demonstrated to be well founded and fair, and involves the law in confusion concerning some of its fundamental principles.

A description of the leased premises appears in the former opinion (86 Kan. 912, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 378, 122 Pac. 1027, and need not be repeated in full. The cistern was covered by a wooden platform about four feet square, raised four inches from the ground, upon which the lid or covering lay. The structure was in plain view, and the lid was adequate as a covering. Its only defect consisted in the fact that it might be displaced, and the casualty occurred in the most fortuitous way. Laundry work for the restaurant was done twice a week, the washing machine being operated by a gasoline engine. Water for this work was drawn from the cistern by means of a bucket and rope. The covering would usually be laid back against the coal house when water was being procured. At other times it was kept over the opening. On this occasion laundry work was in progress. The tenant had just drawn some water from the cistern and had gone back to the washing machine. The covering was not replaced carefully and was lying so that one corner was over the opening into the cistern. The deceased stepped on this corner of the covering, which allowed her to fall into the cistern, and the covering then righted itself and fell into place over the opening. For almost two years the tenant had used the cistern in safety in exactly the same condition, and if the covering had been used according to its purpose and design the accident would not have occurred.

Under the foregoing circumstances it smacks somewhat of hyperbole to call the cistern a nuisance, the characteristic of which is that it must or will injure that portion of the public who may be compelled to come in contact with it. Black's Law Dict. title, "Nuisance." Broadly speaking, "nuisance, nocumentum, or annoyance, signifies anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage." 3 Bl. Com. chap. 13, p. 216. But in legal phraseology the term is applied to that class of wrongs that arises "from the unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use by a person of his own property . . . producing such material annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or hurt that the law will presume a consequent damage." 1 Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. § 1. Unless prejudice or damage threaten or result as a necessary consequence of the act done there is no nuisance. "It is a nuisance . . . to do any act therein that in its consequences must necessarily tend to the prejudice of one's neighbor." 3 Bl. Com. chap. 13, p. 218. "In order to create a nuisance from the use of property a material, substantial, and appreciable injury must be occasioned to the person or property of another." Joyce, Nuisances, § 22. "Injury and damage must concur as results of an act or thing in order to make it a nuisance." 1 Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. § 5. A nuisance may result from negligence. But negligence is not involved in nuisance actions either as essential to the cause of action or as a ground of defense. 29 Cyc. 1155.

In this case the evidence indicates that before the lease was made the building was locked, and prospective tenants procured the key from the landlord in order to inspect the premises. In any event the property did not threaten the public or any portion of the public. The cistern was occasioning no injury or damage to anyone, rendering its maintenance intolerable. The change of possession from the landlord to the tenant did not change the lawful character of the landlord's conduct. When the deceased came upon the premises and commenced to work for the tenant, she acquired no cause of action against either the landlord or the tenant for injuries suffered or threatened on account of the cistern, or for the abatement of the cistern as a nuisance, under any known principle of law. If a master negligently furnish his servant an unsafe place in which to work, nothing is gained, and confusion results from calling the place a "nuisance." The vehemence of the term adds nothing to the situation and relations of the parties, and cannot justify a departure from the law of negligence applicable to them. The present case is one of that character, and the nuisance theory, when applied to it, breaks down. The fact that the front room of the building was open to such portion of the public as desired to patronize the restaurant has no relevancy to the subject under consideration. The situation at the rear of the building was precisely the same as that of any private family employing servants to perform various household functions. The result is that the facts fail to bring the case within the category of those nuisance cases in which the lessor has been held to be liable for injuries sustained by third persons.

It is admitted that the ordinary inspection which a landlord has the right to expect a tenant will make did, in fact, disclose to the tenant the condition of the cistern. He could not have recovered if he had been injured. There is no contention that the lease was not made in perfect good faith, and there is no justification for speaking of the landlord's conduct as gross or wanton. The deceased was 16 years old, large for her age, healthy, intelligent, and in possession of all her faculties. When she commenced working for the tenant he pointed out to her the location of the cistern, but the jury found that in some 6 weeks' service, which occasionally brought her in proximity to the cistern, the fact the cover was loose was not brought to her attention. Only upon this narrow margin could recovery be had even from the tenant, and, notwithstanding the shocking character of the accident, reckless indifference to the safety of others does not appear on the part of anybody responsible for the condition of the premises. If, however, it once be conceded that the law of negligence governs the case, want of privity between the landlord and the tenant's servant defeats the action, however indefensible the conduct of the tenant in placing the servant at work in proximity to the cistern.

The undertaking of the landlord is not to furnish premises to be used as a place or instrumentality for the accomplishment of certain purposes by others, which he is bound to make fit for the contemplated use, like staging, scaffolding, hoisting apparatus, and other appliances, within the rule of Heaven v. Pender, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 503, L.R.A.1916D.

52 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 702, 49 L. T. N. S. 357, 47 J. P. 709, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 87. See Aaron v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. 89 Kan. 186, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 309, 131 Pac. 582. The lessor grants an estate in the premises to the lessee, and surrenders dominion over them to the lessee under conditions as definitely understood as if expressed in a written instrument of lease. "The mere letting without additional stipulations by the lessor simply implies that he holds the title, and that the lessee shall quietly enjoy the use and occupation during his tenancy; and not that the premises are or shall be in any particular condition or state of repair, or that they are suitable for the purpose for which they were let." 2 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. p. 1276.

The tenant may or may not invite third persons, servants, patrons, guests, and others upon the premises, as he pleases, but the landlord extends, and can extend, no such invitation, either expressly or by implication. He cannot himself enter upon the tenant's possession, even to repair, unless the right be reserved or permission obtained, much less grant licenses to others. The result is the negligence theory of liability, suggested in the syllabus of the former opinion, breaks down for lack of any legal duty on the landlord's part to sustain it.

The principle upon which the lessor of premises is held liable to third persons for nuisances existing at the time the tenancy was created is this: The landlord having possession and control of his land, or the right to possess and control it, owes the public, who are suffering or must suffer from the nuisance, the duty to abate it, and must respond in damages for a breach of the duty. The duty and the liability are not satisfied by the simple act of leasing the premises, and continue until the nuisance is abated.

Much is said in the decisions concerning a presumption that the landlord contemplates a continuance of the nuisance while the tenant is in possession. The presumption is gratuitous and fictional as often as otherwise. The rent reserved is frequently reduced because of the condition of the premises and with the expectation that the tenant will put them in order. Frequently the landlord takes from the tenant a covenant that the tenant will repair. The majority of courts hold that the liability of the landlord is not ended because of a lease containing such a covenant, and it seems sufficient to say that, the landlord's obligation having once arisen, he cannot shift or evade or discharge it by leasing to another, but that the obligation continues until the public peril is actually removed.

When the condition of property is such that it does not impair the public safety, the landlord owes no duty to the public or to any member of the public to change the condition. When he comes to deal with a specific individual as a prospective tenant, he owes that individual no duty, except not to entrap him by concealing facts which ordinary inspection would not reveal, and he owes no other individual any duty at all. The landlord may in perfect good conscience offer his property, such as it is, to a tenant who takes it, such as it is, on satisfactory terms, just as the landlord and tenant did in this case. This is true, although buildings may be in tumble-down condition, excavations may be unguarded, or the premises may be otherwise uninhabitable or in unsafe condition for use. The only exception is that of property devoted to public use such as wharves, railroads, elevators, public halls, and the like. Negotiations having been fairly concluded, and possession having been given to the tenant, no obligation on the part of the landlord to safeguard or to repair remains unfulfilled. After that no obligation to repair arises during the tenancy, unless the landlord has contracted to do so. This is true, even although the tenant create a nuisance on the premises dangerous to the public. "It is a rule of the common law, applicable here, that 'the occupier, and not the landlord, is bound as between himself and the public so far to keep the premises in repair that they may be safe for the public.'" De Tarr v. Ferd. Helm Brewing Co. 62 Kan. 188, 192, 61 Pac. 690.

The principles just stated govern the present controversy. If it be unsound in morals or otherwise contrary to public policy to rest the duty of making and keeping premises fit for occupation and use upon occupation and use, and not upon title, the existing law should be abrogated, and a new set of rules should be adopted. The court does not have before it the result of any social survey of the subject, and it is not perceived that the established usage is so offensive to the sense of justice that the court should anticipate legislation by proper authority, or, if it does, leap at once to the unconditional remedy of downright damages. To ingraft an exception upon the law for this particular case is to recognize the first of a wilderness of single instances. To cistern cases must soon be added cases involving defective railings about steps, stairways, porches, and areas, whereby the tenant's servants are injured. If after the fact of a distressing accident a jury should conclude to find negligence in maintaining some structure or place where the tenant's children invited some friends to play, the landlord must respond in damages. The list is certain to grow until it may be impossible to say what is the rule and what an exception. If the property law of the state is to be changed, and a general duty is to be imposed upon the landlord to make his premises secure for use by tenants and whomsoever a tenant may invite there, the legislature should create the obligation, and not the courts.

Instead of being genuinely progressive, the former decision was merely arbitrary, and it is overruled.

The judgment of the District Court is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with direction to sustain the demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence.

Smith, Porter, and West, JJ., concur.

Johnson, Ch. J., and Mason and Benson, JJ., dissent.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Liability of landlord for injury to tenants from defects in premises.

This note supplements notes on the same subject in 34 L.R.A. 824; 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 798, and 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 917; and upon one phase of the question, a note in 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 504.

The question of the liability of the lessor for personal injuries received from a defect in premises leased for public use where the defect was in a portion of the premises intended only for private use is treated in a note in L.R.A.1915B, 387, and that of the liability of the lessor of property to be used for public purposes for personal injuries to third persons from defects therein, in a note L.R.A.1916D.

in L.R.A.1915B, 364; the liability of the lessor for defects in porch or steps used in common by different tenants for access to common hall is treated in a note in L.R.A.1915B, 98.

General rule.

Supplementing note in 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 917.

The later cases are in accord with the rule stated in the note in 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 917, that where there is no agreement by the landlord to repair the demised premises and he is not guilty of any fraud or concealment as to their safe condition, the tenant takes the risk of their safe occupancy, and the landlord is not liable to him or to any person entering under his title or by his invitation for personal injuries sustained by reason of their unsafe condition:

—BAILEY v. KELLY, citing notes in 34 L.R.A. 824; 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 798; 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 378; 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 917; 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1120; 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 286, and reversing (1912) 86 Kan. 912, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 378, 122 Pac. 1027; —Mackey v. Lonergan (1915) 221 Mass. 296, L.R.A.—, —, 108 N. E. 1062, holding that where the sidewalk is in the same condition as when leased the lessor is not liable for personal injuries from a defect therein received by a person having the same rights as the tenant; —Mills v. Swanton (1916) 222 Mass. 557, 111 N. E. 384, holding that a lessor is not bound to keep the leased premises in repair rendering them fit for occupancy as a dwelling house, and there is no implied covenant that they were in good repair when leased;

—Enquist v. Didden (1913) 41 App. D. C. 179, 183 (rule stated);

—Daley v. Towne (1914) 127 Minn. 231, 149 N. W. 368, holding that as to obvious defects in the leased premises, if there is no agreement to repair or no concealment by the lessor, and the defects do not constitute a nuisance, the lessee takes the risk, and the lessor is not liable to him, or to any person having his rights, for personal injuries received from defects in the leased premises. To the same effect see Keegan v. G. Heileman Brewing Co. (1915) 129 Minn. 496, L.R.A.—, —, 152 N. W. 877. It is to be noted that in Minnesota the rule obtains that, where there is an agreement to repair, the tenant may base an action in tort thereon to recover for personal injuries received by reason of the negligent breach by the landlord of this agreement;

—Davis v. Manning (1915) 98 Neb. 707, 154 N. W. 239, citing note in 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 798, and reversing on rehearing (1915) 97 Neb. 658, 150 N. W. 1019;

—Stamm v. Purroy (1915) 170 App. Div. 584, 156 N. Y. Supp. 415; Alfano v. McManus (1915) 154 N. Y. Supp. 212; Gelb v. Silverman (1914) 150 N. Y. Supp. 485;

—Kurtz v. Pauly (1914) 158 Wis. 534, 149 N. W. 143, holding that the landlord is not liable for injuries to the person of the tenant from a defect in the premises of which he had no knowledge and of which the tenant was also ignorant, even L.R.A.1916D.

though the landlord in the exercise of reasonable care might have discovered the defect and guarded the tenant against it.

Latent defect.

For earlier cases, see notes in 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 918, and 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 803.

Where the landlord personally or through his agent has actual notice of a defect in the leased premises prior to the lease thereof, and does not disclose the same, he is liable to the lessee for personal injuries resulting from such defect, at least where it was of such a character that it was not discoverable by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the tenant. Andoniquie v. Carmen (1915) 162 Ky. 154, 172 S. W. 112. To the same effect is Howard v. Washington Water Power Co. (1913) 75 Wash. 255, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 578, 134 Pac. 927, holding that where the lessor has knowledge of an uninsulated electric light switch, and fails to disclose the same to the lessee, and the latter could not discover it by a reasonably careful examination, for the injury to his person therefrom, the lessor is liable.

Defective construction.

A landlord is liable to a tenant, or a person having the same rights as a tenant, for personal injuries received through defects in the construction of a building rendering it dangerous, which condition was known to the landlord when he executed the lease and of which the tenant had neither actual nor constructive knowledge. Flood v. Pabst Brewing Co. (1914) 158 Wis. 626, L.R.A.—, —, 149 N. W. 489. And it has been held that the lessor is liable for personal injuries resulting to the lessee from a defectively constructed fire escape. Wardwell v. Cameron (1914) 126 Minn. 149, 148 N. W. 110. The defect in this case was apparently an obvious one, but no point was made of this fact.

Defect in portion of premises not included in lease.

The landlord is not liable for personal injuries received by a small child of his tenant in attempting to jump from the roof of one tenement to that of another, where there is no evidence that he consented or acquiesced in the use of the roof as a playground by the children of his tenants, although it was used by the tenants as a place to hang clothes to dry. Prickett v. Pardridge (1914) 189 Ill. App. 307, 9 N. C. C. A. 76.

The permission of the owner of premises for a tenant to use a back stairs for the purpose of his pleasure alone does not amount to an invitation to use the stairs rendering the lessor liable to the tenant for personal injuries he received from a defect in the stairway. Book v. Heath (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 181 S. W. 491.

Where the landlord retains control of the property.

Supplementing notes in 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 807 and 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 920.

As pointed out in the notes referred to, where premises are leased to different tenants, and the landlord retains control of a portion thereof for their common use and convenience, the law imposes upon him the duty to use ordinary care to keep in safe condition that portion of the premises over which he retains control; and if he is negligent in this regard, and a personal injury results to a tenant by reason of a defect due to such negligence, he is responsible in damages therefor.

Gaucso v. Levy (1915) 89 Conn. 169, 93 Atl. 136 (railing of veranda); Miller v. Spreyne (1914) 189 Ill. App. 384 (stone step in passageway); Fowler v. Crilly (1914) 187 Ill. App. 399 (landing to stairway); Rosseau v. Goodridge (1914) 185 Ill. App. 164 (defective railing to rear stairway); Pozdal v. Heisen (1913) 184 Ill. App. 441 (stating general rule); Mikkanen v. Safety Fund Nat. Bank (1915) 222 Mass. 150, 109 N. E. 889 (defective freight elevator); White v. Beverly Bldg. Assn. (1915) 221 Mass. 15, 108 N. E. 921; Shea v. McEvoy (1914) 220 Mass. 239, 107 N. E. 945 (dumb-waiter); Flanagan v. Welch (1915) 220 Mass. 186, 107 N. E. 979 (stairway, landlord agreed to keep the same in good repair); Johnson v. Feinstein (1914) 219 Mass. 537, 107 N. E. 351 (stairway); Wheeler v. Sawyer (1914) 219 Mass. 103, 106 N. E. 592 (stairway); Maionica v. Piscopo (1914) 217 Mass. 324, 104 N. E. 839 (stairway); Noonan v. O'Hearn (1914) 216 Mass. 583, 104 N. E. 376 (roof of tenement); Wilson v. Jones (1916) — Mo. App. —, 182 S. W. 756; Miller v. Geeser (1915) — Mo. App. —, 180 S. W. 3 (defective porch railing); Perry v. Levy (1915) 87 N. J. L. 670, 94 Atl. 569 (roof of apartment house); Buda v. Dzuretzko (1915) 87 N. J. L. 34, 93 Atl. 83 (defective stairway); Kargman v. Carlo (1914) 85 N. J. L. 632, 90 Atl. 292 (failure to keep hall properly lighted); Agatstein v. Stark (1915) 156 N. Y. Supp. 393 (failure to keep stairway properly lighted); L.R.A.1916D.

Sizse v. Wegmann (1915) 169 App. Div. 112, 154 N. Y. Supp. 825 (clothes-pole); Domush v. Abraham (1914) 148 N. Y. Supp. 139 (hallway); Pincus v. Schlechter (1915) 167 App. Div. 361, 153 N. Y. Supp. 67 (leaky gas pipes); Mellen v. Henderson [1913] S. C. 1207; Mews, Eng. Case Law Dig. 1911-1915 p. 838 (defective stairway); Inglehardt v. Mueller (1914) 156 Wis. 609, 146 N. W. 808 (hallway).

It has been held where the space between the floor of one apartment and the ceiling of the next lower apartment remains within the control of the landlord, if the floor breaks due to a defective support, personally injuring the tenant, the landlord is liable to him for damages thereby resulting (Fleischer v. Dworsky (1915) 90 Misc. 628, 153 N. Y. Supp. 951; Tauber v. Rockelsky (1915) 90 Misc. 382, 153 N. Y. Supp. 199; Simpson v. Eppinger (1914) 150 N. Y. Supp. 473; Richtman v. Jacobs (1914) 149 N. Y. Supp. 947); and also where the ceiling falls due to the leaking of the roof (Abramowitz v. Schlessinger (1915) 152 N. Y. Supp. 337). But compare with Stoecker v. Hearst (1915) 89 Misc. 568, 153 N. Y. Supp. 752, denying the right of a tenant to recover for personal injuries received from the falling of a defective ceiling in that portion of an apartment house occupied by the tenant, on the ground that the tenant had control of the particular apartment leased by him.

Although the lessor retained control of steps leading to a building occupied in part by a tenant, he is not liable for personal injuries to a child of the tenant caused by the absence of one of the rails from the railing to the step, where it was gone when the premises were leased, which fact was obvious to the lessee. Dobson v. Horsley [1915] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 634, 112 L. T. N. S. 101, 84 L. J. K. B. N. S. 399, 31 Times L. R. 12.

Where the tenant in an apartment house occupied by different tenants has the sole use of a dumb-waiter, the landlord is not liable for personal injuries to him through a failure to keep it in repair. Green v. Hammond (1916) 223 Mass. 318, 111 N. E. 875.

It is a question for the jury whether or not it is the duty of the lessor of premises who retains the control of the halls and stairways, to keep the halls lighted, where the personal injury complained of resulted from the unlighted condition of the hall way. Gallagher v. Murphy (1915) 221 Mass. 363, 108 N. E. 1081.

A tenant injured by the accumulation of snow and ice on the sidewalk in front of premises occupied by himself and other tenants cannot recover for the injuries, since the place of injury was not that portion of the premises affected by the tenancy, and it did not appear that the landlord retained control of the portion of the premises which caused the accumulation of the ice and snow. Valin v. Jewell (1914) 88 Conn. 151, L.R.A. 1915B, 324, 90 Atl. 36.

Negligence in making repairs.

Supplementing notes in 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 921 and 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 806.

Although there was originally no obligation upon the lessor to make repairs to the leased premises, he is nevertheless liable for personal injuries resulting from his negligence in making repairs voluntarily undertaken by him. Feeley v. Doyle (1915) 222 Mass. 155, 109 N. E. 902; Knowles v. Exeter Mfg. Co. (1914) 77 N. H. 268, 90 Atl. 970; Flam v. Greenberg (1916) 158 N. Y. Supp. 670.

Compare with Marston v. Frisbie (1915) 168 App. Div. 666, 154 N. Y. Supp. 367, holding that although the landlord voluntarily undertook to repair a step on the leased premises and failed to make it safe to the knowledge of the tenant, but his effort did not make the step more dangerous, he is not liable to the tenant for an injury caused by the unsafe condition of the step, where he did not give her any assurance as to its safety, and there being no evidence that she was led to believe that it had been rendered safe.

Whether the landlord was negligent in making repairs is a question of fact for the jury. Pincus v. Schlechter (1915) 167 App. Div. 361, 153 N. Y. Supp. 67.

Effect of exemption of lessor.

In the absence of an agreement to repair, the lessor is not liable for injuries to the lessee from the defective condition of the leased premises, where the lease contains an express stipulation of nonliability and an acknowledgment by the lessee that he has examined the premises, and that no representation as to their condition or as to repairs has been made to him by the lessor. McIntosh v. Wilson (1913) 23 Manitoba L. R. 653, 14 D. L. R. 671. And the lessor is not liable to the lessee for personal injuries caused by the defective condition of the premises not obvious, and unknown to the lessor, where the lease contains a provision that the lessee accepts the premises in the condition in which they are then in, and agrees that the lessor shall not be liable for any personal injuries caused by any defects therein. Johnston v. Nichols (1915) 83 Wash. 394, 145 Pac. 417.

Liability under express agreement to repair.

Supplementing notes in 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 919, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 804 and 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 504.

As pointed out in the notes referred to, and as held by the later cases, by the weight of authority the negligent breach by the lessor of an express agreement to keep the leased premises in repair will not support an action in tort by the lessee to recover damages for personal injuries received from the defective condition of the premises, although attributable to such breach.

Hart v. Coleman (1915) — Ala. —, 68 So. 315; O'Neil v. Brown (1914) 158 Ky. 118, 164 S. W. 315; Dice v. Zweigart (1914) 161 Ky. 646, L.R.A. —, —, 171 S. W. 195; Lane v. Raynes (1916) — Mass. —, 112 N. E. 152; Dailey v. Vogl (1915) 187 Mo. App. 261, 173 S. W. 707; Murphy v. Dee (1915) 190 Mo. App. 83, 175 S. W. 287; McBride v. Gurney (1916) — Mo. App. —, 185 S. W. 735; Marston v. Frisbie (1915) 168 App. Div. 666, 154 N. Y. Supp. 367.

In Flood v. Pabst Brewing Co. (1914) 158 Wis. 626, L.R.A. —, —, 149 N. W. 489, it is held that a landlord who agrees to keep the leased premises in repair is liable to the invitee of a tenant injured by a defect therein, although the action is in tort based upon the breach of duty to repair. The most of the cases cited by the court in support of this proposition were cases where the action was based upon a defect in premises used in common by different tenants, or premises leased for public or quasi public use. Indeed this case itself involved the lease of a building for saloon purposes.

In Maryland, Pinkerton v. Slocomb (1916) 126 Md. 665, 95 Atl. 965, it is held that an action in tort cannot be maintained to recover for personal injuries to a tenant from a defect in the leased premises, although the action is based upon a breach by the landlord upon his agreement to repair. It is held, however, that the landlord may be liable for personal injuries to a tenant resulting from a negligent failure to repair.

Liability under subsequent promise to repair.

Supplementing note in 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 805.

In Nutter v. Colyer (1914) 180 Mich.

107, 146 N. W. 643, it is apparently assumed that the landlord is liable to a tenant for personal injuries received from a defective floor in the kitchen of the leased premises if, as the tenant claimed during the tenancy, he examined the floor and said it was safe, but he would nevertheless make some repair which would make it stronger, which he did not do, but she continued to use the floor until she fell through it and was injured.

Statutory provisions.

Supplementing notes in 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 808, and 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 920.

Under the Georgia statute providing that the landlord is responsible to others for damages arising from the defective construction or for damages for failure to keep the premises in repair, the landlord is liable to respond in damages for the death of a stepchild of the tenant killed through a defect in the premises of which the landlord had notice and negligently failed to repair. Crook v. Foster (1914) 142 Ga. 715, 83 S. E. 670.

But the mere fact that, after being personally injured from a defective condition of the leased premises, the tenant continued to pay rent, does not affect his right to recover damages from the landlord for such injuries. Cohen v. Brunson (1914) 14 Ga. App. 170, 80 S. E. 679.

Contributory negligence of the tenant.

Supplementing notes in 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 921 and 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 808.

Where the injured person fails to show the cause of the accident or his freedom from contributory negligence, he cannot recover from the landlord although the injury was due to the defective condition of the premises. Francis v. Hoffman (1916) 157 N. Y. Supp. 764.

The lessor is not liable for personal injuries to the lessee from a defect in the leased premises unknown to both parties, even though he might have discovered the defect by the exercise of reasonable care; since the tenant is also required to exercise the same degree of care to discover the dangerous condition of the premises as the landlord is, and his failure in this regard constitutes contributory negligence, precluding a recovery from the landlord. Kurtz v. Pauly (1914) 158 Wis. 534, 149 N. W. 143.

Where the injured person knew that the stairway used in common by different tenants was without a railing, but she continued to use it, she assumed the risk of any injury therefrom, and cannot recover from the landlord. Lucy v. Bawden [1914] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 318, 116 L. T. N. S. 580, 83 L. J. K. B. N. S. 523, 30 Times L. R. 321.

In Staples v. Casey (1915) 43 App. D. O. 477, where the lessor agreed to keep and maintain the leased premises in good, safe, and perfect condition, it is said that, assuming that the negligent failure of the lessor to perform the duty thus assumed would support an action to recover damages for personal injuries received from a defective stairway, the tenant cannot recover where she was guilty of contributory negligence in using the stairs with knowledge of their defective condition.

If the tenant, after calling the attention of the landlord to defects in the premises liable to endanger his health, continued to occupy the same before the landlord repaired the defects complained of, it has been held to constitute such negligence as to preclude recovery for sickness occasioned thereby. Clements v. Blanchard (1914) 141 Ga. 311, L.R.A. —, —, 80 S. E. 1004. So, where the tenant called the attention of the landlord to defective steps and he failed to repair them, she was guilty of negligence in thereafter using the steps, and cannot recover for personal injury received thereby. Donehoe v. Crane (1914) 141 Ga. 224, 80 S. E. 712.

It has been held that where the tenant complained to the landlord of the defective condition of a board walk on the premises, and he made no promise to repair it, the question whether or not the tenant in continuing to use the walk until injured by the defect therein was guilty of contributory negligence is for the jury. Christiansen v. Navigato (1914) 185 Ill. App. 318. And whether a tenant in an apartment building is guilty of contributory negligence in leaning against a railing of a stairway to the rear of the building is also a question for the jury. Rossen v. Goodridge (1914) 185 Ill. App. 164.

The act of the tenant in remaining in the leased apartment after the lessor undertook to repair a door therein, but left it in an incomplete condition, does not constitute contributory negligence, even though the dangerous condition of the door is not a hidden defect. Flam v. Greenberg (1916) 158 N. Y. Supp. 670.

A. G. S.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

CONSOLIDATION COAL COMPANY,
Appt.,
v.
JOHN M. PRATT.

(— Ky. —, 184 S. W. 369.)

Master and servant — kick by mule — Liability of master.

A servant who, while stooping near a mule's heels, hits it with a whip, cannot hold his master liable for injury from the kick forthwith administered to him by the mule.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. c. 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(April 14, 1916.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Letcher County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him while in defendant's employ by being kicked by a mule. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Young & Dearing and O'Rear & Williams, for appellant:

The master must know the mule was vicious and fail to tell the servant.

Green River Coal & Coke Co. v. Phaup, 137 Ky. 37, 121 S. W. 651.

The appellee was guilty of contributory negligence.

Tolin v. Terrell, 133 Ky. 214, 117 S. W. 290.

In the absence of knowledge on the part of the master as to habit of the mule kicking, the appellee assumes the risk if he goes within the radius of its heels.

In order to recover, it devolved upon plaintiff to show that the mule was vicious or dangerous; that defendant either knew or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known thereof; and that plaintiff did not himself have such knowledge and could not have acquired it by the exercise of ordinary care on his part.

Mahan Jellico Coal Co. v. Bird, 167 Ky. 697, 181 S. W. 339.

Messrs. Ira Fields, Felix G. Fields, and Fields & Newman, for appellee:

Where the master knowingly furnishes to the servant a dangerous, vicious animal, unfit for use, or lulls the servant into a feeling of security by false assurances of safety, the danger being unknown to the servant, and injury results, the master is liable.

East Jellico Coal Co. v. Stewart, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 420, 68 S. W. 624; Baker v. Crescent Coal Co. 142 Ky. 191, 133 S. W. 1146; Gatcliff Coal Co. v. Wright, 157 Ky. 682, 163 S. W. 1110.

The servant may reply upon representations of the master as to safety.

Gatcliff Coal Co. v. Wright and East Jellico Coal Co. v. Stewart, supra.

The owner of a mule is responsible to his employee injured by it while in his service, where the latter, being unacquainted with the vicious propensities of the animal, is injured because induced by the owner's assurance of its gentle and reliable qualities to omit, in his use of it, some precaution for his safety that, as a person of ordinary prudence, he would otherwise have taken.

Ibid.

Clay, C., filed the following opinion:

This is a personal injury action in which plaintiff, John M. Pratt, recovered of the defendant, the Consolidation Coal Company, a verdict and judgment for $500. The company appeals.

Plaintiff, while in the employ of defendant, was kicked by a mule. He predicates his case on the fact that the mule was dangerous, vicious, and unsafe, and, upon being whipped, beaten, or annoyed, would kick at persons, and thereby endanger their lives and safety; that these facts were known to defendant, or could have been known to it by the exercise of ordinary care, and were not known to plaintiff and could not have been known to him by the exercise of ordinary care. In addition to the foregoing facts, his petition alleges in substance that, because of the difficulty in inducing the mule to enter the mine, plaintiff was ordered by the superintendent to whip the mule, and that the superintendent assured plaintiff that the mule was gentle and safe and would not kick; that on the occasion of the accident he, in obedience to the direction of defendant's superintendent, whipped the mule for the purpose of forcing it to enter the mine, and while so doing, and as a result of said whipping, the mule kicked and injured plaintiff.

In support of the allegations contained in his petition, plaintiff testified in substance as follows: He had been doing grade work for the company for four or five months. The superintendent then directed him to drive in the mines. He worked the mule that kicked him for two days. The superintendent said that "the mule was good conditioned, but would not stop," and told plaintiff to be careful and not let the car run on him when it started, but did not say anything about its kicking. The superintendent also told him to whip the mule and make it go into the mine. While driving the mule on the third day, he hit the mule and it kicked him. Before that he had trouble with the mule every time he started into the mouth of the mine. At the time of the accident, another employee was pulling on the mule with a bridle or halter. Plaintiff was stooping down, trying to get hold of the tail chain. A part of the work that plaintiff was to do was to hook and unhook the chain. On cross-examination plaintiff stated that he had worked on a farm practically all of his life. During that time he had hoed corn, grubbed, and done similar kinds of work. While he had plowed some, he had never driven any teams except oxen. He was assigned to the duty of driving the mule because he had applied to the superintendent for a job with more money. When he went to work he knew that the mule would not stand, but that was all. The chain was near the mule's feet. He stooped down to get the chain and at the same time hit the mule. He struck him with a limb or little whip. When he first went to work the superintendent helped him to whip the mule. Plaintiff further says that he did not know that the mule would kick. He had never seen it make any demonstrations of that kind.

Note.—As to duty and liability of master to servants in respect to animals owned or used by master, see note to Nooney v. Pacific Exp. Co. L.R.A.1915B, 433, and other notes there referred to.

7 R A 1916D

While plaintiff bases his right of action on the fact that the mule was dangerous and vicious, and this fact was known to the master, or could have been known to him by the exercise of ordinary care, he fails to show that the mule ever kicked or showed any vicious tendencies on any previous occasion. On the contrary, he shows that he had driven the mule into the mine a number of times and had repeatedly whipped him, and that the mule bore his punishment with remarkable complacency and never attempted to injure plaintiff in any way. It was only when plaintiff took a position near the mule's hind feet and reached down to pick up the tail chain, and at the same time struck the mule with a whip, that the mule gave way to his natural propensity and kicked plaintiff. The kicking propensity of the mule is a matter of common knowledge, and has been the subject of comment from the earliest time. It is almost as universally recognized as the fact that a duck will swim or a cat will scratch. However, a duck cannot indulge his propensity without water and, ordinarily, a cat will not scratch unless irritated or attacked. But the mule requires no particular setting for the exercise of his high prerogative. He is liable to kick at any time, and no one can plead ignorance of this tendency. This is not a case where the mule was shown to be more than ordinarily dangerous or vicious. It is not a case where the unexpected happened. It is a case where plaintiff not only invited disaster, but actually provoked it. He made himself a convenient target by stooping down and placing himself near the mule's heels. Not being satisfied with this invitation, he actually applied the lash. Of course, there may be instances where a mule will sometimes surprise you and refuse to kick, even though the circumstances be unusually propitious. But this is not such a case. Here the mule would have been untrue to himself and false to every tradition of his breed if he had passively acquiesced in such treatment and kept his heels on the ground. The quality of plaintiff's act cannot be the subject of dispute. All reasonable men will agree that he showed an utter disregard of his own safety. An employee cannot court danger by inviting and provoking a mule to kick him, and then recover of the master for a consequent injury, on the ground that he is a bona fide cripple without notice. Tolin v. Terrell, 133 Ky. 214, 117 S. W. 290. It follows that the trial court should have directed a verdict in favor of defendant.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

ROSE NADEL et al., Appts.,
v.

WEBER BROTHERS SHOE COMPANY.

(— Fla. —, 70 So. 20.)

Husband and wife — wife as partner — liability.

1. A married woman is not personally

Headnotes by ELLIS, J.

Note. — As to power of married woman to become member of partnership, see annotation following this case, post, 1233. L.R.A.1916D.

bound by any contract made by her partner in a mercantile business, nor do the partnership debts incurred by her partner in the transaction of the partnership business become a charge upon her separate property. For other cases, see Husband and Wife, II. b, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — removal of disability — extent. 2. A married woman's disability of coverture is removed by § 2, art. 11, of the Constitution of 1885, to the extent that she may assume an obligation for the purchase price of property, and such obligation may be enforced out of her separate property. For other cases, see Husband and Wife, I. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — interest in business — liability for supplies.

3. A married woman who has acquired an interest in a mercantile business may, by her own act, upon her sole credit, purchase merchandise for the business, and for the purchase price of such goods her separate property may be subjected in equity.

For other cases, see Husband and Wife, I. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — purchase by agent — authority.

4. If a married woman's separate property is sought to be subjected in equity to the payment of the price of goods purchased through her agent, the agent's authority should be clearly and specifically alleged in the bill.

For other cases, see Pleading, II. h, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Pleading — supplemental bill — demurrer.

5. Upon a demurrer to an original and supplemental bill, the allegations of the two bills will be considered together.

For other cases, see Pleading, I. o, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 26, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lee County overruling a demurrer to a bill filed to subject certain property of defendants to the payment of a debt alleged to be due to complainant for goods sold by it to them. Reversed.

Statement by Ellis, J.:

Weber Brothers Shoe Company, a corporation, filed its bill in equity against Rose Nadel and her husband, A. G. Nadel, for the purpose of subjecting certain real property of Rose Nadel, owned by her as her separate statutory property, and described in the bill, and certain personal property alleged to be owned by Rose Nadel and C. L. Johnson in a mercantile business conducted by them under the name of the "Quality Shop," at Ft. Myers, Florida, to the payment of a debt alleged to be due to the complainant corporation for goods shipped by it to the Quality Shop, which the bill alleges was the "firm name and style" of a business in which Rose Nadel was jointly interested with "one C. L. Johnson," who was not made a party to the bill.

The bill alleges that, at the time it was filed, the Quality Shop had a stock of goods of the estimated value of $5,000, and that Rose Nadel had an undivided half interest therein, and that such interest was under the control of her husband, A. G. Nadel, who was her agent in fact and in law. It is alleged that in February, 1914, Rose Nadel, through her husband as her agent in fact and in law, contracted with the complainant for the purchase of the goods, which were shipped to her and received and accepted by the Quality Shop, and that the complainant shipped the goods as stated, relying on the promise of Rose Nadel, through her husband, A. G. Nadel, to pay for the same. A list of the goods sold by the complainant is attached to the bill of complaint as "Exhibit A" and made a part of the bill. This list shows that the goods were sold by the "Weber Brothers Shoe Company" to the "Quality Shop, Ft. Myers, Florida." The bill alleges specifically that Rose Nadel is a married woman and interested in the said business, the Quality Shop, together with one C. L. Johnson, and with her husband, A. G. Nadel, as "agent and manager of said business."

In another paragraph of the bill it is alleged that such "goods and chattels were purchased by the said Rose Nadel for the use and sale in the said business known as the Quality Shop, and that such goods were sold to her in a good faith and on her credit and her representation as to the ownership of the said property both real and personal," and that the "goods were shipped to the said Rose Nadel, operating under the firm name and style of the Quality Shop, located in the city of Ft. Myers, Lee county, Florida, and were received by the said defendants, and they then and there promised" the complainant "to pay the same."

The bill prays for an accounting to ascertain the amount due to complainant by Rose Nadel, trading under the name of the "Quality Shop;" that such amount be paid by Rose Nadel within a short time, to be named by the court; and that, in default of the payment of such indebtedness by her, her interest in the personal property of the business, as well as her real property, be sold, or the rents, issues, and profits thereof sequestered to satisfy the complainant's claim.

About four months after the filing of the original bill, the complainant filed its supplemental bill of complaint against the defendants, in which it was alleged that, since the filing of the original bill, there had been a "dissolution of the partnership relations existing between the defendant Rose Nadel" and "C. L. Johnson, and that the partnership property" had been divided between them, and that Rose Nadel had in her possession and control "by and under and through the management of her husband, A. G. Nadel, a certain stock of shoes, hats, shirts," etc., and that she held the goods free from any claims of C. L. Johnson, her former partner in the business then known as the Quality Shop. It was further alleged that the partnership was dissolved by mutual consent on the 1st day of Janary, 1915, and that C. L. Johnson had agreed to settle the indebtedness of the former firm, but the complainant had not agreed to nor accepted such offer, nor released Rose Nadel, nor the property, from the payment of the debt. The bill prays that the "said personal property, consisting of the stock of goods" located in a certain building in Ft. Myers, may be subjected to the payment of the complainant's claim. It is alleged in the original bill that the real estate as well as the interest of Rose Nadel in the mercantile business was her separate statutory property, and in the supplemental bill that the personal property, consisting of part of the merchandise stock of the Quality Shop, which came to her upon the dissolution of the partnership, is her separate statutory property.

The defendants interposed a demurrer to the original and supplemental bills, on the grounds, among others, that the bills were without equity, and set forth no facts which entitled the complainant to the relief sought; that it was not alleged that the credit was given solely to the defendant Rose Nadel upon the faith of her "separate statutory estate;" that the bills sought to subject a married woman's separate statutory property to the debts of a partnership business; that the supplemental bill was bad because the original bill states no cause that could be sustained in equity; and that the supplemental bill failed to set forth any contract on the part of the married woman, and alleged that the credit was given to the business.

The demurrer was overruled. Exceptions were filed to certain matters contained in the supplemental bill, relating to the property which Rose Nadel had in her possession after the dissolution of the partnership, and the allegation that it was property purchased by Rose Nadel through her husband as manager and her agent in the mercantile business formerly known as the Quality Shop, and that some of which was the very property that "the defendant" purchased from the complainant, etc. The exceptions were overruled. From these orders Rose Nadel and her husband, A. G. Nadel, appealed to this court.

Messrs. Randell & Lawler for appellants.

Mr. Walter O. Sheppard for appellee.

Ellis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The theory on which the bills rest is that a married woman who is jointly interested in a mercantile business as a partner, with one who is sui juris, may, by using her credit, based upon her separate property in purchasing goods for the business, render such separate property liable to be subjected in equity to the payment of a creditor's claim.

It is true that a married woman cannot be a member of a partnership, and is therefore not personally liable for any act or transaction of her so-called partner in the transaction of partnership business. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Fisher, 58 Fla. 377, 50 So. 504; Porter v. Taylor, 64 Fla. 100, 59 So. 400; De Graum v. Jones, 23 Fla. 83, 6 So. 925. Yet, under § 2 of article 11 of the Constitution of Florida, a married woman's disability of coverture is removed to the extent that she may assume an obligation for the purchase price of real or personal property, and such obligation may be a charge in equity upon, and enforced out of, her separate property. Micou v. McDonald, 55 Fla. 776, 46 So. 291; Halle v. Einstein, 34 Fla. 589, 16 So. 554. Her so-called partner cannot, by any act of his, obligate her to the payment of partnership debts so that such debts may be a charge upon her separate property in equity, but she may, by her own act, upon her sole credit, purchase goods for the business in which she is interested, and her separate property may be subjected in equity to the payment of debts so contracted by her. Although a married woman, by reason of her disability of coverture, cannot make a valid contract of copartnership, she may acquire an interest in a mercantile business, she may invest money or other property in such business, and such interest will be her separate property, and subject to be charged in equity and sold under § 2 of article 11 of the Constitution. In such case her associates in business, that is to say, the persons with whom she has her property invested, and who conduct the mercantile business, are not necessary parties. Her obligation to pay for the goods so purchased by her rests not upon the contract of partnership, nor because she is bound by any obligation growing out of the partnership relation, but, being interested in the business in her own name, and having property employed in such business, she purchases goods upon her sole credit for the purpose of such business. In such case the goods are purchased by her, and for the purchase price thereof her separate property may be charged in equity and sold. It is immaterial that the goods so purchased are commingled with the merchandise stock, or that she parts with them by gift or sale, or destroys them, so that her separate property is not in fact increased in value or benefited by the purchase; her separate property may be charged in equity and sold because of the purchase by her of the goods and that she intended the payment thereof to be made out of her own property. The married woman being given the right to acquire property, the Constitution, preserving it free from the debts of her husband, without her consent, makes it subject in equity to be charged for the payment of the price of any property purchased by her. Halle v. Einstein, supra; Halle v. Meinhard Bros. 34 Fla. 607, 16 So. 559; First Nat. Bank v. Hirschowitz, 46 Fla. 588, 35 So. 22. In analogy to the system devised by equity for charging a married woman's separate estate under circumstances in which a court of law would hold her personally bound if she were sole, the Constitution has provided this substitute for the authority to contract. See Harwood v. Root, 20 Fla. 940; Micon v. McDonald, supra. We think that the right to charge her property in equity for the price of any property purchased by her depends upon the obligation being assumed by her solely upon her credit. As she cannot make a valid contract of copartnership, and is not bound by the contracts made by her alleged partner in business, she cannot accomplish that end through an agent whom she appoints to represent her generally in the management of a business in which she is jointly interested with others.

We do not hold that she may not authorize her husband to act for her in the purchase of property upon her sole credit, to be used in a business in which she is interested; but such authorization must be made clearly to appear, and that it was her purpose to assume the obligation solely, and not jointly, as a partnership obligation.

The original bill alleges that the goods were purchased by Mrs. Nadel for use and sale in the business, and that the goods were sold to her in good faith on her credit and her representations as to the ownership of the property, both real and personal, described in the bill. The supplemental bill alleges that the goods were purchased by Mrs. Nadel "through her husband as manager and her agent in the mercantile business," etc. The latter allegation weakens the one contained in the original bill, especially when considering the invoice which is attached to the original bill as exhibit A, and made a part of it, showing that the goods were sold, not to Mrs. Nadel on her sole credit, but were sold to the Quality Shop, the name of a business owned by C. L. Johnson and Mrs. Nadel jointly.

These allegations of the original and supplemental bills, taken together, do not exclude the idea that, as manager of the business, the husband of Mrs. Nadel acted as agent for C. L. Johnson as well as for Mrs. Nadel, and that, in purchasing the goods and managing the business, he was acting as the representative of the alleged copartnership, and that the obligation incurred for the purchase of goods for the business was intended to be a joint obligation of the alleged copartnership, and not the sole obligation of the married woman. See Barco v. Doyle, 50 Fla. 488, 39 So. 103; Durham v. Edwards, 50 Fla. 495, 38 So. 928.

The demurrer to the original and supplemental bills should have been sustained; the order of the court, overruling the demurrer, is reversed.

Shackleford, Cockrell, and Whitfield, JJ., concur. Taylor, Ch. J., absent on account of illness.

Annotation—Power of married woman to become member of partnership.

At common law.

At common law married women not only were generally regarded as incapacitated to contract for any purpose, or to engage in trade, but also, by virtue of the marriage relation, any property purchased by them passed immediately to the husband. From this it clearly follows that a married woman was unable to enter into a business partnership, for that would necessitate a capacity both to contract and to hold and deal in property. This incapacity was expressly recognized in the following cases, which involve an attempted partnership between a married woman and a person other than her husband: Yarbrough v. Bush (1881) 69 Ala. 170; De Graum v. Jones (1887) 23 Fla. 83, 6 So. 925; Ma- ghee v. Baker (1860) 15 Ind. 254 (holding that while, as an abstract proposition of law, a married woman may not enter into a partnership contract, yet, if she does make such a contract, and places her separate funds therein, such funds cannot, while so placed, be made subject to the husband's debts); Hoaglin v. Henderson (1903) 119 Iowa, 720, 61 L.R.A. 756, 97 Am. St. Rep. 335, 94 N. W. 247; Bryan v. Inman (1888) 10 Ky. L. Rep. 542; Daniel v. Barnes (1889) 10 Ky. L. Rep. 775; Brown v. Jewett (1846) 18 N. H. 230; Little v. Hazlett (1901) 197 Pa. 591, 47 Ala. 855; Hagan v. Hoover (1890) 33 S. O. 219, 11 S. E. 725; Board of Trade v. Hayden (1892) 4 Wash. 263, 16 L.R.A. 530, 31 Am. St. Rep. 919, 30 Pac. 87, 32 Pac. 224; Carey

v. Burruss (1882) 20 W. Va. 571, 43 Am. Rep. 790; Fuller & F. Co. v. McHenry (1892) 83 Wis. 573, 18 L.R.A. 512, 33 N. W. 896. In De Graum v. Jones (Fla.) supra, the court discussed the question as follows: "To establish a partnership between two or more persons the parties must be capable of contracting to regulate the terms of their joint enterprise, to wit: the amount of capital stock to be furnished and the services to be performed by each partner; the business in which said partners are to engage, and the length of time it is to last. These are all obligations of a purely personal character. When one of the parties is without the legal capacity to assume these obligations, as a married woman is, there can be no legally existing partnership between them. She has no separate legal existence, her husband and she being, in contemplation of law, but one person."

And a fortiori at common law a married woman could not enter into a business partnership with her husband. This rule has the express approval of the following authorities: Leinkauff v. Frenkle (1885) 80 Ala. 136; Belser v. Tusculum Bkg. Co. (1894) 105 Ala. 514, 17 So. 40; Montgomery v. Sprinkle (1869) 31 Ind. 113; Huffman v. Copeland (1882) 86 Ind. 224; Haggett v. Hurley (1898) 91 Me. 542, 41 L.R.A. 362, 40 Atl. 561; Mayer v. Soyster (1868) 30 Md. 402; Bradstreet v. Baer (1874) 41 Md. 19; Artman v. Ferguson (1888) 73 Mich. 146, 2 L.R.A. 343, 16 Am. St. Rep. 572, 40 N. W. 907; Morris v. Palmer (1856) 32 Miss. 278; Boyle's Estate (1864) Tucker (N. Y.) 4; Snaau v. Caffé (1890) 122 N. Y. 308, 9 L.R.A. 593, 25 N. E. 488; Noel v. Kinney (1885) 15 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 403; Fairlee v. Bloomingdale (1884) 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 292, 14 Abb. N. C. 341; Kaufman v. Schoeffel (1885) 37 Hun (N. Y.) 140; Payne v. Thompson (1886) 44 Ohio St. 192, 5 N. E. 654; Gwynn v. Gwynn (1887) 27 S. C. 525, 4 S. E. 229.

Under statute; partnership with person other than husband.

As a consequence of the common-law incapacity of a married woman to enter into a business partnership, if such a power or right exists at all in the jurisdictions in which the common-law system prevails, it must be by virtue of statutory or constitutional authority enlarging the common-law powers and liabilities. However, statutes of this nature have been enacted in practically all jurisdictions, thus raising the now important question as to whether or not such statutes permit a married woman to enter into a business partnership. In answer to this question there has been due, in the majority of instances, to the differences in terms of the statutes conferring the powers, but caused to some extent by the variance of opinions entertained by the courts as to the extent to which the rules of public policy should be applied in construing the statutes.

Statutes of the character just referred to usually take the form of a permit to a married woman to hold a separate legal estate, and to contract with respect to same independently of her husband. Such statutes are usually construed as so enlarging the powers of a married woman as to enable her to embark her separate estate in a business partnership with any capable person other than her husband, it being regarded as no valid objection that she may thereby become liable for the acts of her partner. There is, however, considerable diversity of phraseology employed in the various statutes, some of which have not been regarded as sufficiently broad to enable a married woman to become a copartner in a commercial partnership. This variance in the statutes renders a separate treatment of each statute essential to an understanding or proper interpretation of the various adjudications. Statutes which have been held to enable a married woman to become a member of a business partnership of which her husband is not a member will be treated first.

Thus, under the Ohio statutes of 1887, which provide that neither husband nor wife has any interest in the property of the other except as to dower, and that a husband or wife may enter into any engagement or transaction with the other or with any other person which either might enter into, if unmarried, subject to the rules which govern persons occupying confidential relations with each other, a wife has the right to enter into partnership with strangers, and employ her husband as manager. First Nat. Bank v. Rice (1900) 22 Ohio C. C. 183, 12 Ohio C. D. 121.

And in Iowa, where by statute married women may acquire, own, and dispose of property in the same manner and to the same extent as their husbands may do, and are given the right to make contracts and incur liabilities the same as if unmarried, a married woman and a person other than her husband may lawfully engage in a business partnership.

Dupuy v. Sheak (1881) 57 Iowa, 361, 10 N. W. 731; Deere v. Bonne (1899) 108 Iowa, 281, 75 Am. St. Rep. 254, 79 N. W. 59.

So, in Massachusetts, under statutes providing that a married woman may carry on any trade or business on her separate account as if sole, may enter into any contract with reference to her separate property, and may sue and be sued, the courts have held that a married woman may enter into a business partnership if her husband is not a member thereof. Plumer v. Lord (1862) 5 Allen (Mass.) 460. In this connection the court said: "Copartnerships are among the most usual modes of carrying on trade or business; and there is nothing in their nature which would seem to exclude a married woman from such a mode of transacting business, if she had the general power to invest and dispose of property, and enter into engagements for the employment of her own time, labor, and skill. The fact that this contract might make her liable for the acts and dealings of other persons constitutes no serious objection; for this fact would exist in regard to many ordinary kinds of investment, such as a part ownership in ships, or in shares of corporations; and would arise to some extent whenever she should employ an agent in her own affairs. The language of the statute is principally relied on, which, it is argued, limits her capacity to contract to business done 'on her own sole and separate account.' But we think this language was used merely in reference to the marital relation, and the whole object and scope of the statute were to provide for and secure her independence from the control or interference of her husband, and not to restrict her power of contracting with other persons. If, therefore, her husband is no party to the contract, we are of opinion that a married woman may form a partnership in business with other persons."

And in Michigan, where, by statute, the real and personal property of a married woman is her separate estate, and, while not liable for the debts of her husband, may be contracted, sold, etc., as if she were unmarried, which statute has, by repeated decision, been held to permit married women to carry on business or trade in their own names and upon their sole account, it has been held that a married woman may enter into partnership relations with others than her husband. Vail v. Winterstein (1892) 94 Mich. 230, 18 L.R.A. 515, 34 Am. St. Rep. 334, 53 L.R.A. 1916D.

N. W. 932. In this connection the court said: "If a married woman may carry on a business in her own name, and appoint agents who may make contracts for her and in her name, we see no reason why these statutes should be interpreted as restrictive of her right to enter a firm as a partner with others aside from her husband, and thus bind her separate property for such firm's undertakings, as partners in a firm are the agents of each other in a transaction of partnership affairs, and it is conferring no more power upon the partner to bind the sole and separate property of a married woman than such married woman would have the right to contract for through any other agency."

And in England, under the married women's property act of 1882, which rendered married women capable of entering into and rendering themselves liable to the extent of their separate property on "any contract," and suing and being sued as if they were femes soles, a married woman may enter into a contract of partnership. 22 Laws of England (Halsbury) 20.

And in Pennsylvania, under the act of June 8, 1893, P. L. 344, whereby a married woman was given practically the same right to contract that a feme sole enjoyed, it has been held that a married woman may become a member of a commercial firm and be bound as such. Loeb v. Mellinger (1900) 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 592, holding that coverture was not a defense to a partnership note, although, by express exception of statute, a married woman could not become an accommodation indorser, maker, guarantor, or surety for another; Italo-French Produce Co. v. Thomas (1906) 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 503.

And in Indiana, by statutes enacted in 1881 (Rev. Stat. 1881, §§ 5115-5117), all legal disabilities of married women to contract were abolished except as therein provided with respect to real estate and becoming a surety, they being given the right to deal with personal property as if unmarried. Under this statute a married woman may enter into a business partnership and subject her property to its debts. Burk v. Platt (1882) 88 Ind. 283; Conant v. National State Bank (1889) 121 Ind. 323, 22 N. E. 250.

And in Wisconsin, under statutes converting the equitable separate estate of a married woman into a legal one, and exempting it from liability for the husband's debts, thereby giving the wife the right to deal with and contract regarding same in the same manner as if she were unmarried, it seemingly was assumed in Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Raymond (1871) 27 Wis. 569, that a married woman may enter into a partnership with one other than her husband. And see Fuller & F. Co. v. McHenry (1892) 83 Wis. 573, 18 L.R.A. 512, 53 N. W. 896.

And in Mississippi, under Code 1871, § 1780, which provided that any married woman may make any contract for the use of her lands, and may employ her money in trade or business, and that, when a married woman engages in trade or business as a feme sole, she shall be bound by her contracts made in the course of such trade or business in the same manner as if she were unmarried, a married woman may become a member of a mercantile partnership, and her property liable for firm debts. Newman v. Morris (1876) 52 Miss. 402; Brasfield v. French (1882) 59 Miss. 632. But that the contrary was true under the Mississippi statute of 1857 (provisions not set out in report of case) was held in Howard v. Stephens (1876) 52 Miss. 239.

And in Arkansas, where the statute entitles a married woman to hold separate property, and to transfer same, and to carry on any trade or business, and to hold the earnings as separate property, she can form a partnership with a third person other than her husband so as to bind herself the same as if she were a man. Abbott v. Jackson (1884) 43 Ark. 212.

And under a Federal statute similar to the Arkansas statute, the same has been held in the District of Columbia. Norwood v. Francis (1905) 25 App. D. C. 463, 4 Ann. Cas. 865, construing 29 Stat. at L. 193, chap. 303, enacted June 1, 1896.

And in Missouri, under statutes allowing a married woman to retain and control her separate property, it has been held that a married woman may enter into a copartnership with strangers. Ploss v. Thomas (1878) 6 Mo. App. 157; Chicago Coffin Co. v. Fritz (1890) 41 Mo. App. 389.

And in New Jersey, under statutes authorizing married women to receive real and personal property in any manner, and providing that their wages and earnings acquired in any employment, occupation, or trade in which they are engaged, and which they carry on separately from their husbands, and all investments of such wages, moneys, earnings, or property shall be their sole and separate property as though they were L.R.A.1916D.

single women, a married woman may become a copartner in business with others than her husband. Kutcher v. Williams (1885) 40 N. J. Eq. 436, 3 Atl. 257. And see Merritt v. Day (1875) 38 N. J. L. 32, 20 Am. Rep. 362.

And under a New York statutory provision that a married woman might carry on any trade or business on her sole and separate account, the rule is that she may form a partnership with a stranger. Bitter v. Rathman (1875) 61 N. Y. 512, holding that, as to creditors of a partnership, a married woman member could not plead coverture. And see the New York case set out infra, subdivision entitled, "Partnership with husband."

And under the Ohio statute of 1874, which provided that where a married woman is engaged as owner or partner in any mercantile or other business, she may sue or be sued alone with respect to its affairs, it seems that a married woman could engage in a partnership mercantile enterprise. See Raymond v. Breckenridge (1900) 7 Ohio N. P. 377, holding that a judgment against a married woman sued as a member of a partnership binds only her separate property then owned by her. But see Alexander v. Morgan (1877) 31 Ohio St. 546, wherein it was held that the marriage of a woman engaged in a partnership business enterprise dissolved the partnership and rendered the husband liable for the wife's partnership obligations.

And in Virginia, where a married woman who has a separate personal estate is regarded as a feme sole as to such estate, it has been held that she may enter into a business partnership with the consent of her husband so as to be entitled to the profits of the trade against her husband and against his creditors if the agreement be founded on a valuable consideration, paid by the wife, so as to make her separate estate liable for firm debts. Penn v. Whitehead (1867) 17 Gratt. (Va.) 503, 94 Am. Dec. 478.

And in Georgia, where the statutes have largely emancipated married women (provisions not reported in cases involving such statutes), the rule is that a married woman may engage in a bona fide partnership business either with her husband or with another. Burney v. Savannah Grocery Co. (1896) 98 Ga. 711, 58 Am. St. Rep. 342, 25 S. E. 915; Orr v. Cooledge (1903) 117 Ga. 195, 43 S. E. 527; Butler v. Frank (1910) 7 Ga. App. 655, 67 S. E. 884.

And that in Illinois, a married woman may engage in a business partnership if her husband consents thereto, see the case of Heyman v. Heyman (1904) 210 Ill. 524, 71 N. E. 591, as set out infra.

And that Maine statutes at one time, at least, were such as to permit a married woman to enter into a business partnership, seems inferable from a Federal case which arose in that state, it having been held in Re Berryman (1878) 2 Haskell, 293, Fed. Cas. No. 1,360, that a married woman who authorized her husband to sign her name to articles of copartnership was bound thereby for the term of the agreement.

And it seems that in British Columbia a married woman may enter into a business partnership. See Pacific Land Co. v. Jamieson (1910) 15 B. C. 219, and McKissock v. McKissock (1913) 18 B. C. 401.

In Tennessee, where the rule is that a married woman's separate estate cannot be charged except by express contract with respect to the particular debt, it seems that a married woman may become a member of a firm, but that neither the property embarked by her in the enterprise nor her other separate property is liable for partnership obligations unless she has entered into an express contract that such interest or property shall be bound for the particular debt with which it is sought to be charged. Theus v. Dugger (1893) 93 Tenn. 41, 23 S. W. 135, holding that the proper course is for the creditor in each instance to stipulate for personal liability. And see Frank v. Anderson (1884) 13 Lea (Tenn.) 695, wherein it was held that a married woman may rely on her coverture in bar of partnership liabilities.

In North Carolina it does not seem to have been expressly decided whether or not a married woman may enter into a business partnership, but, under some circumstances, a married woman may become liable for partnership debts. Thus, in Stone Co. v. McLamb (1910) 153 N. C. 378, 69 N. E. 281, it was held that a married woman who entered into a business partnership of which her husband was manager without displaying her Christian name or stating the fact that she was a married woman was a free trader within the meaning of a statutory provision that any married woman conducting a business through her husband without displaying her Christian name or stating the fact that she was a feme covert shall be treated as a free trader; and the firm assets are subject to the firm debts.

But in Texas, where the statutes give to the husband the control of the wife's L.R.A.1916D.

separate estate, and declare that the income or profits derived from such estate shall be community property, a married woman cannot enter into a business partnership with anyone, her right to contract merely extending to debts for necessities furnished herself or children, and expenses incurred for the benefit of her separate estate. Bradford v. Johnson (1876) 44 Tex. 381; Brown v. Chancellor (1884) 61 Tex. 437; Miller v. Marx (1885) 65 Tex. 131; Smith v. Bailey (1886) 66 Tex. 553, 1 S. W. 627 (holding that the married woman becomes a creditor, and not a partner); Purdom v. Boyd (1891) 82 Tex. 130, 17 S. W. 606 (holding same as next preceding case). And see Keith v. Aubrey (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 278.

And in Pennsylvania, by the act of 1848, which enlarged the rights of married women with respect to the use and enjoyment of their separate property, but did not give them power of disposition or power to contract, and prior to the act of 1887, a married woman could not become a member of a business partnership. See Little v. Hazlett (1901) 197 Pa. 591, 47 Atl. 855, holding that the marriage of a female copartner dissolved the partnership. And see Landers v. Dithridge (1873) 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 560, wherein it was held that the Pennsylvania act of April 3, 1873, which merely secured to married women their separate earnings, did not enable a married woman to make a valid contract of partnership, or to become liable for the conduct and obligations thereof.

So it has been held that the West Virginia statutes which merely convert the equitable separate estate of a married woman into a separate legal estate do not remove the legal incapacity of a woman living with her husband to enter into a business copartnership, so as to subject her separate property to the debts of such attempted copartnership. Carey v. Burruss (1882) 20 W. Va. 571, 43 Am. Rep. 790; Ringold v. Suiter (1891) 35 W. Va. 186, 13 S. E. 46.

And where, as in Florida, a married woman's disability of coverture has been removed merely to the extent that she may assume an obligation for the purchase price of property, which obligation is a charge upon her separate property in equity, it has been held that she cannot enter into a partnership so as to render herself personally liable for obligations incurred by the partnership as such. Nadel v. Weber Bros. Shoe Co. ante, 1230; Nadel v. Schoeneman (1915) — Fla. —, 70 So. 23; Porter v. Taylor (1912) 64 Fla. 100, 59 So. 400; Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Fisher (1909) 58 Fla. 377, 50 So. 504; De Graum v. Jones (1887) 23 Fla. 83, 6 So. 925.

And under a Missouri statute providing that personal property belonging to a married woman at her marriage, or which may come to her during coverture by gift, bequest, or inheritance, or by purchase with her separate money, or as personal earnings, shall be and remain separate property, it has been held that a married woman's contracts were valid only as against her separate estate in equity; and therefore that a married woman who was a member of a partnership was not liable in an action at law wherein a personal judgment was sought for the price of goods furnished a partnership of which she was a member. Hochstadter v. Hays (1887) 11 Colo. 118, 17 Pac. 289, applying a Missouri law in force at the time.

And South Carolina enactments which merely declare that married women may acquire, hold, and dispose of separate property as if they were unmarried have been held not to enable married women to form commercial partnerships. Hagan v. Hoover (1890) 33 S. C. 219, 11 S. E. 725.

And the South Carolina statutes (in force until 1891) giving married women power to acquire, hold, and dispose of separate property as if unmarried, and to contract and be contracted with in reference "to her separate property," have been held not to permit a married woman to form a business partnership with her husband, the theory being that a partnership contract is not one with reference to a separate estate, within the sense of the act. Hagan v. Hoover (S. C.) supra; Vannerson v. Cheatham (1893) 41 S. C. 327, 19 S. E. 614. And see Gwynn v. Gwynn (1827) 27 S. C. 525, 4 S. E. 229, which is set out infra.

And in South Carolina, where, by the act of 1891, a married woman is given power to acquire and hold property in her own name, and to bind herself by contract as though she were unmarried, except contracts whereby she undertakes to assume a liability for the debt or default of another, it has been held that a married woman cannot enter into a business partnership, the ground taken being that, by becoming a partner, she would thereby become liable for the debts of the partnership contracted by other partners, in violation of the proviso to the statute. Vannerson v. Cheatham (S. C.) supra.

So, in Maryland, under statutes removing the disability of a married woman to the extent of allowing her the use of her separate property, and empowering her to carry on trade as a feme sole with a capital not exceeding $1,000, it has been held that a married woman cannot enter into a valid business partnership agreement. Bradstreet v. Baer (1874) 41 Md. 19.

And in Massachusetts, by a statute enacted in 1863, but expressly repealed in 1874, it was provided that the earlier statutes enlarging the rights and liabilities of married women, and which had been held to empower a married woman to enter into a business partnership with one other than her husband (see Plumer v. Lord (1862) 5 Allen (Mass.) 460, set out supra), "shall be so construed as not to allow her to enter into a partnership in business with any person." See Todd v. Clapp (1875) 118 Mass. 495, holding that the statute of 1863 was not unconstitutional as a legislative exercise of judicial power, and that under it a married woman could not enter into a business partnership with a stranger.

In Washington a married woman cannot become a member of a business co-partnership; at least, unless she makes a contribution to the firm's capital from her separate estate. Morreau Gas Fixture Co. v. Cox (1908) 161 Fed. 381, holding that a married woman was not liable as a member of a partnership to a creditor thereof, where her interest in the partnership was community property, and had been put in by the husband, to whom the laws gave the control thereof.

And that in Ohio, at least prior to 1873, a married woman could not, even with the consent of her husband, enter into a business enterprise not related to or connected with her separate property, see Swasey v. Antram (1873) 24 Ohio St. 87, holding that where she attempted to do so and engaged her husband as manager, he, and not she, must be regarded in law as the partner.

Where the statutes enlarging the rights of married women contain restrictions in the nature of conditions precedent, such conditions must be complied with. Thus, in Minnesota, where the statute provided that a married woman could, under certain circumstances, engage in trade, provided that she obtain a license from a judge of probate, it has been held that a feme covert who failed to obtain such a license could not become a member of a business partnership, and therefore that she could avail herself of her coverture to defeat a debt contracted by such an attempted partnership. Re Slichter (1869) 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 336, Fed. Cas. No. 12,943.

— partnership with husband.

The principal conflict upon the question of the power of a married woman to form a partnership in trade or business arises where she attempts to form such a partnership with her husband, or become a member of a partnership of which he is already a member. This divergence of conclusion is not entirely due to the varying phraseology employed in the statutes, but rather is caused in the main by a reluctance upon the part of many of the courts to so construe even the broader statutes as to permit a husband and wife to become copartners in business. As a matter of fact, many courts which permit a married woman to form a partnership with a person other than her husband deny her the right to form a partnership with him. Of course, in those jurisdictions where a feme covert is held not to have the power to become the partner of a stranger, a fortiori she cannot become her husband's partner.

Thus, under the New York Acts of 1848-1849, which merely vested the property of married women in themselves, a husband and wife could not enter into a business partnership. Boyle's Estate (1864) Tucker (N. Y.) 4. (This act has been superseded by later statutes. See New York cases set out infra.)

And the same has been held with respect to a similar constitutional and statutory provision in South Carolina. Gwynn v. Gwynn (1887) 27 S. C. 525, 4 S. E. 229.

And under the Texas statutes which give to the husband the control of the wife's separate estate, and declare that the income or profits derived from such estate shall be community property, a married woman cannot enter into a business copartnership with her husband, her rights to contract being restricted to debts for necessities furnished herself or children, and for all expenses incurred for the benefit of her separate estate. Wallace v. Finberg (1876) 46 Tex. 35; Cockrum v. McCracken (1880) 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 29; Steinback v. Weill (1880) 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 525; Brown v. Chancellor (1884) 61 Tex. 437; Miller v. Marx (1885) 65 Tex. 131; Smith v. Bailey (1886) 66 Tex. 553, 1 S. W. 627 (holding that a wife became a creditor of the firm, but not a partner); Cleveland v. L.R.A. 1916D.

Spencer (1899) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 50 S. W. 405. And see Green v. Ferguson (1884) 62 Tex. 525, and Keith v. Aubrey (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 278.

And in Maryland, where the statutes have removed the disabilities of married women to the extent of allowing them to use their separate property and to carry on trade as a feme sole with a capital not exceeding a specified sum, it has been held that a married woman cannot enter into a partnership with her husband, although she may contract in her individual character jointly with another assuming a direct obligation. Cruzen v. McKaig (1882) 57 Md. 454.

So, in Maine, under statutes rendering a wife personally liable for her debts contracted after her marriage "in her own name," it has been held that a married woman cannot enter into a business partnership with her husband, although she can contract with him, the theory being that such a relation is not, strictly speaking, one of contract, and that an obligation assumed in a partnership deal is not one contracted "in her own name," and, moreover, that the legislative policy did not indicate that a broader scope should be given the statute in question. Haggett v. Hurley (1898) 91 Me. 542, 41 L.R.A. 362, 40 Atl. 561.

And again, in South Carolina statutes (in force until 1891) giving a married woman power to acquire, hold, and dispose of separate property as if unmarried, and to contract and be contracted with, but only "as to her separate property," have been held not to permit a married woman to enter into a business partnership with her husband, the theory being that such a relation involves an obligation to contribute one's time and services, both of which belong to the husband, and that partnership contracts would not be contracts as to her separate property. Gwynn v. Gwynn (1887) 27 S. C. 525, 4 S. E. 229, holding that such construction was imperative inasmuch as the general right to contract, given by a previous statute, had been so limited by amendment as to permit only contracts as to separate property. Weisiger v. Wood (1891) 36 S. C. 424, 15 S. E. 597; Collins v. Hall (1899) 55 S. C. 336, 33 S. E. 466.

As before stated, in several jurisdictions (said by many text writers and in a number of judicial opinions to be a decided preponderance), the statutes of which have been so construed as to allow a married woman to enter into a partnership with a person other than her husband, the courts have refused to extend the rule so as to allow a husband and wife to become business partners.

Thus, in Michigan, under statutes providing that the real and personal property of a married woman shall be and remain her separate estate, and shall not be liable for debts of her husband, and may be contracted, sold, etc., as if she were unmarried, and that she may sue and be sued with respect thereto, it has been held that a husband and wife cannot form a valid business partnership which will bind her for the payment of partnership obligations. Edwards v. McEnhill (1883) 51 Mich. 160, 16 N. W. 322; Bassett v. Shepardson (1883) 52 Mich. 3, 17 N. W. 217 (wherein it was held that a partnership between a man and a woman was dissolved by their marriage); Artman v. Ferguson (1888) 73 Mich. 146, 2 L.R.A. 343, 16 Am. St. Rep. 572, 40 N. W. 907 (wherein the court took the position that if a married woman was allowed to "enter into a business partnership with her husband, it would subject her property to his control in a manner wholly inconsistent with the separation which it is the purpose of the statute to secure, and might subject her to an indefinite liability for his engagements"); Hackley Nat. Bank v. Jeannot (1906) 143 Mich. 454, 106 N. W. 1121 (wherein it was held that although a married woman could not become a copartner in trade with her husband so as to render her responsible for firm debts, she might bind her interest in such a venture by joining with her husband in a mortgage thereon to secure a firm debt).

So, in Wisconsin, under very similar statutory provisions, it has been held that a married woman cannot enter into a business partnership with her husband, it being said that the principal purpose of the statute, which was to give a wife the power and rights of a feme sole as to her separate property, free from the disposition of the husband, and liability for his debts, manifestly would be subverted by allowing her to enter into a partnership with the husband, wherein he could contract debts for which her separate property would be liable. Fuller & F. Co. v. McHenry (1892) 83 Wis. 573, 18 L.R.A. 512, 53 N. W. 896.

So, in Massachusetts, where the statutes provide that a married woman may bargain, sell, and convey her separate real and personal property, and enter into any contracts with reference to the same as if she were sole, and may sue and be sued as if sole in regard to her trade, business, labor, services, and earnings, the courts have held that a married woman is not empowered thereby to enter into a business partnership with her husband. Lord v. Parker (1861) 3 Allen (Mass.) 127; Lord v. Davison (1861) 3 Allen (Mass.) 131; Edwards v. Stevens (1862) 3 Allen (Mass.) 315; Plumer v. Lord (1863) 7 Allen (Mass.) 481; Bowker v. Bradford (1886) 140 Mass. 521, 5 N. E. 480; Voss v. Sylvester (1909) 203 Mass. 233, 89 N. E. 241. In Lord v. Parker (1861) 3 Allen (Mass.) 127, the court expounded its theories regarding these statutes as follows: "They are in derogation of the common law, and certainly are not to be extended by construction. And we cannot perceive in them any intention to confer upon a married woman the power to make any contract with her husband, or to convey to him any property, or receive any conveyance from him. The power to form a copartnership includes the power to create a community of property, with a joint power of disposal, and a mutual liability for the contracts and acts of all the partners. To enter into a partnership in business with her husband would subject her property to his control in a manner hardly consistent with the separation which it is the purpose of the statute to secure, and might subject her to an indefinite liability for his engagements. The property invested in such an enterprise would cease to be her 'sole and separate' property. The power to arrange the terms of such a contract would open a wide door to fraud in relation to the property of the husband. The property which a married woman may acquire and dispose of by Stat. 1857, includes such as may come to her 'by gift of any person except her husband,' clearly indicating that a gift from him was not to be recognized as creating any title to property in her. If she could contract with her husband, it would seem to follow that she could sue him and be sued by him. How such suits could be conducted, with the incidents in respect to discovery, the right of parties to testify, and to call the opposite party as a witness, without interfering with the rule as to private communications between the husband and wife, it is not easy to perceive; and the consequences which would follow in respect to process for the enforcement of rights fixed by a judgment, arrest, imprisonment, charges of fraud, proceedings in invitum under the insolvent laws, and the like, are not of a character to be readily reconciled with the marital relation. We cannot suppose that an alteration in the law involving such momentous results, and a change so radical, could have been contemplated by the legislature without a much more direct and clear manifestation of its will."

And in Washington, where, by the Statutes of 1881, a married woman is given full right over her property, and all civil disabilities not imposed upon the husband are removed, including the right to manage, lease, sell, etc., her separate property to the same extent and in the same manner that her husband can property belonging to him, and the right to contract and incur liability to the same extent and in the same manner as if she were unmarried, it has been held that a married woman cannot enter into a business partnership with her husband, the theory being that it was not the intent of the legislature to allow husband and wife to become partners. Board of Trade v. Hayden (1892) 4 Wash. 263, 16 L.R.A. 530, 31 Am. St. Rep. 919, 30 Pac. 87, 32 Pac. 224. In this connection the court, among other things, said: "The purpose of the act seems to be to set her free from all influence or dominion of her husband in so far as her property rights are concerned, and leave her to manage, control, and dispose of them as she pleases, whether to her gain or loss. . . . Counsel for respondents contend that, as it is the evident purpose of these provisions to emancipate the wife from the control of the husband, and to enfranchise her with the power, denied to her under the common law, to acquire, hold, enjoy, and dispose of property, and do business on her own account as freely as he can, or even more freely than he can, under the same act, it must follow that she can enter into a contract of partnership in all the ways, and with all the liabilities, that her husband can, and that unless she is permitted and held to be able to enter into the same contracts with him that she can with others, she is deprived of the full measure of liberty which the law intends to confer upon her. . . . In the foreground of the discussion is placed the proposition that the purpose of the statute is to free the wife from the control and influence of her husband, and to relieve her property from his debts and management; but the next following suggestion, that unless she can become his partner she will not be wholly free, if yielded to, will place her and her property within touch of the very dangers which it is sought in the first place to withdraw her from. Her improvident husband, by the most ordinary persuasion, or by his mere declaration, made in her presence, as in the case at bar, could, in spite of her, unless she assumed a hostility which would endanger the continuance of the marriage relation, waste and dissipate her entire estate, and thus the very purpose which, it seems to us, stands out the most clearly in the act in question, i. e., to secure her protection in the management and enjoyment of her estate, would be defeated." But in the subsequent Washington case of Elliott v. Hawley (1904) 34 Wash. 585, 101 Am. St. Rep. 1016, 76 Pac. 93, the court seemingly limited the doctrine of the Seattle Board of Trade Case to instances calling for the protection of the wife's property as against debts incurred by the husband, holding in the instant case that profits earned by the wife's separate property in a partnership enterprise belonged to her, and could not be subjected to the payment of her husband's separate debts.

And under Arkansas statutes entitling a married woman to hold separate property and to transfer same, and to carry on any trade or business, and to hold earnings as separate property, it has been held that a married woman cannot form a business partnership with her husband. Gilkerson-Sloss Commission Co. v. Salinger (1892) 56 Ark. 294, 16 L.R.A. 526, 35 Am. St. Rep. 105, 19 S. W. 747. In this case the ruling was made in view of the legal unity and identity of the husband and wife at common law and the wife's incapacity to sue the husband at law, and court rulings incapacitating the wife to contract with her husband; but a strong dissent was recorded upon the ground that the statutes clothed a married woman as respects her separate estate with all the powers of a single woman, the assigned reason being that "whatever law can be appealed to as authorizing her to form a partnership with any person is without limitation or restrictions as to the person with whom she may form it; and that, as it confers a power without restriction in that respect, it can be held to exclude the husband only by a system of judicial construction which seems to me to be legislation,—and that toward restraining the power vested under an act which is highly remedial, and expressly calls for a liberal construction." And for a conclusion contrary to that reached by the majority of the court in the Gilkerson-Sloss Commercial Co. Case, based upon a construction of the Arkansas statutes by the Mississippi supreme court, see Toof v. Brewer (1888) 96 Miss. 19, 3

So. 571, wherein the court reasoned as follows: "We find it difficult to conceive of any public policy that would prevent the formation of a partnership between the husband and wife in a state in which her individuality is so completely provided for as to her dealings with others. If she may engage in trade, and, as an incident thereto, may enter into partnership with others, why may she not form that relation with her husband? If it be said, as by the supreme court of Massachusetts, that the power is not expressly conferred, the reply is that neither is it as to third persons; and yet it is held that with such third persons she may make such contract.

. . . The power springs as an incident from the recognition by law of her separate existence, and from the capacity given her to engage in trade. A married woman could not at common law contract either with her husband or a third person, for her existence apart from his was not recognized. He and she were by that law one, and he was that one. But by the statute her individuality is preserved. She is one, and the husband is one. Each has the capacity to contract. Both may desire to contract. Partnership is a lawful subject-matter of contract, and there is nothing in the law which, either expressly or by necessary implication, forbids them from contracting. If we reflect upon the extent of the changes wrought by the Constitution and statutes, that they withdraw from the husband the ownership, control, disposition, and enjoyment of the wife's estate; that the same are secured to her as though she were a feme sole; that the right to her personal services and the fruits of her labor are denied to him, and given to her; that her will is freed from the dominion of his as to all property rights; that she may, without his consent, enter into the closest business relations with third persons; and if we add to this the declaration of the statute that the changes it has wrought shall not be restrained by the rule of construction that is ordinarily applied to statutes in derogation of the common law, there seems to be but little force in the suggestion that, by implication, a disability as to business transactions and contracts, springing from the common-law motion of the unity of the husband and wife, still obtains. The construction put upon the words 'sole and separate use,' 'sole and separate property,' etc., in the statute, by the supreme court of Massachusetts, and by the supreme court of

New York in the case of Kaufman v. Schoeffel (1885) 37 Hun (N. Y.) 140, whereby the conclusion is reached that it was intended to preclude any contract between husband and wife, is entirely unsatisfactory. To us it seems manifest that the sole purpose of these words is to preclude the marital rights of the husband as they existed at common law, and not to prevent the husband and wife from associating their effects in trade, either as joint owners or as partners. The property or estate of the wife may well remain her 'sole and separate property,' though it consists of goods, wares, and merchandise, book accounts, notes, or other evidences of debt, owned by a firm of which she and her husband are members. The man who is her partner may also be her husband; but his right to manage and dispose of the firm property—his title and possession—spring from his relation as partner, and not from that as husband."

And under a Federal statute similar to the Arkansas statute the same conclusion reached in the Arkansas cases has been reached in the District of Columbia. Norwood v. Francis (1905) 25 App. D. C. 463, 4 Ann. Cas. 865, construing 29 Stat. at L. 193, chap. 303, enacted June 1st, 1896. In this case the court said: "While the tendency of legislation has been to remove the disabilities of married women, we think, in view of all the authorities, that such statutes removing such disabilities should not be construed so broadly as to permit a partnership between husband and wife, unless the statute expressly gives the husband and wife power to contract with each other generally."

But the rule laid down in the foregoing cases is by no means of universal adoption. For example, in Re Goodman (1873) 5 Biss. 401, 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 380, Fed. Cas. No. 5,540, the court, by way of obiter, expressly criticized those cases which permit a married woman to carry on trade with her separate property, but deny her the right to carry on a copartnership with her husband, saying: "I am not able to see any reason for this distinction. If a married woman may engage in trade with her own means as a feme sole, why may she not become a partner in trade? If she may embark with her own separate means in general trade and merchandise, why say that she shall not have the same advantage that others derive from uniting their capital and skill as partners? If she may contract with her husband for his service as an agent in superintending and carrying on her business, of course she may contract with any other person for the same purpose; and if she may do this, it would seem more rational to say that she may also do what experience has shown is generally more profitable and satisfactory in trade, and that is to make a contract with some person who has either skill or capital or both to share in the profits and losses of her business."

And in New York, under Laws of 1860, chap. 90, § 2, which provided that a married woman may bargain, sell, assign, and transfer her separate personal property, may carry on any trade or business, and perform any labor or business on her sole and separate account, and that her earnings shall be her sole and separate property, it has been held that a husband and wife may enter into a business partnership, and that the wife cannot escape liability for firm debts on the ground of coverture. This rule was expressly laid down in Suau v. Caffè (1890) 122 N. Y. 308, 9 L.R.A. 593, 25 N. E. 488, wherein the court, in discussing the statute and its effect upon partnership contracts of husband and wife, said: "It is urged that this language is not broad enough to authorize married women to engage in business as partners, or jointly with others, or at least with their husbands, but that the statute simply confers power on them to contract by themselves and apart from others. This construction is too narrow and fails to express the evident intent of the legislature, which was not to prescribe the mode in which married women should carry on their business, but to free them from the restraints of the common law, and permit them to engage in business in their own behalf as free from the control of their husbands as though unmarried. Before this statute, the profits of their business belonged to their husbands, and the words 'sole and separate account' were intended to convey the idea that the beneficial interest of any business in which they might engage belonged to them, and not to their husbands. Since the enactment of this statute it has been held that husbands and wives may legally contract with each other in reference to their separate estates. . . . Partners are the agents of each other, and are jointly and severally liable for the debts of the firm, these being two of the essential elements of a contract partnership. It being settled that husbands and wives may be the agents of each other, and that they may bind themselves by joint contracts entered into with third persons, we see no L.R.A.1916D.

warrant in the statute for exempting them from liability to creditors for debts incurred by firms of which they are members;" Graff v. Kinney (1885) 37 Hun (N. Y.) 405, affirming (1885) 15 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 397, 1 How. Pr. N. S. 59 wherein the decision was placed upon the ground that since a husband may be the agent of his wife, he may be her partner in business; Gottschalk v. Pruss (1885) 15 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 402, note; and Hook v. Kenyon (1890) 55 Hun, 598, 9 N. Y. Supp. 40. And support is found for this rule in Zimmerman v. Erhard (1879) 8 Daly (N. Y.) 311, affirmed without consideration of this point in (1880) 83 N. Y. 74, 38 Am. Rep. 396. And see Scott v. Conway (1874) 58 N. Y. 619, wherein it was held that a married woman apparently carrying on a separate business cannot, when sued as such, defend upon the ground that she was in partnership with her husband. Noel v. Kinney (1887) 106 N. Y. 74, 60 Am. Rep. 423, 12 N. E. 351, is to the same effect, but it also expressly held that the conclusion would not be otherwise, even assuming that the husband and wife had no right to enter into a partnership. But several of the earlier New York decisions laid down a contrary rule, the theory generally adopted being that the phrase "on her sole and separate account" referred back and qualified the words "trade, business, labor, or services," and therefore that the common-law disability was not so destroyed as to enable a married woman to engage in a business copartnership undertaking with her husband, but rather that the statute merely permitted her to carry on a business separate from her husband. The following cases announced such to be the law: Boyle's Estate (1864) Tucker (N. Y.) 4, holding that the act of 1860 did not permit a married woman to form a business partnership with her husband, as the statute related to business carried on by a wife, separate from her husband; Noel v. Kinney (1885) 15 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 403; Jacquin v. Jacquin (1885) 15 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 408, note; Kaufman v. Schoeffel (1885) 37 Hun (N. Y.) 140; Lowenstein v. Salinger (1891) 62 Hun, 622, 42 N. Y. S. R. 414, 17 N. Y. Supp. 70; Chambovet v. Cagney (1873) 3 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 474. And see Hendricks v. Isaacs (1889) 117 N. Y. 411, 6 L.R.A. 559, 15 Am. St. Rep. 524, 22 N. E. 1029. However, all of the New York cases which hold that a husband and wife cannot enter into a business partnership under the New York statute of 1860 must be regarded as overruled by the decision in Suau v. Caffé (N. Y.) supra. In fact, that decision expressly overrules Chambovet v. Cagney (1873) 3 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 474, and the case of Hendricks v. Isaacs (N. Y.) supra, was relied upon in the dissenting opinion in the Suau Case, so that that decision was probably taken into consideration by the majority of the court in reaching its conclusion. And so far as New York is concerned, the question was absolutely settled by an amendment enacted in 1892, by the terms of which a married woman may contract with her husband or any other person as though she were unmarried, except with respect to dissolution of marriage and relief from liability for support.

And in Mississippi, where, by the Code of 1880, reincorporated in the Code of 1906, § 2517, all disabilities of married women were removed and they were given equal power of a feme sole to acquire and own property, to convey it, to make all sorts of contracts, and to sue and be sued, it has been held that a husband and wife may enter into a business partnership, and that the separate estate of the wife is liable for partnership debts. Jones v. Jones (1911) 99 Miss. 600, 55 So. 361, citing Toof v. Brewer (1909) 96 Miss. 19, 3 So. 571, and relying upon the arguments therein advanced, and which are quoted supra in the paragraph dealing with the Arkansas statute.

In Alabama, where, by statute, a married woman is entitled to her earnings and to the control and management of her separate estate, and to contract with her husband, she may form a partnership with him as with any other person, so as to render herself liable as a partner. Schlapback v. Long (1889) 90 Ala. 525, 8 So. 113; Belser v. Tuscumbia Bkg. Co. (1894) 105 Ala. 514, 17 So. 40; Compton v. Smith (1897) 120 Ala. 233, 25 So. 300.

And in Ontario, by virtue of a married woman's property act (Ont. Rev. Stat. 1897, chap. 163, § 3, subsec. 2), a married woman can in all respects and for all purposes contract with her husband as if she were a feme sole, and every contract made by her is deemed to be made with respect to and to bind her separate property; wherefore she is entitled to enter into a business partnership with her husband, and when such a partnership is registered, as provided by statute, she cannot set up incapacity to enter into same, so as to relieve her separate estate from liability for partnership obligations. Gibson v. Le Temps Publication Co. (1904) 8 Ont. L. Rep. 709, 5 Ont. Week. Rep. 4.

So, in Ohio, it seems that a husband and wife, by virtue of statutes enacted in 1884 and 1887, which permit them to contract with each other, may enter into a business partnership. See First Nat. Bank v. Rice (1900) 22 Ohio C. C. 183, 12 Ohio C. D. 121, as set out supra. But that, previous to 1884, such a partnership could not be formed, see Payne v. Thompson (1886) 44 Ohio St. 192, 5 N. E. 654. But see Fisher v. McMahon (1878) 4 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 87, wherein it was held that the separate property of a married woman engaged in a copartnership with her husband was liable for goods sold the firm.

And in England, under the married women's property act 1882, § 1 (44 & 46 Vict. chap. 75), which enacted that a "married woman shall be capable of entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of and to the extent of her separate property on any contract, and of suing and being sued either in contract or in tort or otherwise in all respects as if she were a feme sole," a married woman may become a partner either with her husband or with others. 22 Laws of England (Halsbury) 20. And see opinion of Williams, J., in Re Helsby (1893) 63 L. J. Q. B. N. S. (Eng.) 261.

And in Iowa, where the statutes give to married women the right to acquire, own, and dispose of property in the same manner and to the same extent that their husbands may do, and to make contracts and incur liabilities enforceable against them the same as if they were unmarried, it has been expressly held that a husband and wife may enter into a business partnership. Hoaglin v. Henderson (1903) 119 Iowa, 720, 61 L.R.A. 756, 97 Am. St. Rep. 335, 94 N. W. 247.

In Illinois, where the statutes provide that a contract may be made by a wife as if she were unmarried, except that she may not enter into or carry on a business partnership without the consent of her husband, it was held that husband and wife may form a business partnership. Heyman v. Heyman (1904) 210 Ill. 524, 71 N. E. 591, affirming (1903) 110 Ill. App. 87; Dressel v. Lonsdale (1892) 46 Ill. App. 454; Farwell v. Kinkead (1873) 1 Am. L. Rec. 533, Fed. Cas. No. 7,824, as set out in Harris, Contracts of Married Women, p. 466. And see Re Kinkead (1873) 3 Biss. 405, Fed. Cas. No. 7,824, wherein, in holding that a firm composed of husband and wife could be adjudged bankrupt, and that where, by statute, as in Illinois, a married woman is given full control of her property owned by her at the time of her marriage, or which was acquired during coverture from any person other than her husband, she, having such separate property, may enter into a partnership with her husband, the court said that it could "see nothing in the relation of husband and wife which would prevent the wife from being her husband's partner in business if she could be a partner with any other person."

In Indiana, where, by statutes enacted in 1881, all legal disabilities of married women are abolished except with respect to becoming a surety and mortgaging and transferring real property, and they were given the right to trade as if unmarried, the rule is that a married woman may enter into a business partnership with her husband. Anderson v. Citizens' Nat. Bank (1906) 38 Ind. App. 190, 76 N. E. 811. But see Haas v. Shaw (1883) 91 Ind. 384, 46 Am. Rep. 607, wherein it was held that, under the Indiana Statutes of 1879, but which were practically the same as those above referred to, a wife could not legally form a business partnership. This case, however, was held in Conant v. National State Bank (1889) 121 Ind. 323, 22 N. E. 250, set out supra, not to state the law under the statute of 1881, and therefore the Anderson Case must be regarded as laying down the present Indiana law.

And in Missouri, under a statute (Rev. Stat. 1879, § 3296) which provided that any personal property of a married woman shall be and remain her separate property and under her sole control, it has been held that a married woman must necessarily have the power to contract with respect to such property, and that consequently she could enter into a business partnership with her husband. Dunifer v. Jecko (1885) 87 Mo. 282; Macks v. Columbia Theatre Co. (1900) 80 Mo. App. 224. And the decision in Plummer v. Trost (1884) 81 Mo. 425, seems to be to the same effect. See also Niemeyer v. Niemeyer (1897) 70 Mo. App. 609.

In Pennsylvania, under a statute (act of June 8, 1893, P. L. 344) giving married women practically the same rights with respect to trade and contracting as were enjoyed by femes soles, it has been held that a husband and wife may form a commercial partnership. Italo-French Produce Co. v. Thomas (1906) 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 503. And a married woman empowered to contract as a feme sole is a person within the meaning of a statute which requires not less than three persons to unite in forming a limited partnership. Bernard & L. Mfg. Co. v. Packard & Calvin (1894) 12 C. C. A. 123, 28 U. S. App. 84, 64 Fed. 309, construing Pa. act June 2, 1874, and holding that two men and their wives could form such a partnership under the statute.
U.R.A.1916D.

So, in Kentucky, where the statute merely empowers a married woman to trade as a feme sole, it has been held that a feme covert may form a business partnership with her husband. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Alexander (1894) 16 Ky. L. Rep. 306, 27 S. W. 981. In this case it was contended that the statute only enlarges the power of a married woman as to others than the husband, but the court held that at least as to dealings with a stranger the wife could not say that she was interested in the business venture with her husband, and that her property was pledged to the payment of partnership debts, and then escape liability on the plea that the peace and quiet of domestic life rendered it impolitic for husbands and wives to form such business relations.

And in Georgia, where the statutes have gone far toward emancipation of married women (provisions not reported), it has been expressly held that a feme covert may enter into a partnership with her husband. Burney v. Savannah Grocery Co. (1896) 98 Ga. 711, 58 Am. St. Rep. 342, 25 S. E. 915, wherein the court said that "after a careful examination of all our statutes and many decisions we have reached the conclusion that there is no law or public policy in Georgia which forbids such a partnership, provided always it is bona fide and actual, and not merely colorable" and, continuing, quoted from an earlier Georgia case on an analogous question as follows: "There is nothing contrary to public policy in allowing husband and wife to unite their joint credit in procuring the means of supplying joint resources in the shape of a home, or a place of business from which to derive an income for the support of the family. Very often it would contribute to the well-being and prosperity of both and to the permanent good of the family. No doubt such a power can be abused and misapplied, but this is no reason for not recognizing its existence, or why the law should not tolerate it, if, on the whole, its results are beneficial rather than pernicious. At all events, we think the power exists at present under our law." And the following later Georgia cases adopt the same rule without question: Ellis v. Mills (1896) 99 Ga. 490, 27 S. E.

740; Vizard v. Moody (1904) 119 Ga. 918, 47 S. E. 348; Morrison v. Dickey (1905) 122 Ga. 353, 69 L.R.A. 87, 50 S. E. 175; Butler v. Frank (1910) 7 Ga. App. 655, 67 S. E. 884.

And in Oregon it seems that a partnership between a husband and wife is valid. At least, such an inference may be drawn from the case of Snell v. Stone (1892) 23 Or. 327, 31 Pac. 663. But see the early case of Knott v. Knott (1876) 6 Or. 142, wherein it was said that a married woman could not be a member of a partnership.

In Vermont, where, by statute, a married woman may make contracts with any person other than her husband, and bind herself and her separate property as if she were unmarried, except that she cannot become surety for her husband's debts, it has been held that a married woman forming a business partnership with her husband is liable to third persons for partnership obligations, although, as between the husband and wife, the partnership agreement could not be enforced. Lane v. Bishop (1893) 65 Vt. 575, 27 Atl. 499.

By the Spanish and Mexican law husband and wife can enter into a valid business partnership. Fuller v. Ferguson (1864) 26 Cal. 546, and the authorities cited therein.

But where, as in Connecticut, the statutes require certain affirmative acts as a condition precedent to the control by a married woman of her separate property, it has been held that failure to comply with such statutory provisions bars a woman from entering into a partnership with her husband, and therefore that she cannot be held liable as a surviving partner upon his death. Barlow Bros. Co. v. Parsons (1901) 73 Conn. 696, 49 Atl. 205, construing and applying Connecticut Gen. Stat. §§ 2796-2798, in force in 1877.

Liability notwithstanding lack of capacity to form partnership.

But even though a married woman cannot lawfully enter into a partnership, it has been held that coverture cannot be set up to defeat an action against a partnership of which a married woman is a member where the action is brought against the partnership by its firm name, without naming the individual partners, as in such case, at least, in the absence of statute, partnership property only is affected, and no personal liability of the married female partner is raised. Yarbrough v. Bush (1881) 69 Ala. 170; Leinkauff v. Frenkle (1885) 80 Ala. 136; Rabittie v. Orr Bros. (1887) 83 Ala. 185, L.R.A. 1916D

3 So. 420; Le Grand v. Eufaula Nat. Bank (1886) 81 Ala. 123, 60 Am. Rep. 140, 1 So. 460; O'Neil v. Birmingham Brewing Co. (1892) 101 Ala. 383, 13 So. 576; Belser v. Tusculum Bkg. Co. (1894) 105 Ala. 514, 17 So. 40.

And in some other instances where a married woman who could not lawfully enter into a business partnership has attempted to do so, the partnership has been sustained for some purposes. Thus, it has been held that the rule of incapacity is for her benefit, and cannot be set up by others to her disadvantage and their own gain. Silveus v. Porter (1873) 74 Pa. 448 (holding that the husband's creditors could not set up her disability so as to subject partnership earnings to the husband's debts); Carter Merchandise Co. v. Dickson (1893) 39 S. O. 433, 17 S. E. 996 (holding that coverture is a personal privilege of a married woman, and that a debtor cannot resist the action of a partnership, his creditor, by proof that one of the members is a married woman); Horneffer v. Duress (1861) 13 Wis. 604 (holding that one who had converted property of a partnership consisting of a married woman and her husband could not defend an action on the ground that the partnership was illegal, inasmuch as a married woman could not lawfully enter into a partnership. And therefore it is immaterial whether one dealing with a partnership had notice that one of the parties is a married woman. Collins v. Hall (1899) 55 S. C. 336, 33 S. E. 466.

And in Florida, where a married woman's disability of coverture is removed merely to the extent that she may assume an obligation for the purchase price of property, which may be enforced out of her separate estate, while she cannot become charged for obligations or debts created by her copartner, she may, by her own act, and upon her sole credit, purchase merchandise for a mercantile firm in which she has an interest, so as to render her separate property subject to a suit in equity for the purchase price of such goods. NADEL v. WEBER BROS. SHOE Co. ante, 1230.

And that in Tennessee, where neither the property of a married woman embarked in a partnership nor her other separate property is liable for partnership obligations unless she has entered into an express contract that such interest or property shall be bound for the particular debt with which it is sought to be charged, such property is liable if she made such an express contract, see Theus v. Dugger (1893) 93 Tenn. 41, 23 S. W. 135.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

SIoux CITY FOUNDRY & MANUFACTURING COMPANY

v.

W. G. MERTEN et al.

H. C. McNEIL et al., Cross Petitioners, Appts.

(— Iowa, —, 156 N. W. 367.)

Mechanics' Liens — application of payment — release of other lien.

1 A materialman cannot, by applying money paid him by a building contractor, who had received it on account of a particular job, upon accounts against the contractor, arising out of other jobs, retain a lien against the building upon account of which the money was paid, although he acts in ignorance of the source of the money, and by his application of payment releases his lien on the property upon account of which the application is made.

For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, VI. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Payment — contractor to materialman — application.

2. A contractor made a party to a suit to foreclose a lien in favor of a materialman upon the building of the owner cannot defeat recovery against himself because he had paid over to the materialman money received from the owner on account of the building, without direction as to its application, and the latter had, contrary to the rights of the building owner, applied it to claims against the contractor, arising on account of other buildings which he was constructing.

For other cases, see Payment, IV. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 18, 1916.)

APPEAL by cross petitioners McNeil from a judgment of the District Court for Woodbury County in their favor for less than the amount of their claim, in a suit to foreclose a mechanics' lien. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Marks & Marks, for appellants:

The general rule as to application of payments governs payments made to materialmen by contractors in cases arising under the foreclosure of mechanics' liens.

Chicago Lumber Co. v. Woods, 53 Iowa,

Note. — As to application of payments made by contractor to subcontractor or materialmen, as between jobs of different owners, see annotation following this case, post, 1254.

L.R.A.1916D.

554, 5 N. W. 715; Jefferson v. Church of St. Matthew, 41 Minn. 392, 43 N. W. 75; Waterman v. Younger, 49 Mo. 413; Smith v. Wilcox, 44 Or. 323, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 710; First Presby. Church v. Santy, 52 Kan. 462, 34 Pac. 974; Wilson-Reheis-Rolfes Lumber Co. v. Ware, 158 Mo. App. 179, 138 S. W. 690; Dey v. Anderson, 39 N. J. L. 199; Christnot v. Montana Gold & S. Min. Co. 1 Mont. 44; Thacker v. Bullock Lumber Co. 140 Ky. 463, 131 S. W. 272; Heim v. Elliott, 66 Wash. 361, 119 Pac. 826; Sheppard v. Steele, 43 N. Y. 60, 3 Am. Rep. 660; W. H. Pipkorn Co. v. Evangelical Lutheran St. Jacobi Soc. 144 Wis. 501, 129 N. W. 517; Green Bay Lumber Co. v. Thomas, 106 Iowa, 425, 76 N. W. 749.

The $300 payment was applied by McNeil & Son exactly as Merten directed, and as McNeil & Son intended to make it, and the credit could not thereafter be changed except by their mutual action, and then only when the rights of third persons would not be prejudiced.

Chicago Lumber Co. v. Woods, 53 Iowa, 554, 5 N. W. 715; Green Bay Lumber Co. v. Thomas, 106 Iowa, 425, 76 N. W. 749; Schallert-Ganahl Lumber Co. v. Neal, 91 Cal. 362, 27 Pac. 744; Orr v. Nagle, 87 Hun, 12, 33 N. Y. Supp. 879; Sheppard v. Steele, 43 N. Y. 60, 3 Am. Rep. 660; City Coal & Wood Co. v. New Britain Institute, 77 Conn. 715, 59 Atl. 33.

In the absence of direction by Merten, McNeil was at liberty to apply the payment as he saw fit, and having applied it at the time, he could not afterward be required to change the application.

Hanson v. Manley, 72 Iowa, 50, 33 N. W. 357; Hansen v. Rounsavell, 74 Ill. 241; Union Trust Co. v. Casserly, 127 Mich. 183, 86 N. W. 546; Smith v. Wilcox, 44 Or. 323, 74 Pac. 710, rehearing denied in 44 Or. 330, 75 Pac. 710; Ridge v. Mercantile Loan & T. Co. 56 Mo. App. 155; Campbell Glass & Paint Co. v. Davis-Page Planing Mill Co. 130 Mo. App. 474, 110 S. W. 24; Brigham v. Dewald, 7 Ind. App. 115, 34 N. E. 499; Jefferson v. Church of St. Matthew, 41 Minn. 392, 43 N. W. 75; Waterman v. Younger, 49 Mo. 413; Thacker v. Bullock Lumber Co. 140 Ky. 463, 131 S. W. 272; W. H. Pipkorn Co. v. Evangelical Lutheran St. Jacobi Soc. 144 Wis. 501, 129 N. W. 517.

When the defendants, Stone & Day, made the payments on estimates to Merten, without seeing to the manner in which he used the money, and the sums so paid were deposited in his general bank account, they became his money, to use as he found convenient; and, having lost their identity, could not be traced as separate funds.

Union Trust Co. v. Casserly, 127 Mich. 183, 86 N. W. 546; Sheppard v. Steele, 43 N. Y. 60, 3 Am. Rep. 660; Jefferson v. Church of St. Matthew, 41 Minn. 392, 43 N. W. 75; Thacker v. Bullock Lumber Co. 140 Ky. 463, 131 S. W. 272.

Messrs. Sargent, Strong, & Struble, for appellees:

The action of the trial court, in entering judgment giving to the owner of the building in controversy and the surety on the contractor's bond credit for the payment of $300, paid by the owners to the contractor, and by the contractor paid to the materialmen, the plaintiffs herein, instead of applying the same on other debts of the contractor, for which neither the owner of the property nor the surety was liable, is sustained by:

Hughes & Co. v. Flint, 61 Wash. 460, 112 Pac. 633; Crane Co. v. Pacific Heat & P. Co. 36 Wash. 95, 78 Pac. 460; Williams v. Willingham-Tift Lumber Co. 5 Ga. App. 533, 63 S. E. 584; Crane Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Keck, 35 Neb. 683, 53 N. W. 606; Lee v. Storz Brewing Co. 75 Neb. 212, 106 N. W. 220; Cain v. Vogt, 138 Iowa, 631, 128 Am. St. Rep. 216, 116 N. W. 786; First Nat. Bank v. Hollinsworth, 78 Iowa, 575, 6 L.R.A. 92, 43 N. W. 536; Central Planing Mill & Lumber Co. v. Betz, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 252, 92 S. W. 591; Young v. Swan, 100 Iowa, 323, 69 N. W. 566.

Mr. E. A. Burgess also for appellees.

Salinger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

I. Day & Stone employed one Merten to construct for them a building in Sioux City known as the Davidson building. They paid him in the course of construction a sum of money out of which he paid $300 to the appellant McNeil. Merten was indebted to McNeil for various materials used by Merten in his work as contractor, including material for the Davidson job. He gave no direction as to the application of the $300, and McNeil applied this payment to accounts for material other than that used in the Davidson building. The trial court, in effect, applied this $300 to diminishing the account owed for the Davidson job, and the materialman appeals.

The appellant invokes the general rule which governs the application of payments between debtor and creditor. He urges that under that rule, since the contractor who did the paying owed appellant on several accounts, and gave no direction on which of these accounts the payment should be applied, appellant had the right to apply on any account owing by the contractor, and not to apply on the account owing for material furnished for the building of these owners; and that, having so applied, the owners cannot compel a change in application by crediting the account for material furnished for the building of these owners. Appellant adds that it did not know where Merten got the money that he paid; that he and it acted in good faith; that it may suffer injury if the application made be now disturbed, because it "has probably lost its lien right" as to one of the accounts on which part of the $300 was applied; that there is an additional estoppel because the owners knew appellant was furnishing material for which he was not being paid, and that subsequent payments were made to the contractor despite such knowledge. And it insists that, in a loose sense, at least, the equitable doctrine applies which prevents one from impressing funds with a trust unless the trust fund has been kept intact, can be traced, and has not been mingled beyond the power to trace.

Appellee responds:

(1) That while this rule does govern payment from debtor to creditor, it may well govern there because, so long as the payor remains silent, he has nothing to complain of when one debt of his, instead of another, is extinguished by payments made; that, after all, every dollar paid none the less relieves him of the debt he owes, even though it be one debt rather than another; but that the rule does not apply where the money of A, who owes a debt, is by the creditor applied to extinguish the debt of B. In other words, that the contractor and the materialman between them cannot by agreement or by failure to give direction effectuate that one who has furnished money for material shall still owe for the material, because his money was used to relieve from debt another who had not furnished the money.

(2) That appellant was put to inquiry as to where the money paid came from, and had notice where in justice it should be applied, because, say they: (a) When appellant received from the contractor the $300 in the form of a check, it knew the contractor was engaged in the construction of their building, and that estimates and payments were being made, to apply on the construction of said building. And the contractor never got material without advising appellant for what job it was. (b) While the ledger account with the contractor did not differentiate between jobs, it bore references that enabled the segregation of the jobs by going to the original itemized journal entries. (c) Appellant knew the owners were having constructed what was styled the Davidson building, and that this was being done when it got the payment in controversy. The books designated jobs by a designating letter or word, and the Davidson job was designated by "D," and the check that made said payment had the notation "No. D 54." (d) Appellant knew that one of the owners was a large stockholder and the other the cashier of the bank upon which the check was drawn, and that both owners did all their business with that bank. (e) Appellant McNeil testifies he knew that, customarily, contractors were paid on estimates, and supposes he knew that course was being followed as to the Davidson building; that at the time the check was paid he supposed the contractor was getting money at times on the contract for that building, was getting payment on estimates on that building, though it did not know it as a fact.

(3) That even if it be true that appellant had no knowledge that the money came from the owners, there is no estoppel to show that such is the fact; that it is not the question whether A knew he was using the money of B to satisfy his own claims against C, but whether, in fact, the money of A was so used.

(4) That there is no mingling of money; that it is proven the money received from the owners is the money paid over by the contractor; that this is no mingling at all within the equitable rule; that, if it be, it is not a mingling of funds with others, but mingling the things that were paid for with the money; and that in any view the appellant cannot urge the doctrine of mingling, nor yet an estoppel, upon mingling done by himself; nor injury by loss of lien rights caused by his own voluntary act. In other words, that the owner is not to suffer because the materialman, without the knowledge and consent of the owner, used the money of the owner to pay debts owing appellant from others; nor because appellant, of his own volition, without the knowledge and consent of the owner, deprived himself of a lien which secured the accounts of others.

This defines the dispute.

II. It will clear the controversy if we dispose of citations that are irrelevant, or are not controlling. Some we deal with fully; others are disposed of in a summary.

In Hughes Co. v. Flint, 61 Wash. 460, 112 Pac. 633, the materialman is defeated on the ground that he had notice that he was applying the money of the owner on accounts for material bought by the contractor for others than Flint, and this, because the materialman kept the contracts separate on his books, and the Flint checks contained the indorsement "on contract." Also, because a conflict was resolved in favor of a direction to apply on the Flint job.

On its face, Central Planing Mill & Lumber Co. v. Betz, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 252, 92 S. W. 591, sustains what was done by the trial court, here. But in a later case, Thacker v. Bullock Lumber Co. 140 Ky. 463, 131 S. W. 272, it is said that the evidence in Betz's Case showed that the plaintiff was notified that the money paid it by the contractors came from him, and that it was requested to apply the money to that account; that the chancellor's judgment was based on this evidence; and that the case was affirmed on the ground that on these facts there was no reason for disturbing his conclusion.

III. There are cases, in effect, that when the money paid is that of the contractor, the materialman, having made application to some debt of the contractor, cannot be compelled by others to change the application for their benefit. We do not think them controlling. One of them is Brigham v. Dewald, 7 Ind. App. 115, 34 N. E. at 499, which is, in effect, that, if money is paid on contract and paid over to, and, in the absence of direction, is applied by, a materialman on the contractor's general account, this money is in such sense the property of the contractor as that the sum paid will not avail the owner as a credit on material bought of the same materialman, later.

The conflict raised by cases like Hanson v. Manley, 72 Iowa, at 50, 33 N. W. 357, and Hansen v. Rounsavell, 74 Ill. at 241, is one in seeming, only. These latter hold, merely, that if one be surety on a debt, and the debtor makes a payment by foreclosure had upon his own property, or pays out of his own funds, but the payment is not large enough to pay what he owes, secured and unsecured, he and his creditor may work an application, first, upon what is unsecured. In other words, one who becomes surety takes the risk that honest payment of unsecured debts may leave a deficiency which the surety must make good.

IV. The following cases have more or less tendency to sustain the decree:

In Crane Co. v. Pacific Heat & P. Co. 36 Wash. 95, 78 Pac. 460, it is conceded that as to moneys which are the absolute property of a debtor, his surety cannot control application. Yet it is held that where a contractor is paid for plumbing, and the proceeds are by his materialman applied on accounts for jobs on which the surety is not liable, the surety, on suits for balance due on the job secured by it, may compel the reapplication to the account for which it is alone liable. The decision is put on the ground that the contract of the surety company is not to secure old claims then due and unsecured, or any other claim than the one which was the subject of the contract with the owner. It is further said that the general rule, broadly stated, applies to cases only where the principal makes the payment from funds which are his own, and free from any equity in favor of the surety to have the money applied in payment of the debt for which he is liable.

This seems to be squarely sustained in Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Herber, 68 Minn. 420, 71 N. W. 624, which holds, additionally, that, where the specific money paid to the creditor and applied on the debt of the principal for which the surety is not bound is the very money for the collection and payment of which he is surety, he is not bound by such application, and he is equitably entitled to have the money applied to the payment of the debt for which he is liable, unless the creditor shows a superior equity to have the application as made stand. This, we think, is not materially affected by the construction given by the Heim's Case, 66 Wash. 361, 119 Pac. 826, that the Herber Case holds an obligee in a bond, as against a surety, cannot apply payments made by the principal to a debt which the principal owed before the bond was given. In our opinion, this is in harmony with Ida County Sav. Bank v. Seidensticker, 128 Iowa, at 64, 65, 111 Am. St. Rep. 189, 102 N. W. 821, 5 Ann. Cas. 945, that where, during the period of the service of a cashier, for which the surety on his bond is liable, the cashier becomes entitled to credits sufficient to wipe out such liability, it should be applied to that liability rather than to indebtedness due the bank from the cashier subsequent to the time when the liability on the bond terminated.

Stewart v. Woodward, 50 Vt. 78, 28 Am. Rep. 488, decides that where a general agent of some tailors, who owed a debt to defendant, delivered him a suit of clothes belonging to them, on account of the debt, and defendant supposed the agent had authority to do this, but knew that the goods belonged to the tailors, they having charged the goods to defendant, it was held they were entitled to recover therefor in an action of book account. It is further said that the defendant's good faith avails him nothing; it does not cure the bad faith of the agent, where plaintiffs had not misled the defendant. And Wiesenfeld v. Byrd, 17 S. C. 106, and Thompson v. Brown, L.R.A.1916D.

Moody & M. 40, 31 Revised Rep. 710, hold that though a surviving partner pays firm funds to one who is his creditor and a creditor of the firm, without directing application, application to the firm debt will be compelled.

V. The following cases strongly support appellees: In Young v. Swan, 100 Iowa, at 326, 327, 69 N. W. 566, citing Stewart v. Woodward, supra, and Gleaton v. Tyler, 43 S. C. 474, 21 S. E. 333, we said: "The most that can be claimed for appellants is that the wife furnished the husband with money with which to purchase the material for the house; that he purchased it of plaintiffs, paid them the money which she had given him, but did not direct that it be applied upon his particular account; and that plaintiffs applied it on general account. . . . Can he now, in an action to establish and foreclose a mechanics' lien against the property of the wife, insist that these payments of the wife's money shall be applied upon the husband's general account, to the detriment of the wife? We think not. The husband could not directly appropriate this money to his own use against the consent of the wife, and it surely is not the province of a court of equity to misappropriate it."

Crane Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Keck, 35 Neb. 683, 53 N. W. 606, recognizes the general rule as to application. "Yet," says the syllabus prepared by the court, "there is an exception to this rule, as where the money was received by the debtor from a third party whose property would be liable for the debt in case the money was not applied upon the third party's liability." The case is squarely followed on facts quite like those at bar, in Lee v. Storz Brewing Co. 75 Neb. 212, 106 N. W. 220.

In Williams v. Willingham Tift Lumber Co. 5 Ga. App. 533, 63 S. E. 584, the contractor paid the materialman funds received from an owner, one Reed. He paid by his own check without informing, at the time of payment, of the source of the money. When later he asked application to Reed's material account, this was refused, with a statement that the money had already been applied to bills of his on other contracts. A lien was denied, and it is said that this is not in conflict with the general rule of the right by the creditor to apply, in the absence of directions; that that is a rule between the creditor and the debtor; but that, where the rights of third persons are involved, the law will make the credit according to principles of justice and equity,—will not permit the money of one man to be used in the payment of the debt of another man, or declare a lien on the property of the man who has paid in full for all the material furnished to improve his property, and thus relieve from a lien the property of a man who still owes for the material that was used to improve his property.

VI. The citations thought to give support to the appellant come to this:

1. The general rule governing applications between debtor and creditor apply to open accounts only. First Nat. Bank v. Hollinsworth, 78 Iowa, 576, 577, 6 L.R.A. 92, 43 N. W. 536; Dey v. Anderson, 39 N. J. L. at 205.

2. Where a partnership owed a balance due at the time when one partner died, and such balance was carried forward in the account of the reorganized firm, payments later made by it should be applied to the earliest items of what made said balance due, rather than to later items, where to do the last would result in holding the dead partner's estate for said balance due; the holding being put on the ground that the whole account was mutually treated as a running one. De Vaynes v. Noble, 1 Meriv. 528.

3. If a partnership allows a partner to keep an account in his own name with one who is ignorant of the existence of the partnership, it cannot complain that money paid his creditor by the partner was applied to the items in that individual account, in the order of priority. Allen v. Brown, 39 Iowa, at 332; Hanson's Case, 72 Iowa, 52, 33 N. W. 357.

4. A receipt fraudulently obtained from the materialman will not avail the owner to whom said receipt is exhibited, because he thereupon pays money to the contractor, in the absence of a showing that the owner does not owe the contractor enough to pay the materialman. Schallert-Ganahl Lumber Co. v. Neal, 91 Cal. 362, 27 Pac. 743.

5. Where the contractor pays money received from two owners upon an account for material furnished for their buildings, and the payment is equitably apportioned between the buildings, the fact that it is not shown by the record exactly how the payment was apportioned will not defeat the lien for a balance claimed to be due, where the contractor did not direct what sums should be applied on each building. Smith v. Wilcox, 44 Or. 323, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 710.

6. The rule will be applied between debtor and creditor where there are no equitable considerations.

7. A contractor and one subcontractor cannot change an application once made as intended, and thus prejudice the rights of another subcontractor in a fund reserved to pay all. Green Bay Lumber Co. v. Thomas, 106 Iowa, 424, 76 N. W. 749. L.R.A.1916D

8. The rule will be applied if it does not appear what is the source of the money that was paid over.

9. It will be applied where it is not shown the funds were furnished by the owner. Union Trust Co. v. Casserly, 127 Mich. 183, 86 N. W. 546; Thacker v. Bullock Lumber Co. 140 Ky. 463, 131 S. W. 272; Waterman v. Younger, 49 Mo. 413; W. H. Pipkorn Co. v. Evangelical Lutheran St. Jacobi Soc. 144 Wis. 501, 129 N. W. 517.

10. Where it does not appear who furnished the money, and a lien is satisfied, it will not be revived by changing the application which satisfied the lien, without the consent of the one against whom such lien existed before the satisfaction. Chicago Lumber Co. v. Woods, 53 Iowa, 552, 5 N. W. 715.

11. One who contributed nothing to the money paid over is bound by any application which binds the payer. Heim v. Elliott, 66 Wash. 361, 119 Pac. 826.

12. Any money paid to the contractor becomes his own property, and therefore any application binding on him is binding on those who paid him the money. Sheppard v. Steele, 43 N. Y. 60, 3 Am. Rep. 660.

13. The rule will be applied unless the creditor knows he is receiving the money of a third person, or is put on inquiry as to whether this be not so.

14. It will be applied unless it appears that the money paid over can be traced through the debtor to the creditor. Thacker v. Bullock Lumber Co. 140 Ky. 463, 131 S. W. 272.

15. It will not be applied where the materialman had notice that he was applying money received by the payer for one account to the extinguishment of another account.

16. The owner is bound to see to it that application is made to his account, or give notice that it should be so made. Jefferson v. Church of St. Matthew, 41 Minn. 392, 43 N. W. 74.

2.

There is and can be no serious claim that the $300 paid by the contractor to McNeil was not money paid to Merten by the owners, and we are fully persuaded that this was the source of that $300 payment. All that is relevant in these sixteen ultimate propositions is that (1) unless the owner gives notice that money paid by him to the contractor must be applied only to material furnished the owner, (2) or unless the materialman knows that the money he is receiving was paid the contractor to be so applied, and (3) unless the money paid by the owner can be "traced," then any money paid by the owner to the contractor is to be treated, not as in any sense a trust fund to be applied for the benefit of the owner, but as a general payment to the contractor by means of which what is paid to him becomes absolutely his own property, freed from any duty as to its application. So, what we have to determine is whether we should accede to these, rather than to adopt the holdings in Young v. Swan, Crane Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Keck, Lee v. Storz Brewing Co. and Williams v. Willingham-Tift Lumber Co. supra.

VII. Concretely, this is the situation: The owners of a building being constructed by a principal contractor made him a large payment on estimates. Part of this he paid over to a materialman who had unpaid accounts against the contractor for material furnished the building of the one who had furnished this money and also material that had gone into other jobs. The contractor being silent when he paid, the materialman applied what was paid upon an account for material furnished the contractor for the building of a stranger, and thus, "probably," worked a discharge of his lien against this third person. He asks us to find estoppels and to apply certain equitable rules as to mingling of funds, to the end that he may not be disturbed as to what he did without the consent of these owners. That is to say, he contends equity requires, rather than that he shall lose the lien which he released by his own voluntary act, that we shall sustain his use of the money which the owners furnished, and thus save him from the probable loss of a lien which once secured his claims against a third person. In ultimate effect, it is proposed that we sanction that the money paid by these owners shall leave their own account for material unpaid, and pay the debt of a third person, because of acts done by the appellant without the knowledge and consent of the one whose money was thus used. There would not be very much substantial "equity" accomplished by our doing this. When it is all said, the vital facts are that Day & Stone paid the contractor money, of course, with the mutual understanding that this would discharge in part what they were owing for labor and materials put into their building; that the contractor paid part of this money to McNeil; that McNeil was at perfect liberty to apply the payment on the Day & Stone job; that such application would have cost appellant nothing which the law recognizes; that so to apply would have worked, merely, a diminution of the Day & Stone account by $300, and an augmentation of the funds of the appellant in $300; that, instead of pursuing this course, appellant, on its own motion, credited the $300 on the material account.

L.R.A.1916D.

of strangers; and that the essential result of doing what appellant asks will be that it will have $300 of Day & Stone's money, without compensation to them other than that the money furnished by them has cut down the indebtedness of some other person. We are unable to agree that any sound rule of estoppel, or on mingling of funds, requires the working out of such a result. All equity is opposed to what appellant claims. That must be, indeed, a strained use of the equitable jurisdiction which will permit one, without the knowledge or consent of another, to appropriate the money of that other to the payment of the debt of a third person.

We are of opinion that no question of notice is involved; that no equitable doctrine on the mingling of funds has any bearing; that we need not go into whether or not appellant knew or should have known where this money which it so used came from; that the only question is (and appellee is not estopped as to it) whether its money was thus appropriated. What rule of law or equity is violated if we now hold that appellant must give Day & Stone credit for $300 because it has received that much of their money? To compel this will result merely in letting appellant keep $300 of their money, and giving them credit for that amount. What difference does it make that appellant was not informed where this money came from until after it had made the application? Ordinarily, and freed from some such rule as governs the transfer of negotiable paper to one who takes it without notice and for value, one may always assert title to his money or property against one who has misappropriated it. The estoppel in this case comes to this: Appellant says: "Money of another was paid me, but I 'mingled' it by applying it to a debt that others owed me; and I may have lost some of my rights by doing this. Therefore you must not assert that this money is yours and that you should have credit for it on the debt you owe me. I have the right to use your money to pay off what someone else owed me, unless you advise me before I do so that you make some claim in this money."

In fewer words, an estoppel is built up by a prejudice which was wholly caused by the act of the one urging the estoppel. The claim is not persuasive.

We find nothing in the authorities cited, and do not believe, that the equitable doctrine of mingling funds has any application here. If there was any "mingling," it consists of the applying, by the contractor and the materialman, of the money of A upon debts owing by B and C. Equity suggests no difference between what was then done and taking the money of one's principal and depositing it to the credit of the agent, mixed with his own, and claiming for this that the bank owes the principal nothing, and may use all that was deposited to pay itself a debt due from the agent; and such claims have always been held to be untenable.

In Van Alen v. American Nat. Bank, 52 N. Y. 7, it is held that, if one deposit a sum belonging to another with one belonging to himself, the bank would owe the first sum to that other, though the particular bills that were his cannot be identified. And this doctrine is applied in Crane v. Keck, supra, to save the owner's money applied by the materialman to the debt of another. The two held that, when money belonging to two is paid over, the obligation to one is not lessened because there is as well one to the other; that in equity the ostensible obligation yields to the actual.

The same principle was affirmed in Whitley v. Foy, 59 N. C. 34, 78 Am. Dec. 236. So also of Frith v. Carliland, 2 Hem. & M. 417, 34 L. J. Ch. N. S. 301, 11 Jur. N. S. 238, 12 L. T. N. S. 175, 13 Week. Rep. 493, where a person received from the plaintiff certain acceptances to take up paper owing to the plaintiff, and got them cashed and ran away, after mingling the money with his own, and making various changes and transformations. It was decided that plaintiff was entitled to the money in preference to creditors; Vice Chancellor Wood saying that "the court attributes the ownership of the trust property to the cestui que trust so long as it can be traced," and that said mingling and changing had no effect. And see Merrill v. Bank of Norfolk, 19 Pick. 32.

In the case of Overseers of Poor v. Bank of Virginia, 2 Gratt. 544, 44 Am. Dec. 399, an attorney deposited a check for the amount of a judgment in favor of his clients to his own credit in a bank where he had a small amount of other money to his credit, and died. On the day of his death a note fell due belonging to the bank which it claimed to set off, but the court held that the clients were entitled to the money.

In Clark County v. Springfield, 36 Ohio St. 643, the county treasurer embezzled money from a mass which was mixed funds and belonged to the county and other corporations of which the county treasurer was also treasurer. On a settlement with the county board, he was unable to pay these other corporations; but there was sufficient to satisfy the amount owing to the county, which the county board directed to be L.R.A.1916D.

placed to the credit of the county and appropriated to county purposes. It was held the county was liable in equity to account to the other corporations for their proportionate share of the funds so appropriated, and this, with a statement that, though the amount appropriated by the county was the exact sum due it, "neither mingling the money, the embezzlement, nor the appropriation by the county, had the effect of destroying the interest" of the others "in the sum which was in the treasury at the time of the settlement;" and this rule would apply to individuals, under such circumstances as well as to special corporations.

Dey v. Anderson, 39 N. J. L. 205, seems in a sense to involve the converse of the controversy here. It seems to be a holding that if the materialman wants to protect himself against having payments applied where he is already well enough secured, and thus lose payments of claims not so well secured, he should not employ running accounts, but treat each building account as a separate debt; and that if he does maintain a running account only, and the builder makes him a payment without direction, it must be applied on the running account items according to seniority, even though this results in payments upon claims which are well secured, to the exclusion of others not thus fortified. And its citations (Beckel v. Petticrew, 6 Ohio St. 247, and Waterman v. Younger, 49 Mo. 413), more clearly than its text, indicate that this is what it decides.

Williams v. Willingham-Tift Lumber Co. 5 Ga. App. 533, 63 S. E. at 585, sums it up well. It holds that the evidence did not warrant the directed verdict, because it shows plaintiff had been paid for all the material it furnished the contractor to be used in the improvement of the property of Reed. And it is added that, if the materialman neglects to give the proper credit, the fault was not the owners', and the loss should not fall upon them; that when the materialman has furnished at the same time material to one contractor for the improvement of the property belonging to different persons, and has full knowledge of the separate contracts, and money is paid to the materialman by the contractor from time to time on account of the material so furnished, it is incumbent upon the materialman to keep separate accounts, and to find out from the contractor on what contract the money is paid, and to what account it should be applied; that if he does not do so, but applies the money as a credit on a general account against the contractor, he thereby waives his right to a lien on the owner's property, and must look alone to the contractor; that the lien claimant is presumed to keep his lien in mind, and if he is to seek its enforcement, the law requires him to preserve its unity as a claim against the particular property; that if he does not, but so mingles it with other claims as to necessitate a process of separation by the courts, it may well be held that he has waived his lien; that with the state of accounts between the contractor and the materialman relating to materials furnished for other buildings than his own the owner has nothing to do; and that he has the right to have all his money paid to the materialman applied for his benefit, and not appropriated by the materialman to the payment of a general account against the contractor, which includes accounts for material furnished to the contractor for other persons.

We hold the money of the owners was misappropriated, and that equity will correct this against the one who did the misappropriating, even if he did not know at the time that he was misappropriating, when no controlling equity stands in the way of the correction. We hold further that none such intervenes where the materialman loses, if at all, because he volunteered to use the money of one to pay the debt of another; while, on the other hand, the owners will, through an act of the materialman, be compelled to pay their debt to him twice; when on one side stands one who received $300, and credited some debtor of his in that amount, and, on the other, one who has paid $300 at a time when he owed it, and is now to pay it again, because the money was used to credit another debtor.

Division II.

Appellant urges in argument that, even if a deduction of $300 from his claim against the owner be upheld, he should have had judgment against the principal contractor for the full claim, because that contractor made default. Appellees answer that a statement in abstract so limits the issues here, as that we should not consider this point. This avoidance seems to rest upon misunderstanding of said statement. While it is said that the controversy here is limited to whether the $300 credit was proper, this is at the same time amplified to cover whether deducting same from either "the account" or from "the mechanics' lien so established" was proper. Now, the principal contractor owed the "account." He made default and asked no deduction—and he could not. He did get credit on something which he owed appellant. No $300 of his was used to lessen the debt of another. The judgment against him should be for what is prayed, and the decree below is modified to that extent.

Modified and affirmed.

Evans, Ch. J., and Ladd and Gaynor, JJ., concurring.

Annotation—Mechanics' lien: application of payments made by contractor to subcontractor or materialmen as between jobs of different owners.

I. Introduction, 1254.

II. Application directed by contractor, 1255.

III. Absence of application by contractor:

a. Source of fund not appearing, 1256.

b. Source of fund appearing:

1. Rule that creditor may apply as desired, 1257.

2. Rule that payment must be applied to account of owner making payment, 1258.

3. Effect of notice to subcontractor or materialman of source, 1259.

4. Payment to a materialman who has not at the time furnished material for building of owner making payment, 1260.

I. Introduction.

The present note is confined to the application of payments as bearing upon the right of a subcontractor or materialman to a lien. In accord with this limitation actions on bonds given by contractors to secure the payment of the claims of materialmen and subcontractors have in general been excluded. As indicated in the title, the note is also confined to the application of such payments as between the jobs of different owners; and does not, in general, include cases involving the application of payments as between different jobs of the same owner; or as between lienable and nonlienable items.

In case of a payment by a contractor to a subcontractor or materialman, the application thereof affects not alone the parties to the transaction. Statutes give a subcontractor and materialman a lien upon a building for which they have furnished material or done work, upon compliance with certain conditions. Assuming that the statutory conditions have been complied with, as is assumed in this note, the application of payments made by the contractor to the subcontractor or materialman has the effect to discharge the right to a lien as against the owner thus credited with the payments.

Speaking generally, two situations arise in this connection. There is first a case in which nothing appears as to the source of the fund with which the contractor makes payments. Second, there is the case in which the source of the fund does appear. These situations will be discussed in the order stated. Before, however, discussing these questions, the cases in which the contractor directed an application of the payment at the time of making it will be discussed.

<sup>1</sup> The petition for a mechanics' lien by a materialman who had been paid money by the contractors which they had received from the owner of the house, more than sufficient to pay for all the material that went into the house, but which was applied by the materialman to other accounts of the contractors, was denied in Central Planing Mill & Lumber Co. v. Betz (1906) 29 Ky. L. Rep. 252, 92 S. W. 591, by the chancellor, and this judgment was not disturbed upon appeal. There was a conflict in the evidence as to whether the materialman was notified that the money paid in by the contractors came from the owner, and whether they requested him to apply the money to the best account, and this was not determined in the case. This case is stated in Thacker v. Bullock Lumber Co. (1910) 140 Ky. 463, 131 S. W. 271, to have turned upon the facts, and there was an application of the payments.

In Brink v. Walter (1911) 145 Ky. 17, 139 S. W. 1064, the contractor, before he had received any money from the owner of the building on which a lien was sought, gave the materialman a check, directing him to apply a part of it on a prior account and the balance on the account of the building on which the lien was sought. The application in accord with this direction was sustained, but there seems to have been little question about it.

In Petersen v. Shain (1893) 4 Cal. Unrep. 122, 33 Pac. 1086, a second subcontractor received from the original contractor checks drawn by him, payable to the first subcontractor, and indorsed by the payee; the second subcontractor applied the money to the payment of a prior debt due him from the first subcontractor, according to an agreement between them. It is stated that the checks were delivered to the second subcontractor by the original contractor to enable him to obtain payment from the first subcontractor for the materials furnished in the particular building in question; that, as the original contractor was bound to clear the building of all liens for labor and materials, he had a right, with the consent of the first subcontractor, to pay the second subcontractor for the materials furnished, and to direct the application of the payment to that purpose. The lower court found that the second subcontractor was fully paid by the checks, and a judgment founded thereon was sustained.

II. Application directed by contractor.

The contractor may make an application at the time of making the payment, and his direction governs.<sup>1</sup> A direction to apply a payment to the general account of the contractor governs even in case of payment by indorsing to the materialman a check, received by the contractor from the owner, the materialman having knowledge that the money was received by the contractor on account of this contract.<sup>2</sup>

The direction need not be express.<sup>3</sup> Where the contractor intends to apply money received by him from an owner for whom he is constructing a building, upon the account of the material going into the building, and the materialman knows that the contractor so intends, it must be so applied by the materialman. The account in question is discharged to the extent of the payment, and the materialman cannot, by attempting to apply it on another account, retain his lien.<sup>4</sup>

That the direction as to application cannot be made after the creditor has applied the payment and a lien is sought, see St. Louis Sash & Door Works v. Tonkins, infra, note 16.

<sup>2</sup> In Jefferson v. Church of St. Matthew (1889) 41 Minn. 392, 43 N. W. 74, the directions by the contractor to the materialmen to apply it on their account were held to authorize the application to the oldest items of the account. At the time of the payment, the material furnished on this particular job did not amount to the sum paid.

See St. Louis Sash & Door Works v. Tonkins (1915) 188 Mo. App. 1, 173 S. W. 47, infra, note 16; and see Petersen v. Shain, supra, note 1.

<sup>3</sup> Where the materialman asked the contractor for payment on a particular job, and thereafter the contractor, in response to the demand, made payment, the materialman must apply the payment so made to the particular job in question, the request and payment amounting to a direction of application by the contractor. Koehler v. Bierbaum (1909) — Ky. —, 122 S. W. 524.

<sup>4</sup> Hanson v. Cordano (1892) 96 Cal. 441, 31 Pac. 457. The owner, supposing that all demands and liens against his property had

Where a payment made by a contractor to a materialman is applied upon one of several accounts, upon direction to that effect by the contractor, the materialman cannot thereafter cancel the credit and apply the payment to another account, so as to revive his lien.<sup>5</sup>

III. Absence of application by contractor.

a. Source of fund not appearing.

In the absence of anything appearing been satisfied, paid the balance of the contract price to the contractor.

It is stated in the concurring opinion in Goss v. Strelitz (1880) 54 Cal. 640, that a materialman who has received money from the contractor on account of materials furnished in a specified building cannot apply the sum so received to the satisfaction of a balance of an open general account which he has against the contractor. It is stated that all payments made by the owner of a building to his contractor, and those made by the contractor to a materialman for materials furnished, to be used in a building, should be applied in satisfaction of the original contract; that neither the contractor nor a materialman nor workman upon a building can legally apply any portion of such payment to the satisfaction of general debts or demands existing between himself and others, who may be entitled to file liens upon the building against the owner.

<sup>5</sup> Chicago Lumber Co. v. Woods (1880) 53 Iowa, 552, 5 N. W. 715.

Where a general account has been paid by a promissory note given by the contractor, the materialman cannot thereafter change the application of the promissory note, and retain a lien upon a building for which some of the items in the general account were sold. City Coal & Wood Co. v. New Britain Institute (1904) 77 Conn. 715, 59 Atl. 33.

It is stated in United States use of Port Blakely Mill Co. v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. (1912) 198 Fed. 923, an action on a contractor's bond, that credits, having once been applied by the materialman to reduce the claim, cannot be changed and other application made thereof.

In Green Bay Lumber Co. v. Thomas (1898) 106 Iowa, 420, 76 N. W. 749, an action to charge a particular fund with the payment of the claims of subcontractors, and materialmen, it was held that although there was a mistake as to the application of a payment made by the contractor to an account other than that directed, and that this might be corrected as between the subcontractor to whom the payment was made and the contractor, it could not be corrected as to subcontractors against whom no mistake was shown.

In Schallert-Ganahl Lumber Co. v. Neal (1891) 91 Cal. 362, 27 Pac. 743, the contractor made a payment to an agent of the L.R.A. 1016D.

as to the source of the fund from which the contractor makes payments, a payment made by a contractor to a subcontractor or materialman to whom he is indebted on account of several buildings, without any direction as to application, may be applied by the subcontractor, or materialman as he desires.<sup>6</sup> He is not required to apply it to any particular account. At least, his application to the oldest of the accounts between him and materialman, and directed a certain application thereof. Immediately thereafter, and before the agent had returned to the office, the contractor went to the bookkeeper of the materialman and stated that he had paid the agent, and requested a receipt therefor on account of a job other than that to which he had previously directed the application. The receipt was given, and thereupon the contractor went to the owner and secured further advances on the strength of the payment. The materialman, upon discovering the facts, at once repudiated the application and made it as agreed upon when the check was given. Upon these facts the owner, who had thus made a payment on the strength of the receipt, was held not entitled to a credit. It was not alleged that he had paid more money than was due to the contractor, and it appeared that he still had large amounts in his hands, applicable to the payment of the materialman's claim when the action was commenced.

<sup>6</sup> Gantner v. Kemper (1875) 58 Mo. 567; Crane Co. v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. (1913) 74 Wash. 91, 132 Pac. 872 (action on surety bond). See Crane Co. v. Pacific Heat & P. Co. infra, note 23.

A materialman who is supplying materials to a contractor for use in three buildings which are being erected for the same owner may apply a payment to him on the indebtedness as he sees fit, especially where the source of the money with which the payment is made by the contractor does not appear. The action of the materialman in applying the payments to an account for two of the buildings, on which the time for filing a lien had expired, was sustained, so as to entitle it to a lien upon the third building. Portland Floor Co. v. Spaulding Logging Co. (1913) 64 Or. 316, 130 Pac. 52.

In Smith v. Wilcox (1903) 44 Or. 323, 74 Pac. 708, 75 Pac. 710, an action by a subcontractor who had constructed two buildings for a contractor, to obtain liens on both buildings, in which payments were made without directions by the contractor as to how they should be applied, it is stated that as the subcontractor had the right to make the application in such case, having made it upon an altogether equitable basis, the owners of the buildings cannot be heard to complain.

In Ballou v. Black (1885) 17 Neb. 389, 23 N. W. 3, while admitting as a general the contractor will be sustained.<sup>7</sup> The payment may be applied to an old account of the contractor, although received during the time the material is being furnished for the building on which the lien is sought.<sup>8</sup> It has been held that it is not necessary for the materialman to apply it to the oldest item of his account against the contractor.<sup>9</sup>

If the parties make no application, the law applies payments to the extinguishment of the earliest items, if nothing in the circumstances shows a different intent.<sup>10</sup>

b. Source of fund appearing.

1. Rule that creditor may apply as desired.

Where it appears that money paid by principle that, in case of payment without any direction as to application, the party receiving the payments would have the right to apply the money to such account as he sees fit, under the peculiar circumstances of that case, and it appearing that, at the time of the failure of the contractor, payments made by him to the materialman had been credited to the general account between the contractor and the materialman, the payments so made were distributed pro rata upon the amount due for the materials delivered for and charged to the contractor, and then due the materialman for each building then in course of erection by him, or under a contract with him, in proportion to the amount due on each at the date of the several payments.

<sup>7</sup> Kaufman-Wilkinson Lumber Co. v. Christophel (1894) 59 Mo. App. 80.

<sup>8</sup> Union Trust Co. v. Casserly (1901) 127 Mich. 183, 86 N. W. 545.

<sup>9</sup> Waterman v. Younger (1872) 49 Mo. 413. The materialman kept a general account in which the contractor was charged with all the lumber he bought, but, when lumber was delivered, the quantity obtained for the respective houses which the contractor was engaged in building was charged separately on the journal, and was also placed on the wagon ticket. Two payments on account of the lumber furnished for the house in question were made and duly credited, and before the filing of the lien the contractor paid the materialman a sufficient amount to pay off the entire demand, without any direction as to its application, nor did it appear from what source this money was derived.

<sup>10</sup> Dey v. Anderson (1877) 39 N. J. L. 199. The contractor had given a note to the materialman, covering a running account for materials furnished in several houses, and subsequently renewed the note by dividing the amount and giving two notes therefor, one of which fell due before the time for filing a lien on one of the properties had expired; the other note had not L.R.A.1916D.

an owner is by the contractor paid to the subcontractor or materialman, the cases are divided as to the right of the subcontractor or materialman to apply the payment as desired, in the absence of application by the contractor. The general rule applicable to payments by a debtor to his creditor is applied by some courts, and it is held that the materialman has a right to make the application.<sup>11</sup> In accord with this rule a materialman to whom a subcontractor pays money received by him from the principal contractor of a building under construction, the subcontractor directing no application thereof, may apply it to other accounts of the subcontractor.<sup>12</sup>

This rule is especially applicable where the owner has made the payment to the contractor without any direction yet fallen due. Upon an attempt by the materialman, upon the falling due of the earlier note, to obtain a lien on the property in question, it was held that the outstanding note should be applied to the running accounts, in the absence of any application by the creditor or debtor, to the extinguishment of the earlier items, and as all the items furnished for the house in question were among the earlier items, the right to a lien was lost. The note, although not treated as a payment, was treated as merging in the account.

<sup>11</sup> Mack v. Collieran (1892) 136 N. Y. 617, 32 N. E. 604; W. H. Pipkorn Co. v. Evangelical Lutheran St. Jacobi Soc. (1911) 144 Wis. 501, 129 N. W. 516.

The opinion of the lower court, which is reversed in Mack v. Collieran (N. Y.) supra, made a point of the fact that in New York the theory prevails that the money due or to become due from the owner constitutes a fund to which the liens of subcontractors attached when filed in conformity with the statute, and of the further fact that the liability of the owner to the contractor and subcontractor is limited by statute to the amount of the contract. The court of appeals does not notice this contention further than to say that the contractor earned enough money to satisfy all the liens.

Payments made by a shipbuilder to a mechanic from money paid him on a contract for building a certain vessel, of which fact the mechanic was informed, were held applicable by the mechanic as he saw fit, in the absence of any direction by the shipbuilder at the time of payment. Sheppard v. Steele (1870) 43 N. Y. 60, 3 Am. Rep. 660. It is stated that when the shipbuilder received the money on the contract for this vessel, it became his money; but when he paid part of it to a mechanic, and gave no directions for its application on any particular part of the account against him, the creditor might make the application.

<sup>12</sup> Campbell Glass & Paint Co. v. Davis-

as to its application,<sup>13</sup> or if it is not shown that the money paid by the owner to the contractor is by him paid to the materialman. In order to deprive the creditor of his right to apply a payment, where the debtor does not direct the application, it must appear that the money of the innocent third party can be traced through the debtor to the creditor, and the creditor must know that he is receiving the third person's money, or there must be facts sufficient to put him on notice.<sup>14</sup>

It has been held that the materialman may credit upon other accounts of a subcontractor a note given by the owner of the building on which the lien is sought, to the contractor, and by him turned over to the subcontractor, who turns it over to the materialman.<sup>15</sup>

After the payment has been applied by the subcontractor or materialman, the application cannot be changed by direction of the contractor, especially if the direction does not come until after the subcontractor or materialman is claiming a lien.<sup>16</sup>

2. Rule that payment must be applied to account of owner making payment.

According to the other line of authorities, the rule that a creditor has the right, in the absence of direction by his debtor, to apply a payment on account, is a rule between creditor and debtor, and does not apply where the money is received by the debtor from a third party whose property will be liable for the debt in case the money is not applied on the third party's liability.<sup>17</sup> It is stated in one case<sup>18</sup> that a materialman who is furnishing at the same time material to a contractor for the improvement of property belonging to different persons is bound to keep separate ac-

Page Planing Mill Co. (1908) 130 Mo. App. 474, 110 S. W. 24; St. Louis Sash & Door Works v. Tonkins (1915) 188 Mo. App. 1, 173 S. W. 47 (direction was to apply it to general account; it was thus applied to items other than those going into the building in question).

<sup>13</sup> First Presby. Church v. Santy (1893) 52 Kan. 462, 34 Pac. 974.

In Chicago Lumber Co. v. Douglas (1913) 89 Kan. 308, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 843, 131 Pac. 563, a surety on the contractor's bond was held not entitled to a credit of money received from the owner by the contractor, and by the contractor paid to a materialman without any direction as to its application, and thereupon applied by the materialman to an old account of the contractor. It did not appear that the materialman had any notice as to the source of the money. It is stated that the laborers and the materialman were not under any obligation to watch dealings between the owner of the building and the contractor.

<sup>14</sup> Thacker v. Bullock Lumber Co. (1910) 140 Ky. 463, 131 S. W. 271, the materialman is not affected by the fact that the contractor kept separate accounts for the different jobs, dividing his payments, setting down a certain part as paid on this job or that, where it had no knowledge of such custom of the contractor, and was not shown his account book. The owner in this case paid by check to the contractor, the contractor cashed the checks, and made his own payments to the materialman.

In Flexner University School v. Strassel Gans Paint Co. (1908) — Ky. —, 112 S. W. 686, the application by a materialman to an old account of a subcontractor of money paid him by the subcontractor was sustained where it was not shown that there was any direction as to the payment, nor that the money of the owner was actually paid to the materialman. L.R.A.1916D.

That knowledge of the materialman of the source of the money does not require its application to the account for materials furnished for the building of the person making the payment, where the contractor directs otherwise, see Jefferson v. Church of St. Matthew, supra, note 2.

<sup>15</sup> Grace Harbor Lumber Co. v. Ortman (1916) — Mich. —, 157 N. W. 96. See Hughes & Co. v. Flint (1911) 61 Wash. 460, 112 Pac. 633, infra, note 24.

<sup>16</sup> St. Louis Sash & Door Works v. Tonkins (1915) 188 Mo. App. 1, 173 S. W. 47.

<sup>17</sup> Williams v. Willingham-Tift Lumber Co. (1909) 5 Ga. App. 533, 63 S. E. 584; James B. Clow & Sons v. Goldstein (1909) 147 Ill. App. 571; SIOUX CITY FOUNDRY & MFG. CO. v. MERTEN, ante, 1247; Crane Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Keck (1892) 35 Neb. 683, 53 N. W. 606; Lee v. Storz Brewing Co. (1905) 75 Neb. 212, 106 N. W. 220 (money was paid by owner direct to materialman by consent and direction of contractor).

In James B. Clow & Sons v. Goldstein (1909) 147 Ill. App. 571, a check given the contractor by the owner was cashed and the proceeds taken with additional money and paid to the materialman.

See Goss v. Strelitz (1880) 54 Cal. 640 supra, note 4.

<sup>18</sup> Williams v. Willingham-Tift Lumber Co. (1909) 5 Ga. App. 533, 63 S. E. 584.

This particular argument is noticed in Campbell Glass & Paint Co. v. Davis-Page Planing Mill Co. (1908) 130 Mo. App. 474, 110 S. W. 24, a case adhering to the opposite theory, and it is stated that where the dealings of a materialman are with a single contractor, who has different contracts going on at the same time, he is not bound to ascertain from what particular contracts the contractor realized the money with which he made payments.

Where a husband who has been furnished money by his wife with which to buy a counts; and, upon receiving a payment from the contractor, is bound to determine the account upon which the payment is to be applied. If the contractor does not do so, but applies the money as a credit on a general account against the contractor, he thereby waives his lien.<sup>19</sup>

In some cases in which this rule is applied the materialman had knowledge of the source of the money;<sup>20</sup> but knowledge is not necessary to bind him to apply it to the account of the owner making the payment.<sup>21</sup>

Where the owner, in making the payment to the contractor, has directed the application, and this has been assented to by the contractor, it has been held that the money does not belong to the contractor, but is intrusted to him for a specific purpose; that he is merely a messenger or bailee for the purpose of bill of lumber for the construction of a house goes to a materialman with whom he has a general account, and purchases the lumber, and pays the money which the wife has given him to the materialman, the materialman cannot apply it to the husband's general account, and thereby retain a mechanics' lien against the property of the wife. Young v. Swan (1896) 100 Iowa, 323, 69 N. W. 566. It further appeared in this case that the husband directed that credit be given upon the items of account for lumber which went into the house for the wife.

<sup>19</sup> Williams v. Willingham-Tift Lumber Co. (Ga.) supra.

<sup>20</sup> Lee v. Storz Brewing Co. (1905) 75 Neb. 212, 106 N. W. 220 (money was paid by owner to materialman by consent and direction of contractor).

<sup>21</sup> SIOUX CITY FOUNDRY & MFG. CO. v. MERTEN, ante, 1247.

<sup>22</sup> In Boyer-Van Kuran Lumber & Coal Co. v. Colonial Apartment House Co. (1913) 94 Neb. 180, 142 N. W. 519, a materialman to whom the owner directed the payment of $400, the amount due him for material furnished, had previously been given an undated check for $670 by the contractor for materials furnished in other buildings, with the understanding that the contractor would notify the materialman when he received the architect's estimate and the money due upon the respective jobs, and would let the materialman know when he might cash this check. Upon receiving the money from the owner in this case, the contractor called the materialman on the telephone and told him he had some money for him. The materialman, without further inquiry, and without notification or permission from the contractor, filled in the date of the check, presented it at the bank for payment, and withdrew the amount thereof from the sum which had been given to the contractor paying the money as directed. Consequently, a materialman who obtains the money so paid must apply it to the credit of the owner making the payment.<sup>23</sup>

3. Effect of notice to subcontractor or materialman of source.

Where the materialman or subcontractor has notice of the source of the money, he must apply it to the account of the owner making the payment.<sup>23</sup> A check drawn by the owner in favor of the contractor, and having written thereon the words "on contract," which is indorsed by the contractor to the materialman, furnishes notice of the source, so that the materialman cannot apply the proceeds to other jobs, especially where the materialman knew of the particular job on which the payment had been made, and had it entered separately by the owner to pay the specific amounts and parties named, including $400 to this particular materialman. Before the check had thus been presented for payment by the materialman, the owner had a conversation with him in which he asked him if he had received the $400 that was sent to him previously; he replied that he had, but, when asked for a receipt, said that he did not think a receipt was necessary, and told the owner to fix it up with the contractor. Upon this state of facts the owner was held entitled to a credit of $670; the materialman is stated by this unauthorized act of withdrawal, and by refusing credit to the owner, to have wrongfully converted to his own use the money thus drawn from the bank; that, under well-settled principles of law, he would have been liable to an action for money had and received, and he is equally bound to allow the owner of the fund credit upon its indebtedness to that extent.

<sup>23</sup> A surety on a contractor's bond is entitled to have payment made by the contractor from money received from the building applied to that account; the materialman, who knew the source of the money, cannot apply the same to an old account of the contractor for which the surety is in no wise responsible. Crane Co. v. Pacific Heat & P. Co. (1904) 36 Wash. 95, 78 Pac. 460. See Crane Co. v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. supra, note 6.

A materialman to whom the contractor furnished materials used in the building cannot credit the contractor on an old account for the materials so furnished, and retain a lien upon the building. Mills v. Olsen (1911) 43 Mont. 129, 115 Pac. 33.

See Lee v. Storz Brewing Co. supra, note 20, and Petersen v. Shain, supra, note 1.

As to the necessity for notice, see SIOUX CITY FOUNDRY & MFG. CO. v. MERTEN, ante, 1247.

on his books.<sup>24</sup> But where the party receiving payment does not know of the source, he may credit it as he chooses.<sup>25</sup> The effect of notice of the source of the money is not considered in other cases.<sup>26</sup>

4. Payment to a materialman who has not at the time furnished material for building of owner making payment.

A materialman to whom a contractor has paid money received from the owner of the building under construction without any direction as to its application may apply the money on a general account of the contractor, where, at the time of payment, no labor or materials had been furnished by the materialman for the building of the owner making the payment, and he did not know the source of the money.<sup>27</sup>

<sup>24</sup> Hughes & Co. v. Flint (1911) 61 Wash. 460, 112 Pac. 633. That notice of source is not material where the contractor directs the application, see Jefferson v. Church of St. Matthew, supra, note 2, and Petersen v. Shain, supra, note 1.

<sup>25</sup> Thacker v. Bullock Lumber Co. (1910) 140 Ky. 463, 131 S. W. 271.

<sup>26</sup> See Grace Harbor Lumber Co. v. Ort-

man (1916) — Mich. —, 157 N. W. 96, supra, note 15.

<sup>27</sup> Brigham v. Dewald (1893) 7 Ind. App. 115, 34 N. E. 498.

See Boyer-Van Kuran Lumber & Coal Co. v. Colonial Apartment House Co. (1913) 94 Neb. 180, 142 N. W. 519, supra, note 22.
W. A. E.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

RE ESTATE OF EDWARD A. OLDFIELD, Deceased.

NANCY BOWIE

v.

WILLIAM TROWBRIDGE, Exr., etc., of Edward A. Oldfield, Deceased.

(— Iowa, —, 156 N. W. 977.)

Evidence — contract — facts and circumstances.

1. An express contract to pay for services rendered may be proved by facts and circumstances, as well as by direct evidence.

For other cases, see Evidence, XII. 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Limitation of actions — services under continuous contract.

2. The statute of limitations does not begin to run against a claim for services rendered under contract so long as they are continuous.

For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Breach of promise — affliction with fatal disease — effect.

3. A man who, after entering into a contract to marry, is afflicted with pernicious anemia, which is incurable and will be fatal within a short time, may repudiate the contract without subjecting his estate to liability for damages, if consummation of the marriage would tend to hasten the disease and shorten his life.

For other cases, see Breach of Promise, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Evans, Ch. J., and Salinger, J., dissent in part.)

(March 23, 1916.)

Note. — For ill health as defense to action for breach of promise to marry, see annotation following this case, post, 1276. L.R.A.1916D.

CROSS APPEALS from a judgment of the District Court for Carroll County in plaintiff's favor in part, in an action brought to recover damages for an alleged breach of promise of marriage, and to recover for personal services rendered by plaintiff to decedent in his lifetime; defendant appealing from the judgment in plaintiff's favor, and plaintiff appealing from so much of the judgment as denied a recovery for the breach of promise of marriage. Affirmed on both appeals.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles O. Helmer for defendant.

Mr. Brown McCrary, for plaintiff:

After a case has been tried to a jury upon certain issues and appealed after a reversal, neither party has, as a matter of right, to so amend their pleadings as to raise new issues.

Re Cook, 143 Iowa, 734, 122 N. W. 578; Zalesky v. Home Ins. Co. 114 Iowa, 516, 87 N. W. 428.

Sickness or incurable disease incurred after a promise to marry is not ground for releasing a man from his agreement to marry.

Addison, Contr. 1913 ed. p. 1180; Hall v. Wright, El. Bl. & El. 746, 29 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 43, 6 Jur. N. S. 193, 1 L. T. N. S. 230, 8 Week. Rep. 160; Smith v. Compton, 67 N. J. L. 548, 58 L.R.A. 480, 52 Atl. 586; Lemke v. Franzenburg, 159 Iowa, 466, 141 N. W. 332; Broom, Legal Maxima, 7th ed. 251.

Gaynor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The controversy in this suit is based on two claims filed against the estate of Edward A. Oldfield, deceased. The plaintiff states her causes of action in two counts.

In the first count of her petition she seeks to recover damages for a breach of promise of marriage. In the second count she seeks to recover for personal services rendered by her to decedent during his lifetime. It appears that Edward A. Oldfield died on December 2, 1910, testate; that his will was duly admitted to probate, and Wm. Trowbridge, defendant herein, appointed executor of the will. On the 11th day of January, 1911, the appellee, plaintiff, filed a claim against the state, wherein she asks $10,000 on account of a breach of promise of marriage which she alleges was made between her and the decedent. In the second count, she claims $3,975 for services rendered by her for decedent from September 14, 1893, to September 2, 1910. To the first count of plaintiff's petition, based on an alleged promise of marriage, the defendant interposed the following defenses: First, that any agreement of marriage entered into was, by mutual consent of the parties, postponed and deferred from time to time up to the death of Edward A. Oldfield; that consummation of the agreement was prevented by said death; second, that, at the time the alleged breach of promise occurred, if any, the said Edward A. Oldfield was suffering from an incurable disease, known as pernicious anemia, which made it impractical and impossible for him to consummate a marriage with the plaintiff; that any marriage at that time would have aggravated said disease and shortened his life; that the incurable character and disastrous consequences of the disease were unknown to Oldfield at the time of the alleged promise; third, defendant pleads the physical condition of Oldfield in mitigation of damages. To the second count of plaintiff's petition, based on the claim for services rendered, the defendant pleads: First, that all of said claims and demands which accrued prior to five years before the filing of the claim are barred by the statute of limitations. Second, that during the time claimed for services rendered, the plaintiff was a member of decedent's family, receiving support therein as a member of the family; that during all the time that plaintiff and her five children resided with Oldfield, she and they were furnished with food, clothing, and other necessities of life in decedent's family; that Oldfield received no pay therefor except from the services rendered by the plaintiff and her children; that the necessities furnished were at least of the value of the services performed, and that she was fully compensated therefor by such support and maintenance; that, at the time plaintiff resided in the family of Edward A. Oldfield, the defendant avers the said Oldfield believed that the services rendered by the plaintiff during such time were gratuitous, and were rendered by the plaintiff, and received by Oldfield, without the expectation on the part of either that payment should be made therefor. In addition to the foregoing defenses, the defendant pleads a general denial as to all matters alleged by the plaintiff in her respective claims. Upon the issues thus tendered, the cause was tried to a jury, and a general verdict returned for the plaintiff for $3,164. The jury found, however, specially that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover on the first count of her petition for the breach of promise of marriage. A judgment having been entered upon the verdict, both parties appeal. The defendant, having appealed first, is designated as appellant, and the plaintiff as appellee, when referred to hereafter in this opinion.

As defendant first appealed, we will give our attention first to a consideration of the claim based upon the second count of the petition upon which the jury allowed plaintiff to recover. In this count of her petition she seeks to recover for services rendered, and alleges that in the year 1893, Edward Oldfield lived on a farm in Sac county; that at his instance and request, and by express agreement, this plaintiff came to his place to work; that in 1894, she brought her family with her, consisting of five children; that she continued to work for him from September, 1893, to September, 1910, except when temporarily away on a visit; that the reasonable value of her services, during all the time was $5 a week; that her work consisted of household duties, work and labor in the house, and manual labor upon the farm. The plaintiff further alleges that payments were made to her from time to time during said period.

The first alleged error, relied upon by the defendant for reversal, is based on the action of the court in giving instruction 25 to the jury, on its own motion. The theory upon which the error is predicated is that the plaintiff's petition seeks to recover for services rendered under an express contract, while this instruction, it is claimed, authorizes her to recover on an implied contract. A mere statement of what the instructions contain is sufficient to negative appellant's contention. The court recognized the fact that the plaintiff predicates her right to recover upon an express agreement, and denied her right to recover except upon proof of such express agreement. The court said: "The plaintiff alleges that she went to work for decedent under an express agreement that she should do so. Direct evidence of such agreement is, however, not necessary if, from all the facts and circumstances appearing in evidence in the case, you can find by a preponderance of the evidence that there must have been such an agreement."

The court in the instruction complained of simply told the jury that the agreement, alleged, could be proved by facts and circumstances, as well as by direct evidence. Many facts about which there is controversy are so proved. The mouths of both parties to this controversy were closed; one by death, and one by operation of law. That there was, or was not, such an agreement as she alleged was a substantive fact to be proved, as the court says, by direct evidence, or by facts and circumstances appearing in evidence, not necessarily by direct evidence. If the facts and circumstances proved established in the minds of the jury a belief in the existence of the controverted fact, then the fact itself was proved, even though there were no direct evidence of its existence.

That a party cannot recover upon an implied contract where he pleads and relies upon an express contract is elementary. No rule is more familiar to the profession than the one which requires a case to be tried upon issues made in the pleadings. No ultimate fact, not pleaded, can be considered in determining such liability. This rule was recognized on the former appeal of this case (158 Iowa, 98, 138 N. W. 847), in which it was said: "Direct evidence of such an agreement for employment is not necessary, however. If from all of the facts and circumstances appearing in the case it can fairly be said that there must have been such an agreement, it is sufficient."

In the 28th instruction given to the jury the court expressly said: "In this case, plaintiff cannot recover anything for her services . . . unless she has established . . . that such services were rendered by her under and by virtue of an express agreement with Oldfield for the performance of the same."

It is next contended that the court erred in giving the 28th instruction, for the reason, as it is said in argument, that the instruction assumes that there is evidence of an express agreement, and that such agreement did not contemplate payment for such services by furnishing plaintiff with a home, food, clothing, etc., for herself and family. This instruction must be read in connection with instructions 26 and 27, immediately preceding, in order that its full import and purpose may be understood. The contention of the defendant was that the plaintiff was a member of decedent's family; that the labor performed was performed by her as a member of the family; that there was no reasonable expectation on her part of receiving pay, and that there was no expectation on his part of compensating her for the services; that in no event could she recover for services rendered, in the absence of an express contract such as alleged by her in her petition. The 26th and 27th instructions given are as follows:

"Where one person performs services for another, and the other furnishes a home, food, and clothing for the first, a presumption arises that neither expects to pay or receive compensation. If, therefore, you find by a preponderance of the evidence that plaintiff did perform services for Oldfield, and Oldfield furnished a home, food, and clothing to the plaintiff, and if you further find that the plaintiff has not shown by a preponderance of the evidence that Oldfield agreed or expected to pay her for services, then the plaintiff is not entitled to receive anything therefor, and your verdict should be for the defendant on this branch of the case.

"If you should find plaintiff to have been living with decedent as a member of his family and receiving support therein, a presumption would arise that such services as rendered by her were gratuitous, and the plaintiff must overcome this presumption in order to entitle her to recover for such services by showing by a preponderance of the evidence that such services were rendered under an express agreement for the rendering of the same as heretofore explained to you in these instructions."

Immediately following which is this portion of the 28th instruction, of which complaint is made, reading as follows: "If she has thus established that such services were rendered by her under and by virtue of an express agreement with Oldfield for such services, and by which she was to be paid therefor, then in such event she would be entitled to recover herein for such services, even though they may have been rendered at a time when she was furnished a home, food, and clothing by decedent, and was living with decedent in his home, and with his family."

The contention of appellant is that the court ignores the claim made by the defendant that the home, food, and clothing furnished plaintiff fully compensated her for all the services rendered, and that the agreement contemplated that one should be in satisfaction of the other. We do not construe the instruction as so holding. In the 21st instruction given by the court, the jury were expressly told that one of the defenses is that plaintiff has been fully paid for such services by reason of payments made to her by decedent, and by reason of food, clothing, and necessities furnished her and the members of her family, and said to the jury that they should determine from the evidence whether this contention was true or not, and should consider all the evidence, the circumstances under which the services were rendered, and the supplies furnished, and the extent of the same, and what services, if any, were rendered by the children in determining this question.

It is next contended that this record discloses such a state of facts that all of plaintiff's claim, prior to five years immediately preceding the filing of the claim, was barred by the statute of limitations. This question was before the court on the former appeal, and the evidence on this point was substantially the same as in this record. This court said: "The evidence as a whole tended to show that the service was continuous for the entire time up to at least within a year or two of the commencement of this action, with the exception of one or two brief periods when plaintiff was absent on visits, and, such being the case, the statute did not begin to run" (citing Kilbourn v. Anderson, 77 Iowa, 501, 42 N. W. 431; Asher v. Pegg, 146 Iowa, 541, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 890, 123 N. W. 739).

We think this disposes of this same contention made upon this appeal. See Hensley v. Davidson Bros. Co. 135 Iowa, 106, 112 N. W. 227, 14 Ann. Cas. 62.

It is next contended that the verdict is excessive. In this contention we cannot concur. We may further say that a review of the evidence in this case satisfies us that the verdict on this branch of the case is sustained by it.

We find no reversible error upon defendant's appeal.

Division II.

This brings us to a consideration of plaintiff's appeal, and calls for a review of the record made upon the claim of plaintiff for breach of promise of marriage. Assuming, for the purposes of this opinion, that the record disclosed a promise of marriage entered into between plaintiff and deceased substantially as claimed by the plaintiff; assuming that this promise continued to be recognized by both parties as binding upon each; assuming that in September, 1910, the deceased refused to fulfil his promise and marry the plaintiff; assuming that at the time of the alleged breach of promise, Oldfield was suffering from pernicious anemia, and that the same was an incurable disease, and that marriage would aggravate the disease, and would have tended to shorten the life of the deceased, and that this was not known to Oldfield at the time L.R.A.1916D.

of the making of the promise, and that the condition arose subsequently to the making of the promise, and that this disease caused his death on December 2, 1910,—the question presented is whether or not such a finding would excuse the conduct of the deceased in refusing to consummate his promise by marriage, and defeat plaintiff's right to recover damages based on such refusal.

The testimony of Dr. Patty is that he was first consulted by Oldfield in February, 1910; that Oldfield then said he had no appetite, was tired all the time and unable to work; that he was easily fatigued, short of breath, and unable to sleep well; that he made an examination of him; that he had hemic murmurs of the heart; that his condition was due to a loss of blood elements; that his condition was serious; that he had pernicious anemia; that when he first consulted him, he was pale, and his eyelids showed little color; that he informed Oldfield that his condition was serious; that he saw him on August 3d of that year; that he had then become weaker and unable to do anything; that he informed Oldfield that his condition was fatal; that he died of pernicious anemia; that, at the time he first consulted him, he was unable physically to fulfil a contract of marriage.

Dr. Kessler testified that the disease of pernicious anemia may last two or three months, possibly more than a year, but usually a year is the limit; that if it appeared in the early part of 1910 that Oldfield had no appetite, was tired all the time and unable to work, was easily fatigued, unable to sleep well, and that an examination disclosed hemic murmurs of the heart, and his eyes were pale, and he died September 2, 1910, he would say that he died of pernicious anemia; that if a man was suffering from pernicious anemia, it would have a bad effect on his health to marry and have intercourse; that it would aggravate the disease and shorten his life; that in treating pernicious anemia, the patient is advised to refrain from labor, dissipation, or excitement; in other words, take everything as easily as possible and be quiet; that such things would aggravate the disease and shorten his life; that any excitement or exertion would tend to aggravate the disease and shorten the life of the patient; that the disease is debilitating in its character, and tends to weakening the vital forces, and, in some cases, impair the mind, and said: "I would advise a patient suffering from pernicious anemia to avoid excitement and exertion and keep quiet."

The plaintiff, Nancy Bowie, testified, that she was away from September, 1909, until April, 1910; that the deceased told her in February, 1910, that he had been to see a doctor, and the doctor told him he could not live. "It was after that time that he told me he would not marry me."

Dollie Sawyer, daughter of the deceased, testified: "I came back home in April, 1910, because my father wanted me to come back. He said his health was getting very bad. He wanted me to come back and stay with him. I stayed with him until he died. His health was bad during all the summer of 1910, and kept gradually growing worse. I heard him say before Mrs. Bowie that the doctor told him he could not live."

Under the heading, "Propositions of Law Requiring a Reversal," the plaintiff, the cross appellant, urges but two propositions:

First: "After a case has been tried to a jury upon certain issues and appealed after reversal, neither party has, as a matter of right, to so amend the pleadings as to raise new issues."

As a matter of right, perhaps no. As a matter of discretion in the court, yes. The amendment complained of was filed with the consent of the court, and for reasons then urged before the court. It was a discretionary matter with the court to allow it or not in this particular case. The second proposition was stated in these words: "Sickness or incurable disease, incurred after a promise of marriage, is not ground for releasing him from his agreement to marry."

Upon this second proposition, the authorities are not agreed. Some courts hold that every contract to marry has coupled with it an implied condition that the parties will not endanger life or health in the consummation of the marriage; that where illness or disease exists in either party to the contract, such as would render marriage dangerous to the life or health of either, a breach of the contract, based on such unavoidable and unanticipated condition, is excusable. In Sanders v. Coleman, 97 Va. 690, 34 S. E. 621, 47 L.R.A. 581, the supreme court of Virginia said: "It can no longer be doubted that, if the performance of a contract is rendered impossible by the act of God alone, such fact will furnish a valid excuse for its nonperformance, and such a stipulation will be understood to be an inherent part of every contract. This principle, it would seem, should apply with peculiar force to a marriage contract, the performance of which, owing to causes subsequently intervening, and altogether independent of any default of the party, might result in consequences disastrous to the life or health of the parties, or either of them. We hold, therefore, that a contract to marry is coupled with the implied condition that both of the parties shall remain in the enjoyment of life and health, and, if the condition of the parties has so changed that the marriage state would endanger the life or health of either, a breach of the contract is excusable" (citing Allen v. Baker, 86 N. C. 91, 41 Am. Rep. 444; Shackleford v. Hamilton, 93 Ky. 80, 15 L.R.A. 531, 40 Am. St. Rep. 166, 19 S. W. 5).

The opinion further proceeds: "In the case at bar the evidence as to which, in our opinion, there is no real conflict, shows that there was a predisposition in the defendant's family to physical trouble of the kind that had developed with him; that his father had died with a similar disease, and a brother with urinary trouble; that after his engagement with the plaintiff, and before the time fixed for the marriage, the defendant had, without fault on his part, developed, and was suffering with, a grave malady, involving the urinary organs, which had continued and kept him constantly under the advice and treatment of a physician up to the time of the trial; that he had cystitis, with probable inflammation of the urethra, complicated with enlargement of the prostate gland, and that an indulgence . . . would aggravate the disease, and likely shorten his life; and that it would be, not only a wrong and injustice to the defendant, but also to the plaintiff, for him to marry in his condition of health. Marriage is assumed in law to be made for mutual comfort. The condition of the defendant precludes any hope of mutual comfort from cohabitation. On the contrary, an indulgence . . . would aggravate his disease, and enhance the chances of a fatal result. . . . Our conclusion upon the law and the evidence is that the defendant acted throughout with good faith, and that the unhappy circumstances in which he found himself justified the alleged breach of his contract to marry the plaintiff."

As supporting this rule, we have Grover v. Zook, 44 Wash. 489, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 582, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1012, 87 Pac. 638, 12 Ann. Cas. 192, in which the rule laid down in the Sanders Case, supra, was quoted with approval. In this Zook Case the defendant was afflicted with pulmonary tuberculosis (commonly called consumption), in an incurable form. The woman sought to recover damages for the breach of the contract. This was interposed as defense. The sufficiency of the defense was questioned on many grounds, but was sustained on the ground that the consummation of the marriage would endanger not only his life, but the life of the woman, and would affect the offspring, if any, resulting from the marriage. It appeared in this case that several members of defendant's family had died of pulmonary consumption. As recognizing the doctrine expressed in these two cases, though not directly in point, see Beans v. Denny, 141 Iowa, 52, 117 N. W. 1091; Vierling v. Binder, 113 Iowa, 337, 85 N. W. 621; Trammell v. Vaughan, 158 Mo. 214, 51 L.R.A. 854, 81 Am. St. Rep. 302, 59 S. W. 79; Shackelford v. Hamilton, 93 Ky. 80, 15 L.R.A. 531, 40 Am. St. Rep. 166, 19 S. W. 5. In this last case the defense interposed was that, long prior to any contract of marriage with the plaintiff, defendant had contracted a loathsome disease called syphilis, and was treated for by skilled physicians until he was pronounced cured; that physicians advised him he was cured, and was in a fit state to marry and could safely do so; that after this time, and with the belief in good faith that the malady no longer existed, he made the contract with the plaintiff; that, after the engagement to marry, and without any fault on his part, the symptoms of the disease reappeared, and he was advised by physicians that he should not marry; that prior to the bringing of this action, he made known the fact to the plaintiff. The lower court sustained appellee's demurrer to this contention as a defense, but allowed the pleas to go to the jury in mitigation of damages. The supreme court said: "The court below, entertaining the opinion that, as the defendant had entered into this marriage contract, he is bound for its breach, although it might have been the duty of the appellant, under the circumstances, to decline to execute it, sustained the demurrer; . . . that the contract was unconditional, and the defendant being able, at the time the promise was made, to perform the contract, he must either execute it, or become responsible in damages for the breach. If such a contract as that of marriage is to be treated in the light of a mere bargain and exchange of chattels between parties competent to contract, then it seems to us there would be but little difficulty in sustaining the action of the court below; but if the agreement, when entered into, is to be treated as creating a status that forms the basis of our entire social system, and in which society has more interest in preserving its purity than the parties to the agreement, it must follow that the defense interposed to the appellee's claim for damages was, in law as well as morals, sufficient to prevent the recovery. When the marriage contract is consummated, the parties taking each other for better, for worse, for richer, for poorer, and agree to cherish each other in sickness and in health, the fact that the social standing of the one party or the other, or their pecuniary condition, was not as represented, will afford no ground for relief; still, when there is a mere agreement to marry, there may be such a condition of the one party or the other, as to health or other bodily infirmity, arising subsequent to the agreement, as would authorize either party to decline to enter into the marriage relation; and to hold otherwise would be to place such a contract upon the same footing with cases of mere personal chattels. It is said by Mr. Bishop in his work on Marriage and Divorce that 'one, after marriage, cannot complain of an impediment known to him before; but, if he were ignorant of the existence of the defect, or of its incurable nature, though in himself, he may take advantage of it by suit of nullity. The marriage was a mistake; the ends intended by it cannot be answered' ([citing] 2 Bishop, Marr. & Div. 5th ed. 581). The text-books establish the doctrine that 'without sexual intercourse the ends of marriage—the procreation of children and the pleasures and enjoyments of matrimony—cannot be attained.' 'The first cause and reason of matrimony,' says Ayliffe, 'ought to be the design of having offspring; so the second ought to be the avoiding of fornication. And the law recognizes these two as its principal ends; namely, a lawful indulgence of the passions, to prevent licentiousness; and the procreation of children, according to the evident design of Divine Providence,' [citing] 1 Bishop, Marr. & Div. 5th ed. 322.

"It is not pretended, nor has it been so adjudged, in any court, that a mere temporary disease, or such a change in the physical condition of a party to a marriage contract, after it has been entered into, and without his fault, as would render him less capable of discharging duties growing out of the marital relation, would be sufficient to justify its breach; but when the party is afflicted with bodily disease to such an extent as is dangerous to the lives of those with whom he comes in contact, and such as must, if he should marry, necessarily be communicated to his wife, . . . and, through her, to affect her offspring with the poison, connected with the fact that he was ignorant of the disease being upon him at the time he contracts to marry, he will be excused for the nonperformance of his undertaking. While the contract to marry is silent as to any condition, it must be implied that any subsequent change in the physical or mental condition of either party without fault, so as to render it impossible, in the nature of things, to accomplish the object for which the marriage relation is brought about, will release the parties from the agreement. Impotency, insanity, or such a diseased condition of the body as would affect the offspring and endanger the life of the mother if the contract were carried out, would certainly be within this rule. Any other doctrine would require the same construction to be given the agreement to marry that is given to contracts for the sale and delivery of personal property. Where the party can recover damages for the breach, although it is impossible to perform it; in other words, it is urged that the woman must have either the husband or damages in his stead, if he is able to have the marriage ceremony performed. This is also the objection to the majority opinions rendered in the court of Queen's bench in the case of Hall v. Wright, El. Bl. & El. 746. We concur with the minority opinion in that case that the contract of marriage is subject to implied conditions peculiar to itself. In that case the defense was that, after the promise, and before the breach, the defendant was afflicted with bleeding from the lungs, and by reason of the disease became incapable of marriage without great danger to his life, and therefore unfit for the marriage state, of which the plaintiff had notice. After reviewing the authorities upon the question, Erle, J., said: "The principle deduced from the cases seems to be that a contract to marry is assumed in law to be made for the purpose of mutual comfort, and is avoided if by the act of God or the opposite party the circumstances are so changed as to make intense misery, instead of mutual comfort, the probable result of performing the contract." The majority opinion was rendered on the idea that the disease was not such a state of health as to make it impossible for the defendant to marry, and therefore not impossible of performance; and, if a case like the one being considered had been presented, we doubt if any difference of opinion would have been expressed. Pollock and other text writers on contracts, in alluding to this opinion, say that it is so much against the tendency of the later cases that it is now of little or no authority beyond the point decided; but, if that opinion had been unanimous, although entitled to great weight, we would not be inclined to follow its reasoning, or concur in the conclusion reached."

Judge Pollock in his work on Contracts, 3d ed. p. 546, said: "In the early and very peculiar case of Hall v. Wright, the question after some critical discussion of the pleadings, which it is needless to follow, came to this: Is it a term in the ordinary agreement to marry that if a man from bodily disease cannot marry without danger to his life, and is unfit for marriage L.R.A.1916D.

from the cause mentioned at the time appointed, he shall be excused from marrying then? or, in other words, is the continuance of health (that is, of such a state of health as makes it not improper to marry) an implied condition of the contract? The court of exchequer chamber decided by four to three that it is not; the court of the Queen's bench having been equally divided. The majority of the judges relied upon two reasons,—that if a man could not marry without danger to his life, that did not show the performance of the contract to be impossible, but, at most, highly imprudent, and that, at any rate, the contract could be so far performed as to give the woman the status and social position of a wife. It is not disputed that the contract was voidable at her option. "The man, though he may be in a bad state of health, may nevertheless perform his contract to marry the woman, and so give her the benefit of social position, so far as in his power, though he may be unable to fulfil all the obligations of the marriage, and it rests with the woman to say whether she will enforce or renounce the contract." As to the first of these reasons, the question is not whether there is or not an absolute impossibility, but what is the true meaning of the contract; and in this case the contract is of such a kind that one might expect the conditions implied in strictly personal contracts to be extended rather than excluded. As to the second reason, it cannot be maintained except against the common understanding of mankind and the general treatment of marriage by English law, that the acquisition of legal or social position by marriage is a principal or independent object of the contract. Unless it can be so considered, the reason cannot stand with the principle affirmed in Geipel v. Smith, L. R. 7 Q. B. 404, 41 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 153, 26 L. T. N. S. 361, 20 Week. Rep. 332, 1 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 268, that when the main part of a contract has become impossible of performance by an accepted cause, it must be treated as having become impossible altogether. The decision itself can be reviewed only by a court of ultimate appeal, but it is so much against the tendency of the later cases that it is now of little or no authority beyond the point actually decided, which, for obvious reasons indicated in some of the judgments, is not likely to recur."

In the footnote on page 547, Pollock on Contracts, 3d ed. it is said: "In an action by a woman for a breach of promise to marry, it is a defense either that the woman has physical defects, making marriage improper, if the existence were unknown to the defendant at the time the engagement was made, or that the defendant himself has such defects"—citing Goddard v. Westcott, 82 Mich. 180, 46 N. W. 242; Gring v. Lerch, 112 Pa. 244, 56 Am. Rep. 314, 3 Atl. 841; Vierling v. Binder, 113 Iowa, 337, 85 N. W. 621; Shackleford v. Hamilton, 93 Ky. 80, 15 L.R.A. 531, 40 Am. St. Rep. 186, 19 S. W. 5; Gardner v. Arnett, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1, 50 S. W. 840; Trammell v. Vaughan, 158 Mo. 214, 51 L.R.A. 854, 81 Am. St. Rep. 302, 59 S. W. 79; Allen v. Baker, 86 N. C. 91, 41 Am. Rep. 444; Sanders v. Coleman, 97 Va. 690, 47 L.R.A. 581, 34 S. E. 621.

In Allen v. Baker, 86 N. C. 91, 41 Am. Rep. 444, the defendant failed to fulfil a contract of marriage upon the ground that he was afflicted with a venereal disease which rendered him unfit for the marriage state. The court, in disposing of the case, said: "However once doubted, it is now generally conceded, that if the performance of a contract be rendered impossible by the act of God alone, such fact will furnish a valid excuse for its nonperformance; and such a stipulation will be understood to be an inherent part of every contract. It is likewise true that whenever the main part of an executory contract becomes impossible of performance from any cause beyond the power of the party to control, it will be treated as having become impossible in toto. Why should not the same principle apply to a contract, the fulfilment of which, owing to causes subsequently intervening and altogether independent of any default of the party, can only be productive of consequences disastrous to the parties themselves, and such as may entail misery upon others to come after them."

In discussing the case, reference was made to Hall v. Wright, hereinafter more fully referred to. The court said: "In making that decision, the court treated a contract for marriage as they would any other contract, saying that, though in bad health, the man might nevertheless so far perform his contract as to marry the woman, and thus secure to her the status and social position of his wife, and endow her with a wife's interest in his estate; and, if unwilling to do this, he should compensate her in damages for his refusal. We confess that we are not satisfied with this course of reasoning. In the first place, it is not possible to assimilate a contract like this to an ordinary contract for personal service, which, if not capable of being wholly performed, may be partially so; and, in the next place, we believe it to be contrary to the understanding of men generally that the acquisition of property or social position either does or should constitute a main and independent motive and inducement for entering into such a contract. The usual, and we may say legitimate, objects sought to be attained by such agreements to marry are the comfort of association, the consortium vitæ, . . . the gratification of the natural passions rendered lawful by the union of the parties; and the procreation of children. And if either party should thereafter become, by the act of God and without fault on his own part, unfit for such a relation and incapable of performing the duties incident thereto, then, the law will excuse a non-compliance with the promise. The main part of the contract having become impossible, . . . the whole will be considered to be so."

In Pollock on Contracts, 370 (a book in which the principles of contracts are treated more philosophically than by any author known to us), the decision of Hall v. Wright, supra, is referred to with the remark that it is so much against the tendency of later cases to be now of little or no authority. This case then proceeds to discuss the effect of consummating such a marriage upon the woman and her offspring, because that was the strongest argument to be urged against the consummation of the marriage, we think; however, not the only argument. In Boast v. Firth, L. R. 4, C. P. 1, a master sued the father of his apprentice on his covenants in an apprentice deed, in which it was provided that the apprentice should serve him (the plaintiff) during all the term. The defense was that the apprentice was prevented from so doing by permanent illness arising after the making of the indenture. The court held that it must be held to have been in the contemplation of the parties, when they entered into this covenant, that the prevention of the performance by the act of God should be an excuse for non-performance, and the defense was held good. The court, however, was cited to the case of Hall v. Wright as supporting the contention that there should be liability, notwithstanding the illness of the apprentice. The court said: "It seems to me, however, that that case is clearly distinguishable. In the case of a contract to marry, the man, though he may be in a bad state of health, may nevertheless perform his contract to marry the woman, and so give her the benefit of social position so far as in his power, though he may be unable to fulfil all the obligations of the marriage state; and it rests with the woman to say whether she will enforce or renounce the contract."

Robinson v. Davison, L. R. 6 Exch. 269, 40 L. J. Exch. N. S. 172, 24 L. T. N. S. 755, 10 Week. Rep. 1036, involved a contract to perform services which no deputy could perform (the defendant was an eminent pianoforte player), and which, in case of death, could not be performed by the executors of the deceased. It was held that by virtue of the terms of the contract, incapacity, either of body or mind in the performer, without default on his or her part, is an excuse for nonperformance, and it seems to be the general holding that where one is engaged to perform services which he alone can perform, if, by the act of God, he becomes disabled for performance, he is excusable without damages. See Dickey v. Inscott, 20 Me. 453, 37 Am. Dec. 66; Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40, 27 Am. Rep. 7; Fenton v. Clark, 11 Vt. 557; Green v. Gilbert, 21 Wis. 395, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 694.

This brings us to the only two cases to which our attention has been called holding that sickness does not excuse a refusal to perform a marriage contract. The first is Hall v. Wright, decided in 1858. This case was first heard in the court of Queen's bench. In that court the judges were four to three against defendant's contention. The court of exchequer chamber on appeal (El. Bl. & El. 765) held against such defense by a vote of three, each judge filing an opinion, in support of his contention; thus holding that it was necessary to show, in order to escape damages, that the performance of the contract was impossible, and that, at any rate, the contract should be so performed as to give the woman the status and social position of the wife, no matter what the condition of the defendant is at that time, providing he is capable of sitting up long enough to have the marriage ceremony performed. Judge Willes, speaking as a member of the court, said: "The contract in this case is stated by the plaintiff . . . and admitted by the defendant, . . . to have been in terms an unconditional one. . . . Its performance is not impossible, and it is not enough to show, in answer to an action upon a contract, that its performance is inconvenient or may be dangerous. The delicacy of health alleged as an excuse is the man's misfortune, not to be visited, beyond what is inevitable, upon the woman. If either party is to have the option of breaking off the match, it ought to be the woman. . . . If the man were rich or distinguished, and the woman mercenary or ambitious, she might still desire to marry him for advancement in life. I do not sympathize with such a woman, . . . but this is not a question of sentiment. If it were, I might put the case of a real attachment where such an illness as that stated in the plea supervening might make the woman even more anxious to marry, in order to be the companion and the nurse, if she could not be the mistress, of her sweetheart."

L.R.A.1916D.

Judge Crowder said:

"It is quite impossible to construe the plea as alleging any physical impossibility to go through the ceremony of marriage, or any physical incapacity to perform the duties of marriage. Whether, if such allegations had existed, they would have afforded any answer to the action I do not think it necessary in this case to decide. . . . But I am of opinion that it is no excuse for the breach of a promise to marry that the performance of the conjugal duties would be attended with danger to the defendant's life."

Erle, Judge, speaking for himself, said: "The plea alleges that before any breach of the promise, the defendant was afflicted with dangerous bodily disease which had occasioned frequent and severe bleedings from the lungs, and by reason thereof the defendant was incapable of marriage without great danger to his life. . . . The plaintiff contends that a contract to marry is not subject to implied conditions peculiar to itself, . . . and that when the time is come, the woman has a right either to a husband or to damages in lieu thereof, and that the fatal consequence of the marriage to the husband is either immaterial to the wife, or a ground for greater damage; as a widow may get more of her former husband's assets than a wife, but there is no authority to support this view; and there seems to me to be much reason and authority against it. A contract to marry has some peculiar incidents arising from its nature. . . . The principle to be deduced from these cases seems to me to be, that a contract to marry is assumed in law to be made for the purpose of mutual comfort, and is avoided if, by the act of God or the opposite party, the circumstances are so changed as to make intense misery, instead of mutual comfort, the probable result of performing the contract. . . . The near approach of death by a fatal disease precludes any hope of personal comfort from cohabitation; and, if death is knowingly hastened thereby, each party, by performing the contract, might incur the criminal guilt of intentionally causing death."

Judge Pollock said: "Some learned judges think it [a contract to marry] is of the same character as any other contract, and that no terms or conditions can be implied by the law, and that, if it be not performed in the terms expressed, the party failing to perform it must pay damages for the breach of it. Other learned judges think that there are implied conditions or exceptions, and that the matter stated in the plea is one of them, and therefore that the defendant cannot be called upon to pay damages for the nonperformance of the contract . . . under the circumstances which appear on the whole record. Now it must be conceded . . . that there are contracts to which the law implies exceptions and conditions which are not expressed. All contracts for personal services which can be performed only during the lifetime of the party contracting are subject to the implied condition that he shall be alive to perform them."

Judge Pollock further said: "I prefer putting [my judgment] on the ground that there is an implied exception [in a contract of marriage], including the state of facts alleged in the plea. . . . The question then is: Is the continuance of health, of such a state of health, as makes it not improper to marry, another condition? I am of opinion that it is. There are conditions to be implied . . . on both sides in such an agreement. . . . By the act of God, the contract has become void. . . . It has been suggested that in such a case the woman may be contented with the society of the man, and that the choice ought to rest with her; and that if she be willing to marry, he must marry or pay damages. . . . I think if the man can say with truth, 'by the visitation of Providence, I am not capable of marriage,' he cannot be called upon to marry: and I think this is an implied condition in all agreements to marry. I think that a view of the law, which puts a contract of marriage on the same footing as a bargain for a horse, or a bale of goods, is not in accordance with the general feelings of mankind, and is supported by no authority."

Our attention is called to what is said in Addison on Contracts, the great English authority (10th ed. chap. 7, bk. 2, page 1180) as follows: "If, subsequently to the making of a contract to marry, one of the parties by bodily disease becomes unfit for the performance of the most important duty of marriage, the party so unfitted is not thereby entitled to treat the contract as dissolved, the other party still desiring its performance, but the latter may break off the engagement; for, if a man, by disease, accident, or mutilation become impotent, he could never maintain an action against a woman for refusing to marry him."

The only authority cited in support of the text is Hall v. Wright, supra, and the statement is practically taken from that case, and adds nothing to the holding of the English court.

Our attention has been called to Smith v. Compton, 87 N. J. L. 548, court of errors and appeals, New Jersey, decided June 16, 1902, and reported in 58 L.R.A. 480, 52 Atl. 386. That court said: "The case of Sanders v. Coleman, 97 Va. 690, 47 L.R.A. 581, 34 S. E. 621, is more liberal to the defendant, and lays down the rule that where the defendant, after the promise, contracts or develops a disease, without fault on his part, which renders it unsafe and dangerous to his health or life to perform his contract, it will constitute a defense to an action against him. On the contrary, Hall v. Wright, El. Bl. & El. 746, maintains that such physical defects cannot be set up in bar to the action. In the case under consideration the declaration alleges that the promise made was to marry on the 15th day of June, 1900, and both the plaintiff and defendant admit that such was the promise. . . . The promise being admitted, and the refusal to perform at the stipulated time being also admitted, the plaintiff clearly established her right of action. In the case of Hall v. Wright, the promise counted upon being to marry within a reasonable time, it might with some plausibility be argued that the defendant's physical condition might be considered in determining whether a reasonable time had elapsed, and, if it had not, there would be no breach proved, and the right of action would not exist."

The court proceeded: "This is not a duty or a charge created by law, which the party is disabled to perform without any fault on his own part, but a contract entered into by himself, in which he might have provided against the contingency which he alleges has occurred. The contract is an unconditional one, into which the defendant cannot read a condition which will defeat it. I agree with the declaration of the majority of the judges in Hall v. Wright, that it is not enough to show in answer to an action upon the contract, after breach, that its performance is inconvenient or may be dangerous. Impossibility to perform will alone constitute an absolute bar. Ill health is the defendant's misfortune, not to be visited, beyond what is inevitable, upon the plaintiff. If the plaintiff was willing, in view of his social position, or that which she might acquire by reason of his wealth, to marry him, and await his restoration to health, she had the right to insist upon the benefit of the unconditional contract. If he was apprehensive of danger to his health or life, he could break the engagement, but was subject to such damages as a jury would award against him for the breach. That would, in effect, be a substituted performance in discharge of the obligation. . . . This is in consonance with the well-established rule which governs contracts, and, unless it is adhered to, the loss falls upon the party to whom no fault can be imputed. . . . There was no error in the charge of the . . . court."

The instruction which the supreme court approved, so far as this case is concerned, is substantially as follows: "Nothing will excuse the defendant for the breach of his promise, except such a disease, or complication of diseases, as renders the making of the marriage contract and the consummation of the marriage by marital intercourse impossible."

There are all the authorities pro and con to which our attention has been called, or which we are able to discover upon our individual research.

In the case at bar, the doctors testified that the defendant was affected with pernicious anemia; that one survives this disease usually but two or three months, possibly not more than a year; that, usually, a year is the limit; that defendant had become afflicted with the disease in February, 1910; at least that was the first time it was discovered that he was so afflicted. If the doctors' testimony is to be relied upon (and there is no evidence to the contrary), it appears that he then had but ten months to live. There is no evidence that he broke his promise of marriage. The plaintiff testifies that he told her in 1910, and after her return in April, 1910, from a visit, that he had been to see a doctor, and the doctor told him he could not live; that it was after that that he told her that he could not marry. There is no evidence that the promise was made after he discovered his condition. There was no evidence that he sought to avoid the contract until after it was found that he was stricken with a fatal malady, and that he could live, by reason of his disease, but a few months at most. There was no definite time fixed for the performance of the marriage, so far as this record discloses. If the malady had proved fatal before he had informed the plaintiff that he was unable to marry her because of his diseased condition, clearly plaintiff would have no cause of action under any of the authorities. Death would have dissolved the contract. There is, in every contract of marriage, the implied condition that the parties to the contract will be alive at the time appointed for its consummation.

The consideration for every agreement to marry is found in the consummation of that agreement by marriage. Each has bargained to give and receive, on that day, all that is implied in the marriage relationship,—all that grows out of the marriage relationship. If, by the act of God, before the time fixed for the consummation of the marriage, either party is rendered incapable of giving that which the contract calls for, L.R.A.1916D.

the other party may repudiate the agreement to marry because of the failure, through the act of God, of the very consideration upon which the promise rests. It may be that the very condition that renders him incapable of giving, renders him wholly incapable of receiving, any of the consideration which, under the consummated contract, he is entitled to. The giving and receiving are mutual obligations. One is a condition for the other. If the woman may repudiate the contract because the man has become, by the act of God, in such a condition physically as to render him incapable of giving to her all that, under the consummated contract, she is entitled to, then the man may, the contract being mutual, refuse to perform when, by the act of God, he has become wholly incapable of receiving any of the consideration which the consummated contract entitles him to. One cannot give to another that which the other is wholly incapable of receiving. We would hold, rather, that the consideration for the original agreement to marry has been destroyed by the act of God, and that what is claimed to be a repudiation of the contract is simply a communication to the opposite party of the happening of an implied condition in the original contract which rendered the contract incapable of performance.

Take an extreme case: Two people have entered into a contract to marry on a certain day. All the arrangements are made for marriage on that day. On the day before that fixed for the consummation, the man is afflicted with a mortal wound, or is overcome by a fatal malady. It becomes apparent from the conditions that he can live but a few hours or days. The woman appears at his bedside on the day fixed for the marriage and demands its consummation. Under the rule in Hall v. Wright, he must perform if able to sit up and go through the ceremony and consummate the marriage; and this, that she may receive some of the benefits of the contract, although he is totally incapable of receiving anything in return. If he failed to respond to her request, his estate is mulcted in damages, though he died within two hours after the demand. Reversing the tables, we take the case of a man in the full vigor and strength of his manhood, promising to marry a wealthy widow, vigorous and strong at the time of the promise, who, on the day fixed for the marriage, is stricken with a fatal malady from which there is no hope of recovery. There is left her but a few days or weeks in which to live. On the day fixed, he appears and demands the consummation of the marriage. She tells him she is unable to marry because of her fatal malady. However, she is able, at the particular time, to go through the form and ceremony of marriage, though in it is involved great peril to her life. She refuses to consummate, and her estate becomes liable to him in damages. If consummated, he is placed in a position to receive a large portion of her estate. She receives nothing, in the consummation of the marriage, but the hollow mockery of an empty ceremony. If the rule in the Wright Case is adopted out of a chivalrous regard for the woman, it is thus seen it may fail in its application. This, we think, is the logical effect of the full application of the doctrine in Hall v. Wright, as followed by the New Jersey court of appeals. We are not inclined to follow these authorities.

We take from these authorities, based as we think on sound reasoning:

First. That one may repudiate an agreement to marry when, subsequent to the making of the contract, he becomes afflicted with a loathsome disease which, upon the consummation of the marriage, may be communicated to the spouse and to the offspring born of said marriage.

Second. When, after the making of the contract to marry, he becomes afflicted with a fatal and incurable malady, and the consummation of the marriage would hasten his death, he is not bound to perform by consummating the marriage, and therefore is not liable in damages for such failure. Or, in other words, that there is implied in every contract to marry that the parties will not endanger life or health in the consummation of the marriage, and that where illness or disease comes upon one after making the contract to marry, such as would render marriage dangerous to his life, a breach of the contract, based on such unavoidable and such unanticipated condition, is excusable. We do not mean by this that the danger should be simply problematical, or a possible contingency,—one that may or may not be a resultant consequence of the act of consummating the marriage,—but one in which the evidence renders reasonably certain the inevitable consequence of such an act. Where the malady is of such a fatal character that he cannot enter into the marriage relation and receive any of the benefits which grow out of, and are involved in, the relationship established by the consummation of the marriage, he is excused.

Third. That where one is stricken, before the time arrives for the consummation of the marriage, with a fatal malady, and has but a few days or weeks or months to live, and the evidence makes this reasonably certain, he is excused from the consummation of the marriage, and, being excused, L.R.A.1916D.

his estate, upon his death, is not liable in damages for such failure.

These are implied conditions in the agreement to marry, and the agreement to marry is voided by their happening; and, the agreement being void, no liability for damages results from the failure to perform. The first proposition rests upon public policy, as well as upon the conditions herein suggested. In the instant case, the evidence discloses without question that, before any time was fixed for the final consummation of the agreement to marry, the defendant was afflicted with a fatal malady,—a knowledge of which came to him before any suggestion was made by him, to the plaintiff, of any disposition on his part to withdraw from the performance of the contract and consummating it by marriage; that the malady was of a progressive character, and that he died soon after his conversation with the plaintiff in which she claims he breached his promise to consummate the marriage. Under the facts in this case, we are satisfied that the plaintiff has not shown a right to recover for the alleged breach of promise of marriage, and, on this issue, the case must also be affirmed.

Affirmed on both appeals.

Preston, Deemer, Weaver, and Ladd, JJ., concur.

Salinger, J., dissenting:

While being afflicted with a loathsome venereal disease is suffered to be a complete defense to breach of promise, it has been understood always that this rests on a narrow exception ingrafted upon the law of contracts; understood that such exception is not worked by tenderness to the defendant, but by reasoning that it will be a less evil to permit him to take advantage of his own wrong than to press him into a marriage which will offend public policy. The majority has extended the exception to what is not within the reason for the extension, to pernicious anemia, which while surely fatal, and usually so within a year, is neither infectious, contagious, nor transmissible. This exception is not enlarged on considerations of public policy, but on the ground that if performance of a contract will be injurious to one party to it, neither performance nor damages may be exacted of him. In my opinion, this violates both reason and authority. "Cessante ratione legis, cessat ipse lex," is disregarded. It, therefore, is not surprising that the opinion of the majority proves to be much more a strenuous effort to find reasons for a desired conclusion than the statement of a conclusion compelled by reasoning. In Broom, Legal Maxims, 7th ed. *251, it is said: "To a declaration for breach of promise of marriage, a plea that after the promise, and before breach, the defendant became afflicted with disease, which rendered him 'incapable of marriage without great danger of his life, and therefore unfit for the marriage state,' was recently held bad in accordance with the general rule that a man who has voluntarily contracted shall either perform his contract or pay damages for breach of it, the plea, moreover, not showing an impossibility of performance."

Addison on Contracts, the great English authority, in the last, the edition of 1903, at page 1180, says: "If subsequently to the making of a contract to marry, one of the parties by bodily disease becomes unfit for the performance of the most important duty of marriage, the party so unfitted is not thereby entitled to treat the contract as dissolved, the other party still desiring its performance. But the latter may break off the engagement; for if a man, by disease or mutilation, becomes impotent, he could never maintain an action against a woman for refusing to marry him."

For this he cites Hall v. Wright, El. Bl. & El. 746, decided in exchequer chamber, reversing a contrary decision below. This case fully sustains the text. In it the following plea was held to present no defense: "That defendant after the promise and before the breach, became afflicted with disease occasioning bleeding from the lungs, and by reason of such disease became incapable of marriage without great danger to his life, and therefore unfit for the marriage state."

Willes, J., in speaking of the contract, said: "Its performance is not impossible; and it is not enough to show, in answer to an action upon a contract, that its performance is inconvenient or may be dangerous. The delicacy of health, alleged as an excuse, is the man's misfortune, not to be visited, beyond what is inevitable, upon the woman. If either party is to have the option of breaking off the match, it ought to be the woman. The court have no right to say what is best for her. If the man were rich or distinguished, and the woman mercenary or ambitious, she might still desire to marry him for advancement in life. I do not sympathize with such a woman, if any there be, but this is not a question of sentiment. If it were, I might put the case of a real attachment, where such an illness as that stated in the plea supervening might make a woman even more anxious to marry, in order to be the companion and the nurse, if she could not be the mistress, of her sweetheart."

Crowder, J., said: "But I am of opinion that it is no excuse for the breach of a L.R.A.1916D.

promise to marry that the performance of the conjugal duties would be attended with danger to the defendant's life. Such a state of illness may make it a matter of the greatest prudence on his part to break his contract, and to pay such damages as a jury may award against him for the breach. But, in my opinion, it is no legal answer to the action."

Boast v. Firth, relied on by the majority, so far from sustaining the opinion, is affirmatively against it. It says (L. R. 4 C. P. [1868] at page 8): "In the case of a contract to marry, the man, though he may be in a bad state of health, may nevertheless perform his contract to marry the woman, and so give her the benefit of social position so far as is in his power, though he may be unable to fulfil all the obligations of the marriage state; and it rests with the woman to say whether she will enforce or renounce the contract."

Hall's Case was expressly approved in Smith v. Compton, 67 N. J. L. 548, 58 L.R.A. 480, 52 Atl. 386. There the contention was that defendant had a complete defense because, without his fault, he, after promise, contracted or developed a urinary disease which kept him under treatment, and which would be aggravated by sexual intercourse, and thus be an imminent hazard to his life. On appeal Justice Van Syckel said: "I agree with the . . . majority of the judges in Hall v. Wright, that it is not enough to show, in answer to an action upon the contract, after breach, that its performance is inconvenient or may be dangerous. Impossibility to perform will alone constitute an absolute bar. Ill health is the defendant's misfortune, not to be visited, beyond what is inevitable, upon the plaintiff. If the plaintiff was willing, in view of his social position, or that which she might acquire by reason of his wealth, to marry him, and await his restoration to health, she had the right to insist upon the benefit of the unconditional contract. If he was apprehensive of danger to his health or life, he could break the engagement, but was subject to such damages as a jury would award against him for the breach. That would, in effect, be a substituted performance in discharge of the obligation incurred. This is in consonance with the well-established rule which governs contracts, and, unless it is adhered to, the loss falls upon the party to whom no fault can be imputed."

II. The majority attempts to avoid these direct and palpably sound authorities by stating that the tendency of the "later cases" is against Hall v. Wright. The "later cases" consist of the one case of Sanders v. Coleman, 97 Va. 690, 47 L.R.A. 581,

34 S. E. 621, in which on identical plea of urinary disease, a conclusion opposite to that of Smith v. Compton, supra, is reached. It is sufficient comment upon the Sanders Case that its only citations are the Shackleford Case and the Allen Case. As to Shackleford v. Hamilton, 93 Ky. 80, 15 L.R.A. 531, 40 Am. St. Rep. 166, 19 S. W. 5, it is the fact, and the opinion itself shows it to be the fact, that it was decided wholly on the ground that the marriage of a syphilitic might have such consequences as that public policy will permit that disease to be urged as a complete bar to a promise to marry. While it in a way approves a statement in a dissent by Erle, J., in Hall v. Wright, supra, an examination will show that even this much, which is said merely arguendo, deals with the rights of the party not breaching. While Allen v. Baker, 86 N. C. 91, 41 Am. Rep. 444, has an abundance of rhetoric and language which, if broadly accepted, makes any disease a complete defense, it suffices to say that it, too, involves "a loathsome disease incurable in fact, and of such a nature as to render him unfit to enter the marriage relation with any one," and that its ultimate conclusion is: "We cannot understand how one can be liable for not fulfilling the contract when the very performance thereof would, in itself, amount to a great crime, not only against the individual, but against society itself."

2. The "support" of the Sanders Case, which the majority marshals, is remarkable. The Shackleford and the Allen Case have been discussed. Grover v. Zook, 44 Wash. 489, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 582, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1012, 87 Pac. 638, 12 Ann. Cas. 192, which the majority thinks supports the Sanders Case, cites the Shackleford Case. The Zook Case itself is decided wholly upon the ground that consumption is a complete defense because it is highly infectious and transmissible, and the ruling, once more, is put wholly upon grounds of public policy. The only support it affords to the claim of the majority, that aggravation of a disease which defendant has would justify his breach of promise, is the remark that "in addition to the thought of progeny, there would be also that of the aggravation of the disease as to both himself and prospective wife, the medical expert evidence showing that the intimate association of married life would tend to augment the ravages of the malady upon each."

To make plain that this is merely incidental argument, instead of the decision in the case, it is only necessary to examine its citations, which are Ryder's Case, 66 Vt. 158, 44 Am. St. Rep. 833, 28 Atl. 1029; Atchinson v. Baker, 2 Peake, N. P. Add. L.R.A.1916D.

Cas. 103, and Trammell v. Vaughan, 158 Mo. 214, 51 L.R.A. 854, 81 Am. St. Rep. 302, 59 S. W. 79, which last case the majority relies on affirmatively. It holds that discovery that defendant was affected with contagious venereal disease entitled him to postpone the marriage for a reasonable time whether or not plaintiff, with knowledge of his condition, was willing for the marriage to take place. Beans v. Denny, 141 Iowa, 52, 117 N. W. 1091, involves the rights of the party who is not diseased, and the nearest it comes to touching the case at bar is in its statement that one is excusable for declining to carry out the promise of marriage where the other party is afflicted with an incurable venereal disease, unless the promise was made with knowledge that the other party had such disease. The other cases relied on by the majority are the following, and seem to be utterly irrelevant: Vierling v. Binder, 113 Iowa, 339, 85 N. W. 621, is that where the defendant pleads he did not engage to marry because of physical condition of the plaintiff at the time when it is claimed he did make such engagement, he cannot show that she had these ailments at the time of the trial of her action for breach. Gring v. Lerch, 112 Pa. 244, 56 Am. Rep. 314, 3 Atl. 841, holds it to be a valid defense to the action that the woman was unable to have sexual intercourse, and, although she promised to submit to a surgical operation to cure the difficulty, refuses to do so. All that is decided by Goddard v. Westcott, 82 Mich. 180, 46 N. W. 242, is that plaintiff may be asked, on cross-examination, whether she had told certain persons she had a tumor, for the purpose of showing that she was not capable of making or carrying out the contract at the time inquired into, without fraud or injury to the defendant.

3. It seems to have been apprehended that the weight of direct case law is not with the opinion, and a labored attempt is made to fortify it with act of God law, and the general principles that govern mutuality of contract, and failure of consideration. To make use of the act of God cases, the majority is obliged to assume certain facts erroneously, to make unsound deductions from what is assumed, and to misapprehend what "act of God" is in law. To make this plain one need but point out that the opinion inquires whether death before breach would not be a complete defense, and answers that it would. This is true, but true because all the cases hold that that only is an act of God which makes any performance impossible. Death does that. As to the cases upon which the opinion relies (Robinson v. Davison, L. R. 6 Exch. 269, 40 L. J. Exch. N. S. 172, 24 L. T. N.

S. 755, 19 Week. Rep. 1036, and the cases therein cited and cited also by the majority, to wit, Dickey v. Linscott, 20 Me. 453, 37 Am. Dec. 66; Fenton v. Clark, 11 Vt. 557; Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40, 27 Am. Rep. 7; and Green v. Gilbert, 21 Wis. 395, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 694), each and all of them in some form or other involve the proposition that if one agree to perform personal labor or services which cannot be done by deputy, and become too ill to perform, he is excused. Certainly. Where one agrees to do labor, and, without fault of his, sickness makes it impossible for him to labor, there is a case which is in principle the equal of death. The law on this head is in no confusion. Dewey v. Union School Dist. 43 Mich. 480, 38 Am. Rep. 206, 5 N. W. 646, 647, and Carthage v. Gray, 10 Ind. App. 428, 37 N. E. 1059, declare that the performance of a contract will only be excused as being prevented by the act of God when there are intervening circumstances which render performance impossible, and not when they only make it difficult and undesirable; and hence the suspension of a school by reason of an epidemic of a contagious disease does not defeat the right of a teacher to compensation under his contract. In Ringeman v. State, 136 Ala. 131, 34 So. 351, sureties on a bail bond pleaded to a judgment nisi that after the execution the principal was so ill of consumption that it became necessary to the preservation or prolongation of his life for him to go to another state, and that at the time a forfeiture was taken a return could not have been made without serious detriment to his health nor without imminent danger of his death. It was held a bad plea because it did not aver impossibility of appearance by the principal resulting from an act of God; and that while his death in such case would have been the act of God in legal contemplation, illness, however severe and critical, is not. In support the case cites Cain v. State, 55 Ala. 170; State v. Crosby, 114 Ala. 11, 22 So. 110, 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 717; Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. 366, 21 L. ed. 287; Piercy v. People, 10 Ill. App. 219; Devine v. State, 5 Sneed, 623; and Scully v. Kirkpatrick, 79 Pa. 324, 21 Am. Rep. 64.

Not a case may be found in which vis major is applied to anything short of utter inability to perform at all. That it may not be in the very case at bar is squarely held in Broom's Legal Maxims, Addison on Contracts, Pollock on Contracts, and Boast v. Firth, relied on by the majority, and in Hall v. Wright and Smith v. Compton. These demonstrate that act of God has no application where performance is not rendered impossible. To avoid them the majority is forced to reason thus: (1) Act of God is a complete defense because it makes any performance impossible; (2) a fatal disease is an act of God; (3) defendant had such disease; (4) therefore, it was impossible for him to marry, and he is excused.

It is manifest the opinion was compelled to assume that his disease made performance by defendant impossible. This assumption counters the testimony adduced for defendant, including Dr. Patty, who said: "I do not mean to say he was unable to stand up and go through a ceremony of marriage." It assumes what is contrary to reason and common knowledge, and is against all the authorities that speak to the point, including those upon which the majority relies. See the authorities last referred to. It cannot be conceived how the mere going through the ceremony can have such or much effect on health or life, or, though one be in never so parlous a state of health, why he is incapable of becoming married.

The majority inquires whether in the extreme case of a demand for performance, when the other party is immediately to die and the ceremony involves "in it great peril to life," there should be a recovery. It is an extreme case, and the question might well be answered by asking whether if death be certain, though a year away, performance would be excused; for the two cases involve nothing but a difference in degree. But even as to the extreme case suggested, it can be said that in the first place the going through the ceremony cannot involve great or any other peril to life; that cases do occur in which the man, though mortally wounded and about to expire, has insisted upon giving his name and right of inheritance to the woman whom he had promised to marry, and that the situation presents no more than matter in mitigation. In such circumstances, the recovery would not be large, but that is no good reason for departing from the sound rules of the law of contracts. Better that recovery should be allowable in any case, than to disturb salutary elementary rules which prohibit a breach of contract, based on the desires or convenience of the one repudiating.

4. Realizing, no doubt, the weakness of argument based on the "impossibility" or injuriousness of going through the ceremony, it is insisted that marriage means more than being one party to the marriage service, and that marriage is "impossible" whenever one party is unable to respond to all that marriage means or should mean. This reasoning can be supported only by the application of general rules governing mutuality in contracts, or by assuming that the rearing of children is of itself the consummation of marriage, and its sole constituent. This last overlooks consortium, the privilege of bearing the name of the man, of being endowed with his social standing, and of the right of inheritance. Followed to the bitter end, any who are above a certain age may freely breach a contract to marry because there could be no offspring from their marriage. As the opinion itself shows, Pollock declares that impossibility of performance as applied to breach of contract to labor by reason of sickness has no place here, because to apply it would be "against the common understanding of mankind, and the general treatment of marriage by English law according to which the acquisition of legal or social position by marriage is a principal or independent object of the contract," and (Contracts 3d ed. p. 546) though defendant may be unable to fulfil all the obligations of the marriage, it rests with the woman to say whether she will enforce or renounce the contract,—all of which amounts to saying that there is no impossibility of performance, as the law understands the term, merely because children are impossible. In Boast v. Firth, relied on by the majority, it is said that the contract to marry may be performed despite bad health, because the sick man can "give her the benefit of social position so far as is in his power, though he may be unable to fulfil all the obligations of the marriage state."

In Grover v. Zook, also relied on by the majority, "the thought of progeniture" is treated as but one element, and the defendant is excused, not on that account, but because his pulmonary consumption made the marriage one against public policy. It has already been presented, by the illustration of an agreement to marry entered into by very old people, and by deathbed marriages, insisted upon by the one dying, that marriage on part of one who is mortally ill is not impossible, and that marriage involves more than children.

5. The theory of failure of consideration is not persuasive, either. This is the first time it has been invoked for the one who is unable to furnish full consideration. It involves a confusion of the parties. The woman might well refuse to marry because the condition of the man was such as that his marrying her would furnish no consideration for her promise to marry him. Reversing this leads to the remarkable result that one who had agreed to furnish certain things, and is unable to furnish them, or some of them, may plead a failure of consideration, and say that because he can furnish only half of what was agreed upon, that then, though the other party is satisfied with half, he need not perform at all, because he cannot furnish all. Such reasoning overlooks that where there may be part performance, and the one able to perform fully is willing to waive full performance by the other, it does not lie in the mouth of the one who is in default to complain. Take the illness cases before adverted to. There would be a wholly different ruling if one agreed to do copying in an office and also to sweep the office, and it transpired he was too ill to do the sweeping, but able to do the copying, and the employer was willing to accept copying as full performance of the contract. The employer might well refuse to perform if the other could not do all that was contracted for. But the opinion turns this round, and excuses one from doing what he can do because it is less than he agreed to do, even though the other party is willing to accept the shortage. Boast v. Firth, L. R. 4 C. P. 8, involves inability to perform labor, agreed to be performed, because of permanent sickness, and holds such illness to be an excuse; but it distinguishes Hall v. Wright, El. Bl. & El. 746, by pointing out that while the apprentice in the Boast Case could not perform, on contract to marry, the man, though he may be in a bad state of health, may perform to some extent, and he may not avail himself of his disability if the woman is willing to accept part performance. One can understand how, on the reasoning of the majority, a young woman who had agreed to marry an octogenarian might decline performance on the ground that there was no consideration for her promise, but it is beyond me to understand how the old man can interpose such plea to excuse performance on his part, when the other party remains willing.

"Where the malady is of such a fatal character that he cannot enter into the marriage relation and receive any of the benefits which grow out of and are involved in the relationship established by the consummation of the marriage, he is excused," says the majority. And if "either party is rendered incapable of giving that which the contract calls for, the other party may repudiate the agreement . . . because of the failure . . . of the consideration upon which the promise rests." And, one may "refuse to perform when by the act of God he has become wholly incapable of receiving any of the consideration."

Is the majority prepared to follow this where it may lead? If one have spectacles fitted and immediately thereafter become blind, is he excused from paying for the work and the glasses because an act of God has made them of no use to him? Will the amputation of both feet after ordering boots absolve from payment? If one ordered lemons, and by the time they reached him in due course of transportation he found himself suffering from some disease of the throat that would make it agony for him to use the lemon juice as he had intended, it would follow, on the reasoning of the majority, that he could refuse to pay.

6. The majority says: "If the woman may repudiate the contract because the man has become by the act of God in such a condition physically as to render him incapable of giving to her all that under the consummated contract she is entitled to, then the man may, the contract being mutual, refuse to perform when by the act of God he has become wholly incapable of receiving any of the consideration which the consummated contract entitled him to. One cannot give to another that which the other is wholly incapable of receiving."

This overlooks all that has just been said, and holds that because one who has the right to repudiate chooses to waive that right, the other is thereby authorized to repudiate. So far as the doctrine of mutuality of contracts is applicable the cases do apply it. Either may defend on the ground that his or her disease is such as that performance would violate public policy. To go beyond this is to apply one of the exceptional rules in specific performance to the case of this contract. There is a rule in specific performance that one who was himself unable to perform when the contract was made cannot have this particular remedy, even though he becomes able to perform before he brings action. Luse v. Deitz, 46 Iowa, 205; Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. 33 Iowa, 422. Self-evidently, this rule can have no application in any case where the court is without power to compel specific performance. A marriage is manifestly one of the things that may not be compelled by court order. Consequently that one is not bound to marry a plaintiff who is sick does not make a law rule that where plaintiff is willing to marry a defendant, though sick, such defendant may breach his contract because he is sick. If one can conceive the inconceivable case of a promise to marry being brought into chancery on application for specific performance, then, the granting of the relief being discretionary, it might well be that in a case where performance would entail physical danger to the party in default, the chancellor would use his discretion and relegate the one not in default to some remedy other than specific performance. But here the essential position of the defendant is that, because it will work an injury to him and him alone, because if he kept his promise the consortium he could give would be of less value than if he were well, therefore the party not in fault is entitled to no relief.

I would reverse on the appeal of defendant.

Evans, Ch. J.:

I am not averse in spirit to the condition imposed by the majority upon the marriage promise. Its reasonableness is that it softens harshness in the enforcement of a contract which from its very nature ought to be characterized by tenderness. However, to subject such contracts to such a condition as a continuing and necessary qualification thereof is to declare a measure of disability. This is a purely legislative prerogative, and not a judicial one.

In the absence, therefore, of qualifying legislation, I feel constrained to join the dissent, as declaring for the recognition of the contract as actually made by the parties.

Annotation—Ill health as defense to action for breach of promise to marry.

Earlier cases covering the question under annotation will be found in notes to Grover v. Zook, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 582, and Travis v. Schnebly, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 585.

The cases which have considered the question under annotation from the point of view of the right of a defendant in a breach of promise action to set up his own ill health as defense have, as will be seen from the cases collected in the earlier notes, and as pointed out in the dissenting opinion in RE OLDFIELD, ante, 1260, been, with few exceptions, cases where defendant had an infectious or contagious disease, and the ground of the decision as well as the contention of L.R.A.1916D.

the defense has been that it would be contrary to public policy to hold that one should marry where there is danger of communicating disease to the other party or transmitting it to offspring. Of the cases decided in the earlier notes, but three have set up as justification for the breach that defendant's own life and health would be endangered by a consummation of the marriage relation. Two of these are opposed to RE OLDFIELD, and the third, which sustains it, relies on cases as in RE OLDFIELD, where the disease was infectious or contagious.

Since the earlier notes it has been held that ill health of plaintiff, known to the defendant at the time a promise of marriage was made, is no defense to a breach of promise suit. Lemke v. Franzenburg (1913) 159 Iowa, 466, 141 N. W. 332.

Nor is it a defense to an action for breach of promise of marriage, that the defendant honestly and on reasonable ground believed that plaintiff was unfit for marriage, where she was not in fact unfit for marriage. Jefferson v. Paskell [1916] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 57, 85 L. J. K. B. N. S. 398, 113 L. T. N. S. 1189, 32 Times L. R. 69. Phillimore, L. J., said that "a contract of marriage is in this respect like any other contract. A justification for the refusal to carry it out must be found in the actual facts, and not on belief or opinion, however reasonable or honest as to what the facts are. If instead of want of health, the question had been one of want of chastity, it will be very apparent that the objective truth, and not the subjective belief, would have to be looked for."

Where a defendant in a breach of promise suit admits that he had agreed to marry plaintiff if she regained her health, and there is evidence that she went to a physician suggested by defendant, and, after being treated, reported that she had practically regained her health, there is no error in permitting such physician to testify as to what he told plaintiff regarding her recovery, nor in permitting him to testify directly that plaintiff had recovered her health, and that such slight trouble as she had would be cured by marriage. Lemke v. Franzenburg (Iowa) supra.

In Parsons v. Trowbridge (1915) 140 C. C. A. 310, 226 Fed. 15, action for breach of promise of marriage by another woman against the same defendant as in RE OLDFIELD, the plaintiff assigned as error the refusal to give a requested instruction and of the giving instead thereof, of the following. That "if it be a fact that Mr. Oldfield had a disease known as pernicious anemia as illustrated by the testimony in this case, it would not be a sufficient excuse on his part for not carrying out the contract and having the ceremony performed. But if he had pernicious anemia, and believed that it would be fatal after a year or so from such time, you would have a right to consider that upon the question of amount of damages." The court held that this instruction was almost identical with the one requested by plaintiff, and was as favorable to her as she was entitled to. There is nothing in this decision which can be said to be in conflict with the decision in RE OLDFIELD.
J. H. B.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

MICHAEL LA VECK

v.

PARKE, DAVIS, & COMPANY, Plff. in Certiorari.

((— Mich. —, 157 N. W. 72.)

Master and servant — workmen's compensation — paralysis as accident.

Paralysis due to cerebral hemorrhage in one suffering from arterial sclerosis, because of prolonged exertion in a hot room in the course of his employment, is within the operation of a workmen's compensation act

Note. — As to recovery of compensation under workmen's compensation acts for incapacity resulting from disease, see annotation following Adams v. Acme White Lead & Color Works, L.R.A.1916A, 289; and see also later cases, Industrial Commission v. Brown, L.R.A.1916B, 1277, and Carroll v. What Cheer Stables Co. L.R.A.1916D, 154.

Generally as to workmen's compensation acts, see annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 23, and other annotation in that volume referred to in the Index to Notes under the title, "Workmen's Compensation."
L.R.A.1916D.

providing compensation for accidental injuries.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 30, 1916.)

CERTIORARI to the Industrial Accident Board to review its finding awarding compensation to claimant for personal injuries sustained by him while in defendant's employ. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles M. Woodruff, for plaintiff in certiorari:

Neither the testimony nor the finding of the Industrial Accident Board discloses any accident within the contemplation of the workingmen's compensation act to which claimant's injury was due.

Adams v. Acme White Lead & Color Works, 182 Mich. 157, L.R.A. 1916A, 283, 148 N. W. 485, 6 N. C. C. A. 482; 1 Cyc. 228; Sinclair v. Maritime Pass. Assur. Co. 3 El. & El. 478, 30 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 77, 7 Jur. N. S. 367, 4 L. T. N. S. 15, 9 Week. Rep. 342; Schneider v. Provident L. Ins. Co. 24 Wis. 28, 1 Am. Rep. 157, 7 Am.

Neg. Cas. 174; Feder v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Asso. 107 Iowa, 538, 43 L.R.A. 693, 70 Am. St. Rep. 212, 78 N. W. 252; McCarthy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 8 Biss. 362, Fed. Cas. No. 8,682; Hensey v. White [1900] 1 Q. B. 481, 69 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 188, 48 Week. Rep. 257, 63 J. P. 804, 81 L. T. N. S. 767, 16 Times L. R. 64; Broderrick v. London County Council [1908] 2 K. B. 807, 77 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1127, 99 L. T. N. S. 569, 24 Times L. R. 822, 15 Ann. Cas. 885; Eke v. Hart-Dyke [1910] 2 K. B. 677, 80 L. J. K. B. N. S. 90, 103 L. T. N. S. 174, 26 Times L. R. 613, 3 B. W. C. C. 482, 3 N. C. C. A. 230; Black v. New Zealand Shipping Co. 6 B. W. C. C. 720.

Mr. H. R. Martin, for defendant in certiorari:

The findings of fact made by the Board are conclusive.

Bayne v. Riverside Storage & Cartage Co. 181 Mich. 378, 148 N. W. 412, 5 N. C. C. A. 837; Redfield v. Michigan Workmen's Compensation Mut. Ins. Co. 183 Mich. 633, 150 N. W. 362, 8 N. C. C. A. 889.

An injury such as the claimant received is an accident within the compensation act.

Adams v. Acme White Lead & Color Works, 182 Mich. 157, L.R.A. 1916A, 283, 148 N. W. 485, 6 N. C. C. A. 482; Bayne v. Riverside Storage & Cartage Co. 181 Mich. 378, 148 N. W. 412, 5 N. C. C. A. 837; M'Innes v. Dunsmuir & Jackson, 45 Scot. L. R. 804, 1 B. W. C. C. 226; Ismay, I. & Co. v. Williamson, 42 Ir. Law Times, 213, 1 B. W. C. C. 232; Hughes v. Clover C. & Co. [1909] W. N. 187, 75 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1057, 25 Times L. R. 760, 127 L. T. Jo. 322, 2 B. W. C. C. 18; Fenton v. J. Thorley & Co. [1903] A. C. 443, 72 L. J. K. B. N. S. 787, 52 Week. Rep. 81, 89 L. T. N. S. 314, 19 Times L. R. 684, 5 W. C. C. 1; Morgan v. The S. S. Zenaida, 25 Times L. R. 446, 2 B. W. C. C. 19; Johnson v. The S. S. Torrington, 3 B. W. C. C. 68; Davies v. Gillespie, 105 L. T. N. S. 494, 28 Times L. R. 6, 56 Sol. Jo. 11, 5 B. W. C. C. 64; Doughton v. Hickman, 6 B. W. C. C. 77; Brofurst v. The S. S. Blomfield, 6 B. W. C. C. 613; Maskery v. Lancashire Shipping Co. [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 290, 6 N. C. C. A. 708; Tank v. Milwaukee, decided 1914 by Wisconsin Industrial Acci. Commission; Ross v. Tube Co. (Ohio, 1914); Kringle v. Meyers (Ill. 1914); Voorhees v. Smith Schoonmaker Co. 86 N. J. L. 500, 92 Atl. 280, 7 N. C. C. A. 646; Brightman's Case, 220 Mass. 17, L.R.A. 1916A, 321, 107 N. E. 527, 8 N. C. C. A. 102.

Moore, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is certiorari by the respondent to the Industrial Accident Board to review a finding of the Board awarding compensation to the claimant. The brief of appellant begins as follows:

"Appellant does not question the Industrial Accident Board's finding of facts, and only refers to the testimony of record to amplify the same."

It will be helpful to quote from the opinion of the Industrial Accident Board:

"In this case the committee of arbitration denied applicant's claim for compensation, and applicant thereupon appealed the case to the full Board for review. Since the arbitration a considerable amount of additional testimony was taken, particularly medical testimony tending to show that the probable cause of the paralysis from which the applicant suffers was a cerebral hemorrhage caused by heat and overexertion, together with a diseased condition of his arteries, known as arterial sclerosis of some two years' standing.

"The evidence fairly tends to show that the paralysis resulted from the rupture of a small blood vessel in the brain. We say 'small' because the paralysis was gradual, being first noticed by the dropping of a flask from the hand, later on by inability to use his arm, and still later by the paralysis of one side of the body. The work which applicant was doing was making bouillon from beef by boiling and certain other processes in a room and with retorts and appliances maintained for that purpose by respondent. The weather was hot, and an extra amount of bouillon was made that week, so as to have enough to meet the demands of the plant while the apparatus was being transferred to a new room which was to be equipped for such work. A high degree of heat was required in the process, and, although the retorts were so constructed as to protect the operator as far as possible from the heat and steam, a considerable quantity of both escaped into the workroom at the times of making the various changes connected with the process. No visible accident occurred, and no event causing external violence to applicant's body. It was apparently conceded on the hearing that the cause of the paralysis was in the brain, the applicant contending that it was the rupture of the cerebral blood vessel, while the respondent contended that the paralysis resulted from the clogging of such vessel. The testimony on behalf of the applicant tended to show that on account of the condition of his arteries a cerebral hemorrhage was likely to result from the increased pressure caused by unusual heat and overexertion, and that in the opinion of his experts such hemorrhage did occur, resulting finally in the total paralysis of one side of the body. Was it an accident within the meaning of the law, and did it arise out of and in the course of applicant's employment?

"Under the doctrine laid down in the 'Spanner Case,' so-called, and also in other and later English cases, this would be an accident. In Fenton v. J. Thorley & Co. 5 W. C. C. 4, the question of what constitutes an accident is exhaustively discussed, Lord Macnaghten's opinion being in subsequent cases regarded as authority, and this being regarded as a leading case. Lord Macnaghten's opinion is an able discussion of the principle involved and a review of the authorities. In the opinion of Lord Robertson on page 9, it is said: 'In the present instance a man by an act of overexertion broke the wall of his abdomen. Suppose the wheel had yielded and been broken by exactly the same act; surely the breakage would be rightly described as accidental.'

"In M'Innes v. Dunsmuir & Jackson, 1 B. W. C. C. 226, it is held that, where overexertion brings on a cerebral hemorrhage and paralysis, it is an accident entitling the workman to compensation. The court say on page 229: 'It is the giving way of an artery causing effusion of blood on the brain, and I am unable to see any distinction between this kind of physiological injury resulting in disablement, and the kind of injury we had to consider in the case of Stewart.'

"On page 231 the court quote from the Thorley Case as follows: 'If a workman has suffered an injury by breaking a limb or by a rupture while he is trying to lift a weight too heavy for him, then, according to the ordinary use of language, one would say that the injury was caused by an accident which he met with while he was engaged in his work. I think the same rule of construction applies to the question before us, and that we should say that this man suffered from the bursting of a blood vessel while trying to lift a weight too heavy for him. That it might not have been too heavy for a man whose arteries were in a sound condition is nothing to the purpose. In the condition in which this man's arteries were, he was undertaking a work which was too great for him.'

"In Ismay I. & Co. v. Williamson, 43 Ir. Law Times, 213, 1 B. W. C. C. 232, it is held that where a seaman died from a heat stroke while raking the fire, that it was an accident entitling him to compensation. This is a House of Lords case, and follows the rule laid down in the Thorley Case."

"In Johnson v. The S. S. Torrington, 3 B. W. C. C. 70, it was held that, where a fireman working in the hold of a vessel under great heat and drinking large quantities of water had an apoplectic stroke, it was an accident within the meaning of the compensation law. The court treats the principle as established, and holds that the determination of the case was a question of fact."

"In Hughes v. Clover, C. & Co. 2 B. W. C. C. 17 (the Spanner Case), the court say: 'Every man brings some disability with him. Any exertion of any external action which might have been innocuous to a man in good health may produce most serious results to the workman bringing with him, as I have said, some disability. This man brought with him a disability of a serious nature—an aneurism—which I quite agree might have caused his death at some time or other without any exertion, usual or unusual. But in this case we have this fact found that a strain incurred by the workman in the ordinary discharge of his duties caused the rupture from which he died. As I read the decisions in the House of Lords, it is not open to this court to say that this is not an accident. It is impossible, I think, to read the judgment of Lord Macnaghten in Fenton v. J. Thorley & Co. without seeing that this case is exactly and precisely within the language which he used. But if there were any doubt about that, the more recent decision of the House of Lords in Ismay I. & S. Co. v. Williamson, is really a much stronger case than this.' In that case Lord Loreburn said: 'To my mind the weakness of the deceased which predisposed him to this form of attack is immaterial. The fact that a man who had died from heat stroke was by a physical debility more likely than others so to suffer can have nothing to do with the question whether what befell him is to be regarded as an accident or not. If a workman in the reasonable performance of his duties sustains a physiological injury as a result of the work he is engaged in, this is an accidental injury in the words of the statute.'

"In the case of Broforst v. The S. S. Blomfield, 6 B. W. C. C. 613, where a workman shoveling coal in the fire of a vessel had an apoplectic stroke which was found by the trial court to be due to the rupture of an artery in the brain which was attributed to heat and exertion, it was held that he was entitled to compensation, and that the question was one of fact which the appellate court could not review."

"From a careful examination of all the facts and evidence in the case, the board is of the opinion that the strain upon the weakened arteries of the applicant caused by overexertion and excessive heat was more than they could stand, and resulted in the rupture of a blood vessel in the brain, which was followed by a gradual effusion of blood, resulting in the gradual paralysis, and finally disabling one side of the body. The award of the committee will be reversed, and applicant granted compensation."

We cannot state the claim of appellant better than to quote from the reply brief as follows:

"As pointed out in his brief, respondent does not question the Industrial Accident Board's finding of facts, but does affirm that the essential facts are not clearly stated, and that it is necessary to refer to the testimony to understand what the Board means by certain words, phrases, and references. Before doing this, however, counsel for respondent wishes his position as to the law distinctly understood, so that his comments upon the finding of the Board may be read in the light thereof.

"Counsel for respondent claims that the principles, the arguments, the reasoning upon which the decision in Adams v. Acme White Lead & Color Works, 182 Mich. 157, L.R.A. 1916A, 283, 148 N. W. 485, 6 N. C. C. A. 482, was based, control the present case as effectually as it did the case there decided, notwithstanding claimant in the case at bar cannot be said to have suffered an 'occupational' disease. . . .

"That the word 'accident' is not subject to a special construction, but must be understood in the light of common-law definitions and common-law decisions. . . .

"Third. The accident contemplated by the Michigan act must be some 'casualty' occurring on some day which can be definitely fixed, and from which the time within which notice of the injury must be given, and demand for compensation must be made, can be determined. This proposition is clearly indicated in the Adams Case."

"Fourth. It is therefore submitted that, unless it appears that some accident within the meaning of the common law occurred that was the exciting cause of the gradually developing cerebral hemorrhage referred to in the case, the claimant and appellee is not entitled to compensation under the Michigan compensation act."

Counsel cites other authorities in support of his contention, among them Feder

v. Traveling Men's Asso. 107 Iowa, 538, 43 L.R.A. 693, 70 Am. St. Rep. 212, 78 N. W. 252. Counsel also contends that the authorities counsel for appellee cites from New Jersey and Massachusetts are not applicable, because the statutes of those states are different from the Michigan statute. It must be conceded there is some confusion in the authorities.

We cannot agree with counsel that the case of Adams v. White Lead & Color Works, supra, is conclusive of the instant case. In that case the sole question was: Is an occupational disease within the statute? It was held that it was not. The case is more like the case of Bayne v. Storage & Cartage Co. 181 Mich. 378, 148 N. W. 412, 5 N. C. C. A. 837. In that case Mr. Bayne undoubtedly intended to do the lifting which he did, but he did not expect the effect would be to hurt his back, with resulting pneumonia. In the instant case Mr. La Veck intended to do the prolonged work which the situation demanded, but he did not anticipate that because of doing so his blood pressure would be so increased as to result in the rupture of a cerebral blood vessel. According to the testimony of some of the physicians that result could be traced to the unusual hours of work and the unusual conditions. It was an unexpected consequence from the continued work in the excessively warm room.

Where there is testimony upon which the Accident Board can base its conclusion, we will not review its action. Bayne v. Storage & Cartage Co. supra; Redfield v. Michigan Workmen's Compensation Mut. Ins. Co. 183 Mich. 633, 150 N. W. 362, 8 N. C. C. A. 889. Other cases than those mentioned in the opinion of the Industrial Accident Board which support its conclusions are Voorhees v. Smith Schoonmaker Co. 86 N. J. L. 500, 92 Atl. 280, 7 N. C. C. A. 646; Doughton v. Heckman, 6 B. W. C. C. 77; Maskery v. Lancashire Shipping Co. [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 290, 6 N. C. C. A. 708. See also the cases cited in note c, p. 714, of 6 N. C. C. A.

The order is affirmed.

NEW MEXICO SUPREME COURT.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF ALBUQUERQUE, Appt.,

v.

RODERICK STOVER.

(— N. M. —, 155 Pac. 905.)

Bills and notes — provision for extension.

1. A promissory note containing the provision that "all parties hereto, . . . L.R.A.1916D.

agree that this note may be extended from time to time by any one or more of us without the knowledge or consent of any of the others of us, and after such extension the liability of all parties shall remain as if no such extension had been made," grants no power to the maker or other parties to the note to extend the time of payment without the consent of the payee or holder.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, VI. 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by PARKER, J.

Digitized by Google

Same — negotiability.

2. A provision in a note in the foregoing form does not render the note non-negotiable under the law merchant or the provisions of the negotiable instrument law (Laws 1907, chap. 83).

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, I. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

On Rehearing.*Same — good-faith purchaser — suspicious circumstances.

3. The general principle, running throughout the whole law, that notices of facts which should put one upon inquiry and which, if followed up with diligence and understanding, would lead to the truth, had no application to the question of good faith in the taking of negotiable instruments. The question in such cases is, Did the holder have actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith? Suspicious circumstances, negligence, or wilful ignorance may be evidence of bad faith from which the jury may find the fact. The holder, however, will be protected unless, at the time he took the paper, he had reason to believe, and did believe, there was some defect or infirmity in the paper. The facts in this case examined, and held not to authorize a finding that the appellant bank did not take the note in good faith; there being no substantial evidence to support any such finding.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, V. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

On Second Motion for Rehearing.*Appeal — sufficiency of proof.

4. Sections 646, 649, 653, Code 1915, applied, and held that the plaintiff bank, under the circumstances, took the note in question charged with the burden of proof that it took the same in due course. Held, further, that under the proof, that burden had been successfully met. Held, further, that where the evidence was all one way, and the witness stands unimpeached in any way, his evidence is to be taken by this court as true in determining whether there is any substantial evidence to support the verdict.

Note.—As to effect on negotiability of promissory note of provision permitting extension of time, see note to State Bank v. Bilstad, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 132. The effect upon negotiability of a provision accelerating maturity is considered in notes to Holladay State Bank v. Hoffman, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 390, and Kennedy v. Broderick, L.R.A.1915B, 472; and see later case, Finley v. Smith, L.R.A.1915F, 777.

As to the circumstances sufficient to put a purchaser of negotiable paper on inquiry, see notes to Mee v. Carlson, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 351; and McPherrin v. Tittle, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 395; and later case Security Trust & Sav. Bank v. Gleichmann, L.R.A.1915F, 1203.

L.R.A.1916D.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. 1, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 30, 1915.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Bernalillo County granting defendant's motion for a directed verdict in his favor, and overruling a motion for a new trial, in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. B. McMillen, for appellant:

Plaintiff is entitled to the judgment in this court which the district court should have rendered.

Tagliaferri v. Grande, 16 N. M. 486, 120 Pac. 730; Armstrong v. Aragon, 13 N. M. 19, 79 Pac. 291; 3 Cyc. 451; Reilly v. McKinnon, 86 C. C. A. 258, 159 Fed. 78; Scandinavian American Bank v. Johnston, 63 Wash. 187, 115 Pac. 108; Sinkler v. Siljan, 136 Cal. 356, 68 Pac. 1024.

To defeat plaintiff as a bona fide holder it must be shown either that the plaintiff had actual notice, or that it was guilty of fraud or bad faith in taking the paper.

Lawson v. Weston, 4 Esp. 56; Crook v. Jadia, 5 Barn. & Ad. 909, 3 Nev. & M. 257, 6 Car. & G. 191, 3 L. J. K. B. N. S. 87; Goodman v. Harvey, 4 Ad. & El. 870, 6 L. J. K. B. N. S. 260, 6 Nev. & M. 372; Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall. 121, 17 L. ed. 859; Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 865; Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. 343, 15 L. ed. 934; Bank of Pittsburgh v. Neal, 22 How. 96, 16 L. ed. 323; Cromwell v. Sac County, 96 U. S. 58, 24 L. ed. 686; Shaw v. North Pennsylvania R. Co. (Shaw v. Merchants' Nat. Bank) 101 U. S. 564, 25 L. ed. 894; Swift v. Smith, 102 U. S. 442, 26 L. ed. 193; Second Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 165 Pa. 199, 44 Am. St. Rep. 653, 30 Atl. 957; Phelan v. Moss, 67 Pa. 59, 5 Am. Rep. 402; Richards v. Monroe, 85 Iowa, 359, 39 Am. St. Rep. 304, 52 N. W. 339; Cheever v. Pittsburgh, S. & L. E. R. Co. 150 N. Y. 65, 34 L.R.A. 69, 55 Am. St. Rep. 649, 44 N. E. 701; Kitchen v. Loudenback, 48 Ohio St. 177, 29 Am. St. Rep. 544, 26 N. E. 979; Rosemond v. Graham, 54 Minn. 330, 40 Am. St. Rep. 338, 56 N. W. 38; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. McNeil, 51 Minn. 123, 53 N. W. 178; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Hanson, 33 Minn. 40, 53 Am. Rep. 5, 21 N. W. 849; Jennings v. Todd, 118 Mo. 303, 40 Am. St. Rep. 377, 24 S. W. 148; Wilson v. Denton, 82 Tex. 531, 27 Am. St. Rep. 912, 18 S. W. 620; Breckenridge v. Lewis, 84 Me. 349, 30 Am. St. Rep. 357, 24 Atl. 864; Farrell v. Lovett, 68 Me. 326, 28 Am. Rep. 59;

- Kellogg v. Curtis, 69 Me. 212, 31 Am. Rep. 273; Youle v. Fosha, 76 Kan. 20, 90 Pac. 1091; Eames v. Crosier, 101 Cal. 280, 35 Pac. 873; Matlock v. Scheuerman, 51 Or. 49, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 747, 93 Pac. 828; McPherrin v. Tittle, 36 Okla. 510, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 395, 129 Pac. 722; Scandinavian American Bank v. Johnston, 63 Wash. 187, 115 Pac. 102; Reilly v. McKinnon, 86 C. C. A. 268, 159 Fed. 78; Union Nat. Bank v. Neill, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 426, 79 C. C. A. 417, 149 Fed. 711; First Nat. Bank v. Moore, 78 C. C. A. 581, 148 Fed. 953; National Salt Co. v. Ingraham, 74 C. C. A. 479, 143 Fed. 805; Tabor v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 48 Ark. 454, 3 Am. St. Rep. 241, 3 S. W. 805; Sinkler v. Siljan, 136 Cal. 356, 68 Pac. 1024; Meyer v. Lovdal, 6 Cal. App. 369, 92 Pac. 322; Merchants' Bank v. McClelland, 9 Colo. 610, 13 Pac. 723; Credit Co. v. Howe Mach. Co. 54 Conn. 357, 1 Am. St. Rep. 123, 8 Atl. 472; Rowland v. Fowler, 47 Conn. 347; Winter v. Hutchins, 20 Idaho, 749, 119 Pac. 883; Vaughn v. Johnson, 20 Idaho, 669, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 816, 119 Pac. 879; Park v. Brandt, 20 Idaho, 660, 119 Pac. 877; Kavanagh v. Bank of America, 239 Ill. 404, 88 N. E. 171; Bradwell v. Pryor, 221 Ill. 602, 77 N. E. 1115; Shreeves v. Allen, 79 Ill. 553; Comstock v. Hannah, 76 Ill. 530; First Nat. Bank v. Cox, 140 Ill. App. 98; Howell v. Merchants' Trust & Secur. Co. 134 Ill. App. 467; Norlin v. Becker, 138 Ill. App. 488; Batesville Bank v. Lehner, 43 Ind. App. 457, 87 N. E. 990; Harris v. Pate, 7 Ind. Terr. 493, 104 S. W. 812; Voss v. Chamberlain, 139 Iowa, 568, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 106, 130 Am. St. Rep. 331, 117 N. W. 269; Montrose Sav. Bank v. Claussen, 137 Iowa, 73, 114 N. W. 547; Youle v. Fosha, 76 Kan. 20, 90 Pac. 1090; Fox v. Bank of Kansas City, 30 Kan. 446, 1 Pac. 789; McCarty v. Louisville Bkg. Co. 100 Ky. 4, 37 S. W. 144; Wing v. Ford, 89 Me. 140, 35 Atl. 1023; Breckenridge v. Lewis, 84 Me. 349, 30 Am. St. Rep. 353, 24 Atl. 864; Kellogg v. Curtis, 69 Me. 212, 31 Am. Rep. 273; Ebert v. Gitt, 95 Md. 186, 52 Atl. 900; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Hooper, 47 Md. 88; Maitland v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 40 Md. 540, 17 Am. Rep. 620; Commercial & F. Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 30 Md. 11, 96 Am. Dec. 554; Ellicott v. Martin, 6 Md. 509, 61 Am. Dec. 327; Clark v. Roberts, 206 Mass. 235, 92 N. E. 461; Savage v. Goldsmith, 181 Mass. 420, 63 N. E. 918; Stimson v. Whitney, 130 Mass. 591; Carroll v. Hayward, 124 Mass. 120; Atlas Nat. Bank v. Savery, 127 Mass. 75, 34 Am. Rep. 345; Smith v. Livingston, 111 Mass. 342; Spooner v. Holmes, 102 Mass. 503, 3 Am. Rep. 491; Hakes v. Thayer, 165 Mich. 476, 131 N. W. 174; Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co. 158 Mich. 557, 123 N. W. L.R.A.1916D.
- 28; Armstrong v. Stearns, 156 Mich. 597, 121 N. W. 312; Custard v. Hodges, 155 Mich. 361, 119 N. W. 583; Davis v. Seeley, 71 Mich. 210, 38 N. W. 901; Rosenstein v. Berman, 116 Minn. 231, 133 N. W. 792; Park v. Winsor, 115 Minn. 256, 132 N. W. 264; Robbins v. Swinburne Printing Co. 91 Minn. 491, 98 N. W. 331, 867; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Hanson, 33 Minn. 40, 53 Am. Rep. 5, 21 N. W. 849; Borgess Invest. Co. v. Vette, 142 Mo. 560, 64 Am. St. Rep. 567, 44 S. W. 754; Jennings v. Todd, 118 Mo. 296, 40 Am. St. Rep. 373, 24 S. W. 148; Edwards v. Thomas, 66 Mo. 483; Mayes v. Robinson, 93 Mo. 121, 5 S. W. 611; Bank of Ozark v. Tuttle, 144 Mo. App. 294, 127 S. W. 918; Jobes v. Wilson, 140 Mo. App. 281, 124 S. W. 548; Paul S. Reeves & Son v. Letts, 143 Mo. App. 196, 128 S. W. 246; Ozark Bank v. Hanks, 142 Mo. App. 110, 125 S. W. 221; Harrington v. Butte & B. Min. Co. 33 Mont. 330, 114 Am. St. Rep. 821, 83 Pac. 467; First Nat. Bank v. Borchers, 83 Neb. 530, 120 N. W. 142; Norwood v. Bank of Commerce, 77 Neb. 205, 109 N. W. 152; Hallock v. Young, 72 N. H. 416, 57 Atl. 236; Hamilton v. Vought, 34 N. J. L. 190; Magee v. Badger, 34 N. Y. 247, 90 Am. Dec. 691; Cheever v. Pittsburgh, S. & L. E. R. Co. 150 N. Y. 59, 34 L.R.A. 69, 55 Am. St. Rep. 646, 44 N. E. 701; Perth Amboy Mut. Loan, H. & Bldg. Assn. v. Chapman, 178 N. Y. 558, 70 N. E. 1104; Second Nat. Bank v. Weston, 172 N. Y. 250, 64 N. E. 949; Jarvis v. Manhattan Beach Co. 148, N. Y. 652, 31 L.R.A. 776, 51 Am. St. Rep. 727, 43 N. E. 68; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Germania L. Ins. Co. 150 N. C. 770, 64 S. E. 902; Setzer v. Deal, 135 N. C. 428, 47 S. E. 466; Walters v. Rock, 18 N. D. 45, 115 N. W. 511; Johnson v. Way, 27 Ohio St. 374; Matlock v. Scheuerman, 51 Or. 49, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 747, 93 Pac. 823; Phelan v. Moss, 67 Pa. 59, 5 Am. Rep. 402; McSparran v. Neeley, 91 Pa. 17; Second Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 165 Pa. 199, 44 Am. St. Rep. 652, 30 Atl. 957; Walker v. Kee, 14 S. C. 142; Witte v. Williams, 8 S. C. 290, 28 Am. Rep. 294; First Nat. Bank v. Anderson, 28 S. C. 143, 5 S. E. 343; Graneaux v. Wheeler, 6 Tex. 526; Wilson v. Denton, 82 Tex. 531, 27 Am. St. Rep. 908, 18 S. W. 620; Cochran v. Priddy, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 39, 107 S. W. 616; Frank v. Lilienfeld, 33 Gratt. 390; First Nat. Bank v. Johns, 22 W. Va. 535, 46 Am. Rep. 506; Merchants' & M. Nat. Bank v. Ohio Valley Furniture Co. 57 W. Va. 625, 70 L.R.A. 312, 50 S. E. 890; Kelley v. Whitney, 45 Wis. 110, 30 Am. Rep. 697; Winter v. Nobs, 19 Idaho, 18, 112 Pac. 525, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 302; Arnd v. Aylesworth, 145 Iowa, 185, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 638, 123 N. W. 1000; Bothwell v. Corum, 135 Ky.

766, 123 S. W. 291; Valley Sav. Bank v. Mercer, 97 Md. 458, 55 Atl. 435; Jefferson Bank v. Chapman White Lyons Co. 122 Tenn. 415, 123 S. W. 641; Cherry v. First Texas Chemical Mfg. Co. 103 Tex. 82, 123 S. W. 689; Bank of Sampson v. Hatcher, 151 N. C. 359, 134 Am. St. Rep. 989, 66 S. E. 308.

Messrs. F. E. Wood and E. W. Dobson for appellee.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A promissory note was made and delivered in the following form:

$6,250.00. Albuquerque, N. M., Jan. 5, 1911.

On or before two years after date I promise to pay to the order of W. H. Gillenwater at Montezuma Trust Company six thousand two hundred fifty, and no/100 dollars, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from April 1, 1912, until paid, payable semiannually, with 10 per cent additional on the amount unpaid as attorney's fees, if placed for collection in the hands of an attorney. All parties hereto and all indorsers hereof waive grace and protest and all appraisal laws, and agree that this note may be extended from time to time by any one or more of us without the knowledge or consent of any of the others of us, and, after such extension, the liability of all parties shall remain as if no such extension had been made.

Payable at the Montezuma Trust Company, Albuquerque, N. M.

[Signed] Roderick Stover.

Action was brought on the note by the plaintiff as indorsee, claiming to be a bona fide holder for value without notice and prior to maturity. The answer admitted the execution and delivery of the note, but alleged, by way of defense, that the note was given in payment for shares of stock in a bank of which the payee of the note was the head, under a proposed scheme for its reorganization and the increase of capital stock; that it was agreed between the parties that proceeds arising from the sale of said stock should be deposited with and held as a special deposit by the Montezuma Trust Company until the reorganization should be completed; that if the defendant would purchase 50 shares of the new capital stock for the sum of $6,250, his note would be accepted therefor, payable at such time as he desired, and that if for any reason it was not convenient for him to pay the note when it became due, he might extend the same from time to time until such further time as he desired; that said note would not be used, delivered, put in effect, or considered valid or in force until the entire $200,000 of capital stock should be fully subscribed; that said note was accordingly given in payment for a subscription of 50 shares of the stock in the said corporation contemplated to be organized; that the said corporation was never organized or created, nor were any other subscriptions to the stock thereof ever secured or paid for; that thereafter, in violation of this promise and agreement with the defendant, the payee of the note fraudulently and without authority indorsed the said note to the plaintiff in this case for the sole personal use and credit of the said payee; that the plaintiff had full knowledge and notice of all of the facts hereinbefore stated, and took the said note charged and chargeable with full knowledge and notice thereof and of each of said facts. The plaintiff replied, denying that it took the said promissory note with knowledge of the facts, and alleged that the same was delivered to the plaintiff for full value in due course of business. At the close of the trial each party moved for a directed verdict in his favor, and the court thereupon directed a verdict for the defendant. The only testimony given in the case was that the vice president and manager of the plaintiff bank designed to show that the bank took the note as collateral security for a present loan made to payee of the note at the time, and in good faith, without any notice of the facts alleged in the answer by way of defense. The motion of the defendant for a directed verdict was upon the ground that the note was without consideration, and that the note itself by its terms is not a negotiable promissory note, and that the plaintiff, therefore, took it chargeable with all the defenses and equities which would have been good as between the original parties. The grounds of the motion in behalf of the plaintiff for a directed verdict in its favor are not stated. A verdict was rendered by the jury, in accordance with the instruction of the court, in favor of the defendant. The motion for a new trial was filed and overruled, and the plaintiff appeals.

It is apparent that the question involved is a very narrow one. The position of the defendant is clearly shown by his motion for a verdict in his favor. It is based upon the proposition that the note was without consideration, or rather that the consideration therefor failed, which facts are admitted by the pleadings. Upon the state of the pleadings it is clear that the original payee had no cause of action upon the note against the defendant. The defendant further urged upon the trial court that the form of the note is such that it is a non-negotiable instrument. Therefore, it is argued, that it was impossible for the plaintiff to become the holder in due course so as to cut off the defenses which would be available as between the original parties to the note. The argument is made by counsel for appellee that the note is non-negotiable for two reasons—viz., (1) It contains a provision that the maker shall have the right to extend the maturity of the note from time to time at his pleasure, thus rendering the time of payment indefinite and uncertain; (2) even if the power to extend the time of payment is conferred by the terms of the note, upon the payee or holder alone, yet this renders the time of payment indefinite and uncertain and destroys the negotiability of the note. On the other hand, counsel for appellant argues that no such power is conferred upon the maker, and he denies appellee's second proposition entirely.

1. The language as employed in the note is certainly unfortunate. It provides that "all parties hereby . . . agree that this note may be extended from time to time by any one or more of us without the knowledge or consent of any of the others of us."

The maker of the note is certainly one of the "parties." The maker certainly has the power to extend the time of payment of the note by the express terms of the contract, in so far as the terms used give that power. But is the grant of power to the maker to extend the time of payment an absolute grant of that power regardless of the consent of the holder? It would seem that the answer is determinable by a proper definition of the words, "may be extended." It is a matter of common knowledge and practice that an extension of the time of payment of a note is accomplished by the concurrence of the payee or holder and someone or more of the other parties to the contract. The actual extension of the time is effectuated by the agreement of the payee or holder. The maker or indorsers cannot extend the time unless the payee consents. If it is intended to give to the maker absolutely the right to extend, a provision is sometimes inserted that he may have the right to an extension for a certain specific time, or according to whatever the contract may be between the parties. The provision then in this contract, that "this note may be extended from time to time by any one or more of us without the knowledge or consent of any of the others of us," in the light of commercial custom and usages, as well as common knowledge, is the equivalent of saying that "this note may be extended, with the consent of the payee or holder, from time to time," etc., because it is a contradiction in terms to say that a note may be extended without the consent of the payee or holder, unless the contract provides in terms that the maker shall have the right to an extension. The words, "without the knowledge or consent of any of the others of us," can clearly have no application to the payee or holder. As before seen, there can be no such thing as an extension without his consent. The extension is effectuated by the making of a new contract between the parties, except in those cases where the right is given in terms to the maker; and a granting of the extension is, in such case, but the performance of a contract already made. That this is the sense in which the word "extended" was used by the parties is made more manifest by the following clause. "And, after such extension, liability of all parties shall remain as if no extension had been made."

There could be no liability on the part of the payee or holder, and the words used clearly indicate that the object of all of the provisions in regard to extensions were inserted simply to avoid the consequences, under the law merchant, of an extension without the consent of the indorsers or sureties. They do not grant the arbitrary right to the maker or other parties to the note to extend the same at their will and against the consent of the payee or holder; they simply provide that, in case of extension, they agree that their liability shall remain unchanged. It follows that the payee or holder of this note may insist upon payment of the same when due, and that there is consequently no uncertainty as to the time of payment, by reason of any right conferred upon the maker.

We are aware that this interpretation does violence to the naked letter of the contract. It provides that the note may be extended by "any one" of the parties without the "knowledge or consent" of any of the others. Then the maker may mentally resolve to extend the note indefinitely, and, without the knowledge or consent of the payee, may effectuate an indefinite extension, thereby rendering the contract an empty shell, devoid of meaning or efficiency. If such were the sense in which the word "extended" was used by the maker and payee in this case, they must be convicted of a foolish and vain act, if not an intention to carefully prepare a trap for the unwary. But no such presumption can be indulged. They are to be presumed to have intended to put out an ordinary note, expressing the ordinary binding contract of this kind.

Not much, if any, direct precedent is to be found in the cases, because no such language, probably, was ever before used in a note. Some of the cases, however, are valuable for their statements of the principles governing these matters.

In First Nat. Bank v. Buttery, 17 N. D. 326, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 878, 116 N. W. 341, 17 Ann. Cas. 52, the note in question contained the provision that "the makers and indorsers herein severally . . . consent that the time of payment may be extended without notice."

It was argued that under this provision the holder of the note might, without notice, extend the note indefinitely, thereby rendering the time of payment uncertain and the note consequently non-negotiable. The court said: "It is strenuously argued that the use of the word 'makers' in the waiver admits of an extension being made at any time on the part of the holder, by a mere secret mental process unknown to any other party. This may be true as a psychological fact, but we do not deem it so as a matter of practice in commerce and banking. To us it is clear that it has the same effect as though the note read 'on the 1st day of October, 1903, or thereafter on demand,' in which case there would be no question of its negotiability. Holders of notes do not, by a secret mental process, make an extension of the time of payment, but such extension, if made at all, is made by an agreement between the principal debtor and the holder of the paper, either with or without the consent of the indorsers."

In National Bank v. Kenney, 98 Tex. 293, 83 S. W. 368, the note in question contained the provisions that "the makers and indorsers hereof hereby severally . . . agree to all extensions and partial payments before or after maturity without prejudice to holder."

The Texas court says: "If, as is argued, the effect of the stipulation is to give the right to the maker, without the consent of the holder, or to the holder without the consent of the maker, to appoint another day of payment and thereby extend the time, it may be that it would render the instrument not negotiable. But we do not think it capable of that construction. It does not say that either the holder or the maker may extend the note. It merely makes a provision in case the time of payment may be extended. How extended? It seems to us that the extension meant is that which takes place when the debtor and creditor make an agreement upon a valuable consideration for the payment of the debt on some day subsequent to that previously stipulated. The obvious purpose of the provision taken as a whole was merely to relieve the holder of the paper from burdens made necessary by the rigid requirements of the mercantile law in order to secure the continued liability of the indorsers and sureties upon the paper. Therefore what was meant by the stipulation as to extension of time was simply that, in case the holder and the maker should agree upon an extension, the sureties and indorsers should not be discharged. The holder and maker of any note may, at any time, agree upon an extension; therefore the fact that they may have that right does not affect the negotiability of the paper. . . . So in that case, the time at which the maker may elect to pay is uncertain, but the time at which the holder may demand payment is certain. It follows that if the holder has the absolute right to demand payment at a certain day, the note is negotiable."

In Longmont Nat. Bank v. Loukonen, 53 Colo. 489, 127 Pac. 947, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 208, the note in question contained a provision that "the makers and indorsers hereof hereby . . . agree to any extensions of time of payment and partial payments before, at, or after maturity."

The court said: "The provision under consideration does not mean they the holder can arbitrarily extend the time of the payment of the note as he may see fit, over objection by the maker, nor can the latter make an extension without the consent of the holder."

In Navajo County Bank v. Delson, 163 Cal. 485, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 787, 126 Pac. 153, the note in question provided that "we agree that after maturity this note may be extended from time to time by any one or more of us, without the knowledge or consent of any of the others of us, and after such extension the liability of all parties shall remain as if no such extension has been made."

The court in speaking of this provision, says: "There is nothing uncertain in this note about the date of maturity. The provision refers only to something that may be done by the maker, if the holder agrees thereto 'after maturity.' Clearly the provision referred to is in no way binding upon the holder of the note. No one can reasonably claim that the effect thereof is to give the maker the right to extend the time of payment, without the consent of the holder. The note was dated April 23, 1908, and by its terms, unaffected by anything in the provision referred to, was to mature 'nine months after date,' at which time the holder, so far as anything contained therein is concerned, had the absolute right to insist on payment. There was no provision under which the time so specified could be changed, or the right of the holder to insist on payment at such time be held to be affected. Where the time is thus definitely and irrevocably fixed at which the note shall mature, and the holder shall be at liberty to compel payment, we are unable to see how a provision, looking to a possible agreement between the parties, after maturity, for an extension, renders the executed note at all indefinite or uncertain as to the time when it is payable."

The interpretation of the language which is identical with the note here in question, in this regard, is exactly as we have interpreted this one. The fact of the slight difference in the phraseology in the other regard in no way affects the reasoning in the California case.

In Missouri-Lincoln Trust Co. v. Long, 31 Okla. 1, 120 Pac. 291, the note contained the provision that "the makers . . . consent that the time for payment may be extended without notice thereof."

The court holds that the provision does not make a note non-negotiable, relying upon First Nat. Bank v. Buttery supra, and other cases for authority.

In Stitzel v. Miller, 250 Ill. 72, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1004, 95 N. E. 53, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 412, the note contained the provision that "we also agree that, in case said note is not paid at maturity, it is at the option of the holder hereof to extend, as he deems proper, the payment of the above note, and that said extension shall not in any manner release one or either of us from the payment hereof."

The court says: "The contention that said quoted words gave the holder the authority to extend the note as he pleased, that it could not be known what extensions he might grant, and that therefore the time when the note became due . . . was uncertain and indeterminate, rendering the note non-negotiable, cannot be sustained. The note expressly provides that such option to extend can be exercised only upon the failure of the payors to make payment at its maturity."

The decision is based upon the proposition that until the note matures no person under its terms had power to make an extension of time for payment, and contains an expression to the effect that, if there was authority to extend the note before maturity, it would render the note non-negotiable.

2. A much more serious question arises under appellee's second proposition. It is apparent that if a provision is inserted for extensions at or after maturity, they can have no effect upon the negotiability of the note, because at maturity the note ceases to be negotiable by operation of law. It therefore becomes immaterial that a provision is inserted that, after the maturity of the note, the sureties and indorsers shall not be discharged in case the note is extended. L.R.A.1916D.

This is clearly pointed out in the Illinois and California cases, cited supra.

But where there is a provision authorizing extensions prior to maturity, then a more serious proposition is presented. If the note may be extended from time to time at will during the period prior to maturity, then the time of payment becomes uncertain and indefinite. It is upon this proposition that, in a majority of the states, we believe, a note like the one here in question is held to be non-negotiable. Thus, in Smith v. Van Blarcom, 45 Mich. 371, 8 N. W. 90, the note contained a provision that "the makers and indorsers of this note expressly agree that the payee, or his assigns, may extend the time of payment thereof indefinitely, as he or they may see fit."

The court, per Campbell, J., said: "By the terms of this note, which must be read subject to the condition, it was not payable absolutely three months after date, or at any other one time. The time of payment could be postponed not merely once, but as often as either Charles H. Van Blarcom or his assigns might think it desirable. There is nothing on the face of the note whereby anyone can tell, either directly or by reference to any particular event, at what period this paper will become absolutely payable. We cannot conceive how this can be treated as not payable on a contingency."

In Second Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 75 Mich. 546, 42 N. W. 963, a note containing a similar provision was likewise held to be non-negotiable. In Woodbury v. Roberts, 59 Iowa, 348, 44 Am. Rep. 685, 13 N. W. 312, the note contained a provision that "the makers and indorsers of this obligation further expressly agree that the payee, or his assigns, may extend the time of payment thereof from time to time indefinitely, as he or they may see fit."

The court said: "But the note before us may never fall due, for payment may be extended indefinitely. . . . By regarding such paper as non-negotiable no prejudice will result to the mercantile and financial business of the country, but sharpers will be defeated in their attempt to swindle the confiding and unwary, a result in accord with sound public policy and good morals."

In Farmer v. Bank of Graettinger, 130 Iowa, 469, 107 N. W. 170, the note contained the provision that "sureties hereby consent that time of payment may be extended from time to time without notice thereof."

The distinction drawn in this case is evidently based upon the fact that in the former there was an agreement to an extension, but in the latter there was merely an agreement that the surety should not be discharged in case an extension should be granted. In Glidden v. Henry, 104 Ind. 278, 54 Am. Rep. 316, 1 N. E. 369, the provision for extensions are the same as in the Michigan case, supra, and the court said: "In the case before us, all parts of the note must be looked to in determining the quality of the paper. There is a promise to pay in twelve months, but that promise is not certain and unconditional. The other clause is that the time of payment may be extended indefinitely, as the parties may agree. From an inspection of the note, it is impossible to tell when it may mature, because it is impossible to know what extension may have been, or may hereafter be, agreed upon."

In Coffin v. Spencer (C. C.) 39 Fed. 262, the provision in the note was practically the same as in the Michigan and Indiana cases, and the circuit court for the district of Indiana said: "The latter I think the true reading, and it means that at any time before or after the maturity of the note by its terms, or by the terms of any agreement for renewal or extension, the holder, whether the payee or any assignee, may, by agreement with the maker, or with an indorser or other party liable on the paper, renew or extend the date of payment 'from time to time,' that is to say, definitely, without prejudice ultimately to his remedies against any of the parties. Every successive taker of the paper is, of course, bound to take notice of this stipulation, and, instead of looking only to the face of the instrument for the time of its maturity, as in case of commercial paper he must, is put upon inquiry whether or not any agreement for a renewal or extension of time has been made by his proposed assignor or by any previous holder. . . . The note in suit, it seems clear enough, cannot be deemed negotiable."

In Union Stockyards Nat. Bank v. Bolan, 14 Idaho, 87, 125 Am. St. Rep. 146, 93 Pac. 508, the provision in the note is as follows: "No extension of time of payment, with or without our knowledge, by the receipt of interest or otherwise, shall release us or either of us from the obligation of payment."

The court said: "This is an express contract to the effect that the time of payment may be extended to any one or all of the sureties, guarantors, indorsers, or makers of the note, without notice to all or any one of them. This undoubtedly renders the note non-negotiable under all the authorities that have been brought to our attention on the subject."

In Rossville State Bank v. Heslet, 84 Kan. 315, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 738, 113 Pac. 1052, the provision of the note was that L.R.A.1916D.

"each signer and indorser makes the other an agent to extend the time of this note."

The court refers to the former case in that state of City Nat. Bank v. Gunter Bros. 87 Kan. 227, 72 Pac. 842, in which the provision appeared in the note that "the makers and indorsers . . . agree to all extensions and partial payments before or after maturity without prejudice to holder."

In discussing the case under consideration, and the Gunter Case, the court said:

"Interpreting 'signer' to mean maker, and the agency of each maker and indorser to act for the other, as equivalent to a consent to the action of either to an agreement for extension made by another, the only material difference discernible is that in the Gunter Case the note stated that the extension might be made before or after maturity, while in this case it authorizes the extension without stating when it may be made. The precise inquiry suggested is whether the authority to extend here given may be exercised only after maturity. If so, the time is fixed for payment; for the promise, apart from this clause, is to pay on January 1, 1909, and an authority to extend afterwards would only amount to a waiver of the right to be relieved from liability for an extension without such authority. If, however, the clause is to be construed as giving the parties named the right to extend the time before maturity, its effect would be precisely the same as though the words, 'on or before,' had been inserted, and the rule of the Gunter Case would apply. . . . The vice of the stipulation in question is that the day of payment cannot be determined. The signer (maker) or any indorser may, at any time he sees fit to do so, as agent one for another, extend the time for payment by agreement with the holder. The payee in transferring the note may become an indorser, and therefore an agent for the maker, and his indorsee may, in turn, become an indorser with like power, so that the time of maturity must be indefinite, and not determinable from the instrument."

See further many cases collected in a note to First Nat. Bank v. Buttery, 17 Ann. Cas. 52.

It clearly appears from the reading of the foregoing cases, and many others which we have examined, that in the opinion of those courts the uncertainty as to the time of payment, which is held to render the note non-negotiable, arises out of the fact that there is an agreement in the note that the same may be extended prior to its maturity. The fact that such extension of the time of payment is contemplated and provided for is held to render the time of payment so uncertain as to destroy the negotiability.

of the instrument. On the other hand, there is a line of cases, mostly more modern, which takes an opposite view of provisions of this kind. They are based upon the proposition that the time of payment within the meaning and requirement of the law merchant and the negotiable instrument law is certain or determinable, whenever the time at which the payee or holder may demand payment is certain or determinable. We have before seen that, under the terms of this instrument, in this case, the payee or holder is entitled to demand payment on the day specified therein, there being no right on the part of any other party to the instrument to compel him to extend the same against his consent. The Texas case, heretofore cited and quoted from, is one of the leading cases adopting the latter position. The North Dakota case is another leading case to the same effect. In Missouri-Lincoln Trust Co. v. Long, the supreme court of Oklahoma announces its adherence to the same doctrine that so long as the payee or holder may insist upon the payment of the note at maturity, there is no uncertainty as to the time of payment, citing the Texas case, supra, and Missouri cases. In Longmont Nat. Bank v. Loukonen, 53 Colo. 489, 127 Pac. 947, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 208, the makers and indorsers agreed to any extensions of time of payment before, at, or after maturity. The Colorado court in that case adopts the reasoning of the Texas and North Dakota courts, and says: "The time of payment of this note, by its express terms, is certain. A definite time when the holder may demand payment is stated, and the period of maturity is fixed. There is nothing in the note which gives the maker, or anyone else, a right to demand an extension, or which binds the holder to give it. We are unable to perceive how the mere fact that the signers and indorsers undertake to be bound by any extension of time of payment, which may thereafter be settled upon, takes from an instrument, in all other respects commercial paper, its negotiable character. Any agreement for an extension, not appearing in the instrument, and unknown to a purchaser for value before maturity, would not defeat his right to demand payment of the note according to its original terms. . . . The sole purpose of the stipulation is for the protection of the holder, by continuing the liability of both maker and indorser in case of extension. . . . A legal right exists in the maker and holder of any negotiable instrument to agree to an extension, and the fact that such legal right exists does not make the paper non-negotiable; no more should the fact that the maker's consent to an extension, which L.R.A.1916D.

he always has the legal right to give, is expressed in the note, but which does not in fact constitute an extension, have such effect. To hold that an undisclosed agreement to extend destroys the obligation to pay a note according to its terms, thus making the time of payment uncertain, in the hands of a bona fide holder for value before maturity, would be contrary to every principle of justice and fair dealing. Such would be the effect of declaring this instrument non-negotiable."

The court cites the Missouri, North Dakota, Texas, and Oklahoma cases, before referred to.

In City Nat. Bank v. Goodloe-McClelland Commission Co. 93 Mo. App. 123, the note provided that "the makers and indorsers agree to all extensions and partial payments before or after maturity without prejudice to the holder."

The court held that this provision did not impair the negotiability of the note.

We propose to adopt what, we are free to admit, is the minority doctrine, at least, so far as numbers of states are concerned, because we believe the doctrine to be founded in reason, and to be best suited to business and commercial usage. It is a matter of common knowledge that it is the general, if not the universal, custom of banks to insert provisions of a similar nature to the ones inserted in the note in question, whenever they loan money. We cannot see that harm can come to the people of the business world by holding this note to be a negotiable instrument. On the other hand, we can see that harm may come from unduly hampering business transactions of this kind. If a banker must insist upon payment of a note at maturity, or otherwise lose the security of indorsers upon commercial paper, then the borrowers of money from banks will inevitably suffer great inconvenience, and often great loss. This is apparent to all who have had experience or observation in commercial transactions of this kind. Nor will this holding operate as a restraint upon the dealing in commercial paper, for the reason that under §§ 52 and 56 of our negotiable instruments law (chapter 83, Laws of 1907) the assignee cannot take such paper and lose the benefit of its negotiable character unless he has actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounts to bad faith. A simple inquiry in good faith of the payee or holder of negotiable paper as to whether the same had been extended by the parties thereto would, we assume, be held to constitute such assignee a holder in due course. It follows that the judgment of the district court in holding that the instrument was non-negotiable was erroneous.

3. It is urged by counsel for appellant that this court should now enter judgment for the plaintiff upon the note in question. It appears, however, from the pleadings that the question of taking of the note by the plaintiff in good faith or bad faith was in issue, but was not decided by the court, the court having directed a verdict for the defendant upon the sole proposition that the note was non-negotiable, and that therefore there was no question as to the good faith or bad faith of the plaintiff, in taking the note, for determination by the jury. It is argued, on the other hand, by counsel for appellee, that the action of the court in directing a verdict for the defendant was a finding that the burden of proof resting upon the plaintiff in regard to good faith in the taking of the note had not been met. We think not. The district court, at the instance of counsel for the defendant, held that the note was non-negotiable, and that therefore it was subject, in the hands of plaintiff, to all of the defenses set up in the answer. The plaintiff, of course, denied the allegations in the answer that it had taken the note in bad faith, and introduced proof on the issue. But this issue has never been submitted to a jury, nor decided by the court. It is therefore apparent that the cause must be retried.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded to the district court, with instructions to award a new trial; and it is so ordered.

Roberts, Ch. J., and Hanna, J., concur.

A petition for rehearing having been granted Parker, J., on January 11, 1916, handed down the following additional opinion:

In the last section of the opinion we determine that the question as to whether the plaintiff took the note without notice, and in good faith, had not been determined in the court below, and consequently we remanded the cause for a new trial. A later examination of the record, however, discloses that in this we were in error, and for that reason we have granted a rehearing.

At the close of the case each party moved for an instructed verdict in his favor, the defendant specially submitting the case on the "basis of all the evidence." This necessarily submitted to the court the evidence on the question of notice and good or bad faith on the part of the appellant in taking the note. The appellant does not resist this L.R.A.1916D.

proposition, but, on the contrary, insists that the evidence submitted authorizes and requires a judgment in its favor. Appellee, of course, argues that the evidence authorized the direction of a verdict in favor of appellee upon this point, and that the action of the court cannot be disturbed here. There is a controversy between counsel as to the issue tendered by the answer. It was alleged in the answer that "the said plaintiff had full knowledge and notice of all of the facts hereinabove stated, and took the said note charged and chargeable with full knowledge and notice thereof, and of each of said facts."

In the reply the appellant denied this allegation of the answer, and alleged that it acquired said note for full value in due course of business prior to its maturity, and without knowledge of any defect or want of consideration or other defects claimed by said defendant. Upon this state of the pleadings the appellant argues that there was tendered the sole issue of notice or want of notice to the appellant of the infirmities in the paper, and that no issue of bad faith in taking the note was tendered by the pleadings. The appellee contends that the allegations of the answer are broad enough to tender the issue both of actual notice and of knowledge of such facts that the taking of the instrument amounted to bad faith. In view of the disposition which we will make of the matter, we do not deem it necessary to determine specifically whether the issue tendered was narrowed by the pleadings, as claimed by the appellant, or not, and the case will be treated as if the pleadings tendered both issues.

One M. W. Flournoy, vice president and manager of the appellant bank, was the only witness who testified upon these subjects. He flatly denies that he or the appellant bank had any knowledge or notice of the defects or infirmities of the paper at the time the bank took the same; the business having been done entirely between the holder of the note and the witness as such vice president and general manager. Upon cross-examination the witness was not shaken in any particular from the position which he took on direct examination in this regard. The issue then as to whether the appellant bank had notice of the infirmities of the paper at the time it acquired it may be dismissed from further consideration, there being no evidence of any kind in the record to support a finding that it did have such notice, and, on the other hand, evidence given all showing that it did not have such notice.

Upon cross-examination the witness Flournoy was pressed for facts which might show that he was aware of the financial condition of the payee, and the general condition of his business affairs, from which it was thought to be inferred that the note was taken in bad faith. He was asked whether he did not know, prior to taking the note, that the Montezuma Trust Company, of which the payee of the note was the head, was in bad financial condition, and that the payee was endeavoring to reorganize the same with additional capital. The witness admitted that he knew that the Montezuma Trust Company was doing business under unfavorable conditions; that he had declined to join in the reorganization of the same and supposed that the plan had been abandoned. He testified that the Montezuma Trust Company appeared to be in financial difficulty. He further testified that the payee presented the note, and asked a loan of $5,000 with the note as collateral security, which was made, and the proceeds placed to the credit of the Montezuma Trust Company according to the custom of years; the payee not having a personal account with the appellant bank. The note was upon a printed blank, with the Montezuma Trust Company named as payee, and it was interlined, substituting the name of the payee for that of the Montezuma Trust Company. The note was payable on or before two years from date, and the witness testified it was not customary for the appellant bank to discount such note, but it was customary to take the same as collateral. The note provided for semiannual interest, but the witness did not demand interest for about one year after the date of the note. He explained the failure to demand the interest by saying that, the note being held as collateral security, the bank did not attend to the collection of the interest promptly, as it would in case the bank really owned the note. The witness said he understood the maker of the note to be a man of means, and knew nothing about his business affairs, or whether he had needs to raise money on notes, and made no inquiry of the payee as to how he came to have the maker's note. This is the substance of the testimony of the witness Flournoy, on this subject on cross-examination. The most that can be said for this evidence is that the bank failed to make inquiry of the payee how or why he came to have such a note of the maker. That the bank did not take the note in bad faith in the sense that it knew of these infirmities, and attempted to defraud the maker to its advantage, or that of the payee, is apparent. The evidence points to no other conclusion. The bank simply failed to inquire of the payee how or why he had such a note, either through negligence or carelessness, if, indeed, it was its duty to so inquire, or under suspicious circumstances.

Appellee argues that while gross negligence is not the same thing as bad faith, it may be evidence of the same, and, in this case the appellant bank having been negligent, or being aware of suspicious circumstances, these facts are sufficient to support a finding of bad faith in taking the note. He relies upon Goodman v. Harvey, 4 Ad. & El. 870, 6 L. J. K. B. N. S. 260, 6 Nev. & M. 372; Ward v. City Trust Co. 192 N. Y. 61, 84 N. E. 585; McNight v. Parsons, 136 Iowa, 390, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 718, 125 Am. St. Rep. 285, 113 N. W. 858, 15 Ann. Cas. 665; Re Hopper-Morgan Co. (D. C.) 156 Fed. 525; and 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 6th ed. § 776.

In Goodman v. Harvey, supra, the bill was given by the defendants to a shipowner for freight. It was presented for acceptance by an agent of the holder, and acceptance was refused, and the bill was protested. The bill was then returned to the payee, and was again put out by him, and was discounted by the plaintiff. When it became due, it was presented to the makers, and payment refused, and it was thereupon again protested for nonpayment. The jury, in answer to a question from the Lord Chief Justice, said that in their opinion the notarial marks on the bill were sufficient notice to an indorsee of nonacceptance. The court said: "The question I offered to submit to the jury was whether the plaintiff had been guilty of gross negligence or not. I believe we are all of opinion that gross negligence only would not be a sufficient answer where the party has given consideration for the bill. Gross negligence may be evidence of mala fides, but it is not the same thing. We have shaken off the last remnant of the contrary doctrine. Where the bill has passed to the plaintiff without any proof of bad faith in him, there is no objection to his title. The evidence in this case as to the notarial marks could only weigh as rendering it less likely that the bill should have been taken in perfect good faith."

In Willis v. Bank of England, 4 Ad. & El. 32, it is said: "A doctrine has, indeed, prevailed that the person taking a negotiable instrument must show that he used such caution as a prudent man acquainted with business would exert; but this gave rise to many complicated questions, and the law has now nearly reverted to the old rule, which was that of certainty and convenience, that the bona fide holder of a negotiable instrument for value is entitled as against everyone. It would probably be considered now, if the precise point arose, that the real question was bona fides. . . . It would, perhaps, be more correct to say that the same facts might raise the presumption of gross negligence or that of fraud. The facts might show a determination to wink at anything."

In Ward v. City Trust Co. 192 N. Y. 61, 84 N. E. 585, the trust company had representatives on the board of directors of a corporation, and two of the officers of the corporation used the funds of the corporation for the payment to the trust company of their personal obligations to it. The transaction was on its face apparently without authority on the part of the officers of the bank. The court said: "It was not enough for the trust company to part with value by surrendering the note and collateral, for it was bound to act in good faith in order to get good title. . . . Bad faith in taking commercial paper does not necessarily involve furtive motives; for it exists when the purchaser has notice of facts which, if unexplained, would show that he was taking the property of one who, to quote again from Paviour Case, 164 N. Y. 281, 52 L.R.A. 790, 58 N. E. 114, 'owed him nothing, in payment of a claim that he held against someone else. . . . Even if his actual good faith is not questioned, if the facts known to him should have led him to inquiry, and by inquiry he would have discovered the real situation, in a commercial sense he acted in bad faith, and the law will withhold from him the protection that it would otherwise extend.'"

The court said further: "The presumption was against the transaction, and, as we have seen, unless that presumption was overcome by reasonable inquiry, the transaction, unlawful in fact and unlawful on its face, is presumed to have been known to the trust company to be unlawful."

In McNight v. Parsons, the note was delivered by the maker to the payee under agreement that it should not be negotiated until it was ascertained whether a certain fact came to pass, and in case it did not, the note was to be void and to be returned to the defendant. The question was whether the holder and plaintiff was a holder in good faith. It appears that the plaintiff in that case was really a dummy, and the note was indorsed to him for the express purpose of avoiding such defenses as the defendant might make against the holder of the note. The plaintiff made no attempt to assert the good faith of his purchase, or to negative the fact that he had notice of any defense thereto. The trial court directed a verdict for the plaintiff upon the ground that there was no evidence of bad faith in the taking of the note. This L.R.A.1916D.

judgment was reversed. It is said by the court: "It is equally true that, if the facts shown have any fair tendency to show bad faith, the question remains one of fact, and not of law. It is especially the case where the evidence of fraud is sufficient to put the burden of showing good faith on the holder."

In Re Hopper-Morgan Co. 156 Fed. 525, it appeared from an agreed statement of facts that the plaintiff purchased the note in a peculiar way, under peculiar circumstances, and with knowledge that the note had been issued for some particular purpose, not disclosed, but that Mugler, who had disposed of it to Prescott, from whom the claimant obtained it, was not the owner, and had the right to use it as collateral merely. The court said: "If the purchaser of the note has actual knowledge of the infirmity in the note, or want of title in the one from whom he takes it, that, of course, ends the case. If he has no such actual knowledge, then bad faith or a wilful disregard of known facts showing the infirmity or want of title or a wilful evasion of knowledge of the facts, will be sufficient to defeat recovery. Facts sufficient to create a suspicion of the truth are not sufficient to show knowledge or bad faith, nor is mere gross negligence in making inquiry, or in failing to make inquiry, alone, sufficient. There must be either actual knowledge or bad faith. Bad faith may be shown by a wilful disregard of and refusal to learn the facts when available and at hand."

It is apparent from what has been shown as to the facts in each of the foregoing cases that they have no application to a case like the one under consideration. In each of those cases, except, perhaps, the English cases, there was something about the nature of the transaction itself which excluded and prevented any dealing concerning the same in good faith. In the case at bar there was nothing whatever about the nature of the transaction which called for explanation; it bore no evidence whatever of illegality or fraud, but was the usual and ordinary commercial transaction. Mr. Daniel, in discussing this proposition, uses the following language: "It thus appears that the majority rule, referred to in the foregoing discussion, that there must have been actual notice or bad faith, has been codified in those states which have enacted the statute. According to that rule, and under the statute, mere suspicion of defect of title or knowledge of circumstances which would excite suspicion in the mind of a prudent man, or even gross negligence on the part of the taker of the instrument, at the time of the transfer, will not defeat his title. While neither gross negligence, nor knowledge of suspicious circumstances, of itself constitutes bad faith as matter of law, it is evidence from which bad faith may be inferred, and such facts, when proved, may be considered by a jury in arriving at the ultimate fact of good or bad faith. What constitutes this actual knowledge of bad faith, under the statute, has been the subject of judicial discussion. Bad faith in taking commercial paper, it has been said, does not necessarily involve furtive motives. It may be shown by a wilful disregard of and refusal to learn the facts when available and at hand, and if a purchaser of a note for value before maturity has notice of facts tending to show defenses to the same, he cannot purposely refrain from making inquiries as to the inception of the paper, and at the same time claim to be a bona fide purchaser." 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 6th ed. § 776.

Appellant cites a multitude of cases upon the general doctrine that there must be either actual notice or bad faith to defeat a holder of commercial paper. A few of them only will be cited. Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall. 121, 17 L. ed. 859; Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 865; Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. 343, 15 L. ed. 934; Bank of Pittsburgh v. Neal, 22 How. 96, 16 L. ed. 323; Cromwell v. Sac County, 96 U. S. 58, 24 L. ed. 686; Shaw v. North Pennsylvania R. Co. (Shaw v. Merchants' Nat. Bank) 101 U. S. 564, 25 L. ed. 894; Swift v. Smith, 102 U. S. 442, 26 L. ed. 193; Second Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 165 Pa. 199, 44 Am. St. Rep. 653, 30 Atl. 957; Cheever v. Pittsburgh, S. & L. E. R. Co. 150 N. Y. 65, 34 L.R.A. 69, 55 Am. St. Rep. 649, 44 N. E. 701; Kitchen v. Loudenback, 48 Ohio St. 177, 29 Am. St. Rep. 544, 26 N. E. 979; Jennings v. Todd, 118 Mo. 303, 40 Am. St. Rep. 377, 24 S. W. 148; Wilson v. Denton, 82 Tex. 531, 27 Am. St. Rep. 912, 18 S. W. 620; Breckenridge v. Lewis, 84 Me. 349, 30 Am. St. Rep. 357, 24 Atl. 864; Youle v. Fosha, 76 Kan. 20, 90 Pac. 1091; Eames v. Crosier, 101 Cal. 260, 35 Pac. 873; Matlock v. Scheuerman, 51 Or. 49, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 747, 93 Pac. 826; McPherrin v. Tittle, 36 Okla. 510, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 395, 129 Pac. 722; Scandinavian American Bank v. Johnston, 63 Wash. 187, 115 Pac. 102; Reilly v. McKinnon, 86 C. C. A. 268, 159 Fed. 78. He also cites 7 Cyc. 945, and Crawford, Anno. Neg. Inst. Law, 3d ed. 68. These authorities all establish the uniform doctrine that a holder of commercial paper may be a holder in due course, notwithstanding that he may have knowledge of suspicious circumstances, or may be guilty of even gross negligence in taking the paper; the question always being in such cases whether he took the paper in good faith or in bad faith.

It is apparent, however, from what has been heretofore seen in the original opinion and herein, that this fundamental, underlying proposition is not quite the proposition involved in this case. The question in this case is whether there was sufficient evidence before the trial court to authorize a finding that the plaintiff bank took the note in bad faith. In other words, the question is, Had the trial court or the jury made a specific finding that the plaintiff bank did not take the note in good faith, is there any substantial evidence in the record upon which such a finding could be based? We do not think that there is any such evidence. As has been before pointed out, this transaction was the ordinary business transaction dealing with commercial paper. There was nothing about the note itself to call attention of the plaintiff bank to any infirmity in the same. There was nothing about the circumstances or the relations of the parties which called for explanation on the part of the payee, or which even was calculated to arouse suspicion on the part of the bank. The witness Flournoy testified that he treated the transaction exactly as he would treat any other of the same character, and that he knew of nothing irregular or defective about the note. Owing to the condition of the record, we are put in the position of sitting as a jury or a trial court, and passing upon these facts. After careful examination of the testimony, and a thorough consideration of all legitimate inferences which could be drawn therefrom, we are compelled to say that there is no substantial evidence in the record authorizing a finding of bad faith on the part of the bank. A fine discussion of this same question is to be found in 3 R. C. L. p. 1071, §§ 277 et seq. It is there said: "It is a general principle, running through all branches and subjects of the law, that one will be charged with notice of a fact who has information which should have put him upon inquiry, if, by following up such information with diligence and understanding, the truth could have been ascertained. . . . It is now well settled, however, that the doctrine of notice, as it affects good faith of transactions generally, does not apply to negotiable instruments."

Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co. 145 Mich. 656, 116 Am. St. Rep. 319, 108 N. W. 1092, is cited, wherein it is said: "It is a general rule, applicable to transactions not involving commercial paper, that where one has notice of facts which would put an ordinarily prudent man upon inquiry, he cannot be considered a bona fide purchaser, if he neglect to take such care of his own interests as an ordinarily prudent man would do, but that rule has not been applied to commercial paper."

A lengthy quotation from Jones v. Gordon, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 627, 4 Eng. Rul. Cas. 416, is inserted in the opinion, from which we quote the following: "But if the facts and circumstances are such that the jury, or whoever has to try the question, came to the conclusion that he was not honestly blundering and careless, but that he must have had a suspicion that there was something wrong, and that he refrained from asking questions, not because he was an honest blunderer or a stupid man, but because he thought in his own secret mind: I suspect there is something wrong, and if I ask questions and make further inquiry, it will no longer be my suspecting it, but my knowing it, and then I shall not be able to recover,—I think that is dishonesty. I think, my Lords, that that is established not only by good sense and reason, but by the authority of the cases themselves."

In § 278 of 3 R. C. L. p. 1074, it is said: "He cannot be charged with notice by reason of any want of diligence on his part, even when he is in the situation where such facts could be ascertained by inquiry.

... Gross negligence even is not sufficient; actual knowledge of the facts which impeach the validity of the note must be brought home to the holder. Knowledge, however, may be shown to have been possessed by the party either by direct proof, or by facts and circumstances that fairly lead to that conclusion, and circumstances that are not of any great probative force in themselves are admissible in connection with other proof to show guilty knowledge or want of good faith."

In § 280, p. 1075 of 3 R. C. L., it is said: "Although suspicious circumstances are not notice as a matter of law, yet the jury may find them to be so as a matter of fact, and evidence going to show the existence of such grounds for suspicion is always admissible."

See also Harrington v. Butte & B. Min. Co. 33 Mont. 330, 114 Am. St. Rep. 821, 83 Pac. 467.

The only suspicious circumstances, if it may be called such, is the fact that this note was dated January 5, 1911, and was negotiated by the payee on January 8, 1912. It appears in the record that this note was made on January 5, 1912, and was accidentally misdated. However, at the time the note was negotiated, the fact that the payee had apparently had possession of the note for a year was not mentioned. It might be argued that a man who had a L.R.A.1916D.

good note like the one in question, and who needed money, would hardly refrain from using it for a year after its date, and that the bank should have taken notice of this fact, under the circumstances. On the other hand, if the matter was considered at all by the bank, which does not appear from the record, it might well have been inferred that the negotiating of the note one year after its date was in accordance with a perfectly honest and lawful arrangement with the maker. No inference of bad faith can be legitimately drawn from this circumstance. The question is, Did the witness Flournoy, as the agent of the bank, know or believe at the time he took the note from the payee that it was being fraudulently put out by him, and did he wilfully refrain from inquiry along that line? We have been unable, after a careful re-examination of the testimony, to put finger upon any fact from which a legitimate inference could be drawn to that effect.

This being the state of the record, we find that there is no substantial evidence upon which the district court could have found that the appellant bank took the note in bad faith. There being no such evidence, it was error to so find, and for that reason the judgment will be reversed. As a matter of fact the record bears internal evidence, but not in direct terms, that the trial court did not so find, but, owing to the form in which the record is presented here, he is made to have so found, as already pointed out.

The judgment of the lower court will be reversed, and the cause will be remanded to the district court, with directions to enter judgment in favor of the appellant bank as prayed in the complaint; and it is so ordered.

Roberts, Ch. J., and Hanna, J., concur.

A Second Motion for Rehearing having been filed Parker, J., on March 4, 1916, handed down the following second additional opinion:

A second motion for rehearing has been filed and is allowable, we assume, for the reason that the question to which it is directed was first considered upon the first motion for rehearing. The motion is directed to a supposed departure in the holding of the court from rules fixed by statute and the previous holdings of this court. The motion calls attention to §§ 649 and 653, Code 1915, being a part of the Negotiable Instrument act, and suggests that the court overlooked those provisions. Section 649 provides that the title of a person who negotiates an instrument is defective "when he negotiates it in breach of faith, or under such circumstances as amount to fraud." Section 853 provides that "when it is shown that the title of any person who has negotiated the instrument was defective, the burden is on the holder to prove that he or some person under whom he claims acquired the title as holder in due course."

Section 848, Code 1915, defines a holder in due course as follows: "A holder in due course is a holder who has taken the instrument under the following conditions: . . . III. That he took it in good faith and for value; IV. That at the time it was negotiated to him he had no notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it."

It sufficiently appears, from what has been heretofore said in the two opinions heretofore handed down in this case, that the title of the payee of this note was defective, and that the plaintiff bank took the paper charged with the burden of establishing that it took the same in due course; that is to say, under the facts in this case, that it took it in good faith and for value, and without notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it. While neither of these sections of the statute were noticed in the opinion, none of the principles or rules therein mentioned were overlooked by the court. In the discussion of the matter, the exact situation herein outlined was assumed.

The question, then, before the court is whether that burden of proof resting upon the plaintiff bank has been successfully met by the proofs. In our former discussion of the evidence, we pointed out that there was no evidence in the case tending directly to show notice or lack of good faith on the part of the bank when it took the paper. We further pointed out that there was no evidence in the case from which any legitimate inference of notice or lack of good faith could be drawn. The evidence was all one way, and pointed unequivocally to lack of notice and to good faith on the part of the plaintiff bank.

Counsel for appellee, however, points out the fact that one of the important considerations before the trial court was the demeanor and character of the witness Flournoy, whose conduct and honesty in taking the paper for the bank were directly involved. The verdict of the jury was in the following form: "We, the jury, by direction of the court, find the issues in this cause for the defendant."

The answer interposed by the defendant below tendered the proposition that the plaintiff bank "had full knowledge and notice of all the facts . . . and took the said note charged and chargeable with full knowledge and notice thereof and of each of said facts."

The reply put this allegation in issue. When the jury returned the verdict, by direction of the court, finding the issues for the defendant, it consequently found this issue as to notice against the plaintiff bank. Counsel for appellee would have the court hold, if we understand the motion, that because the character and demeanor of the witness Flournoy was one of the considerations before the court and jury, therefore there is substantial evidence in the case to support the finding of the issue of notice to the bank, as found by the jury. They say in their motion that "his testimony alone, especially under the circumstances surrounding the transaction, was insufficient to compel the court, as a matter of law, to find the fact in accordance with his evidence."

We appreciate fully the great difference in the effect of the evidence of a witness when he appears before a trial court, where he is seen and heard, where his demeanor while testifying may be observed, and the sum total of his credibility may be ascertained, and its effect when reduced to writing and submitted to an appellate court. Untruthful witnesses seldom escape discovery, especially where their evidence is submitted to a trained man for consideration. It nevertheless remains true that this personality, demeanor while testifying, and apparent carefulness and fairness on the stand, is something which cannot be committed to paper, and which is not present before a reviewing court. Here we must judge of the witness's testimony by what he is reported to have said, without the aid of this personal element in his testimony. Here in the examination of the testimony of the witness, if he stands unimpeached, either by direct evidence of his lack of veracity, or of his bad moral character, or if unimpeached by some equivocal character of his testimony or inherent improbability therein, or by some other legal method of impeachment, we must assume that his evidence is true. To hold otherwise would bring us to absurd results. For example, can it be said that a finding by a trial court, or a verdict found by direction of the court against a plaintiff, were all of the evidence in the case in his favor, and, where there is none against him, cannot be disturbed in this court, because, possibly, the court did not believe the witnesses for the plaintiff, and consequently refused him the relief which he sought? Such cannot be the law. If there was a single fact in this record pointing to bad faith, or knowledge on the part of the bank, or if there were equivocation or inherent improbability in the testimony of the witness Flournoy, or if he had been impeached in some way, we might say that the court correctly found the issue as to the notice and good faith against the plaintiff bank, because he did not believe the witness Flournoy, the one witness who testified on the subject. There being no such infirmities in the testimony, there is no foundation upon which to base a finding of knowledge or bad faith on the part of the bank.

Counsel in the motion suggest that the court in its holding has departed from the established doctrine in this jurisdiction, that a verdict of a jury or the finding of the trial court will not be disturbed in this court if it is supported by any substantial evidence. This has been the established doctrine of this court ever since the case of Candelaria v. Miera, 13 N. M. 360, 84 Pac. 1020, and we do not desire to depart from or modify the doctrine there stated. But, as we have pointed out in this case, there is no substantial evidence, and no legitimate inferences can be drawn from any of the evidence, to support the finding of the court and the jury under his direction that the bank had notice of the infirmities in this paper or took it in bad faith.

For the reasons stated, the motion for rehearing will be denied; and it is so ordered.

Roberts Ch. J., and Hanna, J., concur.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Resp.,
v.

WASHINGTON J. BROWN et al., Appts.

(— S. C. —, 88 S. E. 21.)

Arson — corpus delicti.

1. The corpus delicti in arson consists of a burned building and a criminal act in causing the burning.

For other cases, see Arson, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Criminal law — failure to prove corpus delicti — right to acquittal.

2. One accused of arson is entitled to acquittal as matter of law upon failure to prove the corpus delicti.

For other cases, see Trial, II. 4, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — statement of enmity — corpus delicti.

3. Evidence of statements by accused showing enmity on the part of accused against one whose barn has been burned is not admissible in a prosecution for arson, in the absence of evidence of the corpus delicti.

For other cases, see Evidence, X. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — trailing by dog — human control.

4. Evidence of the act of a dog in trailing one accused of crime is not admissible if it was not allowed to follow its inclination during the process.

For other cases, see Evidence, XI. t, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — As to proof of corpus delicti in arson, see annotation following this case, post, 1299.

As to evidence of trailing of persons by bloodhounds, see notes to Pedigo v. Com 42 L.R.A. 432, and State v. Adams, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 876.
L.R.A.1916D.

Same — period of efficiency.

5. One relying upon trailing by a dog to establish crime must show that the trailing was done within such time after the commission of the crime that the dog would be efficient.

For other cases, see Evidence, XI. t, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — inability to cross-examine dog — effect.

6. Inability to cross-examine a dog does not render evidence of its act in trailing one accused of crime inadmissible.

For other cases, see Evidence, XI. t, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — proof of corpus delicti.

7. Evidence that one accused of arson was trailed from the scene of the crime by dogs is not admissible as proof of the corpus delicti.

For other cases, see Evidence, XI. t, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 3, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Court of General Sessions, First Circuit, for Berkeley County, convicting them of arson. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Stoney & Cordes and J. D. E. Meyer, Jr., for appellants:

The corpus delicti consists of two component parts: First, the existence of a certain fact or result forming the basis of the criminal charge, and second, the existence of a criminal agency as the cause.

Cavaness v. State, 43 Ark. 331; McBride v. People, 5 Colo. App. 91, 37 Pac. 953; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Pitts v. State, 43 Miss. 472; Stata v. Dickson, 78 Mo. 438; State v. Pepo, 23 Mont. 473, 59 Pac. 721; People v. Schryver, 42 N. Y. 6, 1 Am. Rep. 480; People v. Bennett, 49 N. Y. 137; People v. Place, 157 N. Y. 584, 52 N. E. 576; People v. Benham, 160 N. Y. 402, 55 N. E. 11; State v. Leuth, 5 Ohio C. C. 94, 3 Ohio C. D. 48; Com. v. Cutaia, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 403; Lovelady v. State, 14 Tex. App. 545, 17 Tex. App. 287; Shulze v. State, 28 Tex. App. 316, 12 S. W. 1084; Jackson v. State, 29 Tex. App. 458, 16 S. W. 247; Anderson v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 546, 53 Am. St. Rep. 722, 31 S. W. 673; Smith v. Com. 21 Gratt. 809; State v. Gillis, 73 S. C. 324, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 571, 114 Am. St. Rep. 95, 53 S. E. 487, 6 Ann. Cas. 993.

Before a conviction can be had, it is incumbent upon the prosecution to prove both of the constituent elements of the corpus delicti beyond a reasonable doubt.

United States v. Hewson, Brunner, Col. Cas. 532, Fed. Cas. No. 15,360; Lovelady v. State, 14 Tex. App. 545; Johnson v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 24 S. W. 285; Com. v. York, 9 Met. 93, 43 Am. Dec. 373; Haynes v. State, — Miss. —, 27 So. 601; People v. Deacons, 109 N. Y. 374, 16 N. E. 676; People v. Beekwith, 108 N. Y. 67, 15 N. E. 53; Com. v. O'Donohue, 8 Phila. 623; State v. Gillis, 73 S. C. 318, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 571, 114 Am. St. Rep. 95, 53 S. E. 487, 6 Ann. Cas. 993; State v. Parsons, 39 W. Va. 464, 19 S. E. 876; Brown v. State, 15 Ga. App. 484, 83 S. E. 890.

There was an absolute failure on the part of the state to show the essential element of the crime of arson, namely, the corpus delicti and the connection of the crime with either of these defendants.

Clyatt v. United States, 197 U. S. 222, 49 L. ed. 731, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 429; People v. Plath, 100 N. Y. 590, 53 Am. Rep. 263, 2 N. E. 790, 6 Am. Crim. Rep. 1.

All questions of issues of fact are for the jury, but when the facts upon which the case must turn are undisputed, or conclusively established, and they admit of but one inference, the question is one of law, since there is no issue of fact, and the court not only may, but when requested must, direct a jury as to the proper conclusion, and if the motion to direct a verdict is refused, it is an error of law.

McLain v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 81 S. C. 100, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 763, 128 Am. St. Rep. 892, 61 S. E. 900; Jarrell v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. 58 S. C. 495, 36 S. E. 910; Lyon v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. 77 S. C. 344, 58 S. E. 12; State v. Norman, 153 N. C. 591, 68 S. E. 917; Carter v. State, 106 Miss. 507, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1112, 64 So. 215; State v. Clardy, 73 S. C. 340, 53 S. E. 493; State v. Shaw, 64 S. C. 566, 60 L.R.A. 801, 92 Am. St. Rep. 817, 43 S. E. 14; State v. Blackledge, 7 Rich. L. 336.

The circumstantial evidence neither establishes the corpus delicti nor connects the defendants with the crime charged.

State v. Simons, 4 Strobb. L. 266; Bines v. State, 118 Ga. 320, 68 L.R.A. 33, 45 S. E. 376, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 205; State v. Shaw, 64 S. C. 566, 60 L.R.A. 801, 92 Am. St. Rep. 817, 43 S. E. 14; State v. Clardy, 73 S. C. 340, 53 S. E. 493; Denmark v. Oorley, 100 S. C. 433, 84 S. E. 884.

Bloodhound evidence is inadmissible in all cases, because it is in violation of the defendants' constitutional privilege of being confronted by the witnesses against them, guaranteed every accused by the Constitution of the United States.

Pedigo v. Com. 103 Ky. 41, 42 L.R.A. 432, 82 Am. St. Rep. 566, 44 S. W. 143; Brott v. State, 70 Neb. 395, 68 L.R.A. 789, 97 N. W. 593.

Bloodhound testimony is incompetent, irrelevant, and hearsay, and should not be admitted in any case.

Ibid.; People v. Pfanschmidt, 262 Ill. 411, 104 N. E. 804, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1171.

Such evidence is inadmissible unless amplified and indorsed by cumulative or corroborative human testimony.

Carter v. State, 106 Miss. 507, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1112, 64 So. 215.

Evidence of trailing by bloodhounds is inadmissible unless preliminary foundation for its admission is laid.

Baum v. State, 6 Ohio C. C. N. S. 515, 27 Ohio C. C. 569; State v. Dickerson, 77 Ohio St. 34, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 341, 122 Am. St. Rep. 479, 82 N. E. 969, 11 Ann. Cas. 1181; State v. Spivey, 151 N. C. 676, 65 S. E. 995; State v. Norman, 153 N. C. 591, 68 S. E. 917; Allen v. Com. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 808, 82 S. W. 589; State v. Adams, 85 Kan. 435, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 870, 116 Pac. 608; State v. Freeman, 146 N. C. 615, 60 S. E. 986.

The evidence of the alleged trailing of the defendants is inadmissible in the case at bar, even if as a class such evidence is held to be competent, because the preliminary requisites were not satisfied.

Pedigo v. Com. 103 Ky. 41, 42 L.R.A. 436, 82 Am. St. Rep. 566, 44 S. W. 143; Carter v. State, 106 Miss. 507, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1112, 64 So. 215.

Evidence of the "trailing experiment" was inadmissible, and should have been ruled out.

Martin v. State, 68 Fla. 18, 66 So. 139.

The absence of any charge whatsoever on the subject of bloodhound testimony, and his Honor's refusal to charge the jury on such evidence, were reversible error.

State v. Spivey, 151 N. C. 676, 65 S. E. 996; State v. Brooks, 1 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 407; State v. Adams, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 872, note; State v. Norman, 153 N. C. 591, 68 S. E. 917; State v. Rasco, 239 Mo. 535, 144

S. W. 449; State v. Simons, 4 Strobb. L. 266; People v. Palmer, 109 N. Y. 113, 4 Am. St. Rep. 423, 16 N. E. 529, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 399; State v. Moore, 129 N. C. 494, 55 L.R.A. 99, 39 S. E. 626; State v. McNinch, 12 S. C. 96.

Mr. William C. Wolfe, for the State:

The proof of the corpus delicti is a question of fact for the jury, and cannot be reviewed by this court.

State v. Martin, 47 S. C. 68, 25 S. E. 113.

In a criminal case every element of the corpus delicti may be established by circumstantial evidence.

State v. Martin, 47 S. C. 72, 25 S. E. 113; Campbell v. People, 159 Ill. 9, 50 Am. St. Rep. 134, 42 N. E. 123; State v. Williams, 52 N. O. (7 Jones, L.) 446, 78 Am. Dec. 248; Ripley v. Miller, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 479, 62 Am. Dec. 177; People v. Beckwith, 108 N. Y. 67, 15 N. E. 53; People v. Palmer, 109 N. Y. 110, 4 Am. St. Rep. 423, 16 N. E. 529, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 399; Sawyers v. Com. 88 Va. 356, 13 S. E. 708; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 938; Winslow v. State, 76 Ala. 42, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 43.

Bloodhound testimony is admissible in evidence.

12 Cyc. 393; 5 Wigmore, Ev. p. 22; Hargrove v. State, 147 Ala. 97, 119 Am. St. Rep. 60, 41 So. 972, 10 Ann. Cas. 1126; State v. Rasco, 239 Mo. 535, 144 S. W. 458; State v. Adams, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 870, note; Hodge v. State, 98 Ala. 10, 39 Am. St. Rep. 710, 13 So. 386; State v. Hall, 3 Ohio N. P. 125, 4 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 147; Simpson v. State, 111 Ala. 6, 20 So. 672; Denham v. Com. 119 Ky. 508, 84 S. W. 538; State v. Hunter, 143 N. C. 607, 118 Am. St. Rep. 830, 56 S. E. 547; State v. Freeman, 146 N. C. 615, 60 S. E. 986; Gallant v. State, 167 Ala. 60, 52 So. 739; State v. Spivey, 151 N. C. 676, 65 S. E. 995; State v. Norman, 153 N. O. 591, 68 S. E. 917; Parker v. State, 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 461, 108 Am. St. Rep. 1021, 80 S. W. 1608, 3 Ann. Cas. 893; State v. Dickerson, 77 Ohio St. 34, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 341, 122 Am. St. Rep. 479, 82 N. E. 969, 11 Ann. Cas. 1181; Spears v. State, 92 Miss. 613, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 285, 46 So. 166; Richardson v. State, 145 Ala. 46, 41 So. 82, 8 Ann. Cas. 108; Baum v. State, 27 Ohio C. C. 569; Underhill, Crim. Ev. 2d ed. § 374a; 1 Wigmore, Ev. 177; Davis v. State, 46 Fla. 137, 35 So. 76.

It is not error to refuse a request where the principle requested is covered in the general charge.

Thompson v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 78 S. C. 384, 58 S. E. 1094; Milhou v. Southern R. Co. 72 S. C. 442, 110 Am. St. Rep. 620, 52 S. E. 41; State v. Dean, 72 S. O. 74, 51 S. E. 524; Lampley v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 71 S. C. 156, 50 S. E. 773. L.R.A.1916D.

A circuit judge is not required to charge a request in exact words, nor if it be covered in the general charge.

Edwards v. Wessinger, 65 S. C. 161, 95 Am. St. Rep. 789, 43 S. E. 518.

A requested charge invading the province of the jury is properly refused.

Black v. State Co. 99 S. C. 433, 83 S. E. 1088.

Messrs. P. T. Hildebrand, E. J. Dennis, and George B. Davis also for the State.

Fraser, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an indictment for statutory arson, i. e., the burning of a barn. Mr. McNair who, for the purposes of this case, was the owner of the barn, had a lawsuit with the father and sister of the defendants. There is evidence that the defendants were offended with Mr. McNair as the result of the lawsuit. The suit was about a mule which Mr. McNair took from these relatives of the defendants. One of the defendants is said to have remarked that the mule would do Mr. McNair no good. One of the defendants is also said to have remarked that he would not be surprised if a barn should be burned and he be accused of it. The very night of the day upon which the case was determined the barn was burned. The tracks of three people were discovered near the place where the barn had been burned. Dogs were put on these tracks. These dogs went to where one of the defendants was under arrest. The other defendant rode up to the place where a crowd was assembled, and when he got on the ground the dogs went up to him. The witness who was in charge of the dogs testified that the dogs told him that these were the men they had been tracking. The defendants were convicted with a recommendation to mercy. From this judgment of conviction, the defendants appealed, with eight exceptions. The third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and eighth exceptions include matters of fact with which this court cannot deal, and they are overruled. The remaining exceptions raise three questions:

(1) Did his Honor err in refusing to direct a verdict for the defendants at the close of the state's testimony?

(2) Did his Honor err in refusing to direct a verdict for the defendants at the close of all the testimony?

(3) Did his Honor err in admitting the evidence of the conduct of the dogs in following the tracks?

I. Did his Honor err in refusing to direct a verdict for the defendants at the close of the testimony for the state? Before a defendant can be required to go into his defense, it is necessary that there shall be some proof of the corpus delicti. If there be no evidence to prove the corpus delicti, the defendant is entitled to a verdict of not guilty. The respondent claims that the proof of the corpus delicti is a question of fact, and is for the jury, and this court cannot consider the question, and cites State v. Martin, 47 S. C. 67, 25 S. E. 113, as authority. The Martin Case does not go so far. In the Martin Case the question was not, Was there any evidence? but, Was there sufficient evidence? The sufficiency of evidence was, of course, a question for the jury. The Martin Case states the true rule when it says (page 71 of 47 S. C.): "The weight of modern authority is undoubted to the effect that all the elements constituting the corpus delicti may be proven by circumstantial evidence. The corpus delicti in a case of murder consists of two elements, the death of a human being and the criminal act of another in causing that death."

So, in a case of arson the corpus delicti consists of two elements, the burned house and the criminal act of another in causing the burning. If there is no evidence of either, the defendant is entitled to an acquittal, and he is entitled to an acquittal as a matter of law. In the Martin Case a body was found in the remains of a burned building. A part of the head sufficient to cause death was cut off by a sharp instrument. The body was about the size of the alleged victim. Articles of personal property were found near the body, identified as the property of the alleged victim, and unburned pieces of cloth, resembling the clothing worn by him just before his disappearance. There were circumstances from which the jury might find that the body found was the body of someone who had been feloniously killed, and that the person killed was the alleged victim, Peter Patite.

In the case at bar we have only the first requisite, to wit, a burned barn. There is not a single circumstance to show that it was the result of the criminal act of another. There are only three things that can, by any possibility, be claimed as circumstances: (a) Tracks; (b) statements of the accused showing enmity; (c) the actions of the dogs.

(a) The peculiarities were not described, and the prosecuting witness said there was nothing peculiar about them. The evidence as to identity of tracks goes out and may be disregarded.

(b) Until there is some evidence of the corpus delicti, even confessions made out of court are not admissible. 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 863, note.

(c) There is conflict in the authorities as to the admissibility of the action of dogs in tracking supposed criminals. Our Code L.R.A.1916D.

contains a provision (Crim. Code, § 945) for the "purchase and use of bloodhounds or other serviceable dogs for the tracking and arrest of escaped convicts and other fugitive lawbreakers." We cannot therefore say that that method that the law approved for locating a fugitive is of no value in the identification of the criminal. The authorities admit that the conduct of the dogs is only a circumstance to be weighed with other circumstances. Circumstances must be proved by competent evidence. If the testimony is admissible at all, its weight is for the jury.

It is very manifest that, if reliance is had upon the instinct of the dogs, then that instinct must be free and untrammelled. In the case at bar the dogs wanted to enter the premises of Adam Brown, and were not permitted to do so. This control of the animal that is supposed to have the instinct, by the man, who has not the instinct, destroys any value it may have as evidence, and all reference to the conduct of the dogs should have been stricken from the record.

Further, the owner and manager of these dogs said: "After a track is eighteen or twenty hours old, I don't like to fool with it; you can do very well up to fifteen hours."

The person relying upon the testimony must show that the dogs were within the period of efficiency, and the state failed utterly to do so. Mr. McNair saw the fire at between 10:30 and 11 o'clock on the night of the 18th, and the dogs did not come until 2:45 p. m. on the 19th. The shortest time puts the dogs within the period of unreliability. The testimony was inadmissible on this ground also.

It is claimed that the dog is the real witness, and cannot be used because he cannot be cross-examined. The dog is not the witness, and the objection does not apply.

We have treated the testimony as to the action of the dogs as if it could be used to make out the corpus delicti. This is not true. We have allowed the state more than it is entitled to. The only thing the conduct of dogs could prove was that the defendants were at the place of the fire within fifteen hours, and that would have put the defendants at the place of the fire after the fire had been burning for some (unknown) time.

Questions 2 and 3 have been considered under question 1.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the case is remanded to the Court of General Sessions for an order of discharge, unless they be held upon some other charge.

Gary, Ch. J., and Hydrick, Watts, and Gage JJ., concur.

Annotation—Proof of corpus delicti in arson.

The general subject of corpus delicti is treated in the note to Bines v. State, 68 L.R.A. 33. The question is treated specifically with reference to arson in the note to Spears v. State, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 285, which is supplemented by the present note.

What constitutes.

See also note in 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 285.

To establish the corpus delicti of the crime of arson it must be shown both that the building in question was burned and that it was burned with criminal intent. Daniels v. State (1915) — Ala. App. —, 68 So. 499; West v. State (1909) 6 Ga. App. 105, 64 S. E. 130; Davenport v. State (1912) 12 Ga. App. 102, 76 S. E. 756; Sims v. State (1913) 12 Ga. App. 551, 77 S. E. 891; State v. McLarne (1915) 128 Minn. 163, 150 N. W. 787; State v. Cox (1915) 264 Mo. 408, 175 S. W. 50; Kohn v. State (1911) 33 Ohio C. C. 417; State v. Brown, ante, 1295.

In order to constitute arson it is not necessary that the firing of the building should have consumed it or materially injured it; so, where the walls were at least charred and to some extent injured, it constituted a burning of the building. Kehoe v. Com. (1912) 149 Ky. 400, 149 S. W. 818; State v. Rogers (1914) 168 N. C. 112, 83 S. E. 161.

Necessity for proving.

See also note in 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 285.

The presumption that the burning was accidental must be overcome. Burley v. State (1909) 6 Ga. App. 776, 65 S. E. 816; Matthews v. State (1912) 10 Ga. App. 302, 73 S. E. 404; Williams v. State (1912) 11 Ga. App. 416, 75 S. E. 442; Barrett v. State (1913) 12 Ga. App. 508, 77 S. E. 652; Sims v. State (1913) 12 Ga. App. 551, 77 S. E. 891, second appeal (1913) 14 Ga. App. 28, 79 S. E. 1133; Moon v. State (1913) 12 Ga. App. 614, 77 S. E. 1088; Rice v. State (1915) — Ga. App. —, 84 S. E. 609.

—in connection with confession.

The corpus delicti must be established independently of the confession of the accused. Moon v. State (1913) 12 Ga. App. 614, 77 S. E. 1088; Sims v. State (1913) 12 Ga. App. 551, 77 S. E. 891, second appeal (1913) 14 Ga. App. 28, 79 S. E. 1133; State v. McLarne (1915) 128 Minn. 163, 150 N. W. 787; Bolden v. State (1911) 98 Miss. 723, 54 So. 241; State v. Cox (1915) 264 Mo. 408, 175 S. W. 50.
L.R.A.1916D.

A mere confession is not sufficient to establish the corpus delicti, although cases may be imagined in which a confession might disclose independent facts or circumstances which would furnish sufficient proof. West v. State (1909) 6 Ga. App. 105, 64 S. E. 130.

Evidence of an alleged confession of the defendant, unsupported by evidence or by circumstances tending to corroborate the facts contained in such alleged confession, does not constitute prima facie proof of the corpus delicti. People v. Kennedy (1909) 150 Ill. App. 571.

While the corpus delicti is ordinarily the first point to which the evidence should be directed, nevertheless the admission in evidence of a declaration by the defendant before such proof is made will not warrant a reversal of the judgment. People v. Saunders (1910) 13 Cal. App. 743, 110 Pac. 825.

In Daniels v. State (1915) — Ala. App. —, 68 So. 499, which was reversed because no evidence was offered as a predicate for the admission of a confession of defendant which tended to exclude the theory that the burning was accidental, the court said that it should be shown, if it be a fact, that prior to the discovery of the fire there was no fire near where the fire was first discovered that was likely to have been communicated to the house.

Character and sufficiency — circumstantial evidence.

See also note in 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 285.

The corpus delicti of arson may be proved by circumstantial evidence. Cunningham v. State (1915) — Ala. App. —, 69 So. 982; DeVore v. State (1909) 7 Ga. App. 197, 66 S. E. 484; State v. McCauley (1916) — Minn. —, 156 N. W. 280.

But where circumstantial evidence is relied on to overcome the presumption that a fire was the result of accident or some providential cause, it must be sufficient to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis than that the house was feloniously burned. Sims v. State (1913) 12 Ga. App. 551, 77 S. E. 891.

—evidence tending to connect accused.

While, as a general rule, the corpus delicti must be proven before any evidence is offered as to the guilt of accused, where there is no question about the burning of the property, and the same evidence which shows a criminal agency as to the fire also shows the guilt of the accused, the evidence may be offered at the same time. Kohn v. State (1911) 33 Ohio C. C. 417.

—evidence held sufficient.

Any evidence at all, even the slightest, tending to show that the burning was by design, although there is other evidence showing or tending to show that it was accidental, is sufficient proof of the corpus delicti to afford a predicate for the admission of the defendant's confession. Daniels v. State (1915) — Ala. App. —, 68 So. 499.

Evidence that the fire was discovered in the nighttime; that a few minutes later a part of the furniture was found piled together in one room; that defendant was seen running away from the fire; that he told a witness that no one was in the house; that defendant was found two hours after the fire at a point several miles from the scene, with serious burns upon his person, and that he refused to give his name and made contradictory statements as to why he was in such a condition and in that locality; that he resisted an officer who sought to accompany him in quest of a physician, and finally gave an assumed name when taken to the hospital; that a policy of insurance had been taken out only a few days before the fire; that one of defendants, who lived in the house, was found almost entirely dressed a few minutes after the fire; together with other suspicious circumstances, was sufficient to establish that a crime had been committed, so as to authorize the admission of alleged confessions in evidence. People v. Morley (1908) 8 Cal. App. 372, 97 Pac. 84.

Where the physical condition of the premises showed that three separate and distinct fires had been started, such evidence, in connection with other evidence tending to show the improbability of the fire being the result of accident, was sufficient to show that the crime of arson had been committed. People v. Saunders (1910) 13 Cal. App. 743, 110 Pac. 825.

The corpus delicti of arson was sufficiently proved by evidence that the barn in question was destroyed by fire about 3 o'clock in the morning; that no fire had been left in or near the building on the night before it was burned; that while the fire was in progress an odor of kerosene oil emanated from the building, and that an empty can which had contained such oil was found near, and that tracks of a human being leading to and from the barn were found, under circumstances such as to indicate that they were made after the barn was closed on the night before the burning. Dixon v. State (1912) 11 Ga. App. 367, 75 S. E. 286.

Evidence that a barn in and near which there had been no fire during the day preceding its destruction, and in which no one for hours immediately before its destruction had had occasion to go for any legitimate reason, was discovered at 2 o'clock in the morning to be burning all over; that the barn had no combustibles, such as oil or gasoline, housed therein; that it was partially filled with hay and fodder, which, when ignited, would blaze out almost instantly and burn with great rapidity, showing that it must have been burning but a few minutes before it was discovered by the owner; that stealthy tracks leading to the barn and running tracks leading away, which were discovered early the next day, were fresh, so that they must have been made at about the time that the fire originated, was sufficient to establish the corpus delicti of arson. Wade v. State (1915) — Ga. App. —, 84 S. E. 593.

Proof that a man's tracks were found leading to and from a schoolhouse which was burned, and that they were made at a time when the grass and stubble were wet with dew, the schoolhouse having been burned at about 2 o'clock in the morning, was sufficient proof of the corpus delicti to justify the admission of defendant's confession. People v. Hannibal (1913) 259 Ill. 512, 102 N. E. 1042, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 329.

Testimony as to the odor of coal oil in the burning premises and the arrangement of kindling wood about the pool tables would tend to show that the fire was caused by a criminal agency rather than by natural or accidental means. State v. Ruckman (1913) 253 Mo. 487, 161 S. W. 705.

Where there were two other fires at about the same time and place as the one with which defendant was charged, and while those fires were bursting out one by one, the defendant twice procured matches near the fire, while either fact alone might be perfectly free from a suggestion of guilt, when compounded in connection with evidence that defendant was seen running along the street at midnight looking back, there is sufficient proof of the corpus delicti independent of defendant's confession. State v. Cox (1915) 264 Mo. 408, 175 S. W. 50.

—Evidence held insufficient.

Evidence that the house which was burned was an unoccupied dwelling house within sight from the dwelling house of the prosecutor; that it was burned about 12 o'clock on Sunday night; that the door of the house was open and in plain view of the residence of the prosecutor; that there was no fire used in or about the house and, so far as was known to anyone, there was no fire about the house late in the afternoon or in the early part of the night of the burning; that the house had in it at the time of the burning some seed cotton and about 100 bushels of cotton seed; and that there were some tracks apparently made during the night in the public road going by the house that was burned, falls far short of proof of any criminal agency in the burning of the house. West v. State (1909) 6 Ga. App. 105, 64 S. E. 130.

Where the only proof of the corpus delicti outside defendant's confession was the mere fact that two barns in which was stored inflammable material were burned at midnight, and the confession was shown to have been induced by promises of protection and immunity from punishment made by the owner of L.R.A.1916D.

the barns, a conviction was not supported by the evidence. De Vore v. State (1909) 7 Ga. App. 197, 66 S. E. 484.

Mere proof that a barn was consumed by fire does not even tend to show that the fire was a felonious one. Moon v. State (1913) 12 Ga. App. 614, 77 S. E. 1088.

Where the only evidence introduced, other than the alleged confession of defendant, which tended to show that the burning of the building in question was by a criminal agency, was that the burning occurred at night, that the fire originated on the outside of the house, and that shortly after the house had burned tracks which resembled those of defendant, who lived several miles from the scene, were discovered about 75 yards from the place where the building had stood, the corpus delicti was not proven. Bolden v. State (1911) 98 Miss. 723, 54 So. 241.

Where the only evidence tending to establish that the burning was caused by a criminal agency was several slight circumstances, it was wholly insufficient to establish the corpus delicti. Ratcliff v. State (1911) 99 Miss. 277, 54 So. 947.
R. L. S.

